Whenever, like the Apoſtles, our hearts are filled with ſorrow, may we be very cautious not to be ſo ſtupified and abſorbed by it, as that any call of duty ſhould paſs unheard, or any opportunity of religious advancement eſcape us unimproved; nor let us be indolent in our enquiries into the meaning of thoſe diſpenſations which we do not underſtand; but rather ſeriouſly conſider, whether we are not ſorrowful for that which is indeed deſigned for our advantage, and in the iſſue will be matter of rejoicing to our ſouls. ver. 5,—7.

We have heard to what purpoſe the Comforter was ſent. His coming was deſigned in a peculiar manner for the benefit of the Apoſtles, and was of greater ſervice to them, as Chriſt had aſſured them it ſhould be, than the continuance of his own preſence with them in the body would have been; not only to ſupport and comfort them under all their trials, but to acquaint them with all neceſſary truth, and fully to inſtruct them in the myſteries of godlineſs. He came moreover for the conviction of an apoſtate world: The important errand on which he was ſent was, to awaken mens minds, to convince them of their own guilt, of Chriſt's righteouſneſs, and of that aweful judgement which ſhould be executed on the moſt inveterate of his enemies. ver. 8—11.

May theſe conſiderations often lead us to think of the force of the Spirit's teſtimony to the truth of Chriſtianity, and to endeavour to underſtand it in all its extent; bleſſing the Almighty Father of mercies, that the Goſpel and the character of his Son were thus gloriouſly vindicated. May we rejoice in the views of that compleat conqueſt to which Satan is already adjudged; and in the mean time, let us earneſtly pray, that the influence of the Holy Spirit may be communicated to us in ſuch a manner, that Chriſt may be glorified in us, and we in him; and that the things of Chriſt may be taken, and ſhewn to us by that Spirit; for it can only be done by means of his influence and operations. ver. 13—15.

We are perhaps often regretting the abſence of Chriſt, and looking back with emulation on the happier lot of thoſe who converſed with him upon earth in the days of his fleſh: But if we are true believers in an unſeen Jeſus, it is but a little while, and we ſhall alſo ſee him; for he is gone to the Father, and will ſo ſucceſsfully negociate our affairs in the realms of bliſs, that whatever our preſent difficulties and ſorrows may be, they ſhall end happily, and bring peace and joy at the laſt: (ver. xvi. 20.) And, in the mean time, ſurely we have no reaſon to envy the world its joys and triumphs. Alas! its ſeaſon of weeping will quickly come! but our lamentations are ſoon to be turned into ſongs of praiſe, and our hearts filled with that ſolid, ſacred, and peculiar joy, which being the gift of Chriſt himſelf, can never be taken away. ver. 21, 22.

While we are in this ſtate of diſtance and darkneſs, it is certainly matter of rejoicing that we have acceſs to the throne of grace, through the prevailing name of Chriſt. Let us advance thither with holy courage and confidence, and ſo aſk as that we may receive, and that our joy may be full. With what pleaſure may we daily renew our viſits world ye ſhall have tribulation: but be of good cheer; I have overcome the world.

CHAP. XVII.

Chriſt prayeth to his Father to glorify him: to preſerve his apoſtles in unity, and truth: to glorify them, and all other believers with him in heaven.

THESE words ſpake Jeſus, and lifted up his eyes to heaven, and ſaid, Father, the hour is come; glorify thy Son, that thy Son alſo may glorify thee:

2 As thou haſt given him power over all fleſh, that he ſhould give eternal life to as many as thou haſt given him.

3 And this is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jeſus Chriſt whom thou haſt ſent.

4 I have glorified thee on the earth: I have finiſhed the work which thou gaveſt me to do.

5 And now, O Father, glorify thou me with thine own ſelf, with the glory which I had with thee before the world was.

Ver. 1. Ch. xii. 23. xiii. 32.—V. 2. Matth. xi. 27. xxviii. 18. Ch. iii. 35. v. 27. 1 Cor. xv. 25. Phil. ii. 10. Hebr. ii. 8. Ch. vi. 37.—V. 3. Iſai. liii. 11. Jer. ix. 24. Ch. x. 36.—V. 4. Ch. xiii. 32. xiv. 13. Ch. iv. 34. xix. 30. Ch. xv. 10.—V. 5. Ch. i. 1, 2. x. 30. xiv. 9.

---

viſits to that throne, before which Jeſus, the friend of ſinners, ſtands as an interceſſor; to that throne which is poſſeſſed by the Father, who himſelf loveth us, and anſwers with readineſs and delight thoſe petitions which are thus recommended! May our faith in Chriſt, and our love to him ſtill more and more increaſe; and thus ſhall our ſupplications be more and more acceptable to him, whoſe loving-kindneſs is better than life itſelf. ver. 23—27.

Whoever ſeriouſly reviews theſe gracious diſcourſes, muſt conſider them as an invaluable legacy bequeathed us by Chriſt, the dying Saviour. O may they dwell with us in all our retirements, and be applied to our comfort in every diſtreſs!

Can we have any reaſon to wonder, if human friendſhip be ſometimes falſe, and always precarious! Alas!—the diſciples of Chriſt were ſcattered in the day of his utter extremity, and left him alone, even when they were under the higheſt obligations to have adhered to him with the moſt inviolable fidelity. It is better to truſt in the Lord, than to put any confidence in man. May we but be able, like our Maſter, to ſay, in every trial and deſertion, that our Father is with us; and then that delightful converſe with God, which we may enjoy in our moſt ſolitary moments, will be a thouſand times more than an equivalent for whatſoever we loſe in the creatures. In the world we muſt indeed have tribulation, and he that has appointed it for us, knows that it is fit we ſhould: But ſince Jeſus, the captain of our ſalvation, who was made perfect through ſufferings, has overcome the world, and diſarmed it, Let us hence be taught to ſeek that peace which he hath eſtabliſhed, and preſs on with a chearful aſſurance, that the leaſt of his followers ſhall ſhare in the honours and benefits of his victory. ver. 32, 33.

Chap. XVII. Ver. 1, 2. Theſe words ſpake Jeſus] Our Lord having thus finiſhed his miniſtry, and given his diſciples all the inſtructions he judged neceſſary, cloſed the whole with a ſolemn prayer to God; wherein firſt, he prays for himſelf, ver. 1—5. ſecondly, for the apoſtles, ver. 6—19. and again ver. 24—26. thirdly, for all believers, ver. 20 and 23. and fourthly, for the world, ver. 21—23. In this prayer he comprizes all he had ſaid from ch. xiii. 31. and ſeals, as it were, all he had hitherto done, beholding things paſt, preſent, and to come. The preſent chapter contains the eaſieſt words, and the deepeſt ſenſe of any in all the Scripture; yet here is no incoherent rhapſody, but the whole is cloſely and exactly connected. This has been called our Lord's interceſſory prayer, becauſe it is conſidered as a pattern of the interceſſion he is now making for his people in heaven. He addreſſes God with a ſimplicity of appellation, Father, highly becoming the only-begotten Son of God; to which a believer then makes the neareſt approach, when he is fulleſt of love and humble confidence. The hour is come, &c. "The time of my ſufferings is at hand; let me have ſuch ſuccours from thee, as will enable me to bear them; let the circumſtances of my trial, both in the Jewiſh and Gentile courts of judicature be ſuch, as will plainly prove my innocence; and let my death be accompanied with ſuch interpoſitions of thy power, as will remove the ſcandal of the croſs, and demonſtrate the relation wherein I ſtand to thee: particularly let me be raiſed from the dead, and taken up into heaven: And finally, ſhed down upon my apoſtles ſuch miraculous gifts, as will qualify them for bearing witneſs to my miracles, my death, my reſurrection, and my aſcenſion. Thus glorifying thy Son, He will alſo glorify thee, by converting to the belief and practice of true religion, many who will celebrate thy praiſes eternally: For thou haſt ſent thy Son into the world, and given him power over all men in this reſpect, ver. 2. that he may beſtow eternal life upon as many as thou haſt given him; a conſideration, upon which he ever reflects with the higheſt joy." See Macknight, Clarke, and Bengelius. Heylin renders the beginning of the ſecond verſe, According to the power which thou haſt given him.

Ver. 3. And this is life eternal] But, or now, this is the eternal life, &c. "I teach that men ſhould know thee, the only true God, and Jeſus Chriſt whom thou haſt ſent, as the means of obtaining that eternal life, which thou haſt given me power to beſtow." Or the meaning may be, "Now this eternal life is beſtowed on men by me, that they may know thee the only true God, and Jeſus Chriſt whom thou haſt ſent;" importing that the happineſs of eternity will conſiſt in the knowledge of God and Chriſt. It is juſtly obſerved by Grotius, that the Father is here ſtiled, the only true God, in excluſion of thoſe deities which the ignorance and folly of the heathens had introduced. For as, in the latter clauſe, our Lord undoubtedly ſpake of the Jews, when he mentioned it as the means of eternal life, that they ſhould know Jeſus Chriſt; ſo it is probable, that in the former he had the Gentiles in his eye, when he repreſented the knowledge of the true God as the road to felicity. If ſo, it cannot from this paſſage be inferred, that Jeſus is not truly and really God. For had this been the meaning of the words, would the Evangeliſt have begun his Goſpel with ſo ſolemn a declaration of our Lord's divinity?—Beſides, in other paſſages of Scripture, the word μονος denotes a partial excluſion. For inſtance, in Gen. xlii. 38. Jacob, ſpeaking of Benjamin, ſays, His brother is dead, και αυτος μονος καταλελειπται, and he only is left. He did not mean that he was his only ſon abſolutely, but his only ſon by Rachael. In like manner we read, Luke ix. 18. And as he was alone, praying, his diſciples were with him; where καταμόνας is to be underſtood, in excluſion of the multitude, and not of the diſciples, who were now with him. So alſo, Luke ix. 36. Jeſus is ſaid to be left alone, μονος, notwithſtanding the three diſciples were with him. The meaning is, he was alone with reſpect to Moſes and Elias, who were now departed from him. And, to give no more inſtances, St. Jude, ver. 4. uſes the word μονος in this partial ſenſe where, ſpeaking of ſome wicked men of his time, he ſays, ; they denied τον μονον δεσποτην Θεον, και κυριον ἡμων Ιησουν Χριστον, the only Lord God, and our Lord Jeſus Chriſt: For whether the firſt clauſe is underſtood of Chriſt it cannot mean that he is our only Lord and God, in excluſion of the Father, or whether it is underſtood of the Father, it cannot be ſaid that he is our only Lord, in excluſion of Chriſt, who is expreſly called Δεσποτης. Our Lord might inſert this clauſe, though neither a petition, plea, nor any other part of prayer, on purpoſe to remind the Apoſtles of the importance of their office, as they were ſent to ſpread that knowledge here called eternal life, becauſe the eternal happineſs of man depends upon it. See Grotius, Macknight, and Calmet.

Ver. 4, 5. I have glorified thee, &c.] "During my abode on earth, I have promoted thy glory, by bringing thy creatures who were wandering in error and ignorance to the knowledge of true religion, and by putting them in the way which leadeth to happineſs. Thus have I finiſhed the great work which thou gaveſt me to do on earth; and that finiſhed, I beg of thee, O Father, (ver. 5.) to exalt me to the ſtate I was in before I came down upon earth. Let me enjoy that glory and dignity which I poſſeſſed with thee before the world was made." The Socinians, who deny not only our Lord's divinity, but his exiſtence before he appeared in the world, are at a loſs how to explain this paſſage in conſiſtency with their opinion. They imagine, that as in the prophetical writings things to come are ſpoken of as already exiſting, to denote the divine decree concerning them, and the certainty of their happening; ſo Jeſus is here ſaid to poſſeſs glory with the Father before the foundation of the world; not becauſe he then exiſted, but becauſe that glory was appointed him in the divine decree from eternity, and was certainly to be beſtowed upon him in the fulneſs of time. In confirmation of this remark, they cite Rev. xiii. 8. where Chriſt is called a lamb ſlain from the foundation of the world; and 2 Tim. i. 9. where the Apoſtle, ſpeaking of the favours conferred on Chriſtians, ſays, Who hath ſaved us, and called us,—according to his own purpoſe and grace, which was given us in Chriſt Jeſus before the world began. But here,—without laying the whole ſtreſs of the matter on the anſwer given by Whitby, namely, that theſe paſſages are miſ-tranſlated,—I obſerve, that though, for the reaſons mentioned, the ſacred writers, when warmed with the grandeur of their ſubject, might in their diſcourſes repreſent the great events which were to befal the church under the Goſpel diſpenſation, as exiſting from eternity, Yet no fire of imagination could authorize the figure in the preſent inſtance. For it were abſurd to fancy, that Jeſus, in this his laſt ſolemn prayer with his diſciples, ſpake of himſelf as exiſting from eternity, and as enjoying with God bleſſings which were to be beſtowed upon him only in time. Such figures, however proper they may be in prophecy, are not in the ſtile of prayer, far leſs of our Lord's prayers, which are remarkable for their ſimplicity. Beſides, it ſhould be remembered that this is not the only paſſage which ſpeaks of Chriſt's pre-exiſtence; for this ſame Evangeliſt, ch. i. repreſents him as exiſting from eternity, and making all things; and ch. viii. 58. Jeſus himſelf tells us, that he exiſted before Abraham: and St. Paul affirms, Phil. ii. 6. that before Jeſus took the form of a ſervant, he was in the form of God. See Macknight, Whitby, and Fleming's Chriſtology, vol. ii. p. 247.

6 I have manifeſted thy name unto the men which thou gaveſt me out of the world: thine they were, and thou gaveſt them me; and they have kept thy word.

7 Now they have known that all things whatſoever thou haſt given me are of thee.

8 For I have given unto them the words which thou gaveſt me; and they have received them, and have known ſurely that I came out from thee, and they have believed that thou didſt ſend me.

9 I pray for them: I pray not for the world, but for them which thou haſt given me; for they are thine.

10 And all mine are thine, and thine are mine; and I am glorified in them.

11 And now I am no more in the world, but theſe are in the world, and I come to thee. Holy Father, keep through thine own name thoſe whom thou haſt given me, that they may be one, as we are.

12 While I was with them in the world, I kept them in thy name: thoſe that thou gaveſt me I have kept, and none of them is loſt, but the ſon of perdition; that the ſcripture might be fulfilled.

13 And now come I to thee, and theſe things I ſpeak in the world, that they might have my joy fulfilled in themſelves.

14 I have given them thy word; and the world hath hated them, becauſe they are not of the world, even as I am not of the world.

15 I pray not that thou ſhouldeſt take them out of the world, but that thou ſhouldeſt keep them from the evil.

16 They are not of the world, even as I am not of the world.

Ver. 6. Ch. vi. 37, 39. x. 29.—V. 8. Ch. viii. 28. xii. 49. xiv. 10.—V. 9. 1 John v. 19.—V. 10. Ch. xvi. 15.—V. 11. 1 Pet. i. 5. Jude 1. Ver. 21, &c. Ch. x. 30.—V. 12. Ch. vi. 39. x. 28. Hebr. ii. 13. Ch. xviii. 9. 1 John ii. 19. Ch. vi. 70. xiii. 18. Pſ. cix. 8.—V. 14. Ch. xv. 18, 19.—V. 15. Matth. vi. 13. Gal. i. 4. 2 Theſſ. iii. 3. 1 John v. 18.

Ver. 6. I have manifeſted thy name] In the Hebrew language the name of any thing ſignifies the thing itſelf, Acts iii. 16. Our Lord's meaning is, "I have explained thy nature and perfections; I have declared thy merciful deſigns towards the world; and I have fully taught thy will and worſhip unto the men whom thou gaveſt me out of the world, the perſons who were choſen by thee out of all mankind to be my Apoſtles. See on ch. vi. 44. Mine they were, &c. My Apoſtles belonged to thee, and thou gaveſt them to me. Nor was thy choice of them improper; for hitherto they have ſincerely obeyed thy will, according to the diſcovery thereof, which thou haſt made to them." By the Apoſtles belonging to God, it is moſt natural to believe, that our Lord means only, "they were originally God's, the creatures of his hand, the happy objects of his ſovereign choice; his by creation, as well as by being ſincere diſciples of the former diſpenſation which God has given by Moſes." By the Father's giving theſe men to Chriſt, many underſtand his pointing them out to him as fit to be his diſciples; and that in anſwer to the prayers which, on the night before their election, he put up to God, for direction in this important affair. See Luke vi. 12. and ch. xv. 16.

Ver. 7, 8. Now they have known, &c.] "Theſe men are fully perſuaded, that the commiſſion whereby I act, the doctrine of ſalvation which I teach, the miracles which I perform, and the authority with which I am cloathed, are all derived from thee. In this indeed they have acted upon the ſureſt evidence; for I have taught them no other doctrine than that which thou gaveſt me to teach. Accordingly, being fully ſenſible that my doctrine is in all points agreeable to thy bleſſed nature and perfections, they have received it as ſuch, and have known aſſuredly that I am no impoſtor, but a prophet truly commiſſioned by thee: Wherefore, on all occaſions, they have openly declared their belief that thou haſt ſent me."

Ver. 9, 10. I pray for them, &c.] The perſons here prayed for are not good men in general, in oppoſition to the bad, who are often called the world, but thoſe good men in particular who were given to Jeſus by the Father to be his apoſtles, and who by that office were diſtinguiſhed from the reſt of his diſciples. This appears from ver. 12. where he ſays, He had kept all the perſons he was praying for, in the faith and practice of true religion, except the ſon of perdition; and from ver. 18. where he ſays, he had commiſſioned them to go forth into the world, for the ſame purpoſe that the Father had ſent him into the world; and from ver. 20. where he expreſly diſtinguiſhes the perſons he was praying for from all other believers whatever. The reaſon aſſigned for making the Apoſtles the immediate ſubject of his ſpecial prayers at this time, is remarkable;—for they are thine. "I employ the laſt moments of my life in praying particularly for my Apoſtles, becauſe they are more eſpecially thy ſervants, deſtined for that work, which is the great object of my attention;—the inſtruction and ſalvation of the world. Indeed, all my ſervants are thy ſervants, (ver. 10.) that is, whoever aſſiſts me in my work, ſerves thee in thy great deſigns of love and mercy to men. For the ſame reaſon thy ſervants are my ſervants; every one who really ſerves God, muſt join iſſue with me, and aſſiſt me in my work; and by the zeal, faithfulneſs, and ſucceſs of my ſervants, in converting the world, I am greatly honoured." The words in the 10th verſe are very high and ſtrong expreſſions, too grand for any creature to uſe, as implying that not only ſervants and miniſters, but all things whatſoever,—τὰ πάντα,—are the common property of the Father and the Son; and this is the original ground of that peculiar property, which both the Father and the Son have in the perſons who were given to Chriſt as Mediator; according to what is ſaid in the cloſe of the verſe, of his being glorified in them,—namely, by their believing in him, and ſo acknowledging his glory. See Macknight, Bengelius, and Clarke's Serm. i. vol. 10.

Ver. 11. And now I am no more in the world] "Having finiſhed the work thou gaveſt me to do, I am no longer to continue in the world:—But theſe are in the world. My Apoſtles are to continue in the world, to carry on the gracious deſign of redemption, and I am coming to thee." It is very plain that this clauſe could not be intended as an additional argument to introduce the following petition; for Chriſt's coming to the Father was the great ſecurity of his people; but ſeems rather to be a ſhort reflection on that pleaſing ſubject, ſo familiar to his mind, with which he refreſhed himſelf for a moment in the courſe of his humble and pathetic addreſs: Immediately after which, he goes on to intercede for his Apoſtles, Holy Father, preſerve, &c. "O thou, who art the ſource of all truth and righteouſneſs, let thoſe men, whom thou haſt given me for aſſiſtance, be for ever preſerved by thy power, in the firm faith of the doctrines I have taught them, and in the uninterrupted practice of the precepts I have delivered unto them, that when they go abroad into the world, they may teach the ſame things, and be ever united in the ſame bleſſed deſign, after the pattern of that moſt perfect union of counſels and deſigns which ſubſiſts between me and thee." The unity which Jeſus here claims with the Father, is by no means a perſonal union, for no ſuch thing could ſubſiſt between Chriſt's diſciples; but it is an union of counſels and deſigns. This appears likewiſe from ver. 12. where our Lord ſays, that, during his perſonal abode with them, he had kept them all in the Father's name, except the ſon of perdition. See the next note, and Hammond.

Ver. 12. While I was with them] "During my perſonal abode with them, I kept them in the firm faith, and in the ſteadfaſt practice of the precepts of my religion, ſo far as I revealed thoſe unto them. I ſay, the twelve men whom thou gaveſt me for Apoſtles I have thus kept, inſomuch that none of them have apoſtatized, but Judas Iſcariot, that wicked perſon, who deſerves perdition; (ſee ch. xviii. 8, 9.) and his apoſtaſy has happened, not through any defect in my care, but in conformity to thy will, permitting his perfidy for the wiſeſt reaſons; (ſee ch. vi. 71.) and therefore it was long ago predicted in the Scriptures, particularly in Pſ. cix. 8." See on ch. xiii. 19. As the phraſe, ſon of death, 2 Sam. xii. 5. ſignifies one who deſerves death; and a child of hell, Matth. xxiii. 15. ſignifies one who deſerves hell; ſo here ſon of perdition ſignifies a perſon who deſerves perdition. That the Scripture might be fulfilled, is better rendered by Dr. Heylin, whereby the Scripture was to be fulfilled.

Ver. 13. And now I come to thee] "I am now about to return to thee, having finiſhed my work; yet, before I leave the world, I offer this prayer in behalf of my Apoſtles, with this intention, that being heard for them, they may receive all the endowments neceſſary to qualify them for converting the world, and be filled with my joy; the great joy I have in being the inſtrument of ſaving mankind." See on ch. xv. 11.

Ver. 15. I pray not, &c.] "My meaning is not that on account of theſe difficulties, ver. 14. thou ſhouldeſt remove them out of the world by death; I know that the purpoſes of thy glory, and their own improvement and uſefulneſs will require their longer continuance. I only pray, that thou wouldeſt grant them the direction of thy Spirit, and protection of thy Providence, whereby they will be preſerved both from the evil of ſin and temptation, and from the ſubtilty and malice of the evil one,—τοῦ πονηροῦ." See 1 John v. 19.

Ver. 16—19. They are not of the world] "It is with great pleaſure that I reflect on their being ſeparated from the world, both in principles and practice, and that in this reſpect they ſo nearly reſemble

17 Sanctify them through thy truth: thy word is truth.

18 As thou haſt ſent me into the world, even ſo have I alſo ſent them into the world.

19 And for their ſakes I ſanctify myſelf, that they alſo might be ſanctified through the truth.

20 Neither pray I for theſe alone, but for them alſo which ſhall believe on me through their word;

21 That they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they alſo may be one in us: that the world may believe that thou haſt ſent me.

22 And the glory which thou gaveſt me, I have given them; that they may be one, even as we are one:

23 I in them, and thou in me, that they may be made perfect in one, and that the world may know that thou haſt ſent me, and haſt loved them, as thou haſt loved me.

24 Father, I will that they alſo whom thou haſt given me be with me where I am; that they may behold my glory which thou haſt given me: for thou lovedſt me before the foundation of the world.

25 O righteous Father, the world hath not known thee: but I have known thee, and theſe have known that thou haſt ſent me.

26 And I have declared unto them thy name, and will declare it: that the love wherewith thou haſt loved me, may be in them, and I in them.

Ver. 17. Ch. xv. 3. Acts xv. 9. Epheſ. v. 26. 1 Pet. i. 22. 2 Sam. vii. 28. Ch. viii. 40.—V. 18. Ch. xx. 21.—V. 19. 1 Cor. i. 2, 30. 1 Theſſ. iv. 7. Hebr. x. 10. Or, truly ſanctified.—V. 21. Ver. 11, 22, 23. Gal. iii. 28. Ch. x. 38. xiv. 11.—V. 22. Ch. xiv. 20.—V. 23. Col. iii. 14.—V. 24. Ch. xii. 26. xiv. 3. 1 Theſſ. iv. 17.—V. 25. Ch. xv. 21. xvi. 3. Ch. vii. 29. viii. 55. x. 15. Ver. 8. Ch. xvi. 27.—V. 26. Ch. xv. 9.

me. Hence I am the more ſolicitous that they be preſerved untainted and blameleſs after my departure; wherefore I pray, that through the influence of thy truth upon their minds, thou wouldeſt give them ſuch a ſtrong inclination to the work of the miniſtry, that they may wholly devote themſelves to it, to whatever difficulties it may expoſe them. Do this, I beſeech thee, for the effectual ſpreading thy word, which I have commiſſioned them to preach as the truth itſelf. I beſeech thee ſanctify them by thy truth, ver. 17, 18. becauſe I have ſent them into the world, to proſecute that great and good deſign upon which thou ſenteſt me into the world." Dr. Whitby would tranſlate the original of ver. 17. ſanctify them for thy truth, that is, for the propagation of it. To ſanctify imports not only to make holy, in the moral ſenſe, but "to dedicate, and ſet apart for religious uſes." Thus the word is uſed often in the Old Teſtament, and this ſenſe the connection directs us to put upon it here; though at the ſame time it muſt be acknowledged, that were we to conſider the paſſage ſeparately, the common ſenſe would be extremely juſt, the word of God, which itſelf is truth, being the great means of the ſanctification of men. Our Lord goes on, ver. 19. And for their ſakes, &c. "The chief thing I had in view when I entered on my miniſtry was, that my Apoſtles might be prepared for the work of the miniſtry, by the truths I was to teach, and by the miracles I was to perform before them in the courſe of my miniſtry. It is likewiſe one of the ends for which I now devote myſelf to death, as a victim to be ſacrificed, inaſmuch as the doctrines I have taught them, and which they are to teach, being thus ſealed with my blood, will be offered to the world with the ſtrongeſt evidence; not to mention that my reſurrection from the dead will be a ſtrong proof, firſt of my miſſion from God, and next of theirs, who act by authority from me." Our Lord's words, in this verſe, may perhaps be more fully and ſtrongly expreſſed thus: "I devote myſelf as a victim, to be ſacrificed for their ſakes, that they alſo, taught by my example, and animated by my dying love, may be confirmed in their faith, rendered purer in their conduct, and be found ready to ſacrifice their lives alſo for the truth." See Whitby, Mead, Macknight, and Heylin.

Ver. 20, 21. Neither pray I for theſe alone] "I do not make my Apoſtles the only ſubjects of this my laſt prayer; but I pray alſo for all thoſe who ſhall be converted by my Apoſtles; intreating for them the gracious influences of thy Spirit, that they may maintain the unity of the faith, and all agree in one doctrine, that as in this great deſign of inſtructing, converting, and ſaving the world, a moſt perfect union ſubſiſts between thee and me, they alſo may be taken into the union, and agree as perfectly with us, and among themſelves, as thou with me, and I with thee; the effect whereof will be, that the world, diſcerning their agreement among themſelves and with God, will believe that I their Maſter have been ſent into the world by God." The propriety of this requeſt will appear to all who conſider, that many of thoſe who were converted by the Apoſtles applied themſelves to preach and propagate the Goſpel; and the expreſſion, that the world may believe, &c. plainly intimates, that diſſentions among Chriſtians would not only be uncomfortable to themſelves, but would be a means of bringing the truth and excellency of the Chriſtian religion into queſtion. And he muſt be a ſtranger to what hath paſſed, and is daily paſſing in the world, who does not ſee what fatal advantage thoſe diviſions have given to infidels to repreſent it as a calamity, rather than to regard it as a bleſſing to mankind.

Ver. 22, 23. And the glory which thou gaveſt me, &c.] "Moreover, the glory of inſpiration, of a divine miſſion, and of the power of miracles to confirm that miſſion which thou gaveſt unto me, I have beſtowed on my apoſtles; and on thoſe who ſhall be converted by them, and employed to preach the Goſpel to the world; in order that being commiſſioned by the ſame authority, and illuminated with one ſpirit, they may fully agree in their doctrine, and their labours may lead to one end: So may they become worthy meſſengers of the true God, and cauſe the world fully to know, both that thou haſt ſent me their Maſter, and that thou approveſt of them and their undertaking, even as thou haſt approved of me." This branch of our Lord's prayer was extremely neceſſary; for if the firſt preachers of the Goſpel had differed in their accounts of the life and doctrine of Chriſt, or in the repreſentation which they gave of the Chriſtian ſcheme, they would have given riſe to many different ſects, which would have endangered the very being of Chriſtianity itſelf, and mankind would have been altogether at a loſs to know which was the true doctrine of Jeſus Chriſt. How fully this prayer for the unity of the firſt preachers was anſwered, we learn from the hiſtory of the Acts; and their unity muſt appear very remarkable, when it is conſidered what vaſt numbers were employed in preaching the Goſpel, throughout the various countries of the world. Nevertheleſs, our wonder will ceaſe, when we call to mind that all who poſſeſſed the power of miracles, and preached with any authority, were inſpired by the ſame ſpirit of God; ſo could not but all agree in one ſcheme of religion. We may juſt obſerve here the ſum of our Lord's whole prayer, Firſt, "Receive me into thy own, and my glory: Secondly, let my apoſtles ſhare therein: Thirdly, and all other believers; and fourthly, let all the world believe." See Macknight, Bengelius, and Grotius.

Ver. 24. Father, I will, &c.] See ver. 5. "Not only with reſpect to thoſe apoſtles whom thou haſt particularly given me, but alſo to thoſe in every age and country, who ſhall ſincerely believe in and obey me, my will is, that after their work here is over, they may be with me in heaven, whither I am going, (ver. 11.) That they may behold the full ſplendor of my glory, and be made happy with ſeeing me ſo; (1 John iii. 2.) For thou lovedſt me before the foundation of the world. As thou lovedſt me before I came into the world, nay, even before the world was, I ſhall not be leſs the object of thy love, now that I have accompliſhed the work which thou gaveſt me to perform. My diſciples, therefore, in beholding the glory which I ſhall enjoy with thee, will be happy, both as it will ſhew them how much thou approveſt my deſign, and how happy I am made thereby, and by the fruition and communication of thy glory." See ver. 26. The phraſe, Which thou haſt given me, appears to me to clog the ſentence, and is probably a repetition of the preceding clauſe in the verſe, which is nearly in the ſame words. See Mills, and Wetſtein.

Ver. 25, 26. O righteous Father! &c.] "O Father, who art the Author of all righteous deſigns, and the lover of righteous men; nay, and from whoſe very righteouſneſs flows the admiſſion of believers to thee; though the world, ignorant of thy nature and perfections, and of thy gracious counſels for man's ſalvation, has rejected me, I have notwithſtanding every where demonſtrated that I am fully acquainted with thy counſels; and my diſciples, knowing that thou haſt ſent me, have believed in me as the Meſſiah; which is the reaſon I am ſo ſollicitous, that they ſhould behold the glory thou haſt given me: And for this reaſon I have, with the greateſt care, taught them thy nature, perfections, and counſels, ver. 26. Nevertheleſs, being now incapable, by reaſon of their prejudices of receiving full information in theſe points, I will inſtruct them afterwards, by the illumination of my Spirit, that the love which thou haſt born to Me, as thy Meſſenger, may be ſhewn to them, as thy meſſengers likewiſe; and that, being inſpired by my Spirit, they may have me, as it were, dwelling within them, ſo as always to act by my authority." See Macknight, Hammond, and Clarke.

REFLECTIONS ON CHAP. XVII.

With what pleaſure ſhould we behold our gracious Redeemer in this poſture of humble adoration,—lifting up his eyes to God with a

CHAP. XVIII.

Judas betrayeth Jeſus. The officers fall to the ground. Peter ſmiteth off Malclus' ear. Jeſus is taken and led unto Annas and Caiaphas. Peter's denial. Jeſus examined before Caiaphas: his arraignment before Pilate: his kingdom. The Jews aſk Barabbas to be let looſe.

WHEN Jeſus had ſpoken theſe words, he went forth with his diſciples over the brook Cedron, where was a garden, into which he entered, and his diſciples.

2 And Judas alſo, which betrayed him, knew the place: for Jeſus oft-times reſorted thither with his diſciples.

3 Judas then, having received a band of men, and officers from the chief prieſts and Phariſees, cometh thither with lanterns, and torches, and weapons.

4 Jeſus therefore, knowing all things that ſhould come upon him, went forth, and ſaid unto them, Whom ſeek ye?

5 They anſwered him, Jeſus of Nazareth. Jeſus ſaith unto them, I am he. And Judas alſo which betrayed him, ſtood with them.

6 As ſoon then as he had ſaid unto them,

Ver. 1. Matth. xxvi. 36. Mark xiv. 32. Luke xxii. 39. 2 Sam. xv. 23.—V. 2. Luke xxii. 39.—V. 3. Matth. xxvi. 47. Mark xiv. 43. Luke xxii. 47. Acts i. 16.

ſolemn devotion, and pouring on his pious and benevolent Spirit in thoſe divine breathings which are here recorded, ver. 1. From his example we may learn to pray, and from his interceſſion to hope. We know that the Father heareth him always, (ch. xi. 42.) and ſingularly did he manifeſt that he heard him now, by all that bright aſſemblage of glories, which ſhone around him in the concluding ſcenes of his abode on earth, and in thoſe which attended his removal from it: and in all theſe did the bleſſed Jeſus manifeſt his zeal for the glory of the Father. May we emulate the ſame holy temper! And when we pray, even for our own conſummate happineſs in the heavenly world, may we conſider that happineſs as ultimately centering in the honour and ſervice of God.

And well may we be encouraged to hope for this happineſs, when we reflect that Chriſt has an univerſal power over all fleſh, and over ſpirits ſuperior to thoſe who dwell in fleſh; with which he is inveſted on purpoſe that he may accompliſh the ſalvation of thoſe whom the Father has given him, even of every true believer, ver. 2, 3. We ſee the certain way to this life eternal, even the knowledge of God in Chriſt. Let us bleſs God that we have ſo many opportunities of obtaining it; and earneſtly pray, that he who commanded the light to ſhine out of darkneſs, would by his divine rays ſhine alſo forth on our benighted ſouls; and ſo animate us in his ſervice, from the nobleſt principles of gratitude and love, that we may be able to ſay, even in our dying moments, with ſomewhat of that ſpirit which our Lord expreſſed, ver. 4. Father, we have glorified thee on earth, and finiſhed the work which thou gaveſt us to do; and now being no more in the world, we come unto thee. Then may we hope, in our humble degree, to partake of that glory to which he is returned, and to ſit down with him on his victorious throne. See ver. 11.

In the mean time may our faith ſee, and our zeal confeſs Chriſt! May we acknowledge his divine authority, as having come out from the Father! May we be united in love to Him, and to each other; and be kept by that divine word, which is the ſecurity of his people that none of them ſhall be loſt! ver. 7, 8. Let the fearful inſtance of the ſon of perdition, who periſhed even from among the apoſtles, the choſen of God, teach us an humble jealouſy over our own hearts, whatever external privileges we may enjoy; and engage us to maintain a continual regard to Him, who is able to keep us from falling, and to preſent us faultleſs before the preſence of his glory with exceeding joy! Jude, ver. 24.

What perpetual reaſon of thankfulneſs have we, that our gracious Maſter delivered theſe words in the world, and recalled them thus exactly to the memory of his beloved diſciple ſo many years after, that we, in the moſt diſtant ages of his church, might, by reviewing them, have his joy fulfilled in us! ver. 13. Let us with pleaſure recollect, that thoſe petitions which Chriſt offered for his apoſtles, were expreſly declared, not to be intended for them alone, but ſo far as circumſtances ſhould agree, for all that ſhould believe on Him through their word; and therefore for us, if we are real, and not merely nominal believers. For us doth he ſtill pray, not that God would immediately take us out of the world, though for his ſake we may be continually hated and injured in it; but that he would keep us from the evil to which we are daily expoſed. For our ſakes did he ſanctify himſelf, as a propitiation for our ſins, that we alſo might be ſanctified through the truth: For He gave himſelf for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himſelf a peculiar people, zealous of good works. Titus ii. 14. and ver. 14—20.

O may theſe wiſe and gracious purpoſes of his love be fulfilled in us! —May we be one with each other, and with him! ver. 21. May that piety and charity appear in the whole of our temper and behaviour, which will evidently ſhew the force of our religion, and reflect a conſpicuous honour upon its great founder!

It is the declared will of Chriſt,—and let us never forget it, that his people ſhould be with him where he is, that they may behold his glory which the Father has given him, ver. 24. And there is an evident congruity, as well as mercy, in the appointment, that where he is, there alſo ſhould his ſervants and members be. The bleſſed angels do undoubtedly behold the glory of Chriſt with perpetual congratulation and delight: But how much more reaſon ſhall we have to rejoice and triumph in it, when we conſider it as the glory of one in our own nature,—the glory of our Redemer and our Friend,—the pledge and ſecurity of our own everlaſting happineſs! O let us often be lifting up the eyes of our faith towards this glory, breathing after heaven in this view; and in the mean time with all due zeal, and love, and duty, acknowledging the Father and the Son, (ver. 25.) that ſo the joys of heaven may be anticipated in our ſouls, while the love of God is ſhed abroad there by his Spirit, which is given unto us, even ſomething of that love, wherewith he hath loved Jeſus, our incarnate head, ver. 26.

Chap. XVIII. Ver. 1, 2. He went forth with his diſciples] When the interceſſory prayer was ended, Jeſus and his diſciples came down from the mount of Olives into a field below, called Gathſemané. Through this field the brook Cedron ran, and in it, on the other ſide of the brook, was a garden, commonly known by the name of the Garden of Gethſemané; concerning which ſee the note on Matt. xxvi. 36. It was the brook Cedron, which David, a type of Chriſt, went over with the people, weeping, in his flight from Abſalom. Jeſus we are told reſorted to the garden of Gethſemané, which probably belonged to one of Chriſt's friends, and to which he had a liberty of retiring whenever he pleaſed: Here accordingly he often uſed to ſpend ſome conſiderable time in prayer and pious converſe, in the evenings or nights, after his indefatigable labours in the city and temple by day. It is indeed amazing how fleſh and blood could go through ſuch inceſſant fatigues: but it is very probable that Chriſt might exert ſome miraculous power over his own animal nature, to ſtrengthen it for ſuch difficult ſervices, and to preſerve it in health and vigour; otherwiſe the copious dews, which fall by night in thoſe parts, muſt have been very dangerous, eſpecially when the body was heated by preaching in the day, and often by travelling ſeveral miles on foot. See Doddridge, and Calmet.

Ver. 3. A band of men] This band conſiſted of Roman ſoldiers, for both its name, ſpira, a cohort, and the title of its commander, χιλίαρχος, (ver. 12.) Chiliarch, anſwering to our colonel, are Roman military terms. The word rendered officers, ὑπηρέτας, properly ſignifies ſervants. They carried lanterns and torches with them, becauſe, though it was always full moon at the paſſover, the ſky might be darkened by the clouds, and the place where they were going was ſhaded with trees. See Macknight.

Ver. 4. Jeſus, knowing all things that ſhould come, &c.] That were coming. Our Lord not only knew in general, that he ſhould ſuffer ſome great evil, and even death itſelf, but was acquainted with all the particular circumſtances of ignominy and horror that ſhould attend his ſufferings; which accordingly he largely foretold; (See Matt. xx. 18, 19. and the parallel places;) though many of theſe circumſtances were as contingent as can well be imagined. It is impoſſible to enter aright into the heroic behaviour of our Lord Jeſus, without carrying this circumſtance along with us. The criticks are in raptures at the gallantry of Achilles, in going to the Trojan war, when he knew, according to Homer, that he ſhould fall there. But he muſt have a very low way of thinking, who does not ſee infinitely more fortitude in our Lord's conduct on this great occaſion, when the preſent circumſtance ſo judiciouſly, though ſo modeſtly ſuggeſted by St. John, is duly attended to. See Doddridge, and Bengelius.

Ver. 6. They went backward, and fell to the ground] As there were ſcribes and prieſts among them, they muſt have read of the deſtruction of thoſe companies, which came to ſeize the prophet Elijah, 2 Kings i. 10, 12. a fact, which bore ſo great a reſemblance to the preſent, that it is an amazing inſtance of the moſt obdurate wickedneſs, that they ſhould venture to renew the aſſault on Chriſt after ſo ſenſible an experience both of his power and mercy. Nothing ſeems more probable than that theſe men might endeavour to perſuade themſelves and their attendants, that this ſtrange repulſe was effected by ſome dæmon, in confederacy with Jeſus; who oppoſed the execution of juſtice upon him, and they might perhaps aſcribe it, to the ſpecial providence of God, rather than to the indulgence of Jeſus, that they had received no further damage. The moſt corrupt heart has commonly its reaſonings to ſupport it, in its abſurdeſt notions, and moſt criminal actions. However, to all unprejudiced

I am he, they went backward, and fell to the ground.

7 Then aſked he them again, Whom ſeek ye? And they ſaid, Jeſus of Nazareth.

8 Jeſus anſwered, I have told you that I am he. If therefore ye ſeek me, let theſe go their way:

9 That the ſaying might be fulfilled which he ſpake, Of them which thou gaveſt me, have I loſt none.

10 Then Simon Peter, having a ſword, drew it, and ſmote the high-prieſt's ſervant, and cut off his right ear. The ſervant's name was Malchus.

11 Then ſaid Jeſus unto Peter, Put up thy ſword into the ſheath: the cup which my Father hath given me, ſhall I not drink it?

12 Then the band, and the captain, and officers of the Jews, took Jeſus, and bound him, 13 And led him away to Annas firſt (for he was father-in-law to Caiaphas, which was the high-prieſt that ſame year).

14 Now Caiaphas was he which gave counſel to the Jews, that it was expedient that one man ſhould die for the people.

15 And Simon Peter followed Jeſus, and ſo did another diſciple. That diſciple was known unto the high-prieſt, and went in with Jeſus into the palace of the high-prieſt.

16 But Peter ſtood at the door without. Then went out that other diſciple which was known unto the high-prieſt, and ſpake unto her that kept the door, and brought in Peter.

17 Then ſaith the damſel that kept the door unto Peter, Art not thou alſo one of this man's diſciples? He ſaith, I am not.

18 And the ſervants and officers ſtood there, who had made a fire of coals; (for it was cold:) and they warmed themſelves: and Peter ſtood with them, and warmed himſelf.

19 The high-prieſt then aſked Jeſus of his diſciples, and of his doctrine.

Ver. 9. Ch. xvii. 12.—V. 10. Matth. xxvi. 51. Mark xiv. 47. Luke xxii. 49, 50.—V. 11. Matth. xx. 22. xxvi. 39, 42.—V. 13. See Matth. xxvi. 57. Luke iii. 2. And Annas ſent Chriſt bound unto Caiaphas the high-prieſt, ver. 24.—V. 14. Ch. xi. 50.—V. 15. Matth. xxvi. 58. Mark xiv. 54. Luke xxii. 54.—V. 16. Matth. xxvi. 69.

minds, this exertion and ſuſpenſion of his divine power, was a ſufficient proof that our Lord could not have been apprehended without his own conſent, and that his death was a voluntary ſacrifice. Perhaps it may be unneceſſary to hint that the words rendered, I am he, are literally only, I am, ἐγώ εἰμι, which ſome expoſitors have ſuppoſed to be expreſſed of our Lord's true divinity, chap. viii. 58. and that his ſolemn and auguſt declaration of his being the great I AM, the ſovereign Jehovah, produced this marvellous effect. But this criticiſm evidently loſes the whole force of the argument before us; and there is nothing more common in the language of Scripture, than the preſent mode of expreſſion. See particularly chap. ix. 9.

Ver. 8. If therefore ye ſeek me] This was not a requeſt, which would have been but little attended to by an inveterate multitude, but a command; for the ſame divine power which ſtruck them to the ground, ver. 6. withheld their hands from ſeizing the diſciples, even after Peter had aſſaulted Malchus. Who can fail remarking, the extreme tenderneſs of our Lord towards thoſe who had ſo lately neglected him? ſleeping while he was in ſuch an agony; that yet he would not ſuffer them to be terrified by ſo much as a ſhort impriſonment. His diſciples perhaps might conſider this ſpeech as an excuſe for their forſaking him: but had they viewed it in a juſt light, it would rather have appeared a ſtrong engagement upon them to have waited for that fair diſmiſſion, which our Lord ſeemed about to give them. See the parallel places, Doddrige, and Janſenius.

Ver. 10. Then Simon Peter, &c.] See the introductory note to this goſpel.

Vee. 12. Then the band, &c. took Jeſus] See on ver. 3. There was a Roman guard and commanding officer, which attended near the temple during the great feſtivals, to prevent any ſedition of the Jews, and theſe appear to be the band and captain here mentioned. See Acts xxi. 31. and Luke xxii. 52. They bound our Lord; but they did not reflect, that it was not the cord which held him: His immenſe charity was by far a ſtronger band. He could have ſtruck them all dead with as much eaſe as he had before thrown them on the ground. Nevertheleſs he patiently ſubmitted to this, and to every other indignity which they put upon him; ſo meek was he under the greateſt injuries, ſo ready to ſuffer for human ſalvation!

Ver. 13. And led him away to Annas firſt] See the note on Matth. xxvi. 57. Caiaphas ſeems to have enjoyed the ſacerdotal dignity during the whole courſe of Pilate's government in Judea; for he was advanced by Valerius Gratus, Pilate's predeceſſor, and was diveſted of it by Vitellius, governor of Syria, after he depoſed Pilate from his procuratorſhip. St. Cyril, after this verſe, reads the 24th, Now Annas ſent him bound, &c. as it is inſerted in the margin; for Peter's denial of Chriſt, and the other particulars which follow, happened in the houſe of Caiaphas, as appears from Matth. xxvi. 57. or elſe ver. 24. muſt be read in a parentheſis, and interpreted as in our verſion, now Annas had ſent, &c. See Matth. xiv. 3 Maldonat, and Wetſtein.

Ver. 15. And ſo did another diſciple] This as we have before obſerved, is ſuppoſed to have been John himſelf. See on Matth. xxvi. 69. and Luke xxii. 54. Grotius, however, is of opinion, that this diſciple was not one of the twelve, but rather an inhabitant of Jeruſalem; poſſibly the perſon at whoſe houſe our Lord ate the paſchal ſupper. Whitby likewiſe thinks it was not John. Theſe authors found their opinion on this circumſtance, that the twelve being Galileans, and men of mean ſtations, could not any of them be ſo well acquainted in the high-prieſt's family, as to procure admiſſion for a friend at a time of ſo much buſineſs. Lampe therefore has delivered it as his opinion, that the diſciple who brought in Peter was Judas. Nevertheleſs the common opinion may ſtill be adhered to; for though John was a Galilean, and a perſon in mean ſtation, there is neither impoſſibility nor improbability in the notion, that he may have had a relation, friend, or acquaintance in the ſtation of a ſervant at the high-prieſt's, who might not only give him admittance, but, at his deſire, admit Peter alſo. Further, when we conſider that St. John was to write an hiſtory of Chriſt's life, it will appear extremely proper, that in the courſe of Providence he ſhould have an opportunity afforded him of being an eye-witneſs of this moſt ſolemn ſcene before the council. See Grotius, Whitby, and Macknight.

Ver. 17. Art not thou alſo one, &c.] One would imagine, from the word alſo, when it is read in the connection wherein John has placed it, that, in this queſtion, ſhe referred to John; as if ſhe had ſaid, "Art not thou one, as well as thy companion?" And if this were admitted, it would be a plain intimation, that John acknowledged himſelf a diſciple of Chriſt. But it muſt be owned, that the other Evangeliſts uſe the ſame word alſo, though they ſay nothing of John's being with Peter. It ſeems the damſel, after having admitted Peter, followed him to the fire, and ſpake to him there in an angry tone, having been informed that it was he who had cut off her fellow-ſervant's ear. See ver. 26. and the parallel places.

Ver. 18. A fire of coals (for it was cold)] See the note on Jer. xxxvi. 22. Fires in winter are uſed but for a little while at Aleppo, which is conſiderably further to the north than Jeruſalem, and ſome there make uſe of none at all. The fires they then uſe in their lodging-rooms are of charcoal, in pans; which ſort of fire alſo is uſed by the Egyptians. They had no chimneys; but what ſeems moſt to have required the uſe of wood, and conſequently chimneys, amongſt the Jews, was the dreſſing the paſchal lambs; for charcoal might without doubt be ſufficient for their common cookery. If, however, they roaſted the lambs of the paſſover, as Thevenot tells us the Perſians do whole ſheep, as well as lambs, which are not deſigned for ſacred purpoſes, the uſe of ſmoky wood might be avoided; for they do it, he ſays, in ovens, which have the mouth open at the top, into which, after they are well heated, they put the meat, with an earthen pan underneath, to receive the fat: They roaſt alike on all ſides, and he acknowledges that they dreſs them well. He ſubjoins another way of roaſting a whole ſheep, practiſed by the Arminians, by which alſo the uſe of ſmoky wood is avoided: for having flayed it, they cover it again with the ſkin, and put it into an oven upon the quick coals, covering it alſo with a good many of the ſame coals, that it may have fire under and over, to roaſt it well on all ſides, and the ſkin keeps it from being burned. But however theſe things may be, it is certain that this account is in no wiſe contradicted, but rather confirmed by what St. John ſays of a fire kindled in a palace at Jeruſalem, to warm perſons who had been out in a cold night, which it ſeems was a fire of charcoal, not of wood, and gives a propriety to the mentioning this circumſtance which I never obſerved to be remarked in any author. In like manner paſchal ovens are alſo mentioned by Jewiſh writers. See the Obſervations on Sacred Scriptures, p. 117.

Ver. 19—21. The high-prieſt then aſked Jeſus] The court being duly 20 Jeſus anſwered him, I ſpake openly to the world; I ever taught in the ſynagogue, and in the temple, whither the Jews always reſort; and in ſecret have I ſaid nothing.

21 Why aſkeſt thou me? aſk them which heard me, what I have ſaid unto them: behold, they know what I ſaid.

22 And when he had thus ſpoken, one of the officers which ſtood by, ſtruck Jeſus with the palm of his hand, ſaying, Anſwereſt thou the high-prieſt ſo?

23 Jeſus anſwered him, If I have ſpoken evil, bear witneſs of the evil: but if well, why ſmiteſt thou me?

24 (Now Annas had ſent him bound unto Caiaphas the high-prieſt.)

25 And Simon Peter ſtood and warmed himſelf. They ſaid therefore unto him, Art not thou alſo one of his diſciples? He denied it, and ſaid, I am not.

26 One of the ſervants of the high-prieſt (being his kinſman whoſe ear Peter cut off) ſaith, Did not I ſee thee in the garden with him?

27 Peter then denied again: and immediately the cock crew.

28 Then led they Jeſus from Caiaphas unto the hall of judgement: and it was early; and they themſelves went not into the judgement-hall, leſt they ſhould be defiled; but that they might eat the paſſover.

29 Pilate then went out unto them, and ſaid, What accuſation bring ye againſt this man?

30 They anſwered and ſaid unto him, If he were not a malefactor, we would not have delivered him up unto thee.

31 Then ſaid Pilate unto them, Take ye him, and judge him according to your law. The Jews therefore ſaid unto him, It is not lawful for us to put any man to death:

Ver. 20. Ch. vii. 26.—V. 22. Jer. xx. 2. Acts xxiii. 2. Or, with a rod.—V. 24. Matth. xxvi. 57.—V. 25. Matth. xxvi. 69, 71. Mark xiv. 69. Luke xxii. 58.—V. 27. Ch. xiii. 38.—V. 28. Matth. xxvii. 2. Mark xv. 1. Luke xxiii. 1. Or, Pilate's houſe, Matth. xxvii. 27. Acts x. 28. xi. 3.

duly conſtituted, and the priſoner placed at the bar, the trial began about break of day. See Luke xxii. 66. The high-prieſt aſked our Lord, what his diſciples were? for what end he had gathered them? whether it was to make himſelf a king? and what the doctrine was which he taught them? In theſe queſtions there was a great deal of art; for as the crime laid to our Lord's charge was, that he had ſet himſelf up for the Meſſiah, and deluded the people, they expected he would claim that dignity in their preſence, and ſo, without further trouble, they would have immediately condemned him on his own confeſſion. But to oblige a priſoner to confeſs what might take away his life being an unjuſt method of procedure, Jeſus complained of it with reaſon, and bade them prove what they laid to his charge by witneſſes. "I ſpake openly, as to the manner; ever, or continually, as to the time; in the ſynagogue and temple, as to place; in ſecret have I ſaid nothing;—no point of doctrine which I have not taught in public." It was greatly to the honour of our Lord's character that all his actions were done in public, under the eye even of his enemies; becauſe, had he been carrying on any impoſture, the lovers of truth and goodneſs had thus abundant opportunities to have detected him. In his defence, therefore, he appealed with great propriety to that part of his character. See Macknight, Bengelius, and Calmet.

Ver. 22, 23. One of the officers—ſtruck Jeſus] As the word ῥάπισμα is ſuppoſed by many etymologiſts to be derived from ῥάβδος, a ſtaff, or ſtick, Beza would therefore render the paſſage, he ſmote Jeſus with a ſtaff. But the word is apparently uſed for any blow, and would moſt literally be rendered, gave Jeſus a blow; though, from Matth. v. 39. one would be apt to interpret it in the ſenſe which our tranſlators have given it. Suidas alſo explains it in the ſame ſenſe. The meaning of ver. 23. conſidered as our Lord's immediate reply to the officer who ſtruck him, is ſufficiently manifeſt. Mr. Bonnell, however, and ſome other expoſitors, ſuppoſe that the original conveys the following more extenſive ſenſe: "If thou haſt been one of my hearers, and canſt ſay that I, at any time, have ſpoken evil, either of God or man, in the courſe of my preaching, thou wilt do well to bear thy teſtimony concerning that evil, and give it in evidence to the court; but if I have ſpoken well, can reaſon be anſwered by blows? or can ſuch a ſober appeal to it deſerve them?" Thus our Lord became an example of his own precept, Matth. v. 44. bearing the greateſt injuries with a patience which could not be provoked. See Beza, Stockius, and Bonnell's Harmony, p. 362.

Ver. 27. And immediately the cock crew] See the note on Matth. xxvi. 73, 74, and the Reflections on this chapter.

Ver. 28. Then led they Jeſus—to the hall of judgement] To the guard-room. Wat. and ſo ver. 33. See the note on Matth. xxvii. 1, 2. When the Evangeliſt ſays it was early, he points out to us the great hurry and eagerneſs of the Jews to have this myſtery of iniquity accompliſhed; for it was not cuſtomary with them to judge any man before the ninth hour. See on Luke xxii. 66. By the law, Numb. xix. 22. Whoſoever touched any unclean perſon, was unclean; for this reaſon the chief prieſts and elders, when they came to the pretorium, would not go in, leſt the pollutions they might have contracted in the houſe of a heathen ſhould render them unfit for eating the paſſover, for which they had now purified themſelves. See Acts x. 28. The ſame reaſon likewiſe hindered them from going into the pretorium at the other feſtivals, which the governor attended for the ſake of adminiſtring juſtice. But to make the matter eaſy, a kind of ſtructure was erected, adjoining to the palace, which ſerved inſtead of a tribunal, or judgement-ſeat. This ſtructure, from its Hebrew name Gabbatha, ſeems to have been pretty high, and was called in the Greek λιθόστρωτον, being paved with little pieces of marble of divers colours, becauſe it was generally expoſed to the weather. Perhaps it was ſomething like a ſtage, but larger, open on all ſides, but covered above, at leaſt when the governor was to hear cauſes, having a throne placed on it for him to ſit on; and as it was joined to the palace wall, there was a door in the wall, by which he came out upon it from within. The people therefore ſtanding around, in the open air, could hear and ſee the governor when he ſpake to them from the pavement, without danger of being defiled, either by him, or any of his retinue. See Hammond, Lightfoot, and Macknight's Chronolog. diſſert. vi. p. 89.

Ver. 29. What accuſation bring you againſt this man?] This was the moſt natural queſtion imaginable for a judge to aſk on ſuch an occaſion; nevertheleſs the prieſts thought themſelves affronted by it. It ſeems they knew the governor's ſentiments concerning the priſoner, and underſtood his queſtion as carrying an inſinuation along with it, of their having brought one to be condemned, againſt whom they could find no accuſation. Beſides, Pilate may have ſpoken to them with a ſtern air, ſo as to ſignify his diſpleaſure. The word malefactor, κακοποιὸς, in the next verſe, implies a notorious offender. As the Jews had ſtill the power of inflicting ſlighter puniſhments, their bringing Chriſt to Pilate was a proof that they judged him to be ſuch an offender, as to have incurred a capital ſentence.

Ver. 31. Take ye him, and judge him] By making this offer to them, the governor told them plainly, that, in his opinion, the crime which they laid to the priſoner's charge was not of a capital nature; and that ſuch puniſhments as they were permitted by Cæſar to inflict, might be adequate to any miſdemeanour with which Jeſus was chargeable. One cannot ſuppoſe that Pilate could be ignorant of the caſe before him; for he began his government at Jeruſalem before Jeſus entered on his public miniſtry; and, beſides many other extraordinary things which he muſt formerly have heard concerning him, he had, no doubt, received a full account of his public entrance into Jeruſalem the beginning of the week; and alſo of his apprehenſion, in which the Jewiſh rulers were aſſiſted by a Roman cohort, which could hardly be engaged in that ſervice without the governor's expreſs permiſſion. It ſeems Nicodemus, or Joſeph of Arimathea, (who ſeems to have been perſonally acquainted with Pilate,—See on chap. xix. 38.) or ſome other friend, had told him fully of the affair, for he entertained a juſt notion of it. He knew that the chief prieſts had delivered him for envy. It plainly appears, however, by his whole conduct, that he was very unwilling to engage in this cauſe. He ſeems cautious, therefore, not to enter into the full ſenſe of what the Jewiſh rulers intended, when they called him a malefactor; but anſwers them in ambiguous language, which they might have interpreted as a warrant to execute Chriſt, if they found it neceſſary, and yet which would have left them liable to be queſtioned for doing it, and might have given him ſuch an advantage againſt them, as a man of his character might have wiſhed. Their reply ſhews they were more aware of this artifice than has been generally imagined. It is not lawful for us to put any man to death. See the note on Mark xv. 1. To what has been obſerved there we add, that it appears both from this acknowledgment of the Jews, and from the writings of more modern rabbies, (which aſſert, that forty years before the 32 That the ſaying of Jeſus might be fulfilled, which he ſpake, ſignifying what death he ſhould die.

33 Then Pilate entered into the judgement-hall again, and called Jeſus, and ſaid, unto him, Art thou the King of the Jews?

34 Jeſus anſwered him, Sayeſt thou this thing of thyſelf, or did others tell it thee of me?

35 Pilate anſwered, Am I a Jew? Thine own nation, and the chief prieſts, have delivered thee unto me: What haſt thou done?

36 Jeſus anſwered, My kingdom is not of this world: if my kingdom were of this world, then would my ſervants fight, that I ſhould not be delivered to the Jews: but now is my kingdom not from hence.

37 Pilate therefore ſaid unto him, Art thou a King then? Jeſus anſwered, Thou ſayeſt that I am a king. To this end was I born, and for this cauſe came I into the world, that I ſhould bear witneſs unto the truth. Every one that is of the truth, heareth my voice.

Ver. 32. Matth. xx. 19. Ch. xii. 32.—V. 33. Matth. xxvii. 11.—V. 36. 1 Tim. vi. 13. Luke xii. 14. Ch. vi. 15. viii 15 V. 37. 1 John iii. 19.

deſtruction of the temple, the power of judicature, in capital crimes, was taken away from them,) that Jewiſh magiſtrates under the Romans had not the power of inflicting capital puniſhments. This is manifeſt alſo from the nature and conſtitution of a Roman province; for during the free ſtate of the Romans, no free man could be put to death at Rome, but by the ſuffrages of the body of the people, or by the ſenate, or by ſome ſuperior magiſtrate appointed for that purpoſe. In the provinces, the power of capital puniſhments was granted to the governors by the eſpecial commiſſion called imperium. Upon the change of the government, this power came into the hands of the emperors, and was by them intruſted with the præfectus urbis at Rome; and in the provinces, with the reſpective governors, as before. This power could not be delegated by the governors to any other perſon, while they themſelves were in the provinces; nor is there an inſtances whereby it appears, that any other court had this power at the ſame time with the Roman governor, and in ſuch places where he could exerciſe it. There were indeed ſome free cities in the provinces dependant on the Romans, who had this power within themſelves; but then the Roman governors had it not at the ſame time in thoſe places; though if the inhabitants attempted any thing in an hoſtile manner againſt the Romans, the governors had it in their commiſſion to check them, as well as any other enemies. The Roman provinces were not all ſettled upon the ſame footing; that is, the grants and privileges were not made alike to all. Civil cauſes and leſſer crimes muſt neceſſarily either be left to the inhabitants, or ſome inferior officers; for it was impoſſible that the governor himſelf ſhould perform all this in perſon, and therefore each governor had uſually ſeveral legates with him, beſides his quæſtor, who were capable of adminiſtering juſtice in different parts of the country, and ſeem to have had a larger power than the municipal magiſtrates, for they repreſented the governor himſelf: But no ſufficient evidence is offered to prove, that any other court but his own had cognizance of capital crimes; nor does ſuch a power appear at all agreeable to the ſcheme and maxims of the Roman government, which in this point ſeems to have continued uniform and conſiſtent with itſelf, under the great alterations it received in other reſpects; and, therefore, whatever other indulgences they might grant to the Jews, or other provincials, it does not follow from thence that they allowed them this, or ſuffered their governors to ſit ſtill as idle ſpectators, while any other court aſſumed a judicial power to take away the lives of any perſons within their diſtrict, who were all equally under their protection. The caſe of Stephen has indeed been thought by ſome, an inſtance in favour of the contrary opinion; but that this fact rather ought to be eſteemed as the reſult of a haſty and intemperate zeal, and done in a tumultuous manner, than as the effect of a legal ſentence conſequent upon a judicial proceſs, has been juſtly obſerved by Dr. Lardner, in his Credibil. part i. p. 112. See alſo Ward's 33d Diſſertation, and Manne's Eſſay i. p. 13.

Ver. 32. That the ſaying of Jeſus might be fulfilled] The Evangeliſt obſerves, that the Jews were directed thus to ſpeak and act, that there might be an accompliſhment of the divine counſels concerning the manner of our Lord's death; of which counſels Jeſus himſelf had given frequent intimations in the courſe of his miniſtry. According to the Jewiſh law, Lev. xxiv. 16. he would have been ſtoned, as his ſervant Stephen afterwards was, having been impiouſly adjudged by them to have deſerved death as a blaſphemer. Crucifixion was a Roman puniſhment.

Ver. 33. Then Pilate entered, &c.] The expreſſion uſed by the Jews in their accuſation of our Lord, Luke xxiii. 2. Saying, that he himſelf is Chriſt, the king, may no doubt refer to the acknowledgment which Jeſus made before the council, of his being the Meſſiah. Nevertheleſs, to account for Pilate's aſking our Lord whether he aſſumed the title of the king of the Jews, we muſt ſuppoſe, that the prieſts explained their accuſation by telling him, that Jeſus had travelled inceſſantly through the country, and every where gave himſelf out for the Meſſiah; and that even during his trial before them, he had been ſo preſumptuous as to aſſume that dignity in open court. Without ſome information of this kind, the governor would hardly have put the queſtion to Jeſus, no priſoner being obliged to accuſe himſelf. See on ver. 37.

Ver. 34—36. Sayeſt thou this thing of thyſelf] "Doſt thou aſk this queſtion of thine own accord, becauſe thou thinkeſt I have affected regal power; or doſt thou aſk it according to the information of the prieſts, who affirm that I have acknowledged myſelf to be a king?" No doubt Jeſus knew what had happened; but he ſpake to the governor after this manner, becauſe, being in the palace when the prieſts accuſed him without, he had not heard what they ſaid. Pilate anſwered, Am I a Jew? "Doſt thou think that I am acquainted, or that I concern myſelf with your religious opinions, expectations, and diſputes? Your own rulers have delivered you up as a ſeditious perſon; one who aſſumes the title of king: What have you done to merit this charge of ſedition?" Jeſus anſwered,—"Though I have acknwledged that I am a king, yet I am no raiſer of ſedition; for my kingdom is not of this world: had it been ſo, my ſervants would have fought. I ſhould have endeavoured to eſtabliſh myſelf on the throne by force of arms, and would have fought againſt the Jews when they came to apprehend me: But as I have done neither,—on the contrary, as I have hindered one of my diſciples from fighting, who ſought to reſcue me; it is evident that the kingdom which I claim is not of this world." It may be objected, that the number of Chriſt's diſciples, had they all been aſſembled in arms, could have been no match for the Jewiſh and Roman power at Jeruſalem; But it is to be remembered, that the populace appeared zealouſly on his ſide but a few days before, and the reaſon of their turning againſt him was, his not aſſuming a temporal kingdom, as they certainly expected he would have done. And we may further add, that a very ſmall body of forces, under a leader endowed with ſuch miraculous powers as Jeſus had lately exerciſed, might have been ſufficient to vanquiſh all the Roman legions. See on John vi. 15. It appears from various paſſages of the Old Teſtament, that the theocracy inſtituted by the coming of Moſes, was to continue till SHILOH came: Shiloh is Chriſt. Now Chriſt is not the ſucceſſor of the vicegerents of the Jewiſh ſtate, but of God himſelf, who is the king of the Jews. The ſceptre therefore which deſcends to him through the hands of thoſe vicegerents, is not merely a civil, but a theocratic ſceptre. This explains the evangelical doctrine of Chriſt's kingdom not being of this world. The theocracy which was adminiſtered over the Jews only, and in a carnal manner, was a kingdom of this world; but when transferred to Shiloh, and extended over all mankind, and adminiſtered in a ſpiritual manner, it became a kingdom not of this world. The Chriſtian religion therefore was not only left independent of the ſtate, by not being united to it, like the Jewiſh, (and being ſo left, it muſt needs, by the law of nature, be independent) but its independency was likewiſe ſecured by divine appointment, in this famous declaration of its founder, My kingdom, &c, which bears this plain and obvious ſenſe, "That the kingdom of God, to be extended over all mankind, was not like the kingdom of God confined to the Jewiſh people, where religion was incorporated with the ſtate; and therefore of this world, as well in the exerciſe of it, as in the rewards and puniſhments by which it was adminiſtered:—But was independent of all communities, and therefore neither of this world, as to the exerciſe of it, nor as to the rewards and puniſhments by which it was adminiſtered." That this is the true meaning of the text appears from the deluſion of his followers,—that the Goſpel was to be adminiſtered by the Moſaic œconomy of the law. We have obſerved that this property in the kingdom of Chriſt was given as a mark to diſtinguiſh it from the kingdom of God; that is, it was given to ſhew, that this religion extended to all mankind, and was not confined, like the Moſaic, to one people only. Conſequently, the very reaſon which made it proper for the Moſaic religion to be united by divine appointment to the ſtate, made it fit that the Chriſtian ſhould be left free and independent.—But for what end—if not for this,—to be at liberty to adapt itſelf to the many various kinds of policies, by a ſuitable union and alliance?—Thus did our Lord, by aſſerting the true nature of his kingdom, clear himſelf from every imputation of ſedition and treaſon; and, at the ſame time as he acknowledged himſelf a king, he convinced Pilate, that neither his title nor his kingdom was incompatible with that of Cæſar. See Div. Leg. vol. iv. p. 107. Warburton's Alliance, p. 178. Lardner's Credibil. part i. b. 1. ch. 5. and Grotius.

Ver. 37. Thou ſayeſt that I am a king] Some would read this, Thou ſayeſt [the truth]: For I am a king. "I came into the world for this end; that by explaining and proving the truth in general, and this great and fundamental branch of it in particular, I might impreſs it upon men's conſciences, and make them obedient to its laws. In this conſiſteth my kingdom; and all the lovers of truth obey me, and are my ſubjects." What our Lord here ſays incidentally, is to be regarded as an univerſal maxim. All ſincere lovers of truth will hear

38 Pilate ſaith unto him, What is truth? And when he had ſaid this, he went out again unto the Jews, and ſaith unto them, I find in him no fault at all.

39 But ye have a cuſtom, that I ſhould releaſe unto you one at the paſſover: will ye therefore that I releaſe unto you the King of the Jews?

40 Then cried they all again, ſaying, Not this man, but Barabbas. Now Barabbas was a robber.

Ver. 38. Matth. xxvii. 24. Luke xxiii. 4. Ch. xix. 4.—V. 39. Matth. xxvii. 15. Mark xv. 6. Luke xxiii. 17.—V. 40. Acts iii. 14. Luke xxiii. 19.

hear him: And, accordingly St. John, with all ſimplicity, depending on the evidences which he and his brethren had given of their miſſion from Chriſt, lays down the ſame teſtimony, We are of God; he that knoweth God, heareth us; 1 John iv. 6. In this conference between our Saviour and Pilate, we may obſerve firſt, that our Lord being aſked whether he were King of the Jews, anſwers ſo, that he denies it not, yet avoids giving the leaſt umbrage, as if he had any deſign upon the government. For though he allows himſelf to be a King, yet, to obviate any ſuſpenſe, he tells Pilate his kingdom is not of this world; and evidences it by this, that if he had pretended to any title to that country, his followers would have fought for him, had he been inclined to have ſet himſelf up by force, or were his kingdom to be erected in that manner; But my kingdom, ſays he, is not from hence,—is not of that kind or nature: Secondly, that Pilate, by the words and circumſtances of Chriſt, being ſatisfied that He laid no claim to his province, nor meant any diſturbance of the government, was yet a little ſurpriſed to hear a man in that poor garb, without retinue, or ſo much as a ſervant or a friend, own himſelf to be a King; and therefore aſked him, with ſome kind of wonder, and poſſibly with no ſmall degree of contempt, Art Thou a King? Βασιλεὺς εἶ σύ;—Thirdly, we may obſerve our Saviour declares that his great buſineſs of coming into the world, was to teſtify and make good this important and fundamental truth,—that he was a king; or in other words, that he was the Meſſiah: Fourthly, that whoever were followers of truth, and got into the way of truth and happineſs, would receive this doctrine concerning him, that he was the Meſſiah. Locke. Perhaps, inſtead of the truth, it would be more clear and better to read this truth. "I was born to this end, namely, to be a King, the Meſſiah of the Jews, and the Saviour of the world; and I came into the world to teſtify, by every poſſible method, to this great truth, that I am ſo." This is what St. Paul calls the good confeſſion, which he tells Timothy Jeſus witneſſed before Pontius Pilate, 1 Tim. vi. 13. And juſtly does he ſo call it; for our Lord did not deny the truth to ſave his own life, but gave all his followers an example highly worthy of their imitation. A careful attention to his good confeſſion will be the beſt proof we can give, that we love the truth, and the beſt method we can take to make ourſelves acquainted with it: And of ſuch infinite importance is the truth to all our beſt and deareſt intereſts, that it ſurely deſerves the attentive enquiry and the zealous patronage of the greateſt and the buſieſt of mankind.

Ver. 38. Pilate ſaith, What is truth?] "What is this truth which you refer to, and which you ſo ſolemnly ſpeak of, as your buſineſs to atteſt?" It is plain that Pilate thought it a matter of no great conſequence, as he immediately went out, without waiting for any reply; and from this circumſtance, as well as from the manner of his pleading for Jeſus with the Jews, it ſeems moſt probable that he looked upon him as a poor, weak, but inoffenſive viſionary; whoſe head perhaps was turned with notions of an ideal kingdom, and with enthuſiaſtical notions, of ſuch a ſort indeed, as whatever they might prove to the poſſeſſor, could at leaſt bring no detriment to the civil government, the only thing wherewith Pilate thought himſelf concerned. The reader will find in Bp. Warburton's Sermons, vol. i. a diſcourſe on this text.

REFLECTIONS ON SAINT PETER'S DENIAL OF OUR LORD. Ver. 17—27.

The fall of St. Peter would be a very melancholy inſtance of human infirmity, did it not likewiſe ſet before us a ſignal example of the divine mercy, and of the power of grace, triumphing over the weakneſs of nature. St. Peter, from various ſtriking circumſtances in the Goſpel ſtory, ſeems to have had the greateſt ſhare of natural courage and reſolution of any of the diſciples, and the fulleſt perſuaſions of faith; (Matth. xvi. 16—19. ch. xiii. 37. ver. 10. of this chapter, Matth. xxvi. 33—35.) and yet, in the laſt trying inſtances of his Maſter's temporal ſervice, we find him fail;—an evident ſign that natural courage is not the true ſource of confidence in ſpiritual trials, in which they only can conquer, whoſe ſtrength is not of man, but of God.

This example of St. Peter affords many uſeful reflections, and many excellent inſtructions for our own conduct: The following ſeem to be thoſe of the moſt importance.

And firſt; from hence we learn that preſumption is a very unpromiſing ſign of ſtedfaſtneſs and perſeverance in religion. Truſt in God is one thing, truſt in ourſelves is another; and there is reaſon to think they will differ as much in the ſucceſs that attends them, as in the powers upon which they are founded.

There is a boldneſs and intrepidity natural to the temper of ſome men, which make them eaſily undertake, and often atchieve great things; which give them ſuch aſſurance and reliance upon themſelves, that they overlook the dangers and difficulties at which others ſtand nerveleſs and amazed. But then great ſpirits are generally attended with great paſſions, which by turns uſurp the dominion, and leave little room for thought or reflection; ſo that a cool head and a warm heart, ſeems to be one of the rareſt compoſitions in nature.

Were ſuch ſpirited men once entered into the ways of holineſs, it may be thought that the ſame warmth which preſſes them on to great attempts, would ſoon make them eminently virtuous, ſince courage and reſolution are the likelieſt means to carry us to the greateſt heights in religion: Such indeed are Chriſtian courage and reſolution, which ariſe from a ſure truſt in God, a fear of him, and a perfect ſubmiſſion to his will: But when men ſet out upon their own bottom, they will ſoon be offended, and turn back: Glory and ſucceſs are the proper incitements of human courage; reproach and afflictions are the neceſſary exerciſe of Chriſtian fortitude.

When Peter was ſurrounded with ſwords and ſtaves, ver. 10. he was nothing diſmayed; Peter had a ſword too: But yet he who could fight for his religion, could not ſuffer for it. This ſhews that the courage of the Chriſtian is very different from that of the natural man; that it ariſes from other conſiderations, and is ſupported by other hopes and expectations. In vain may you promiſe yourſelves a ſuperiority under trials and temptations, unleſs you lay the right foundation, by imploring the aid of God's holy Spirit, whoſe province only it is to confirm the faithful to the end.

Secondly, from this example of St. Peter, we learn what little reaſon there is to promiſe ourſelves ſucceſs againſt temptations which are of our own ſeeking. St. Peter had warning given him; he was told by One, whoſe word he might have taken, that he was not able to undergo the trial which he ſeemed ſo much to deſpiſe. But try he would,—and learned to know his own weakneſs in his miſcarriage.

Whenever we court thoſe dangers and temptations, which the Spirit of God in his word hath warned us to avoid, we fight without commiſſion: We are no longer the ſoldiers of Chriſt; we have no pretence to expect ſupport from him in our undertakings. The promiſe of the Spirit was given to comfort us in doing the work of God, and his aſſiſtance is granted to enable us to perform it. But when we ſtep aſide out of the road of duty, and form to ourſelves deſigns, not authorized by the word of God, what ground have we to look for the aid of God's Spirit? That aid which is no where promiſed to enable us to effect whatever our own hearts prompt us to undertake, but only to encourage and ſtimulate our obedience to the laws of the Goſpel.

In ſhort, when we endeavour to avoid what God has commanded to be avoided, we act under the aſſurance and protection of his grace; but if we face about, and dare the temptation, our courage becomes contumacy and diſobedience, and we have no title to the promiſes of the Goſpel.

An imagination that we are above all temptations, and may ſafely venture into their company, is always a dangerous ſymptom, and ſhews that ſpiritual pride and preſumption have got the upper hand of Chriſtian courage and humility. Conſider the argument urged by St. Paul, who admoniſhes all Chriſtians to work out their ſalvation with fear and trembling; for, that it is God who worketh in them both to will and to do. The conſideration that our whole ability depends upon the aid of God's Spirit, is in the Apoſtle's eſteem an argument for fear and trembling. And ſurely, O Chriſtian, if even this be a reaſon,—if this which is your ſtrength, is likewiſe your admonition to be cautious and wary, whence can preſumption grow? If the ſenſe of your ſtrength in Chriſt Jeſus muſt teach you to be modeſt and humble, and always upon your guard, what elſe is there that can encourage you to be bold and confident? Let no man, therefore, think that his trial is over, or that he is got beyond the power of temptation. The enemy will watch all your unguarded moments, and like Peter's, your ſecurity will be his encouragement to attempt your ruin.

From the Apoſtle's example we may learn, thirdly, how great are the advantages of regular and habitual holineſs. St. Peter fell, and his fall was very ſhameful; but his repentance was as ſurpriſing and remarkable as his fall. Whilſt he was even abjuring his Lord with oaths and imprecations, one look of his laid all the ſtorm, and melted him into the tears and ſorrows of repentance. The ſame minute ſaw him the moſt audacious ſinner, and the moſt humble penitent: He committed the fault, and he deplored it, almoſt in the ſame breath. There was no need of terrifying judgements to awaken his mind to a ſenſe of his iniquity; the eye of his Lord, though full of compaſſion, was a ſufficient rebuke; it ſtruck the inmoſt ſoul with ſorrow not to be diſſembled; he could not ſtand the ſhock:—He went out, and wept bitterly! See Luke xxii. 61, 62.

St. Peter's is the caſe of every good man under the ſame circumſtances. Where there is a ſenſe of virtue and religion, ſin can never keep poſſeſſion long: No ſooner does the paſſion cool, and conſcience begin to ſpeak, but the heart travails with repentance, and feels the pangs of godly ſorrow; whereas the hardened ſinner goes on from ſin to ſin, deſpiſes the calls of conſcience, refuſes to hearken to the judgements of God, and obſtinately periſhes in the error of his way!

How

CHAP. XIX.

Chriſt is ſcourged, crowned with thorns, and beaten. Pilate is deſirous to releaſe him, but being overcome with the outrage of the Jews, he delivereth him to be crucified. The ſoldiers caſt lots for his garments: He commendeth his mother to John: he dieth: his ſide is pierced: he is buried by Joſeph and Nicodemus.

THEN Pilate therefore took Jeſus, and ſcourged him.

2 And the ſoldiers platted a crown of thorns, and put it on his head, and they put on him a purple robe,

3 And ſaid, Hail, King of the Jews! and they ſmote him with their hands.

4 Pilate therefore went forth again, and ſaith unto them, Behold, I bring him forth to you, that ye may know that I find no fault in him.

5 Then came Jeſus forth, wearing the crown of thorns, and the purple robe. And Pilate ſaith unto them, Behold the man!

6 When the chief prieſts therefore and officers ſaw him, they cried out, ſaying, Crucify him, crucify him! Pilate ſaith unto them, Take ye him, and crucify him: for I find no fault in him.

Ver. 1. Matth. xxvii. 26. Mark xv. 15.—V. 4. Ch. xviii. 38.

How different were the calls to repentance which the rulers of the Jews had upon the death of Chriſt;—and yet how different the ſucceſs of thoſe calls!—One compaſſionate look recovered Peter; but the Jews were not convinced, though one roſe from the dead. Every man may ſin, but thoſe only will repent who ſincerely endeavour after righteouſneſs: The wicked, as they advance in iniquity, do but more and more ſubdue their conſcience, till even repentance itſelf becomes impoſſible.

We may obſerve, fourthly, that the ſins of the beſt men are expiated with the greateſt ſenſe of ſorrow and affliction. It is indeed impoſſible to have a ſenſe of religion, to think of God and ourſelves as we ought to do, without being affected with the deepeſt ſorrow for our offences. St. Peter, when he went out and wept bitterly, did not ſtay to conſider whether he ought to weep or no; or to reflect of what uſe his tears would be to him: His heart was too full for ſuch reflections; he ſaw the goodneſs of his Lord, and his own baſeneſs, and his grief came as naturally into his eyes, as when a man bemoans the loſs of a father or a mother. Some indeed have learned how to make a trade of repentance, and can balance ſin and ſorrow as exactly as a merchant does his accounts; but the Goſpel has taught us no ſuch art: There only we learn how gracious our God is, how much it is our duty and our intereſt to obey; and from thence we learn how baſe and how miſerable we are when we offend. When therefore we find ourſelves truly affected with the ſenſe of our ſins, and in good earneſt lament our diſobedience and ingratitude to God, we have the beſt indication that we can have, that the ſpirit of religion is ſtill alive within us, and that we are not given up to a reprobate mind.

But to conclude; Very great as is the inſtruction of the example before us to all private Chriſtians, yet there ſeems to be ſomething more and more general intended in the tranſmitting this hiſtory to all ages in the ſacred writings.

The Goſpel was the work of God; and though we were to receive it by the hands of men, yet was our faith to be founded, not in the ſtrength or policy of men, but in the power and wiſdom of God. For this reaſon God choſe the weak things of the world to confound the ſtrong. The diſciples were men of no diſtinguiſhed characters; their ſimplicity and honeſty were their beſt commendation. Theſe our Lord elected, well knowing the weaker the inſtruments were, the more evidently would the finger of God appear in the mighty things performed by them. Among theſe St. Peter plainly had the greateſt ſpirit, and the ſtrongeſt reſolution; his readineſs and vivacity diſtinguiſhed him in every ſtep: He was the mouth of the Apoſtles, and always ready to undertake and to execute the commands of his Lord. If there was any one of their number that might be thought capable of managing ſo great a deſign as the propagation of a new religion in the world, it was Peter.

St. Peter therefore is called to the trial:—And how able he was, of himſelf, to encounter the difficulties that were to attend the Goſpel in every ſtep, we have already ſeen.—And yet, behold, this ſame man, this timid Apoſtle, not many weeks after, appears before the tribunal of the magiſtrates, preaches to his judges, and boldly teſtifies that of a truth Jeſus was the Chriſt, and that Him whom they ſlew and hanged on a tree, God had raiſed from the dead, to be a prince and a Saviour, and exalted him to the right hand of his glory. Acts v. 29—32.

Whence this mighty difference? or to what can it be aſcribed,—but to that great Spirit, for whoſe coming his Lord had commanded him and his companions to wait in Jeruſalem, and not to enter upon their office, till they ſhould receive power from on high? If the Goſpel was an impoſture, and if Chriſt died to riſe no more; if Chriſt roſe not from the dead, and there were no power in his reſurrection, what gave this freſh courage to Peter? Had he more confidence in a dead man, than in his Maſter while on earth?—What then could move him to expoſe himſelf even unto death for the ſake of Chriſt; for whoſe ſake, while alive, and whilſt the hopes and aſſurance of his being the Son of God were ſo ſtrong, he dared not expoſe himſelf?—This plainly ſhews that the hand of God was with him, and is an undeniable evidence to us, that our faith is the work of God, and not of man.

And thus, whether we conſider St. Peter's caſe as an inſtruction to ourſelves, it affords many uſeful leſſons, many encouragements to direct and ſupport us in our ſpiritual warfare; or whether we conſider it in a more general view, and as affecting his character as a miniſter of the everlaſting Goſpel, it yields us a great aſſurance and confidence in our faith; whilſt through the weakneſs and inſufficiency of man, we evidently diſcern the power of God, which wrought ſo effectually with him: So that knowing in whom we have truſted, we need not be aſhamed in every circumſtance, and under every trial, to confeſs Chriſt, and him crucified. See Bp. Sherlock's Sermons.

Chap. XIX. Ver. 2. Then the ſoldiers platted a crown of thorns] See the note on Matth. xxvii. 29. To what has been ſaid there concerning the crown of thorns, the following obſervations may be added. The form of the ſentence for execution paſſed upon criminals, as recited by Citero, was this: I, lictor, colliga manus, caput obnubito, arbori infelici ſuſpendito. "Go, lictor, bind his hands, cover or veil his head, ſuſpend him on the unhappy tree." Pro Rabir. N. 13. where the words colliga manus may ſignify no more than tie them together, though it was the cuſtom to faſten them afterwards to the croſs either with cords or nails, as in the caſe of our Saviour. See Lipſius de Cruce, c. ii. 8. That they covered the faces of the criminals, appears alſo from this paſſage of Cicero; the reaſon hereof might perhaps be the ſame as with us, to prevent the ſhocking ſight of the horror and diſtortion of the countenance during their agonies. It ſeems highly probable, therefore, that the two malefactors who were crucified with our Saviour were ſo treated, according to the uſual cuſtom; but the crown of thorns which was put upon his head prevented any ſuch covering, ſo that his countenance was open and viſible to the ſpectators: and this appears from what our Evangeliſt mentions of his ſeeing and ſpeaking both to his mother and beloved diſciple, ver. 26, 27. Now this might be ſo ordered by a particular direction of Providence, that the divine compoſure and ſerenity of his countenance, together with his whole deportment, might be rendered the more conſpicuous to ſo vaſt a crowd of ſpectators as was then preſent during the laſt ſcene of his ſufferings; and therefore Mr. Wright, in his travels, has very juſtly cenſured the Italian painters, as generally guilty of an impropriety in repreſenting our Saviour on the croſs with his face diſtorted, as if under great uneaſineſs and diſcompoſure; In which wrong notion they have alſo been uſually followed by others. It can occaſion no difficulty here to ſuppoſe, that the faces of the two malefactors were covered, becauſe they are both ſaid to have ſpoken to our Saviour while they hung upon the croſs; for we are often told of things ſaid by criminals amongſt us in the like circumſtances. But it has been remarked, that "nothing was ſet down by the Evangeliſts touching the complexion, ſtature, or feature of Chriſt, that no man might preſume to ſet his hand to the framing of that aſtoniſhing work wrought once for all by the Holy Ghoſt." And the like obſervation has alſo been made by Sir Iſaac Newton, with regard to the day of our Lord's birth. See Ward's 33d Diſſert.

Ver. 5. Behold the man.] While the ſoldiers were acting their impious buffooneries, Pilate entered, and ſeeing the humiliating condition of the ſuffering Jeſus, he thought that now at leaſt the rage of his enemies would be ſatiated, and that the moſt envenomed heart would relent at the appearance of ſo ſad a ſpectacle; he therefore brought Jeſus forth, and ſhewing him to them, ſaid, Behold the man. He added no more, concluding, that the deplorable condition to which Jeſus was reduced would plead ſufficiently on his behalf, and extort compaſſion from the moſt obdurate. And indeed no ſight could be more moving:—His ſacred body torn with ſcourges, his head pierced with thorns, and the blood flowing from ſo many wounds down his face and hair, rendered him an object of the greateſt pity. See Heylin, and Rambach on Chriſt's Sufferings.

Ver. 6, 7. When the chief prieſts therefore and officers ſaw him] The prieſts, whoſe rage and malice had extinguiſhed not only the ſentiments of juſtice, and the feelings of pity natural to the human heart, but that love which countrymen bear to one another,—no ſooner ſaw Jeſus, than they began to fear the fickle populace might relent; and therefore, laying decency aſide, they led the way to the mob, crying out with all their might, Crucify him! crucify him! The governor, vexed to find the rulers thus obſtinately bent on the deſtruction of a perſon, from whom they had nothing to fear that was dangerous either

7 The Jews anſwered him, We have a law, and by our law he ought to die, becauſe he made himſelf the Son of God.

8 When Pilate therefore heard that ſaying, he was the more afraid;

9 And went again into the judgement-hall, and ſaid unto Jeſus, Whence art thou? But Jeſus gave him no anſwer.

10 Then ſaith Pilate unto him, Speakeſt thou not unto me? knoweſt thou not that I have power to crucify thee, and have power to releaſe thee?

11 Jeſus anſwered, Thou couldeſt have no power at all againſt me, except it were given thee from above: therefore he that delivered me unto thee hath the greater ſin.

12 And from thenceforth Pilate ſought to releaſe him: but the Jews cried out, ſaying, If thou let this man go, thou art not Cæſar's friend. Whoſoever maketh himſelf a king, ſpeaketh againſt Cæſar.

13 When Pilate therefore heard that ſaying, he brought Jeſus forth, and ſat down in the judgement-ſeat, in a place that is called the pavement, but in the Hebrew, Gabbatha.

14 And it was the preparation of the paſſover, and about the ſixth hour: and he ſaith unto the Jews, Behold your King!

15 But they cried out, Away with him, away with him, crucify him! Pilate ſaith unto them, Shall I crucify your King? The to the church or ſtate, told them plainly, with great indignation, that if they would have him crucified, they muſt do it themſelves, becauſe he would not ſuffer his people to murder a man who was guilty of no crime. But they refuſed this alſo, thinking it diſhonourable to receive permiſſion to puniſh one, who had been more than once publickly declared innocent by his judge. Beſides, they conſidered with themſelves, that the governor afterwards might have called it ſedition, as the permiſſion had been extorted from him. Wherefore they told him, that though none of the things alledged againſt the priſoner were true, he had committed ſuch a crime, in preſence of the council itſelf, as by their law, Lev. xxiv. 10. deſerved the moſt ignominious death: He had ſpoken blaſphemy, calling himſelf the Son of God; a title which no mortal could aſſume without the higheſt degree of guilt; "therefore, ſay they, ſince by our law blaſphemy merits death, you ought by all means to crucify this blaſphemer; for though Cæſar is our Maſter, he governs us by our own laws." Whitby, Macknight, and Locke.

Ver. 7. Lev. xxiv. 16. Matth. xxvi. 65. Ch. v. 18. x. 33.—V. 12. Luke xxiii. 2. Acts xvii. 7.—V. 14. Matth. xxvii. 62.

Ver. 8, 9. When he heard that, he was the more afraid] When Pilate heard that Jeſus called himſelf the Son of God, he was more perplexed than ever. Knowing the obſtinacy of the Jews in all matters of religion, he was afraid they would make a tumult in earneſt; and he might be the more reaſonably alarmed on this head, as, ſince the beginning of his government, he had met with two remarkable inſtances of their obſtinacy; one, in an attempt which he made to bring the image of Cæſar into Jeruſalem; the other, in a deſign which he had formed of ſupplying the city with water at the expence of the ſacred treaſury of the temple. Or rather, the meaning of his uneaſineſs may be, that when he heard this account of Jeſus, he became more afraid than ever to take away his life, becauſe he ſuſpected it might be true. Perhaps the miracles ſaid to be performed by Jeſus occurred to his reflection, and cauſed him to have ſome ſtrong ideas that he was really the Son, or a Son of God: for it is very well known that the religion which the governor profeſſed directed him to acknowledge the exiſtence of demi-gods, and heroes, or men deſcended from the gods. Nay, the heathens believed, that their gods themſelves ſometimes appeared on earth in the form of men. Acts xiv. 11, 12. Pilate therefore reſolving to act cautiouſly, went again into the judgement-hall, and ſaid to Jeſus, Whence art thou? Πόθεν εἶ σύ; that is, "Of what father art thou ſprung? or, from what country art thou come?—Art thou from Olympus, the manſion of the gods?"—(See on ch. vii. 27.) But Jeſus, knowing that his innocence was already apparent, even to the conviction of Pilate's conſcience, made him no anſwer to this queſtion; for it was of ſuch a nature, that a direct and explicit anſwer might have operated ſo ſtrongly on the mind of Pilate, as to make him reſolute to acquit him, and to protect him from the malice of the Jews, which would have been a means of ſuperſeding the very ends for which our Lord came into the world, namely, to die for the ſins of the world. Our Lord's ſilence therefore in this criſis, when his ſilence was in ſome reſpect the cauſe of his death, ſhewed at once his magnanimity, and that his death was voluntary. See Grotius, Craddock's Harmony, and Lardner's Credibil. vol. i. part 1. p. 330.

Ver. 10, 11. Knoweſt thou not that I have power, &c.] See the note on ch. xviii. 31. To what Pilate urged, our Lord replies, "Being ſenſible that you are Cæſar's ſervant, and accountable to him for your management, I forgive you any injury, which, contrary to your inclination, the popular fury conſtrains you to do unto me. Thou haſt thy power from above, from the emperor; for which cauſe the Jewiſh high-prieſt, who hath put me into thy hands, and by pretending that I am Cæſar's enemy, obliges thee to condemn me, or, if thou refuſeſt, will accuſe thee as negligent of the emperor's intereſt;—he is much more to blame than thou." This gentle and modeſt anſwer made ſuch an impreſſion upon Pilate, that he went out to the people, and once more declared his reſolution of releaſing Jeſus. See the next verſe, and ch. xviii. 39. This is Mr. Macknight's interpretation. There are ſome who have thought the word ἄνωθεν, from above, refers to the ſituation of the temple, which ſtood much higher than the pretorium; and that it is as if Jeſus had ſaid, "I know that whatever thou doſt againſt me, is only in conſequence of the ſentence paſſed in yonder cathedral above; ſo that their guilt is greater than thine." But though this would very well account for the connection of the latter part of the verſe, it does not appear altogether juſt; for had Providence permitted Pilate to ſeize Chriſt, as one dangerous to Cæſar's dignity, he would have had as much power to put Chriſt to death as he now had. It ſeems therefore more reaſonable to ſuppoſe, ſays Dr. Doddridge, that the word which frequently ſignifies from heaven, may refer to the permiſſion of God's providence. No thought was more proper to the occaſion; and in this view the verſe may be paraphraſed thus: "Thou couldeſt have no power againſt me, unleſs it were given thee from above;—from the God of heaven, whoſe Providence I acknowledge in all theſe events. Therefore he who has delivered me to thee, even the Jewiſh high-prieſt, with his council, having far greater opportunities of knowing him and his law, hath the greater and more aggravated ſin; yet thou thyſelf canſt not but know, that on the principles of natural equity, an innocent perſon ought not to be given up to popular fury."

Ver. 12. And from thenceforth] The Syriac reads upon this, or on account of this anſwer. An inattentive reader may perhaps underſtand theſe words ſo, as if this was Pilate's firſt attempt to releaſe Jeſus; nevertheleſs they cannot juſtly be thus interpreted, as John himſelf tells us expreſly, that Pilate once before endeavoured to releaſe him. ch. xviii. 29. Beſides, the anſwer of the prieſts correſponds to this ſenſe, If thou let this man go, &c. Finding, by what the governor ſaid unto them, that he was determined to releaſe Jeſus, they told him, with a haughty menacing air, that if he releaſed his priſoner, who had ſet himſelf up for a king, he was not faithful to the emperor; by which they inſinuated, that they would accuſe him to his maſter, if he did not do his duty. This argument was weighty, and ſhook Pilate's reſolution to the foundation; he was frightened at the very thought of being accuſed to Tiberius, who, in matters of government, as Tacitus and Suetonius teſtify, was apt to ſuſpect the worſt, and always puniſhed the leaſt crimes relative thereto with death. Wherefore we find, that when the Jews told Pilate, that he could not be a friend to Cæſar if he let Jeſus go, he aſks them no more if they would take Barabbas, and ſpare Jeſus; but, though againſt the dictates of his conſcience, gives him up to death, to ſecure his own ſafety. See Heylin, Macknight, and Locke.

Ver. 14. And it was the preparation] The governor being conſtrained to yield, contrary to his inclination, was angry with the prieſts for ſtirring up the people to ſuch a pitch of madneſs, and reſolved to affront them. He therefore brought Jeſus out a ſecond time into the pavement, wearing the purple robe and crown of thorns, with his hands manacled, and pointing to him, ſaid, Behold your king; either in ridicule of the national expectation, or, which is more probable, to ſoften the Jews, and ſhew them how vain the fears were which they pretended to entertain about the emperor's authority in Judea; the perſon who was the occaſion of them ſhewing, in the whole of his deportment, a temper of mind no way conſonant to the ambition wherewith they branded him. Auguſtus's reſcript to the governors of provinces, preſerved by Joſephus, Antiq. xvi. 10. ſhews in what manner the Jews computed their preparation for the ſabbath; for, among other things, it is therein ordered, that the Jews ſhould not be compelled to appear in courts of judicature, either on the ſabbaths, or on the day before the ſabbaths, after the ninth hour of the preparation. The preparation therefore began at the ninth hour, or at three o'clock in the afternoon, which is the reaſon that the Jews were then freed from attendance in law-ſuits. Nevertheleſs, the manner in which the reſcript is worded ſhews, that the whole of the day was called the preparation, conſequently the Evangeliſt wrote accurately, when he tells us, it was the preparation, and about the ſixth hour. The Roman ſixth hour is meant, or our ſix o'clock in the morning, anſwering to the firſt Jewiſh hour, when Pilate brought Jeſus out on the pavement. Some critics have thought that the words rendered of the paſſover have been ignorantly and improperly inſerted here. See Boyer's Gr. Teſtament, the notes on ch. i. 39. and ch. iv. 6. Mark xv. 25. Ward's Diſſert. 32. Benſon's Hiſt. of the Goſpel, vol. iii. 52. Wetſtein, and Wolf.

Ver. 15. Shall I crucify your king?] According to moſt commentators, Pilate ſaid this mocking them; but it is more agreeable to his genechief prieſts anſwered, We have no king, but Cæſar.

16 Then delivered he him therefore unto them to be crucified. And they took Jeſus, and led him away.

17 And he, bearing his croſs, went forth into a place called The place of a ſkull, which is called in the Hebrew, Golgotha:

18 Where they crucified him, and two other with him, on either ſide one, and Jeſus in the midſt.

19 And Pilate wrote a title, and put it on the croſs. And the writing was, JESUS OF NAZARETH THE KING OF THE JEWS.

20 This title then read many of the Jews; for the place where Jeſus was crucified was nigh to the city: and it was written in Hebrew, and Greek, and Latin.

21 Then ſaid the chief prieſts of the Jews to Pilate, Write not, The King of the Jews; but that he ſaid, I am King of the Jews.

22 Pilate anſwered, What I have written, I have written.

23 Then the ſoldiers, when they had crucified Jeſus, took his garments, (and made four parts, to every ſoldier a part;) and alſo his coat: now the coat was without ſeam, woven from the top throughout.

24 They ſaid therefore among themſelves, Let us not rend it, but caſt lots for it, whoſe it ſhall be: that the ſcripture might be fulfilled, which ſaith, They parted my raiment among them, and for my veſture they did caſt lots. Theſe things therefore the ſoldiers did.

25 Now there ſtood by the croſs of Jeſus, his mother, and his mother's ſiſter, Mary the wife of Cleophas, and Mary Magdalene.

26 When Jeſus therefore ſaw his mother, and the diſciple ſtanding by whom he loved, he ſaith unto his mother, Woman, behold thy ſon.

27 Then ſaith he to the diſciple, Behold

Ver. 15. Gen. xlix. 10.—V. 16. Matth. xxvii. 26, 31. Mark xv. 15. Luke xxiii. 24.—V. 17. Matth. xxvii. 31, 33. Mark xv. 16. V. 19. Matth. xxvii. 37. Mark xv. 26. Luke xxiii. 38.—V. 23. Matth. xxvii. 35. Mark xv. 24. Luke xxiii. 34. Or, wrought. V. 24. Pſ. xxii. 18.—V. 25. Matth. xxvii. 55. Mark xv. 40. Luke xxiii. 49. Or, Clopas. Luke xxiv. 18.—V. 26. Ch. xiii. 23. xxi. 24. Ch. ii. 4.

ral behaviour in this affair to ſuppoſe, that he ſpoke it with a view to move the populace, who he knew had once held Jeſus in great eſteem as the Meſſiah: for we are told, in the 12th verſe, that he ſought to releaſe him. The chief prieſts replied to him, We have no king but Cæſar; in which reply they publickly renounced their hope of the Meſſiah, which the whole œconomy of their religion had been calculated to cheriſh. Likewiſe they acknowledged publickly their ſubjection to the Romans, and by ſo doing, condemned themſelves when they afterwards rebelled.

The unwillingneſs which the governor ſhewed all along to paſs the ſentence of death upon Jeſus, has ſomething very remarkable in it; for by the character which he bears in the Roman hiſtory, he ſeems to have been far from poſſeſſing any true principle of virtue. To what then could it be owing, that ſo wicked a man thus ſteadily adhered to the cauſe of innocence, which he defended with an uncommon bravery, till the threatenings of the grandees vanquiſhed him? And when he did yield, taking from our Lord his life, how came he to leave him his innocence? Certainly this can be attributed to no other cauſe than the ſecret powerful direction of the providence of God, who intended, that at the ſame time his Son was condemned and executed as a malefactor, his innocence ſhould be made to appear in the moſt public manner, and by the moſt authentic evidence; even by the teſtimony of his judges, Herod and Pilate; the latter of whom frequently declared him innocent in the courſe of his trial. This moſt probably was the reaſon alſo that Pilate's lady had the dream concerning Chriſt, of which ſhe ſent her huſband the account; that Judas returned the money to the prieſts publickly, with an open confeſſion that he had ſinned, in betraying innocent blood; that one of the thieves on the croſs declared, that Jeſus had done nothing amiſs; and that the centurion confeſſed him to be a righteous perſon, and the Son of God. See Grotius, Macknight, and Calmet.

Ver. 19,—22. And Pilate wrote a title] The governor, as uſual, put up a title or writing on the croſs, ſignifying the crime for which Jeſus was condemned: This writing was in black characters, on a whitened board, and in the Hebrew, Greek, and Latin languages, that foreigners, as well as natives, might be able to read it. All the Evangeliſts have given an account of the title, but the words of it are different in each, which may ſeem ſtrange, conſidering that it is an inſcription they have undertaken to relate, the propriety whereof lieth in the preciſe words: But the difference may eaſily have ariſen from the languages in which the title was written, for one Evangeliſt may have inſcribed the words of the Greek inſcription, a ſecond might tranſlate the Hebrew, a third the Latin, and a fourth may have given a different tranſlation of the Hebrew or Latin. Thus the inſcription of the title may be exactly given by each of the Evangeliſts, though the words they have mentioned be different, eſpecially as they all agree in the meaning of it. It has been obſerved that this title was written in Latin, on account of the dignity of the Roman empire; in Hebrew, on account of the place in which the puniſhment was inflicted; and in Greek, on account of the great confluence of the Helleniſtick Jews which was at that time in Jeruſalem; and becauſe Greek was then a very univerſal language. The inſcription ſet up in the temple to prohibit ſtrangers from coming within thoſe ſacred limits, was written in all theſe three languages. It is indeed remarkable, that by the influence of Providence the croſs of Chriſt bore an inſcription in the languages of thoſe nations which were ſoon to be ſubdued to his faith; for not only the Jewiſh religion was to give place to him, but likewiſe the Grecian learning, and the Roman ſtrength. The ſuperſcription, however, highly diſpleaſed the chief prieſts, becauſe as it repreſented the crime for which Jeſus was condemned, ſo it inſinuated that he had been acknowledged for the Meſſiah. Beſides, being placed over the head of one, who was ſuffering the moſt infamous puniſhment, it implied that all who attempted to deliver the Jews ſhould come to the ſame end. Wherefore the faith and hope of the nation being thus publickly ridiculed, the prieſts thought themſelves highly affronted, and came to Pilate in great concern, deſiring that the writing might be altered: But Pilate, having plainly intended the affront, becauſe the Jews had conſtrained him to crucify Jeſus, contrary to his judgment and inclination; rejected their application with ſome warmth, and with that inflexibility which hiſtorians repreſent as part of his character. See Bp. Pearſon on the Creed, p. 205. Lardner's Credibil. part i. b. 1. and Brerewood's Inquiries, chap. 1—4.

Ver. 23, 24. And made four parts] Becauſe four ſoldiers are mentioned in the diviſion of the clothes, it does not follow that there were but four preſent at the crucifixion. Since ſoldiers were neceſſary at all, a great number muſt have been preſent to keep off the crowds which uſually preſs to ſee ſuch ſpectacles. From Matthew xxvii. 54. it appears, that the ſoldiers who aſſiſted at the crucifixion were commanded by a centurion; wherefore it is more than probable that the whole band, which St. Matthew tells us expreſly was gathered together to ſcourge Jeſus, (ch. xxvii. 27.) was preſent at his execution; eſpecially as two others were crucified with him. The four ſoldiers who parted his garments, and caſt lots for his veſture, were the four who nailed him to the croſs; each of them fixing a limb, and having, it ſeems, for this ſervice, had a right to the crucified perſon's clothes. See Macknight's Jewiſh Antiq. p. 133. the notes on Pſ. xxii. 18. Clarke's Diſcourſe on the connection of the Prophecies, p. 35. and Sharpe's ſecond Argument, p. 355, &c.

Ver. 25. There ſtood by the croſs of Jeſus, his mother, &c.] Neither her own danger, nor the ſadneſs of the ſpectacle, nor the reproaches and inſults of the people, could reſtrain our Lord's mother from performing the laſt ſad office of duty and tenderneſs to her divine Son on the croſs. Grotius juſtly obſerves, that it was a noble inſtance of fortitude and zeal. Now a ſword, according to Simeon's prophecy, pierced through her very ſoul; and perhaps the extremity of her ſorrows might ſo overwhelm her ſpirits, as to render her incapable of attending the ſepulchre, which we do not find that ſhe did. Indeed after this we do not meet with any thing concerning her in the ſacred ſtory, or in early antiquity, except that ſhe continued among the diſciples after our Lord's aſcenſion, Acts i. 14. The Popiſh writers, indeed, have given us a variety of ridiculous tales concerning her. See Calmet's Dictionary on the word MARY, and Edward's Exercitations, part ii. numb. i. p. 163. Inſtead of the wife, Dr. Waterland reads the daughter of Cleophas.

Ver. 26, 27. Woman, Behold thy Son] We have elſewhere obſerved, that Joſeph was probably dead ſome time before. See on ch. ii. 1 vi. 42. And as Jeſus now ſhewed the tender concern he had for his mother, in committing her to the care of John, ſo this concern which he expreſſed for her ſupport, muſt have affected her no leſs than if he had thy mother. And from that hour that diſciple took her unto his own home.

28 After this, Jeſus knowing that all things were now accompliſhed, that the ſcripture might be fulfilled, ſaith, I thirſt.

29 Now there was ſet a veſſel full of vinegar: and they filled a ſpunge with vinegar, and put it upon hyſſop, and put it to his mouth.

30 When Jeſus therefore had received the vinegar, he ſaid, It is finiſhed: and he bowed his head, and gave up the ghoſt.

31 The Jews therefore, becauſe it was the preparation, that the bodies ſhould not remain upon the croſs on the ſabbath-day, (for that ſabbath-day was an high day,) beſought Pilate that their legs might be broken, and that they might be taken away.

32 Then came the ſoldiers, and brake the legs of the firſt, and of the other which was crucified with him.

33 But when they came to Jeſus, and ſaw that he was dead already, they brake not his legs.

34 But one of the ſoldiers with a ſpear pierced his ſide, and ſorthwith came thereout blood and water.

35 And he that ſaw it, bare record, and his record is true: and he knoweth that he ſaith true, that ye might believe.

36 For theſe things were done, that the ſcripture might be fulfilled, A bone of him ſhall not be broken.

37 And again another ſcripture ſaith, They ſhall look on him whom they pierced.

38 And after this, Joſeph of Arimathea, (being a diſciple of Jeſus, but ſecretly for fear of the Jews,) beſought Pilate that he might take away the body of Jeſus: and Pilate gave him leave. He came therefore, and took the body of Jeſus.

39 And there came alſo Nicodemus (which at the firſt came to Jeſus by night,) and brought a mixture of myrrh and aloes, about an hundred pound weight.

Ver. 27. Ch. i. 11.—V. 28. Pſ. lxix. 21.—V. 29. Matth. xxvii. 48.—V. 30. Ch. xvii. 4.—V. 24. 1 John v. 6.—V. 36. Exod. xii. 46. Numb. ix. 12. Pſ. xxxiv. 20.—V. 37. Zech. xii. 10.—V. 38. Matth. xxvii. 57. Mark xv. 42. Luke xxiii. 50. Ch. ix. 22. xii. 42.—V. 39. Ch. iii. 1, 2. vii. 50.

had called her mother; which ſome have thought he might not chooſe to do, to avoid expoſing her to the abuſes of the populace by a diſcovery of her near relation to him. But woman was a title he before had uſed in ſpeaking to his mother, where no ſuch caution was neceſſary; and it was frequently applied in ancient times, even to perſons who were the moſt reſpected, as we have obſerved on ch. ii. 4. Some, however, have remarked, that the word Γύναι may very well be interpreted mother; which certainly renders the oppoſition to ὁ υἱός σου, thy Son, more ſenſibly affecting. See Antonin. Medit. l. ix. c. 3. Our Lord, beſides expreſſing great filial affection towards his mother, gave the beloved diſciple alſo a token of his high eſteem. He ſingled him out, for the important truſt of his beloved mother; and as he deſired her to conſider him as a ſon, ſo he deſired him expreſly to reverence and love her, as if ſhe had been his own parent. A duty, which he gladly undertook, and no doubt moſt faithfully performed. Thus in the midſt of the heavieſt ſufferings ever ſuſtained by human nature, Jeſus demonſtrated a divine ſtrength of benevolence; Even when his own diſtreſs was at the higheſt pitch, his friends had ſuch a ſhare of his concern, that their happineſs for a little time interrupted the feeling of his pains, and engroſſed his tendereſt thoughts.

Ver. 30. It is finiſhed] See on Matth. xxvii. 50.

Ver. 31. (For that Sabbath-day was an high day)] It was not only a ſabbath, but the ſecond day of the feaſt of unleavened bread, from whence they reckoned the week to Pentecoſt, and alſo the day for preſenting and offering the ſheaf of new corn; ſo that it was indeed a treble ſolemnity. The Jews ſtile a feaſt, or the day of ſolemn aſſembly in any feaſt, an high, or great day. It was cuſtomary among the Romans to let the bodies of perſons who had been executed, continue on the croſſes or ſtakes till they were devoured by beaſts of prey; but as this was forbidden to the Jews, Deut. xxi. 22, 23. the Roman governors probably uſed to oblige them, by permitting ſuch bodies as belonged to them to be buried. See Whitby, Hammond, and Pearſon on the Creed, p. 218.

Ver, 34—37. And forthwith, &c.] Whether this was, as Dr. Drake and ſeveral others ſuppoſe, the ſmall quantity of water incloſed in the pericardium, in which the heart ſwims, or whether the cruor was now almoſt coagulated, and ſeparated from the ſerum; either way it was an indiſputable proof of Chriſt's death. For the iſſuing of blood and water, not only ſhews that Jeſus had been ſome time dead; but had he not been dead, this wound was of ſuch a kind, as he could not have ſurvived. And therefore, as it was of the greateſt importance to mankind, to be aſcertained of the truth of Chriſt's death, when St. John relates the circumſtance which demonſtrates it, he inſiſts upon it particularly; and mentions it not only as a thing which himſelf ſaw, but as the completion of a remarkable prophecy. See on Zech. xii. 10. Our Lord's legs too were not broken, that the Scripture might be fulfilled, Exod. xii. 46. where the words were primarily ſpoken of the paſchal Lamb, whoſe bones were not to be broken, that it might be a fit repreſentation of the Meſſiah, typified by this ſacrifice; and who, though he was to ſuffer a violent death, was to have none of his bones broken, becauſe he was to riſe from the dead on the third day. Wherefore, as the Scripture which ſpeaks of the type, has neceſſarily a reference to the antitype, St. John had good reaſon to interpret what is there ſaid of the paſchal Lamb, as prophetical of this circumſtance of our Lord's death; and the rather, as by ſo doing he makes his readers ſenſible, that it was not by accident that the ſoldiers treated Chriſt's body otherwiſe than they treated the bodies of theſe who were crucified with him. It happened by the direction of God, who had always determined that Chriſt ſhould riſe from the dead, and that his miſſion ſhould be fully demonſtrated by the evidence of miracles and prophecies united. See Dr. Drake's Anatomy, vol. i. p. 106. and "An Eſſay on the ſeveral Diſpenſations of God." Pref. p. 22, &c.

Ver. 38. And after this Joſeph of Arimathea] We have obſerved on ch. xviii. 31. that Joſeph of Arimathea ſeems to have been perſonally acquainted with Pilate, as he went to him and begged leave to bury the body of Jeſus. We can have no doubt of their being acquainted, if Joſeph was one of the council who aſſiſted Pilate in managing the affairs of his province, and particularly in judging cauſes. All governors of provinces had a council of this kind; accordingly we find it mentioned Acts xxv. 12. It is, however, objected to Joſeph's being a member of Pilate's council, that it was compoſed of Romans only; yet even on this ſuppoſition he might be a member of it, ſince he might enjoy the privilege of a citizen, as well as St. Paul. What other reaſon can be aſſigned for his being called a counſellor, Luke xxiii. 50. and Mark xv. 43?—a name not commonly given to the members of the ſanhedrim, whoſe proper title was αρχοντες, rulers. Further St. Luke tells us, (ch. xxiii. 51.) that Joſeph did not conſent to the council (βουλὴ) and deed of them: He did not agree to the advice which the governor's council gave, when they deſired him to gratify the Jews. See the note on Matth. xxvii. 57.

Ver. 39. About an hundred pound weight] It has been propoſed inſtead of ωσει λιτρας εκατον, to read ωσει λιτρας εκαστον, about a pound EACH: But as there is no authority, ſo is there no neceſſity for this variation. The author of the Obſervations, has the following remark, "What Joſeph and Nicodemus did with the mixture of myrrh and aloes, doth not appear: Dr. Lardner ſuppoſes, that they might poſſibly form a bed of ſpices. But with reſpect to the quantity, which he tells us, from Bp. Kidder, a modern Jew has made an objection againſt the hiſtory of the New Teſtament, affirming that it was enough for two hundred dead bodies, (which is ſaying in other words, that half a pound of theſe drugs is ſufficient to embalm a ſingle body) I would obſerve, that our Engliſh ſurgeons require a much larger quantity of drugs for embalming; and in a recipe which I have ſeen of a very eminent one, the weight of the drugs employed is above one third of the weight brought by Nicodemus. Much leſs indeed would be wanted where the body is not emboweled; but even the cerate, or drugs uſed externally in our embalmings, is, I find, one ſeventh of the weight of the myrrh and aloes bought for embalming our Lord. However, be this as it may, as it appears from what Joſephus ſays of the funeral of Ariſtobulus, the laſt of the high-prieſts of the family of the Maccabees, that "the larger the quantity of the ſpices uſed in their interments, the greater honour was thought to be done to the dead;" we may eaſily account for the quantity which Nicodemus brought, in general, though we may not be able to tell, with the preciſion that could be wiſhed, how it was diſpoſed of. Dr. Lardner does not appear to have mentioned this paſſage, but it entirely anſwers the objection of this Jew." See Joſephus Antiq. l. 15. and the Obſervations on Sacred Scripture, p. 311.

40 Then took they the body of Jeſus, and wound it in linen clothes, with the ſpices, as the manner of the Jews is to bury.

41 Now in the place where he was crucified, there was a garden; and in the garden a new ſepulchre, wherein was never man yet laid.

42 There laid they Jeſus therefore, becauſe of the Jews' preparation-day, for the ſepulchre was nigh at hand.

Ver. 40. Acts v. 6.

Ver. 40. Then they took the body] Thoſe who have written upon the manner and cuſtoms of the Jews tell us, that they ſometimes embalmed their dead with an aromatic mixture of myrrh, aloes, and and other gums or ſpices; which they rubbed on the body more or leſs profuſely, according to their circumſtances, and their regard to the dead. After anointing the body, they covered it with a ſhroud, or winding-ſheet, then wrapped a napkin round its head and face; others ſay round the forehead only, becauſe the Egyptian mummies are obſerved to have it ſo. Laſt of all, they ſwathed the ſhroud round the body, as tightly as poſſible, with proper bandages made of linen; which is the linen clothes mentioned in this verſe, different from the clean linen cloth mentioned by the other Evangeliſts. See Matth. xxvii. 59. At other times they covered the whole body in an heap of ſpices: Thus it is ſaid of Aſa, 2 Chron. xvi. 14. They buried him in the bed, which was filled with ſweet odours, and divers kinds of ſpices, prepared by the apothecary's art. From the quantity of myrrh and aloes made uſe of by Joſeph and Nicodemus, namely, an hundred pounds weight, it would appear that the office performed to their maſter was of this latter kind; for they had not time to embalm him properly: They ſeem, however, to have done all that was uſual in ſuch circumſtances to perſons of wealth and diſtinction, which, as well as the ſepulchre itſelf, agreed to Iſaiah's prophecy, ch. liii. 9. As none of the other Evangeliſts had mentioned the ſpices with which the body was embalmed, John might chooſe to obſerve that circumſtance, the better to obviate the falſe report which then prevailed among the Jews, that the body of our Lord had been ſtolen away in the night by his diſciples: For, could they have been ſuppoſed ſo weak, as to loſe time in attempting to take off the linen both from the body and head, it muſt have clung ſo faſt by means of the viſcous nature of the ſpices, as to have put it out of their power to do it in ſuch a manner as it was found in the ſepulchre; the napkin, which was bound about his head, lying not with the linen clothes, but wrapped in a place by itſelf, ch. xx. 7. as if the body had miraculouſly ſlipped out of it, which was the real fact. The other Evangeliſts indeed take notice, that the women afterwards carried ſpices to the ſepulchre: For as Joſeph and Nicodemus doubtleſs embalmed the body privately, after it was carried from the croſs, the women, as they were not preſent, might know nothing of it; and conſidering the ſhortneſs of the time, they might imagine nothing of that kind had been done, and therefore were willing to do what they could themſelves. And this was very proper to be mentioned by the other Evangeliſts, as it was a proof that the women had no expectation that Chriſt would riſe again, any more than Joſeph and Nicodemus; but John might omit it, as unneceſſary to be repeated. See Ward's 35th Diſſertation, the note on ch. xi. 39. and particularly the Obſervations on the Sacred Scripture, p. 307.

Ver. 41. And in the garden a new ſepulchre] In the deſcription of the ſepulchre given by the Evangeliſt it is particularly remarked, that it was nigh to the place where Jeſus was crucified, conſequently nigh to Jeruſalem. By this circumſtance all the cavils are prevented, which might otherwiſe have been occaſioned, in caſe the body had been removed further off. Moreover it is obſerved, that the ſepulchre was a new one, wherein never any man had been laid. This plainly proves, that it could be no other than Jeſus who aroſe, and cuts off all ſuſpicion that he was raiſed by touching the bones of ſome prophet or other, who had been buried there, as happened to the corpſe which touched the bones of Eliſha, 2 Kings xiii. 20. The Evangeliſts further obſerve, that it was a ſepulchre hewn out of a rock, to ſhew that there was no paſſage by which the diſciples could get into it, but the one at which the guards were placed, Matth. xxvii. 62, &c. and conſequently, that it was not in their power to ſteal away the body while the guards remained there performing their duty. See Macknight and Grotius.

As we are now juſt arrived at the end of the evangelical hiſtory, and the concluſion of the two ſubſequent chapters will be taken up with the great ſubject of them,—our Lord's reſurrection, We ſhall here endeavour to give the reader a brief ſketch of the Character of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, which itſelf affords the moſt inconteſtable proof of the truth and divine authority of the Scriptures.

For THE CHARACTER OF JESUS CHRIST, as it may be collected from the plain narrations of the Goſpels, is manifeſtly ſuperior to all other characters, fictitious or real; whether drawn by hiſtorians, orators, or poets. It is intirely different from that of all other men; for whereas they have the ſelfiſh paſſions deeply rooted in their breaſts, and are influenced by them in almoſt every thing they do, Jeſus was ſo intirely free from them, that the narroweſt ſcrutiny cannot furniſh one ſingle action in the whole courſe of his life, wherein he conſulted his own intereſt only. The happineſs of others was what he had chiefly at heart; and while his cotemporaries followed ſome one kind of occupation, ſome another, Jeſus had no other buſineſs but that of promoting the welfare of men. He went about doing good. He did not wait till he was ſolicited; but ſought opportunities of conferring benefits on ſuch as ſtood in need of them, and always reckoned it more bleſſed to give than to receive: In which reſpect he differed exceedingly from the reſt of mankind, and was much more like to God than to man.

In the next place, whereas it is common for perſons, even of the moſt exalted faculties, on the one hand, to be elated with ſucceſs and applauſe, and on the other, to be dejected with great diſappointments, it was not ſo with Jeſus. He was never more courageous than when he met with the greateſt oppoſition, and the worſt treatment; nor more humble than when men fell down and worſhipped him. He came into the world inſpired with the greateſt purpoſe that ever was formed, even that of ſaving not a ſingle nation, but the whole world; and in the execution of it, went through the largeſt and heavieſt train of labours that ever was ſuſtained; and that with a conſtancy of reſolution, on which no diſadvantageous impreſſion could be made by any accident whatſoever. In ſhort, calumny, threatening, oppoſition, bad ſucceſs, with the other evils befalling him, ſerved only to quicken his endeavours in this glorious enterprize, which he purſued unweariedly, till he finiſhed it by his death.

But again; whereas moſt men are prone to retaliate the injuries that are done them, and all ſeem to take a ſatisfaction in complaining of the cruelties of thoſe who oppreſs them; the whole of Chriſt's behaviour breathed nothing but meekneſs, patience, and forgiveneſs, even to his bittereſt enemies, and in the midſt of extreme ſufferings. The words, Father forgive them, for they know not what they do! uttered by him when his enemies were nailing him to the croſs, fitly expreſſed the temper which he maintained through the courſe of his life, even when aſſaulted with the heavieſt provocations. The truth is, on no occaſion did he ever ſignify the leaſt reſentment, by ſpeech or by action, nor indeed any emotion of mind whatever, except ſuch as flowed from pity and charity; conſequently ſuch only as expreſſed the deepeſt concern for the welfare of mankind.

The greateſt and beſt men have had failings, which darken the luſtre of their virtues, and ſhew them to have been men. This was the caſe with Noah, Abraham, Moſes, Job, David, Solomon, Paul, Peter, and the other heroes celebrated in ſacred hiſtory. The ſame may be ſaid of all the greateſt geniuſes in the heathen world, who undertook to inſtruct and inform mankind: For, omitting the narrowneſs of their knowledge, and the obſcurity with which they ſpake upon the moſt important ſubjects, there was not one of them who did not fall into ſome groſs error or other, which diſhonoured his character as a teacher. The accounts we have in hiſtory of the moſt renowned ſages of antiquity, and the writings of the philoſophers ſtill remaining, are proofs of this.

It was otherwiſe with Jeſus in every reſpect; for he was ſuperior to all the men that ever lived, as well in the ſimplicity of his doctrine, and the purity of his manners, as in the perfection of his virtues. He was holy, harmleſs, undefiled, and ſeparate from ſinners. Whether you conſider him as a teacher, or a man, he did no ſin, neither was guile found in his mouth.

His whole life was perfectly free from ſpot or weakneſs, at the ſame time that it was remarkable for the greateſt and moſt extenſive exerciſes of virtue: But never to have committed the leaſt ſin, in word or in deed; never to have uttered any ſentiment that could be found fault with, upon the various topics of religion and morality, which were the daily ſubjects of his diſcourſes; and that through the courſe of a life filled with action, and led under the obſervation of many enemies, who had always acceſs to converſe with him, and who often came to find fault;—This is ſuch a pitch of perfection, as is plainly above the reach of humanity; and therefore he who poſſeſſed it muſt certainly have been divine. Accordingly, the evidence of this proof being undeniable, both as argument and as a matter of fact, Jeſus himſelf publickly appealed to it before all the people in the temple, ch. viii. 46. Which of you convinceth, or rather, convicteth me of ſin? And if, in affirming that I am perfectly free from ſin, I ſay the truth, why do ye not believe me?

Upon this Character of our Lord, we may make the following obſervations: Firſt, that admitting the preſent diſorders of the moral world, and the neceſſity of the love of God and our neighbour, and of ſelf-annihilation, in order to the pure and ultimate happineſs of man, there ſeems to be a neceſſity alſo for a ſuffering Saviour. At leaſt one may affirm, that the condeſcenſion of Chriſt, in leaving the glory which he had with the Father before the foundation of the world, and in ſhewing himſelf a perfect pattern of obedience to the will of God, both in doing and ſuffering, has a moſt peculiar tendency to rectify the preſent moral depravity of our natures, and to exalt us thereby to pure ſpiritual happineſs. Now it is remarkable, that the Evangeliſts and Apoſtles have thus hit upon a thing which all the great men among the ancient heathens miſſed, and which, however clear it does and ought now to appear to us, was a great ſtumbling-block to them, as well as to the Jews: The firſt ſeeking after wiſdom, i. e. human philoſophy and eloquence; and the laſt requiring a ſign, or a glorious temporal Saviour. Nor can this be accounted for, as it ſhould ſeem, but by admitting the reality of the character, i. e. the divine miſſion of Chriſt, and the conſequent divine inſpiration of thoſe who drew it up; that is to ſay, the truth and divine authority of the New Teſtament.

Secondly, If we allow only the truth of the common hiſtory of the New Teſtament, or even, without having recourſe to it, only ſuch

CHAP. XX.

Mary cometh to the ſepulchre: ſo do Peter and John, ignorant of the reſurrection: Jeſus appeareth to Mary Magdalene, and to his diſciples. The incredulity and confeſſion of Thomas. The ſcripture is ſufficient to ſalvation.

THE firſt day of the week cometh Mary Magdalene early, when it was yet dark, unto the ſepulchre, and ſeeth the ſtone taken away from the ſepulchre.

2 Then ſhe runneth, and cometh to Simon Peter, and to the other diſciple whom Jeſus loved, and ſaith unto them, They have taken away the Lord out of the ſepulchre, and we know not where they have laid him.

3 Peter therefore went forth, and that other diſciple, and came to the ſepulchre.

Ver. 1. Matth. xxviii. 1. Mark xvi. 1. Luke xxiv. 1.—V. 2. Ch. xiii. 23. xxi. 7, 20, 24.—V. 3. Luke xxiv. 12.

ſuch a part of the character of Chriſt as neither ancient nor modern Jews, heathens or other unbelievers, ſeem to conteſt,—it will be difficult to reconcile ſo great a character, claiming divine authority, either with the moral attributes of God, or indeed with itſelf, upon the ſuppoſition of the falſhood of that claim. One can ſcarce ſuppoſe that God would permit a perſon apparently ſo innocent and excellent, ſo qualified to impoſe upon mankind, to make ſo impious and audacious a claim, without having ſome evident mark of impoſture ſet upon him: Nor can it be conceived how a perſon could be apparently ſo innocent and excellent, and yet really otherwiſe.

Thirdly, The manner in which the Evangeliſts ſpeak of Chriſt, ſhews that they drew after a real pattern, and demonſtrates the genuineneſs and truth of the Goſpel hiſtory. There are no direct encomiums upon him, no laboured defences, or recommendations. His character ariſes from a careful and impartial examination of all that he did and ſaid, and the Evangeliſts appear to have drawn this greateſt of all characters without any direct deſign to do it. Nay, they have recorded ſome things,—ſuch as his being moved with the human nature, as well as being affected by its infirmities, which the wiſdom of this world would rather have concealed.

But it is evident their view was to ſhew their Maſter to the perſons to whom they preached, as the promiſed Meſſiah of the Jews, and the Saviour of mankind; and as they had been convinced of this themſelves from his diſcourſes, actions, ſufferings, and reſurrection, they thought nothing more was wanting to convince ſuch others as were ſerious and impartial, but a ſimple narrative of what Jeſus ſaid and did.

And indeed, if we compare the tranſcendent greatneſs of this character with the indirect manner in which it is delivered, and the illiterateneſs and low condition of the Evangeliſts, it will appear impoſſible that they ſhould have forged it; that they ſhould not have had a real original before them; ſo that nothing was wanting, but to record it ſimply and faithfully.

How could mean and illiterate perſons excel the greateſt geniuſes, ancient and modern, in drawing a character?—How came they to draw it in an indirect manner?—This is indeed a ſtrong evidence of genuineneſs and truth: But then it is of ſo recluſe and ſubtle a nature, and, agreeable to this, has been ſo little taken notice of by the defenders of the Chriſtian religion, that one cannot conceive the Evangeliſts were at all aware that it was an evidence. The character of Chriſt, as drawn by them, is therefore genuine and true, and conſequently proves his divine miſſion, both by its tranſcendent excellence, and by his laying claim to ſuch a miſſion.

And here it ought to be particularly remarked, that our Saviour's intire devotion to God, and ſufferings for the ſake of men, in compliance with his will, is a pitch of perfection which was never propoſed or thought of before his coming, (much leſs attempted or attained,) unleſs as far as this is virtually included in the precepts for loving God above all, and our neighbours as ourſelves, and other equivalent paſſages in the Old Teſtament.

To conclude, we may obſerve, that Jeſus hath, by his death, ſet open the gates of immortality to men; and by his word, ſpirit, and example, graciouſly offers to make them meet for, and to conduct them into the inheritance of the ſaints in light. Wherefore, being born under the diſpenſation of his Goſpel, we have, from our earlieſt years, enjoyed the beſt means of acquiring wiſdom, virtue, and happineſs, the lineaments of the image of God.

We have been called to aſpire after an exaltation to the nature and felicity of God, ſet before our mortal eyes in the man Jeſus Chriſt, to fire us with the nobleſt ambition. His Goſpel teaches us, that we are made for eternity; and that our preſent life is to our after-exiſtence, what childhood is to man's eſtate: But as in childhood many things are to be learned, many hardſhips to be endured, many habits to be acquired, and that by a tedious courſe of exerciſes, which in themſelves though painful, and it may be uſeleſs to the child, yet are neceſſary to fit him for the buſineſs and enjoyments of manhood. Juſt ſo, while we remain in this infancy of human life, things are to be learned, hardſhips to be endured, and habits to be acquired, by a laborious courſe of diſcipline, which, however painful, muſt chearfully be undergone, becauſe neceſſary to fit us for the employment and pleaſures of our riper exiſtence above.

Our Father, ever mindful of us, hath ſent down JESUS, the expreſs image of his own perſon, to initiate us into and carry us through this courſe of education for eternity. Inflamed therefore with the love of immortality and its joys, let us ſubmit ourſelves to our heavenly teacher, and learn of him thoſe graces which alone can make life pleaſant, death deſirable, and fill eternity with extatic joys. See Hartley's Obſervat. on Man, vol. ii.

Chap. XX. Ver. 2. Then ſhe runneth—to Simon Peter] See the note on Luke xxiv. 5. The reader on theſe chapters will be pleaſed to refer to the notes on the parallel places.

Ver. 3. Peter therefore went forth] Peter and John only are mentioned in this relation; but the circumſtances taken notice of by the other Evangeliſts ſhew, that the Apoſtles lodged all together in one houſe, as they uſed to do while their Maſter was alive. If ſo, it is reaſonable to believe, that they all heard Mary Magdalene's report, and were anxious to know the truth of it. But in their preſent ſituation, they would judge it imprudent to go out in a body to examine the matter, and would rather depute two of their number for that purpoſe. Accordingly we ſuppoſe that Peter and John went to the ſepulchre by the advice and appointment of the reſt. Inſtead of came to the ſepulchre, it appears from the next verſe, that the Greek ſhould be rendered went. The fact mentioned by St. Luke, (ch. xxiv. 12.) has been commonly taken to be the ſame with this related by St. John; from which, however, Mr. Weſt obſerves, it differs, among other things, in this material circumſtance, viz. That whereas St. John expreſly ſays, that Peter went into the ſepulchre, while he [John] who got thither firſt, contented himſelf with barely ſtooping down and looking into it; St. Luke, in the paſſage before us, tells us, that Peter ſtooping down and looking in, beheld the linen clothes laid by themſelves, and departed. The word ϖαρακύψας [parakupſas], ſtooping down and looking in, uſed by both Evangeliſts, and in the latter applied only to St. Peter, in the former only to St. John, is in his Goſpel plainly diſtinguiſhed from the word εισῆλθεν [eiſelthen], entered in, and ſet in direct oppoſition to it; and that not by the force of etymology and conſtruction only, but by ſome particulars reſulting from the actions ſignified by thoſe two words, which prove them to be diſtinct and different from each other. He who went into the ſepulchre, ſaw more than he, who ſtaying without, only ſtooped down and looked in. Thus Peter and John, when they entered into the ſepulchre, ſaw not only the linen clothes lie, but the napkin that was about his head, not lying with the linen clothes, but wrapped together in a place by itſelf: but when they only ſtooped down and looked in, they could ſee only the linen clothes, as is evident from the words of St. John, ver. 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8. Now theſe two actions being by theſe marks as clearly diſtinguiſhed from each other in St. John, as the different places where they were performed can be by the terms entrance and inſide of the ſepulchre, and as ſo diſtinguiſhed having been ſeparately performed by the Apoſtle, they muſt alſo neceſſarily be taken for ſeparate and diſtinct actions, when related of St. Peter. And if it be reaſonable to conclude from St. John's account, that Peter, when he came with him to the ſepulchre, did not ſtop at the entrance, ſtoop down and look in, but that he entered into it; it is no leſs reaſonable to conclude from St. Luke's narration, that when he came at the time mentioned by him, he did not enter in, but ſtooping down, beheld the linen clothes and departed, eſpecially if the force of the Greek word μονα [mona, rendered by themſelves] be conſidered, and the whole paſſage rendered as it ought to have been, "Beheld the linen clothes only lying." From all which it appears, that the fact related of St. Peter by St. Luke, and that here related by St. John, are ſeparate and diſtinct facts, and not one and the ſame, as has been imagined. And as the facts were different, ſo did they take their riſe from two different occaſions; or in other words, as it is evident from all that has been juſt now ſaid, that Peter went twice to the ſepulchre, ſo there are two diſtinct reaſons for his ſo doing, aſſigned in the Goſpels of Luke and John, viz. the report of Mary Magdalene, and that of Joanna and the other women. By the former having been told that the body of Jeſus was taken out of the ſepulchre, he ran in great haſte to examine into the truth of that account; and in purſuance of this intent entered into the ſepulchre, that he might receive a thorough ſatisfaction upon that point. In the latter were two additional circumſtances of importance, ſufficient to awaken the curioſity of a leſs zealous diſciple than St. Peter, whoſe affection for his Lord was, like his natural temper, fervent and impetuous. When he heard therefore from Joanna and the other women of a viſion of angels, who had appeared to them at the ſepulchre, and informed them that Chriſt was riſen, can we wonder at his running thither a ſecond time, in hopes of receiving ſome confirmation of the truth of that report, which, though treated by the reſt as an idle tale, he certainly gave credit to, as the whole tenor of this paſſage implies? We ſay a ſecond time, becauſe had he gone for the firſt time upon the report of Joanna, he could have had no inducement to have gone to 4 So they ran both together: and the other diſciple did outrun Peter, and came firſt to the ſepulchre.

5 And he ſtooping down, and looking in, ſaw the linen clothes lying; yet went he not in.

6 Then cometh Simon Peter following him, and went into the ſepulchre, and ſeeth the linen clothes lie;

7 And the napkin that was about his head, not lying with the linen wrapped together in a place by 8 Then went in alſo that o which came firſt to the ſepul ſaw, and believed.

9 For as yet they knew not t that he muſt riſe again from the 10 Then the diſciples wen unto their own home.

11 But Mary ſtood without

Ver. 5. Ch. xix. 40.—V. 7. Ch. xi. 44.—V. 9. Pſ. xvi. 10. Acts ii. 25, 31. xiii. 35.—V. 11. Mark the ſepulchre a ſecond time from any thing he could learn from the firſt report made by Mary Magdalene, whoſe account contained nothing but what was implied in that given by Joanna and the other women. His behaviour alſo upon this occaſion, when he only ſtooped down and looked into the ſepulchre, ſo different from the former, when he entered into it, is very rational, and conſonant with the purpoſe of this ſecond viſit, which was, to ſee if the angels who had appeared to the women at the ſepulchre, were ſtill there: this could as well be diſcovered by looking, as by going into the ſepulchre, as is plain from the ſtory of Mary Magdalene, who, ſtooping down and looking in, ſaw two angels ſitting, the one at the head, and the other at the feet, where the body of Jeſus had lain. Having now proved, as we hope, that this viſit of St. Peter's to the ſepulchre, mentioned by St. Luke, muſt have been his ſecond viſit, this paſſage is cleared from two objections which lay againſt it; one, that it did not agree with the relation given by St. John; and the other, that it diſturbed and confounded the whole order of St. Luke's narration; ſo that notwithſtanding the 12th verſe of his 24th chapter, is wanting both in the Greek and Latin copies of Beza, there is no reaſon for rejecting it. This point being ſettled, the reader will permit a few inferences in order to explain ſome paſſages in the preceding part of that chapter. Firſt then, it is plain from this and ver. 9. that St. Peter, after he had been with John and Mary Magdalene at the ſepulchre, was now got together with the Apoſtles and diſciples, whom, in all probability, he and John had aſſembled upon the occaſion of Mary Magdalene's report. Peter, we ſay, and John had, in all probability, aſſembled the other diſciples and apoſtles, to inform them what they had heard from Mary Magdalene, and of their having been themſelves at the ſepulchre to examine into the truth of her report. For it is not to be imagined that theſe Apoſtles would not have immediately communicated to the reſt an event of ſo much conſequence to them all, as that of the Lord's body being miſſing from the ſepulchre. And as we now find them gathered together, and Peter with them, it is no unnatural ſuppoſition, that they had been ſummoned thither by Peter and John; at leaſt their meeting together ſo early in the morning, is this way accounted for. Here then we ſee the reaſon of Luke's naming Mary Magdalene, and the other Mary, among thoſe which told theſe things to the Apoſtles, ver. 10. For although theſe two women were with Joanna and her ſet, and conſequently, could not have joined them in relating to the Apoſtles the viſion of the two angels, &c. yet as the account of their having found the ſtone rolled away, and the body of Jeſus being miſſing, had been reported from them by Peter and John to the other Apoſtles, before the return of Joanna from the ſepulchre, St. Luke thought fit to ſet them down as evidences of ſome of the facts related by him; and indeed it was proper to produce the teſtimony of the two Marys concerning theſe facts, becauſe they firſt went to the ſepulchre, and firſt gave an account of thoſe two particulars to the Apoſtles. Secondly, From hence it may be inferred, that the reports of the women were made ſeparately and at different times. For if Peter went twice to the ſepulchre, there muſt have been two diſtinct reaſons for his ſo doing, the diſtinct reports of Mary Magdalene and Joanna: and as there was a conſiderable interval between his firſt and ſecond viſit, a proportionable ſpace muſt have intervened between the two reports. After Mary Magdalene's report, he had been at the ſepulchre, had returned from thence to his own home, and was now got with the other Apoſtles, whom, as we have ſaid, he and John had in all probability called together, before Joanna and the women with her came to make theirs. Thirdly, As the reports were made at different times, and by different women; as the facts reported were different, and ſaid to have happened all in the ſame place, viz. at the ſepulchre; and as theſe facts muſt of conſequence have happened at different times, it follows, that the women who reported thoſe facts as happening in their preſence, muſt have been at different times at the ſepulchre. For had they been all preſent at each of theſe events, no reaſon can be aſſigned for their differing ſo widely in their relations, and pretty difficult will it be to account for their varying ſo much as to the time of their making their reports. Here then is a ſtrong argument in favour of the womens coming at different times to the ſepulchre: their different motives for going, ſome intending only to view the ſepulchre, and others to embalm the body, is ſtill another argument; and as this gave occaſion to two appearances of Chriſt, and as many of the angels, it conſequently multiplied the proofs and witneſſes of the reſurrection, and eſtabliſhed this important truth upon ſtronger evidence. Weſt on the Reſurrection, p. 50—65.

Ver. 6, 7. Simon Peter—went into the ſepulchre, and ſeeth, &c.]

These circumſtances were very awakening, and pare the minds of the diſciples for ſomething nothing but the reſurrection of Jeſus could in cluded from them. The body, they ſaw was g could it be taken away, and for what purpoſe?
then, in all probability they would have known
Not by the Jews; for they had nothing to do whom alone the diſpoſal of it belonged, as the executed by his orders, had given it to his diſc the ſepulchre but two days before: and wherefore it again ſo ſoon?—Not to bury it; for in that c have left the winding ſheet, and the napkin fold Whoever therefore had removed the body, they it with a deſign to bury it; and yet no other pur of it can be imagined. Beſides, it muſt have night by ſtealth, and conſequently in a hurry.
winding ſheet and napkin, to be folded up and c a manner, in the ſepulchre. Add to this, that large; and therefore many people muſt have be tranſaction; not one of whom was there to gi ſuch queſtions. Theſe and ſuch like reflections their minds, and theſe difficulties could not but pect ſome extraordinary event. They knew the life of miracles, and his death was attended wonders; all which could not but come crow mories; and yet none of them at that time, riſen from the dead; (See on ver. 8.) for, as aſſures us, ver. 9. They knew not the Scripture, th from the dead; that is, they did not underſtan that the Meſſiah was to riſe again from the dead trary perſuaded, that theſe very prophets ha Meſſiah ſhould not die, but abide forever. And, from the Scripture, nor yet from our Lord's o
he was to riſe again; ſo neither could they coll which Mary Magdalene had told them; for ſh leaſt notion of it, even when Jeſus appeared to what ſhe ſays in the 13th and 15th verſes. Se and the note on Matt. xxviii. 11, &c.

Ver. 8. And believed] The plain interpretation to be, that John entering into the ſepulchre above related, and conſequently believed not t but that the body was taken away, as Mary Ma them: for the apology which he immediately proves that a belief in the reſurrection could n St. John declares that they knew not, they had thoſe Scriptures which foretold his reſurrection the note on Luke xxiv. 11.

Ver. 10. Then the diſciples went away] The diſ and John; run to their own home, is in the origin ſeems evidently to ſignify " to their companions.
after this, the women found the eleven and the xxiv. 9. It was very prudent in Peter and Jo ately, leſt they ſhould have been queſtioned b near the ſepulchre; and it was no leſs prudent a to acquaint the reſt of the diſciples with this im as ſoon as poſſible, and to collect their ſentim Magdalene, however, who it ſeems had follow the ſepulchre, did not return home with them, the body. See the next verſe, and Elſner's
p. 348.

Ver. 11—14. But Mary ſtood without at the ſe viſion mentioned in Matthew and Mark was of by Mary was of two; as was likewiſe that b with her. And whereas the firſt angel was upon their entering the ſepulchre, ſitting on the ri mentioned appearances were abrupt and ſudden.
Mary Magdalene diſcovered ſitting, one at the at the feet, where the body of Jeſus had laid, w and John, who juſt before had entered the ſepulc part of it with attention; and Joanna and thoſ ſome time in the ſepulchre before they ſaw any ſeem alſo to have appeared to them in a differe ſeen by Mary Magdalene and the other Mary angels, and the manner of their appearance w wiſe were the words ſpoken to them by the wo viour upon thoſe ſeveral occaſions. Mary an with fear, and fled from the ſepulchre. Joann chre, weeping: and as ſhe wept, ſhe ſtooped down, and looked into the ſepulchre, 12 And ſeeth two angels in white, ſitting, the one at the head, and the other at the feet, where the body of Jeſus had lain.

13 And they ſay unto her, Woman, why weepeſt thou? She ſaith unto them, Becauſe they have taken away my Lord, and I know not where they have laid him.

14 And when ſhe had thus ſaid, ſhe turned herſelf back, and ſaw Jeſus ſtanding, and knew not that it was Jeſus.

15 Jeſus ſaith unto her, Woman, why weepeſt thou? whom ſeekeſt thou? ſhe ſuppoſing him to be the gardener, ſaith unto him, Sir, if thou have borne him hence, tell me where thou haſt laid him, and I will take him away.

16 Jeſus ſaith unto her, Mary. She turned herſelf, and ſaith unto him, Rabboni; which is to ſay, Maſter.

17 Jeſus ſaith unto her, Touch me not; for I am not yet aſcended to my Father: but go to my brethren, and ſay unto them, I aſcend unto my Father, and your Father, and to my God, and your God.

Ver. 14. Matth. xxviii. 9. Mark xvi. 9. Luke xxiv. 16, 31. Ch. xxi. 4.—V. 17. Pſ. xxii. 22. Matth. xxviii. 10. Hebr. ii. 11. Ch. xvi. 28. Epheſ. i. 17.

were ſtruck with awe and reverence; but Mary Magdalene ſeems to have been ſo immerſed in grief, at not being able to find the body of the Lord, as to have taken little or no notice of ſo extraordinary an appearance; ſhe ſees, hears, and anſwers the angels without any emotion, and without quitting the object upon which her mind was wholly fixed, till ſhe was awakened out of her trance by the well-known voice of her maſter calling her by her name.—But here let us ſtop a little, and enquire. Could this appearance be an illuſion? Could a mind ſo occupied, ſo loſt in one idea, attend at the ſame time to the production of ſo many others of a different kind? Or could Mary's imagination be ſtrong enough to ſee and converſe with angels, and yet too weak to make any impreſſion on her, or call off her attention from a leſs affecting, leſs ſurpriſing ſubject? Real angels ſhe may indeed be ſuppoſed to have ſeen and heard, and not to have regarded them; but apparitions raiſed by her own fancy, could not have failed engaging her notice. For although, when we are awake, we cannot avoid perceiving ideas excited in us by the organs of ſenſation, yet is it, in moſt inſtances, in our power to give them what degree of attention we think fit; and hence it comes, that when we are earneſtly employed in any action, intent upon any thought, or tranſported by any paſſion, we ſee, and hear, and feel a thouſand things, of which we take no more notice than if we were utterly inſenſible of them: but to the ideas not proceeding from ſenſation, but formed within us from the internal operation of our minds, we cannot but attend; becauſe in their own nature, they can exiſt no longer than while we attend to them. It is evident, that the mind cannot apply itſelf to the contemplation of more than one object at a time; which, as long as it keeps poſſeſſion, excludes or obſcures all others. Mary Magdalene therefore, having perſuaded herſelf, upon ſeeing the ſtone rolled away from the mouth of the ſepulchre, that ſome perſons had removed the body of her Lord; in which notion ſhe was ſtill more confirmed, after her return to the ſepulchre with Peter and John; and grieving at being thus diſappointed of paying her laſt duty to her deceaſed Maſter, whoſe body, (as Peter, his moſt zealous, and John, his moſt beloved diſciple, knew nothing of its removal) ſhe might imagine had fallen into the hands of his enemies, to be expoſed perhaps to freſh inſults and indignities, or at leaſt to be deprived of the pious offices which the duty and affection of his followers and diſciples were preparing to perform. Mary Magdalene falling into a paſſion of grief at this unexpected diſtreſs, and abandoning herſelf to all the melancholly reflections that muſt naturally ariſe from it, with her eyes ſuffuſed with tears, and thence diſcerning more imperfectly, looking as it were by accident, and while ſhe was thinking on other matters, into the ſepulchre, and ſeeing the angels, might, according to the reaſoning above laid down, give but little heed to them; as not perceiving on a ſudden, and under ſo great a cloud of ſorrow, the tokens of any thing extraordinary in that appearance. She might take them for two young men, which was the form aſſumed by thoſe who appeared to the other women, without reflecting that it was impoſſible ſuch young men ſhould have been in the ſepulchre, without being ſeen by John and Peter, and improbable that they ſhould have entered into it after their departure, without having been obſerved by her. Intent upon what paſſed in her own boſom, ſhe did not give herſelf time to conſider and examine external objects; and therefore, knew not even Chriſt himſelf, who appeared to her in the ſame miraculous manner; but, ſuppoſing him to be the gardener, begged him to tell her, if he had removed the body, where he had laid it, that ſhe might take it away. By which queſtion, and the anſwer ſhe made to the angels immediately before, we may perceive upon what her thoughts were ſo earneſtly employed, and thence conclude ſtill farther, that the angels were not the creatures of her imagination, ſince they were plainly not the objects of her attention. The appearances therefore of the angels were real. Weſt, page 154, &c.

Ver. 15. She ſuppoſing him to be the gardener, &c.] It is very probable that Jeſus might ſpeak low, or a different way from what he uſually did; and Mary's taking him for the gardener, ſeems to intimate, that there was nothing very ſplendid in his dreſs. Accordingly, when he appeared to the two diſciples in their way to Emmaus, they ſeem to have taken him for a perſon of a rank not much ſuperior to their own. Her eyes might alſo be with-held at firſt from knowing Jeſus, as theirs were, Luke xxiv. 16. It is obſervable, that Mary accoſts this ſtranger in reſpectful language, even when ſhe took him for a ſervant; for κηπουρός cannot with propriety ſignify the owner of the garden. She prudently reflected that an error on that hand would be more excuſable than on the other; ſuppoſing he ſhould have proved one of ſuperior rank, in a plain dreſs. It is alſo obſervable, that ſhe does not name Jeſus, but ſpeaks in indefinite terms, If thou haſt borne him hence; intimating, that he was the one perſon of whom her own thoughts and heart were ſo full, that ſhe took it for granted every one muſt know who ſhe meant. Such language in ſuch circumſtances was perfectly natural. See Doddridge, Stockius, and Whitby.

Ver. 16. Jeſus ſaith unto her, &c.] Chriſt had ſtood by her ſome time, had ſpoken to her, and ſhe anſwered him before ſhe knew him to be Chriſt; on the contrary ſhe took him for the gardener; by all which it is manifeſt, that if it was a ſpectre, it was not of her creating. Her mind, as we have obſerved in a preceding note, was otherwiſe engaged; and had it been either at leiſure or diſpoſed to raiſe apparitions, it is moſt likely ſhe would have called up ſome perſon, with whom ſhe had more acquaintance and concern than a keeper of a garden, whom probably ſhe had never known or ſeen before. Beſides, Jeſus called her by her name; by which, as it appeared that he knew her, ſo did ſhe, it ſeems, diſcover him; for turning immediately about, ſhe accoſted him with the reſpectful title, Rabboni, my Maſter; and, as may be inferred from the enſuing words of Chriſt, offered to embrace him. His voice and his countenance convinced her that it was Chriſt himſelf. Weſt, p. 164, &c.

Ver. 17. Touch me not, for I am not yet aſcended, &c.] The objectors to the reſurrection of Jeſus, have inferred from this circumſtance, that Chriſt's body was not a real tangible body: but this could never be inferred from the words Touch me not; for thouſands make uſe of that expreſſion every day, without giving the leaſt ſuſpicion that their bodies are not tangible, or capable of being touched. Nor could this concluſion be built upon the words, I am not yet aſcended to my Father, for though there is a difficulty in theſe words, there is no difficulty in ſeeing that they have no relation to Chriſt's body; for as to his body nothing is ſaid. The natural ſenſe of the place, as collected from comparing it with Matth. xxviii. 9. is this, "Mary Magdalene, upon ſeeing Jeſus, fell at his feet, and laid hold on them, and held them as if ſhe meant never to let them go; ſee 2 Kings iv. 27. Luke vii. 38. Chriſt ſaid to her, Touch me not, or embrace me not now, you will have other opportunities of ſeeing me, for I go not yet to my Father; loſe no time then, but go quickly with my meſſage to my brethren." In the Jewiſh language, to touch, often ſignifies to embrace, with affection and regard. Thus Mark x. 13. They brought young children, that he ſhould touch them; that is, expreſs his affection to them by the impoſition of hands, accompanied with bleſſings: Accordingly it is added, He took them up in his arms, laid his hands upon them, and bleſſed them. So alſo, Luke viii. 31. Simon the Phariſee obſerving a woman, who was a ſinner, waſhing the feet of Chriſt with her tears, and kiſſing them, expreſſed her action by the word απτισθαι. This man, if he were a prophet, would, &c. who touched him. In this ſenſe the word απτω, touch, was uſed by our Lord on the preſent occaſion.—In the words of this verſe is contained a moſt clear proof that it was Chriſt himſelf who uttered them. To underſtand this, it muſt be remembered, that they allude to the long diſcourſe which our Saviour held with his diſciples, the very night in which he was betrayed, ch. xiv. xv. xvi. wherein he told them, he ſhould leave them for a ſhort time, A little while, and ye ſhall not ſee me; and that he ſhould come to them again, though but for a ſhort time, And again a little while, and ye ſhall ſee me, becauſe, added he, I go to my Father. By the phraſe, I go to my Father, Chriſt meant his final quitting this world, as he himſelf explained it to his diſciples, who did not then underſtand either of the above expreſſions, I came forth, &c. ch. xvi. 28. But, leſt they ſhould fall into deſpair at being thus forſaken by him, for whom they had forſaken all the world, he at the ſame time promiſed to ſend them a Comforter, even the Holy Spirit, who ſhould teach them all things, and enable them to work miracles; and that finally, though they ſhould for a ſeaſon be ſorrowful, yet their ſorrow ſhould ſoon be turned into joy, &c. ch. xiv. 16, 26. xvi. 13, 20, 21. Theſe were magnificent promiſes,

18 Mary Magdalene came and told the diſciples, that ſhe had ſeen the Lord, and that he had ſpoken theſe things unto her.

19 Then the ſame day at the firſt day of the week, were ſhut where the diſciples

Ver. 19. Mark xvi. 14. Luke xxiv. 36. 1 Cor. xv. 5.

promiſes, which, as the diſciples could not but remember Chriſt had made to them, ſo they might be aſſured, that no one but Chriſt was able to make them good; and therefore, when they came to reflect ſeriouſly on the import of theſe words, Touch me not, &c. it was impoſſible for them to conclude otherwiſe than that it was Chriſt himſelf who appeared to Mary Magdalene. For as the latter expreſſion, I aſcend to my Father, &c. implied a remembrance, and conſequently a renewal of thoſe promiſes which were to take place after his aſcenſion to the Father, ſo did the former, I am not aſcended to my Father, give them encouragement to expect the performance of that other promiſe of his coming to them again before his aſcenſion, by his giving them to underſtand that he had not yet quitted this world. And Chriſt's forbidding Mary Magdalene to touch or embrace him, might have been meant as a ſignification of his intending to ſee her and his diſciples again, juſt as in ordinary life, when one friend ſays to another, "Don't take leave, for I am not going yet," he means to let him know, that he purpoſes to ſee him again before he ſets out upon his journey. That this is the true import of the words, Touch me not, is evident, not only from the reaſon ſubjoined in the words immediately following, For I am not yet aſcended, &c. (by which expreſſion, as we have ſhewn above, Chriſt meant he had not finally quitted the world) but from theſe farther conſiderations.

Chriſt, by ſhewing himſelf firſt to Mary Magdalene, intended, doubtleſs, to give her a diſtinguiſhing mark of his favour, and therefore cannot be ſuppoſed to have deſigned at the ſame time to have put a ſlight upon her, by refuſing her a pleaſure which he granted not long after to the other Mary and Salome: And yet this muſt be ſuppoſed, if touch me not be underſtood to imply a prohibition to Mary Magdalene, to embrace him, for any reaſon conſiſtent with the regard ſhewn to the other women, and different from that now contended for, namely, that he intended to ſee her again and his diſciples. On the contrary, if theſe words be taken to ſignify only that this happineſs was denied to Mary, till ſome fitter opportunity, they will be ſo far from importing any unkindneſs or reprehenſion to her, that they may rather be looked upon as a gracious aſſurance, a kind of friendly engagement to come to her again. In this ſenſe they correſpond exactly with Chriſt's purpoſe in ſending this meſſage by her to his diſciples; which, as we have obſerved before, was to let them know that he remembered his promiſe of coming to them again, and was ſtill in a condition to perform it, not having finally quitted this world: And of his intention to perform it, this his refuſing to admit the affectionate or reverential embraces of Mary Magdalene, was an earneſt, as his coming to them would be a pledge of his reſolution to acquit himſelf in due time of thoſe promiſes, which were not to take effect till after his final departure out of the world. And thus this whole diſcourſe of our Saviour with Mary Magdalene will be in all its parts intelligible, rational, and coherent; whereas, if it be ſuppoſed that Mary Magdalene was forbidden to touch Chriſt for ſome myſtical reaſon, contained in the words, I am not yet aſcended, &c. it will be very difficult to underſtand the meaning or intent of that meſſage, which ſhe was commanded to carry to the diſciples; and ſtill more difficult to account for his ſuffering, not long after, the embraces of the other Mary and Salome.

To the ſame, or even greater difficulties will that interpretation of this paſſage be liable, which ſuppoſes that the prohibition to Mary Magdalene was grounded upon the ſpiritual nature of Chriſt's body, which, it is preſumed, was not ſenſible to the touch or feeling. And indeed both theſe reaſons for the behaviour of Chriſt to Mary Magdalene are overturned, by his contrary behaviour to the other Mary and Salome. But beſides the aſſurance given by Chriſt to his diſciples, in the words here ſpoken, of his intention of performing his promiſes, &c. he might have a farther view, which is equally deducible from thoſe words. That remarkable expreſſion, I aſcend to my Father, Chriſt undoubtedly made uſe of upon this occaſion, to recal to their minds the diſcourſe he held with them three nights before, in which he explained clearly what he meant by going to his Father, ch. xvi. 29. But this was not the only expreſſion that puzzled them, they were as much in the dark as to the meaning of, A little while, and ye ſhall not, &c. ver. 16, 17, 18. which they likewiſe confeſſed they did not underſtand. But Chriſt left thoſe words to be explained by the events to which they ſeverally related, and which were then drawing on apace. For that very night he was betrayed, and ſeized, and deſerted by his diſciples, as he himſelf had foretold: the next day he was crucified, expired upon the croſs, and was buried. Upon this melancholy cataſtrophe the diſciples could be no longer at a loſs to underſtand what Chriſt meant, when he ſaid to them, A little while, and ye ſhall not ſee me. He was gone from them, and, as their fears ſuggeſted, gone forever, notwithſtanding he had expreſſly told them he would come to them again, in the words, Again, a little while, and ye ſhall ſee me. This latter expreſſion was full as intelligible as the former, and as the one now expounded by the event, was plainly a prophecy of his death, ſo muſt the other be underſtood as a prophecy of his reſurrection. But if they underſtood it in that ſenſe, they were very far from having a right notion of the reſurrection from the dead; as is evident from their imagining when Chriſt firſt ſhewed himſelf to them after his paſſion, that they ſaw a ſpirit; even though they had juſt before declared their belief that he was riſen indeed. The reſurrection of the body, it ſhould ſeem, made no part of their notion of the reſurrection from the dead; to lead them therefore into a right underſtan article of faith, Chriſt, in ſpeaking to Mary uſe of terms which ſtrongly imply his being riſen from the dead. I am not yet aſcended— ſay unto them, I aſcend unto my Father, &c.
Father, Chriſt, as has already been obſerved underſtood phraſe of leaving the world, and words immediately foregoing give ſo great a l to miſtake their meaning. The whole paſſag from the Father, and am come into the world: aga go to the Father. chap. xvi. 28. By the expr world, Chriſt certainly meant to ſignify hi viſibly and bodily upon earth; and therefore I leave the world, he muſt have intended to d this, viz. his ceaſing to converſe viſibly and as they very well knew that the uſual road b this world, lay through the gates of death, Maſter had trodden the irremediable path, th clude, that what he had ſaid to them about leav compliſhed in his death; and conſiſtently with gine, that by his coming again, no more was in ing to them in the ſame manner as many perſ and ſaid to appear after their deceaſe. To g error, Chriſt plainly intimates to his diſciples i &c. that his dying, and his final leaving of things; the latter of which was ſtill to co was paſt: he had indeed died and quitted but he was now riſen from the dead, return ſhould not leave it finally till he aſcended to h returned into the world, his appearing to M tended for a proof; and yet of this it coul what ſhe ſaw was no more than what is co ſince the ſpirits of many people have been t their deceaſe, who, notwithſtanding, are ſu tually left this world by their death, as thoſe w at all. If therefore Chriſt was riſen from t affirmed he was; if he had not finally left th
I am not yet aſcended, &c. plainly import; a Mary Magdalene was intended for a proof undoubtedly it was; it will follow, that he w riſen from the dead; that he was ſtill in t manner, as when he came forth from the Fath he himſelf, and not a ſpirit without fleſh an to Mary Magdalene.

The term aſcend is twice uſed by our Sa theſe words. In the diſcourſe alluded to, ſhould go to his Father, and he now bids Ma that he ſhould aſcend to his Father; a variatio cular meaning. For as by the former expreſ nify in general his final departure, ſo by the manner of that departure intimated; and, do letting his diſciples know the preciſe time, no longer enjoy his converſe, or expect to ſee h
the diſciples therefore beheld their Maſter ta could not but know aſſuredly, that this was t forty days before to Mary Magdalene; and k longer doubt whether it was Chriſt himſelf w thoſe prophetic words to her. For if it was n to her, it muſt either have been ſome ſpirit, man, who, to impoſe upon her, counterfeite of Chriſt; or, laſtly, the whole muſt have b by her. The firſt of theſe ſuppoſitions is b abſurd, and the third improbable. For, all capable of making a lie for the ſake of carr from which ſhe could reap no benefit, and t what our Saviour had ſpoken to his diſciple was betrayed, which does not appear, it mu treme madneſs or folly in her, to put the events, ſuch as the appearing of Chriſt to cending into heaven, which were ſo far fron contingencies, that they were not even in cauſes.

Thus Jeſus, having finiſhed the work templated the effects of it with ſingular ple tion between God and man, which had be was now happily renewed: God, who h count of their rebellion, was again reconci come their God and Father; they were e relation of Chriſt's brethren, and God's c loved them with an affection greatly ſu tender-hearted parent. The kindneſs of above all praiſe, if we call to mind the lat to whom it was ſent. They had every o in his greateſt extremity; but he graciou aſſure them of their pardon in the ſtrongeſt as hinting at their fault, he called them his brethren. See Luke xv. 22. the Trial Sequel to the Trial, Weſt, Craddock, a

Ver. 19. When the doors were ſhut—came for fear of the Jews, came Jeſus and ſtood in the midſt, and ſaith unto them, Peace be unto you.

20 And when he had ſo ſaid, he ſhewed unto them his hands and his ſide. Then were the diſciples glad when they ſaw the Lord.

21 Then ſaid Jeſus to them again, Peace be unto you: as my Father hath ſent me, even ſo ſend I you.

22 And when he had ſaid this, he breathed on them, and ſaith unto them, Receive ye the Holy Ghoſt:

23 Whoſeſoever ſins ye remit, they are remitted unto them; and whoſeſoever ſins ye retain, they are retained.

Ver. 20. Ch. xvi. 22.—V. 21. Matth. xxviii. 18. Ch. xvii. 18. Hebr. iii. 1. 2 Tim. ii. 2.—V. 23. Matth. xvi. 19. xviii. 18.

cient fathers have delivered themſelves in a very unguarded manner upon this circumſtance, and have thereby given an handle to the ſcoffs of infidelity: for, taking up the expoſition of the fathers, which ſuggeſts that Jeſus paſſed through the walls or doors while they remained ſhut, without either ſuffering in his own body, or in cauſing in them any change during his ſo paſſing, they have concluded againſt his reſurrection. In anſwer to this, we deny that the words, "Jeſus came, the doors being ſhut," &c. imply, "that Jeſus paſſed through the walls and doors, while they remained ſhut, without," &c. They ſeem indeed to imply, that he came in miraculouſly, though not by a miracle that contains a contradiction or impoſſibility; and indeed, had not St. John intended to ſignify that he came in miraculouſly, he would not twice have mentioned that otherwiſe trifling circumſtance, of the doors being ſhut, ſee ver. 26. But though a denial without proof be a ſufficient anſwer to an aſſertion without proof, yet we will give ſome reaſons why the intended interpretation contended for by theſe philoſophers cannot be the true one. For it is not to be preſumed that St. John, who, with the other diſciples, had received ſenſible evidence of the reality, i. e. the materiality of Chriſt's body, ſhould be abſurd enough to imagine at the ſame time, that it was a ſpiritual body; which he muſt have done, had he thought that Jeſus paſſed through the walls or doors, while they remained ſhut, without either ſuffering in his own body, or cauſing in them any change during his ſo paſſing; it requiring no great depth of philoſophy to underſtand it to be impoſſible, even to Omnipotence, (with reverence be it ſaid) to cauſe the body of a man to penetrate through a wall or door, without cauſing ſome change or alteration in the one or the other. Neither is it to be preſumed, that St. John,—intending, as it is plain he did, by relating the ſtory of St. Thomas, to acquaint the world that he, as well as the other diſciples, had, by feeling and examining his Maſter's body, ſenſible evidence of his being really, i. e. bodily riſen from the dead,—ſhould be weak enough to inſert in his relation a circumſtance which tended to prove, that the body felt, was not a material, but a ſpiritual body, and, conſequently, incapable of being felt and handled. By the way of reaſoning made uſe of upon this occaſion by theſe free-reaſoning philoſophers, the ſpirituality of the walls or doors may as well be inferred, as the ſpirituality of Chriſt's body; for Chriſt's body being proved to be material, by being handled by his diſciples, &c. and it being admitted that he penetrated through the walls or doors while they remained ſhut, without ſuffering, &c. it will follow, that the walls or doors had ſpiritual bodies; ſince it is inconſiſtent to the laws of nature, that one ſolid or material body ſhould paſs through another ſolid or material body, without injuring the form of either.

Having ſhewn the interpretation to be falſe, which ſome have endeavoured to fix upon the words, "Jeſus came, the doors being ſhut," &c. and having alſo allowed that the words do naturally ſuggeſt the entrance of our Saviour to have been miraculous, We ſhall in the next place attempt to ſhew, that the miracle here wrought by Jeſus, inſtead of awakening in the minds of the diſciples any ſuſpicion that their ſenſes might have been impoſed upon in their examination of the Lord's body, tended on the contrary to remove all their doubts, and convince them effectually that it was Jeſus himſelf, in a body conſiſting of fleſh and bones, and not a ſpirit which appeared to them. The diſciples, during their converſation with Chriſt before his paſſion, had been accuſtomed to ſee him work miracles of various kinds. From this extenſive power of controling the laws of nature, joined to the more than human purity of his life and doctrine, they moſt rationally concluded that he came forth from God. Therefore, as on the one hand, the power of working miracles was a characteriſtical mark of Jeſus, and conſequently his working miracles after his reſurrection was one evidence of the identity of his perſon; ſo' on the other hand, was the aſſurance of his coming forth from the God of truth, founded upon his doing ſuch works as no man could do, unleſs God was with him, an infallible ſecurity to the diſciples againſt the ſuſpicion of his intending to impoſe on them. From whence it will follow, that when, upon their fancying they ſaw a ſpirit, he aſſured them, that it was he himſelf, and no ſpirit, which, ſays he, hath not fleſh and bones, as they, by feeling and handling him, ſaw he had, they could have no ſhadow of a pretence, either of diſbelieving his word, or diſtruſting their own ſenſes. For, in reality, doth not his appealing to their ſenſes for a confirmation of what he aſſerted imply an affirmation, that their ſenſes were the proper judges of the point in queſtion? And are not both the parts of this affirmation abſolutely falſe, if it be ſuppoſed that the body here aſſumed by Chriſt was a ſpiritual, i. e. an immaterial body? And if, inſtead of the object upon which they were to judge, viz. a material body, a very different thing was ſubſtituted, namely, a mere idea of ſuch an object, would not an appeal to the judgement of their ſenſes in this caſe have been a mockery? And would not the impoſing upon their ſenſes, after ſuch an appeal, have been fraudulent and diſhoneſt? And would not ſuch a proceeding have been abſurd as well as diſhoneſt? For if it be allowed that Jeſus had the power of impoſing miraculouſly upon the ſenſes of his diſciples, it will not ſurely be denied that he had the power of entering miraculouſly into the chamber where they were aſſembled, while the doors were ſhut. The latter of theſe two miracles renders the firſt unneceſſary. For if Jeſus could, in his human body, enter into the chamber while the doors were ſhut, there was no occaſion for him to impoſe upon the ſenſes of the diſciples. And if he had it in his option to work whichever of thoſe miracles he pleaſed, would it not have been abſurd (with reverence be it ſpoken) in him, to chooſe that which was inconſiſtent with the character of one who came forth from the God of truth, and directly oppoſite to the deſign of his appearing to his diſciples after his paſſion; which was, by offering his body to the examination of their ſenſes, to convince them that he was really, i. e. bodily, riſen from the dead? The expreſſion of the doors being ſhut, for fear of the Jews, implies, that they were faſtened within, and the miracle here wrought, was moſt probable the cauſing them, as of themſelves, to fly open, and ſhut again very ſuddenly, as the doors of the priſon were opened and ſhut again by the angel, who delivered St. Peter from his confinement. This verſe might be read rather more clearly, Then in the evening of the ſame day, the firſt of the week, the doors where the diſciples were aſſembled being ſhut for fear of the Jews, Jeſus came and ſtood, &c. See Weſt, Elſner, Heylin, and Macknight's Prelim. Obſervat. ii. n. 1.

Ver. 20. He ſhewed to them his hands and his ſide] Probably the marks made bythe nails and the ſpear were retained, on purpoſe to give the greater ſatisfaction to the diſciples of the truth of his reſurrection; though indeed without that additional circumſtance, the evidence might have been very ſatisfactory. Doddridge.

Ver. 21. As my Father hath ſent me, &c.] The Jews ſay, "That a man's apoſtle is as himſelf;" meaning by apoſtle his deputy, proxy, legate, repreſentative, or ſubſtitute. The Jews had ſeveral of theſe kind of apoſtles in different countries, whoſe office it was to receive their dues, or to tranſact buſineſs for them; who were never looked upon as mere meſſengers, but as their proxies or repreſentatives. Saul was an apoſtle to the conſiſtory of Damaſcus. The ſenſe of this expreſſion therefore is, that as Chriſt was God's Apoſtle, and ſo his Repreſentative on earth, ſo the twelve, who were before properly named his diſciples, were for the future to be eſteemed his repreſentatives, and to perform thoſe things in his abſence, which would otherwiſe require his bodily preſence. See Hammond, and ch. xvii. 18.

Ver. 22, 23. When he had ſaid this, he breathed on them] St. Luke, ch. xxiv. 5. informs us, that the diſciples from Emmaus told their brethren on this occaſion what things were done in the way. Among the reſt, no doubt, they repeated the interpretations which Jeſus gave of the prophecies concerning his own ſufferings and death; but ſuch a ſenſe of the Scriptures being diametrically oppoſite to the notions which the Jews in general entertained, a peculiar illumination of the Spirit was neceſſary, to enable the Apoſtles to diſcern it. This illuſtration they now received from Jeſus, who, in token that he beſtowed it, breathed upon them, and bade them receive it. See on Matth. xviii. 2. The effect of this illumination was, that by perceiving the agreement of the thing which had befallen him with the ancient prophecies concerning the Meſſiah, their minds were quieted, and they were fitted to judge of the preſent appearance, and of the other appearances which Jeſus was to make before his aſcenſion. Further, the expreſſion Receive ye the Holy Ghoſt, may have a relation not only to the illumination of the Spirit which they now received, but to that which they were to receive afterwards in greater meaſure. Accordingly, it is added, ver. 23. Whoſeſoever ſins ye remit, &c. which may refer to the temporal pardon and puniſhment of mens ſins. See on Matth. xvi. 19. Or the meaning may be, "You are ſoon to receive the Holy Ghoſt in the fulneſs of his communications, whereby you will underſtand the will of God for mens ſalvation in the moſt comprehenſive manner, and ſo be qualified to declare the only terms on which mens ſins are to be pardoned." Some indeed carry the matter higher, ſuppoſing that this is the power of what they call "authoritative abſolution;" yet the only foundation on which the Apoſtles themſelves could claim ſuch a power, muſt either have been the gift of diſcerning ſpirits, which they enjoyed after the effuſion of the Holy Ghoſt, 1 Cor. xii. 10. and by which they knew the ſecret thoughts of mens hearts, conſequently the reality of their repentance; or it muſt have been ſome infallible communication of the will of God, concerning mens future ſtate, which was made to them: For, properly ſpeaking, they neither forgave nor retained ſins; they only declared a matter of fact infallibly made known to them by God. In the mean time, to render this interpretation feaſible, the general expreſſions, whoſeſoever ſins ye remit, &c, muſt be very much 24 But Thomas, one of the twelve, called Didymus, was not with them when Jeſus came.

25 The other diſciples therefore ſaid unto him, We have ſeen the Lord. But he ſaid unto them, Except I ſhall ſee in his hands the print of the nails, and put my finger into the print of the nails, and thruſt my hand into his ſide, I will not believe.

26 And after eight days, again his diſciples were within, and Thomas with them: then came Jeſus, the doors being ſhut, and ſtood in the midſt, and ſaid, Peace be unto you.

27 Then ſaith he to Thomas, Reach hither thy finger, and behold my hands; and reach hither thy hand, and thruſt it into my ſide: and be not faithleſs, but believing.

28 And Thomas anſwered and ſaid unto him, My Lord and my God.

29 Jeſus ſaith unto him, Thomas, becauſe thou haſt ſeen me, thou haſt believed: bleſſed are they that have not ſeen, and yet have believed.

Ver. 24. Ch. xi. 16.—V. 27. 1 John i. 1.—V. 29. 1 Pet. i. 8.

limited, ſince it was but a ſingle individual here and there, whoſe condition in the life to come can be ſuppoſed to have been made known to the Apoſtles by revelation. See Macknight, Clarke, and Hoadley.

Ver. 24. Thomas, one of the twelve] It is ſaid, Luke xxiv. 33. that the diſciples from Emmaus told their ſtory to the eleven, and to them that were with them. The eleven was the name by which the Apoſtles went, after the death of Judas, whether they were preciſely that number, or fewer, as we have obſerved in the note on the above-mentioned paſſage in Luke: wherefore we are under no neceſſity, from this expreſſion, of ſuppoſing that Thomas was preſent when the diſciples came in. We are ſure that he was not preſent at this meeting, when Jeſus ſhewed himſelf; yet, if St. Luke's expreſſion is thought to imply that Thomas was with his brethren at the arrival of the diſciples, we may ſuppoſe that he was one of thoſe who would not believe, and that he went away before they had finiſhed their relation. See Mark xvi. 13. and Macknight's Prelim. Obſerv. vi. p. 31.

Ver. 25. Except I ſhall ſee in his hands the print, &c.] The repetition of the word print ſeems to be a very great beauty, as it admirably repreſents the language of a poſitive man, declaring again and again what he inſiſted upon. The word εις, rendered into, in the next clauſe, ſignifies upon, in ch. viii. 6. and Luke xv. 22. and if that ſenſe be retained here, the words will be, And put my hand upon his ſide. See Doddridge, L'Enfant, and Stevenſon againſt Woolſton, p. 324.

Ver. 27 Reach hither thy finger, &c.] It is obſervable, that our Lord here repeats the very words which Thomas had made uſe of; and thus demonſtrated not only that he was riſen, but alſo that he was poſſeſſed of divine knowledge, from his being conſcious of the words and actions of men, though ſpoken or done in ſecret. It is obſervable, that Spinoſa himſelf could find out no more plauſible objection againſt this evidence of the reſurrection of Chriſt, than to ſay that the diſciples were deceived in what they imagined they ſaw, heard, and felt; which, if granted, would be in effect to allow, that no men could be competent judges of any fact whatſoever relating to their own ſenſations, and conſequently would overthrow all human teſtimony. See Vit. Spinoſa, p. 32.

Ver. 28. Thomas anſwered and ſaid, &c.] Though the nominative often occurs for the vocative, it is the former caſe that is uſed here, the words συ ει, thou art, being underſtood. To this the context agrees; for we are told that theſe words were addreſſed to Jeſus; wherefore they cannot be taken merely as an exclamation of ſurpriſe, which is the Socinian gloſs, but their meaning is, "Thou art really he whom I lately followed as my Lord; and I confeſs thee to be poſſeſſed of infinite knowledge, and worſhip thee as my God." It is not ſaid that Thomas actually touched our Lord's wounds; and Chriſt himſelf ſays afterwards, ver. 29. that his belief was built on ſight; which ſeems to intimate, that this condeſcenſion of our Lord, together with the additional evidence ariſing from the knowledge which he plainly had of that unreaſonable demand which Thomas had made in his abſence, quite overcame him: A turn of mind exceedingly natural to ſo frank a temper as that of Thomas appears to have been. See Doddridge, Waterland's Sermons on the Trinity, and Whitby.

Ver. 29. Becauſe thou haſt ſeen me, &c.] The word ſeen, according to the Hebrew idiom, is often applied to the other ſenſes; and therefore may here ſignify that Thomas had the united teſtimony of all his ſenſes, that Chriſt had a real, i. e. a material body. See 1 John i. 1. and on Acts x. 41. The words, Bleſſed are they, &c. may in their original application be underſtood as a commendation of thoſe then preſent, who had believed that Chriſt was riſen before they had ſeen him; or without requiring ſuch proof as Thomas ſought for. But as they are indefinite, and imply no certain time, they may be extended even to the caſe of thoſe to whom the Goſpel was to be propoſed, by the Apoſtles then, and by their ſucceſſors after them. Accordingly, as in theſe words our Saviour tacitly reproves Thomas for his incredulity, in not believing a matter of fact ſo well atteſted, unleſs he himſelf ſaw it; ſo he lays down an univerſal propoſition for the encouragement of all mankind in future ages, to believe in him, though they had not ſeen him. Yet we ſhould obſerve, that our Lord muſt be far from encouraging or commending thoſe who are credulous, and believe without reaſon; and that he could only mean ſuch as are convinced of the truth by ſearching into the grounds of it: For, though the conduct of Thomas plainly exempts him from the charge of precipitate credulity; nay, though it may ſeem to argue a wiſe caution, not to be impoſed upon in points of ſo high importance, and would perhaps have been cited as an example by men of a ſceptical turn; yet it might in reality, and moſt probably did, proceed from nothing elſe but the ſtrength of his prejudice. Had he only ſaid to the other diſciples, that though he was ready to pay all due regard to their teſtimony, yet as their information related to an extraordinary and ſupernatural event, he was inclined not to be haſty in determining, but ſhould be glad of ſtronger and more convincing proofs,—This would have argued calmneſs and moderation, as well as ingenuity: But the declaration he made, that he would not believe unleſs he was favoured with a particular kind of conviction, amounted in effect to this, That he would believe nothing for which he had not the evidence of ſenſe; and the evidence of ſenſe in that way too, which ſuited his fancy and caprice. To what then can his conduct be aſcribed, but to prejudice?—By this ſuppoſition it will be intirely accounted for,—and there are ſeveral things in the Goſpel which directly lead us to it, and to nothing elſe ſo clearly. That the Jews univerſally were prepoſſeſſed with a notion of a temporal Meſſiah;—that they were extremely fond of it; nay, that they were infatuated and enſlaved by it, is undeniable. Let us then imagine that Thomas retained a ſhare of this old national tincture, and it will ſufficiently account for his unguarded reſolution; and if it really ſprung from prejudice, the words of the text, accommodated to the caſe of Thomas, muſt be underſtood thus: "Bleſſed—that is, more bleſſed, (for the expreſſion, in the deſign of it, is manifeſtly comparative) more bleſſed are they, of a better diſpoſition, more praiſe-worthy, and eminently rewardable, whom proper evidence will always perſuade, than thoſe, who merely on account of their prejudices, are not convinced by arguments of weight fitted to work conviction; but want the teſtimony of ſenſe to conquer their prepoſſeſſions, and in a manner conſtrain their aſſent. Theſe laſt are in ſome degree happy, if they are brought to acknowledge principles which are of great moment and uſe, upon their own terms; but ſtill, upon a compariſon, they are happy in a peculiar and much higher ſenſe, who have not ſeen, and yet have believed." Again, it may be further obſerved, that the prejudice and raſhneſs of thought appear undeniable from hence, that he might have had ſufficient proofs of our Saviour's reſurrection in other ways, beſides that he fixed upon as the only means of giving him ſatisfaction. Of this no Chriſtian can doubt; all of us being in the number of thoſe who have not ſeen, and yet have believed. And we, ſurely, think that we have ſolid grounds for our faith, though we want the evidence of ſenſe. Beſides, let us imagine the caſe of this apoſtle to have been different: Let us ſuppoſe that he never had been favoured with the ſight of our Lord, after his riſing from the dead; yet, if he had received repeated atteſtations from eye-witneſſes, and had been commiſſioned, as he really was, to preach to the Gentiles Jeſus and the reſurrection, and enabled to confirm his doctrine by miracles, could he have wanted any neceſſary means of conviction?—If theſe were ſufficient to convert the heathen world, were they not alſo ſufficient to eſtabliſh his own faith?—Or, to put the matter in another light, let us imagine that he had been permitted to ſee and converſe with Chriſt, but not indulged with putting his fingers to the print of the nails, &c. could the want of this alone have juſtified, or even excuſed his incredulity?—It is impoſſible, and abſurd to common ſenſe; becauſe, if the ſenſes are not to be truſted in one caſe, they muſt be equally fallacious in another. As therefore without this Thomas might have had clear evidence of this great truth, nay, evidence upon which he ought to have aſſented; he acted more like a man who wanted to have his humour gratified, than his reaſon convinced: And ſhould every one inſiſt upon demonſtrations of ſenſe in other ſimilar caſes, it would be attended with numerous ill conſequences; becauſe the whole world muſt remain ſceptics and infidels for ever, with reſpect to facts and principles of the higheſt moment. The general uſe to be made of this maxim, is, to learn how to preſerve the due medium between the two extremes of credulity and ſcepticiſm; of preſumption, where there are no ſolid grounds of faith; and of diffidence, where there are no reaſons for doubt. The only way to avoid theſe errors is, not to believe at any time without ſufficient evidence; but always to acquieſce in that, without inſiſting upon any particular ſort of proof which is not neceſſary. See Clarke's Serm. vol. 7. Archbp. Sharpe's Serm. vol. 2. Bp. Weſton's Serm. vol. 2. Biſcoe's Boyle's Lectures, vol. i. p. 4. and Foſter's Serm. vol. 3.

30 And many other ſigns truly did Jeſus in the preſence of his diſciples, which are not written in this book:

31 But theſe are written, that ye might believe that Jeſus is the Chriſt, the Son of God, and that believing ye might have life through his name.

Ver. 30. Ch. xxi. 25.—V. 31. Luke i. 4.

Ver. 30, 31. And many other ſigns, &c.] He appeared on ſeveral other occaſions to his diſciples after his reſurrections, and by many infallible proofs, which are not written in this book, convinced them that he was alive after his paſſion. The appearances mentioned by the Evangeliſts are nine in number; St. Paul ſpeaks of one to James, and one to himſelf, which they have omitted; and this paſſage leads us to think that Jeſus ſhewed himſelf much oftener than there is any account upon record; performing many mighty works before his diſciples, in order to confirm them in the belief of his reſurrection and perſonal identity. But though there were ſeveral other appearances and miracles, of which no account is given here, yet what is recorded is ſufficient for the Evangeliſt's purpoſe; which was to evince that Jeſus was the Meſſiah, the Saviour of the world. See Snape's Sermons, vol. 1. and Tillotſon's works, vol. 3.

A GENERAL VIEW OF OUR LORD'S RESURRECTION.

The tranſactions of the day on which our Lord aroſe from the dead ended, in the manner ſet forth in this chapter to ver. 26. and in the parallel paſſages of the preceding ſacred writers; a day much to be remembered by men throughout all generations; becauſe it brought fully into act the conceptions which had lodged in the breaſt of infinite wiſdom from eternity, even thoſe thoughts of love and mercy, on which the ſalvation of the world depended. Chriſtians, therefore, have the higheſt reaſon to ſolemnize this day with gladneſs each returning week, by ceaſing from labour, and giving themſelves up to holy meditations, and other exerciſes of devotion. The redemption of the world, which they commemorate thereon, as then receiving its perfection, affords matter for eternal thought, being ſuch a ſubject as no other, how great ſoever, can equal, and whoſe luſtre, neither length of time nor frequent reviewing can ever diminiſh: For as by beholding the ſun, we do not find him leſs glorious or luminous than before, ſo this benefit which we celebrate, after ſo many ages, is as freſh and beautiful as ever, and will continue to be ſo, flouriſhing in the memories of all reaſonable beings, through the endleſs revolutions of eternity.

But, that the reader may form a more diſtinct notion of the hiſtory which the Evangeliſts have given of Chriſt's reſurrection, it will not be improper here to join the ſeveral circumſtances of that important affair together briefly, and in their order.—The Jewiſh ſabbath being at hand when Jeſus expired, his friends had not time to embalm him in the beſt manner, or even to carry him to the place where they intended he ſhould remain; but they laid him in a new ſepulchre hard by, belonging to one of their number, with an intention to remove him after the ſabbath was over. The women therefore who were preſent, obſerving that the funeral rites were perfomed in a hurry, made an agreement to come and embalm him more at leiſure. Accordingly, as ſoon as they returned to the city, they bought ſpices, and prepared them; but the ſabbath coming on, they reſted from working, according to the commandment. When the ſabbath was ended, (that is, on our Saturday evening about ſun-ſetting) the two Maries, by appointment of the reſt, ſet out to ſee if the ſtone was ſtill at the door of the ſepulchre, becauſe thus they would be certain that the body was within: Or, if the ſepulchre was open, and the body taken away, they were to enquire of the gardener where it was laid, that the ſpices might be carried directly to the place. While the women were going on this errand, a great ſtorm and earthquake happened, occaſioned by the deſcent of an angel, who came to wait on Jeſus at his reſurrection. This ſtorm and earthquake terrifying the women, they turned back and joined their companions, who were going to buy ſome more ſpices to compleat the preparation. In the mean time, the angel rolled away the ſtone from the door of the ſepulchre, then ſat down upon it, and aſſuming a very terrible form, affrighted the guards. Soon after this, Jeſus aroſe, and the guards fled in a panic, probably to the firſt houſe they could find, where they waited till the morning.

As the morning approached, the ſtorm abated. At length every thing being got ready, all the women went out together, and arrived at the ſepulchre before the riſing of the ſun. The door was open; they entered, and ſearched for the body, but it was gone. They were exceedingly perplexed. After conſultation, they agreed that while they ſearched the garden, Mary Magdalene ſhould go and inform the apoſtles of what had happened. Coming out of the ſepulchre, therefore, ſhe departed, and the reſt began to ſearch: But having traverſed the garden a while to no purpoſe, they reſolved to examine the ſepulchre a ſecond time; and were entering for that end, when lo! an angel appeared in the farthermoſt right corner, where the feet of Jeſus had lain. He ſpake to them, deſiring them to come and ſee the place where the Lord lay. Upon this they deſcended, and ſaw another angel in the hithermoſt corner of the ſepulchre. The angels deſired them to carry the news of their Lord's reſurrection to the diſciples, and particularly to Peter. They departed, therefore, and made all the haſte they could into the city. In the mean time, Mary Magdalene having told the apoſtles that the ſepulchre was open, and the body taken away, they ſent Peter and John to ſee what was the matter. The two apoſtles, together with Mary Magdalene, ſet out for the ſepulchre about the time that the women, who had ſeen the viſion, were running into the city; But taking a different road in the fields, or a different ſtreet in the city, they did not meet them. When the company of women came, they related their ſtory to the apoſtles, and then enquired for Peter, having a meſſage to him; but, being told that he was gone away with John to the ſepulchre, they ſet out a ſecond time along with ſome of the brethren who were diſpatched to examine the truth of this information; expecting to find Peter either at the ſepulchre or on the road. But as they were going out, he and John, having left Mary Magdalene at the ſepulchre, came into the city it ſeems by a different ſtreet, for the women miſſed them; nor did theſe apoſtles meet the diſciples who were going out to examine the truth of the women's report. The diſciples making all the haſte they could, ſoon left the women with whom they had ſet out, and arrived at the garden about the time that Mary Magdalene was coming away: For after Peter and John were gone, ſhe ſtood beſide the ſepulchre weeping, and happening to look in, ſhe ſaw firſt the angels, then Jeſus himſelf, and was departing to tell the news, juſt as the diſciples arrived at the garden. But ſhe did not meet them, happening to be in a different walk from that by which they were coming up. The diſciples went ſtraightway to the ſepulchre, and ſaw the angels, and then departed; and being now but a little way behind Mary Magdalene, who was tired with the fatigue ſhe had undergone, they travelled by a nearer road through the fields, or by a different ſtreet of the city with ſuch expedition, that they had told their ſtory in the hearing of the two diſciples who went to Emmaus, before ſhe arrived.

While theſe things were doing, Jeſus met the company of women in their way to the ſepulchre, and ordered them to go and inform his diſciples that they had ſeen him. Upon this they left off purſuing Peter, and returned to the apoſtle's lodging, where they found Mary Magdalene telling her new ſtory, which they confirmed by relating whatever had happened to themſelves. Or, we may ſuppoſe that Mary Magdalene fell in with them immediately after Jeſus had left them, and that they all came to the apoſtles in a body.

Peter, hearing the women affirm that they had ſeen not only a viſion of angels, but Jeſus himſelf, went to the ſepulchre a ſecond time, but did not enter. He only looked in, and ſaw the clothes lying as before. In his way home, however, he ſeems to have had the happineſs of meeting with Jeſus. The coming of the watch into the city, and their appearing before the council, is fixed by St. Matthew to the women's interview with our Lord. They had fled from the garden when Jeſus aroſe; and being in a panic, had taken ſhelter in the firſt houſe they could find. But in the morning they began to take courage, and at the time mentioned went and told what they had ſeen to the chief prieſts, who were called together by the high-prieſt, in order to receive their report. Soon after this the diſciples who travelled to Emmaus were overtaken by Jeſus on the road. After he was gone, they returned to Jeruſalem, and told their brethren what had happened. While they were ſpeaking, behold, Jeſus came in; and to convince all preſent of the truth of his reſurrection, ſhewed them his hands and his feet, and called for meat, which he ate in their preſence.

This is Mr. Macknight's ſcheme and method of harmonizing this important but difficult part of Scripture, and which we have in general followed. However, as we have been frequently and greatly obliged to the very judicious and excellent obſervations of Mr. Weſt on the reſurrection, and that nothing may be omitted which can give ſatisfaction on this head, a brief account of Mr. Weſt's ſcheme alſo is here ſubjoined; and the ingenious reader, after an accurate compariſon of the Evangeliſts, muſt judge for himſelf.

"The women who accompanied our Lord from Galilee, made an appointment to come and embalm him after the ſabbath was ended. Very early, therefore, on the firſt day of the week, Mary Magdalene and the other Mary, in purſuance of their purpoſe, went out to meet the apoſtles at the ſepulchre. About the time that they were ſetting out, the earthquake happened; the angel deſcended, and rolled away the ſtone, and Jeſus aroſe. The two Maries either met with, or called upon Salome in their way; ſo the three went on till they came within ſight of the ſepulchre, and obſerved the door open. This circumſtance leading them to conclude that the body was removed, Mary Magdalene ran immediately back to tell Peter and John what had happened. In the mean time the other Mary and Salome going forward, entered the ſepulchre, and had the viſion of one angel mentioned by Matthew and Mark, who informed them that Jeſus was riſen, and bade them carry the news to the diſciples.

After they were departed, Peter and John, with Mary Magdalene, came to the ſepulchre: An account of this journey we have in ch. xx. 1—10. The two apoſtles having examined every thing, went away; but Mary Magdalene ſtayed behind them at the ſepulchre and ſaw firſt the viſion of angels, then Jeſus himſelf. Her joy gave her ſpeed. She ran the ſecond time into the city, that ſhe might impart the news to the reſt.

After Jeſus had ſhewed himſelf to Mary Magdalene at the ſepulchre, he went and met her companions; viz. Mary the mother of James, and Salome, as they were going into the town to give an account of the viſion they had ſeen. The apoſtles and Mary Magdalene had not been long away from the ſepulchre, when Joanna

CHAP. XXI.

Chriſt appearing again to his diſciples, is known of them by the great draught of fiſhes: he dineth with them; earneſtly commandeth Peter to feed his lambs and ſheep; foretelleth him of his death; rebuketh his curioſity touching John. The concluſion.

AFTER theſe things Jeſus ſhewed himſelf again to the diſciples at the ſea of Tiberias; and on this wiſe ſhewed he himſelf.

2 There were together Simon Peter, and Thomas called Didymus, and Nathanael of Cana in Galilee, and the ſons of Zebedee, and two other of his diſciples.

3 Simon Peter ſaith unto them, I go a fiſhing. They ſay unto him, We alſo go with thee. They went forth, and entered into a ſhip immediately; and that night they caught nothing.

Ver. 2. Ch. i. 45. Matth. iv. 21.

and ſome Galilean women, her companions, arrived with the ſpices to embalm the body. This company of women had the viſion of two angels deſcribed by St. Luke, and then departed. But, by ſome accident or other, Mary the mother of James, and Salome, who had been at the ſepulchre, and ſeen the one angel before Joanna came, and who, as they returned, had ſeen Jeſus himſelf, lingered ſo long on the road, that Joanna and the women with her, who came to the ſepulchre after them, got to the apoſtles' lodging before them, and had told their ſtory in ſuch good time, that the two diſciples of whom St. Luke ſpeaks, ch. xxiv. 13. were ſet out for Emmaus, and Peter was gone to the ſepulchre a ſecond time before they came up." See the Reflections on the next chapter.

Chap. XXI. Ver. 1. After theſe things, Jeſus, &c.] It has been ſuggeſted that this whole chapter was not written by St. John, but added by the Aſiatic biſhops after his death. What the arguments brought to eſtabliſh this conjecture are, the reader will eaſily judge. In the firſt place, this is inferred from the likeneſs between the cloſe of this and the twentieth chapter: On the other hand, it ſhould be conſidered, that nothing is more familiar to John than repetitions of this kind. But from whence is it collected, that this chapter ſhould have been added by any other hand than John himſelf? We are told, it is evident that it could not be ſubjoined by John, becauſe, ver. 24. is written in the third perſon; whereas it is manifeſt that nothing is more frequent than the change of perſons in the ſacred writings, not to mention that it beſt ſuited St. John's modeſty, when ſpeaking of himſelf, to make uſe of the third perſon. See the note there. If it be aſked whence it appears that this was added by the whole conſiſtory of Aſiatic biſhops? we have no better reaſon aſſigned, than that, ver, 24. the firſt perſon plural we is made uſe of, when it is evident that this uſe of the plural is reſtrained by the ſingular in the ſucceeding verſe; and what is ſtill more, it is evident that the writer makes uſe of the very ſame expreſſion, Epiſt. iii. 12. which is univerſally owned to have been written by himſelf. It is indeed true, that Tertullian terms the end of the twentieth chapter the end of the Goſpel, and this might have been literally true, if we grant what has been obſerved in the note on ch. viii. 10, 11. that John originally finiſhed this Goſpel with the former chapter; but at a different time, or ſome time after, added this chapter. He might have been in the ſame circumſtances with St. Paul, who in all probability intended to have cloſed his Epiſtle to the Romans at the end of ch. xiv. having ſubjoined thoſe three verſes by way of concluſion, which now appear at the end of ch. xvi. Some other things however having occurred to him, which he thought neceſſary to be mentioned, he reſumed his pen, and added the reſt of the Epiſtle, as it now ſtands. The ſame might have happened to St. John; after he had cloſed his Goſpel, ſeveral incidents relating to Chriſt, omitted by the other Evangeliſts, the death of Peter, and the refutation of a falſe opinion concerning himſelf, that he ſhould never die, might have occurred, and ſeem of ſo important a nature as to require him to make this addition, which renders his Goſpel rather more complete, and at his ſecond ſitting down to write, might have appeared both more neceſſary to be added, and more proper to be recorded. St. Peter's death might have happened after the firſt copy of his Goſpel had gone abroad, and the opinion that John himſelf ſhould never die, which was founded upon our Saviour's prophecy concerning Peter's death, might have received its birth, and made a very great progreſs in that interval; and both of theſe circumſtances were worthy of notice, eſpecially as the prophetic character of Jeſus would have been liable to be called in queſtion, from a miſtaken or wrong idea of either.

The authenticity of this chapter being thus ſettled, we obſerve, that as all the males among the Jews were, by the law of Moſes, to repair thrice every year to Jeruſalem, on the paſſover or feaſt of unleavened bread, the pentecoſt, and the feaſt of tabernacles; ſo the Apoſtles and diſciples, who had come up to Jeruſalem from Galilee, not merely to attend upon their Maſter, but in obedience to the law, continued, as they were obliged to do, at Jeruſalem, till the end of the feſtival. There Jeſus appeared to them a ſecond time, eight days after his appearance, St. Thomas being with them, ch. xx. 26. The next appearance was at the ſea of Tiberias, called alſo the ſea of Galilee; and this is expreſly ſaid, ver. 14. to be the third time that Jeſus ſhewed himſelf; from whence it is evident that the appearance on a mountain in Galilee, mentioned by Matthew, xxviii. 16, &c. was ſubſequent to this ſpoken of by John; and was alſo in a different place, on a mountain, whereas the latter was by the ſea of Tiberias. Three reaſons may be aſſigned for our Saviour's meeting his diſciples in Galilee. Galilee was the country in which he had reſided above thirty years, where he firſt began to preach the kingdom of God, and to declare and evidence his miſſion by miracles; ſo that he muſt neceſſarily be more known, and have had more followers in that country, than in any other region of Judea. And therefore one reaſon for his ſhewing himſelf in Galilee after he was riſen from the dead, ſeems to have been, that where he was perſonally known to ſo many people, he might have the greater number of competent witneſſes to his reſurrection. Secondly, Galilee was alſo the native country of the greateſt part, if not all, of his Apoſtles, &c. There they ſupported themſelves and their families, ſome of them at leaſt, by mean and laborious occupations: ſo ſtrait and ſo neceſſitous a condition of life muſt have rendered a long abſence from thence highly inconvenient at the time of barley harveſt, which always fell about the time of the paſſover. As ſoon as the paſchal ſolemnity was over, which detained them at Jeruſalem a whole week, it is natural to ſuppoſe they would return into Galilee. Upon which ſuppoſition our Saviour promiſed he would go before them into Galilee; which remarkable expreſſion was again made uſe of by the angel, Matth. xxviii. 7. and by Jeſus himſelf, ver. 10. The command in the latter paſſage ought to be taken as a confirmation of his promiſe of meeting them in Galilee, Matth. xvi. 7. and a ſtrong encouragement to them to depend on the performance of it. To prepare them therefore by degrees for that affliction and mortification which would attend their preaching the Goſpel, and to give them an opportunity of ſeeing and providing for their families, to whom they were ſoon to bid adieu for ever; their gracious Lord not only permitted them to return into Galilee, but promiſed to meet them there, and did in fact meet them there, not only once, but ſeveral times; ſince the reaſons that required the Apoſtles return thither, were as ſtrong for their continuing there, till the approach of the feaſt of weeks, or pentecoſt, ſhould call them them thence. Another reaſon for meeting his diſciples in Galilee may be deduced from what Luke tells us of the ſubjects which our Lord dwelt upon on theſe occaſions, viz. "the things pertaining to the kingdom of God." It was neceſſary they ſhould be fully inſtructed in the doctrines they were to preach; have ſome view of the hopes and encouragements to ſupport them under the proſpect of thoſe dangers they were to expect; have many inveterate prejudices rooted out, and be fortified with courage and conſtancy, a diſregard and contempt of hardſhips, perils, pains, and death. To theſe purpoſes nothing could more conduce than frequent viſits from their Lord; and it will evidently appear, that no place could be more proper for theſe meetings than Galilee, if we conſider that the Apoſtles, having their habitations in that country, might reſide there without ſuſpicion, and aſſemble without any fear of the perſecutors of their Maſter; for Galilee was under the juriſdiction of Herod. Whereas, had they remained at Jeruſalem, and continued frequently to aſſemble together, the chief prieſts and elders, whoſe hatred or apprehenſions of Jeſus were not extinguiſhed by his death, would undoubtedly have given ſuch interpretations to thoſe meetings, and thrown ſuch obſtacles in the way, as muſt have neceſſitated our Lord to interpoſe his miraculous power to prevent or remove them. Now as all theſe inconveniences might be avoided by our Saviour's meeting his diſciples in Galilee, it is more agreeable to the wiſdom of God, to ſuppoſe theſe frequent meetings to have been in Galilee, and more analogous to the proceedings of our Lord himſelf, who, being in danger from the Scribes and Phariſees, would not walk in Jewry, ch. vii. 1. See Mill, Wetſtein, Worthington's Sermon on John viii. &c. and the notes on ver. 14. and 24.

Ver. 2. Nathanael of Cana] There ſeems to be no doubt that this Nathanael is the perſon mentioned ch. i. 45. It is uncertain who the other two diſciples were: Dr. Lightfoot conjectures that they were Andrew and Philip; which is not improbable, as they were both inhabitants of Bethſaida, near the ſea of Tiberias. See ch. i. 44. and Lightfoot.

Ver. 3, 4. Simon Peter ſaith—I go a fiſhing] I am going a fiſhing. Heylin. Our Lord having firſt by the angels, and then in perſon, ordered his diſciples to go home to Galilee, with a promiſe that they ſhould ſee him there, it is reaſonable to think that they would depart as ſoon as poſſible; (ſee the ſecond reaſon aſſigned in the note on ver. 1.) wherefore, when they were come to their reſpective homes, they followed their occupations as uſual, and particularly the apoſtles, who purſued their old trade of fiſhing on the lake. Here, as they were plying their nets one morning early, Jeſus ſhewed himſelf to them.

4 But when the morning was now come, Jeſus ſtood on the ſhore: but the diſciples knew not that it was Jeſus.

5 Then Jeſus ſaith unto them, Children, have you any meat? They anſwered him, No.

6 And he ſaid unto them, Caſt the net on the right ſide of the ſhip, and ye ſhall find. They caſt therefore, and now they were not able to draw it for the multitude of fiſhes.

7 Therefore that diſciple whom Jeſus loved ſaith unto Peter, It is the Lord. Now when Simon Peter heard that it was the Lord, he girt his fiſher's coat unto him, (for he was naked,) and did caſt himſelf into the ſea.

8 And the other diſciples came in a little ſhip; (for they were not far from land, but as it were two hundred cubits,) dragging the net with fiſhes.

9 As ſoon then as they were come to land, they ſaw a fire of coals there, and fiſh laid thereon, and bread.

10 Jeſus ſaith unto them, Bring of the fiſh which ye have now caught.

11 Simon Peter went up, and drew the net to land full of great fiſhes, an hundred and fifty and three: And for all there were ſo many, yet was not the net broken.

12 Jeſus ſaith unto them, Come and dine. And none of the diſciples durſt aſk him, Who art thou? knowing that it was the Lord.

13 Jeſus then cometh, and taketh bread, and giveth them, and fiſh likewiſe.

14 This is now the third time that Jeſus ſhewed himſelf to his diſciples, after that he was riſen from the dead.

15 So when they had dined, Jeſus ſaith to Simon Peter, Simon ſon of Jonas, loveſt thou me more than theſe? He ſaith unto him, Yea, Lord; thou knoweſt that I love thee. He ſaith unto him, Feed my lambs.

16 He ſaith to him again the ſecond time, Simon ſon of Jonas, loveſt thou me? He ſaith unto him, Yea, Lord; thou knoweſt

Ver. 4. Ch. xx. 14.—V. 5. Luke xxiv. 41. Or, Sirs.—V. 6. Luke v. 4, 6, 7.—V. 7. Ch. xiii. 23. xx. 2.—V. 12. Acts x. 41. V. 14. See ch. xx. 19, 26.

Ver. 6. Caſt thy net on the right ſide of the ſhip] The diſciples, not knowing Jeſus, but imagining that he might be a perſon acquainted with the places proper for fiſhing, did as he directed, and caught a multitude of fiſhes. This was not merely a demonſtration of the power of our Lord, but a kind providential ſupply for his diſciples and their families, which might be of ſervice to them when they waited afterwards in Jeruſalem, according to his order. See Luke xxiv. 49. And it was likewiſe a ſort of emblematical repreſentation of the great ſucceſs which ſhould attend their endeavours, to catch men in the net of the Goſpel. See Luke v. 9, 10. and the Reflections on that chapter.

Ver. 7. For he was naked] That is, had only his under garment on. See the note on 1 Sam. xix. 24. Dr. Heylin reads, He put on his upper coat, for he was ſtripped.

Ver. 8. Two hundred cubits] About one hundred yards.

Ver. 9—12. As ſoon as they were come to land] When the diſciples came aſhore, they found a fire burning, which Jeſus had miraculouſly prepared, and fiſh laid thereon, and bread. But neither being ſufficient for the company, or perhaps to ſhew them the reality of the miracle, by making them attend to the number and ſize of the fiſhes they had caught, and to the net's not being broken, Jeſus ordered them to bring ſome of their own; then invited them to dine; that is, to eat with him; for the Greek word ἀριστήσατε ſignifies ſometimes "to take meat in the morning," which is the meaning of it here. It will not be judged, I hope, too minute to obſerve, after ſome writers of the firſt credit, that it appears from the beſt natural hiſtorians, that 153 (ver. 11.) is the exact number of the different ſpecies of fiſhes; and it is inferred from this paſſage, that perſons of all nations and conditions ſhould enter into the church. See Jortin's Remarks, Grotius, Calmet, and Keuchenius.

Ver. 13. Jeſus then cometh and taketh bread] It is not ſaid that Jeſus now ate with them; but his invitation to them, ver. 12. implies it; beſides, St. Peter teſtifies, Acts x. 41. that his apoſtles did eat and drink with him after he aroſe from the dead; meaning to tell Cornelius, that that was one of the many infallible proofs, by which he ſhewed himſelf alive after his paſſion. It is reaſonable, therefore, to think that he did eat with his apoſtles on this occaſion: Thus proving anew to his diſciples the reality of his reſurrection, as well as by working a miracle like that which at the beginning of his miniſtry had made ſuch an impreſſion upon them, as diſpoſed them to be his conſtant followers.

Ver. 14. This is now the third time] The Evangeliſt does not ſay that this was the third time that Jeſus appeared, but the third time that he appeared to his diſciples; that is, to his apoſtles in a body; for in reality it was his ſeventh appearance. Beſides, St. John himſelf has taken notice of three appearances before this. Grotius explains it of the third day of his appearance; for he had firſt appeared to ſeveral on the day of his reſurrection, then on a ſecond day; after eight days, he came to his diſciples, when Thomas was preſent; and now again, for the third day, he ſhewed himſelf at the ſea of Tiberias.

Ver. 15. Loveſt thou me more than theſe] The original words, πλεῖον τούτων, are ambiguous, and may either ſignify, "Doſt thou love me more than any of thy brethren, as thou didſt once profeſs?" (See Matth. xxvi. 33.) Or, "Doſt thou love me more than thou loveſt theſe nets, and other inſtruments of thy trade, ſo as to prefer my ſervice to any worldly advantages?" Whitby explains them in this latter ſenſe, and argues for it from this conſideration, that otherwiſe Peter could not have appealed to Chriſt that he did thus love him, ſince it was impoſſible for him to judge exactly of the proportion between his own love to Chriſt, and that of his brethren. But that learned commentator did not obſerve how modeſtly the reply is adjuſted on that head. Peter only anſwers, Yea, Lord, or, aſſuredly, Lord, thou knoweſt that I love thee; but does not add, more than theſe: And this beautiful circumſtance in the anſwer ſhews, how much he was humbled and improved by the remembrance of his fall; and poſſibly our Lord's queſtion might be intended to remind him of that fall, and of the cauſe of it. Upon Peter's reply, Jeſus ſaid to him, Feed my lambs. "As I ſhall favour thee ſo far, as to commit my church in part to thy apoſtolic care, remember, that the moſt acceptable way of expreſſing thy love to me, will be by taking care even of the feebleſt of my flock." Some have obſerved that ἀρνία being the diminutive of ἀρνά, ſignifies the leaſt of my lambs; and if we interpret this as an intimation of the care which Peter, as a miniſter of Chriſt, was to take of little children, it ſeems perfectly congruous to the wiſdom and tenderneſs of the great Shepherd of the ſheep, to give ſo particular an injunction concerning it. Bellarmine's diſtinction between lamb and ſheep, as ſignifying the laity and clergy, is very trifling; nor can any example of the like diſtinction be produced. It is much more natural to ſuppoſe, in general, that lambs here, as in Iſai. xl. 11. and many other places, may ſignify, "the weakeſt of the flock;" which, by the way, it is by no means to be taken for granted that the laity always are. So that, on the whole, the argument drawn from hence, for the Pope's ſupremacy, ſeems almoſt as contemptible as that which ſome writers of that communion have drawn from theſe words, to prove that hereticks, though princes, are to be put to death, by authority derived from St. Peter; becauſe feeding the flock, implies a power of killing wolves. See Whitby, Boyle's Philoſophical Comment. vol. i. p. 82. and Doddridge's ten Sermons on the power and grace of Chriſt, ſerm. vii. p. 176.

Ver. 16, 17. He ſaith to him again] From our Lord's aſking Peter if he loved him, before he gave him commiſſion to feed his lambs and his ſheep, it is juſtly inferred, that to render men duly qualified for the miniſterial function, they muſt prefer the intereſt and honour of Chriſt to every other conſideration. This is the great qualification by which alone a miniſter can be animated to go through the labours and difficulties of his office, and be fortified againſt the dangers which may attend it. Moreover, Chriſt's exhortation to Peter, to feed his lambs and ſheep, being the reply which he made to Peter's declaration, that he loved him, ſhews us that miniſters beſt teſtify their love to Chriſt, by their ſingular care and diligence in feeding his flock. Our Lord's threefold repetition of his commiſſion to Peter, moſt probably was in alluſion to Peter's three denials; and as it contains an oblique intimation that his repentance ſhould bear ſome proportion to his crime, ſo it ſeems to have been intended by our Lord, to convince the reſt of the diſciples of the ſincerity of Peter's converſion, and to prevent any ſlight which he might be expoſed to from their ſuſpecting the contrary. However, we are told that I love thee. He ſaith unto him, Feed my ſheep.

17 He ſaith unto him the third time, Simon ſon of Jonas, loveſt thou me? Peter was grieved, becauſe he ſaid unto him the third time, Loveſt thou me? And he ſaid unto him, Lord, thou knoweſt all things; thou knoweſt that I love thee. Jeſus ſaith unto him, Feed my ſheep.

18 Verily, verily, I ſay unto thee, When thou waſt young, thou girdeſt thyſelf, and walkedſt whither thou wouldeſt: but when thou ſhalt be old, thou ſhalt ſtretch forth thy hands, and another ſhall gird thee, and carry thee whither thou wouldeſt not.

19 This ſpake he, ſignifying by what death he ſhould glorify God. And when he had ſpoken this, he ſaith unto him, Follow me.

20 Then Peter turning about, ſeeth the diſciple whom Jeſus loved, following; (which alſo leaned on his breaſt at ſupper, and ſaid, Lord, which is he that betrayeth thee?)

21 Peter ſeeing him, ſaith to Jeſus, Lord, and what ſhall this man do?

22 Jeſus ſaith unto him, If I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee? Follow thou me.

23 Then went this ſaying abroad among the brethren, that that diſciple ſhould not die: yet Jeſus ſaid not unto him, He ſhall not die: but, If I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee?

24 This is the diſciple which teſtifieth of theſe things, and wrote theſe things: and we know that his teſtimony is true.

25 And there are alſo many other things that Peter was grieved at this repeated application to him: For it ſeemed to him an intimation that Chriſt doubted the ſincerity of his repentance; and to a perſon of his ſanguine temper, nothing could have afforded a more ſenſible anguiſh than ſuch a ſuggeſtion. It recalled his crime, with all its aggravated circumſtances, into his mind; it renewed his grief for having offended, and it increaſed that grief from a conſideration, that he had given ſufficient grounds for ſuſpecting his fidelity, even after his converſion. One would wonder that from circumſtances ſo evidently humiliating to the mind of Peter, the Papiſts could have inferred a grant of his ſupreme dominion over the church, clergy as well as laity. The paſſage has doubtleſs, as we have ſhewn, a quite different meaning; for Peter, by his late cowardice and perfidy, having, as it were, abdicated the apoſtleſhip, was hereby no more than formally reſtored to his office, through the indulgence of his kind and merciful Maſter, and not raiſed to any new dignity above his brethren. See Macknight, Tillotſon's works, vol. 3. and the former note.

Ver. 17. Ch. xvi. 30.—V. 18. Ch. xiii. 36. Acts xii. 3, 4.—V. 19. 2 Pet. 1.—14.—V. 20. Ch. xiii. 23, 25. xx. 2.—V. 24. Ch. xix. 35. 3 John 12.—V. 25. Ch. xx. 30.

Ver. 18, 19. When thou waſt young, &c.] Peter being thus reſtored to his apoſtolic office and dignity, Jeſus proceeded to forewarn him of the perſecutions, to which he in particular would be expoſed in the execution of his office, intending thereby to inſpire him with courage and conſtancy; but we do not read a word of that ſpiritual dignity and authority which his pretended ſucceſſors have arrogated. When thou waſt young, thou girdedſt thyſelf, &c. alluding to the ſtrength and activity which he had now ſhewn in ſwimming to ſhore after he had girded his fiſher's coat upon him: But when thou ſhalt be old, &c. "Inſtead of that liberty which in youth thou enjoyedſt, thou ſhalt in thine old age be a priſoner; for thou ſhalt be bound aud carried whither thou wouldeſt not naturally incline to go, even to thoſe ſufferings to which fleſh and blood have the ſtrongeſt averſion. Some have thought, that the words thou ſhalt ſtretch forth thy hands, &c. allude to the manner of his death on the croſs, and which indeed ſeems probable from the next words, which the hiſtorian delivers as explanatory of thoſe of our Lord, This ſpake he, ſignifying by what death he ſhould glorify God. The next words, however, of our Lord muſt plainly be underſtood to ſignify, that Peter was to follow him in the kind of his death. "Follow me, and ſhew that thou art willing to conform to my example, and to follow me even to the death of the croſs." Agreeably hereto, the unanimous voice of antiquity aſſures us, that Peter was crucified, and, as ſome ſay, about forty years after this; but the exact time is not known. See Tertul. præſcript. c. 36. Euſeb. Hiſt. ii. 25. Lactant. de Morte Perſecut. Prudentius de paſſ. Pet. & Pauli.

Ver. 20. Then Peter, turning about] "There is a ſpirit and tenderneſs in this plain paſſage, which I can never read, ſays Dr. Doddridge, without the moſt ſenſible emotion. Chriſt orders Peter to follow him, in token of his readineſs to be crucified in his cauſe. John ſtays not for the call; he riſes and follows too; but he ſays not one word of his love and his zeal; he choſe that the action ſhould ſpeak that; and when he records this circumſtance, he tells us not what that action meant, but with great ſinplicity relates the fact only. If here and there a generous heart, glowing, like his own, with love to Chriſt, ſees and emulates it, be it ſo; but he is not ſolicitous that men ſhould admire it. It was addreſſed to his Maſter, and it was enough that he underſtood it; and can any man be baſe or abſurd enough to imagine, that ſuch a man could ſpend his life in promoting a notorious faſhood, and at laſt, in his old age, when his reliſh for every thing but goodneſs and immortality was gone, would ſo ſolemnly atteſt it as he does in the concluſion of his Goſpel?—May God deliver every one that reads this from a head ſo fatally beclouded by the corruptions of the heart!"

Ver. 21. And what ſhall this man do?] And what ſhall become of him? Wat.

Ver. 22, 23. If I will that he tarry, &c.] "If it is my pleaſure that he ſhould live till my coming, [in judgement upon Jeruſalem] what is that to thee?"—So μένειν ſignifies, being elliptical for μένειν ἐν τῃ σαρκι, to abide in the fleſh. We have both the elliptical and complete phraſe, Philip. i. 24, 25. The brethren, it ſeems, underſtood, by Chriſt's coming, his coming to future judgement; and upon this foundation they founded their notion that John ſhould not die; and that there was ſuch a notion and tradition amongſt the ancients, learned writers have particularly ſhewn; and, amongſt the reſt, Fabricius, in his Codex Apocal. Nov. Teſt. vol. ii. p. 533. This prophetic ſuggeſtion of the longevity of John was verified by the event; for he lived till Trajan's time, or thereabouts, which was near one hundred years after Chriſt's birth, and thirty years after the deſtruction of Jeruſalem; ſo that he did abide in the fleſh till his Lord came to take ſignal vengeance on that devoted city. Our Lord's reply to Peter ſeems very ſtrongly to diſcourage a curioſity of enquiring into other mens affairs, and into doctrines which are of no importance in religion. But ſee more on this ſubject in Seed's Sermons, vol. iii. and Stanhope's volume of Occaſional Sermons, Jackſon, Hammond, and Calmet.

Ver. 24. This is the diſciple which teſtifieth, &c.] From this verſe, particularly the words we know, &c. Grotius and others infer, that the Epheſian biſhops added this whole chapter to St. John's Goſpel after his death; but it evidently proves the contrary: for the verſe aſſures us, that John wrote the things contained in this chapter: This is the diſciple who teſtifieth of theſe things, and wrote theſe things. Further, though the Evangeliſt ſeems to conclude his Goſpel, ch. xx. 31. it is no unuſual thing with the ſacred writers to add new matter after ſuch concluſions. See the Epiſtles to the Romans and Hebrews, at the end. Moreover, though the writer of this Goſpel is here ſpoken of in the third perſon, it is agreeable to St. John's manner, (ſee ch. xix. 35.) who likewiſe ſpeaks of himſelf, 1 Eph. v. 18. in the plural number. To conclude, the verſe under conſideration is proved to be genuine by a ſimilar paſſage in the concluſion of the third Epiſtle, ver. 12. Yea, and we alſo bear record, and ye know that our record is true. See Macknight, Wetſtein, and the note on the firſt verſe.

Ver. 25. I ſuppoſe that even the world, &c.] According to moſt commentators, this is an hyperbole; a figure in which the Aſiatics are known to have dealt greatly, and which they carried far higher than is allowable in the European language; and the word I ſuppoſe naturally leads to this expoſition: Thus underſtood, the clauſe means, that Jeſus performed a prodigious number of miracles. Dr. Doddridge underſtands the paſſage differently, as if the Evangeliſt had ſaid, "I am perſuaded, Οἶμαι,—that if all the things which Jeſus did were written, the work would amount to ſo vaſt a bulk, that the world itſelf would not be able to receive the books that ſhould be written; but the very ſize of the volumes would neceſſarily prevent the generality of mankind from procuring or reading them." Elſner explains the paſſage as if the Evangeliſt had ſaid, "If they were all to be particularly written, the unbelieving world would not admit or receive them, ſo as to be moved by them to faith and obedience;" and he produces inſtances, in which χωρεῖν has ſuch a ſignification. But as St. John knew that the unbelieving world would reject even what he had written, this could be no reaſon for his writing no more. And further we may obſerve, that the phraſe the world itſelf cannot mean the men of the world, and for that reaſon the firſt ſenſe ſeems preferable. Perhaps it may be a moſt delightful part of the entertainment of the heavenly world, to learn from our which Jeſus did, the which, if they ſhould be written every one, I ſuppoſe that even the world itſelf could not contain the books that ſhould be written. Amen.

Ver. 25. Amos vii. 10.

our bleſſed Lord himſelf, or from thoſe who converſed with him upon earth, a multitude of ſuch particulars of his life, as will be well worthy our everlaſting admiration. In the mean time, the pious and attentive ſtudy of what is recorded by the Evangeliſts may moſt happily prepare us for ſuch diſcoveries, and add an unutterable reliſh to them: For they were written that we might believe that Jeſus was the Chriſt, and that believing, we may have life through his name. Amen! bleſſed Lord. So may it be to the humble compiler of this commentary, and thoſe who do or may at any time peruſe it, when his poor efforts are no more!

REFLECTIONS ON OUR LORD'S RESURRECTION, &c.

Ch. xix. 38.—Ch. xx. 29.

Grace doth not always make a ſhew where it is. There is much ſecret riches, both in the earth and ſea, which eye never ſaw. We never heard any news till now of Joſeph of Arimathea; yet was he eminently rich, and wiſe, and good; a worthy, though cloſe diſciple of our Saviour; (ch. xix. 38.) True faith may be wiſely reſerved, but will not be cowardly. Now he puts forth himſelf, and dares to begs the body of Jeſus.

Death is wont to quell all quarrels. Pilate's heart tells him he hath done too much already, in ſentencing an innocent to death: The requeſt is granted; the body is yielded, and taken down; and now, that which hung naked, is wrapped in fine linen; that which was ſoiled with ſweat and blood, is curiouſly waſhed and embalmed. Now even Nicodemus comes in for his ſhare: he fears not the envy of a good profeſſion, but boldly flies forth, and will now be as liberal in his orders, as he was before niggardly in his nightly confeſſion. ver. 38—40.

All this while the devout Maries retire, and ſilently ſpend their ſabbath in a mixture of grief and hope; but now they gladly agree, in the dawn of the Sunday morning, to viſit the ſacred ſepulchre; nor will they go empty-handed. She that had beſtowed that coſtly alabaſter-box of ointment upon her Saviour alive, hath prepared no leſs precious odors for him dead. ch. xx. 1.

Of all the women Mary Magdalene is firſt named: She is noted above her fellows. None of them were ſo much obliged,—none ſo zealouſly thankful. Seven devils were caſt out of her by the command of Chriſt. The heart thus powerfully diſpoſſeſſed, was now filled with gratitude to her great deliverer. Where there is a true ſenſe of favour, there cannot but be a fervent deſire of retribution. O bleſſed Lord! could we feel the danger of ſin, like her, and the malignity of thoſe ſpiritual poſſeſſions, from which thou haſt freed us, how ſhould we pour out our ſouls in thankfulneſs for thy bounty!

Every thing here had horror; the place both ſolitary and a ſepulchre. Nature abhors, as the viſage ſo the region of death and corruption:—the time, night; only the moon gave them ſome faint glimmering:—their buſineſs, the viſitation of a dead corpſe; and yet their zealous love hath eaſily overcome all theſe. They had followed him in his ſufferings, when the timid diſciples left him. They attended him to his croſs weeping; they followed him to his grave; nay, and even there they leave him not; but, ere it be day-light, they return to pay him the ſaid tribute of their duty.—How much ſtronger is love than death or fear?

How well it ſucceeds when we go faithfully and conſcientiouſly about our work, and leave the iſſue to God! Lo, God hath removed the cares of theſe holy women, together with the grave-ſtone. The obſtacle is removed; the ſeal broken; the watch fled. What a ſcorn doth the Almighty God make of the impotent deſigns of men! He ſends an angel from above;—the earth quakes beneath;—the ſtone rolls away;—the ſoldiers ſtand like carcaſes, and when they have got heart enough to run away, think themſelves valiant. The tomb is opened, Chriſt riſes, and they are confounded. O the vain project of ſilly mortals! as if, with ſuch a ſhovelful of mire, they could damn up the ſea, or keep the ſun from ſhining by holding up their hands. Indeed what creature is ſo baſe, that the Omnipotent cannot arm againſt us to our confuſion? Lice and frogs ſhall be too ſtrong for Pharaoh, and worms for Herod? There is no wiſdom nor counſel againſt the Lord.

But oh the marvellous pomp and magnificence of our Lord's reſurrection! (See Matth, xxviii. 1—4.) The earth quakes, the angel appears, that it may be plainly ſeen this divine perſon now riſing hath the command both of earth and heaven. Good cauſe had the earth to quake, when the God who made her powerfully calls for his own fleſh from the uſurpation of her bowels. Good cauſe had ſhe to open her graves, and eject her dead, in attendance to the Lord of life, whom ſhe had thus detained in that cell of darkneſs. What ſeeming impotence was here! but now what a demonſtration of omnipotence burſt forth in this glorious reſurrection! The rocks rend; the graves open; the dead riſe and appear; the ſoldiers flee and tremble: Saints and angels attend thy riſing, O Saviour! Thou liedſt down in weakneſs, thou riſeſt in power and glory: Thou liedſt down as a man, thou riſeſt like a God.

What a lively image haſt thou herein given me of the dreadful majeſty of that general reſurrection on thy ſacred appearance! Then not the earth only, but the powers of heaven alſo ſhall be ſhaken; not ſome few graves ſhall be open, and ſome ſaints appear, but all the bars of death ſhall be broken, and all that ſleep in the duſt ſhall awake, and ſtand up from the dead before thee. Not ſome one angel ſhall deſcend; but thou, the great angel of the covenant, attended with thouſand thouſands of thoſe mighty ſpirits. And if theſe ſtout ſoldiers were ſo filled with terror at the feeling of an earthquake, and the ſight of an angel,—where ſhall thine enemies appear, O Lord, in the day of thy terrible vengeance, when the earth ſhall reel and vaniſh, when the elements ſhall be on a flame around them, and the heavens ſhall be parched up as a ſcroll? In that awful, that inexorable day,

> Where, where for ſhelter ſhall the guilty fly;
> When conſternation turns the good man pale.

Thou didſt raiſe thyſelf, O bleſſed Jeſus! thy angels removed the ſtone. They, who could have no hand in thy reſurrection, ſhall yet have their part in removing outward impediments; not becauſe thou neededſt, but becauſe thou wouldeſt: Juſt ſo thyſef alone raiſed Lazarus; thou badeſt others to looſe him, and let him go. Works of omnipotency thou reſerveſt to thine own immediate performance, ordinary actions thou conſigneſt to means ſubordinate.

How great muſt have been the joy of angels on this ſtupendous event! But how tranſcendent their joy whom thou raiſedſt with thee from the dead! O death, where is now thy ſting? O grave, where is thy victory?

Lo, now, how weak ſoever I am in myſelf, yet in the confidence of this victorious reſurrection of my Saviour I am ſtrong, and dare boldly challenge every adverſe power. Do the worſt ye can againſt my ſoul, in deſpight of your malignity, it is, it muſt be ſafe. If God be for us, who can be againſt us?

Is it ſin that threatens?—Behold this my Redeemer's reſurrection publiſhes my diſcharge; My ſurety was arreſted, and caſt into the priſon of the grave; nor could he have come forth, had not the utmoſt farthing of my arrears been paid. He is come forth;—the ſum is fully ſatisfied;—what danger can there be of a debt infinitely diſcharged?

Is it the wrath of God?—and wherefore is that but for ſin? If my ſins be done away, that enmity is no more; and if my Saviour ſuffered its curſe for me, how can I fear to ſuffer it in myſelf? Infinite juſtice looks not for a double payment. Chriſt is riſen, therefore he hath ſatisfied, and I am ſet free. Who then is he that condemneth? It is Chriſt that died; yea, rather that is riſen again.

Is it death itſelf? Lo, my Saviour, who overcame death by dying, hath triumphed over him in his reſurrection. How can I fear a conquered enemy? What hurt can the ſerpent do, diſarmed of his poiſonous ſting? The ſting of death is ſin; that is plucked out by the powerful Redeemer of fallen man; it cannot therefore hurt me now; Nay, in all theſe things we are more than conquerors through him that loved us.

Gracious Lord, I bleſs thee for thy death; but I bleſs thee ſtill more for thy reſurrection. That was a work of wonderful humility, of infinite mercy; this was a work of infinite power: In that was human weekneſs; in this was divine omnipotence: In that thou didſt die for our ſins; in this thou didſt riſe again for our juſtification.

But how am I conformable to thee, O Saviour, if when thou art riſen, I am ſtill lying in the grave of my corruptions? How am I a member of thy body, if whilſt thou haſt that perfect dominion over death, death hath dominion over me?—If whilſt thou art alive and glorious, I lay rotting in the duſt of death?—I know the grand moving faculty is in the head. By the power of the reſurrection of thee, our Head, all we thy members cannot but be raiſed. As the earth could not with-hold my body from thee in the day of the ſecond reſurrection, ſo ſin cannot with-hold my ſoul from thee in the firſt.—How am I thine, if I be not riſen?—And if I be riſen with thee, why do I not ſeek the things above, where thou, O Chriſt, ſitteth at the right hand of God?—For where the treaſure is, there muſt the heart be alſo.

I marvel not at your ſpeed, bleſſed diſciples, if, upon the report of theſe good women, ye ran, yea, flew upon the wings of zeal, to ſee what was become of your Maſter. Your deſire was noble, was equal; but John is the younger, his limbs are more nimble, and breath more free. He looks firſt into the ſepulchre; but Peter more boldly goes down the firſt; (ver. 3—5.) Happy competition, where the only ſtrife is who ſhall be moſt zealous in the enquiry after Chriſt!

They ſaw enough to amaze their ſenſes, not enough however to ſettle their faith. O bleſſed Jeſus, how wilt thou pardon our errors, how ſhould we pardon and pity the errors of each other in leſſer occaſions, when as yet thy chief and deareſt diſciples, after ſo much divine inſtruction from thine own lips, knew not the Scriptures, that thou muſt riſe again from the dead. They went away more aſtoniſhed than confident; more full of wonder, than of belief. ver. 9, 10.

There is more ſtrength of zeal, where it takes in the weaker ſex; thoſe holy women, as they came firſt, ſo they ſtayed laſt. Eſpecially devout Mary Magdalene, ſtands ſtill by the cave weeping, ver. 11. Well might thoſe tears have been ſpared, if her knowledge had been anſwerable to her affection, or her faith to her fervour.

As our eye will ever be where our love is, ſhe ſtoops and looks down into that dear ſepulchre. The angels appear in glorious apparel; their ſplendor ſhewed them to be no mortal creatures; not to mention that Peter and John had but juſt come out of the ſepulchre, and both found and left it empty in her ſight. (ver. 11, 12.) Yet do we not find the good woman aught appalled with the unexpected glory. So deeply was her heart abſorbed with the thoughts of her Saviour, that ſhe ſeems inſenſible of every other object. The tears which ſhe did let drop into the ſepulchre, ſent up back to her the voice of the angels; Woman, why weepeſt thou? ver. 13. God and his angels note every devout tear.

The ſudden wonder has not dried her eye, nor charmed her tongue. She freely confeſſeth the cauſe of her grief to be the miſſing of her Saviour, and ſimply complains, They have taken away my Lord, and I know not where they have laid him. Alas, good Mary, of whom doſt thou complain? Who can have removed thy Lord but himſelf? Neither is he now laid any more; he ſtands by thee, whoſe removal thou now lamenteſt.—Thus many a tender and humble ſoul afflicts itſelf with the want of that Saviour, whom it hath and feeleth not.

Turn back thine eye, O religious ſoul, and ſee Jeſus ſtanding by thee, though thou knoweſt not that it is he, ver. 14. His habit was one he had then aſſumed.—And thus ſometimes it pleaſeth our Saviour to appear unto his diſciples unlike himſelf; and his holy diſguiſes are our trials. Sometimes he will ſeem a ſtranger, and ſometimes an enemy. Sometimes he offers himſelf to us in the ſhape of a poor man, and ſometimes of a diſtreſſed captive; (ſee Matth. xxv. 34, &c.) Happy he or ſhe who can diſcern the Saviour in all his forms. Mary now took him for the gardener, ver. 15. O bleſſed Lord! be thou to me ſuch as thou appearedſt to this holy woman: Break up the fallows of my nature; implant me with thy grace; prune me with meet corrections; bedew me with the former and latter rain of thy counſels;—Do what thou wilt with me, ſo thou but make me fruitful.

Joſeph could no longer contain himſelf in the houſe of Pharaoh from the notice of his brethren: And thus thy compaſſion, O Saviour, cauſes thee to break forth into clear diſcovery: The very ſound of her name bringeth Mary to herſelf, ver. 16. Thou ſpakeſt to her before, but in the tone of a ſtranger: now it is the compellation of a friend. Like a good ſhepherd thou calleſt thy ſheep by their name, and they know thy voice. What was thy call of her, but an evident pattern of our vocation? As her, ſo thou calleſt us; firſt familiarly, then effectually. General invitations and common mercies are for us as men: But where thou giveſt grace as to thine elect, thou comeſt cloſe to the ſoul, and winneſt it with dear and particular intimations.

No ſooner had Mary heard this familiar ſound, than ſhe turned herſelf, and ſaith unto him, Rabboni! which is to ſay, Maſter. Before her face was towards the angels, the call of her Saviour inſtantly averts all inferior regards;—Nor do we rightly apprehend the Son of God, if any creature in heaven or earth can with-hold our eyes or eſtrange our hearts from him. Let Mary be our example: The moment ſhe heard his voice, her whole attention is rivetted on her Lord. She ſalutes him with a Rabboni, in acknowledgement of his authority over her; ſhe falls down before him, in a deſire humbly to embrace thoſe ſacred feet, which ſhe now rejoices to behold, paſt the uſe of odours and unguents.

Jeſus, however, is pleaſed to wave the acceptance of her zealous intentions, (touch me not, &c. ver. 17.) poſſibly by way of gentle reproof, for a joy which too evidently betrayed worldly exultation. Even our well meant zeal, in ſeeking and enjoying the Saviour, may be faulty. May we, bleſſed Lord, be taught with Mary, from thy remonſtrance, if we have known thee heretofore after the fleſh, yet henceforth to know thee ſo no more. Should we ſo faſten our thoughts on the corporeal or terreſtrial circumſtances attending thee, as not to look higher, even to the ſpiritual part of thine atchievements,—the power and the iſſues of the reſurrection;—what could it profit our immortal ſouls?

But to whom then doſt thou ſend her?—Go, and tell my brethren. Bleſſed Jeſus, who are thoſe? Were not they thy followers,—rather, were not they thy forſakers?—Yet ſtill thou ſtileſt them thy brethren. O admirable humility! infinite mercy! abundant grace! How doſt thou raiſe their titles with thyſelf? At firſt they were thy ſervants; then diſciples: A little before thy death, thou vouchſafedſt to call them thy friends; now after thy reſurrection, thou dignifieſt them with the endearing appellation of brethren. O why do we ſtand ſo proudly upon the terms of our poor diſtinction and inequality, when the incarnate Son of the moſt high God, ſtoops ſo low as to call us his brethren;—his Father our Father; and his God our God.

With what joy muſt Mary have received this errand! With what joy muſt the diſciples have welcomed both it and the bearer! Here were good tidings indeed from a far country; even as far as the utmoſt regions of the ſhadow of death.

Whilſt their thoughts and converſation are employed on ſo grateful a ſubject, the Saviour makes his miraculous and ſudden appearance, bids their ſenſes be witneſs of his revival, and their happineſs, ſtands in the midſt of them, and ſaith, Peace be unto you, ver. 19. Inſtantly all the miſts of doubting are diſpelled; the ſun breaks forth clear. They were glad when they ſaw the Lord. His approved deity gave them confidence; his gracious preſence inſpired their hearts with joy.

But where wert thou, O Thomas, when the reſt of this ſacred family were met together? Alas! we cannot but be loſers by our abſence from holy aſſemblies; for God ſtandeth in the congregation of his ſaints. Now, for the time, thou miſſeſt that divine breath, which ſo powerfully inſpired the reſt; and art ſuffered to fall into that weak and raſh diſtruſt, which thy preſence there muſt have prevented? (ſee ver. 25.) Suſpicious man, who is the worſe for thy ſcepticiſm? Whoſe the loſs if thou wilt not believe? Is there no certainty but in thine own ſenſes? Is any thing beyond the ſphere of divine omnipotence? Go then, O ſimple and unwiſe, and pleaſe thyſelf in thy bold incredulity, whilſt thy fellows are happy in believing!

For a whole week Thomas reſts in this ſullen infidelity: Notwithſtanding the conduct and the teſtimony of others; notwithſtanding the report of the two travellers to Emmaus, whoſe hearts burning within them, had ſet their tongues on fire to relate the happy occurrence of their walk,—ſtill he ſtruggles with his own diſtruſt; ſtill he combats that truth, whereof he cannot deny himſelf unanſwerably convinced.

O condeſcending Lord, how ſhall we enough admire thy tenderneſs and forbearance! Juſtly mighteſt thou have left this man to his own pertinacious heart, and of whom could he have complained, had he periſhed in his unbelief; but thou art the good ſhepherd of Iſrael, and willeſt not the death of a ſinner. This ſtraggler ſhall be reduced once more to his fellows; he ſhall once more ſee thee to his ſhame, and to his joy; he ſhall hear thy voice, and taſte thy love, and ſhall thus be rendered no more faithleſs, but believing. ver. 26, 27.

Behold the mercy no leſs than the power of the Son of God hath melted the ſtony heart of this unbelieving diſciple: Then Thomas anſwered and ſaid unto him, My Lord, and my God. I do not hear that, when it came to the iſſue, Thomas fulfilled his reſolution, and employed his hands in trial of the fact. His eyes are now a ſufficient aſſurance; the ſenſe of his Maſter's Omniſcience ſuperſedes all other heſitation; he cannot but believe. How happy an effect of that doubt, which brought forth ſo glorious a confeſſion, my Lord, and my God!

It was well for us; it was well for thee, Thomas, that thou didſt thus diſbelieve, elſe neither had the world received ſo perfect an evidence of that reſurrection whereon all our ſalvation dependeth; nor hadſt thou yielded ſo divine an aſſent to the bleſſed Redeemer. Now if they be bleſſed, who have not ſeen, and yet have believed, bleſſed art thou alſo, who having ſeen, haſt thus believed; and bleſſed be thou, O God, who knoweſt how to make glorious advantage of the infirmities of thy choſen, for the promotion of their ſalvation, the confirmation of thy church, and the glory of thy name! Amen.

THE ACTS OF THE APOSTLES.

CHAP. I.

Chriſt preparing his apoſtles to the beholding of his aſcenſion, gathereth them together into the mount Olivet, commandeth them to expect in Jeruſalem the ſending down of the Holy Ghoſt, promiſeth after few days to ſend it: by virtue whereof they ſhould be witneſſes unto him, even to the utmoſt parts of the earth. After his aſcenſion they are warned by two angels to depart, and to ſet their minds upon his ſecond coming: they accordingly return, and giving themſelves to prayer, chooſe Matthias apoſtle in the place of Judas.

THE former treatiſe have I made, O Theophilus, of all that Jeſus began both to do and teach,

2 Until the day in which he was taken up, after that he, through the Holy Ghoſt, had given commandments unto the apoſtles whom he had choſen:

3 To whom alſo he ſhewed himſelf alive after his paſſion, by many infallible proofs, Ver. 1. Luke i. 3.—V. 2. Mark xvi. 19. Luke ix. 51. 1 Tim. iii. 16. Matth. xxviii. 19. Mark xvi. 15. John xx. 21.—V. 3. Mark xvi. 14. John xx. 19. xxi. 1. 1 Cor. xv. 5.

The ACTS.] This forms a central, or intermediate book, to connect the Goſpels and the Epiſtles. It is an uſeful poſtſcript to the former, and a proper introduction to the latter. This divine hiſtory is evidently a ſecond part, or continuation of St. Luke's Goſpel, as appears from the very beginning of it; and that both were written by the ſame Evangeliſt, is atteſted by the moſt ancient Chriſtian writers. The ſubſcriptions at the end of ſome Greek MSS. and of the copies of the Syriac verſion, teſtify that St. Luke wrote the Acts at Alexandria in Egypt. As the narrative reaches down to the year of Chriſt 63, the Acts cannot have been written earlier than that year; and that they were not written much later, may be inferred from the ſubject being continued no farther, which otherwiſe it would probably have been; at leaſt St. Luke would have been apt to have given the iſſue of St. Paul's impriſonment at Rome, as what the Chriſtian reader would have been curious to have known. Conſidered as a mere human witneſs, St. Luke was better able than others to draw up an authentic hiſtory of the Apoſtles, as he had accompanied St. Paul in ſo many of his journeys. As he was a phyſician by profeſſion, he was able to form a ſound judgement of the miracles St. Paul wrought upon the diſeaſed; and to make a credible report of them. But he ſeems not to have had the gift of healing himſelf; for in ch. xxviii. 8, 9. St. Paul, and not he, healed the ſick. His accounts are generally ſo full and circumſtantial, that the reader is perfectly enabled to examine the facts himſelf, and to judge whether they were attended with any deception or not. St. Luke appears not to have intended to write a complete eccleſiaſtical hiſtory of the whole Chriſtian church, during the firſt thirty years after Chriſt's aſcenſion: For he almoſt wholly omits what paſſed among the Jews after the converſion of St. Paul; though the labours and ſufferings of the other Apoſtles could not but have afforded intereſting materials. If we examine the contents of this book, we may obſerve two ends purſued in it: 1. To give an authentic relation of the effuſion of the Holy Ghoſt, and the firſt miracles by which the Chriſtian religion was eſtabliſhed. An authentick account of this was indiſpenſably neceſſary, ſince Chriſt had ſo often promiſed the Holy Ghoſt to his diſciples; and if a heathen were to receive the Goſpel, he would naturally enquire how it had been firſt promulged at Jeruſalem. 2. To impart thoſe accounts which evince the claim of the Gentiles to the church of God: A point particularly conteſted by the Jews about the time of St. Luke's writing the Acts. St. Paul was at that very time a priſoner at Rome, upon the accuſation of the Jews, who became his enemies for having admitted the Gentiles into the church. Hence it is that St. Luke relates the converſion of the Samaritans, ch. viii. and the hiſtory of Cornelius, ch. x. 11. whom even St. Peter (to whom St. Paul's opponents appealed, Gal. ii. 6—21.) had inſtructed in the Goſpel by divine command, though he was not of the circumciſion. For the ſame reaſon he relates, ch. xv. what was decreed by the firſt council at Jeruſalem concerning the Levitical law; and treats moſt fully of the converſion of St. Paul, and of his miſſion and tranſactions among the Gentiles.

The Acts of the Apoſtles may very properly be divided into ſeven parts; viz. I. The account of the firſt pentecoſt after Chriſt's death, and of the events preceding it, contained in ch. i. 2. II. The Acts of Jeruſalem, and throughout Judea and Samaria, among the Chriſtians of the circumciſion, ch. iii. 9, 12. III. The acts in Cæſarea, and the receiving of the Gentiles, ch. xxi. IV. The firſt circuit of of St. Barnabas and St. Paul among the Gentiles, ch. xiii. 14. V. The embaſſy to Rome, and the firſt council at Jeruſalem, wherein the Jews and Gentiles were admitted to an equality, ch. xv. VI. The ſecond circuit of St. Paul, ch. xvi. xix. VII. St. Paul's third journey to Rome, ch. xix. xxi.—ch. xxviii. See Michaelis, Bengelius, and Calmet. But the reader deſirous of ſeeing the authenticity of this book inconteſtably proved, will find all the ſatisfaction he deſires in the firſt part of Dr. Benſon's appendix to his hiſtory of the Plantation of Chriſtianity, and in Mr. Biſcoe's Boyle's Lectures, ch. xiv. xv.

Chap. I. Ver. 1. The former treatiſe] This former treatiſe, undoubtedly, means the Goſpel, which was written by St. Luke, and dedicated by him to Theophilus. See the note on Luke i. 3. All, in this verſe, cannot mean every one of the miracles and ſermons which Jeſus wrought and preached. See John xx. 30, 31. xxi. 25. By all therefore, we muſt underſtand only all that was neceſſary to be recorded, to eſtabliſh the divine miſſion of Chriſt, and to convince mankind. All that Jeſus began to do and teach, is an Hebraiſm, frequently uſed by the ſacred writers, and particularly St. Luke; and ſignifies only, "all that he did and taught." The phraſe, however, may refer here to the account which he had given of Chriſt's miniſtry, from the beginning and firſt riſe of it, (as he ſpeaks ch. i. 2, 3.) to the aſcenſion, with which he concludes his Goſpel. It is more material to obſerve here, the order in which Chriſt proceeded. It is dangerous to pervert that order, and undertake to teach what we have not practiſed. See Heylin.

Ver. 2. Through the Holy Ghoſt, had given, &c.] By the influence and aſſiſtance of the Holy Spirit, with which he himſelf was abundantly anointed. It is no wonder, conſidering how ſhort a hiſtory we have of what paſſed between Chriſt's reſurrection and aſcenſion, that this ſhould be the only place which ſpeaks of his acting by the Spirit after he aroſe from the dead. His breathing on the Apoſtles, and ſaying, Receive the Holy Spirit, John xx. 22. ſeems to confirm the interpretation we have given. He gave his laſt commands by the Holy Spirit, ſays Wetſtein, as a prophet foreknowing what was to happen; namely, that they ſhould continue at Jeruſalem, and wait for the effuſion of the Holy Ghoſt; and not like other men, who, being about to die, make their laſt wills, intirely ignorant of what is to happen. In the third verſe St. Luke expreſſes, in general terms, what Chriſt ſaid to his Apoſtles during thoſe forty days. But in the 2d, 4th, and following verſes, he declares what Chriſt ſaid on the day of his aſcenſion. He had brought his former account down to that day; and from that day begin the Acts of the Apoſtles. See Bengelius.

Ver. 3. Shewed himſelf alive by many infallible proofs] By infallible proofs are meant ſuch proofs as amount to a demonſtration, and cannot admit of the leaſt doubt. Thus the actions of ſpeaking, walking, eating, and drinking, are the undoubted proofs of life; and it ſhould be obſerved that the diſciples had the ſame infallible proofs of Chriſt's being alive after his paſſion, as they ever had of his being alive before it. They ſaw him, ſaw the particular marks of identity in his perſon and countenance, in his hands, feet, and ſide, being ſeen of them forty days, and ſpeaking of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God:

4 And being aſſembled together with them, commanded them that they ſhould not depart from Jeruſalem, but wait for the promiſe of the Father, which, ſaith he, ye have heard of me.

5 For John truly baptized with water, but ye ſhall be baptized with the Holy Ghoſt, not many days hence.

6 When they therefore were come together, they aſked of him, ſaying, Lord, wilt thou at this time reſtore again the kingdom to Iſrael?

7 And he ſaid unto them, It is not for you to know the times or the ſeaſons, which the Father hath put in his own power.

8 But ye ſhall receive power after that the Holy Ghoſt is come upon you: and ye ſhall be witneſſes unto me, both in Jeruſalem, and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermoſt part of the earth.

9 And when he had ſpoken theſe things, while they beheld, he was taken up; and a cloud received him out of their ſight.

10 And while they looked ſtedfaſtly towards heaven, as he went up, behold, two men ſtood by them in white apparel;

11 Which alſo ſaid, Ye men of Galilee, why ſtand ye gazing up into heaven? this which had been pierced at his crucifixion. They ſaw him alſo eat what they themſelves gave him; a piece of broiled fiſh and an honeycomb. They heard him ſpeak, and were by him commanded to handle him, and ſee that he had fleſh and bones: A command, which doubtleſs they obeyed, for the words, as ye ſee me have, ſtrongly imply, that they had received the ſatisfaction offered them, by feeling his hands and feet. Certainly theſe were infallible proofs, as the ſacred writer aſſerts: But what increaſes their certainty, is, that they were frequently repeated; not for one or two days, but for the ſpace of forty days together. Whoever takes a view of the method and order in which the ſeveral proofs of the reſurrection were laid before the Apoſtles, muſt confeſs, that as Chriſt required of them a reaſonable and well-grounded faith, ſo did he purſue the moſt proper and effectual means for attaining that end. For this purpoſe, inſtead of bearing down their reaſon, and dazzling their underſtanding by a full manifeſtation of himſelf all at once, we ſee him letting in the light upon them by little and little, and preparing their minds by the gradual dawning of truth, to bear the full luſtre of the Sun of righteouſneſs riſing from the grave; to conſider and examine, and know that it was he himſelf; and to aſſure the world it was impoſſible that they could be deceived. And moſt certainly, never was evidence more fairly offered to conſideration; never was the enquiry put into a more rational method, as indeed there never were any facts which could better bear the teſt. See Weſt on the Reſurrection, p. 133. Speaking of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God, implies the giving them full inſtructions concerning the nature of his ſpiritual kingdom; which, before his reſurrection, they did not rightly underſtand. Dr. Heylin obſerves on this paſſage, that "the Greeks weave long periods, by connecting many clauſes, with relative pronouns, participles, and prepoſitions, in one ſentence; which, according to the genius of our language, ſhould be divided into ſeveral ſentences; whoſe brevity facilitates the attention of the reader, by holding it leſs in ſuſpence. I therefore ſcruple not, ſays he, frequently to change the grammatical conſtruction of the original, and ſometimes inſert a word or two, that I may render the ſenſe more intelligible, which is the principal purpoſe of my interpretation." Conformably to this remark, he reads the preſent paſſage thus: ver. 3. He had, ſoon after his paſſion, ſhewed them himſelf alive with indubitable evidences, appearing to them forty days, and diſcourſing with them concerning the kingdom of God. Ver. 4. [One day in particular] being preſent with them, when they were aſſembled, he ordered them not to depart, &c. The reader will find in the note on ch. x. 41. an anſwer to the objection raiſed from Chriſt's confining his appearance after his reſurrection to his diſciples and friends.

Ver. 4. Luke xxiv. 43, 49. Or, eating together with them. Luke xxiv. 49. John xiv. 16, 26, 27. xv. 26. xvi. 7.—V. 5. Matth. iii. 11. Ch. xi. 16. xix. 4. Joel iii. 18. Ch. ii. 4. xi. 15.—V. 6. Matth. xxiv. 3.—V. 7. Matth. xxiv. 36. Mark xiii. 32. 1 Theſſ. v. 1.—V. 8. Ch. ii. 1, 4. Or, the power of the Holy Ghoſt coming upon you. Luke xxiv. 49. Luke xxiv. 48. John xv. 27. Ver. 22. Ch. ii. 32.—V. 9. Luke xxiv. 51. Ver. 2.—V. 10. Matth. xxviii. 3. Ch. x. 3, 30.—V. 11. Ch. ii. 7. xiii. 31.

Ver. 4. That they ſhould not depart, &c.] This ſeems a plain intimation, that after our Lord had met his diſciples in Galilee, he appointed the Apoſtles to meet him in Jeruſalem, or perhaps accompanied them thither, and ſpent his laſt days on earth there; doing this laſt honour to the place where God had choſen to dwell, and where the moſt ſolemn ordinances of his worſhip were adminiſtered. There is nothing for the words ſaith he, in the original, but they are plainly implied, and we have many examples of ſuch a change in the perſons ſpeaking in the beſt Greek writers. Many others occur in the ſacred writers. Compare Luke v. 14. Acts xvii. 3. xxiii. 22. Gen. xxvi. 7. Deut. ii. 13. This is the rather to be obſerved, as it may account for many prophecies of Chriſt in the Old Teſtament, where he is introduced as ſpeaking on a ſudden in an abrupt manner; which is not ſo uſual, eſpecially in modern and weſtern writers. See Raphel, Elſner, and Beza.

Ver. 5. Ye ſhall be baptized with the Holy Ghoſt] Baptiſm was a right of invitation, by which diſciples were admitted not only amongſt the Jews, but alſo amongſt other nations. John adopted this rite after the Jewiſh manner, making uſe of water for this purpoſe; but Chriſt's diſciples being deſigned for an office of a ſuperior nature, to diſſeminate the Goſpel all over the world, and to govern the church of Chriſt after his departure, were inſtated and initiated into their office in a ſuperior manner, God himſelf ſending down the Holy Ghoſt in a viſible manner for this purpoſe. But ſomething more than mere conſecration of the Apoſtles was intended by this miraculous appearance; for by theſe means he gave teſtimony to the truth of all which Chriſt had ſaid unto the Apoſtles: He declared that whatſoever they ſhould teach was the effect of inſpiration; and he gave them both knowledge of the divine will, and courage to preach it, in oppoſition to every obſtacle which power, or wealth, or learning, or danger, or death could throw in their way. See Hammond and Benſon.

Ver. 6—8. Lord, wilt thou at this time, &c?] The diſciples ſeem to have expected, that when the Spirit was in ſo extraordinary a manner poured out, and the world, according to Chriſt's prediction, (John xvi. 8.) convinced of ſin, of righteouſneſs, and of judgement, the whole nation of the Jews would own him for the Meſſiah, and ſo not only ſpake of its ſubjection to the Romans, but itſelf riſe to very extenſive, and perhaps univerſal dominion. The word ἀποκαθιστάνεις, rendered wilt thou reſtore, intimates the ſhattered and weakened ſtate in which Iſrael now was. Dr. Heylin renders the clauſe more properly, Wilt thou re-eſtabliſh the kingdom of Iſrael at that time? namely, when they ſhould be baptized, as was promiſed juſt before. Our Lord's anſwer, though calculated to repreſs an improper curioſity, yet may intimate that the kingdom ſhould at length be reſtored, though not immediately, or with all the circumſtances they imagined. "It will not be of any uſe to you, in your work, to know the times or the ſeaſons for the reſtoration of the kingdom of Iſrael. Beſides, this is one of the things which the Father hath thought fit to conceal from mortals in the abyſs of his own Omniſcience. This only is of importance for you to know, that you ſhall receive miraculous powers after the Holy Ghoſt is come upon you, and that by theſe powers you ſhall bear witneſs unto me with great ſucceſs.

Ver. 9. A cloud received him, &c.] That is, ſome bright appearance like a cloud, accompanied by angels. It was for majeſty, and not for neceſſity, that our Lord uſed the miniſtration of angels on this occaſion. See 2 Kings ii. 11. Our Lord aſcended into heaven from the mount of Olives, at or near the place where he had been apprehended and bound, and from whence he had been led away like a felon, to be tried for his life, inſulted, ſcourged, and condemned to crucifixion. He now goes off in triumph from the ſame mountain into a place and ſtate worthy of his innocence and dignity. See Benſon, the note on Luke xxiv. 50. and the Reflections on that chapter.

Ver. 10, 11. Behold, two men, &c.] Two angels in human form. As Chriſt's reſurrection had been honoured with the appearance of angels, it was natural to think that his aſcenſion into heaven would be ſo likewiſe. The angels ſpake of our Lord's coming to judge the the world at the laſt day, a deſcription of which he himſelf had given in his life-time: For the Son of man ſhall come in the glory of his Father with his angels, Matth. xvi. 27. Wherefore the cloud whereon our Lord now aſcended, being the ſame with that in which he is to come again, was more bright and pure than the cleareſt lambent flame; for it was the glory of the Father, i. e. the ſhechinah, or viſible ſymbol of the divine preſence, which appeared to the patriarchs in ancient times, which filled the temple at its dedication, 2 Chron. vii. 3. and which in its greateſt ſplendor cannot be beheld with mortal eyes; ſo for that reaſon, is called the light inacceſſible, in which God dwells, 1 Tim. vi. 16. It was on this occaſion probably that our Lord's body was changed, acquiring the glories, of immortality, perhaps in the view of the diſciples: for fleſh and blood, ſuch as he aroſe with, cannot inherit the kingdom of God. Accordingly, the body which he now has, is called a glorious body, and declared to be of the ſame nature with that which the ſaints ſhall have after their reſurrection, Philip. iii. 21. Wherefore, though the Scripture is ſilent as to the time when this change paſſed upon Chriſt's body, we muſt ſuppoſe that it happened either immediately before his aſcenſion, or in the ſame Jeſus, which is taken up from you into heaven, ſhall ſo come in like manner, as ye have ſeen him go into heaven.

12 Then returned they unto Jeruſalem, from the mount called Olivet, which is from Jeruſalem a ſabbath-day's journey.

13 And when they were come in, they went up into an upper room, where abode both Peter, and James, and John, and Andrew, Philip, and Thomas, Bartholomew, and Matthew, James the ſon of Alpheus, and Simon Zelotes, and Judas the brother of James.

14 Theſe all continued with one accord in prayer and ſupplication, with the women, and Mary the mother of Jeſus, and with his brethren.

15 And in thoſe days Peter ſtood up in the midſt of the diſciples, and ſaid, (the number of the names together were about an hundred and twenty,) 16 Men and brethren, this ſcripture muſt needs have been fulfilled, which the Holy Ghoſt by the mouth of David ſpake before concerning Judas, which was guide to them that took Jeſus.

17 For he was numbered with us, and had obtained part of this miniſtry.

18 Now this man purchaſed a field with the reward of iniquity; and falling headlong, he burſt aſunder in the midſt, and all his bowels guſhed out.

19 And it was known unto all the dwel-

Ver. 11. Dan. vii. 13. Matth. xxiv. 30. Mark xiii. 26. Luke xxi. 27. John xiv. 3. 1 Theſſ. i. 10. 2 Theſſ. i. 10. Rev. i. 7. V. 12. Luke xxiv. 52.—V. 13. Ch. ix. 37, 39. xx. 8. Matth. x. 2, 3. Luke vi. 15. Jude 1.—V. 14. Ch. ii. 1, 46. Matth. xiii. 55.—V. 15. Rev. iii. 4.—V. 16. Pſ. xli. 9. John xiii. 18. xviii. 3.—V. 17. Luke vi. 16. Ch. xii. 25. xx. 24. xxi. 19.—V. 18. Matth. xxvii. 5, 7, 8.

the time of it, or ſoon after it. As our Lord aſcended up into the ſkies, the flaming cloud which ſurrounded him leaving a large track of light behind it, marked his paſſage through the air, but gradually loſt its magnitude in the eyes of them who ſtood below, till ſoaring high, he and it vaniſhed out of their ſight. In this illuſtrious manner did our Saviour depart, after having finiſhed the grand work, which he came down upon earth to execute; a work which God himſelf, in the remoteſt eternity, contemplated with pleaſure, which angels anciently and ſuperior natures with joy deſcribed as to happen, and which through all eternity to come ſhall, at periods the moſt immenſely diſtant from the time of its execution, be looked back upon with inexpreſſible delight by every inhabitant of heaven: For though the little affairs of time may vaniſh altogether and be loſt, when they are removed far back by the endleſs progreſſion of duration, this object is ſuch, that no diſtance, however great, can leſſen it. The kingdom of God is erected upon the incarnation and ſufferings of the Son of God, the kingdom and city of God comprehending all the virtuous beings that are in the univerſe made happy by goodneſs and love; and therefore none of them can ever forget the foundation on which their happineſs ſtands firmly eſtabliſhed. In particular, the human ſpecies, recovered by this labour of the Son of God, will view their Deliverer, and look back on his ſtupendous undertaking with high raviſhment, while they are feaſting without interruption on its ſweet fruits, ever growing more delicious. The reſt of the members likewiſe of the city of God will contemplate it with perpetual pleaſure, as the happy mean of recovering their kindred who were loſt, and, it may be, as a grand confirmation of the whole rational ſyſtem, in their ſubjection to him who liveth and reigneth for ever, and whoſe favour is better than life. See Macknight.

Ver. 12. A Sabbath day's journey] That is about a mile. See the note on Luke xxiv. 50, and Biſcoe's Lectures, p. 391, &c.

Ver. 13, 14. They went up into an upper room] This might be rendered into the upper room. There was in Jeruſalem an upper room in which the apoſtles had been uſed to aſſemble with their Lord, where they had eaten the laſt ſupper with him, where perhaps they had aſſembled ſince his reſurrection, and been favoured with his company. Such a room many of the richer and more devout Jews uſed to have in their houſes for religious exerciſes. Some ſay this room where the apoſtles aſſembled, was upon mount Sion, where Epiphanius aſſerts there was afterwards a Chriſtian church built: that the Goſpel ſhould go out from mount Sion, was agreeable to the prophecy, Iſaiah ii. 3. Mic. iv. 2. See Benſon, Whitby, and the note on Luke xxiv. 52.

Ver. 15. The number of the names, &c.] Of the perſons. MS. See Rev. ch. iii. 4. and Virg. Æn. vi. ver. 763. An hundred and twenty was the number of a Jewiſh council. It is very likely that moſt of the diſciples who met our Lord in Galilee after his reſurrection, did either live in Galilee, in the remoteſt parts of Judea, or in Samaria, and were not now in Jeruſalem.

Ver. 16. Men and brethren] Literally men brethren. So chap. ii. 29. See chap. vii. 2. Some have taken this for an Hebraiſm; and it is true, that it was uſual with the Hebrews; but it was uſed alſo by the politeſt Greeks—Xenophon, Homer, Herodotus. See the Pſalms referred to in the margin. Inſtead of muſt needs have been fulfilled, Dr. Heylin reads, muſt be fulfilled. His place muſt be ſupplied by a new election, as in the ſequel. See ver. 20. and Jeffery's Review, p. 179.

Ver. 18. Now this man purchaſed a field, &c.] Occaſioned the purchaſing a field. Wat. It is worth obſerving, that an action is ſome times ſaid in Scripture to be done by a perſon who was the occaſion of doing it. See Gen. xlii. 38. Exod. xxiii. 8. Rom. xiv. 15. 1 Cor. vii. 16. and 1 Tim. iv. 16. To what has been ſaid in the note on Matthew xxvii. 5. in order to reconcile that Evangeliſt with the account here given of Judas's death, we ſubjoin the following obſervations of Dr. Ward; referring the reader who is deſirous to conſider the various ſolutions of this matter to Biſcoe's Lectures, p. 637, &c.

“ Learned men, ſays the Doctor, (diſſert. 36.) have differed very much in their ſentiments concerning this fact, and great diſputes have been occaſioned by it, particularly between the two Leyden profeſſors, James Gronovius and Perizonius. Salmaſius ſays, that ἀπάγχεσθαι, Matth. xxvii. 5. always ſignifies, to be hanged, or to hang oneſelf; and therefore as there were different reports of the death of Judas, the two Evangeliſts gave different accounts of it. Caſaubon attempts to reconcile the Evangeliſts, by ſuppoſing that Judas hanged himſelf; but the rope breaking, he fell down, and by the fall broke his belly. He thinks therefore, that St. Matthew tells only the beginning of the ſtory, and St. Luke the concluſion. Stephanus in his Lexicon ſays, that when Judas had put the rope about his neck, throwing himſelf forward from the place where he ſtood, by the ſhock which he received he burſt his belly: which is ſomewhat a different way of reconciling the Evangeliſts, and with this opinion Dr. Whitby ſeems to agree. Heinſius interprets ἀπήγξατο in Matthew, he was ſuffocated by the anguiſh of his mind; to which he applies what is ſaid by the LXX. 2 Sam. xvii. 23. Job vii. 15. Tobit iii. 10. and adds, “ ſuch a ſuffocation is wont to occaſion a rupture;” which he thinks is applicable to St. Luke's account. Gronovius underſtands the word to ſignify he hung himſelf, but then he interprets πρηνὴς ἐγένετο, falling headlong, in a paſſive ſenſe, as if Judas's body, when dead, was cut down by ſome other perſon, and ſo burſt by the fall. Laſtly, Perizonius, agreeing with Heinſius, underſtands Matthew as ſpeaking only of a ſuffocation ariſing from a melancholy diſorder; which ſenſe of the word he proves from a variety of examples. But then he ſuppoſes, that this did not kill Judas, who afterwards threw himſelf down from an eminence upon his face, and broke his belly by the fall; which is what is referred to by St. Luke. This laſt ſenſe ſeems beſt to reconcile the Evangeliſts; for Matthew might chuſe to carry his account of Judas no farther, than to relate what happened to him before our Saviour's aſcenſion, and Judas might poſſibly live ſo long in a deſponding ſtate. But between that and the time when Peter propoſed the electing another apoſtle in the place of Judas, he might deſtroy himſelf in the manner there deſcribed. For if he really did hang himſelf, but the rope breaking before he expired, his belly burſt by the fall as Caſaubon ſuppoſes, one would ſcarcely imagine, that Matthew ſhould have omitted thoſe circumſtances which were the immediate cauſe of his death, and ſuppoſing them to have happened after he was dead, as they would carry in them no appearance of any thing judicial, and are omitted by St. Matthew, it might ſeem not very eaſy to conceive, why St. Luke, if he referred to the ſame tranſaction, ſhould take notice of them after ſuch a length of time, as the writing his hiſtory of the Acts; for what is ſaid in the 18th and two following verſes, may contain the words of the hiſtorian himſelf, and not of Peter; and ſhould therefore be included in a parentheſis. This one may be led to think from the manner of expreſſion, in ver. 19. which neither ſeems to ſuit ſo well with a ſpeech made by Peter in that city, nor with the narrative of a fact which had then ſo lately happened, as the death of Judas; for the words ἐγένετο and κληθῆναι, are both in a tenſe which uſually denotes ſome conſiderable diſtance of time paſt. Beſides, could the words in their proper tongue be thought neceſſary, if he had been ſpeaking to perſons who uſed that language?—But if this be taken for an additional circumſtance of the fact inſerted by St. Luke, when writing his hiſtory afterwards, at ſome diſtant time and place, the whole will appear exceedingly proper, as a confirmation of what he had related in the preceding verſe, concerning the manner in which Judas deſtroyed himſelf, as explained by Perizonius, and which had not been recorded by St. Matthew.

Ver. 19. And it was known, &c.] Aringbius mentions a funeral inſcription dug up in the Via Nomentana, by which it appears that the lers at Jeruſalem; inſomuch as that field is called in their proper tongue, Aceldama, that is to ſay, The field of blood.

20 For it is written in the book of Pſalms, Let his habitation be deſolate, and let no man dwell therein: and, His biſhoprick let another take.

21 Wherefore of theſe men which have companied with us, all the time that the Lord Jeſus went in and out among us, 22 Beginning from the baptiſm of John, unto that ſame day that he was taken up from us, muſt one be ordained to be a witneſs with us of his reſurrection.

23 And they appointed two, Joſeph called Barſabas, who was ſurnamed Juſtus, and Matthias.

24 And they prayed, and ſaid, Thou, Lord, which knoweſt the hearts of all men, ſhew whether of theſe two thou haſt choſen,

25 That he may take part of this miniſtry and apoſtleſhip, from which Judas by tranſgreſſion fell, that he might go to his own place, 26 And they gave forth their lots; and the lot fell upon Matthias; and he was numbered with the eleven apoſtles.

Ver. 20. Pſ. lxix. 25. Pſ. cix. 8. Or, office, or, charge.—V. 22. Ch. xv. 22.—V. 24. 1 Sam. xvi. 7. 1 Chron. xxviii. 9. xxix. 17. Mark i. 1. Ver. 9. John xv. 27. Ver. 8. Ch. iv. 33.—V. 23. Jer. xi. 20. xvii. 10. Ch. xv. 8. Rev. ii. 23.

the fate of Judas became a proverbial form of curſing. See his Roma ſubterran. p. 436. The beſt critics ſeem univerſally to read this verſe in a parentheſis, conſidering it not as the words of St. Peter, but of the hiſtorian. See the former note. Dr. Lightfoot conjectures, that the potter's field was the place where Judas hanged himſelf; and that it was not only bought with the money for which Judas had ſold his maſter, but ſtained alſo with the traitor's blood. This certainly would make the reaſon of giving it the name of the field of blood, ſtill ſtronger and more emphatical; and perhaps this may ſeem to ſome to be the reaſon here aſſigned by St. Luke, of the field's being ſo called, and that by the current of the ſtory in this place, it looks as if he had murdered himſelf in the field which was purchaſed with his own money; and that his blood being ſhed there, had occaſioned its being called the field of blood. However, in Matth. xxvii. 7, 8. it is aſſigned as the only reaſon for its having that name, that it was bought with the price of Chriſt's blood. See the note there, Benſon, Lightfoot, and Wetſtein.

Ver. 20. And his biſhoprick let another take] And let another take his office. Heylin. See Merrick's Annotations on Pſalm cxix. 8.

Ver. 22. Muſt one be ordained, &c.] They muſt reaſonably and modeſtly conclude, that it was fit the number of apoſtles which Chriſt firſt choſe ſhould be kept up, perhaps in alluſion to the twelve tribes of Iſrael. But it is impoſſible, as well as quite unneceſſary, that we at this diſtance of time ſhould be able to aſſign a reaſon why the two afterwards mentioned, and no more, were propoſed as candidates. Perhaps a longer and more intimate acquaintance with our Lord might intitle them to a preference on this occaſion. See Doddridge.

Ver. 23. Joſeph called Barſabas, &c.] That this Joſeph was a different perſon from Joſes, ſurnamed Barnabas, mentioned chap. iv. 36. will appear more than probable, when it hath been conſidered, firſt, that the character of Barnabas is given chap. iv. as if he had no where been mentioned before: ſecondly, it is much more likely that the MSS. which read alike in both places, ſhould have been led into the miſtake by the ſimilitude of the names, than that the other MSS. ſhould read the names differently, without finding them ſo in the copies from which they were tranſcribed. Thirdly, This Joſeph was ſurnamed Juſtus; but we no where find that Barnabas was ſo named. See Benſon and Wetſtein.

Ver. 24. Which knoweſt the hearts] See Prov. xv. 11. 1 Sam. xvi. 7. Jerem. xvii. 10.

Ver. 25. That he might go to his own place] That is, to the place and ſtate of loſt ſouls. It was a maxim among the Jews, "He who betrayeth an Iſraelite ſhall have no part in the world to come." Inſtead of ιδιον, his own, the Alex. MS. reads δικαιον, the juſt, or proper place; but it is ſingular in that reading. However, in the ſenſe in which we have now taken the words, they were uſual among the primitive Chriſtians, who, by "going to one's own place," or "to one's due or appointed place," expreſſed a man's going preſently after death into his proper place and ſtate of happineſs or miſery. In the Epiſtle aſcribed to Barnabas, he intimates, that good men go to the place appointed for them; and Clemens Romanus ſaith, that St. Peter ſuffered martyrdom, and went into the place of glory which was due to him. Ignatius ſaith, "all things have an end; death and life are ſet before us, and every one muſt go unto his own place; εις τον ιδιον τοπον." Compare with this what our Lord himſelf had ſaid of Judas, Matth. xxvi. 24. John vi. 70, 71. and xvii. 12. and ſee Whitby, Benſon, and Wetſtein. This interpretation ſeems far preferable to that of Le Cenes, and others who would read the words, from which Judas by tranſgreſſion fell, in a parentheſis, and render the latter clauſe, that he may go to his proper ſtation, namely, the perſon ſpoken of in the former part of the verſe. The word rendered part is κλῆρον, which ſignifies a lot, and may refer to the lots mentioned in the next verſe.

Ver. 26. And they gave forth, &c.] This was, no doubt, moſt impartially adjuſted, though we know not in what particular method. The honour God has conferred on enquiries by lot, (ſee Joſh. vii. 14, 15. 1 Sam. x. 20, 21.) and the cuſtom of fixing the offices of the prieſts in the temple, while in waiting there by lot (1 Chron. xxiv. 5—7. and Luke i. 9.) might lead them to this turn of thought. Grotius has ſhewn, in his note on this place, that ſuch a deſignation to ſacred offices prevailed alſo among ſome pagan nations. Thus the number of the Apoſtles of the circumciſion was filled up again before the effuſion of the Spirit,—that the Spirit might fall upon Matthias, as well as upon the other eleven, and that he might not only have like ſpiritual gifts, and miraculous powers, but that they might be conferred at the ſame time, and in the ſame conſpicuous and honourable manner.

REFLECTIONS ON JUDAS ISCARIOT.

We have heretofore made ſome reflections on the character and conduct of Judas, at leaſt ſo far as to ſuffer ſome reaſons for that conduct. See on Matth. xxvi. From that character and conduct we now further obſerve, there ariſes "a ſtrong proof of the truth of the Chriſtian religion." For in Judas we have a man, who in three reſpects particularly anſwers three diſtinct and moſt remarkable prophecies, who being thoroughly acquainted with the moſt ſecret conduct and views of Jeſus, was therefore capable of detecting any fraud or impoſture which might have been carrying on by him; a man not only able to inform againſt Jeſus, but highly willing; engaged by every motive, by every poſſible conſideration, and deterred from it by no poſſible fear or ſhame;—and yet this man, after having delivered up Chriſt, through the ſtrength of the temptations of avarice, ambition, and reſentment, no ſooner finds the conſequence of what he had done, than his conſcience taking the alarm, makes him in the ſtrongeſt manner retract, and atteſt his Maſter's innocence, before thoſe very rulers, to whom he had betrayed him but a few hours before; and to whom it is evident he had made no diſcovery of impoſture, ſince they would not have failed, as well to have reproached him with it when he returned the money, as to have urged it againſt Jeſus upon his trial, which yet they never did; and this man finding his retracting his evidence had no effect with the chief prieſts, in an exceſs of grief and remorſe, ſpeedily put an end to a miſerable being. I have ſinned, cried he, in that I have betrayed the innocent blood! An atteſtation to the innocence of Chriſt, ſo circumſtanced, that it is ſcarce poſſible to ſuppoſe a ſtronger, which nothing but the moſt thorough conviction could have extorted, as nothing but the deepeſt remorſe could have hurried him on to ſo deſperate a death, which, according to the idea of the Talmudiſts, was the puniſhment uſually inflicted by the divine vengeance on ſuch perſons as bore falſe witneſs againſt their neighbours.

And Judas bore falſe witneſs againſt his Maſter and his God! Stirred up to a deed ſo execrable, by the vile temptation of miſerable covetouſneſs, he followed the bleſſed Jeſus, not to partake of the riches of his ſpiritual kingdom, but in hopes of temporal power and wealth. Soon as he perceived the golden dreams vaniſh which he had formed, that there was no hope of temporal advantage from Chriſt, nay, that Chriſt was privy to the ſecret deſigns of his malevolent heart, full of reſentment for his diſappointed purpoſes, he betrays the Maſter for a few ſilver pence, whoſe innocence he perfectly knew, whoſe power he had fully experienced, and whoſe goodneſs and love had charms enough to have engaged any heart but a covetous one.

And how daily do we ſee the crime of Judas, black and horrid as it is, re-acted upon earth, and repeated amongſt the profeſſing diſciples of Chriſt! How many are there, who prefer gold and temporal intereſt to their God, their Saviour and their ſoul, and ſtrangely perverſe, ſet ſo exorbitant a value on the gifts, as to forget, as to deſpiſe, as to betray the giver! Covetouſneſs is a crime above meaſure odious in the ſight of God; whoſe liberal bounty freely extended to all his creatures, abundantly ſhews his abhorrence of it. Chriſt hath given a particular charge againſt it, take heed and beware of covetouſneſs. St. Paul hath ſtigmatized it with the opprobrious name of idolatry. It robs God of the heart; it robs our fellow-creatures of their due; it injures the poor and afflicted, and what is worſt of all, it robs the ſoul of everlaſting bliſs. Take heed therefore, and beware of covetouſneſs.

CHAP. II.

The apoſtles, filled with the Holy Ghoſt, and ſpeaking divers languages, are admired by ſome, and derided by others: whom Peter diſproving, and ſhewing that the apoſtles ſpake by the power of the Holy Ghoſt, that Jeſus was riſen from the dead, aſcended into heaven, had poured down the ſame Holy Ghoſt, and was the Meſſias, a man known to them to be approved of God by his miracles, wonders, and ſigns, and not crucified without his determinate counſel, and foreknowledge: he baptizeth a great number that were converted, who afterwards devoutly and charitably converſe together: the apoſtles working many miracles, and God daily increaſing his church.

AND when the day of Pentecoſt was fully come, they were all with one accord in one place.

Ver. 1. Lev. xxiii. 15. Deut. xvi. 9. Ch. i. 14.

One powerful reaſon to incline us to do ſo,—a reaſon which ſhould make the covetous heart bleed drops of blood, is, that the moſt execrable and horrid villainy that ever was thought of, ever was heard of under the ſun, was owing to covetouſneſs; namely, the betraying to crucifixion the innocent Lamb of God; and that the only inſtance of a deſpairing ſinner left upon record in the New Teſtament, is that of a treacherous and greedy Judas. Nor let us ſuppoſe ourſelves above the power of this luſt; for who ſhall preſume to be ſecure, when a friend, a diſciple, an apoſtle, a preacher of righteouſneſs, a worker of miracles, was yet ſeduced to ſell his maſter, and his ſoul, upon ſo ſordid a conſideration as thirty pieces of ſilver! This ought to put us all upon our guard; and the fate of Judas ſtands as a monument and eternal admonition to all who make gold their God, and the fine gold their confidence.

We may obſerve again with reſpect to Judas, that though never conſcience was more diſtreſſed than his, yet was his repentance wholly unavailing; and that for this plain reaſon, becauſe he could not, he would not fly for mercy to the bleſſed Lamb of God. Convinced that he had betrayed that Lamb to his crucifiers, and conceiving that there could be no grace for a wretch like him, he abandoned himſelf to all the horrors of deſpair, and full of his own aggravated guilt, could bear the light no longer, but ruſhed from temporal into eternal puniſhment. For repentance by no means conſiſts ſolely in, nor is its truth and efficacy to be gathered merely from, the inward anguiſh and ſufferings of the mind. It is poſſible theſe may be the moſt intenſe, and yet the repentance inefficacious: For ſuch was the caſe of Judas, and ſuch is the caſe of every deſpairing ſinner: They ſee their own guilt in its utmoſt horror, and moſt aggravated circumſtances; and may be ready with Judas to make reſtitution of their ill-gotten gains, freely and fully to confeſs their fault: But then they are devoid of that humble and earneſt application to the bleeding Redeemer, which is the only ſource of hope to the repenting ſoul; and which, as it is the only means whereby we obtain pardon, ſo is it the only means which can prevent deſpair. This teaches us the heinous, the unſpeakable guilt of ſelf-murder; which is a voluntary cutting ourſelves off from all poſſibility of the Redeemer's mercy, a voluntary plunge into woe eternal, and miſery unutterable. This fatal ſtep for ever deprived Judas of hope and repentance, and he ſunk into endleſs ſorrow, and the world of darkneſs, where there is no repentance, and where the doom is irrecoverably ſealed.

There cannot be a greater ſin than to deſpair of the mercy of that Saviour who died for ſinners; yea, even the greateſt, the chiefeſt of ſinners. All may have hope, who will truly apply to him; for all who truly apply, he will certainly receive. As deſpair proceeds from the want of this application to Chriſt, ſo we are bound to remark, a wrong application may on the other hand lead to preſumption. The great Goſpel duties of repentance, faith, and obedience, are ſo mutually interwoven, that it muſt be ſtrange perverſeneſs which can ſeparate them: If therefore we would avoid the deſpair of Judas on the one hand, and preſumption no leſs dangerous on the other, We muſt not only look by faith to the Lamb of God, but with Judas reſtore whatever we have gotten by any indirectneſs, reſtitution making an eſſential part of repentance: And not only reſtore, as to goods, but good name; making full and free confeſſion of our faults, as to others, ſo, if it may be, to the perſons injured themſelves; then, if our heart be truly afflicted for the diſhonour we have done to God, we may be aſſured of free pardon through the precious blood of our dear Redeemer.

Upon the whole, from this example of Judas, we who, like him, are of the houſhold and family of Chriſt, ſhould take eſpecial heed that we deceive not ourſelves by depending upon any outward privileges, while our hearts are not right before God, and our intentions are warped and biaſſed by worldly attachments. It behoves us to be eſpecially careful, that we adorn the doctrine of God our Saviour by a ſuitable conduct; otherwiſe the excellence of our profeſſion will ſerve only the more to enhance the ſeverity of our future condemnation: and as Judas periſhed in the more extreme anguiſh, becauſe he had been ſo particularly favoured by his Lord and Maſter, ſo ſhall we periſh with aggravated confuſion, if we diſobey a doctrine which is perfective of our higheſt happineſs, and deſpiſe a Saviour who bled only to bleſs and to ſave. Judas could not bear the ſtings and arrows of his reproaching conſcience; and all guilt, ſooner or later, will find conſcience as buſy as it was with him. Let then the ſinner reflect, who has lived days, and months, and years, in utter neglect of the God who created him, of the Redeemer who died for his ſoul. Let him think, what extremity of anguiſh will ſeize his ſoul, when death gives the laſt ſummons, and the future world is opening on his view! Ungrateful to his Father, his Saviour, his immortal Friend; neglectful of his only valuable intereſt, enſlaved to concupiſcence and ſin, every circumſtance of condemnation will crowd upon his mind; while his affrighted and tormented conſcience anticipates the puniſhment to come. Let no man doubt that puniſhment; the deſpairing ſinner is a living proof: He carries his own hell with him; a worm within which never dieth; a flame which never ſhall be quenched. It can only now be quenched; and now quenched only by one ſovereign ſtream, the precious blood which flowed from the Lamb of God, when, betrayed by his own familiar friend, he died a willing ſacrifice for the ſins of the world. See "The character and conduct of Judas Iſcariot conſidered." Adams's Treatiſe on Self-murder, and the Reflections on Luke xix.

Chap. II. Ver. 1. And when the day of Pentecoſt was fully come] It has often been obſerved, that as our Lord was crucified at one of the great Jewiſh feaſts, it was fit that he ſhould be glorified at another; and this of Pentecoſt was choſen, with peculiar propriety, as next ſucceeding that of the paſſover at which Chriſt ſuffered; and alſo as it was celebrated in commemoration of the giving the law from mount Sinai on that day, (Exod. xix. 1—11.) and as the firſt fruits were then offered and anointed, Exod. xxiii. 16. Lev. xxiii. 17. To theſe anſwered the fuller diſcovery of the Goſpel on this occaſion; and the anointing the firſt-fruits of the Chriſtian church, by the effuſion of the Spirit. The ſolemnity of the feaſt, the general expectation of the Meſſiah, and the length of the days, as it was about the middle of ſummer, would no doubt bring great numbers to Jeruſalem at that time; who, when they returned home, and reported this great event, would naturally make way for the better reception of the Apoſtles, when they came among them. The Jews uſed to begin their days, as we have often obſerved, about ſix o'clock in the evening, and reckoned till that time the next evening, according to Gen. i. 5. By ſaying therefore that the day of pentecoſt was fully come, St. Luke meant that the night was paſt, and the light of the next morning begun. This was the firſt day of the week, or the Lord's day, as it is called Rev. i. 10. On the firſt day of the week our Lord aroſe from the dead. On that day of the week he appeared to his Apoſtles when they were aſſembled, for two weeks ſucceſſively; and on the firſt day of the week, the Holy Spirit was firſt poured out upon the Apoſtles and their company. On that day of the week uſed the Apoſtles and primitive Chriſtians to aſſemble for religious worſhip; and from their cuſtom and example which was approved by Chriſt himſelf, and who muſt needs have known his mind and will, the Chriſtian church ſtill continueth to aſſemble on that day for religious worſhip. St. Luke ſays, they were all with one accord in one place. It is ſaid, ch. i. 14, 15. of all the hundred and twenty, all theſe met with one accord, to chooſe an Apoſtle, &c. The hiſtory is continued, as would appear more plainly, if we had not divided it into chapters and verſes;— and of the ſame company it is here ſaid again, they were all met together with one accord in the ſame place, (for ſo it ſhould be rendered) when the Holy Spirit was poured down upon them. It is probable all theſe hundred and twenty were along with them when the Holy Spirit was poured down a ſecond time; ch. iv. 23—31. and it is evident from ch. vi. 3. that ſeveral beſides the Apoſtles were full of the Holy Spirit; which is the very phraſe in the text, ver. 4. when the Spirit was now poured out; and a phraſe, which in other places ſignifies that the Spirit was conferred in the moſt honourable manner, as well as in a greater degree; i. e. that it was given immediately from heaven, and not by the laying on of the hands of the Apoſtles. Again, why might not the Holy Spirit fall down upon all the hundred and twenty, as well as upon Cornelius and his company? ch. x. 44—46. What ſeems much to confirm this account of the preſence of the hundred and twenty, is St. Peter's ſpeech, ver. 16. where he aſſerts, that by that effuſion of the Holy Spirit the prophecy of Joel was accompliſhed, in which it was foretold that the Spirit ſhould be poured out upon women as well as upon men, &c. for one cannot conceive how that prophecy could be already fulfilled, unleſs the Spirit was ſhed down upon all the hundred and twenty; among whom it is expreſly ſaid, ch. i. 14. was Mary the mother of Jeſus, and ſome other women who were his diſciples. It may perhaps be objected to this interpretation, that the Apoſtles had the higheſt and the moſt of the ſpiritual gifts, and are taken notice of as the only perſons who preached to the multitude which then came together. Now it is allowed that the Apoſtles had the moſt, and the beſt of the gifts of the Spirit; but notwith-

2 And ſuddenly there came a ſound from heaven, as of a ruſhing mighty wind, and it filled all the houſe where they were ſitting.

3 And there appeared unto them cloven tongues, like as of fire, and it ſat upon each of them.

4 And they were all filled with the Holy Ghoſt, and began to ſpeak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance.

5 And there were dwelling at Jeruſalem Jews, devout men, out of every nation under heaven.

6 Now when this was noiſed abroad, the

Ver. 2. Ch. iv. 31.—V. 4. Ch. i. 5. Mark xvi. 17. Ch. x. 46. 1 Cor. xii. 10,28, 30. xiii. 1. xiv. 2, &c.—V. 6. Gr. when this voice was made.

ſtanding, the other diſciples might have ſome inferior gifts, and thoſe granted them at the ſame time, in what meaſure and proportion God ſaw fit; for there were diverſities of gifts and operations, though they all proceeded from one and the ſame Spirit; and the Spirit could eaſily diſtinguiſh between the Apoſtles and others, though they were all in the ſame room and company. See Miſcellan. Sacra, vol. i. p. 101, &c. Mill, Lightfoot, and Benſon, ch. i. ſect. 3, &c.

Ver. 2. And ſuddenly there came a ſound] It was about 1500 years before this, and, as many think, on this very day of the year, that the law was given of God from mount Sinai, in the ſight and hearing of all Iſrael; and attended not only with a viſible glory, but with pomp alſo and terror: And now the new law of grace is given to the Apoſtles upon mount Sion; (ſee on ch. i. 13.) attended likewiſe with a glory, but communicated, agreeably to the nature of it, in a much more mild, gentle, and familiar manner. For, while they were big with expectations of their aſcended Lord's fulfilling his promiſe, in ſending down the ſo-often mentioned gift of the Holy Spirit, there came all on a ſudden a ſound from heaven, as of a mighty ruſhing wind, which filled the whole houſe where they were aſſembled, as their doctrine was afterwards to fill the whole earth. When Moſes had finiſhed all things, according to the pattern ſhewn him in the mount, it is ſaid, Exod. xl. 34, 35. that a cloud covered the tent of the congregation, and the glory of the Lord filled the tabernacle; and when Solomon had finiſhed the building of the temple, it is ſaid that the cloud, &c. filled the houſe of the Lord, 1 Kings viii. 10, 11. In like manner, when Iſaiah ſaw the Lord ſitting upon a throne, high and lifted up, it is ſaid, that his train filled the temple, ch. vi. 1. But now the divine preſence had left the temple, and the glory of the Lord reſted upon mount Sion, and filled the houſe were the Apoſtles were aſſembled. See Benſon, and Wetſtein.

Ver. 3. There appeared unto them cloven tongues] Beſides the great and indiſpenſable uſe of the gift of tongues to the firſt preachers of the Goſpel, the elegance and propriety in the choice of this miracle to atteſt the real deſcent of that Spirit who was to teach us all things, can never be enough admired; for words being the human vehicle of knowledge, this gift was the fitteſt precurſor of the Spirit of truth. When the cloven tongues appeared upon each of the diſciples, they were aſſembled together in a private room ſequeſtered and apart; and it was not till the thing was noiſed abroad, and the multitude came together, to enquire the truth of it, that the apoſtles ſpoke with tongues as the Spirit gave them utterance. Now between this viſible deſcent of the Holy Spirit, and their ſpeaking to the multitude, a conſiderable time intervened, ſufficient to convince the Apoſtles, from the ſteady duration of the appearance, that it was not natural, but miraculous; and this the original will expreſs properly, rendered by the phraſe of SITTING upon each of them, words ſo inconſiſtent with a momentary appearance, that it would be trifling with common ſenſe to deduce ſuch an interpretation from oblique circumſtances, and collateral reaſoning. It may not therefore be improper to conſider the evangelical account of this viſible deſcent with a little more exactneſs. In this place we ſee the fiery tongues are ſaid to ſit upon each of them; and other places of Scripture, which mention the like deſcent of the Holy Spirit in a viſible form, deſcribe it in ſuch terms as denote a very different appearance from a ſudden flaſh of lightning. St. Matthew tells us, that the Spirit of God deſcended like a dove, that is, with a dove-like motion, as birds, when about to ſettle upon any thing, firſt hover upon it with quivering wings: It then lighted upon Jeſus. So here the ſame Spirit is ſaid to deſcend under the appearance of cloven tongues, like as of fire.] In the former inſtance, only the motion of the deſcent is deſcribed; in this, both the motion, figure, and colour; and the term of cloven tongues, which the ſacred hiſtorian employs to deſcribe the motion, proves it to be of ſome continuance. Let us obſerve, that the thing ſeen, like as of fire, on the heads of the Apoſtles, was no more an elementary fire, than the thing ſeen like a dove on the head of Jeſus, was a real dove; for, as only a dove-like motion is intimated in the latter expreſſion, ſo only a flame-like motion is intimated in the former. And what this was, the hiſtorian tells us in effect;—the appearance of cloven tongues. The ſudden flaſh of lightning exhibits to the eye of the beholder only a line of light, angularly broken into ſeveral directions, very different from the form of tongues, whether whole or divided. Whenever a flame aſſumes this appearance, it is become ſtationary, as this was, which the hiſtorian ſays ſat upon each of them; and then, its natural motion being upwards, it repreſents, when divided length-wiſe, a pyramidical tongue-like figurec, loven; a demonſtration that the appearance in queſtion was not momentary, but of ſome continuance. What in our Engliſh Bible is rendered fire, Iſai. v. 24. is, in the original, a tongue of fire. Our old Engliſh verſion hath preſerved the alluſion, and rendered the words like as the fire lighteth up the ſtraw. Tongues of fire properly ſignify the points of flames, which move nimbly, and lick like tongues. The ancient Romans alluded to this when they ſpoke of lambent flames, and we ſeem to have taken the phraſe from them. Virgil's fiction concerning the omen which happened to Julus, is very pertinent to the preſent purpoſe:

> Ecce levis ſummo de vertice viſus Iūli
> Fundere lumen, apex, tactuque innoxia molli
> Lambere flamma comas, & circum tempora paſci.
>
> Æn. ii. line 682.
>
> Strange to relate, from young Iulus' head
> A lambent flame aroſe, which gently ſpread
> Around his brows, and on his temples fed.
>
> DRYDEN.

This fire, or divine glory, reſting upon the head of each of the perſons there aſſembled, was a lively emblem of one of the moſt remarkable gifts then conferred. That the tongues were ſeparated might denote the multiplicity and variety of languages which they ſhould be able to ſpeak; though as all theſe proceeded from one and the ſame Spirit, they ſhould all agree in their doctrines: and poſſibly, to denote this unity of the Spirit, the ſingular it, namely, this fiery appearance, is uſed after the plural tongues. As the glory reſted for ſome time upon them, it might ſhadow out the permanency of the gifts then beſtowed; in which, as well as in many other particulars, they excelled the Old Teſtament prophets. Thus was John the Baptiſt's prediction fulfilled, that Chriſt ſhould baptize with the Holy Ghoſt and with fire, Matth. iii. 11. And as the diviſion of tongues at Babel once introduced confuſion, and was the means of caſting off the Gentiles from the knowledge of the true God; ſo now there was a remedy provided for the gift of tongues at Sion, to bring the Gentiles out of darkneſs into light, and to deſtroy the veil which had been ſpread over all nations, Iſai. xxv. 7. See Warburton's Doctrine of Grace, b. i. ch. 2. Benſon, Wetſtein, and Lightfoot.

Ver. 4. And they were all filled with the Holy Ghoſt] That is, "all the hundred and twenty." See on ver. 1. This effuſion of the Spirit, particularly demonſtrated in the gift of tongues, was intended not only as a ſign of the Apoſtle's inſpiration at this period, but was likewiſe deſigned for the uſe of the apoſtolic miſſion. Jeſus himſelf expreſly tells us ſo; for, on his leaving the world, he comforts his diſciples with this promiſe: But ye ſhall receive power, after that the Holy Ghoſt is come upon you; and ye ſhall be witneſſes unto me,—unto the uttermoſt parts of the earth. This is recorded, ch. i. 8. by the evangelic writer as an introduction to his narrative of the miraculous gift of tongues, which he conſiders as the completion of this promiſe; and that the power to be received was he power then given; the uſe of which, as we ſee, was to enable the diſciples to become witneſſes unto him, unto the uttermoſt parts of the Earth. We find St. Paul had this power, not only in the fulleſt meaſure, but in a proportionable duration; for, endeavouring to moderate the exceſſive value which the Corinthians ſet upon ſpiritual gifts, he obſerves, that with regard to the moſt ſplendid of them, the gift of tongues, he himſelf had the advantage of them all.—I thank my God, ſays he, that I ſpeak with tongues more than you all. The occaſion ſhews, that he conſidered this his acquirement as a ſpiritual gift; and his uſing the preſent time ſhews, that he boaſted of it as then in his poſſeſſion. But why did he ſpeak with more tongues than all of them? For a good reaſon: He was to be the peculiar Apoſtle of the Gentiles, and was to preach the Goſpel amongſt remote and barbarous nations; which very circumſtance rendered this endowment more neceſſary to him than the reſt of the Apoſtles, whoſe miniſtry was circumſcribed within more narrow bounds. Warburton's Doctrine of Grace, b. i. c. 3.

Ver. 5. There were dwelling at Jeruſalem Jews] There were ſojourning, &c. κατοικȣντες. Devout or pious men, is a title applied not only to thoſe who obſerved the Jewiſh law, but likewiſe to thoſe heathens who had renounced idolatry, and lived a life of piety and virtue. From every nation under heaven can ſignify no more than "from all the ſeveral nations among whom the Jews were diſperſed." The Jews were then ſo numerous, as to have ſpread through every country; ſo that, as Agrippa in Joſephus ſays, "there was not a people upon earth who had not Jews inhabiting among them." Theſe men were come up to Jeruſalem, not only upon account of the feſtival then celebrating, but in expectation of the Meſſiah, who was to be manifeſted about that time, according to the concurrent teſtimony of the prophets. See Joſeph. Jewiſh War, b. ii. c. 10. Lightfoot, and Whitby.

Ver. 6. Every man heard them ſpeak, &c.] Some commentators of note, both ancient and modern, have maintained, that they ſpoke only one language, that is, Hebrew, or Syro-Chaldaic; but that the people heard them every one in their own language. This is really multitude came together, and were confounded, becauſe that every man heard them ſpeak in his own language.

7 And they were all amazed, and marvelled, ſaying one to another, Behold, art not all theſe which ſpeak, Galileans?

8 And how hear we every man in our own tongue, wherein we were born?

9 Parthians, and Medes, and Elamites, and the dwellers in Meſopotamia, and in Judea, and Cappadocia, in Pontus, and Aſia, 10 Phrygia, and Pamphylia, in Egypt, and in the parts of Lybia about Cyrene, and ſtrangers of Rome, Jews and proſelytes.

11 Cretes and Arabians, we do hear them ſpeak in our tongues the wonderful works of God.

12 And they were all amazed, and were in doubt, ſaying one to another, What meaneth this?

13 Others mocking, ſaid, Theſe men are full of new wine.

14 But Peter ſtanding up with the eleven, lifted up his voice, and ſaid unto them, Ye men of Judea, and all ye that dwell at Jeruſalem, be this known unto you, and hearken to my words:

15 For theſe are not drunken, as ye ſuppoſe, ſeeing it is but the third hour of the day.

16 But this is that which was ſpoken by the prophet Joel,

17 And it ſhall come to paſs in the laſt days, ſaith God, I will pour out of my Spirit upon all fleſh: and your ſons and your daughters ſhall prophecy, and your young men ſhall ſee viſions, and your old men ſhall dream dreams:

18 And on my ſervants, and on my handmaidens, I will pour out in thoſe days of my Spirit; and they ſhall prophecy:

19 And I will ſhew wonders in heaven above, and ſigns in the earth beneath; blood, and fire, and vapour of ſmoke:

20 The ſun ſhall be turned into darkneſs, and the moon into blood, before that great and notable day of the Lord come:

21 And it ſhall come to paſs, that whoſoever ſhall call on the name of the Lord, ſhall be ſaved.

Or, troubled in mind. V. 7. Ch. i. 11.—V. 15. 1 Theſſ. v. 7.—V. 17. Iſai. xliv. 3. Ezek. xi. 19. xxxvi. 27. Joel ii. 28. Zech. xii. 10. John vii. 38. Ch. x. 45. Ch. xxi. 9.—V. 20. Joel ii. 31.—V. 21. Rom. x. 13.

really making the miracle to conſiſt in the hearing, and not in the ſpeaking, and ſeems ſo groundleſs, that it does not need any laboured confutation. Our Saviour promiſed, Mark xvi. 17. that they ſhould ſpeak with new tongues, &c. And St. Luke here plainly aſſerts, ver. 4. that they did ſpeak with other tongues, or in other languages. The ſame thing is either ſuppoſed or plainly aſſerted by St. Paul, 1 Cor. xii. 10, 28, 30. and xiv. 2—39. The miſtake ſeems to have ariſen from this and the 8th verſe. But St. Luke did not intend to ſay, that any one of the Apoſtles ſpoke more languages than one at a time, nor that they ſpoke one language, and the people heard one or many others; but his plain meaning is, that one of them ſpoke one language, and another another, and ſo on; and that different Apoſtles addreſſed themſelves to men of different nations at the ſame time; or that one Apoſtle addreſſed himſelf to men of different nations one after another; by which means all the foreigners heard their own native languages ſpoken diſtinctly and intelligibly; and not only the languages ſpoken, but the Chriſtian doctrine alſo plainly delivered unto them in their own languages. See Caſtalio, Cyprian, Eraſmus, and Benſon.

Ver. 7, 8. Are not all theſe—Galileans? &c.] See on Matth. xxvi. 73. and on John i. 46. The word διαλέκτος, ver. 8. ſignifies not only what we call a dialect, or different way of ſpeaking the ſame language, but alſo an intirely diſtinct language; and perhaps it may be uſed here to expreſs the propriety and accuracy wherewith theſe low and uneducated Galileans ſpoke theſe different languages. Dr. Jortin remarks, that if the Apoſtles, on this day of Pentecoſt, had expreſſed themſelves improperly, or with a bad accent, as moſt people do when they ſpeak a living language which is not natural to them, the hearers, who at that time were not converted to Chriſtianity, would have ſuſpected ſome fraud; would have taken notice of ſuch faults, and cenſured them: which, ſince they did not, it is to be ſuppoſed that they had nothing of that kind to object. See his Remarks on Eccl. Hiſt. vol. i. p. 20. The original in ver. 7. is very beautiful, and expreſſive of the aſtoniſhment of the hearers. Οὐχ, ἰδοὺ πάντες, &c.

Ver. 9. Elamites, and the dwellers of Meſopotamia] Bp. Cumberland takes theſe to be the remainder of the Jews, who had been carried captive into Aſſyria, firſt by Tiglath-Pileſer, and afterwards by Salmaneſer, and placed in the cities of the Medes,—2 Kings xvii. 6. See his Orig. Gent. p. 225. and Geneſis x. 22. Some have obſerved, that it was no wonder for the inhabitants of Judea to hear the Apoſtles ſpeak in their own tongue, and therefore ſome have propoſed to read India, as the ſeries of the enumeration ſeems to require: Others propoſe Idumea, and others Cilicia, See Wetſtein and Schmidius.

Ver. 10. Strangers of Rome, Jews, and proſelytes] Both Jews and proſelytes. MS. That is, Jews and proſelytes, who were by birth or habitation Romans, but now ſojourned at Jeruſalem. That there were great multitudes of Jews who dwelt at Rome, is evident not only from Joſephus, but from Dio, Suetonius, Tacitus, and I think we may ſay, all the Roman authors of that time, not excepting even the poets; and that there were not a few in that great city proſelyted to the Jewiſh religion, ſufficiently appears from the Satires of Horace, Juvenal, and Perſius. See Biſcoe's Lectures, p. 85. The wonderful works of God, in the next verſe, mean the ſeveral diſpenſations of God to mankind in the ſucceſſive ages of the world, and particularly concerning the reſurrection of Jeſus of Nazareth, and the Meſſiah's kingdom. The original is expreſſive,—τὰ μεγαλεῖα τοῦ Θεοῦ: as if the diſpenſation of God in Jeſus was the only great and magnificent work of God.

Ver. 12. And were in doubt] "And they were all in a mixture of amazement and perplexity." See Doddridge and Heylin.

Ver. 13. Theſe men are full of new wine] Sweet wine. Wat. Though there was no muſt or new wine at pentecoſt, yet if they preſerved the wine cool, it kept ſweet a long time, and taſted like muſt. So Plutarch; "Muſt, if a veſſel be kept in a cool place, will continue ſweet, γλυκὺ, for a long time." Such wines were remarkably intoxicating. See Iſai. xlix. 26. Sweet wine, ſuch as the prophet there ſpeaks of, was uſed in royal palaces for its gratefulneſs; was capable of being kept to a great age, and conſequently was very inebriating. A few generations ago, ſweet wines were thoſe moſt eſteemed in England. Sir Thomas Brown thinks the new wine here mentioned was ſome generous, ſtrong and ſweet wine, wherein more eſpecially lay the power of inebriation. See the note on Joel i. 5. Obſervations, p. 196, Beza, Elſner, and Wetſtein.

Ver. 14. Dwell] Sojourn. MS.

Ver. 15. Seeing it is but the third hour of the day] Such of the Jews as ſhamefully imitated their heathen neighbours, and drank too largely at the feſtival, did not uſe to take ſuch criminal liberties till after the ſacrifices were offered, and the oblations made; but the morning ſacrifices were not now offered, to which, as ſome think, St. Peter might allude. Joſephus tells us, that on feaſt-days the Jews ſeldom ate or drank till noon; which, if it were fact, would render the calumny here referred to the more incredible. See Grotius, and Spencer de Leg. Heb. p. 716.

Ver. 16. This is that which was ſpoken, &c.] Reſpecting this remarkable prophecy, we refer to the notes on Joel ii. 28, &c. Juſt obſerving, that if this miraculous effuſion of the Holy Spirit had not been foretold, the argument for the truth of Chriſtianity from it would, no doubt, have been concluſive; but as it was referred to in the Old Teſtament, it might diſpoſe the minds of the Jews ſtill more to regard it, as it was indeed the more remarkable. The reader will not omit to compare the paſſages in the margin.

Ver. 19. Vapour of ſmoke] A cloud of ſmoke. Doddridge; who paraphraſes the paſſage thus: "Such deſtructive wars ſhall ariſe, as a puniſhment for the wickedneſs of thoſe who reject the mercy I offer, that there ſhall be blood ſhed in abundance, and fire ſcattered abroad to conſume your cities and villages; ſo that a cloud of ſmoke ſhall aſcend from the ruins of them."

Ver. 21. Whoſoever ſhall call upon the name of the Lord] See Ezek.

22 Ye men of Iſrael, hear theſe words; Jeſus of Nazareth, a man approved of God among you by miracles, and wonders, and ſigns, which God did by him in the midſt of you, as ye yourſelves alſo know:

23 Him, being delivered by the determinate counſel and foreknowledge of God, ye have taken, and by wicked hands have crucified and ſlain:

24 Whom God hath raiſed up, having looſed the pains of death: becauſe it was not poſſible that he ſhould be holden of it.

25 For David ſpeaketh concerning him, I foreſaw the Lord always before my face, for he is on my right hand, that I ſhould not be moved:

26 Therefore did my heart rejoice, and my tongue was glad: moreover alſo, my fleſh ſhall reſt in hope:

27 Becauſe thou wilt not leave my ſoul in hell, neither wilt thou ſuffer thine Holy One to ſee corruption.

28 Thou haſt made known to me the ways of life; thou ſhalt make me full of joy with thy countenance.

29 Men and brethren, let me freely ſpeak unto you of the patriarch David, that he is both dead and buried, and his ſepulchre is with us unto this day.

30 Therefore, being a prophet, and knowing that God had ſworn with an oath to him, that of the fruit of his loins, according to the fleſh, he would raiſe up Chriſt, to ſit on his throne;

31 He, ſeeing this before, ſpake of the reſurrection of Chriſt, that his ſoul was not left in hell, neither his fleſh did ſee corruption.

32 This Jeſus hath God raiſed up, whereof we all are witneſſes.

33 Therefore, being by the right hand of God exalted, and having received of the Father the promiſe of the Holy Ghoſt, he hath ſhed forth this, which ye now ſee and hear.

34 For David is not aſcended into the heavens: but he ſaith himſelf, The Lord ſaid unto my Lord, Sit thou on my right hand, 35 Until I make thy foes thy footſtool.

Ver. 22. Hebr. ii. 4.—V. 23. Ch. iv. 28. Ch. v. 30.—V. 24. Ver. 32. Ch. iii. 15. iv. 10. x. 40. xiii. 30, 34. xvii. 31. Rom. iv. 24. viii. 11. 1 Cor. vi. 14. xv. 15. Gal. i. 1. Epheſ. i. 20. Col. ii. 12. 1 Theſſ. i. 10. Hebr. xiii. 20. 1 Pet. i. 21.—V. 25. Pſ. xvi. 8.—V. 29. Or, I may. 1 Kings ii. 10. Ch. xiii. 36.—V. 30. Pſ. cxxxii. 11. Luke i. 32. Rom. i. 3. 2 Tim. ii. 8.—V. 31. Pſ. xvi. 10.—V. 32. Ver. 24. Ch. i. 8.—V. 33. Ch. v. 31. Phil. ii. 9. John xiv. 26. xv. 26. Ch. i. 4. Ch. x. 45.—V. 34. Pſ. cx. 1. Matth. xxii. 44. 1 Cor. xv. 25. Epheſ. i. 20. Hebr. i. 13.

ix. 4, 5, 6. This context being quoted thus, was a ſtrong intimation that nothing but their acceptance of the Goſpel could ſecure them from impending ruin. Brennius has proved, by an ample collection of texts, that calling on the name of the Lord is often put for the whole of religion; and if it do not here directly ſignify invoking Chriſt, which is ſometimes uſed to expreſs the whole Chriſtian character, (comp. ch. ix. 14, 21. xxii. 16. Rom. x. 12, 13. and 1 Cor. i. 2.) it muſt imply, that it is impoſſible for any who reject him to pray in an acceptable manner. How aweful a reflection! See Brennius, Doddridge, and the note on Joel ii. 32.

Ver. 22. A man approved of God among you] "Recommended to you, αποδεδειγμενον εις υμας, pointed out to you, as the object of your moſt reſpectful admiration." See Doddridge. Heylin reads it, Whoſe divine authority was evidenced by God to you, in the powerful acts and wonders, &c.

Ver. 23. Foreknowledge of God] Decree of God. Wat. Grotius as well as Beza obſerves, that προγνώσις muſt here ſignify decree; and Elſner has ſhewn it has that ſignification in approved Greek writers. ἔκδοτον, rendered being delivered ſignifies one given or ſurrendered up into the hands of an enemy; and St. Luke intimates by it the free and gracious donation of God the Father, whereby he delivered up his only begotten Son for the redemption of mankind. Inſtead of by wicked hands, ſome copies read by the hand of the wicked; a phraſe generally uſed to denote the idolatrous Gentiles. Here the Romans are meant, who were the immediate agents in the crucifixion of Chriſt, yet were only the inſtruments of the Jewiſh rage and cruelty in what they did. Heylin renders the verſe rather more clearly thus: Him (who was given up by the determinate counſel and foreknowledge of God) you have taken and put to death upon the croſs, by the hands of wicked men. Pyle would read, Him, who by the determinate counſel—of God, was given [to you as a Saviour] ye have taken and crucified. See ch. iv. 27, 28. Elſner, Raphelius, and Benſon.

Ver. 24. The pains of death, &c.] Beza conjectures, that as the Hebrew word for pains may, with the variation of one little point, ſignify bonds. That is the proper ſenſe in this place; which certainly agrees beſt with the connection.

Ver. 25. For David ſpeaketh concerning him, &c.] It is plain that εις αυτον here ſignifies of or concerning him: The particle εις has the ſame import, Eph. v. 32. Elſner upon this place, and Gataker upon the title of Marcus Antoninus's book, which is εις εαυτον, concerning himſelf, have produced many places from ſome of the beſt Greek authors, where εις is underſtood in the ſame ſenſe. Mr. Jeffery, in his True Grounds, p. 121. obſerves from this text, and lays great ſtreſs upon it every where, "That the Apoſtle does not make David to ſpeak theſe things firſt of himſelf, and then of the Meſſiah only in a ſecondary ſenſe, but quotes them as referring to Chriſt alone." The paſſages here quoted in the words of the LXX are ſomething different from the Hebrew, but the ſenſe is much the ſame; for which we refer to the notes on Pſ. xvi. and Peters on Job, p. 323.

Ver. 29. His ſepulchre is with us unto this day, &c.] The ſepulchres of the Jews in general were without the city; but the ſepulchre of David and his ſons was within the city. St. Jerome mentions the remains of David's ſepulchre as extant in his time, and it is ſhewn to travellers even unto this day. See Maundrell's Journey, p. 76.

Ver. 30. According to the fleſh, &c.] This is expreſſed in the original in ſuch a manner, as ſeems to refer theſe words not to the loins of David, but to Chriſt; and ſo may be an intimation that it was only in reſpect to his human nature, that the Meſſiah ſhould deſcend from David; while there was ſtill a higher nature, in which he was ſuperior to him, and was indeed to be regarded as the Son of God. See Romans i. 3, 4. Doddridge and Clarius.

Ver. 33. He hath ſhed forth this, which you now ſee and hear.] It is ſaid, John vii. 39. that the Holy Ghoſt was not yet given, becauſe Jeſus was not yet glorified. See the note on that verſe. The Spirit was reſerved as the great donative after his triumph over principalities and powers. When he was aſcended up on high, he ſent down the greateſt gift that ever was beſtowed upon mankind. By this Chriſt diſcovered the greatneſs of his purchaſe, the height of his glory, the exerciſe of his power, the certainty of his reſurrection and aſcenſion, and the care he took of his church and people; for in what could he illuſtrate his character more, than by letting them ſee that he made good his laſt promiſe, of ſending them another comforter, who ſhould be with them in all their undertakings, to direct them in their doubts, and to plead their cauſe againſt all oppoſition? What ſtill enhanced this gift was, that it was not to continue with them only for a ſhort time, as Chriſt had done; but to abide with them for ever, ſo as not to be taken from them, as he was. It was but to remain with them as a pledge of his love, as a teſtimony of his truth, as an earneſt of God's favour now, and of their future inheritance in heaven; for he was to comfort them by his preſence, to guide them by his counſel, and at laſt to bring them to glory. See Eph. iv. 8, 9. and Stillingfleet. Dr. Waterland reads the beginning of this verſe, Therefore, being exalted to the right-hand, &c.

Ver. 34. For David is not aſcended] It was a truth well known and eſtabliſhed among the Jews, that many of the Pſalms, and other prophetic writings were ſpoken in the perſon of the Meſſiah; and accordingly St. Peter authorizes his applying to Chriſt what had been ſpoken by David, by ſhewing, that as it was not compatible with David's character or circumſtances, it muſt relate to the Meſſiah. See Heylin.

Ver. 35. Until I make thy foes thy footſtool] This text is quoted on the preſent occaſion with the happieſt addreſs, as ſuggeſting to the Jews in the words of David, their great prophetic monarch, how certain their own ruin muſt be, if they went on to oppoſe Chriſt. Elſner on the place has a fine collection of ancient paſſages, referring to the cuſtom of trampling upon the vanquiſhed, dead or alive. See the note on Pſ. cx. 1.

36 Therefore let all the houſe of Iſrael know aſſuredly, that God hath made that ſame Jeſus whom ye have crucified, both Lord and Chriſt.

37 Now when they heard this, they were pricked in their heart, and ſaid unto Peter, and to the reſt of the apoſtles, Men and brethren, what ſhall we do?

38 Then Peter ſaid unto them, Repent, and be baptized every one of you, in the name of Jeſus Chriſt, for the remiſſion of ſins, and ye ſhall receive the gift of the Holy Ghoſt.

39 For the promiſe is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God ſhall call.

40 And with many other words did he teſtify and exhort, ſaying, Save yourſelves from this untoward generation.

41 Then they that gladly received his word, were baptized: and the ſame day there were added unto them about three thouſand ſouls.

42 And they continued ſtedfaſtly in the apoſtles doctrine and fellowſhip, and in breaking of bread, and in prayers.

43 And fear came upon every ſoul: and many wonders and ſigns were done by the apoſtles.

44 And all that believed were together, and had all things common;

45 and ſold their poſſeſſions and goods,

Ver. 36. Ch. v. 31.—V. 37. Zech. xii. 10. Luke iii. 10. Ch. ix. 6. xvi. 30.—V. 38. Ch. iii. 19.—V. 39. Joel ii. 28. Epheſ. ii. 13.—V. 42. Ver. 46. Ch. i. 14.—V. 43. Mark xvi. 17. Ch. v. 12.—V. 44. Ch. iv. 32, 34.

Ver. 37. They were pricked in their hearts] "Their hearts were pierced with compunction." Κατενύγησαν. See Heylin, Wetſtein, and Mintert.

Ver. 38. Repent, and be baptized] They are not only called on here to repent, but a ſubmiſſion alſo to the ordinance of baptiſm is required of them, in order to the forgiveneſs of their ſins; for though on their repenting and believing, they were, according to the tenor of the Goſpel covenant, intitled to the remiſſion of their ſins; yet as Chriſt had, for wiſe reaſons, appointed this ſolemn rite, as a token of their taking up the Chriſtian profeſſion in a publick manner, there could have been no ſufficient evidence of the truth of their repentance and faith, if this precept of Chriſt had not been obeyed. Vitringa has taken a great deal of pains to ſhew, that the phraſe here tranſlated, in the name of Jeſus Chriſt, ſignifies not only "being numbered among thoſe who are called by his name," but "profeſſing to devote themſelves to the glory of it." The miraculous gifts of the Holy Ghoſt were various, as appears from the firſt Epiſtle to the Corinthians, and were variouſly diſpenſed. If all the perſons whom the Apoſtle addreſſes, received this gift of the Holy Ghoſt, to one might be imparted the gift of prophecy, to another wiſdom, to another the power of working miracles; thoſe who were intended for the propagation of the Goſpel being endued with the extraordinary gifts; and thoſe who were not ſeparated to that office, receiving only the ordinary ones; but all of them poſſeſſing ſuch, as were ſufficient to manifeſt their faith, to enable them to perſevere in it, to illuſtrate the Goſpel diſpenſation, and to ſet it in a conſpicuous light. See Vitringa's Obſerv. Sacr. lib. iii. cap. 22. Hammond, and Benſon, vol. i. ch. i. ſect. 3, &c. where he has largely conſidered the ſpiritual gifts, and miraculous powers peculiar to the Apoſtles, and common to them, with other Chriſtians.

Ver. 39. For the promiſe is unto you, &c.] Conſidering that the gift of the Holy Ghoſt had been mentioned juſt before, it ſeems moſt natural to interpret this as a reference to the paſſage in Joel above recited; where God promiſes the effuſion of the Spirit on their ſons and their daughters: But if the promiſe be interpreted as referring to a remoter clauſe, the forgiveneſs of their ſins, this whole verſe muſt be taken in a greater latitude, as having reſpect to the encouragement which all future converts and their children had, to expect the benefits of the Goſpel. In this view it would much favour infant baptiſm, as many writers on the ſubject have largely ſhewn. Since Peter as yet knew nothing of the intended calling of the Gentiles, he could only mean by the words, to all afar off, that the Goſpel ſhould be preached to all the diſperſed of Iſrael, in diſtant nations; but the Spirit of God might have a further view; "The words, ſays Dr. Heylin, refer to time as well as place: The promiſes alſo to us and to our children; words which imply a benefit, include the accepting of it: In this ſenſe the word call is uſed in this verſe, and in 1 Cor. i. 24. that is, "they who obey the call." See Grotius, Doddridge, and Calmet.

Ver. 40. Save yourſelves, &c.] That is, "See that you lay theſe things to heart; receiving them with ſuch regard, as the importance of the caſe requires. Renounce that obſtinate unbelief, in which you join with thoſe who crucified Chriſt; and be ye ſaved (Σώθητε) from that ruin which will quickly come upon this perverſe and depraved generation." See on ver. 47.

Ver. 41. There were added unto them about three thouſand ſouls] Προσετέθησαν, rendered there were added, emphatically ſignifies, "to paſs over to a body of men;" and implies that theſe perſons renounced their former religious profeſſion, and embraced that of the Apoſtles. Dr. Waterland renders it, There came over, or acceded. Elſner in his note on this place has ſhewn, that ſouls often ſignifies perſons in the Greek and Latin claſſics, and that Jamblicus, in his life of Pythagoras, has exactly imitated this paſſage, in the account he gives of that philoſopher's ſucceſs in Italy, as proſelyting two thouſand by one diſcourſe; engaging them to continue with him, frequently worſhipping in the temples, and ſharing their goods in common, as theſe primitive Chriſtians did. Facts, of which we have no manner of convincing evidence, and which were probably intended to ſlur Chriſtianity, by an invidious compariſon. It has been commonly aſſerted, that the three thouſand mentioned in the text were converted by one ſermon; but it is probable, that whilſt St. Peter was preaching to the Jews of Judea, in the Syriac language, the other Apoſtles were preaching at ſome ſmall diſtance, much to the ſame purpoſe, in other languages; and it is not to be imagined that none of them but Peter ſhould be bleſſed, as the means of converting ſouls; not to inſiſt upon it, that he himſelf might deliver ſeveral diſcourſes this day to different audiences, when the concourſe of people was ſo great, and their languages ſo various. The late ſufferings of our Lord, the preſent miracle of languages, the authority of the ſpeakers, and, above all, the efficacy of the Holy Spirit, greatly contributed to this numerous converſion. This remarkable circumſtance not only confirmed the truth of the Apoſtles, in laying claim to the inſpiration of the Holy Ghoſt, but likewiſe ſerved as a proof to them of the reality of it, and as an encouragement to undertake that office, for which it qualified them. With theſe credentials from heaven, even a poor fiſherman of Galilee, might appear with dignity before the high-prieſt and ſanhedrim of the Jews; aſſerting boldly, that God had made that Jeſus, whom they had crucified, both Lord and Chriſt, and making good this aſſertion by proving that he was riſen from the dead,—ſtrange and ſupernatural as it might ſeem,—not only by his own teſtimony, and that of his brethren, the the Apoſtles and diſciples of Jeſus, by whom he was ſeen forty days after his paſſion; but by innumerable inſtances of a power in like manner ſuperior to nature, derived upon them from him, and exerciſed by them in his name. From the Scriptures alſo might the ſame ignorant Galilean ſhew, againſt the traditions of the elders, the learning of the ſcribes, and the prejudices of the whole Jewiſh nation, that the humble, ſuffering Jeſus, was the mighty, triumphant Meſſiah, ſpoken of by the prophets; ſince if, with a reference to the interpretation of thoſe prophecies, any doubt could have ariſen among the people, to whoſe expoſitions they ſhould ſubmit,—to thoſe of the ſcribes and elders, or thoſe of the Apoſtles,—the latter had to produce, in ſupport of their authority, the atteſtation of the Spirit, by whom thoſe prophets were inſpired, now ſpeaking through their mouths in all the languages of the earth. And with regard to that other point, of infinitely harder digeſtion to the Jews; namely, the calling the uncircumciſed Gentiles to an equal participation of the kingdom of God, and conſequently the aboliſhing circumciſion, and the whole ceremonial law;—the Apoſtles were furniſhed with an argument to which all the rabbies were not able to reply, by the Holy Ghoſt's beſtowing upon the Gentile converts to Chriſtianity, the ſame heavenly gifts as he had conferred at the beginning upon the believing Jews. See Weſt on the reſurrection, p. 134. Bos, Gataker, and Elſner's Obſervations, vol. i. p. 375.

Ver. 42. And they continued ſtedfaſtly, &c.] This may intimate, on the one hand, that many efforts were made to ſhake their reſolution; and, on the other, that upon fuller enquiry they found all things as the Apoſtles had repreſented. Breaking of bread, is a phraſe which in the New Teſtament ſignifies, both eating common meals, and celebrating the Lord's ſupper. It ſeems that the Lord's ſupper was here intended; becauſe it is joined with prayer. They conſtantly attended upon the teaching of the Apoſtles, in ſtrict communion, and the exerciſe of the moſt affectionate friendſhip towards each other; uniting in the duties of piety, in receiving the Lord's ſupper, as well as offering up their united prayers and ſupplications unto God. Dr. Heylin reads, after the Vulgate, In the communion of breaking bread.

Ver. 43. And fear came upon every ſoul] A reverential fear, mixed with admiration and reſpect. Dr. Heylin reads the verſe, And the minds of all men were ſtruck with awe, at the many wonders and miracles which were wrought by the Apoſtles.

Ver. 44, 45. And had all things common] Peculiar reaſons made this community of goods eligible at that time; not only as ſo many ſojourners, who had come from other parts, would juſtly be deſirous and parted them to all men, as every man had need.

46 And they continuing daily with one accord in the temple, and breaking bread from houſe to houſe, did eat their meat with gladneſs and ſingleneſs of heart.

47 Praiſing God, and having favour with all the people. And the Lord added to the church daily ſuch as ſhould be ſaved.

Ver. 45. Iſai. lviii. 7.—V. 46. Ch. i. 14. Luke xxiv. 53. Ch. v. 42. Ch. xx. 7. Or, at home.—V. 47. Luke ii. 52. Ch. iv. 33. Rom. xiv. 18. Ch. v. 14.

to continue at Jeruſalem much longer than they intended, when they came up to the feaſt, in order that they might gain a thorough knowledge of the Goſpel;—but as the proſpect likewiſe of the Roman conqueſts, which, according to Chriſt's known prediction, were ſoon to ſwallow up all Jewiſh property, would of courſe diſpoſe many more readily to ſell their lands. But the New Teſtament abounds with paſſages, which plainly ſhew this was never intended for a general practice: The Gentiles did not fall into it when the Goſpel came to them; and none of St. Paul's Epiſtles contain intimations, or directions for ſuch a practice. The Jewiſh converts acted thus at this time and place, though not by command, yet doubtleſs with the approbation of the Apoſtles; and the moſt probable reaſon for it was this, they knew that Chriſt had foretold the deſtruction of their country, which ſhould come upon it before that generation was paſſed away, and therefore they thought it proper, while there was an opportunity, to improve to the beſt uſe their eſtates, which they ſhould not long enjoy, by relieving the poorer brethren, and by enabling the firſt teachers to purſue their travels from place to place. So that none can reaſonably imagine that the number of Chriſtian converts, even then at Jeruſalem, is to be accounted for by a deſire to ſhare in theſe divided goods; for it is evident, that as the portion each could have would be very ſmall, ſo the hardſhips to be endured for a Chriſtian profeſſion would ſoon counterbalance ſuch advantages: And accordingly we find the converts at Jeruſalem were ſoon reduced to ſuch neceſſitous circumſtances, as to need relief by the contributions of their Gentile brethren. Candour would rather lead men to argue the inconteſtible evidence of the Goſpel, from its prevailing on the profeſſors of it to part with their eſtates to relieve perſons, who, except in the community of their faith, had no particular claim to their regard. If ſuch inſtances were numerous, this argument is ſtrengthened in proportion; and if they be ſuppoſed few, the objection is proportionably weakened: However, the preſent is moſt certainly a noble and eminent inſtance of that diſintereſtedneſs, ſelf-denial, and benevolence, which the Goſpel was deſigned to produce in the minds of men; and this is indeed the true Chriſtian ſpirit, which is carefully to be cultivated by ſuch as profeſs themſelves the diſciples of Jeſus, in every age and nation; though they are not obliged to exert it in the ſame kind or degree. See Chriſt's prayer for the unity of his diſciples, John xvii. particularly ver. 21. Jortin's Remarks, Doddridge, and Benſon.

Ver. 46. They, continuing daily with one accord] Hitherto none of theſe Chriſtian converts neglected the Jewiſh worſhip, but frequented the courts of the temple daily, at the uſual hours of prayer and devotion; for they moſt probably reckoned that they were only to ſuperadd Chriſtianity to Judaiſm, and that both the religious and civil parts of the law of Moſes ſtill continued obligatory; it is evident from the circumſtances of the times, that theſe converts could not communicate or receive the Euchariſt in the temple; where then could they receive it, but in their own houſes? And as the expreſſion from houſe to houſe, ſeems to be peculiar, this peculiarity cannot be accounted for, but upon ſuppoſition, that the preceding words relate to the Euchariſt; becauſe if they refer only to a common meal, the peculiarity is loſt, and the expreſſion from houſe to houſe is ſuperfluous and unneceſſary. Dr. Heylin renders the verſe thus, being unanimouſly conſtant in their daily attendance upon publick worſhip in the temple, and at the breaking of bread at home, they received nouriſhment with joy and ſimplicity of heart. "By the breaking of bread, ſays he, is meant the celebration of the Euchariſt; and this, with their worſhip in the temple, being ſpoken of as the occaſions of their nouriſhment, we conclude that nouriſhment to beſpiritual; as Hebr. v. 12, 14. 1 Cor. iii. 2, &c." Κατ' οικον, rendered from houſe to houſe, may either ſignify this, or, as Dr. Heylin has tranſlated it, at home, or in the houſe, that is, in the houſe where they had their upper room: the latter ſeems the preferable ſenſe.

Ver. 47. And having favour with all the people] Some would tranſlate the original exerciſing or ſhewing charity towards all the people; which the Greek will certainly bear, and which ſeems to be favoured by the 33d and 34th verſes of the fourth chapter, as well as by the reaſon of the thing; for as the generality of the Jews were profeſſed enemies to Chriſt and his diſciples, it is not eaſy to ſee how they could have been in favour with ALL the people. The Syriac verſion reads, They gave alms before all the people. The words τὺς σωζομένυς, rendered ſuch as ſhould be ſaved, ſignify properly the ſaved, ſuch as were now ſaved, or entered in the ſure way to mercy and ſalvation. See ver. 40. where St. Peter adviſed them, σώθητε, be ye ſaved, from this untoward generation. A reformed harlot is called, by Sophocles, σώζομενη, one that was ſaved. Pricæus quotes the table of Cebes, as uſing the words οἱ σώζωμενοι for the reformed. The abandoned, or incorrigibly wicked, are called the loſt, απολλυμενοι, 2 Cor. 43. The reformed are here called the ſaved, σώζομενοι. Theſe two ſorts of perſons are ſet in oppoſition to each other, 1 Cor. i. 18. 2 Cor. ii. 15. Thoſe who are ſaved or recovered from vice to virtue, will alſo be admitted to eternal ſalvation; but the word σωζομενυς ſeems here to denote their being ſaved from vice, reformed, or well diſpoſed for a reformation. See Hammond, Beza, and Benſon. As Chriſt was ſacrificed at the time of the Jewiſh paſſover, ſo we have obſerved on the former part of this chapter, that the new law of grace was given from mount Sion, at the time when the law of Moſes was given from mount Sinah—at the feaſt of pentecoſt, when the Apoſtles having received the firſt fruits of the Spirit, gathered in three thouſand ſouls, whom they preſented unto God and the Lamb, hallowed or anointed with the unction of the Spirit, as a kind of firſt fruits of the new creation. Nor did they want the feaſting and the joy uſual at the great feſtival of the pentecoſt; for the rich among them ſold their poſſeſſions and their goods, and raiſed a plentiful fund for the common benefit of the poorer Chriſtians, while they kept together at Jeruſalem; and they with harmony and unanimity not only frequented the temple worſhip every day, but feaſted alſo together in their upper room, with gladneſs and ſincerity of heart, praiſing God in the moſt joyous and affectionate manner, and ſhewing the utmoſt charity towards all. And then they proceeded to gather in and to compleat their great harveſt at Jeruſalem. Thus were the figures and prophecies which went before concerning him remarkably fulfilled in Chriſt and the Chriſtian diſpenſation. See Benſon.

REFLECTIONS ON THE DESCENT OF THE HOLY GHOST, &c.

By this miraculous effuſion of the Holy Spirit upon the Apoſtles, they were qualified for the converſion of mankind, the Chriſtian church was completely eſtabliſhed; and all thoſe virtues and excellencies which have made the names of thoſe immediate diſciples of our Lord ſo precious in the Chriſtian world, were at this time poured forth upon them. To this it is we owe the ſanctity of their lives, the purity of their doctrines, the power of their miracles, and all the glorious acts of their martyrdom.

All the other myſteries of the Goſpel prepare the way for this, which is the end of the incarnation, the fruit of the death of Chriſt, and the full accompliſhment of all his deſigns. He had indeed already formed the body of his church, while He was here on earth, converſing with and inſtructing his diſciples; but by this laſt act, the deſcent of the Holy Ghoſt, He infuſed a ſoul into that his myſtical body; he endowed it with a vigorous principle of life and action, a heart that would always correſpond and ſympathize with Him, its head. See 1 Cor. xii. 12, 13. For the ſame Holy Spirit which then deſcended upon the Apoſtles, does ſtill deſcend upon all the living members of Chriſt, according to his gracious promiſe in the laſt words of St. Matthew's Goſpel,—almoſt the laſt words which He ſpoke upon earth: Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world.

This promiſe is fulfilled in the miſſion of the Holy Ghoſt. Chriſt is now preſent in his church by his Spirit, which as it formerly deſcended upon the Apoſtles, ſo it ever ſhall deſcend upon all his true diſciples unto the end of the world. The ſacred fountain ſtill ſtands open, and nothing is retrenched from the bounteous efflux of divine grace, but only the outward prodigies which attended it at the beginning at its courſe. Now indeed it flows on, as ſome peaceful river, through opened channels, with a ſilent ſtream, and marking its way only by the riches it ſpreads in the parts it paſſeth through: But the ſeaſon here celebrated was the time of its Eruption, if I may ſo ſpeak, when it rapidly iſſued forth from the divine ſource to repleniſh the Apoſtles, who were the conduits prepared to receive and convey it forward to the lateſt generations. At that time, as was uſual upon ſuch extraordinary occaſions, it manifeſted itſelf even outwardly, by ſenſible repreſentations, expreſſive of its energy, and the effects it produces in the ſpirits of men.

Theſe ſenſible repreſentations appeared in the two active elements, air and fire, which kindle and keep up the life of nature. For when the Apoſtles were aſſembled on the day of pentecoſt, i. e. the day whereon the law was given to the Jews, a double prodigy appeared; a ſound was heard from heaven, as of an impetuous wind filling the houſe, and ſeveral diſtinct flames were ſeen, one of which reſided over each of the Apoſtles. Now theſe are two proper emblems or ſymbolical repreſentations; and, in order to judge of their ſignificancy, we are to obſerve, that there is ſuch an analogy and intimate connection between the material and the ſpiritual worlds, that not only the names of things viſible ſerve to denote things inviſible, and are the only names we have for them, which plainly argues a notorious analogy upon which ſuch uſe of the names is grounded; but alſo ſome extraordinary tranſactions in the higher order paſs on and impreſs themſelves upon the lower, ſo as to affect outward nature in a ſimilar manner; ſuch, I mean, as ſomehow anſwer to what is then accompliſhed in the ſupernatural ſtate. Thus, for inſtance, a few weeks before this deſcent of the Holy Ghoſt, while our Lord was hanging on the croſs, the ſun was eclipſed; and, when He expired, outward nature was convulſed with an earthquake. And ſhe ſympathized again, yet to a different purpoſe, in a ſecond earthquake at his reſurrection. And now, when his Spirit with the plenitude of divine power was deſcending upon his Apoſtles, a ſound from heaven was heard, as of an impetuous wind, and diſtinct flames were ſeen over the heads of the Apoſtles.

It will be proper here, as far as our ſcanty knowledge will permit, to trace out the analogy wherein theſe two ſymbols are grounded.

Concerning the firſt, it has been obſerved, that among thoſe parts of the material world which are inviſible, and whoſe exiſtence we diſcover only by their effects, there is ſcarce any thing more ſubtil, more active, and of greater efficacy than wind, i. e. air, in motion, or ſpirit, which is the ſame thing, according to the primary ſenſe of the word. Hence, in the common uſe of moſt languages, the name of wind or ſpirit ſerves to expreſs thoſe things, which, being not diſcernable to us by reaſon of the ſubtility or fineneſs of their ſubſtance, are yet conceived to be moved with great agility, and endued with great force. So naturaliſts, when they ſpeak of that which is moſt abſtruſe, moſt agile, and moſt operative in any liquor or other body, call it ſpirit. And for the ſame reaſon our ſouls are called ſpirits, for the ſubtility of their nature, and thoſe vital powers wherewith they actuate our bodies.

In regard to our capacity and manner of conceiving things, the holy Scriptures have uſed this term Spirit to expreſs even the adorable and incomprehenſible Deity, ſignifying his moſt ſimple nature, and moſt powerful energy: his moſt ſimple nature, I ſay, which cannot poſſibly be the object of any of our ſenſes; and his moſt powerful energy, which pervades and actuates all things.

This name Spirit, as it is common to the whole Godhead, ſo it is peculiarly applied to the third perſon of the ever-bleſſed Trinity, ſtiled, by way of eminence, the Holy Spirit, and the operations of God towards men are in an eſpecial manner aſcribed to Him.

Now in all languages commonly known, the operation of a ſuperior mind upon an inferior to raiſe and invigorate it, is expreſſed by the metaphor of inſpiration, i. e. breathing into; and the general conſent of mankind in the uſe of this metaphor demonſtrates its fitneſs and propriety. And therefore when the infinite mind vouchſafed to communicate itſelf with ſuch plenitude and force to the minds of his choſen ſervants aſſembled on the day of pentecoſt, this ſound from heaven of a mighty ruſhing wind, or torrent of myſterious air, was a proper ſymbol to indicate its deſcent; as the other miraculous appearance by the element of fire was proper to repreſent the effects which it produces.

To enlighten, to purify, and to warm, are the properties of fire. Now if we transfer theſe to the ſpiritual world, the light of the ſoul is truth, the purity of the ſoul is holineſs, the warmth or heat of the ſoul is an active vigorous ardour to ſurmount obſtacles, and zealouſly proſecute the end propoſed. The Holy Ghoſt produces theſe three effects, and accordingly the Scriptures deſcribe Him as a Spirit of truth, of holineſs, and of power. As a Spirit of truth, He enlightens the minds of the faithful, and leads them into all truth fit for them to know: as a Spirit of holineſs, by an intimate union with their hearts, He reforms them, and makes them holy: as a Spirit of power, he gives them vigour to reſiſt temptation, ſtrength to bear their croſſes, and full ability to work out their ſalvation. We ſhall take theſe three properties of the Holy Ghoſt for three heads, to be treated ſeparately.

Firſt, He is a Spirit of truth, and ſo our Lord ſtiled Him when he foretold his deſcent upon the Apoſtles, I have many things to ſay unto you, but ye cannot bear them now: howbeit, when He, the Spirit of truth is come, He will guide you into all truth. Men may teach us divers truths; but to teach all truth is the diſtinguiſhing prerogative of the Spirit of God. There are truths, and thoſe too of the utmoſt importance, which fleſh and blood have not, cannot reveal: truths which the world cannot receive, which even the Apoſtles themſelves could not bear, much leſs reliſh, approve, and practiſe before they had received the Holy Ghoſt. Ye cannot bear them now, ſaid Chriſt, in the paſſage laſt quoted; they ſhock corrupt nature, and our paſſions recoil at the mention of them. For, beſides the myſteries of our holy religion, the deep things of God, which cannot be duly apprehended but by minds enlightened by the Spirit of God; beſides theſe, I ſay, there are many moral truths, whereof we cannot be fully and effectually perſuaded but by the immediate operation of the Holy Ghoſt: ſuch are thoſe in the beginning of our Lord's ſermon on the mount, "That the poor in ſpirit, the meek, thoſe that mourn and are perſecuted, are bleſſed above other men. That it is better to pull out our eyes, and cut off our hands, than uſe either in the commiſſion of ſin. That our enemies are amiable, and that the moſt provoking injury ought not only to be forgiven, but requited with benevolence." Theſe, and others that might be named, are certain and ſaving truths; but no mortal man can convince us of them; I mean with a full, laſting, operative conviction, ſuch as ſhall determine our practical judgement, and become the habitual rule of our conduct. All demonſtration of reaſon, and arts of perſuaſion are vain to this end; and it is in vain that we ourſelves endeavour to reaſon ourſelves into theſe truths. The Holy Ghoſt only can work this effectual conviction in our minds, and we muſt ſeek this conviction from Him by prayer, and opening our minds to his operations, or we ſhall periſh in our errors. The ſame power only that made our minds, can reform them. That holy Spirit of God, which at the firſt creation brooded over the rude chaos, and produced this orderly world out of darkneſs and confuſion, muſt alſo preſide in our minds to make the new creation of virtue, to bring forth light out of our darkneſs, truth out of our errors. St. Paul alludes to this, where he ſays, God, who commanded the light to ſhine out of darkneſs, hath ſhined in our hearts, to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God.

Such are the advantages of the deſcent of the divine Spirit; ſuch are the privileges to which we are admitted, if we do not love darkneſs more than light, becauſe our deeds are evil, and we reſolve to continue in them. God's ſchool now ſtands open to all, his Spirit deſcends to be our maſter, our teacher, and will infallibly lead us into all ſaving truth, if we devoutly reſign ourſelves to his direction.

We cannot have a plainer proof of this than in the hiſtory of the Day. Conſider the Apoſtles, ſee how wondrous a change was wrought in them by the illumination of this Holy Spirit. Obſerve what they were before, what after his deſcent, and learn from thence what ineſtimable Advantages we are intitled to by Chriſtianity.

Three long years had the Apoſtles been in the ſchool of Chriſt, and had tired even His patience with their groſs ſtupidity and incapacity to apprehend his ſpiritual doctrine. Though they had made ſome progreſs in the ways of truth by leaving their little all to follow Him: though they daily heard his precepts, and ſaw his practice, that living comment upon his doctrine: Yet nothing could rectify their falſe notions, nothing could wean their vain deſires of ſecular grandeur and magnificence. When our Lord informed them of the neceſſity of ſufferings, the benefits of poverty, the bleſſedneſs of perſecution, it was all a riddle to them. They underſtood none of theſe things; theſe ſayings were hid from them, neither knew they the things that were ſpoken, Luke xviii. 34. Even after the reſurrection of Chriſt the cloud was ſtill upon their minds, and they were yet hankering after an immediate poſſeſſion of worldly grandeur and dominion. Lord, ſay they, wilt thou at this time reſtore again the kingdom to Iſrael? Acts i. 6. Chriſt no longer oppoſed their carnal prejudices, but referred them to the Holy Ghoſt for full information and conviction.

According to the promiſe of Chriſt the Holy Ghoſt came. Immediately all darkneſs, error, and miſtake fled before Him. They underſtood, they believed, they taught, they practiſed, they were ready to lay down their lives for thoſe truths, which before they could not receive, they could not bear, nor endure. The croſs of Chriſt was no longer an offence to them, but their boaſt and their glory; and they rejoiced, that they themſelves were counted worthy to partake of it, and to ſuffer ſhame for his name.

Such and ſo effectual were the fruits of the Spirit enlightening the minds of the Apoſtles as a Spirit of truth. We are in the next place to conſider Him as a Spirit of holineſs. He is not only by way of eminence the holy Spirit, but alſo the hallowing, i. e. ſanctifying Spirit, from whence all holineſs in the creatures is derived. It would be endleſs to mention the places of Scripture where this property is aſcribed to him, I am more concerned how I may explain to you the preciſe meaning of the word holineſs, which is to be conſidered in two reſpects; firſt, as it is proper to God alone, and ſecondly, as it is the duty of a creature. According to the firſt ſenſe, we ſay in the communion ſervice, Thou only art holy: as Thou only art the Lord. This holineſs peculiar to the deity, conſiſts in the ſingularity of his nature, even that ſurpaſſing tranſcendent excellence, which leaves all creatures at an infinite diſtance beneath his Majeſty.

It is a common error in men's notion of God, that they conceive of him as one Being among many: greater indeed, and higher, and better than all the reſt, but yet as one among others, one that may be named with them, and however ſuperior, yet not abſolutely diſtinct from the reſt. This is a wrong conception, for God is not only Unus, but Unicus. He is One Alone, the Firſt, without any ſecond or like. But this is a ſubject which no ſpeculations can do juſtice to, and which ſhould naturally ſink the mind into the profoundeſt devotion. Suffice it then to ſay, that this ſublime exaltation and infinite diſtance of the Creator from the creatures, conſtitutes his holineſs. The Hebrew word ſignifies ſeparation, and when applied to God, imports that unconceivable elevation whereby He is diſtinguiſhed, and ſtands alone in his univerſe. Thus we read; There is none holy as the Lord: for there is none beſide Thee. There is none beſide Him: He is a whole genus by himſelf, and this ſurpaſſing, ſingular excellence, which excludes all poſſible compariſon, conſtitutes his holineſs, and the exerciſe of it tends ſolely to the promoting his own glory. He is glorious in (rather by) holineſs, ſays the Pſalmiſt; and the angels inceſſantly celebrate Him by this title, Holy, holy, holy Lord God of hoſts: heaven and earth are full of thy glory. The holineſs of God is founded, as was ſaid, in the ſupremacy of his nature; and it is perpetually exerciſed in maintaining that ſupremacy, in treating Himſelf worthily, exerting all his attributes, and directing all his acts, to one certain point, which is his glory, the exaltation of his nature, the effulgency of his excellence. The reaſon why God does all things for his own glory is, becauſe that is the end moſt worthy of God, his ſupreme excellence requires it of him as a due to himſelf by the eternal laws of righteouſneſs: truth and juſtice make this neceſſary in the Deity. The glory of God therefore being the end moſt worthy of God, and all his acts centering therein, all his acts are holy, i. e. pure from all allay of inferior motives, from every thing that does not inflexibly promote that end.

Such is the holineſs of God. The creatures too are holy, when they proſecute the ſame end that God does, the end for which He created them, i. e. the glory of God. We call things or perſons holy, when they are ſeparated from common uſe, and dedicated to the ſervice of God, devoted to his glory; to apply them to any other end is to prophane them. All the laws of God are boundaries ſet to fence in the way that leads to God's glory, and we never tranſgreſs thoſe laws, but we at the ſame time deviate from it. And therefore St. Paul defines ſin to be a falling ſhort of the glory of God. All have ſinned, and come ſhort of the glory of God. Holineſs, on the contrary, aims all our actions aright, making the glory of God our ſcope and deſign. In a word, every action directed to that end is an holy action, and leads us on towards the participation of the divine glory which we had regard to in performing it, and when it is ſaid that the Holy Ghoſt ſanctifies Chriſtians, the meaning is, that He infuſes this generous motive, extinguiſhing the narrow principles of covetouſneſs, pride, and ſenſuality, and exalting our nature to the noble diſintereſted purpoſe of glorifying our Maker.

CHAP. III.

Peter, preaching to the people that came to ſee a lame man reſtored to his feet, profeſſeth the cure not to have been wrought by his or John's own power, or holineſs, but by God, and his Son Jeſus, and through faith in his name: withal reprehending them for crucifying Jeſus. Which becauſe they did it through ignorance, and that thereby were fulfilled God's determinate counſel, and the ſcriptures, he exhorteth them by repentance and faith to ſeek remiſſion of their ſins, and ſalvation in the ſame Jeſus.

NOW Peter and John went up together into the temple, at the hour of prayer, being the ninth hour.

2 And a certain man lame from his mother's womb was carried, whom they laid daily at the gate of the temple which is called Beautiful, to aſk alms of them that entered into the temple;

Ver. 1. Ch. ii. 46. Pſ. lv. 17.—V. 2. Ch. xiv. 8. John ix. 8.

Thoſe corrupt motives of covetouſneſs, ſenſuality, and pride cleave intimately to our ſouls in the preſent depraved ſtate, rendering all actions that proceed from them, unholy: and the ſpirit of God does then ſanctify us when it diſengages us from thoſe corrupt motives. To waſh, cleanſe, baptize, and ſanctify, are commonly ſynonimous in Scripture; hence the phraſe of being baptized with the Holy Ghoſt, which is elſewhere called being baptized with fire, to ſignify the univerſal and intimate purification of the inmoſt ſprings of action thereby. With this view the prophet Malachi compares the Spirit to a refiner of gold or ſilver, deſtroying the droſs, and ſeparating all heterogeneous particles from thoſe metals by force of fire, till they are reduced to a perfect purity. Thus the ſpirit ſanctifies the ſoul, by aboliſhing all ſordid inclinations, by purging away the multiplicity of carnal deſires, and reducing all the powers of the mind to one ſimple conſtant purſuit, viz. that of God's glory. This renders the ſoul holy, i. e. pure, all of a kind, concenter'd in the end of its creation, even the glory of its maker.

To ſhew how the Apoſtles were thus ſanctified, were to relate their hiſtory, which is but one continued narrative of their holineſs. They were purified from all corrupt principles of action, I mean not abſolutely, and in that ſupreme degree which is peculiar to heaven, but yet in an eminent and extraordinary manner. The love of riches moved them not: for they had all the treaſures of the faithful laid at their feet, without any other concern than for the right diſtribution of them in charity. The love of eaſe and pleaſure moved them not: for their life was ſpent in inceſſant labours: they traverſed the face of the earth, doing good, and ſuffering evil in all the parts they viſited. The love of glory and applauſe moved them not, for they gladly ſuffered reproach in their maſter's cauſe: and when divine honours were offered to two of them at Lyſtra, they rent their clothes, and expreſſed a greater concern for the miſplaced reverence of the multitude, than for all the ill uſage they had ever met with. And laſtly, the love of life itſelf moved them not, when the glory of God required them to reſign it. They rejoiced that they were accounted worthy to die in ſo great and good a cauſe. They went chearfully to death, although the wit and malice of their perſecutors had ſo circumſtanced it with a horrid variety of tortures, that only the manner of dying was the puniſhment, and death itſelf the deliverance.

Such was the holineſs of the Apoſtles; 'twas the purity of their hearts, the unity of their deſires, all meeting in one point, the glory of their maker.

This one thing only they deſired: this one thing only they purſued: they purſued it through poverty, infamy, and diſtreſs; through numberleſs toils and torments. Death in vain came athwart their paſſage, they leaped the gulph, and were received into glory, that glory for which they had been ſo zealous.

If we would arrive where they are aſcended, we muſt follow their ſteps; we muſt be holy, as they were holy, i. e. we muſt abſolutely prefer the glory of God to all other conſiderations; for heaven ſtands open to none but ſaints; and without holineſs no man ſhall ſee the Lord.

That we may not be diſheartened in ſo arduous a work, there are the greateſt encouragements in the third place, namely, that this ſpirit of holineſs is alſo a ſpirit of power, inſpiring zeal, magnanimity, and fortitude, ſufficient to ſurmount all difficulties that occur in the arduous paths of duty. And of this alſo the Apoſtles were very remarkable inſtances.

Our Lord having had a long experience of their natural weakneſs and puſillanimity, when he appeared to them after his reſurrection, commanded them to live retired, and wait for the promiſe of the Father. But, (ſaid he) ye ſhall receive power, after that the Holy Ghoſt is come upon you, and then ye ſhall be witneſſes unto Me, both in Jeruſalem, and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermoſt parts of the earth. And his prediction was glorioufly accompliſhed as ſoon as the Holy Ghoſt came. The zeal which inflamed their hearts, found a ready channel into their tongues; their tongues, were as tongues of fire, communicating their ſacred ardour to the hearts of all that heard them.

That conceit of the ancients, who repreſented their famous orator as brandiſhing flames of lightening with a thunderbolt, was never ſo nearly verified as in the Apoſtles: they flaſhed conviction into the minds of their hearers, and bore down all oppoſition of reluctant paſſion or prejudice with a force and energy moſt irreſiſtible. They made thoſe very Jews, who had lately condemned our Lord, and with bloody cries ſolicited Pilate for his crucifixion, now condemn themſelves with bitter remorſe and compunction. It is ſaid, they were pricked in the heart, and ſaid unto Peter, and the reſt of the Apoſtles, men and brethren, What ſhall we do? Three thouſand were thus converted at one ſermon, which, conſidering the natural Weakneſs of the preachers, with the rooted prejudices, and noted obſtinacy of the audience, we may account one of the greateſt miracles of our religion.

The apoſtles bear witneſs of Chriſt, not before his friends, or even perſons indifferent, but thoſe that murdered Him. Thoſe Apoſtles, who had deſerted him ſhamefully at his being firſt ſeized, ſo far were they from bearing witneſs for him at his trial: Peter in particular, who, trembling before a ſervant-maid, had three times renounced him with oaths; now ſtanding up with the eleven, lift up his voice and ſaid: Ye men of Judea, and all ye that dwell at Jeruſalem, be this known unto you, and hearken to my words. You ſee he makes no timorous apology, he uſes none of the little arts to gains benevolence; but, conſcious of the divine authority, wherewith he ſtood inveſted, he charges his hearers with all the enormity of their crime. Ye have killed (ſaid he) the Lord of Life: He tells them, that the perſon, whom they had with wicked hands crucified and ſlain, was the Meſſias: and he proves him to be ſo, by bearing teſtimony of his reſurrection: Him God hath raiſed up from the dead, whereof we are witneſſes. And he backs his own evidence with irrefragable arguments from Scripture, which he at the ſame time explained with ſuch force and perſpicuity, as extorted aſſent from the moſt obdurate. Is this the illiterate fiſher-man? Is this the carnal diſciple who preſumed to rebuke his Lord, when He firſt mentioned the croſs to him? Is this the fugitive. apoſtate, abjuring Peter? But with God all things are poſſible: Peter had now received the Holy Ghoſt, the Spirit of Power, whoſe property it is to ſtrengthen us with might in the inward man, to create a new heart, and renew a right ſpirit within us.

And thus have I endeavoured to repreſent this holy Spirit in his operations of truth, holineſs, and power.

It remains only that I add a word or two concerning the diſpoſition by which we muſt prepare our hearts to receive him: and this, as our Lord teaches us, is earneſt and perſevering prayer. We have his direction, Luke xi. Aſk, and it ſhall be given you; ſeek, and ye ſhall find; knock, and it ſhall be opened unto you.—If a ſon ſhall aſk bread of any of you that is a father, will he give him a ſtone? how much more ſhall your heavenly Father give his holy Spirit to them that aſk him? The terms you ſee are very eaſy, are highly reaſonable: if we do not perform them, we ſhall be without excuſe. But if by humble, fervent, inceſſant prayer we ſeek from our heavenly Father the gift of his Spirit, we ſhall infallibly receive it, we ſhall be enlightened, purified, and confirmed in all goodneſs, we ſhall advance from ſtrength to ſtrength, till we become meet to be partakers of the inheritance of the ſaints in light.

Chap. III. Ver. 1. Now Peter and John went up together, &c.] Ἐπὶ τὸ αὐτὸ,—About that time, according to Grotius and ſeveral others; as it does not ſeem to ſuit ſo well with the original, to take it to imply no more than that Peter and John went up together to the temple. It may ſuffice, once for all, to obſerve, that the Jews divided the time, from the riſing to the ſetting of the ſun, into twelve hours, which were conſequently, at different times of the year, of unequal length, as the days were longer or ſhorter. The third hour therefore was nine in the morning, and the ninth three in the afternoon; but not exactly: For the third was the middle ſpace between ſun-riſe and noon; which if the ſun roſe at five, (the earlieſt hour of its riſing in that climate) was half an hour after eight; if at ſeven, (the lateſt hour of its riſing there) was half an hour after nine, and ſo on. The chief hours of prayer were the third and ninth; at which ſeaſons the morning and evening ſacrifices were offered, and incenſe, as an emblem repreſenting prayer, burned on the golden altar. Though by the death of Chriſt all ſacrifices, and other things required in the ceremonial law, were utterly aboliſhed, and a new covenant was introduced, yet that the weak might not be offended and eſtranged from his religion, our Lord ſuffered his diſciples to frequent the aſſemblies of the Jews, and in ſome points to comply with the obſervances of the law, till a more pure and ſpiritual form of worſhip could conveniently be eſtabliſhed. This is the reaſon why we find the Apoſtles ſo frequently in the temple, at the ſtated hours of prayer. See Grotius, Doddridge, and Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xiv. cap. 4.

Ver. 2. A certain man lame from his mother's womb] The inveteracy of 3 Who ſeeing Peter and John about to go into the temple, aſked an alms.

4 And Peter faſtening his eyes upon him, with John, ſaid, Look on us.

5 And he gave heed unto them, expecting to receive ſomething of them.

6 Then Peter ſaid, Silver and gold have I none; but ſuch as I have, give I thee: In the name of Jeſus Chriſt of Nazareth, riſe up and walk.

7 And he took him by the right hand, and lifted him up: and immediately his feet and ancle-bones received ſtrength.

8 And he leaping up, ſtood, and walked, and entered with them into the temple, walking, and leaping, and praiſing God.

9 And all the people ſaw him walking, and praiſing God:

10 And they knew that it was he which ſat for alms at the Beautiful gate of the temple: and they were filled with wonder and amazement at that which had happened unto him.

11 And as the lame man which was healed, held Peter and John, all the people ran together unto them in the porch that is called Solomon's, greatly wondering.

12 And when Peter ſaw it, he anſwered unto the people, Ye men of Iſrael, why marvel ye at this? or why look ye ſo earneſtly on us, as though by our own power or holineſs we had made this man to walk?

13 The God of Abraham, and of Iſaac, and of Jacob, the God of our fathers hath glorified his Son Jeſus: whom ye delivered up, and denied him in the preſence of Pilate, when he was determined to let him go.

14 But ye denied the Holy One, and the Juſt, and deſired a murderer to be granted unto you;

15 And killed the Prince of life, whom God hath raiſed from the dead; whereof we are witneſſes:

16 And his name through faith in his name hath made this man ſtrong, whom ye ſee and know: yea, the faith which is by him, hath given him this perfect ſoundneſs in the preſence of you all.

17 And now, brethren, I wot that through ignorance ye did it, as did alſo your rulers.

18 But thoſe things which God before had ſhewed by the mouth of all his prophets, that Chriſt ſhould ſuffer, he hath ſo fulfilled.

19 Repent ye therefore, and be converted, that your ſins may be blotted out, when the times of refreſſing ſhall come from the preſence of the Lord;

Ver. 6. Ch. iv. 10.—V. 10. Like John ix. 8.—V. 11. John x. 23. Ch. v. 12.—V. 13. Ch. v. 30. John xvii. 1. Matth. xxvii. 20. Mark xv. 11. Luke xxiii. 18. John xviii. 40. xix. 15.—V. 14. Rev. iii. 7. Ch. vii. 52. xxii. 14.—V. 15. Or, author, Hebr. ii. 10. Ch. ii. 24. Ch. ii. 32.—V. 17. Luke xxiii. 34. Ch. xiii. 27. 1 Cor. ii. 8. 1 Tim. i. 13.—V. 18. Luke xxiv. 44. Iſai. l. 6. liii. 5, &c. V. 19. Ch. ii. 38.

of this man's infirmity, the notoriety of it to moſt of the Jews, on account of the place where he was laid, not to mention other circumſtances which here occur, were ſufficient to prove the reality of the miracle, and to render it more conſpicuous. The gate here called beautiful, for its richneſs and curious workmanſhip, is by Joſephus called "the Corinthian gate." About one hundred and eighty years before this, the city of Corinth had been taken and burned by the Romans; and in the burning of the city, multitudes of ſtatues and images of braſs, gold, and ſilver being melted down and running together, thay made that mixture which from thence was called Corinthian braſs, and which the ancients valued above gold or ſilver. This gate on the eaſt ſide of the temple was made of that braſs, and it exceeded the other gates in its dimenſions, and in its workmanſhip, as well as in the richneſs of the metal, though moſt of them were covered over with ſilver or gold. It was thirty cubits high, and fifteen broad, and was added by Herod the great. See Joſeph. Jewiſh War, b. v. c. 5. Grotius, and Benſon.

Ver. 6. Silver and gold have I none] This was after the eſtates were ſold, ch. ii. 45. and plainly ſhews how far the Apoſtles were from enriching themſelves by the treaſures which paſſed through their hands. By his mentioning gold as well as ſilver, which a beggar like this could not expect to receive, he probably meant to ſpeak of himſelf, as continuing ſtill a poor man, and not merely to ſay that he had no gold about him. How unlike his ſuppoſed ſucceſſors are St. Peter's words and actions! Can the biſhop of Rome either ſay or do the ſame? See Reynold's Letters to a Deiſt, Nº. 3. p. 242.

Ver. 8. Walking, and leaping, and praiſing God] It was propheſied, Iſai. xxxv. 6. that the lame man ſhould leap as an hart. Now was that prophecy fulfilled, as well as by our Saviour's curing multitudes that had been lame. Nothing can be more beautifully deſcriptive of the wondering exultation, the joy and aſtoniſhment of this man, than the words before us.

Ver. 11. Held Peter and John] The man ſtill hung about his two benefactors, as fearing perhaps that he ſhould loſe the uſe of his limbs again, if he parted with them; for he could ſcarce yet, for joy, believe his own ſenſe and experience. See on John x. 23.

Ver. 13. The God of Abraham, &c.] This was wiſely introduced here by St. Peter in the beginning of his diſcourſe, that it might appear he taught no new religion inconſiſtent with the Moſaic, and was far from having the leaſt deſign to divert their regard for the God of Iſrael. Whom ye delivered up, was peculiarly addreſſed to the rulers and ſanhedrim; and denied,—renounced or diſowned him for your king, was more particularly addreſſed to the common people. See Grotius and Heinſius, Exercitat. Sacr. p. 254.

Ver. 15. Killed the prince of life] Even him to whom the Father had given to have life in himſelf, John v. 26. and whom he had impowered to give eternal life to thoſe who believed in him. There is a peculiar beauty and energy in the contraſt between their killing the prince of life and their interceding for a murderer, a deſtroyer of life. The Jews had the teſtimony of the prophets,—the prediction of Chriſt himſelf,—the evidence of the Roman ſoldiers, of his body's being no where to be found; of the women, the diſciples, and Apoſtles, to whom he had appeared, and who before the ſanhedrim bore witneſs to his reſurrection; and who, having juſt now wrought a miracle upon a lame man, declare that they had done it in the name of Jeſus of Nazareth, whom, ſay they, you have crucified, but God hath raiſed from the dead. This ſurely was evidence ſufficient to convince any reaſonable and unprejudiced perſon, and conſequently to acquit our Lord of the promiſe of giving that evil generation ſufficient proofs of his being riſen from the dead. See Grotius and Weſt.

Ver. 16. And his name, through faith in his name] And by faith in his name he hath ſtrengthened this man, whom you ſee and know; yea, his name, and the faith which is in him, hath given him this perfect ſoundneſs before you all. Heinſius. Dr. Heylin renders it, And his name, through our faith in it, hath procured ſtrength to this man, whom you ſee and know. The faith, I ſay, which is by him, hath effected this perfect cure, which you all behold.

Ver. 17. I wot that through ignorance] I know,—I am ſenſible, &c. Probably if it had not been ſo, they would have been immediately deſtroyed, or reſerved to vengeance, without any offer of pardon. Yet it is plain their ignorance, being in itſelf highly criminal, amidſt ſuch means of information, did not excuſe them from great guilt. See the note on John ix. 41.

Ver. 19, 21. Repent ye therefore, &c.] Dr. Benſon paraphraſes theſe verſes thus: "As there is great ground for hope and encouragement, let me intreat of you to repent, and immediately accept of Jeſus as the Meſſiah; that your ſins may be blotted out, and the happy and refreſhing times may come upon you from the preſence of the Lord. I ſpeak not concerning the ſafety and conſolation which the embracing Chriſtianity will at preſent afford you; but of the approach of that glorious time, when God ſhall ſend again this ſame Jeſus, who is appointed beforehand to be the judge of the world, 20 And he ſhall ſend Jeſus Chriſt, which before was preached unto you:

21 Whom the heaven muſt receive, until the times of reſtitution of all things, which God hath ſpoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets, ſince the world began.

22 For Moſes truly ſaid unto the fathers, A prophet ſhall the Lord your God raiſe up unto you, of your brethren, like unto me; him ſhall ye hear in all things whatſoever he ſhall ſay unto you.

23 And it ſhall come to paſs, that every ſoul which will not hear that prophet, ſhall be deſtroyed from among the people.

24 Yea, all the prophets from Samuel, and thoſe that follow after, as many as have ſpoken, have likewiſe foretold of theſe days.

25 Ye are the children of the prophets, and of the covenant which God made with our fathers, ſaying unto Abraham, And in thy ſeed ſhall all the kindreds of the earth be bleſſed.

26 Unto you firſt, God having raiſed up his Son Jeſus, ſent him to bleſs you in turning away every one of you from his iniquities.

Ver. 21. Matth. xvii. 11. Luke i. 70.—V. 22. Deut. xviii. 15, 18, 19. Ch. vii. 37.—V. 25. Gen. xii. 3. xviii. 18. xxii. 18. xxvi. 4.—V. 26. Ch. xiii. 46. Ver. 22.

and your Saviour, if you believe and obey him. I know you expect a temporal Meſſiah, to reign in this very age among you here upon earth, and to free you from your preſent ſubjection to the Romans; but in vain do you expect it: for the heavens have received him, and there he muſt continue till the grand time of the reſtoration of all things. Nor do I ſpeak of things wholly new and unheard of; for theſe things run though the prophets in general, from the beginning of the Moſaic diſpenſation, unto the ſealing up of prophecy at the death of Malachi." The phraſe may be blotted out, ver. 19. alludes to the eraſing any thing which is committed to writing. Inſtead of when the times of refreſhing ſhall come, the Greek ſhould be rendered, according to the above paraphraſe, that ſeaſons of refreſhment may come. As calamities are compared to drought and exceſſive heat in Scripture, ſo likewiſe deliverance from them is repreſented under the image of a cool and refreſhing breeze. Dr. Waterland renders the 20th verſe after many of the MSS, verſions, and fathers, And he ſhall ſend Jeſus Chriſt unto you, who was before deſigned or appointed thereunto; inſtead of προκεκηρυγμένον, reading προκεχειρισμένον. The word ἀποκαταστάσις, rendered reſtitution, may be well and properly explained of regulating the preſent diſorders in the moral world, and the ſeeming inequalities of providential diſpenſations. The word παντῶν, all his holy prophets, is not found in ſome of the beſt MSS and verſions. Since the world began, is in the original, ἀπ' αἰῶνος, that is, from the beginning, of what they uſually called the age then preſent, that is, of the Jewiſh diſpenſation: in oppoſition to which the kingdom of Chriſt was called αἰὼν μέλλων, the age to come. See on 2 Tim. iv. 16. To confirm this, it may be obſerved, that he here begins with Moſes, and ſaith nothing of the patriarchs before Moſes, particularly nothing of Abraham; but when the writers of the New Teſtament run back as high as Abraham, the phraſe then is, πρὸ χρόνων αἰωνίων, before the times under the law. See Benſon, Wetſtein, Lightfoot, &c.

Ver. 22, 23. A prophet ſhall the Lord, &c.] See the note on Deut. xviii. 15, &c. The word hear, ver. 23. ſignifies to obey. One cannot imagine a more maſterly addreſs than this, to warn the Jews of the dreadful conſequence of their infidelity, in the very words of Moſes their favourite prophet, out of a pretended zeal for whom they were ready to reject Chriſtianity, and to attempt its deſtruction. See Bullock, Jefferys, and Limborch's Conference with Orobio the Jew.

Ver. 24. From Samuel, &c.] All the prophets from Samuel, and as many as have ſpoken afterwards. Caſaubon. And as many of the following ones as have ſpoken. Wat. That there was no prophet between Moſes and Samuel, ſee Wotton's Miſna, vol. i, p. 50.

Ver. 26. Unto you firſt] Accordingly the Goſpel was, by the grace of our bleſſed Redeemer, every where offered firſt to the Jews. Had it been otherwiſe, humanly ſpeaking, many who were converted in this method might have been exaſperated and loſt. Ἀναστήσας, here rendered having raiſed up, does not refer to the reſurrection from the dead, as it generally does in other places; but to ἀναστήσει, ver. 22. raiſing him up as a prophet in Iſrael. The next clauſe may mean, "God ſent his Son Jeſus to bleſs you with the higheſt bleſſings, namely, to ſave as many of you as will accept his grace, from your greateſt enemies; that is, from your ſins, and from the deſerved puniſhment." Many commentators, however, give the ſentence a different turn, rendering the laſt clauſe upon your turning every one of you, &c. or every one of you turning, &c. That is, "all thoſe of you who turn from ſin, ſhall be intitled to his bleſſing." And this is agreeable to the Syriac rendering, if you are converted, and repent of your ſins. But the former ſeems to me the preferable reading, as the great Goſpel bleſſing is the converſion of ſinners. Nor can it be any reaſonable objection to ſay, with Orobio, that Chriſt did not in fact turn every one of them from their iniquities, ſince it muſt be allowed, that he took every ſuch ſtep as was proper for that purpoſe. See Beza, Benſon, and Limborch's conference

REFLECTIONS ON CHAP. III.

Happy are thoſe ſouls, who are ſo formed for devotion, that the proper returning ſeaſons of it, whether public or private, are always welcome! ver. 1. Doubly delightful that friendſhip, which, like this of Peter and John, is endeared, not only by taking ſweet council together, but by walking to the houſe of God in company! Pſalm lv. 14.

If we deſire this devotion ſhould be acceptable, let us endeavour not only to lay aſide all the malignant paſſions, and to lift up holy hands without wrath; but let us ſtretch out our hands in works of benevolence and kindneſs. To our piety, let us add the moſt diffuſive charity which our circumſtances will permit; and there are none whoſe circumſtances will forbid every exerciſe of it. As for thoſe who have neither ſilver nor gold,—ſuch as they have let them give. ver. 3, 4, 6.

The holy Apoſtles, we ſee, had not enriched themſelves, by being intruſted with the diſtribution of thoſe goods which were laid at their feet; but had approved themſelves faithful ſtewards. The members of Chriſt were far dearer to them than any temporal intereſt of their own; and fatally ſure, would the church, in all ages, have been miſtaken, if it had meaſured the worth of its paſtors by their wealth. They beſtowed nevertheleſs a much more valuable bounty. And if it be more deſirable to heal men's bodies than to enrich them, how much more advantageous is it to be the inſtrument of healing their ſouls? Which, if it be ever accompliſhed, muſt ſurely be in the ſame name, even that of Jeſus of Nazareth. May he ſtrengthen the feeble powers of fallen nature, while we are attempting to raiſe men up! And may ſpiritual health and vigour, when reſtored, be improved, like the cure wrought on this lame man in the ſervice of God, and a thankful acknowledgement of his goodneſs! ver. 7—9.

We are not to wonder, that as the name of Jeſus their great deliverer, is incomparably precious to all that truly believe; ſuch have alſo ſome peculiarly tender friendſhips for the perſons, by whoſe means he hath wrought this good work upon them. ver. 11. O may many ſuch friendſhips be formed now, and be perfected in glory! And in the mean time, may the miniſters of Chriſt be watching every opportunity of doing good, and eſpecially, when they ſee men under any lively impreſſions which tend towards religion! May they have that holy mixture of zeal and prudence, which taught the Apoſtles now to ſpeak a word in ſeaſon; a word, which proved ſo remarkably good, and was owned by God in ſo ſingular a manner, for the converſion and ſalvation of multitudes that heard it!

Happy the miniſter, whoſe heart is thus intent upon all opportunities of doing good, as theſe Apoſtles were; ver. 12. Happy that faithful ſervant, who, like them, arrogates nothing to himſelf, but centers the praiſe of all in him, who is the great ſource from whom every good and perfect gift proceeds. Happy the man, who is himſelf willing to be forgotten and overlooked, that God may be remembered and owned! He, like this wiſe maſter-builder, will lay the foundation deep in a ſenſe of ſin, and will charge it with all its aggravations on the ſinner (ver. 13—15.) that he may thereby render the tidings of a Saviour welcome, which they can never be till this burden has been felt. Yet will he, like Peter, conduct the charge with tenderneſs, and reſpect, and be cautious not to overload, even the greateſt offender. ver. 17.

We ſee the abſolute nature of repentance; (ver. 19.) which therefore is to be ſolemnly charged upon the conſciences of all, who deſire that their ſins may be blotted out of the book of God's remembrance, and that they may ſhare in that refreſhment, which nothing but the ſenſe of his pardoning love can afford. Bleſſed are thoſe ſouls, who have experienced it! for they may look upon all their preſent comforts as the dawning of eternal glory; and having ſeen Chriſt with an eye of faith, and received that important cure, which nothing but his powerful and gracious name can effect, may be aſſured that God will ſend him again, to compleat the work he has ſo graciouſly begun, and to reduce the ſeeming irregularities of their preſent ſtate, into everlaſting harmony, order, and beauty, ver. 20, 21.

In the mean time, let us adore the wiſdom of his providence, and the fidelity of his grace, which has over-ruled the folly and wickedneſs of men, to ſubſerve his own holy purpoſes; ver. 18. and has accompliſhed the promiſes ſo long ſince made of a prophet to be raiſed up to Iſrael like Moſes, (ver. 22.) and indeed glorіouſly ſuperior to him, both in the dignity of his character and office, and in the great ſalvation

CHAP. IV.

The rulers of the Jews, offended with Peter's ſermon, (though thouſands of the people were converted that heard the word) impriſon him and John. After, upon examination, Peter boldly avouching the lame man to be healed by the name of Jeſus, and that by the ſame Jeſus only we muſt be eternally ſaved, they command him and John to preach no more in that name, adding alſo threatening. Whereupon the church fleeth to prayer: and God, by moving the place where they were aſſembled, teſtified that he heard their prayer, confirming the church with the gift of the Holy Ghoſt, and with mutual love and charity.

AND as they ſpake unto the people, the prieſts, and the captain of the temple, and the Sadducees, came upon them,

2 Being grieved that they taught the people, and preached through Jeſus the reſurrection from the dead.

3 And they laid hands on them, and put them in hold unto the next day: for it was now even-tide.

4 Howbeit, many of them which heard the word, believed; and the number of the men was about five thouſand.

5 And it came to paſs on the morrow, that their rulers, and elders, and ſcribes,

6 And Annas the high pieſt, and Caiaphas, and John, and Alexander, and as many as were of the kindred of the high prieſt, were gathered together at Jeruſalem.

7 And when they had ſet them in the midſt, they aſked, By what power, or by what name have ye done this?

8 Then Peter, filled with the Holy Ghoſt, ſaid unto them, Ye rulers of the people, and elders of Iſrael,

9 If we this day be examined of the good deed done to the impotent man, by what means he is made whole;

10 Be it known unto you all, and to all the people of Iſrael, that by the name of Jeſus Chriſt of Nazareth, whom ye crucified, whom God raiſed from the dead, even vation he was ſent to procure. This ſalvation was firſt offered to Iſrael, which has rendered itſelf ſo peculiarly unworthy by killing the Prince of Life, ver. 15. May we rejoice that it is now publiſhed to us, and that God has condeſcended to ſend his Son to bleſs us, ſinners of the Gentiles, in turning us from our iniquities; ver. 26. And viewing this ſalvation in its true light, may we remember, that if we are not willing to turn from iniquity, from all iniquity, from thoſe iniquities which have been peculiarly our own, it is impoſſible we ſhould have any ſhare in it.

Ver. 1. Or. ruler, Luke xxii. 4. Ch. v. 24—V. 6. Luke iii. 2. John xi. 49.—V. 7. Exod. ii. 14. Matth. xxi. 23. Ch. vii. 27. V. 10. Ch. ii. 24.

Chap. IV. Ver. 1, 2. The prieſts, and the captain of the temple, &c.] Theſe three kinds of men, on different accounts, were prejudiced againſt the Apoſtles. The prieſts were offended, becauſe the Apoſtles, whom they looked upon only as private men, undertook to teach publicly; the Sadducees were diſpleaſed, becauſe, in teſtifying the reſurrection of Chriſt, they effectually preached that doctrine which they diſclaimed and deteſted, the doctrine of the reſurrection from the dead: and the captain, who was placed with a band of ſoldiers near the temple, in order to guard, ſeeing ſuch a crowd of people gathered together about the Apoſtles, began to apprehend a tumult. See Benſon, chap. iii. ſect. 2.

Ver. 3. For it was now even-tide] Evening. Wat. As Peter and John went up to the temple at three in the afternoon, this expreſſion makes it probable that ſome hours might be ſpent in preaching to the people; and conſequently, that what we have in the former chapter, is only an abſtract, or brief heads of the diſcourſes they made on this occaſion, which probably is the caſe in general with the ſpeeches recorded by the ſacred hiſtorians, as well as by others. See Doddrige.

Ver. 4. The number of the men was about five thouſand] Dr. Benſon concludes, that five thouſand men were converted on this occaſion, beſides the three thouſand mentioned before, chap. ii. 41. If it had been ſaid, as there, that ſo many were added to the church, it would have determined the ſenſe, as he and others underſtand it; but the uſe of the word ἐγενήθη here, became, favours the interpretation, that the whole number, including thoſe who had been converted before, became about five thouſand. See ch. i. 15. in the Greek. It is hardly to be thought, unleſs it were expreſsly aſſerted, that another day ſhould be ſo much more remarkable for its number of converts, than that on which the ſpirit deſcended. However, ſuppoſing only two thouſand were now converted, it is a glorious proof of the truth of Chriſtianity; and no example can be given of the philoſophers or any other teachers, ſucceeding ſo glorioully in making converts to ſuch holy and ſelf-denying doctrines. See Benſon, Lightfoot, and Whitby.

Ver. 6. And Annas the high-prieſt, and Caiaphas] See the note on Luke iii. 2. John and Alexander were evidently perſons of great note among the Jews at this time; and it is not improbable, as Dr. Lightfoot and others ſuppoſe, that the former might be the celebrated Rabban Jochanan Ben Zaccai, mentioned in the Talmud, the ſcholar of Hillel; and that the latter might be the Alabarch, or governor of the Jews at Alexandria, brother to the famous Philo-Judæus, and in great favour with Claudius Cæſar. Joſephus mentions him often, and tells us among other things, that he adorned nine gates of the temple with plates of gold and ſilver. Of the kindred of the high-prieſt, is read by Dr. Waterland, Of the rank of chief prieſts, and by others, Of the pontifical family. Dr. Hammond explains this of the twenty-four members of the Aaronic family, who preſided over the twenty-four courſes; others refer it to thoſe who were nearly related to Annas and Caiaphas; but Grotius thinks that it includes the kindred of thoſe who had lately been in the office of high-prieſts, which, he ſays, made them members of the ſanhedrim. Theſe were the very perſons who had procured the death of Jeſus Chriſt. And therefore they thought themſelves highly concerned to ſuppreſs his diſciples and their doctrine. See Joſeph. Jewiſh War, b. v. ſect. 3. Benſon, and Biſcoe's Lectures, p. 79, and 648.

Ver. 7. And when they had ſet them in the midſt] It was the cuſtom for the ſanhedrim to ſit almoſt in a circle, or oval, and to ſet the priſoners in the midſt of them; St. Peter and St. John being ſo placed, the court demanded of them, "By what power, human or diabolical, angelic or divine, have you cured this man; whoſe name have you invoked to the working of this miracle; or from whom had you your authority to preach ſo publickly unto the people?—From us you had it not, though we alone have the authority to give a commiſſion to any man to do ſo?" It may in ſome meaſure elucidate this enquiry of the rulers, to obſerve, that Joſephus ſpeaks of the Jews working cures by invoking the name of Solomon; and that the Eſſenes preſerved the name of angels, perhaps to cure diſeaſes, or work miracles by them. The Talmud relates ſome ridiculous ſtories of working miracles by the Tetragrammaton, or, "the unutterable name;" that is, by mentioning the word Jehovah. The ſeven ſons of Scheva had the ſame opinion of working miracles by the mention of a name, when they pretended to cure a poſſeſſed perſon, by invoking the name of Jeſus whom Paul preached. See ch. xix. 13, &c. and Benſon.

Ver. 9. Made whole] Σέσωσται, he is cured, or ſaved. See the note on ver. 12.

Ver. 10. By the name of Jeſus, &c.] The time of Chriſt's reſurrection was that of the celebrating the paſſover, the moſt ſolemn feſtival of the Jews; the ſcene was in Jeruſalem, the metropolis of Judea, and at that time crowded with Jews, who came thither from all parts of the earth, to keep the paſſover. The actors and witneſſes were the chief prieſts and elders, Pontius Pilate the Roman governor, and the Roman ſoldiers who guarded the ſepulchre. Now, if the ſtory of guarding the ſepulchre had been falſe, it is not to be doubted but the chief prieſts and elders, who are ſaid to have obtained the guard, and ſealed the door of the ſepulchre, would by ſome authentic act have cleared themſelves of the folly and guilt imputed to them by the Evangeliſt, who charges the chief prieſts with having bribed the ſoldiers to tell not only a lie, but an abſurd lie, that carried its own confutation with it; the ſoldiers with confeſſing a breach of diſcipline, which by the military law was puniſhable with death; and the governor, with the ſuſpicion at leaſt of being capable of overlooking ſo heinous a crime, at the inſtigation of the chief prieſts, &c. All theſe ſeveral charges upon the whole government of Judea, might have been anſwered at once by an atteſtation from the chief-prieſts ſetting forth, that they never demanded a guard to be ſet at the ſepulchre, confirmed by the teſtimony of the Roman ſoldiers (many by him doth this man ſtand here before you whole.

11 This was the ſtone which was ſet at nought of you builders, which is become the head of the corner.

12 Neither is there ſalvation in any other: for there is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we muſt be ſaved.

13 Now when they ſaw the boldneſs of Peter and John, and perceived that they were unlearned and ignorant men, they marvelled; and they took knowledge of them, that they had been with Jeſus.

14 And beholding the man which was healed ſtanding with them, they could ſay nothing againſt it.

15 But when they had commanded them to go aſide out of the council, they conferred among themſelves, 16 Saying, What ſhall we do to theſe men? for that indeed a notable miracle hath been done by them is manifeſt to all them that dwell in Jeruſalem, and we cannot deny it.

17 But that it ſpread no further among the people, let us ſtraitly threaten them, that they ſpeak henceforth to no man in this name.

18 And they called them, and com-

Ver. 11. Pſ. cxviii. 22. Iſai. xxviii. 16. Matth. xxi. 42.—V. 12. Matth. i. 21. Ch. x. 43. 1 Tim. ii. 5, 6.—V. 16. John xi. 47. V. 18. Again ch. v. 40.

of whom were probably at Jeruſalem when the Goſpel was written) denying that they were ever upon that guard. This, not only the reputation of the chief prieſts, but their avowed malice to Chriſt, and averſion to his doctrine and religion, required; and this, even upon a ſuppoſition of the ſtory of guarding the ſepulchre being true, they would probably have done, had they been at liberty to propagate and invent what lie they pleaſed. But that a guard was ſet at the ſepulchre, was, in all likelihood, by the diſperſion and flight of the ſoldiers into the city, too well known in Jeruſalem for them to venture at denying it: For which reaſon they were obliged to invent a lie conſiſtent with that known fact, however abſurd and improbable it might appear, when it came to be conſidered. Now, as the report put into the mouths of the Roman ſoldiers by the chief prieſts and elders, is no proof of the falſhood of this fact, but rather of the contrary; ſo does the naming the ſcene, the actors, and the witneſſes, form a very ſtrong preſumption of its being true, ſince no forger of lies, willingly and wittingly, furniſhes out the means of his own detection; eſpecially when we conſider that this ſtory is related by that Evangeliſt, who is ſaid to have compoſed his Goſpel for thoſe Chriſtians who dwelt in Judea, many of whom then living were probably at Jeruſalem when this thing was done. Not to mention again the abſurdity of the report of the diſciples coming by night, and ſtealing the body, as it ſtands in the Evangeliſt, and taking it, as it was afterwards prudently amended by the ſanhedrim, and propagated by an expreſs deputation from them to all the ſynagogues of the Jews throughout the world, in which, without making any mention of the Roman guard, they ſay no more than that the diſciples came by night, and ſtole away the body; taking it, we ſay, in the manner in which theſe wiſe counſellors were, upon mature diliberation, pleaſed to put it, it may be ſufficient to obſerve, that the theft charged upon the diſciples, was ſo far from being proved, that it was not ſo much as ever enquired into. And yet the accuſers were the chief prieſts and elders of the Jews; men in high reverence and authority with the people, veſted with all the power of the ſtate, and conſequently furniſhed with all the means of procuring informations, and of gaining and extorting a confeſſion. And what were the accuſed? men of low birth, mean fortunes, without learning, without credit, without ſupport; and who, out of puſillanimity and fear, had deſerted their Maſter, upon the firſt occaſion offered of ſhewing their fidelity and attachment to him. And can it be imagined that the chief prieſts and council would not have made enquiry into the fact, the belief of which they took ſo much pains to propagate, had they themſelves been perſuaded of the truth of it? And had they enquired into it, can it be ſuppoſed that out of ſuch a number of mean perſons as muſt have been privy to it, no one, either from honeſty or religion, or fear of puniſhment, or the hope of reward, would have betrayed the ſecret, and given them ſuch intelligence, as might have enabled them to put the queſtion of the reſurrection out of all diſpute. For had it been once proved that the diſciples ſtole away the body of Jeſus, their words would hardly have been taken for his reſurrection. But how did theſe poor men act? Conſcious of no fraud or impoſture, they remained in Jeruſalem a week or more, after the report of their having ſtole their Maſter's body was ſpread over the city, and in about a month returned thither again; not long after which they aſſerted boldly, to the face of their powerful enemies and accuſers, the chief prieſts and elders, that God had raiſed from the dead that ſame Jeſus whom they had crucified. And what was the behaviour of theſe learned rabbins, theſe watchful guardians of the Jewiſh church and ſtate? Why they ſuffered the diſciples of Jeſus, charged by their order with an impoſture tending to diſturb the government, to continue unqueſtioned at Jeruſalem, and to depart from thence unmoleſted; and when, upon their return thither, they had cauſed them to be ſeized and brought before them, for preaching through Jeſus the reſurrection, what did they ſay to them? Did they charge them with having ſtolen away the body of their Maſter? Nothing like it: On the contrary, not able to gainſay the teſtimony given by the Apoſtles to the reſurection of Jeſus, vouched by a miracle juſt then performed by them in his name, they ordered them to withdraw, and conferred among themſelves what they ſhould do with them. See Weſt on the Reſurrection.

Ver. 12. Neither is there ſalvation in any other] Jeſus Chriſt is undoubtedly the only mediator between God and man; and his is the only name by which we can attain to eternal ſalvation. But ſome think this truth ought to be deduced from other texts, and not from this; for σέσωσται, is the word made uſe of by St. Peter himſelf, to intimate the miraculous cure of the lame man, ver. 9. and it is evident, on obſerving the connection, that σωτηρία, and σωθῆναι, ſalvation, and ſaved, are made uſe of in this verſe, concerning the ſame miracle, and in the continuance of the ſame diſcourſe. There is no doubt, that the verb σωζω, is ſeveral times in the New Teſtament underſtood of eternal ſalvation; yet in a variety of texts, it refers only to miraculous deliverances or cures; and if the verb be ſo often uſed for a temporal ſalvation, why may not the noun be ſo uſed likewiſe? eſpecially as it is apprehended that the ſenſe and connection of this place, plainly points to this interpretation, and this is not the only place where it ought to be ſo underſtood. See chap. vii. 25. 2 Cor. i. 6. In the ſame ſenſe Horace hath uſed the verb ſervo, to ſave.

> ——— Pol me occidiſtis amici
> Non ſervâſtis, ait.——
>
> You have not ſaved or cured me.
> Epiſt. ii. lib. ii. ver. 138.

Thus far have we argued in favour of, and given its full force to Dr. Whitby's interpretation of this text. But as it may be objected that St. Peter has ſaid, There is no other name by which we muſt be ſaved; and it cannot reaſonably be ſuppoſed that all the perſons then preſent, were labouring under bodily diſorders, and had occaſion for, or reaſon to expect a miraculous cure; therefore it is moſt probable the Apoſtle is not ſpeaking of a temporal, but of eternal ſalvation. St. Peter might uſe the word ſaved, ver. 9. for the miraculous cure of the lame man; and the word ſalvation, ver. 12. for everlaſting ſalvation; in which caſe he is to be underſtood, ver. 10. as aſcribing the miraculous cure of the lame man to the power of Chriſt; and then, ver. 11, 12. as riſing higher, uſing a beautiful gradation, from the temporal deliverance which had been wrought for the poor cripple by the power of Chriſt, to that of a much nobler and more important kind; which is wrought by Chriſt for impotent and ſinful ſouls. Herein the Apoſtle follows the admirable cuſtom of his great Lord and maſter, who continually took occaſion, from earthly, to ſpeak of ſpiritual things. Raphelius, in a remarkable note on this text, endeavours, among other things, to prove that Ὄνομα, or the name of a perſon, was a manner of ſpeaking uſed in reference to one, regarded as God and the author of ſalvation. See Whitby, Locke, Benſon, and Raphel. ex Herod. p. 329.

Ver. 13. Unlearned and ignorant men] Illiterate men, and in private ſtations of life; ἀγράμματοί κ̀ ἰδιῶται, men of no education, nor in any public rank of life, as the prieſts and magiſtrates were: And they took knowledge of them, ἐπεγίνωσκον, would be read more properly, and they knew them. Grotius obſerves, that the rulers, having often been preſent when Chriſt taught publicly, might have ſeen Peter and John near him, though perhaps they might have obſerved them more particularly the night that Jeſus was taken when they had attended their Lord to the houſe of Caiaphas.

Ver. 16. A notable miracle] Γνωστὸν, a ſignal and well-known miracle; one which could neither be doubted or diſproved.

Ver. 17. But, &c.] Neverthebeleſs: Ἀλλα, is frequently uſed in this ſenſe both by ſacred and profane writers. See Elſner on the place.

Ver. 18. Not to ſpeak at all, &c.] That is, privately, nor to teach, that is, publicly. This is the very thing which men, conſcious of the truth of the Apoſtle's teſtimony, and ſelf-condemned, would do;—ſtop their mouths by violence, as they know they cannot anſwer them any other way.

manded them not to ſpeak at all, nor teach in the name of Jeſus.

19 But Peter and John anſwered and ſaid unto them, Whether it be right in the ſight of God, to hearken unto you more than unto God, judge ye.

20 For we cannot but ſpeak the things which we have ſeen and heard.

21 So when they had further threatened them, they let them go, finding nothing how they might puniſh them, becauſe of the people: for all men glorified God for that which was done.

22 For the man was above forty years old, on whom this miracle of healing was ſhewed.

23 And being let go, they went to their own company, and reported all that the chief prieſts and elders had ſaid unto them.

24 And when they heard that, they lifted up their voice to God with one accord, and ſaid, Lord, thou art God which haſt made heaven and earth, and the ſea, and all that in them is:

25 Who by the mouth of thy ſervant David, haſt ſaid, Why did the heathen rage, and the people imagine vain things?

26 The kings of the earth ſtood up, and the rulers were gathered together againſt the Lord, and againſt his Chriſt.

27 For of a truth, againſt thy holy child Jeſus, whom thou haſt anointed, both Herod and Pontius Pilate, with the Gentiles, and the people of Iſrael were gathered together, 28 For to do whatſoever thy hand and thy counſel determined before to be done.

29 And now, Lord, behold their threatenings: and grant unto thy ſervants, that with all boldneſs they may ſpeak thy word.

30 By ſtretching forth thine hand to heal; and that ſigns and wonders may be done by the name of thy holy child Jeſus.

31 And when they had prayed, the place was ſhaken where they were aſſembled together; and they were all filled with the Holy Ghoſt, and they ſpake the word of God with boldneſs.

32 And the multitude of them that believed, were of one heart, and of one ſoul: neither ſaid any of them, that aught of the things which he poſſeſſed, was his own; but they had all things common.

33 And with great power gave the apoſtles witneſs of the reſurrection of the Lord Jeſus: and great grace was upon them all.

Ver. 19. Ch. v. 29.—V. 20. Ch. xxii. 15. 1 John i. 3.—V. 21. Matth. xxi. 26. Luke xx. 6, 19. xxii. 2. Ch. v. 26. Ch. iii. 7, 8.—V. 23. Ch. xii. 12.—V. 25. Pſ. ii. 1.—V. 27. Matth. xxvi. 3. Luke xxiii. 1, 8.—V. 28. Ch. ii. 23.—V. 29. Epheſ. vi. 19. V. 31. Ch. ii. 2, 4. xvi. 26.—V. 32. 1 Pet. iii. 8. Ch. ii. 44.—V. 33. Ch. i. 22. Ch. ii. 47.

Ver. 19. Whether it be right in the ſight of God] As they profeſſed to believe the being, and infinite perfections of God, they muſt on their own principles eaſily ſee the abſurdity of expecting obedience to their commands from good men, who believed themſelves divinely commiſſioned. There is a paſſage which bears ſome reſemblance to this in the apology of Socrates, as recorded by Plato. When they were condemning him to death for teaching the people, he ſaid, "O ye Athenians, I embrace and love you; but I will obey God rather than you; and if you would diſmiſs me, and ſpare my life, on condition that I ſhould ceaſe to teach my fellow citizens, I would rather die a thouſand times, than accept the propoſal." What are ten thouſand ſubtilties of the ancient philoſophers, when compared with a ſentiment like this. See Plato Socrat. Apol. p. 23. Doddridge, and Wetſtein.

Ver. 21. They let them go] This diſmiſſion was no acquittal; for it was cuſtomary among the Jews to try any malefactor after his diſcharge, when new proofs ſtarted up againſt him. The threatening mentioned in the foregoing ſentence, might poſſibly have included ſome declaration of this ſort. Dr. Heylin reads the laſt clauſe, Who all glorified God, &c. So much wiſer were the people, than thoſe who were over them. Nothing could contribute more to illuſtrate the miracle than the circumſtance mentioned ver. 22. It ſhews that the man's caſe was deſperate, and that his diſorder was ſo inveterate and confirmed, as to be beyond the reach of medicine; yet was he in one moment compleatly cured by the word of the Apoſtles. Who, after reading this account, of the manner in which the rulers treated theſe Apoſtles, could ever imagine that the diſciples ſtole the body of Jeſus, or that the chief prieſts and elders themſelves believed they did? But it may perhaps be objected, that this account comes from Chriſtian writers;—and could the objectors expect to meet with it in Jewiſh writers?—We might indeed expect to find in their writings ſome proofs of this charge upon the diſciples; and had there been any, the chief prieſts, the adverſaries of Chriſt, would doubtleſs not have failed to produce them. But the progreſs which Chriſtianity made at that time in Jeruſalem, is a ſtronger argument than even their ſilence, that no proof of this charge either was, or could be made. Could the Apoſtles have had the imprudence to preach, and could ſo many thouſand Jews have been weak enough to believe upon their teſtimony, that Chriſt was riſen from the dead, had it been proved that the diſciples had ſtolen away his body? An infidel may, if he pleaſes, believe this; but let him account for it if he can. See Grotius, Lightfoot, and Weſt.

Ver. 24. Lord, thou art God, &c.] The ſenſe is, "Lord, thou haſt all power, and thy word is fulfilled. Men do rage againſt thee, but their rage is in vain."

Ver. 27, 28. For of a truth againſt thy holy child Jeſus] It has been propoſed by Limborch and others, to tranſpoſe theſe verſes, and read them as follows: For of a truth againſt thy holy Son Jeſus, whom thou haſt anointed to do whatſoever thy hand and thy counſel determined before to be done, both Herod and Pontius Pilate, &c. were gathered together. But this tranſpoſition, as Dr. Doddridge and other commentators have remarked, is arbitrary; and it is ſo expreſly ſaid elſewhere by St. Luke, when Jeſus was entering on his ſufferings, that the Son of man went, as it was determined concerning him; (ch. xxii. 22.) and it ſo plainly appears in fact that theſe circumſtances were expreſly determined, or marked out in the prophecies of the Old Teſtament, that it does not appear what end the admiſſion of ſuch a tranſpoſition would anſwer. It is much more rational to explain this determination in ſuch a manner, as to make it conſiſtent with the free agency of the perſons concerned. When God's hand and his counſel are ſaid to have determined theſe things, it may ſignify God's having pointed out this great event, ſo wiſely concerted in his eternal councils, and marked beforehand, as it were, all the boundaries of it in the prophetic writings. See Limborch Theol. lib. ii. c. 30. Pearſon on the Creed, p. 185. and Hammond.

Ver. 29. That with all boldneſs, &c.] Elſner has ſhewn in his note on this place, that ſeveral of the heathens acknowledged the παῤῥησία, boldneſs, or freedom of ſpeech, on great and preſſing occaſions, to be a divine gift. Comp. Prov. xvi. 1.

Ver. 31. And when they had prayed, &c.] God of old teſtified his acceptance of the ſacrifices or prayers of the pious, by ſending down fire from heaven, or by appearing after ſome peculiar manner in the cloud of glory: But now the token of acceptance was, that the houſe where they were aſſembled was again ſhaken, and there was a ſecond effuſion of the Holy Spirit, perhaps attended with the like ſound, and with the like appearance of a glory, as there had been at firſt, on the day of pentecoſt. It does not appear that they had by this ſecond effuſion any further knowledge communicated; but they were hereby comforted after the diſcouragements which they had met with from the ſanhedrim; and as they had prayed for fortitude, and a power of working more miracles, their prayer was heard, freſh courage infuſed, and further miraculous powers conferred, to aſſiſt them in their work, and to enable them to proceed chearfully, and with an undaunted ſteadineſs and reſolution.

Ver. 32. Of one heart, and of one ſoul] This is a proverbial expreſſion for the moſt intimate and endearing friendſhip. Inſtead of aught, the MS. reads, any of the things, &c.

Ver. 33. And with great power gave the Apoſtles, &c.] The word ἀπεδίδουν, rendered gave, ſignifies the reſtoring ſomething which is given as a charge, or intruſted to another. If it be taken in that ſenſe here, it may ſerve to illuſtrate what is ſaid ver. 20. Several commentators underſtand the laſt clauſe of this verſe, of the grace

34 Neither was there any among them that lacked: for as many as were poſſeſſors of lands or houſes, ſold them, and brought the prices of the things that were ſold,

35 And laid them down at the apoſtles feet: and diſtribution was made unto every man according as he had need.

36 And Joſes, who by the apoſtles was ſurnamed Barnabas, (which is, being interpreted, The ſon of conſolation,) a Levite, and of the country of Cyprus, 37 Having land, ſold it, and brought the money, and laid it at the apoſtles feet.

CHAP. V.

After that Ananias and Sapphira his wife, for their hypocriſy at Peter's rebuke, had fallen down dead, and that the reſt of the apoſtles had wrought many miracles, to the increaſe of the faith; the apoſtles are again impriſoned, but delivered by an angel; bidding them to preach openly to all: when, after their teaching accordingly in the temple, and before the council, they are in danger to be killed; through the advice of Gamaliel, a great counſellor among the Jews, they are kept alive, and only beaten: for which they glorify God, and ceaſe no day from preaching.

BUT a certain man named Ananias, with Sapphira his wife, ſold a poſſeſſion, or favour they had among the people, on account of their charity and good conduct; and ſo Dr. Waterland renders it. See the note on ch. ii. 47. Diodati explains the word χάρις by "the bleſſing of God, and the good will of the people:" Benedittione di Dio, e benivoglienza del popolo.

Ver. 35. Ver. 37.—V. 37. Ch. v. 2.

Ver. 35. And laid them down, &c.] Orobio the Jew, in his conference with Limborch, has meanly inſinuated, that it was no ſmall advantage to poor fiſhermen to be treaſurers of ſo conſiderable a bank; and ſome of our late infidels, have in a more indecent manner taken occaſion from hence to aſperſe the Apoſtles of our Lord, as if their conduct was influenced by worldly motives, and temporal views; and as if they greatly advanced their circumſtances in life by turning Apoſtles. But their whole character,—their upright, generous, and diſintereſted behaviour, their readineſs to ſacrifice their lives for the ſake of truth and the welfare of mankind, ſhew that they were far above falſifying ſuch a truſt as this, for the ſake of a little money. Accordingly, they very willingly transferred the management of this affair to other hands, ch. vi. 2, &c. But we ought to take the whole ſtory together; and then, beſides the honourable teſtimony given to them by St. Luke in this verſe, namely, that they diſtributed unto every man, of that charity, according as he had need; we muſt further conſider, that God continued to them the power of working numerous, aſtoniſhing, and beneficent miracles; and that he enabled one of them to ſtrike two of the Chriſtians dead upon the ſpot, for treachery and diſſimulation, with reſpect to this very charity. And can we ſuppoſe that God would continue to ſhew ſuch peculiar regard to men, who would embezzle part of a public charity, or make a bad uſe of any part of it? It muſt raiſe in every honeſt mind a juſt indignation to ſee ſuch ungenerous reflections thrown out againſt the Apoſtles of our bleſſed Lord, who patiently endured poverty and reproach, hunger and thirſt, cold and nakedneſs, bonds, ſcourgings, and impriſonments, and after all a violent death, to promote truth and righteouſneſs in the earth. One can hardly help ſuſpecting that they themſelves are men of bad hearts, who are ſo ready to charge others upon all occaſions with diſhoneſt deſigns and corrupt views; and it ſeems to intimate what ſome men would have done upon the like occaſion. Where is the infidel to be found, who ever gave ſuch proofs of his honeſty as the Apoſtles of our Lord have done! Men of that ſtamp, we know, have generally choſen to fall in with the eſtabliſhed religion, and not to ſuffer any thing for their particular ſentiments, how contrary ſoever to thoſe of profeſſed Chriſtians around them. See Limb. Confer. p. 104. and Benſon.

Ver. 36, 37. Joſes,—ſurnamed Barnabas] Conſidering how common the names of Joſes and Joſeph were, there ſeems no juſt reaſon to conclude, as ſome have done, that this was the Joſeph mentioned ch. i. 23. nor does there ſeem any reaſon to conclude that this Joſes was called a ſon of conſolation, to expreſs the great conſolation the brethren received from the ſale of his eſtate. The name ſeems rather to refer to his extraordinary abilities for the miniſterial work, and to thoſe gifts of the Spirit, whereby he was enabled both to comfort and exhort; for the word παράκλησις implies both. See ch. xi. 23. As Barnabas was a Levite, he could not have ſold or alienated his paternal inheritance; (ſee Lev. xxv. 34.) but the land or eſtate here ſpoken of might either have been ſome legacy, or purchaſed land in Judea, to which he might have a title, till the next jubilee; or perhaps ſome land in Cyprus: And we may ſuppoſe it mentioned either as the firſt foreign eſtate ſold, or as of ſome extraordinary value. See Grotius, Wake's Apoſtolical Fathers, Introd. p. 62. and Benſon.

REFLECTIONS ON CHAP. IV.

In the inſtance before us, ver. 1—3. we obſerve the natural, but deteſtable effects of a proud, bigoted, over-bearing temper, even where it ſeems leaſt excuſable. The Sadducees themſelves, though they believed no future ſtate of retribution, yet perſecuted the Apoſtles as eagerly, as if they, like ſome other Jews, had expected to merit heaven by their ſeverity to them. Comp. John xvi. 2.

On the other hand, it is delightful to obſerve the zeal and courage with which Peter and John defended the cauſe of their crucified Redeemer, even in the preſence of thoſe by whom he had ſo lately been condemned. ver. 10, 11. Thus can God give power to the feeble, and increaſe the ſtrength of them that have no might, Iſai. lx. 29.

The teſtimony they bore, ver. 12. is well worth our regarding. There is ſalvation in no other: neither is there any other name under heaven given among men, whereby we muſt be ſaved. O that the ends of the earth might hear and reverence that name! That thouſands to whom it is yet unknown, may learn to build upon it all their hopes of ſalvation! May we never be aſhamed to own it, nor afraid to adhere to it! but ſpeak of it with ſuch a favour, and defend it with ſuch a zeal, that they who are round about us may take knowledge of us, that we have been with Jeſus, (ver. 13.) and trace the genuine effects of our intimate acquaintance with him.

Never was there an inſtance of a more memorable combat, between the force of evidence and of prejudice; nor a more impudent attempt to bear down the cauſe of unqueſtionable truth by brutal violence, than this before us, ver. 16—18. But great is the truth, and it will prevail. May the miniſters of the Goſpel never want that courage in the defence of it, which theſe holy men expreſſed, ver. 19. but always judge it infinitely more reaſonable, more ſafe, and more neceſſary to obey God, than man! Never may we be aſhamed to profeſs our reverence and love to Him, who is our ſupreme Ruler, and our moſt bountiful Friend! And may He give us ſuch an inward and heart-influencing ſenſe of the worth and ſweetneſs of his Goſpel, as may effectually prevent our betraying or neglecting it.

The preſent ſeaſon was indeed the golden age of the church; and it is impoſſible to trace the memoirs of it, if we love the cauſe of Chriſt, without a ſecret complacency and exultation of mind. How amiable and how venerable do the Apoſtles and primitive converts appear, in this native ſimplicity of the Chriſtian character! (ver. 31.) And what a glory did the grace and Spirit of God put upon them; far beyond all that human eſtabliſhments, ſplendid dignities, or ample revenues, could ever give to thoſe who have ſucceeded them! while the multitude of them had one heart and one ſoul, ver. 32. and each was ready to impart to his brethren whatever he himſelf poſſeſſed; how high a reliſh of pleaſure muſt they receive, and how muſt their joys be multiplied by each of their number!

Thus does divine grace, when once it powerfully enters into the heart, open it into ſentiments of generoſity and love. Thus does it conquer that ſelfiſh temper which reigns ſo frequently in the minds of ſinful men, and makes them like wild beaſts, rather than like brethren to each other, ver. 33—35. Providence does not indeed call us entirely to give up our poſſeſſions, or to introduce a community of goods among Chriſtians, in circumſtances ſo different from thoſe which we have now been ſurveying. Yet ſurely it is always our duty, and will be our higheſt intereſt to remember, that we are not original proprietors of what we poſſeſs, but ſtewards, who are to manage what is intruſted to our care, for the honour of our great Maſter, and the good of his family here on earth; continually ready to reſign any part, or even the whole of it, whenever theſe important ends ſhall require ſuch a reſignation.

In the mean time, it behoves us frequently to lift up our hearts to the great and ever-bleſſed God, who hath made heaven and earth, and the ſea, and all that is in them, (ver. 24.) that he would ſupport and extend the progreſs of that Goſpel in the world, which he hath ſo graciouſly begun to plant. Kings may ſtill ſet themſelves, and rulers take counſel againſt it, ver. 25, 26. but he knows how to turn their counſels into fooliſhneſs, and their rage into ſhame. He hath anointed Jeſus his Holy Son with the oil of gladneſs, and placed him on his throne in heaven; and all the united malice and fury of his enemies can do no more, than what ſhall make part of his wiſe and gracious ſcheme, for the government of his people. Let us then pray that he would give freedom of ſpeech, (ver. 29.) to all who are employed in pleading his cauſe, and that he will plentifully anoint them with the effuſion of his Spirit! Nor let the ſigns and wonders which were done by the name of Jeſus in former ages, fail to encourage in us the hope, that he will never totally deſert a ſcheme, which he once ſo illuſtriouſly interpoſed to eſtabliſh; and conſequently, let them animate us to exert ourſelves in its ſervice, whatever labours, threatenings, or dangers, may meet us in our way. See ver. 30, 31.

2 And kept back part of the price, (his wife alſo being privy to it,) and brought a certain part, and laid it at the apoſtles feet.

3 But Peter ſaid, Ananias, why hath Satan filled thine heart to lie to the Holy Ghoſt, and to keep back part of the price of the land?

4 While it remained, was it not thine own? and after it was ſold, was it not in thine own power? why haſt thou conceived this thing in thine heart? thou haſt not not lied unto men, but unto God.

5 And Ananias hearing theſe words, fell down, and gave up the ghoſt: and great fear came on all them that heard theſe things.

6 And the young men aroſe, wound him up, and carried him out, and buried him.

7 And it was about the ſpace of three hours after, when his wife, not knowing what was done, came in.

8 And Peter anſwered unto her, Tell me whether ye ſold the land for ſo much? And ſhe ſaid, Yea, for ſo much.

9 Then Peter ſaid unto her, How is it that ye have agreed together, to tempt the Spirit of the Lord? behold, the feet of them which have buried thy huſband are at the door, and ſhall carry thee out.

10 Then fell ſhe down ſtraightway at his feet, and yielded up the ghoſt: and the young men came in, and found her dead, and carrying her forth, buried her by her huſband.

11 And great fear came upon all the church, and upon as many as heard theſe things.

Ver. 2. Ch. iv. 37.—V. 3. Or, to deceive.—V. 6. John xix. 40.

Chap. V. Ver. 1, 2. But a certain man, &c.] In Pſ. cx. where our Saviour is prophetically deſcribed in the perſon of a king advanced to the throne of divine majeſty, glorious and triumphant, it is ſaid, that his people, in the day of his power, ſhould offer him free-will-offerings; which alludes to the eaſtern cuſtoms of bringing preſents to their kings on their inauguration. This prophecy was fulfilled, as we find in the foregoing chapter, when, after Chriſt's aſcenſion into heaven, and his inauguration was proclaimed by the deſcent of the Holy Ghoſt. They who by believing in him acknowledged him their king, dedicated their goods to his ſervice, ſelling their lands, &c. and laying down the money at the Apoſtle's feet; to be diſtributed, like the ſacred offerings of the law, for the maintenance of the Apoſtles, and the relief of the poor. Among the Chriſtians there was one Ananias, who, as if he had intended to imitate the zeal and liberality of Barnabas, ſold a poſſeſſion of land, for the ſupply of this charitable fund: but, after he had ſold it, he conſpired with his wife Sapphira privately to keep back part of the price, and yet publickly to deliver in the remainder as the whole price; that ſo they two might be maintained out of the common ſtock, as perſons who had given up all that they had. St. Peter, who had the gift of diſcerning ſpirits, or of knowing ſome tranſactions that were carried on in ſecret, immediately detected this lying and deceitful behaviour. See the next note.

Ver. 3. Why hath Satan filled thine heart, &c?] The phraſe rendered filled thine heart, ſignifies emboldened, as appears from the Septuagint verſion of Eſther vii. 5. and Eccles. viii. 11. To lie to the Holy Ghoſt, is expreſſed ver. 4. by lying unto God; a plain proof that the Holy Ghoſt is God. Dr. Waterland renders the phraſe, To put a fallacy, or a cheat upon the Holy Ghoſt. The word ψεύσασθαί ſignifies to deceive or to cheat, and is plainly applied to ſacrilege in the ſtory of Achan, and Lev. v. 5. When it relates to promiſes or oaths, it ſignifies the breaking, or not keeping of them: So that the ſin of Ananias was the breach of a promiſe which he had made to God; for after he had mentally promiſed or vowed the whole price of his poſſeſſion, he brought only a part of it. Both expreſſions imply the ſame fact, which, in regard to the matter, was ſtealing or pourloining; in regard to the vow or dedication, was a breach of promiſe, or lying unto God. So that when St. Peter ſays, Why hath Satan filled thine heart to lie to the Holy Ghoſt, and to pourloin (νοσφίσασθαι) the price, &c? the latter ſentence is exegetical of the former, and ſignifies, Why hath Satan emboldened thee to put a cheat upon the Holy Ghoſt, in pourloining the price, &c? If it be aſked why Ananias is ſaid peculiarly to have lied to the Holy Ghoſt, it may be anſwered, that his lie, or breach of promiſe is referred to the Holy Ghoſt in an eſpecial manner, becauſe it is his prerogative to inſpire, ſanctify, and take cognizance of the motions of the heart; therefore, as the vow which Ananias broke did not fall under the cognizance and notice of men, but of his own conſcience only, hence it is ſaid to have been done with the privity of the Holy Ghoſt, and the breach of it is properly ſtiled lying unto the Holy Ghoſt. Others expound lying unto the Holy Ghoſt ſo, as to ſignify an attempt to try, whether the Holy Ghoſt, with which the Apoſtles were inſpired, could diſcover the fraud. But though this explanation is founded on ver. 9. How is it that ye have agreed together to tempt the Spirit, &c? yet the word tempt there ſignifies to provoke God by ſome preſumptuous action to anger, and as it were to try whether he will puniſh it or not. This is the ſenſe of the expreſſion, Numb. xiv. 22, 23. and is very well adapted to the place before us. See Bos, Benſon, Mede's Diatribæ, p. 380, &c. and Ridley's Moyer's Sermons, p. 23.

Ver. 4. While it remained, was it not thine own, &c?] That is, "Before it was ſold, was it not thine? and being ſold, was not the money paid thee, and in thine own power?—Thou haſt therefore no excuſe for what thou haſt done;"—for there were two caſes, which might have been pleaded by Ananias, in excuſe for his bringing part of the price;—if either he had not been the whole and ſole proprietor of what was ſold, or had not received the whole purchaſe-money. As for the firſt, it is a ſelf-evident truth, that a man can ſell no more than what belongs to him; ſo that if Ananias had been owner only of a part, he could diſpoſe only of a part. Secondly, though he were the whole and ſole proprietor of the field, and ſo had a right to ſell it; yet, had not the whole purchaſe-money been received, he might ſtill have been excuſed for bringing but a part. But Ananias could plead neither of theſe excuſes; for Peter urges, "Whilſt it remained unſold, did it not remain thine? or wert not thou owner and proprietor? And when it was ſold, was not the money it was ſold for in thy poſſeſſion?" The firſt words, while it remained, &c. are interpreted ſo as to ſignify that Ananias was not obliged or forced to ſell his poſſeſſion, but might have retained it if he pleaſed; which plainly ſhews, that contributing to the charitable fund was not a matter of neceſſity, but purely voluntary. This interpretation renders the crime of Ananias as inexcuſable as the former; for could he have alledged that the ſale of his eſtate was not voluntary, but forced, it would have excuſed him: but, as the Syriac countenances the former ſenſe, it ſeems beſt to retain it. A ſecond plea in favour of Ananias might have been, that he had not received the whole purchaſe-money; but St. Peter deprives him of this plea, by aſking, When it was ſold, was it not in thy power? That is, "Was not the price, value, or purchaſe-money in thy poſſeſſion?" For the word rendered ſold, πραθὲν ſignifies the price of what was ſold, or the value of the field received in money, otherwiſe the contrary of what Peter aſſerts would be the truth; namely, that after it was ſold, it was no longer in his power; and for this very reaſon, becauſe it was ſold. It would be rendered more clearly, "And was not the price of it, or the money for which it was ſold, in thine own power?" To interpret was it not in thy power? ſo as to ſignify, "Was it not in thy power to have kept it?" is directly contrary to the tenor of the ſtory: For how did Ananias ſin in bringing but a part of the price, if he might have kept it all? And is not his ſin expreſly ſaid to conſiſt in his pourloining of the price?—The ſin of Ananias was ſacrilege: He had dedicated the whole value of the field in his conſcience; his intention was declared by the ſale of it; and yet, after all, he altered his mind, and brought but part of the value. It remains therefore evident, that he was not at liberty to keep the price after the ſale, and that his very crime conſiſted in his keeping back a part of it. This crime, however, was aggravated by others, perhaps not leſs heinous; for he was guilty of groſs prevarication, or hypocriſy; telling a notorious and deliberate lie to the Apoſtles, who had the Holy Spirit in an extraordinary degree. To them he pretended, that he brought into the charitable fund the whole price of the land, when he was conſcious that he brought in only a part of it. See Mede as above, Benſon, and the note on ver. 11.

Vor. 5. Ananias hearing theſe words, fell down] The ſevere puniſhment inflicted upon Ananias, ſhews his ſin to have been very heinous in the ſight of God; and indeed one can ſcarce conceive a ſin of a more enormous kind, than that of ſacrilege, or robbing God, complicated with hypocriſy, covetouſneſs, and vain-glory. See Mal. iii. 8—10. Ainſworth on Levit. vii. 16. and the note on ver. 11.

Ver. 6. And the young men aroſe. &c.] They were perſons of an inferior rank, who were uſually employed in this office. They ſtripped, ſwathed him,—συνέστειλαν,—and afterwards carried him to his grave. The Jews now inter their dead within twenty-four hours at fartheſt from the time of their death, and generally much ſooner. See Mintert, Hammond, and Benſon.

Ver. 11, And great fear came upon all, &c.] In the ſtriking narrative before us, we have an example of the ſevereſt puniſhment inflicted

12 And by the hands of the apoſtles were many ſigns and wonders wrought among the people; (and they were all with one accord in Solomon's porch.

13 And of the reſt durſt no man join himſelf to them: but the people magnified them.

14 And believers were the more added to the Lord, multitudes both of men and women.)

15 Inſomuch that they brought forth the ſick into the ſtreets, and laid them on beds and couches, that at the leaſt, the ſhadow of Peter paſſing by, might overſhadow ſome of them.

16 There came alſo a multitude out of the cities round about unto Jeruſalem, bringing ſick folks, and them which were vexed with unclean ſpirits: and they were healed every one.

17 Then the high prieſt roſe up, and all they that were with him; (which is the ſect of the Sadducees;) and were filled with indignation, 18 And laid their hands on the apoſtles, and put them in the common priſon.

19 But the angel of the Lord by night opened the priſon-doors, and brought them forth, and ſaid, 20 Go, ſtand and ſpeak in the temple to the people all the words of this life.

21 And when they heard that, they entered into the temple early in the morning, and taught. But the high prieſt came, and they that were with him, and called the council together, and all the ſenate of the children of Iſrael, and ſent to the priſon to have them brought.

22 But when the officers came, and found them not in the priſon, they returned and told,

23 Saying, The priſon truly found we ſhut with all ſafety, and the keepers ſtanding without before the doors: but when we had opened, we found no man within.

24 Now when the high prieſt, and the captain of the temple, and the chief prieſts, Ver. 12. Ch. ii. 43. Ch. iii. 11.—V. 13. John ix. 22. xii. 42. xix. 38. Ch. iv. 21.—V. 15. Or, in every ſtreet. Matth. ix. 21. xiv. 36. Ch. xix. 12.—V. 16. Mark xvi. 17, 18.—V. 17. Or, envy.—V. 19. Ch. xii. 7. xvi. 26.—V. 20. John vi. 68.—V. 24. Luke xxii. 4. Ch. iv. 1.

flicted throughout the New Teſtament; a puniſhment inflicted by the Apoſtle, not out of a ſpirit of paſſion, cruelty, or revenge, but by a prophetic ſpirit; not by the ſword of the magiſtrate, or by any power of his own, but by a miraculous and divine power; puniſhing a notorious lie, which was made to tempt or try the Holy Spirit, in the beginning of his œconomy or diſpenſation. Thus was the dignity of the Spirit of God vindicated, and the honour of the Apoſtles of our Lord maintained: for hereby it was plain, that they had the Spirit of truth and of power, by which they could eaſily detect and puniſh the ſpirit of falſhood; and that they made no pretenſions to the Spirit, in which that Spirit would not bear them out. This was exerciſing the apoſtolic rod: But we muſt always remember, that the power was that of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and that the Apoſtles had only an impulſe of the Spirit upon their minds, by which they were enabled to foretel ſuch extraordinary and divine judgements. Porphyry accuſed St. Peter as cruel, for inflicting this puniſhment; To which the ancients well anſwered: "The Apoſtle did by no means pray for their deaths; but by the prophetic Spirit denounced the judgement of God upon them, that the puniſhment of two perſons might be for the inſtruction of many." Indeed, ſuch ſeverity in the beginning of Chriſtianity was highly proper, in order to prevent any occaſion for ſimilar puniſhments in future. Thus Cain, the firſt murderer, was moſt ſignally puniſhed by the immediate hand of God, as were Sodom and Gomorrah, which, in the early ages, were diſtinguiſhed for their filthineſs and abominations. Thus, upon the erecting God's temporal kingdom among the Jews, Nadab and Abihu were ſtruck dead for offering ſtrange fire before the Lord; and Korah and his company were ſwallowed up alive by the earth, for oppoſing Moſes, the faithful miniſter of the Lord; and laſtly, Uzzah, for touching the ark, fell by as ſudden and remarkable a divine judgement, when the kingdom was given to be eſtabliſhed in the houſe of David, to teach Iſrael a reverence for God and divine things. Nay, in eſtabliſhing even human laws, a ſevere puniſhment upon the firſt tranſgreſſors often prevents the puniſhment of others, who are deterred from like attempts by the ſuffering of the firſt criminals. And the effect in the preſent caſe was accordingly; for a great dread and unuſual awe fell upon all the Chriſtian church; and not upon them alone, but upon all others alſo who ſaw or heard of what had happened. Thus hypocrites and diſhoneſt perſons were deterred from joining the Chriſtians merely for the ſake of a preſent alms; to which, by a fraud like this of Ananias and Sapphira, many might, on eaſy terms, have purchaſed a pretence, who would alſo, no doubt, have proved a great ſcandal to a profeſſion taken up on ſuch infamous motives. Compare ver. 13. Further, this judgement was a convincing atteſtation of the Apoſtles moſt upright conduct in the management of the ſums with which they were intruſted, and indeed in general of their divine miſſion; for none can imagine that Peter would have had the aſſurance to pronounce, and much leſs the power to execute ſuch a ſentence as this, if he had been at the ſame time guilty of a much baſer fraud of the like kind; or had been belying the Holy Ghoſt in the whole of his pretenſions. We may juſt remark, that this is the firſt place in which the word church is mentioned; and here is a native ſpecimen of a New-Teſtament church, called by the Goſpel, grafted into Chriſt by baptiſm, animated by love, united by all kind of fellowſhip, and diſciplined by the exemplary puniſhment of hypocrites. See Limborch, Reynolds's "Letter to a Deiſt," p. 245, Benſon, and Biſcoe's Lectures, p. 659.

Ver. 13. And of the reſt, &c.] That is, the people held them in diſtant admiration, and preſumed not, on any falſe pretence, to join them, if not truly converted to their religion; which yet it appears by the next verſe many were, who readily came into a full and ſolemn profeſſion of it, as indeed the late miracle was a glorious, though a dreadful demonſtration of its truth. The word κολλᾶσθαι, rendered join, ſignifies to aſſociate or unite with; to adhere or cleave to. See Whitby, L'Enfant, and Stockius.

Ver. 15. That at leaſt the ſhadow, &c.] The efficacy of St. Peter's ſhadow in curing diſtempers is ſo far from being natural, or likely to enter into the mind of many, that nothing but the force of truth could have rendered it credible, and it muſt have been experience which firſt gave the idea of it. For the ſick being expoſed in the ſtreets where the Apoſtles paſſed, that they might receive from them a cure by their prayers and the impoſition of hands, they found that the ſhadow of Peter had the ſacred power; and this unlooked-for experiment became afterwards the foundation of their faith and expectation. The paſſage from ver. 11. is confuſed, but may be reduced to order in the following manner: Ver. 11. And great fear came upon all the church, and upon as many as heard theſe things. Ver. 14. And believers were the more added to the Lord, multitudes both of men and women. Ver. 12. And they were all with one accord in Solomon's porch. Ver. 13. And of the reſt durſt no man join himſelf unto them; but the people magnified them. Ver. 12. And by the hands of the Apoſtles were many ſigns and wonders wrought; Ver. 15. Inſomuch that they brought forth the ſick into the ſtreets, &c. This regulation of the paſſage was propoſed by the late learned and judicious Bp. Sherlock. See Bowyer's Greek Teſtament.

Ver. 17. The ſect of the Sadducees] The Sadducees, as they denied the reſurrection from the dead, and a future ſtate of rewards and puniſhments, were the moſt conſtant and implacable enemies to Chriſtianity. Grotius and others have concuded from this text, that the high-prieſt and his kindred were Sadducees; and accordingly Dr. Waterland and the MS. read (who were of the ſect, &c.) Joſephus affirms, that ſome of the high-prieſts were of this ſect. See Biſcoe's Lectures, p. 110, Simon's Crit. Hiſt. of the Old Teſt. p. 108. and Jortin's Appendix to Rem. on Eccl. Hiſt. vol. ii. Nº. 1.

Ver. 20. All the words of this life] The whole doctrine of life. Heylin. "That glorious Goſpel with which you are charged, on which the eternal life of man ſo evidently depends, and by which alone their final happineſs can be ſecured." See 2 Tim. i. 10.

Ver. 21. Called the council—and all the ſenate, &c.] The whole ſanhedrim, and all the elders of Iſrael, πᾶσαν τὴν γερουσίαν. Some render it the ſanhedrim, even, or that is to ſay, the whole ſenate of the children of Iſrael. See Doddridge and Benſon.

Ver. 24. They doubted of them, &c.] They were in great perplexity about the Apoſtles, and what this matter might come to. Heylin. It might be rendered more literally, They were in great doubt concerning them, heard theſe things, they doubted of them whereunto this would grow.

(namely,

25 Then came one and told them, ſaying, Behold, the men whom ye put in priſon, are ſtanding in the temple, and teaching the people.

26 Then went the captain with the officers, and brought them without violence: (for they feared the people, leſt they ſhould have been ſtoned.)

27 And when they had brought them, the ſet them before the council: and the high-prieſt aſked them, 28 Saying, Did not we ſtraitly command you, that ye ſhould not teach in this name? and behold, ye have filled Jeruſalem with your doctrine, and intend to bring this man's blood upon us.

29 Then Peter and the other apoſtles anſwered and ſaid, We ought to obey God rather than men.

30 The God of our fathers raiſed up Jeſus, whom ye ſlew and hanged on a tree.

31 Him hath God exalted with his right hand to be a Prince and a Saviour, for to give repentance to Iſrael, and forgiveneſs of ſins.

32 And we are his witneſſes of theſe things; and ſo is alſo the Holy Ghoſt, whom God hath given to them that obey him.

33 When they heard that, they were cut to the heart, and took counſel to ſlay them.

34 Then ſtood there up one in the council, a Phariſee, named Gamaliel, a doctor of the law, had in reputation among all the people, and commanded to put the apoſtles forth a little ſpace;

35 And ſaid unto them, Ye men of Iſrael, take heed to yourſelves, what ye intend to do as touching theſe men.

36 For before theſe days aroſe up Theudas, boaſting himſelf to be ſomebody, to whom a number of men, about four hundred, joined themſelves: who was ſlain; and all, as many as obeyed him, were ſcattered, and brought to nought.

37 After this man roſe up Judas of Galilee, in the days of the taxing, and drew away much people after him: he alſo pe-

Ver. 26. Matth. xxi. 26. Ch. iv. 21.—V. 28. Ch. iv. 18.—V. 29. Ch. iv. 19.—V. 30. Ch. iii. 13, 15. Ch. x. 39. xiii. 29. 1 Pet. ii. 24.—V. 31. Ch. ii. 33, 36. Hebr. ii. 10. See Luke xxiv. 47. Ch. iii. 15. Ch. iii. 26.—V. 32. John xv. 26, 27. Ch. ii. 4. V. 33. Ch. vii. 54.—V. 34. Ch. xxii. 3.—V. 36. The third year before the account called Anno Domini. Or, believed.

(namely τους λογους, theſe words, or this report) what this could be. That is, whether they had procured their liberty by corrupting the keepers, or whether there might not be ſomething miraculous in the deliverance of perſons whom ſuch extraordinary circumſtances had attended.

Ver. 26. For they feared the people, &c.] This may ſeem a ſurpriſing change in the people, conſidering the eagerneſs with which they demanded that Chriſt ſhould be crucified: But if we conſider that the common people, in many caſes, judge without thoſe fixed and inveterate prejudices which entangle the minds of their ſuperiors; and how much the beneficent and inconteſtable miracles wrought by the Apoſtles muſt have affected them, we ſhall be the leſs ſurprized at ſo great and ſudden a change; eſpecially if it be conſidered alſo, how vehemently they longed to throw off the Roman Yoke, and regain their ancient liberty; for which they ſtill retained a paſſionate concern, notwithſtanding they had been ſo often diſappointed. From the many evident miracles worked in confirmation of our Lord's reſurrection and aſcenſion, and the ſtrong proofs there were of his being the Meſſiah, very probably they were ſtill ready to hope that he would ſome way or other bring about the deliverance which they ſo much expected and deſired; and therefore they overawed their ſuperiors from putting the Apoſtles to death, or doing them the harm which they would otherwiſe have done them. See Benſon, and Lardner's Credibil. vol. i. p. 179.

Ver. 28. This man's blood upon us] That is, the odium and the guilt of it. See Matth. xxvii. 25.

Ver. 30. Whom ye ſlew, and hanged on a tree] Whom ye crucified. Heylin. Literally, Whom ye ſlew, hanging him on a tree. See Deut. xxi. 23. Inſtead of raiſed up, Dr. Waterland reads hath raiſed up.

Ver. 31. Him hath God exalted, &c.] He is the prince and Saviour, whom God hath exalted with, or to his right hand, for the converſion of Iſrael, and the remiſſion of ſins. Heylin and Wat. See ch. ii. 33. and on iii. 26.

Ver. 32. And ſo is the Holy Ghoſt] The teſtimony ariſing from this miraculous communication of the Spirit to Chriſtians at that time, intirely removes the objection from Chriſt's not appearing in public after his reſurrection; for had there been any impoſture, it certainly would have been eaſier of the two to have perſuaded people at a diſtance that he had ſo appeared to the Jewiſh rulers, or even to the multitude, and yet had been rejected, than that he had given his ſervants ſuch extraordinary powers; ſince, had this aſſertion been falſe, every one might have been a ſufficient witneſs of its falſhood, without the trouble and expence of a journey to Jeruſalem, or any other diſtant place. See Doddridge, Macknight's Harmony, ſect. 158. and the note on ch. x. 41.

Ver. 33. They were cut to the heart] Διεπρίοντο expreſſes the action of thoſe, who, through rage, grate with their teeth, as it were with a ſaw; from πρίω, which ſignifies to cut with a ſaw. See ch. vii. 54. Beza and Mintert.

Ver. 34. A phariſee, named Gamaliel] He is ſaid to have been the ſon of good old Simeon, mentioned Luke ii. 25. and was the perſon at whoſe feet St. Paul was brought up. He was a man in ſo great eſteem among the Jews, that Onkelos, the author of the Targum, is ſaid to have burned ſeventy pounds weight of perfumes at his funeral; and the Jews have this ſaying concerning him, "From the time that Rabban Gamaliel the old died, the honour of the law failed, and purity and Phariſaiſm died." See Biſcoe, p. 77.

Ver. 30. Roſe up Theudas, boaſting himſelf, &c.] Pretending to ſomewhat extraordinary. Heylin. Saying that he was ſome great one,—a perſon of eminence and diſtinction; for many manuſcripts and verſions read the word μεγαν. See Mill and Wetſtein. Theudas was a very common name among the Jews; the perſon therefore here mentioned moſt probably was one among the many leaders who, as Joſephus informs us, took up arms in defence of the public liberties, when the grand enrolment and taxation was made by Cyrenius, in the days of Archelaus: For that this was not the Theudas mentioned by Joſephus under the character of a falſe prophet (who drew a great number of people after him, with a promiſe of dividing Jordan before them, but was defeated and beheaded, moſt of his followers being alſo ſlain or impriſoned) is plain from hence, that he appeared when Fadus was procurator of Judea? that is, according to the beſt calculations, at leaſt ten years after this was ſpoken. The Theudas here mentioned ſeems to have been ſupported by ſmaller numbers than the ſecond of that name: but, like that ſecond, he periſhed in the attempt. As his followers were diſperſed, and not ſlaughtered, like thoſe of the ſecond Theudas, ſurvivors might not talk much of him, and Joſephus might not think it worth his while to make a particular mention of him, though his hiſtory might be well known to Gamaliel, and the people of thoſe times. This account of Theudas renders all the criticiſms upon the beginning of the next verſe intirely uſeleſs. In the days of the taxing there, might be read, In thoſe days of the taxation, or enrolment; meaning thoſe ſame days, or at the ſame period of time when the impoſtor Theudas appeared. The reader will find, in Joſephus's 18th book of his Antiquities, an account of Judas of Galilee. See alſo the notes on Matth. xxii. 16. xxiv. 3, 4. Luke ii. 2. Lardner's Cred. part i. b. 2. Lightfoot, and Baſnage.

Ver, 37. And all, as many as obeyed him] As put confidence in him. MS. and ſo ver. 36. Dr. Lardner has juſtly obſerved, that the word rendered diſperſed, by no means implies that theſe men were deſtroyed; and he imagines, that though Gamaliel would not directly aſſert it, yet he inſinuates, agreeably to his principles as a Phariſee, that perhaps Judas the Galilean, as well as the Apoſtles, might be acted by ſome divine impulſe; and that in one inſtance as well as the other, the doctrine might ſurvive, when the teachers were taken off; but the argument will be good in the common interpretation: and as the word διεσκορπίσθησαν, eſpecially in this connection, moſt naturally implies a calamitous and diſappointing diſperſion, the preſent tenſe moſt probably would have been uſed, if it had been intended riſhed; and all, even as many as obeyed him, were diſperſed.

38 And now I ſay unto you, Refrain from theſe men, and let them alone: for if this counſel or this work be of men, it will come to nought:

39 But if it be of God, ye cannot overthrow it; leſt haply ye be found even to fight againſt God.

40 And to him they agreed: and when they had called the Apoſtles, and beaten them, they commanded that they ſhould not ſpeak in the name of Jeſus, and let them go.

41 And they departed from the preſence of the council, rejoicing that they were counted worthy to ſuffer ſhame for his name.

42 And daily in the temple, and in every houſe, they ceaſed not to teach and preach Jeſus Chriſt.

Ver. 38. Prov. xxi. 30. Iſai. viii. 10. Matth. xv. 13.—V. 39. Ch. ix. 5. xxiii. 9.—V. 40. Ch. iv. 18.—V. 41. Matth. v. 12. Hebr. x. 34. James i. 2. 1 Pet. iv. 13, 16.—V. 42. Ch. ii. 46.

in the above-mentioned ſenſe. Gamaliel's reaſon will for ever hold good againſt all perſecution and intolerance. See Lardner's Credib. part i. b. 2. and the note on Luke xiii. 1, 2. We may juſt obſerve, for the claſſical reader, that there in Homer's Iliad E. 606. a line eery ſimilar to what Gamaliel ſays, ver. 39.

Εἴκετε μηδὲ θεοῖς μενεαινέμεν ἶφι μάχεσθαι.

The words leſt haply are to be connected with let them alone, ver. 38. and all that comes between is to be read in a parentheſis. "This ſpeech of Gamaliel ſeems to me, ſays Dr. Benſon, to have been made, partly in oppoſition to the Sadducees, partly out of policy, to fall in with the popular ſentiments at that time concerning the Apoſtles, that the people might ſtill keep up their veneration for him, and for the other leading men among the Phariſees. But he ſeems to have ſpoken after that manner chiefly from an expectation of a temporal deliverance, and a ſtrong deſire to ſee it accompliſhed by the Apoſtles of Jeſus, rather than not at all. Had he made ſuch a ſpeech out of a love of liberty and free inquiry, he muſt have gone upon the generous principles of Chriſtianity, and have been (as ſome have repreſented him) at leaſt ſecretly a friend to the Chriſtians; but he appeareth to have had no ſuch favourable ſentiments of the Chriſtians, nor any ſuch concern for the cauſe in which they were engaged: for he is ſaid to have made, or at leaſt to have approved of, "a prayer againſt the Chriſtians;" which the Jews to this day retain in their liturgy, and in which the Chriſtians are called Heretics, and God is petitioned to deſtroy them. For with what principle or view ſoever Gamaliel made it, his ſpeech had ſo good an effect upon the ſanhedrim, that inſtead of putting the twelve Apoſtles to death, they called them in, and only ordered them to be ſcourged. This, ſays the doctor, I ſuppoſe was the inflicting upon them what St. Paul calleth the forty ſtripes ſave one, 2 Cor. ix. 24. For the Romans did then allow the Jews to make uſe of that puniſhment as they thought proper. See Benſon's Hiſt. vol. i. p. 113.

Ver. 41. Rejoicing, &c.] The puniſhment ordered by the ſanhedrim, it is likely, was inflicted in ſome open market-place, whereby the ſufferers were expoſed; and therefore it is ſaid, ſays Dr. Lardner, that they rejoiced that they were counted worthy to ſuffer ſhame. But in ver. 40. the Apoſtles are repreſented as called in, and beaten with rods, or ſcourged before the ſanhedrim; and then, in this verſe, as departing from the ſanhedrim, rejoicing that they were counted worthy to be expoſed to infamy for the ſake of his name. If they were ſcourged in the preſence of the ſanhedrim, that was certainly being expoſed before the higheſt and moſt venerable court amongſt the Jews, and ſuffering great infamy in the eſteem of the whole nation. We may obſerve, that the corrupt and perſecuting world begins with mocking, ch. ii. 3. thence proceeds to cavilling, ch. iv. 7. to threats, ver. 17. to impriſoning, ch. v. 18. to blows, ver. 40. to ſlaughter, ch. vii. 58. A ſure mark of the truth is joy in affliction, ſuch as is true, deep, and pure. See Benſon and Bengelius.

Ver. 42. And in every houſe] Κατ' οικον, in the houſe where their upper-room was. See on ch. ii. 46.

REFLECTIONS ON CHAP. V.

Who can behold, without humble reverence, this aweful inſtance of the divine ſeverity, (ver. 5—11.) ſo well calculated to impreſs the minds of theſe new converts, and to prevent any of thoſe frauds, which the charity of thoſe who were moſt zealous in their profeſſion might have occaſioned in ſome others. Hence we may learn how hateful falſhood is to the God of truth, and how ſtrictly cautious we ſhould be to avoid it; not only ſhunning every direct lie, but the taking undue advantage from any ambiguities of expreſſion; and in a word, all recourſe to the arts of equivocation and inſincerity. God is a ſwift witneſs againſt every one who loveth or maketh a lie; and he only knows how ſoon ſuch treacherous lips, like thoſe here before us, may be ſealed up in eternal ſilence.

How miſerably doth Satan delude the heart which he once fills! ver. 3. But how peculiarly fatal is the deluſion, when he leads men to ſins which eſpecially affront the HOLY SPIRIT OF GOD! That Spirit which reſted on the Apoſtles, and taught them to diſcover hidden things of darkneſs, ſo that they who tempted it, fell in the attempt, and became a ſign, ver. 9. O may integrity and uprightneſs ever preſerve us! (Pſ. xxv. 21.) and while we avoid all the kinds and arts of diſſimulation, let us peculiarly deteſt thoſe which would offer a double inſult to the God of heaven, by taking their dreſs from the religion which his own ſon hath planted.

The church is never more happy than when the ſons of falſhood are deterred from intruding into it, ver. 13. If its members are leſs numerous, it is a ſufficient balance that it is more pure. We ſee what ſingular miracles were done by the Apoſtles, ver. 15, 16. Miracles equal, and in ſome reſpects, (as it appears by theſe inſtances, and in perfect accompliſhment of our Lord's own expreſs prediction, John xiv. 12.) ſuperior to thoſe which Chriſt performed in the days of his miniſtration here below. When will the happy time come, in which men ſhall expreſs as great a concern for their ſouls, as they here did for their bodies? When ſhall the ſtreets and aſſemblies be filed with thoſe, who, from a ſenſe of their ſpiritual maladies, ſhall apply to the miniſters of Chriſt for healing?—Let it always be remembered, that whatever they do for this happy purpoſe, it is indeed their Maſter who does it by them, and that all their moſt aſſiduous applications, ſeparate from his bleſſing, can effect no more than the ſhadow of Peter would have done, if the power of Chriſt had not wrought on thoſe over whom it paſſed.

Which ſhall we ſurvey with the greater ſurprize, the continued courage of the Apoſtles, or the continued malice of their perſecutors? ver. 17, 18. Again they ſeize them; again they impriſon them; but how vainly do theſe feeble worms, amidſt all the pride of dignity and power, oppoſe the counſels of Omnipotence!

The angel of the Lord opens the door of their priſon, and leads forth his faithful ſervants to renewed liberty; ver. 19. an office which this celeſtial Spirit could not but perform with delight, as it was no doubt with unutterable pleaſure that he gave them their errand to go and publiſh with undaunted freedom and zeal the words of this life, of this Goſpel, which enlivens dead ſouls, and points out the road to an happy immortality, ver. 20. O that the folly of thoſe who heard it, and who ſtill hear it, had never converted it into a ſavour of death!

Yet behold, the council renew the attack! ver. 21—26. The ſame madneſs which inſtigated the Jews to ſeize Jeſus, when they had been ſtruck to the ground by his miraculous power, (John xviii. 6.) now animates theſe wretches to continue the deſtruction of perſons, whom God himſelf had juſt before reſcued from their hands; as they had formerly plotted that of Lazarus, (John xii. 10.) who had by a yet more aſtoniſhing wonder been recalled from the grave. To what fatal extravagancies will not prejudice hurry the mind? Againſt what convincing evidence will it not harden it?

Ye ſhall be brought before councils for my ſake, ſays our Lord, and it ſhall be for a teſtimony againſt them, Matth. x. 18. And ſuch was this repeated admonition, which theſe holy priſoners then at the bar gave to the judges of Iſrael, ver. 29. Still they urge the divine authority of their miſſion; ſtill they proclaim him, as head of the church and world, whom theſe very men had ſo lately crucified in ſo outrageous and contemptuous a manner, ver. 30, 31. They point to Him, whom theſe prieſts and rulers had inſulted on the croſs, as now exalted at the right hand of God; and urge them to ſeek repentance and remiſſion of ſin from Him, to whom they had denied the moſt common juſtice due to the meaneſt of men; the common humanity due to the vileſt of criminals in their dying moments; giving him in the thirſt of his laſt agonies vinegar to drink mingled with gall.

Thouſands of the people had fallen under this charge; and Jeſus the prince had taken them under his protection: Jeſus the Saviour had waſhed them in his blood. But, by what is too frequently the fatal prerogative of greatneſs, theſe princes of Iſrael had hearts too high for the diſcipline of wiſdom, and were enraged againſt theſe humble miniſters of the Son of God, ver. 33. who nevertheleſs addreſſed them with all the reſpect which fidelity would allow, and could gladly have poured forth their blood for the ſalvation of thoſe who ſo cruelly thirſted for it. They gnaſhed on theſe faithful ambaſſadors with their teeth, as if they would have devoured them alive; and juſtly will gnaſhing of teeth be the eternal portion of thoſe, who thus outrageouſly rejected the counſel of God againſt themſelves.

But God raiſed up a guardian for the Apoſtles, where perhaps they leaſt expected it; and the prudence of Gamaliel, for a while, checks the fury of his brethren, ver. 34. Thus does God ſometimes uſe the natural good ſenſe and temper of thoſe who do not themſelves receive the Goſpel, for the protection of thoſe who are faithfully devoted to its ſervice. Gamaliel had attentively obſerved former events; which is indeed the way to learn the ſureſt leſſons of wiſdom, which are to be learned any where but from the words of God. He had ſeen ſome ruined by their ſeditious zeal;—and let thoſe who call themſelves Chriſtians, take heed how they raſhly riſe up againſt legal authority, leſt taking the ſword, they periſh by it. Judiciouſly does he

admoniſh

CHAP. VI.

The apoſtles deſirous to have the poor regarded for their bodily ſuſtenance, as alſo careful themſelves to diſpenſe the word of God, the food of the ſoul, appoint the office of deaconſhip to ſeven choſen men: of whom, Stephen, a man full of faith, and of the Holy Ghoſt is one: who is taken of thoſe whom he confounded in diſputing, and after falſely accuſed of blaſphemy againſt the law and the temple.

AND in thoſe days, when the number of the diſciples was multiplied, there aroſe a murmuring of the Grecians againſt the Hebrews, becauſe their widows were neglected in the daily miniſtration.

2 Then the twelve called the multitude of the diſciples unto them, and ſaid, It is not reaſon that we ſhould leave the word of God, and ſerve tables.

3 Wherefore, brethren, look ye out among you ſeven men of honeſt report, full of the Holy Ghoſt and wiſdom, whom we may appoint over this buſineſs.

4 But we will give ourſelves continually to prayer, and to the miniſtry of the word.

5 And the ſaying pleaſed the whole multitude: and they choſe Stephen, a man full of faith and of the Holy Ghoſt, and Philip, and Prochorus, and Nicanor, and Timon, and Parmenas, and Nicolas, a proſelyte of Antioch:

6 Whom they ſet before the apoſtles: and when they had prayed, they laid their hands on them.

7 And the word of God increaſed; and

Ver. 1. Ch. ix. 29. xi. 20. Ch. iv. 35.—V. 2. Exod. xviii. 17.—V. 3. Deut. i. 13. Ch. i. 21. xvi. 2. 1 Tim. iii. 7.—V. 4. Ch. ii. 42.—V. 5. Ch. xi. 24. Ch. viii. 5, 26. xxi. 8. Rev. ii. 6, 15.—V. 6. Ch. viii. 17. xiii. 3. 1 Tim. iv. 14. v. 22. 2 Tim. i. 6.—V. 7. Ch. xii. 24. xix. 20. Col. i. 6.

admoniſh the counſel, ver. 39. to take heed leſt they be found fighters againſt God. May divine grace ever guard us from that fatal error, into which all who oppoſe the Goſpel, whatever they may imagine, aſſuredly fall. They cannot indeed diſſolve it, but they daſh themſelves in pieces againſt it: Be wiſe therefore, O ye kings; be inſtructed, ye judges of the earth!

For reaſons of ſtate the Apoſtles were to be ſcourged, though their judges were inwardly convinced, that it was at leaſt poſſible their meſſage might be divine. Deliver us, O Lord, from that policy which ſhall lead us to imagine any evil ſo great, as that which may offend thee! The puniſhment which theſe excellent men ſuffered, was infamous; but the cauſe in which they endured it, rendered it glorious! Nor could thoſe ſtripes be half ſo painful to their fleſh, as an opportunity of thus approving their fidelity to their Lord, was delightful to their pious ſouls, ver. 41. Well might they triumph in bearing the ſcourge for Him, who bore the croſs, and died on it, for them. Let us arm ourſelves with the ſame mind, if in a ſeverer ſenſe than this we ſhould be called for his ſake to reſiſt even unto blood.

Chap. VI. Ver. 1. There aroſe a murmuring of the Grecians, &c.] The Helleniſts. Wat. and MS. There is not all the light that one could wiſh for concerning the diſtinction of the Jews, into Hebrews and Helleniſts; but the following appears the moſt probable account. The Jews who inhabited Judea, and thoſe of the eaſtern diſperſions, generally retained the Syro-Chaldaic, which in the New Teſtament is called the Hebrew language; but thoſe of the weſtern diſperſions generally made uſe of the Greek; a language which then prevailed almoſt univerſally. The former were called Hebrews, and the latter Helleniſts, or Græciſing Jews; and of this ſort were moſt of the Roman, Grecian, and Egyptian Jews, as well as the "proſelytes of righteouſneſs," of the weſtern diſperſions. After the time of Ezra, the Scriptures of the Old Teſtament were read to the Jews in their ſynagogues, in their original Hebrew; and interpreted in Chaldee, becauſe the common people had forgotten the original Hebrew by living ſo long in Chaldea. But the Jews who were planted at Alexandria in Egypt, ſeemed generally in proceſs of time to have forgot both the Hebrew and the Chaldee; and by converſing ſo much in a Grecian city, to have fallen into the uſe of the Greek language. Hence a tranſlation of the Scriptures for the uſe of the common people became neceſſary; and part of the verſion which goes under the name of the Septuagint, was made by ſome of the learned men among the Jews there; and is thought to have been firſt made uſe of in that city, inſtead of the Chaldee interpretation: For we are to obſerve, that the Jews did not any where, at that time, publickly read the Scriptures in any other language than the Hebrew. Hence then it is probable theſe Jews were called Helleniſts, becauſe of their uſing the Helleniſtick, or Greek language; and by that name they came to be diſtinguiſhed from the Hebrew Jews, who uſed only the Hebrew tongue. Theſe different cuſtoms are ſaid to have made a ſort of ſchiſm between them; in alluſion to which, St. Paul ſeems to have mentioned it among the Jews, that he was an Hebrew of the Hebrews. See Philip. iii. 5. That is, a deſcendant of that ſort of Jews who were moſt highly eſteemed upon the account of their uſing the Hebrew language. 2 Cor. xi. 22. And Joſephus plainly intimates, that the Greek tongue was contemned by the Jews of Judea particularly. See his Jewiſh Antiq. l. 20. laſt ſection. The Syriac verſion has rendered Ἑλληνιστῶν, by the Jews who underſtood, or ſpoke Greek. That theſe Helleniſts were not all of them proſelytes of righteouſneſs, as ſome aver, ſeems indiſputable from St. Luke's obſervation, ver. 5. that Nicholas was a proſelyte of Antioch. It may poſſibly be inferred from hence, that ſome of the Helleniſts were proſelytes of righteouſneſs. But as he alone, of all the ſeven deacons, is ſaid to have been a proſelyte, it is very unlikely that all the Helleniſts were ſuch; for it is highly probable that others of the ſeven deacons were Helleniſts, as well as Nicolas; whereas, by ſaying that Nicolas was a proſelyte, St. Luke ſeems to have intimated that all the other ſix deacons were Jews by birth, as well as religion, though ſome of them might be Helleniſts, and others Hebrews.

While Satan's kingdom fell before the preaching of the Goſpel, like lightning from heaven, and the number of the Chriſtians increaſed exceedingly, the Helleniſts, or Græciſing Jewiſh Chriſtians, complained of the Hebrew Chriſtians; becauſe in the daily diſtribution of the charity, their widows, who were poor or ſick, or burdened with the care of children, were either wholly neglected, or at leaſt not made equal with the widows of the Hebrews. It is highly probable they eſteemed the widows of the Græciſts, agreeably to their prejudices, leſs worthy and honourable; and perhaps no land had been ſold out of Paleſtine to raiſe or ſupport the fund, but what Barnabas had ſold in the iſland of Cyprus; and therefore they might think that the Helleniſts had not an equal claim, as the Hebrews had been the chief contributors. The Apoſtles, undoubtedly, acted a very faithful part in the diſtribution of money raiſed by the ſale of lands. But they could not do all things. Perhaps they intruſted ſome who had been proprietors of the eſtates ſold, who would naturally have ſome peculiar regard to the neceſſity of their neighbours, as being beſt acquainted with them. And if any ſuſpicions aroſe, as to the ſincerity of their character, and the reaſonableneſs of their pretenſions, theſe ſtrangers would naturally be leaſt capable of giving ſatisfaction. See Benſon, Lightfoot, and Barrington's Miſcel. Sacr.

Ver. 2. A multitude of the diſciples] That is, the whole body of Chriſtian converts; they being the perſons to whom ſatisfaction was then due. And ſerve tables, is in the Greek, διακονεῖν τραπέζαις, to miniſter to, or take care of the tables, i. e. of the poor;—to attend to the diſtribution of charitable gifts amongſt them.

Ver. 3. Of honeſt report] Of good credit. Heylin. Of an atteſted character. Doddridge.

Ver. 5. And they choſe Stephen] Some have thought that Stephen was one of the Seventy; but it ſeems a precarious conjecture. The termination of moſt of theſe names, makes it probable they were Helleniſts;—a ſuppoſition, which agrees very well with the occaſion of their election. Nicolas was not a Jew born, but a proſelyte of Antioch, whom they were the more willing to fix in this office, as his peculiar relation to the Grecians would make him eſpecially careful to remedy any neglect of them which might have inſenſibly prevailed. Some ancient writers tell us, that he fell into error in the decline of life, and became the founder of the ſect of the Nicolaitans, mentioned Rev. 6, 15. But it ſeems much more probable, that the founder of this ſect, conſidering how common the name was, might be ſome other perſon ſo called: or elſe, that ſome of his words and actions being miſinterpreted, might be the occaſion of ſeduction under the authority of ſo venerable a name as his. See Benſon, and L'Enfant.

Ver. 7. And a great company of the prieſts] We learn from Ezra iii. 36—39. that 4289 prieſts returned from the captivity; the number of whom was now probably very much increaſed. Caſaubon and others, wondering that ſo many of the prieſts ſhould believe, would read, καὶ τῶν ἱερῶν, for τινες των ιερων, and ſome of the prieſts, as chap. xxi. 16. It is certainly wonderful that a great multitude of them ſhould embrace the Goſpel, conſidering what peculiar reſentments the number of the diſciples multiplied in Jeruſalem greatly; and a great company of the prieſts were obedient to the faith.

they

8 And Stephen, full of faith and power, did great wonders and miracles among the people.

9 Then there aroſe certain of the ſynagogue, which is called the ſynagogue of the Libertines, and Cyrenians, and Alexandrians, and of them of Cilicia, and of Aſia, diſputing with Stephen.

10 And they were not able to reſiſt the wiſdom and the ſpirit by which he ſpake.

11 Then they ſuborned men, which ſaid, We have heard him ſpeak blaſphemous words againſt Moſes, and againſt God.

12 And they ſtirred up the people, and the elders, and the ſcribes, and came upon him, and caught him, and brought him to the council,

13 And ſet up falſe witneſſes, which ſaid, This man ceaſeth not to ſpeak blaſphemous words againſt this holy place, and the law:

14 For we have heard him ſay, that this Jeſus of Nazareth ſhall deſtroy this place, and ſhall change the cuſtoms which Moſes delivered us.

15 And all that ſat in the council, looking ſtedfaſtly on him, ſaw his face as it had been the face of an angel.

CHAP. VII.

Stephen permitted to anſwer to the accuſation of blaſphemy, ſheweth that Abraham worſhipped God rightly, and how God choſe the fathers, before Moſes was born, and before the tabernacle and temple were built: that Moſes himſelf witneſſed of Chriſt: and that all outward ceremonies were ordained according to the heavenly pattern to laſt but for a time: reprehending their rebellion, and murdering of Chriſt, the Juſt One, whom the prophets foretold ſhould come into the world: whereupon they ſtone him to death; who commendeth his ſoul to Jeſus, and humbly prayeth for them.

THEN ſaid the high-prieſt, Are theſe things ſo?

2 And he ſaid, Men, brethren, and fathers, hearken; The God of glory appeared Ver. 7. John xii. 42.—V. 10. Luke xxi. 15. See Exod. iv. 12. Iſai. liv. 17.—V. 14. Ch. xxv. 8. Or, rites.——V. 2. Ch. xxii. 1.

they muſt expect from their unbelieving brethren, and the great loſſes to which they muſt be expoſed in conſequence of being caſt out of their office. But the grace of God was ſufficient to animate and ſupport them againſt every objection; and it is very probable, that the miracle of rending the veil of the temple, and the teſtimony of the guards to the truth of the reſurrection, might contribute conſiderably towards their converſion, in concurrence with the miraculous gifts and powers of the Apoſtles; the moſt convincing proofs of which they ſaw before their eyes in their own temple. See Doddridge, Caſaubon, and Heylin; who reads, And many of the prieſts.

Ver. 8. Full of faith] Full of grace, is the reading of many MSS. See Wetſtein.

Ver. 9. The ſynagogues of the libertines] Theſe were Jews born at Rome, whoſe grandfathers had been in ſlavery there, and then made free. Great numbers of Jews taken captive by Pompey, and carried into Italy, were ſet at liberty, and obtained their freedom from their maſters. Their children, therefore, would be libertini, in the proper ſenſe of the word. Agreeably to this, the Jews baniſhed from Rome by Tiberius, are ſpoken of by Tacitus as of the libertine race, who might eaſily conſtitute one of the 480 ſynagogues, ſaid to have been at Jeruſalem. Some learned criticks, however, obſerve, that as the other ſynagogues here mentioned are denominated from countries, ſo here, perhaps, we ſhould read, Λιβυστινων, of the Libyſtines. See Wetſtein. Vitringa, Lardner's Credib. part i. b. 1. and Wolfius.

Ver. 11. Blaſphemous words againſt Moſes, &c.] There is no reaſon to believe that Stephen knew the myſtery of the abolition of the Moſaic law, which the Apoſtles do not ſeem immediately to have underſtood: And it is much leſs probable, that he openly taught what St. Paul himſelf, many years after, inſinuated with ſo much caution. See Gal. ii. 2. This, therefore, ſeems to have been the inference which they drew from what he taught concerning the deſtruction he denounced on the Jews, if they continued in their unbelief: But it was a very precarious inference, as the city and temple had been deſtroyed before, without any repeal of the law, and therefore they were falſe witneſſes. Comp. ver. 13, 14. Doddridge, and Benſon.

Ver. 15. Saw his face, &c.] Many commentators interpret this as a proverbial expreſſion of the majeſty and beauty of his countenance, ariſing from the tranſport of inward joy in the conſciouſneſs of innocence, and the expectation of glory, though he had ſo cruel a ſentence and execution in view. And upon this, the tranſlation of 1729 takes the unpardonable liberty of rendering it, they ſaw an air of majeſty in his aſpect; but it ſeems rather to mean, that there was a ſupernatural ſplendor on his face, reſembling that of Moſes when he came down from converſing with God on Mount Sinai. They reckoned his preaching of Jeſus to be the Chriſt, was to deſtroy both Moſes and the law; and God bears witneſs to Stephen with the ſame Glory as he did to Moſes, when he gave the law by him. The Jews never deviſe or conceive any thing greater of their forefathers, or their moſt illuſtrious prophets, than what they now beheld in the countenance of Stephen. It is maintained by ſome of their writers, that in the prophetical viſions the human form vaniſhed, and the appearance of an angel was ſubſtituted for it, as long as the viſion continued; that the light which ſhone within them was ſo great, that it burſt through their bodies, and appeared externally. In this view it was indeed a moſt aſtoniſhing inſtance of the incorrigible hardneſs and wickedneſs of their hearts, that they could murder a man on whom God put ſuch a viſible glory, ſimilar to that of their patriarchs and prophets, and their great legiſlator in particular. But we know what little impreſſion other miracles made upon them, the truth of which they were compelled to acknowledge. See ch. iv. 16. Benſon, Hammond, L'Enfant, and Patrick's Witneſſes, p. 92. We refer to the end of the next chapter for Reflections on this.

Chap. VII. Ver. 2. And he ſaid, Men, brethren, and fathers] My brethren, &c. Wat. Le Clerc, with a mixture of raſhneſs and weakneſs, into which he frequently falls in his reflections on Scripture, not underſtanding the true ſcope of St. Stephen's diſcourſe, preſumes to cenſure it, as containing many things, not to the purpoſe, as well as many ſlips of memory; though it is expreſly ſaid, ver. 25. that Stephen was full of the Holy Ghoſt, when he delivered it, we hope the notes following will ſerve to lead the reader into the true deſign of it. Dr. Benſon has illuſtrated it in a large and very judicious manner, to whom we ſhall be frequently obliged; and the following introductory remarks from Dr. Ward's 39th Diſſertation will ſerve to ſhew its general propriety. The charge brought againſt Stephen, ſays he, conſiſted of two parts: That Jeſus of Nazareth would deſtroy the temple where they were then aſſembled, and change the rites of Moſes, ch. vi. 14. The foundation of this charge ſeems to have been, that Stephen, in diſputing with them, had plainly proved, that Jeſus was the Meſſiah. Hence his accuſers inferred their charge, fixing upon him their own conſequences as his aſſertions, and that with a deſign to take away his life, for which reaſon they might juſtly be called falſe witneſſes, ver. 13. But though Stephen had not directly aſſerted theſe things, yet were they true in themſelves, and might be inferred from the law and the prophets, (Deut. xv.) he could not therefore deny them; and to have owned them in expreſs terms, would have been to give himſelf up to their rage and fury. The method therefore which he takes in his defence is, firſt, to ſhew them, from their writings, that all their former diſpenſations were to iſſue in that of the Meſſiah; and he begins with God's calling Abraham from his country and family, and promiſing to him and his poſterity the land of Canaan for a poſſeſſion; and it is remarkable, that he does not call it an everlaſting poſſeſſion, as it is called Gen. xvii. 8. which might have ſeemed not ſo conſiſtent with their forfeiture of it upon their rejecting the Meſſiah. Then he obſerves to them, how their fathers rejected Moſes, after the cleareſt proofs of his miſſion, and that they were puniſhed for it in the wilderneſs, and this he does to prepare them to conſider what they might juſtly expect upon rejecting Chriſt. He reminds them likewiſe, that Moſes himſelf had declared to them, that another prophet was to ariſe, like him, who they were ordered to hear. This was the Meſſiah; and his being like to Moſes muſt conſiſt in his bringing in a new diſpenſation, and confirming it with miracles, as Moſes had done. This ſeems to reſpect the latter article of the charge; and unto our father Abraham, when he was in Meſopotamia, before he dwelt in Charran,

3 And ſaid unto him, Get thee out of thy country, and from thy kindred, and come into the land which I ſhall ſhew thee.

4 Then came he out of the land of the Chaldeans, and dwelt in Charran: and from thence, when his father was dead, he removed him into this land wherein ye now dwell.

5 And he gave him none inheritance in it, no not ſo much as to ſet his foot on: yet he promiſed that he would give it to him for a poſſeſſion, and to his ſeed after him, when as yet he had no child.

6 And God ſpake on this wiſe, That his ſeed ſhould ſojourn in a ſtrange land; and that they ſhould bring them into bondage, and entreat them evil four hundred years.

7 And the nation to whom they ſhall be in bondage, will I judge, ſaid God: and after that ſhall they come forth, and ſerve me in this place.

8 And he gave him the covenant of circumciſion: and ſo Abraham begat Iſaac, and circumciſed him the eighth day; and Iſaac begat Jacob; and Jacob begat the twelve patriarchs.

9 And the patriarchs, moved with envy,

Ver. 3. Gen. xii. 1, 5, 6.—V. 4. Gen. xi. 31.—V. 5. Gen. xii. 7. xiii. 15.—V. 6. Gen. xv. 13, 16 Exod. xii. 40. Gal. iii. 17. V. 7. Exod. iii. 12.—V. 8. Gen. xvii. 9, 10, 11. Gen. xxi. 2, 3, 4. Gen. xxv. 26. Gen. xxix. 31, &c. xxx. 5, &c. xxxv. 23. V. 9. Gen. xxxvii. 4, 28. Pſ. cv. 17.

—and thus far they heard him patiently. He then proceeds to ſpeak of the temple, which relates to the former part of the accuſation; and here he uſes ſuch depreciating expreſſions, as, though taken from the prophets, could not be agreeable to them, and very probably inflamed their minds; but when he came to charge them with the murder of Jeſus, calling him the Juſt One, that is, the Meſſiah, they could no longer bear with him; but their paſſions roſe to ſuch an height, that they gnaſhed their teeth at him, and very probably made ſuch a diſturbance, that he could not proceed in what he deſigned to ſay further. Though we find that Peter had twice before taken the ſame method, and charged them as expreſly with the death of Jeſus, ch. ii. and iv. but Peter had, in both caſes, the advantage of a preſent miracle to ſupport him, and give weight to what he ſaid; and we find that the council were deterred by that from proceeding to extremities, ch. iv. 16. The Jewiſh rulers, before our Saviour's death, were apprehenſive that he deſigned, by gaining over the populace, to ſet himſelf up for a king; and that, in conſequence of this, the Roman would come and deſtroy their city, John xi. 48. This they hoped to prevent, by taking him off; but, after his death, finding that the Apoſtles not only went on to propagate the ſame ſcheme of religion, and ſupport it with miracles, as he had done, but alſo charged them with murdering him, whom his followers aſſerted to be the Meſſiah, they ſeemed now to be more immediately concerned for their own ſecurity. However, at firſt they endeavour to prevent the ſpreading of this doctrine, and to deter the preachers of it by leſs ſeverities, as in the caſe of Peter and John; but when they found thoſe would not do, it is not improbable they might reſolve upon greater; and thinking Stephen a proper ſubject for their purpoſe, might determine, if poſſible, to take away his life; which ſeems more likely from ch. v. 33. where it is ſaid, that the Jewiſh ſenate took counſel to ſlay the Apoſtles, as if they had not been diſſuaded by Gamaliel. However, as that could not have been done judicially, and in form of law, but by a trial before the Roman governor, who might not think their charge againſt him ſufficient to put him to death, there might be a particular deſign of Providence thus to honour him with being the firſt martyr for Chriſtianity, and permit him to be taken off in ſuch a manner, as drew no civil diſorders after it. For we do not find that any notice was taken of this fact by the Roman governor; though one would think that he could hardly have omitted to make ſome inquiries about it. But it was eaſy; for the council to alledge in their excuſe, that indeed they did call that man to an account for ſome offences againſt their law, who was ſo far from clearing himſelf, that he perſiſted in them with blaſphemy, and was a crime of ſo heinous a nature with them, that they could not reſtrain the mob from dragging him out, and ſtoning him immediately. Upon ſuch a repreſentation, the governor might think it more adviſable to drop any further inquiry, than by proceeding in it to inflame ſo turbulent a nation. Upon the whole, this ſpeech of Stephen, ſo far as it goes, ſeems to be a proper reply to the charge laid againſt him; but what he would have added further, if he had not been prevented, may be difficult to ſay. By the methods taken to bring about this charge, and the behaviour of the Jews at the trial, it ſeems probable, that the council deſigned, if poſſible, to take away his life, as a terror to others; and Providence, for wiſe ends, thought fit to permit them to accompliſh their deſign.

Ver. 4. And from thence, when his father was dead] It has been objected, that St. Stephen's account in this place is inconſiſtent with what is ſaid Gen xi. 26, 32. For as Terah was but ſeventy years old when Abraham was born, and Abraham but ſeventy-five when he departed from Charran, theſe make up no more than one hundred and forty-five years; but Terah lived two hundred and five, and ſo muſt have lived ſixty years after Abraham left Charran; whereas St. Stephen affirms, that Abraham did not go from Charran till after his father died. Now two ſolutions of this difficulty are offered. The firſt is, that, according to the Samaritan copy, Terah lived only one hundred and forty-five years, and then died in Charran. The ſecond is, that Abraham was not Terah's eldeſt, but his youngeſt ſon; though, by way of honour and diſtinction, Moſes has mentioned him the firſt of the three, as being the great patriarch of the Jewiſh nation. For Haran was Terah's eldeſt ſon, who died in Ur of the Chaldees, his native country; and who left a daughter, called Milcah, old enough to be married to her uncle Nahor, her father's brother. When therefore Terah was ſeventy years of age, then was Haran born, being his eldeſt ſon; Nahor, his ſecond ſon, was born ſome years after; and Abraham, his youngeſt ſon, was born ſixty years after his brother Haran, and when his father Terah was one hundred and thirty years of age. Now ſeventy-five added to one hundred and thirty, make up two hundred and five, the age at which Terah died in the land of Charran. See Benſon, Abp. Uſher's Annals, A. M. 1948. Wolfius, and Wetſtein.

Ver. 5. And he gave him none inheritance in it, &c.] Probably Canaan was not at that time ſo univerſally given to idolatry as Chaldea; for there Abraham met with Melchiſedech, who was a worſhipper of the true God; and as he was a king, very likely his ſubjects were not idolaters; but in Chaldea idolatry muſt have had a large ſpread, when Terah's family, nay, and moſt likely Abraham himſelf was infected; for St. Paul calls him, Rom. iv. 5. τὸν ἀσεβῆ, an ungodly perſon, or an idolater; for that is the word by which he uſually intends to ſignify an idolater. Therefore the calling Abraham into Canaan at that time was a likely method to preſerve him from the further infection of idolatry, as it removed him from his kindred, who would have been apt to have tempted him more than ſtrangers; —and as he was directed to a land where idolatry had not then ſpread ſo much. Nay, yet further to deter Abraham, God intimated to him, that in ſome future generations that very land of Canaan ſhould become notorious for idolatry, and then God would take it from the inhabitants, and give it to him for a poſſeſſion, even to his ſeed after him; for ſo the ſentence ſhould properly be read. It is plain that Abraham had not a foot of land in Canaan; for he bought a burying-place to bury his dead. See Benſon.

Ver. 6. Sojourn in a ſtrange land] Some think that this is ſaid in oppoſition to their ſojourning as ſtrangers in the land of Canaan, Heb. xi. 9. which was not a ſtrange land, but theirs by divine promiſe. But God himſelf teaches us otherwiſe, Exod. vi. 4. where he calls Canaan the land of their pilgrimage, wherein they, that is, Abraham and his deſcendant, had hitherto been ſtrangers; for they were not as yet poſſeſſed of it, though they had a good title to it. This is proper to be taken notice of, in order to explain what immediately follows. See the note on Gen. xv. 30. Whitby, and Hammond.

Ver. 8. And he gave him the covenant of circumciſion] St. Stephen, the reader obſerves, draws no inferences. If he had denied the charge laid againſt him, as there were two witneſſes who ſwore againſt him, he had been condemned immediately. If he had owned the charge, he would likewiſe thereupon have fallen under immediate condemnation. If he had gone about directly to have defended the truth of what the witneſſes had alledged, the ſanhedrim would not have had the patience to have heard him; as it was, he proceeded in the only poſſible way to be heard ſo long, as till he had vindicated himſelf; that is, by laying down the premiſes, and leaving them to draw the proper inferences from what he ſaid: Juſt as our Lord, in like caſes, and for the very ſame reaſon, had often ſpoken in parables. Now the inferences to be drawn from what has been thus far ſaid, are plainly theſe: 1ſt. That, in different ages and circumſtances, poſitive and external rites have been different; and holineſs was not originally confined to one particular place; as appears plainly from the hiſtory of Abraham, his deſcendants, and from what follows concerning Moſes: 2d. That temporal proſperity, and the favour of the multitude, are not always the lot of the people of God, as appears from the cruel treatment of righteous Abraham's more immediate deſcendants: 3d. That the divine favour is not confined through all ages to the obſervation of any one ſort of poſitive inſtitutions, for Abraham was in the favour of God, before circumciſion was inſtituted. See Benſon.

Ver. 9. Moved with envy, ſold Joſeph] The plain inference to be drawn from hence was, that they might learn from this example, to abate their hard thoughts of Jeſus of Nazareth, whom they, in like manner, through envy, delivered into the hands of ſtrangers, who dealt cruelly with him. Further, from the treatment which Joſeph ſold Joſeph into Egypt: but God was with him,

10 And delivered him out of all his afflictions, and gave him favour and wiſdom in the ſight of Pharaoh king of Egypt; and he made him governor over Egypt, and all his houſe.

11 Now there came a dearth over all the land of Egypt and Chanaan, and great affliction: and our fathers found no ſuſtenance.

12 But when Jacob heard that there was corn in Egypt, he ſent out our fathers firſt.

13 And at the ſecond time Joſeph was made known to his brethren; and Joſeph's kindred was made known unto Pharaoh.

14 Then ſent Joſeph, and called his father Jacob to him, and all his kindred, threeſcore and fifteen ſouls.

15 So Jacob went down into Egypt, and died, he and our forefathers, 16 And were carried over into Sychem, and laid in the ſepulchre that Abraham bought for a ſum of money of the ſons of Emmor the father of Sychem.

17 But when the time of the promiſe drew nigh, which God had ſworn to Abraham, the people grew and multiplied in Egypt, 18 Till another king aroſe, which knew not Joſeph.

19 The ſame dealt ſubtilly with our kindred, and evil intreated our fathers, ſo that they caſt out their young children, to the end they might not live.

20 In which time Moſes was born, and was exceeding fair, and nouriſhed up in his father's houſe three months:

21 And when he was caſt out, Pharaoh's daughter took him up, and nouriſhed him for her own ſon.

22 And Moſes was learned in all the wiſdom of the Egyptians, and was mighty in words and in deeds.

Ver. 10. Gen. xli. 37.—V. 11. Gen. xli. 54.—V. 12. Gen. xlii. 1.—V. 13. Gen. xlv. 4, 16.—V. 14. Gen. xlvi. 27. Deut. x. 22.—V. 15. Gen. xlvi. 5. Gen. xlix. 33.—V. 16. Exod. xiii. 19. Joſh. xxiv. 32. Gen. xxiii. 16. xxxiii. 19,—V. 17. Exod. i. 7, 8, 9. Pſ. cv. 24.—V. 19. Exod. i. 22.—V. 20. Exod. ii. 2. Hebr. xi. 23. Or, fair to God.—V. 22. Luke xxiv. 19.

met with, they might ſee how holy and good perſons may be treated in a cruel and unjuſt manner by men, and at the ſame time be highly in the favour of God: And therefore, in the preſent caſe, it behoved them to examine carefully, and to judge with candour: And from hence too they might learn, that holineſs and acceptance with God are not confined to any one particular country. For God ſhewed favour to Joſeph in Egypt, amongſt an idolatrous and wicked people. See Benſon and Doddridge.

Ver. 14. Threeſcore and fifteen ſouls] See the notes on Gen. xlvi. 20, 27.

Ver. 16. And were carried over, &c.] It is not improbable that the bones of the other eleven patriarchs might be carried along with the bones of Joſeph, when the children of Iſrael went out of Egypt, Exod. xiii. 19. and be afterwards buried along with his bones, when Iſrael came into Canaan. There was the ſame reaſon for them to deſire to be buried there, as there was for Joſeph; that is, their firm belief, that God would in due time fulfil his promiſe, in giving Canaan unto Iſrael for a poſſeſſion; (Comp. Gen. l. 25. Heb. xi. 22.) and accordingly ſome of the ancient Jews affirm that the bodies of the patriarchs were carried and buried along with Joſeph; and St. Jerome aſſerts, that the twelve patriarchs were buried at Sichem. See Lightfoot, Benſon, Wetſtein. This verſe is rendered in the MS. and were carried, &c. and laid by the ſons of Emmor, the father of Sichem, in the ſepulchre that Abraham bought for a ſum of money. It is ſo evident from Gen. xxxiii. 19. and Joſh. xxiv. 32. that the field at Sichem, in which the bones of Joſeph and the fathers were buried, was purchaſed, not by Abraham, but by Jacob; and alſo that Abraham's ſepulchre was purchaſed, not of Emmor, but of Ephron the Hittite; (Gen. xxiii. 10.) that this paſſage muſt either be underſtood according to the rendering above given, or we muſt conclude, that the paſſage has ſuffered ſomething, by the addition or omiſſion of the tranſcribers. Beza very ingeniouſly ſuppoſes, that St. Luke probably wrote only, which he (i. e. as the connection fixes it, Jacob) bought, &c. which was the exact truth; and ſome officious tranſcriber, who fancied the verb wanted a nominative caſe, and thought he remembered the purchaſe of Abraham, (which it is plain he did not exactly diſtinguiſh) put in his name. This ſolution, which is very natural, is advanced by Bochart, Benſon, and ſeveral others. If it be conſidered how ancient the books of the Old and New Teſtament are, and how often they have been tranſcribed, it will not be wondered, that ſome difficulties ſhould ariſe from the miſtakes of tranſcribers; though there are very few or none, but what may eaſily be rectified in matters of moment. As to this, which is a fact upon which neither our faith or our practice, nor even St. Stephen's defence of himſelf or his doctrines, at all depends, it may be ſolved, either as above, or by various other methods which ingenious men have propoſed. So that no argument can here be fairly alledged againſt St. Stephen's vindication and apology; much leſs againſt the Chriſtian revelation. The reader will find much on this ſubject in Chais's note on Gen. xxiii. 16. Houbigant on Gen. xxxiii. 19. Biſcoe's Lectures, p. 607. Whitby, L'Enfant, Sir Norton Knatchbul, &c.

Ver. 19. So that they caſt out their young children] By cauſing their infants to be expoſed. Heylin, and Doddridge.

Ver. 20. Was exceeding fair] 'Αστεῖος τῷ Θεῷ, fair to God; or divinely fair: for we have had occaſion frequently to obſerve that the word God is often made uſe of in the Hebrew as expreſſive of the ſuperlative degree. Concerning the beauty of Moſes, ſee the note on Exod. ii. 2. Grotius, and Whitby.

Ver. 21. And—Pharaoh's daughter took him up] All theſe extraordinary circumſtances relating to the birth, preſervation, education, genius and character of Moſes, ſerve to aggravate the crime of Iſrael in rejecting him, when he offered himſelf to them, as a deliverer under ſo many advantages, and when providence had ſo wonderfully intereſted itſelf in his favour. See Doddridge, &c.

Ver. 22. Moſes was learned in all the wiſdom of the Egyptians] Where the wiſdom of a man is ſpoken of, that which is characteriſtic of it, muſt needs be meant; where the wiſdom of a particular man, that which is peculiar to his quality and profeſſion. St. Stephen in this place ſpeaks of both: In both therefore, he muſt mean civil or political wiſdom; for in that the Egyptian nation was principally diſtinguiſhed; and in that the true character of Moſes, whether we conſider his rank, his education, or his office, was eminently compriſed. He became at length the leader and lawgiver of a numerous people; more than this, St. Stephen is here ſpeaking of him under his public character, and therefore muſt neceſſarily be underſtood to mean, that Moſes was conſummate in the ſcience of legiſlation. The words indeed are all the wiſdom of the Egyptians: But every good reaſoner knows, that where the thing ſpoken of refers to ſome particular uſe, (as here Moſes's learning to the conducting the Iſraelites out of Egypt) the particle all, cannot mean all of every kind, but all the parts of one kind: In this reſtrained ſenſe, all is frequently uſed in the ſacred writings. But further the concluding part of the character, —and mighty in words and deeds, will not eaſily ſuffer the foregoing part to admit of any other interpretation. Mighty in words and deeds, was the preciſe character of the ancient chiefs, who, leading a free and willing people, needed the arts of peace, ſuch as perſuaſion and law-making—the words; and the arts of war, ſuch as conduct and courage,—the deeds of the prophet. Hence it is that Jeſus, who was the prophet like unto Moſes, the legiſlator of the new covenant, as Moſes was of the old, and the conductor of our ſpiritual warfare, is characteriſed in the ſame words, A prophet mighty in deed and word, before God, and all the people. Luke xxiv. 19. This wiſdom therefore, in which Moſes was ſaid to be verſed, we conclude was the practical part of philoſophy, in contradiſtinction to the theoretical or ſpeculative. This is the interpretation which Bp. Warburton gives in his Divine Legation, book iv. ſect. 6. Several eminent commentators however, ſuppoſe that a general erudition is referred. Dr. Benſon gives the following paraphraſe of the verſe. "By this means Moſes had a moſt liberal education, being inſtructed in all the learning of the Egyptians; which were then the moſt learned people upon earth; and, though he could not ſpeak fluently, he became mighty and powerful both in word and deed; that is, his ſpeeches were ſolid and wiſe, and his actions virtuous, honeſt, and brave." Archbiſhop Tillotſon, and many others, think, that the expreſſion mighty in deeds, refers to a ſtory mentioned by Joſephus, that when Moſes dwelt in Pharoah's court, the Ethiopians invaded Egypt, and Moſes being made general in the war againſt them, gave them a total defeat, and drove back the ſmall remainder of their forces in confuſion to their own country. See Tillotſon's Works, vol. ii. p. 23. Several ancient teſtimonies to the extraordinary learning of Moſes may be ſeen in Philo de Vit. Moſ. lib. i. p. 470. Juſtin Mart. Quæſt ad Orthod. xxv. Orig. cont. Celſ. lib. iii. p. 139. Clem. Alex. Strom. lib. i. p. 343.

23 And when he was full forty years old, it came into his heart to viſit his brethren the children of Iſrael.

24 And ſeeing one of them ſuffer wrong, he defended him, and avenged him that was oppreſſed, and ſmote the Egyptian:

25 For he ſuppoſed his brethren would have underſtood, how that God by his hand would deliver them: but they underſtood not.

26 And the next day he ſhewed himſelf unto them as they ſtrove, and would have ſet them at one again, ſaying, Sirs, ye are brethren; why do ye wrong one to another?

27 But he that did his neighbour wrong, thruſt him away, ſaying, Who made thee a ruler and a judge over us?

28 Wilt thou kill me, as thou killedſt the Egyptian yeſterday?

29 Then fled Moſes at this ſaying, and was a ſtranger in the land of Madian, where he begat two ſons.

30 And when forty years were expired, there appeared to him in the wilderneſs of mount Sina, an angel of the Lord in a flame of fire in a buſh.

31 When Moſes ſaw it, he wondered at the ſight: and as he drew near to behold it, the voice of the Lord came unto him, 32 Saying, I am the God of thy fathers, the God of Abraham, and the God of Iſaac, and the God of Jacob. Then Moſes trembled, and durſt not behold.

33 Then ſaid the Lord to him, Put off thy ſhoes from thy feet: for the place where thou ſtandeſt is holy ground.

34 I have ſeen, I have ſeen the affliction of my people which is in Egypt, and I have heard their groaning, and am come down to deliver them. And now come, I will ſend thee into Egypt.

35 This Moſes whom they refuſed, ſaying, Who made thee a ruler and a judge? the ſame did God ſend to be a ruler and a deliverer by the hand of the angel which appeared to him in the buſh.

36 He brought them out after that he had ſhewed wonders and ſigns in the land of Egypt, and in the Red ſea, and in the wilderneſs forty years.

37 This is that Moſes which ſaid unto the children of Iſrael, A prophet ſhall the Lord your God raiſe up unto you of your brethren, like unto me; him ſhall ye hear.

38 This is he that was in the church in the wilderneſs, with the angel which ſpake to him in the mount Sina, and with our fathers: who received the lively oracles to give unto us:

Ver. 24. Exod. ii. 11, 12.—V. 25. Or, Now.—V. 26. Exod. ii. 13.—V. 27. See ch. iv. 7.—V. 30. Exod. iii. 2.—V. 32. Matth. xxii. 32. Hebr. xi. 16.—V. 33. Exod. iii. 5. Joſh. v. 15.—V. 36. Exod. vii. viii. ix. x. xi. xiv. Exod. xvi. 1.—V. 37. Deut. xviii. 15, 18. Ch. iii. 22. Or, as myſelf. Matth. xvii. 5.—V. 38. Exod. xix. 3, 17. Iſai. lxiii. 9. Gal. iii. 19. Rom. iii. 2.

Ver. 24. And ſeeing one of them ſuffer, &c.] See Exod. ii. 11. where the word is מכה meché, which ſometimes ſignifies to ſmite ſo as to kill; and the Iſraelite is here repreſented as καταπονουμένῳ, ſubdued in a ſtruggle, and in immediate danger of his life: So that Moſes had no occaſion for a divine impulſe in order to his doing this action; for, (not to mention, that God moſt probably would then have ſupported him afterwards, and he needed not to have fled for it) as the Egyptian had got the Iſraelite down, and was, as appeared by all circumſtances, juſt going to kill him; Moſes only defended the injured, and vindicated the innocent when oppreſſed, a thing which any perſon may lawfully do at any time, or in any place to a ſtranger, and much more to his own friend: Nay, the thing was in itſelf ſo far from a crime, that it was highly laudable and praiſe-worthy; and what Moſes would, with great reaſon, have done to the Iſraelite, had he been going as unjuſtly to kill the Egyptian. 'Tis true, that juſtice could not be then had in the Egyptian court, in behalf of the Iſraelites; and therefore ſome may think it was in thoſe circumſtances imprudent. But it muſt be remembered, that, according to the hiſtory, Exod. ii. 12. Moſes uſed all proper precautions, and looked every way to ſee whether there were any Egyptians in ſight, before he ventured to reſcue his brother from the hand of the oppreſſor, and from death; and had not the Iſraelites themſelves diſcovered it, it is highly probable that Pharaoh would never have known it. So that it is eaſy to vindicate the juſtice and prudence of this action of Moſes. See Benſon, and the notes on Exod. ii.

Ver. 25. He ſuppoſed his brethren would have underſtood] It does not appear that Moſes had as yet any prophecy to aſſure him that he was the perſon who ſhould deliver Iſrael; but knowing that there was a divine promiſe of deliverance made to, and retained in the houſe of Iſrael; that he himſelf had been extraordinarily preſerved and educated, and that the time of their deliverance was approaching, he ſhewed himſelf willing to run all hazards and dangers with the people of God, rather than continue in the ſplendor of the Egyptian court; and that when the time ſhould be fully come, he would chearfully join and head them, in order to reſcue them from their bondage and cruel ſlavery. Benſon. I cannot help thinking that there is more implied in this verſe; and though we have no information of any prophecy which Moſes had yet received, it does not follow but he might have received ſome private revelation from God, that he was the perſon appointed by him to deliver the Iſraelites; at leaſt St. Stephen's words lead us to this ſuppoſition. See on ver. 30.

Ver. 26 Set them at one again] And would have perſuaded them to peace. Doddridge.

Ver. 27. Thruſt him away, &c.] It is plain that the ſpeech of this ſingle perſon is repreſented, ver. 35. as expreſſing the ſentiments of the whole body of the people; as their ſlowneſs afterwards to believe the miſſion of Moſes, when attended by miracles, ſeems evidently to ſhew that it was. See Exod. v. 20, 21.

Ver. 30. And when forty years were expired] This circumſtance might be handed down by tradition, as the expreſs time of Moſes's continuance in voluntary exile is not mentioned in the Old Teſtament; and no doubt many other circumſtances reſpecting that great legiſlator, which are not related in that conciſe hiſtory, were handed down in the ſame manner. Reſpecting the ſubſequent circumſtances, we refer the reader to the notes on Exod. iii.

Ver. 35. This Moſes whom they refuſed] As the terms of high reſpect, in which St. Stephen, through the whole of his diſcourſe, ſpeaks of Moſes, tended to ſhew how improbable it was, that he ſhould have ſpoken contemptibly of him,—as the witneſſes pretended; ſo this circumſtance of the Iſraelites having rejected him, whom God had appointed to be a ruler and redeemer, plainly intimated how poſſible it was that Jeſus, whom they had lately rejected, might nevertheleſs be conſtituted a Saviour by the divine determination. See Doddridge and Benſon.

Ver. 37. A prophet ſhall the Lord your God] Concerning this prophecy, ſee the note on Deut. xviii. 15, &c. Smith's Select Diſcourſes, p. 261. Bullock's Sermon on Deut. xviii. 18. and Jefferys's True Grounds, p. 128, &c.

Ver. 38. This is he that was in the church] When this clauſe is quoted, as it has been by ſome great men, to prove that Chriſt was the perſon who brought Iſrael out of Egypt, gave them the law, conducted them through the wilderneſs, &c. the argument from thence is certainly inconcluſive: for he—ουτος,—here evidently anſwers to ουτος, ver. 36. and to ουτος ὁ Μωϋσῆς, ver. 27. and the following clauſe, which expreſſes his being with the angel, plainly proves that angel to be a different perſon. The doctrine itſelf, that Chriſt was the God of Iſrael, the angel or meſſenger who appeared to Moſes, is a great and certain truth, capable of being evinced from many paſſages both of the Old and New Teſtament; and from the paſſage before us in particular, though not from the clauſe. The word εκκλησια, rendered church, would more properly be rendered here aſſembly, as it is ch. xix. 41. becauſe it refers not to their being incorporated into one church, in the appropriate ſenſe of that word, but to their being aſ-

ſembled

39 To whom our fathers would not obey, but thruſt him from them, and in their hearts turned back again into Egypt.

40 Saying unto Aaron, Make us gods to go before us: for as for this Moſes, which brought us out of the land of Egypt, we wot not what is become of him.

41 And they made a calf in thoſe days, and offered ſacrifice unto the idol, and rejoiced in the works of their own hands.

42 Then God turned, and gave them up to worſhip the hoſt of heaven; as it is written in the book of the prophets, O ye houſe of Iſrael, have ye offered to me ſlain beaſts, and ſacrifices, by the ſpace of forty years in the wilderneſs?

43 Yea, ye took up the tabernacle of Moloch, and the ſtar of your god Remphan, figures which ye made, to worſhip them: and I will carry you away beyond Babylon.

44 Our fathers had the tabernacle of witneſs in the wilderneſs, as he had appointed, ſpeaking unto Moſes, that he ſhould make it according to the faſhion that he had ſeen.

45 Which alſo our fathers that came after, brought in with Jeſus into the poſſeſſion of the Gentiles, whom God drave out before the face of our fathers, unto the days of David;

46 Who found favour before God, and deſired to find a tabernacle for the God of Jacob.

47 But Solomon built him an houſe.

48 Howbeit, the moſt High dwelleth not in temples made with hands; as ſaith the prophet, 49 Heaven is my throne, and earth is my footſtool: What houſe will ye build me? ſaith the Lord: or what is the place of my reſt?

50 Hath not my hand made all theſe things?

51 Ye ſtiff-necked, and uncircumciſed in heart and ears, ye do always reſiſt the Holy Ghoſt: as your fathers did, ſo do ye.

Ver. 40. Exod. xxxii. 1.—V. 42. Pſ. lxxxi. 12. Ezek. xx. 25, 39. Rom. i. 24. 2 Theſſ. ii. 11. Jer. xix. 13. Amos v. 25.—V. 44. Or, who ſpake. Exod. xxv. 40. Hebr. viii. 5.—V. 45. Joſh. iii. 14. Or, having received.—V. 46. 1 Sam. xvi. 1. Ch. xiii. 22. Pſ. cxxxii. 4.—V. 47. 1 Kings vi. 1. 1 Chron. xvii. 12.—V. 48. 1 Kings viii. 27. Ch. xvii. 24.—V. 49. 1 Kings viii. 27. Iſai. lxvi. 1, 2. Matth. v. 34. xxiii. 22.—V. 51. Exod. xxxii. 9. Iſai. xlviii. 4. Lev. xxvi. 41. Deut. x. 16. Jer. iv. 4. vi. 10. ix. 26.

ſembled round the mountain on the ſolemn day, when the law was given. See Exod. xix. 17, &c. Doddridge, Beza, and Heinſius.

Ver. 39. To whom our fathers would not obey] This is obſerved by Stephen more than once, and he inſiſts upon it largely, that they might ſee it was no new thing for Iſrael to rebel againſt God, by rejecting deliverers ſent from him. See on ver. 35.

Ver. 40. For as for this Moſes we wot not, &c.] We know not. This is the phraſeology both of the LXX and of the Hebrew; (Exod. xxxii. 1.) and has been called putting the nominative caſe abſolute; accordingly Daniel xii. 2. may be thus explained: As to the multitude who ſleep in the duſt of the earth, they ſhall awake, ſome to everlaſting life, and ſome to ſhame and everlaſting contempt. So Daniel's words would appear to be a prophecy of the general reſurrection of mankind, which does not appear in our common Engliſh tranſlation. Many other texts might be explained, by obſerving that this phraſeology is uſed. Both Beza and Grotius have repreſented it as an Hebraiſm; but Raphelius hath ſhewn that it was made uſe of by the beſt Greek writers. See his notes on the place, and Wolfius. The plain inference from all this was, "You are not the firſt who have rejected the laws which came from God, but evidently approve yourſelves the children of your wicked forefathers."

Ver. 42, 43. Then God turned] See Rom. i. 21, 24. Pſ. lxxxi. 11, 12. There were two ſorts of idolatry; namely, the worſhipping the true God by idol mediators, and terminating their worſhip upon falſe gods. Iſrael began with the former; and for a puniſhment, was permitted to fall into the latter. See on Exod. xxxii. 1, &c. the notes on Amos v. 25, &c. Vitringa's Obſerv. Sacr. vol. i. lib. ii. cap. 1. Witſii Miſcell. lib. ii. diſſ. 5. Prideaux's Connect. vol. i. page 13. and the Letters on Mythology, p. 89.

Ver. 44. Our fathers had the tabernacle of witneſs] As St. Stephen had been accuſed of blaſpheming the temple, he now proceeds to ſpeak with great propriety, and with due reverence, of their ſacred places, as raiſed by ſpecial direction from God; and yet corrects that extravagant regard for them, and confidence in them, which the Jews were ready to entertain. See the next note, Doddridge, and Benſon.

Ver. 45. With Jeſus] With Joſhua. The word ἐθνῶν, rendered Gentiles, would more properly be rendered heathens in this place.

Ver. 46—50. And deſired to find a tabernacle, &c.] Ἠτήσατο, made it his petition. From the account which the Scripture gives of David, it appears how greatly he longed to find out a place for the Lord,—an habitation,—which is a properer word than tabernable in this place. Comp. 2 Sam. vii. 2, &c. and Pſ. cxxxii. 1—5. However, as he was a man of war, and had ſhed blood, he was not allowed to build the temple; which was deferred to the peaceful reign of his ſon; and from hence the plain inference was, that if king David was not thought fit to build the temple, becauſe he was a man of blood, how much leſs fit are they that ſuch a ſtructure ſhould be continued to them, who have murdered the great Meſſiah, king David's Son and Lord. Farther, it is evident, that David and the patriarchs worſhipped God as acceptably before this temple was built as afterwards; though it cannot be denied that both the tabernacle and the temple were erected according to the will and appointment of God; and when uſed agreeably to the original deſign and intention of them, are moſt highly to be reverenced. St. Stephen, however, goes on to convince them that they ſet too great a value on this temple, when they would confine to it the divine preſence, and all acceptable worſhip. Seeing God is the omnipreſent being, able to ſhew favour to the pious and virtuous in one place, as well as another, throughout the whole creation. Nay, indeed, the whole creation is too narrow a temple for the omniſcient and omnipreſent God. See Benſon, and the paſſages in the margin.

Ver. 51—53. Ye ſtiff-necked, &c.] "Thus have I given you a brief account of the various periods of revelation, or the ſeveral diſpenſations of God to man, from the time in which Abraham, our renowned anceſtor, was called out of idolatry to the knowledge of the true God, unto this very day when the kingdom of the Meſſiah has began to take place;—that ſeed of Abraham, in whom all the nations of the earth are to be bleſſed. And what I would have you underſtand by all that has been ſaid, is this: That, in various ages and circumſtances, God hath made various revelations, and appointed different poſitive inſtitutions;—that temporal afflictions are conſiſtent with being in the divine favour; and that a temporal Meſſiah is not to be expected: But that God, who of old laid the plan for the ſucceſſive diſpenſations, is now going to introduce the laſt and beſt of them, by erecting his ſpiritual kingdom under the Meſſiah, who is none other than Jeſus of Nazareth. And it is no wonder that you ſhould treat him as you did; for you are a ſtubborn, obdurate people, who, though you boaſt of the circumciſion of the fleſh, yet are uncircumciſed in heart and ears, and incorrigibly bent upon your own wicked ways. You even reject the very means which ought to bring you to repentance, refuſing the gracious invitations and offers of the Spirit of God, and treading in the ſteps of your diſobedient anceſtors. Which of the prophets have not your fathers perſecuted? Nay, they even ſlew many who propheſied of the coming of that righteous perſon, the Meſſiah, whom Abraham, Moſes, Iſrael, David, Solomon,—the tabernacle, the temple, the law, the prophets, and all the paſt diſpenſations, did unanimouſly point at, and ſome way or other tend to prepare men for his coming. And yet, notwithſtanding all this vaſt apparatus of a long ſucceſſion of promiſes, prophecies, ſhadows, and repreſentations, which God, from age to age hath given, to prepare you for the reception of him;—you, who ought to have received him with the greateſt affection and regard, and protected him from any injurious treatment from others:—You yourſelves, I ſay, have baſely betrayed, and wickedly murdered him. And as your ſin is much greater than that of your fathers, who rejected only Moſes and the prophets; you may reaſonably expect, (unleſs you ſpeedily and ſincerely repent) that the judgements of God, which followed them, will come upon you to the uttermoſt. Nor will it be in the leaſt wonderful, if God ſhould depart from you;—and if what you have charged me with aſſerting, ſhould come to paſs; namely, that your city and temple ſhould be deſtroyed, and your nation ſlain, or carried away into a long and ſevere captivity. I have charged you with deſpiſing and murdering the Juſt One: But how ſhould you be ſuppoſed to attend to one who came in ſo low and humble a manner, when the law, in which 52 Which of the prophets have not your fathers perſecuted? and they have ſlain them which ſhewed before of the coming of the Juſt One; of whom ye have been now the betrayers and murderers:

53 Who have received the law by the diſpoſition of angels, and have not kept it.

54 When they heard theſe things, they were cut to the heart, and they gnaſhed on him with their teeth.

55 But he being full of the Holy Ghoſt, looked up ſtedfaſtly into heaven, and ſaw the glory of God, and Jeſus ſtanding on the right hand of God, 56 And ſaid, Behold, I ſee the heavens opened, and the Son of man ſtanding on the right hand of God.

57 Then they cried out with a loud voice, and ſtopped their ears, and ran upon him with one accord.

58 And caſt him out of the city, and ſtoned him: and the witneſſes laid down their clothes at a young man's feet, whoſe name was Saul.

59 And they ſtoned Stephen, calling

Ver 52. Matth. xxiii. 34, 37. Ch. iii. 14.—V. 53. Exod. xx. 1. Gal. iii. 19. Hebr. ii. 2.—V. 54. Ch. v. 33.—V. 56. Ezek. i. 1. Matth. iii. 16. Ch. x. 11. Dan. vii. 13.—V. 58. 1 Kings xxi. 13. Luke iv. 29. Hebr. xiii. 12. Deut. xvii. 7. Ch. xxii. 20.—V. 59. Ch. ix. 14.

which you ſo much boaſt, was publiſhed in an aweful pompous manner, amidſt troops of angels;—and yet, you have not kept it."—Chriſt was, by way of eminence, called the Juſt or Righteous One, as being alone perfectly righteous; ver. 52. See chap. iii. 14. Iſai. liii. 11. Zech. ix. 9. It is a fine remark of Grotius, that the ſanhedrim was obliged by virtue of its very conſtitution, to guard and defend the lives of the prophets with peculiar care: How much more to protect ſo divine a Meſſenger as Chriſt was, from any injurious aſſault; inſtead of which, they had not only baſely deſerted him, but had themſelves become principals in his murder. The word διαταγας, rendered diſpoſition, (ver. 53.) is a military word, and ſignifies ranks or troops; ſo that the paſſage ſhould be read, Who have received the law through ranks of angels, which were marſhalled in ſolemn array on that great occaſion. Comp. Deut. xxxiii. 2. and Pſ. lxviii. 17. The ſacred writer gives us an auguſt idea of the majeſty which attended the giving of the law. It was delivered with the utmoſt pomp and magnificence, amidſt the innumerable hoſts of the Lord God Almighty. To what we have ſaid on ver. 2. reſpecting this ſpeech of St. Stephen, we will here ſubjoin, in brief, the ſum of his diſcourſe. "I acknowledge the glory of God revealed to the fathers, ver. 2.—the calling of Moſes, ver. 34, &c.—the dignity of the law, ver. 8, 38, 44.—the holineſs of this place, ver. 7, 45, 47.—And indeed the law is more ancient than the temple; the promiſe more ancient than the law: For God ſhewed himſelf the God of Abraham, Iſaac, Jacob, and their children, freely, ver. 2, &c. 9, &c. 17, &c. 32, 34, 45.—And they ſhewed faith and obedience to God, ver. 4, 20, 23. particularly by their regard for the law, ver. 8. and the promiſed land, ver. 16. Mean time, God never confined his preſence to this one place, or to the obſervers of the law; for he hath been acceptably worſhipped before the law was given, or the temple built, and out of this land, ver. 2, 9, 33, 44. And that our fathers, and their poſterity, were not tied down to this land, their various ſojournings and exiles ſhew, ver. 4, &c. 14, 29, 43, 44. but you and your Fathers have always been evil, ver. 9. have withſtood Moſes, ver. 25, &c. 39, &c. have deſpiſed the land, ver. 29. forſaken God, ver. 40, &c. ſuperſtitiouſly honoured the temple, ver. 48. reſiſted God and his ſpirit, ver. 25. killed the prophets, and the Meſſiah himſelf, ver. 51. and not kept the law for which ye contend, ver. 53. therefore, God is not bound to you, much leſs to you alone." See Benſon, Grotius, Elſner, and Bengelius.

Ver. 55. And Jeſus ſtanding at the right hand of God] See the next note. It has been well obſerved, that Chriſt is generally repreſented ſitting, but now as ſtanding at God's right hand; that is, as riſen up from the throne of his glory, to afford help to his diſtreſſed ſervant, and ready to receive him. See Taylor's diſcourſe of deiſm, p. 69. It ſeems a very juſt concluſion of Mr. Addiſon's, that other martyrs, when called to ſuffer the laſt extremities, had extraordinary aſſiſtances of ſome ſimilar kind; or frail mortality could not ſurely have endured the torments under which they rejoiced; and ſometimes preached Chriſt to the converſion of the ſpectators, and in ſome inſtances, of their guards and tormentors too. See Addiſon's Evid. of Chriſtianity, ch. vii. ſect. 5.

Ver. 56. Behold, I ſee the heavens opened] The reality of Stephen's ſeeing this viſion, as he deſcribed it, appears from the improbability of his being guilty of any deſign to deceive. He was a man of great note and eminency in the church, and held the firſt place among the ſeven deacons. He juſtified the Chriſtian faith againſt all oppoſers, with ſingular wiſdom. He confounded all thoſe with whom he diſputed. When falſe witneſſes were ſuborned, and he was brought before the ſanhedrim to be tried, his judges ſaw that he was ſo far from being daunted, that there was a ſparkling majeſty in his countenance, like that of an angel, when he appeared to their forefathers. This emboldened him to ſpeak without reſerve to the council, and to reprove them for reſiſting the Holy Ghoſt, which enraged them to the higheſt degree. But Stephen, ſtill full of the Holy Ghoſt, and undaunted at what he foreſaw he muſt ſuffer from an exaſperated mob, caſt his eyes toward heaven, from whence cometh help, and bade them take notice that he ſaw the glory of God, and Jeſus ſhining at his right hand, in far greater glory than they had ſeen in his face. And it is more reaſonable to believe that he indeed ſaw Jeſus, than to think that he impoſed a mere imagination upon them, to the certain loſs of his own life. If he had not been ſure that he beheld him whom they crucified, a perſon of his wiſdom would have been more cautious, than to follow him in that bloody path, to which this aſſertion led him; eſpecially as his ſilence would have preſerved him from danger. But ſo viſible was the majeſty of our Saviour, that he could not but proclaim it, though he knew they would call it blaſphemy, and puniſh him for it with death. He was willing to ſuffer for the honour of his Maſter, who, by this viſion, convinced him that he was the Son of the Higheſt, and able to reward all his faithful ſervants with immortal glory. If it be aſked how he could ſee the glory of God, (ver. 55.) and how he knew the perſon who appeared at God's right hand to be Jeſus? In anſwer to the firſt queſtion, we may reply that he ſaw God's glory in the ſame ſenſe as others are ſaid to have ſeen God: He beheld ſome very bright appearance. Thus Moſes was afraid to look upon God, Exod. iii. 6. Such a glory it was that Stephen beheld; a glory more pure and refulgent than the light of the ſun; a glory, which was the ſymbol of the preſence of the divine Majeſty, who uſed in this manner to make men ſenſible of his tranſcendant inviſible glory. In this divine preſence, he ſaw Jeſus in the moſt high and honourable place, next to God the Father;—for that is the meaning of his appearance at the right hand of God; or of that glory he ſaw in the heavens;—the right hand being the principal place of honour belonging to the heir of the crown, when he appears in company with the King his Father. Stephen indeed ſaw him ſtanding; which might refer to his prieſtly office;—ſtanding being the poſture of thoſe who miniſtered in the temple at the altar. This poſture, therefore, might imply his officiating in the heavenly places, for the comfort of all Chriſtians, as well as of Stephen himſelf; or rather, as ready to come to take vengeance upon the implacable enemies who had killed him, and now perſecuted his ſervants. As to the ſecond queſtion, how he could know that it was Jeſus whom he ſaw, it is eaſily replied to;—He appeared in the ſame form as upon earth; only more ſhining and reſplendent: And therefore, when Stephen ſays to the Jews, "I ſee the Son of man ſtanding," &c. he means that very perſon who uſed to call himſelf the Son of man. And if we follow the ſcope of his ſpeech, he ſeems to ſay no leſs than this; "That very perſon who called himſelf the Son of man, whom you have crucified, I now ſee ſo exalted, that I had rather die as he did, than not confeſs him to be the Son of God, as he ſaid he was when he died." Stephen ſaw him riſen up from his throne, as if he was coming to be avenged of his enemies, to ſuccour all his ſervants, and to welcome this martyr to immortal bliſs. That Stephen thought ſo, is evident from his reſigning up his ſoul to Jeſus with the ſame confidence (ver. 59.) and almoſt in the ſame words, with which Jeſus gave up his to God the Father. The laſt words of our Saviour were, Father, into thy hands I commend my Spirit! Luke xxiii. 46. Stephen, in the extremity of his ſufferings, called upon God, and ſaid, Lord Jeſus, receive my ſpirit! He died with theſe and the following words in his mouth, crying again with a loud voice,—Lord, lay not this ſin to their charge! In which he expreſſed as much charity to men, as in the other ſentence he did faith in Chriſt. Now, as in this aweful period he diſplayed ſuch piety and goodneſs, ſuch candour and humanity, and was ſo utterly void of all rancour, when he had the higheſt provocations from his enemies; we may conclude, it is not probable he could be guilty of a lie to deceive others; ſo we may reaſonably believe that God would not ſuffer ſo extraordinary a perſon to be deceived, to the ruin of himſelf, and to the ſacrificing, if not caſting away, ſo precious a life. See Patrick's Witneſſes, vol. i. p. 90, &c. and Witſi. Miſcel. lib. i. c. 21.

Ver. 57. Then they cried out, &c.] Some would read Κράξαντος, and render it, He crying with a loud voice, they ſhut their ears. See Battier, Bibl. Brem. claſ. vi. p. 92.

Ver. 58. And ſtoned him] The learned Markland propoſes to read ἐλιθολόγουν, they gathered ſtones; which when the witneſſes had done, and had pulled off their upper garments, ἐλιθοβόλουν, they ſtoned Stephen as it follows in the next verſe. See on Lyſias, x. p. 554.

Ver. 59. And they ſtoned Stephen] While they ſtoned Stephen, he prayed, upon God, and ſaying, Lord Jeſus, receive my ſpirit.

60 And he kneeled down, and cried with a loud voice, Lord, lay not this ſin to their charge. And when he had ſaid this, he fell aſleep.

CHAP. VIII.

By occaſion of the perſecution in Jeruſalem, the church being planted in Samaria by Philip the deacon, who preached, did miracles, and baptized many, among the reſt Simon the ſorcerer, a great ſeducer of the people; Peter and John came to confirm, and enlarge the church: where, by prayer and impoſition of hands, giving the Holy Ghoſt, when Simon would have bought the like power of them, Peter ſharply reproving his hypocriſy, and covetouſneſs, and exhorting him to repentance, Ver. 59. Pſ. xxxi. 5. Luke xxiii. 46.—V. 60. Ch. ix. 40. xx. 36. xxi. 5. Matth. v. 44. Luke xxiii. 34.

and ſaid, &c. Literally, They ſtoned Stephen, invoking and ſaying, &c. There is nothing for the word God in the original. A ſolemn prayer, like this to Chriſt, in which a departing ſoul is thus committed into his hands, is ſuch an act of worſhip as no good man would have paid to a mere creature. Stephen here worſhipping Chriſt in the very ſame manner in which Chriſt worſhipped the Father on the croſs. See the laſt note. This ſtoning ſeems to have been an act of popular fury, like the ſtoning St. Paul at Lyſtra, ch. xiv. 19. and exceeding the power which the Jews regularly had. The Jews were more than once ready to ſtone Chriſt, not only when by their own confeſſion they had not power to put any one to death, but when nothing had paſſed which had the ſhadow of a legal trial. How far they might now have formed thoſe expreſs notions of what the rabbies called the judgement of zeal is uncertain; but it is plain they acted on that principle; and as if they had thought every private Iſraelite had, like Phinehas, who is pleaded as an example of it, a right to put another to death on the ſpot, if he found him in a capital breach of the divine law; a notion directly contrary to Deut. xvii. 6. which requires at leaſt two witneſſes in capital caſes, where there is a legal proceſs. The manner of their ſtoning perſons was this: A crier went before him who was to die, proclaiming his name, his crime, and thoſe who were witneſſes againſt him. When they were come within two or three yards of the place of execution, they ſtripped the criminal naked, except a ſmall covering, for decency, about his middle. The place of execution, from which they threw down the malefactor, was above twice the height of a man, upon which he was made to aſcend with his hands bound. When he was aſcended, the witneſſes laid their hands upon him, and then ſtripped off their upper garments, that they might be fitter for going through the execution. From that high place one of the witneſſes threw down the criminal, and daſhed his loins againſt a great ſtone, which was laid there for that very purpoſe; if that killed him not, then the other witneſs threw from the ſame height a great ſtone upon his heart, as he lay on his back, and was ſtunned with the fall. If that diſpatched him not, then all the people fell on him with ſtones till he died. See Lardner's Credib. part i. b. 1. ch. 2. Burnet on the Articles, p. 48. Benſon, and Lightfoot.

Ver. 60. Lord, lay not this ſin to their charge] The original is emphatical; literally, Weigh not out to them this ſin. That is, "A puniſhment proportionable to it;" alluding to paſſages of Scripture where God is repreſented as weighing mens characters and actions in the diſpenſations of his juſtice and providence. Compare 1 Sam. ii. 3. Job xxxi. 6. Prov. xvi. 2. Iſai. xxxvi. 7. Dan. v. 27. This prayer of St. Stephen was heard, and remarkably anſwered in the converſion of Saul, of whoſe hiſtory we ſhall ſhortly hear more. See Elſner's Obſerv. vol. i. p. 395. and the Reflections.

REFLECTIONS ON CHAP. VI. AND VII.

From the inſtance before us (ch. vi. 1—4) we ſee how difficult it is, even for the wiſeſt and beſt of men to manage a great multitude of affairs without inconvenience and without reflection. It will therefore be our prudence not to engroſs too much buſineſs into our own hands; but to be willing to divide it with our brethren and inferiors, allotting to each their proper province, that the whole may proceed with harmony and order.

How ſolicitous ſhould we be againſt the doing any thing through partiality; but eſpecialy ſo, in the diſtribution of charities. it is a ſolemn truſt, for which the characters, at leaſt of thoſe concerned, are to anſwer to the world now, and which they themſelves muſt, ere long, account for to God. Such perſons therefore ſhould be willing to receive information of the truth of particular caſes; willing to compare a variety of them, and then ſelect ſuch as in their conſciences they are perſuaded it is the will of God they ſhould in preſent circumſtances regard, and in ſuch or ſuch proportion prefer to the reſt.

In religious ſocieties, it may be highly proper, that, after the example here given (ver. 3.) deacons or perſons to perform this office ſhould be elected, with the concurrence of their miniſters: It is their buſineſs to ſerve tables. Happy thoſe ſocieties who make choice of men of an atteſted character, and evincing themſelves to be full of the Holy Spirit, by the virtues and graces of a Chriſtian temper.

While theſe good men are dealing forth their liberal contributions, the miniſters ſhould devote themſelves with all attention to prayer, and to the miniſtry of the world, ver. 4. Let thoſe who would adminiſter that word with comfort and ſucceſs remember, of how great importance it is, that it be watered with prayer, falling upon it as the former and latter rain, and eſpecially ſee to it, that by the conſtant exerciſe of lively devotion, in ſecret, in their families, and on other proper ſocial occaſions, they keep their graces vigorous and active; that ſo, living continually in a ſtate of nearneſs to God, they may be qualified to ſpeak in his name with that dignity, tenderneſs, and authority, which nothing but true devotion can naturally expreſs, or long retain.

Who can fail to adore that efficacy of divine grace, whereby a multitude of the Jewiſh prieſts were made obedient to the faith? ver. 7. Let us heartily pray, that if there be any who claim a ſacred character, and who yet, out of regard to worldly things, oppoſe the power and purity of the Goſpel,—they may be convinced by the influences of the bleſſed Spirit; that they can have no intereſt in contradiction to the truth; and that they are happy who purchaſe, at the higheſt price, that Goſpel, which may enrich them for ever.

In whatſoever ſtation we are fixed, whether in the world, or in the church, may we always remember our obligation to plead the cauſe of the Goſpel, and to render a reaſon of the hope that is in us. See ver. 9. If this engage us in diſputation with men of corrupt minds, we muſt ſtill hold faſt the profeſſion of our faith without wavering, as knowing He is faithful who hath promiſed. Heb. x. 23.

The vileſt charge, as in the inſtance before us, ver. 11. may be fixed upon the moſt worthy men. Piety may be defamed as blaſphemy, and that which is true love of our country, as treaſon againſt it. But (bleſſed conſideration for the oppreſſed!) there is one ſupreme lawgiver and judge, who will not fail, ſooner or later, to plead the cauſe of injured innocence. When we read therefore of this vile attack made by perjury upon the character and life of Stephen, we may take occaſion to adore that wiſe and powerful Providence, which ſo remarkably exerts itſelf to defend our reputation and our lives againſt thoſe falſe tongues, which run through the earth, and which, were it not for that ſecret and inviſible reſtraint, might, like a two-edged ſword, ſo quickly deſtroy both.

How loud is the clamour here raiſed by malice and fraud againſt innocence and truth! ver. 13, 14. Inceſſant Blaſphemy is charged on one of the moſt pious of men. And can we indeed wonder at it, when we reflect that thus it was charged even upon Chriſt himſelf? If they called the maſter of the houſe Beelzebub, how much more thoſe of his houſhold?—His diſciple learns of him, not to render evil for evil, but anſwers their calumnies in the language of calm reaſon, and meek conviction. ch. vii. 2.

While Stephen leads back our contemplations to ſo many remarkable facts of the Old Teſtament, ver. 2—53. let us reflect upon them with thoſe devout affections which become the Iſrael of God. He that is wiſe will ponder theſe things, and ſhall underſtand the loving-kindneſs of the Lord.

The reproofs, of this holy martyr, ver. 57. were indeed plain and faithful, and therefore they were ſo much the more kind; but inſtead of attending to ſo juſt and wiſe a remonſtrance, thoſe ſinners againſt their own ſouls ſtop their ears, lift up an outrageous cry, and like ſo many ſavage beaſts, ruſh upon him to deſtroy him, overwhelming that head with ſtones which ſhone like an angel of God. Fatal inſtance of prejudice, bigotry, and rage!—But how were all the terrors of this murderous crew, armed with the inſtruments of immediate death, diſpelled by the glorious viſion of Chriſt at the right-hand of God! Well then might the ſufferer remain intrepid; well might he command his departing Spirit into the hands of his divine Saviour, (ver. 56—59.) as able to keep what he committed unto him until that day. 2 Tim. i. 12.

Let us with holy pleaſure behold this bright image of our Redeemer, this firſt martyr, who, following ſo cloſely his recent ſteps, appears to have imbibed ſo much of the ſame Spirit. Having thus ſolemnly conſigned his ſoul to Chriſt, all that remained was, like Chriſt, to pray for his murderers. Full of compaſſion for their ſouls, while dying by their hands, he only cries out for mercy on them, ver. 60. and then gently falls aſleep, expiring in holy compoſure and ſerenity of ſoul, and reſting ſweetly in the boſom of his Saviour.

O Saul! couldeſt thou have believed, if one had told thee, while thou waſt urging on the cruel multitude, (ver. 58.) while thou waſt glorying over his venerable corpſe,—couldeſt thou have believed that the time ſhould come, when thou thyſelf ſhouldſt be twice ſtoned in the ſame cauſe for which he died?—That thou ſhouldſt triumph in having committed thy ſoul likewiſe to that Jeſus, whom thou waſt now blaſpheming! In this inſtance, his dying prayer was illuſtriouſly anſwered for thee! In this inſtance, the wolf lies down with the lamb, and the leopard with the kid, as Iſaiah had foretold. And it is moſt delightful to think, that the martyr Stephen, and Saul the barbarous perſecutor, (afterwards his brother—both in faith and in martyrdom) are now joined in bonds of everlaſting friendſhip, and dwell together in the happy company of thoſe, who have waſhed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the lamb, Rev. vii. 14. May we at length be joined with them, and, in the mean time, let us glorify God in both!

together with John preaching the word of the Lord, return to Jeruſalem. But the angel ſendeth Philip to teach, and baptize the Ethiopian eunuch.

AND Saul was conſenting unto his death. And at that time there was a great perſecution againſt the church which was at Jeruſalem; and they were all ſcattered abroad throughout the regions of Judea and Samaria, except the apoſtles.

2 And devout men carried Stephen to his burial, and made great lamentation over him.

3 As for Saul, he made havock of the church, entering into every houſe, and haling men and women, committed them to priſon.

4 Therefore they that were ſcattered abroad, went every where preaching the word.

5 Then Philip went down to the city of Samaria, and preached Chriſt unto them.

6 And the people with one accord gave heed unto thoſe things which Philip ſpake, hearing, and ſeeing the miracles which he did.

7 For unclean ſpirits crying with loud voice, came out of many that were poſſeſſed with them: and many taken with palſies, and that were lame, were healed.

8 And there was great joy in that city.

9 But there was a certain man called Simon, which before-time, in the ſame city uſed ſorcery, and bewitched the people of Samaria, giving out that himſelf was ſome great one.

10 To whom they all gave heed, from the leaſt to the greateſt, ſaying, This man is the great power of God.

11 And to him they had regard, becauſe that of long time he had bewitched them with ſorceries.

12 But when they believed Philip, preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jeſus Chriſt, they were baptized, both men and women.

13 Then Simon himſelf believed alſo: and when he was baptized, he continued

Ver. 1. Ch. vii. 58. xxii. 20. Ch. xi. 19.—V. 2. Gen. xxiii. 2. l. 10. 2 Sam. iii. 31.—V. 3. Ch. xxii. 4. xxvi. 10, 11. 1 Cor. xv. 9. Gal. i. 13. 1 Tim. i. 13.—V. 4. Matth. x. 23. Ch. xi. 19.—V. 5. Ch. vi. 5.—V. 7. Mark xvi. 17.—V. 9. Ch. xiii. 6. V. 12. Ch. i. 3.

Chap. VIII. Ver. 1. And Saul was conſenting to his death] Dr. Heylin renders this, And Saul was acceſſary to his death; and he joins it to the laſt verſe of the foregoing chapter. The circumſtances relative to St. Paul, recorded by his moſt intimate and familiar friend, not only ſhew the fidelity of the hiſtorian, but likewiſe illuſtrate the miracle of his converſion. It was poſſibly, at this time, when the Chriſtians were ſo diſperſed, that Ananias went to Damaſcus, ch. ix. 10. while others, after they had preached the Goſpel in the neighbouring parts, travelled on to Phœnicia, Cyprus, and Antioch. See ch. xi. 19. In Beza's MS. there is an addition to the end of this verſe, who remained at Jeruſalem. See Beza, Benſon, and Doddridge.

Ver. 2. And devout men] Yet devout men. Some learned writers have been of opinion that theſe were proſelytes; of which, however, there does not appear to be any proof. See on ch. ii. 5. Such a token of reſpect, to one who had been publickly executed as a blaſphemer, was an expreſſion of zeal and piety which might juſtly intitle theſe men to the honourable character here given. Thus St. Luke calls Joſeph of Arimathea, a benevolent and upright man, when he ſpeaks of the generous and courageous regard he ſhewed to the body of Jeſus. See Luke xxiii. 50. Hammond, and Baxter.

Ver. 3. He made havock of the church] He ravaged it, like ſome furius beaſt of prey. This is the proper ſignification of ἐλυμαίνετο, which is often applied to the ſavages of the deſart. See Wolfius and Mintert, and the Reflections.

Ver. 4. Went every where preaching the word] As the Apoſtles, the natives of Judea, had no notion of the converſion of the Gentiles, and would have confined their miniſtry within the narrow bounds of their own country; this diſperſion was nicely ordered by Providence, to render the deſign of Chriſt's coming amongſt men effectual, which was both to be a light to lighten the Gentiles, and to be the glory of his people Iſrael.

Ver. 5. Then Philip went down] We are ſure it was not Philip the the apoſtle, both as he continued at Jeruſalem, and as this Philip had not the power of communicating the miraculous gifts of the Holy Spirit by laying on of hands. Comp. ver. 14, 15, 17. It muſt therefore be the deacon, no other of that name, beſide the Apoſtle, having been mentioned in this hiſtory. Some think, that for his fidelity and diligence in his inferior office, he was raiſed to the work of an Evangeliſt. Inſtead of to the city of Samaria, ſome would read to a city of Samaria, as it is not ſpecified what city it was. The mode of expreſſion, however, ſeems to point out the capital of Samaria, which was Sechem, or Sebaſte, where Chriſt himſelf had preached in the beginning of his miniſtry. See John iv. 5, 40, &c. It is certain that the Samaritans were better prepared to receive the Goſpel than moſt of the Gentile nations, as they worſhipped the true God, and acknowledged the authority of the Pentateuch. Nay, indeed, in ſome reſpects, they were better prepared than the body of the Jewiſh nation, as we do not find, that they had either ſuch notions of the Meſſiah's temporal reign as the Jews, or had received the Sadducean principles, which were both very ſtrong prejudices againſt the Chriſtian ſcheme. See Benſon, Hammond, and Grotius.

Ver. 9. Uſed ſorcery, &c.] Had practiſed magical arts, and aſtoniſhed the people. Heylin and Doddridge. Some think Μαγεύων to be intirely of the ſame ſignification with Μαγος, and intended to inform us, that this Simon was one of the ſect of the Magi. See on Matth. ii. 1. He might poſſibly profeſs himſelf of that ſect; but the word Μαγεύων imports much more, and amounts to the ſame with "one who uſed inchantments," pretending, in conſequence of them, to exert ſome ſupernatural powers; whereas the word Μαγος, at leaſt about Chriſt's time, ſignified much the ſame with our Engliſh word ſage, and to denote a proficient in learning, and eſpecially in aſtronomy, and other branches of natural philoſophy, to which the Perſian magi addicted themſelves, and ſo gave name to many, who were far from holding the peculiarities of that ſect. Yet as many natural philoſophers pretended alſo to be magicians, in the common ſenſe of the word among us, and might make their natural knowledge ſubſervient to that pretence, when it was mere impoſture; it is not improbable that they generally called themſelves Magi; and ſo the verb Μαγεύω might come to ſignify "the uſing unlawful arts," as it plainly does here, while the noun from whence it was derived might ſtill retain a more extenſive and innocent ſignification. Simon availed himſelf ſo much of his knowledge of nature, as to pretend that what he did was performed by ſupernatural means. Nay, he went farther; for Irenæus informs us, that he boaſted he had appeared to the Samaritans as the Father, to the Jews as the Son, and to the Gentiles as the Holy Spirit; and Juſtin Martyr informs us, that he aſſerted, that all the names of God were to be aſcribed to him, and that he was God, above all principality, power, and virtue. But if ever he made theſe pretences, it was probably after this time; for before it he ſeems to have been intirely a ſtranger to the firſt elements of the Chriſtian doctrine, to which theſe blaſphemies refer. Dr. Heylin renders the laſt clauſe of this verſe, pretending that he was ſome extraordinary perſon. See Doddridge, Benſon, Prid. Connect. vol. i. p. 174. and Sale's Coran, Preliminary Diſcourſe, p. 21.

Ver. 10. This man is the great power of God] "The long-expected Meſſiah, and, if we may ſo ſpeak, Omnipotence itſelf incarnate, or he could never do ſuch wonderful things." Doddridge. If we believe Juſtin Martyr, almoſt all the Samaritans, and not a few other nations adored him; acknowledged him to be as it were the ſupreme Deity. See the former note.

Ver. 11. He had bewitched them] Had aſtoniſhed them. Doddridge.

Ver. 13. Then Simon himſelf believed alſo] Perhaps, as M. L'Enfant and Limborch conjecture, he might think Philip an abler magician than himſelf, and hoped, by pretending to be his diſciple, he might have an opportunity of learning his ſuperior arts; or poſſibly he was afraid, leſt Philip ſhould draw away the people from him, if he ſtood out and oppoſed him. It ſeems, however, unqueſtionable that he was from the beginning hypocritical and inſincere. But though the Apoſtles and ſeveral of the primitive Chriſtians had the gift of diſcerning the ſpirits and ſecret intentions of men in ſome caſes; yet this was not one of the gifts which they could exerciſe at all times, but only upon certain occaſions, according to the pleaſure and direction of the Spirit; and the divine wiſdom ſaw fit that Simon's inſincerity ſhould be concealed till he himſelf diſcovered it.

with Philip, and wondered, beholding the miracles and ſigns which were done.

14 Now when the apoſtles which were at Jeruſalem, heard that Samaria had received the word of God, they ſent unto them Peter and John:

15 Who, when they were come down, prayed for them, that they might receive the Holy Ghoſt.

16 (For as yet he was fallen upon none of them: only they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jeſus.)

17 Then laid they their hands on them, and they received the Holy Ghoſt.

18 And when Simon ſaw that through laying on of the apoſtles hands, the Holy Ghoſt was given, he offered them money, 19 Saying, Give me alſo this power, that on whomſoever I lay hands, he may receive the Holy Ghoſt.

20 But Peter ſaid unto him, Thy money periſh with thee, becauſe thou haſt thought that the gift of God may be purchaſed with money.

21 Thou haſt neither part nor lot in this matter: for thy heart is not right in the ſight of God.

22 Repent therefore of this thy wickedneſs, and pray God, if perhaps the thought of thine heart may be forgiven thee.

23 For I perceive that thou art in the gall of bitterneſs, and in the bond of iniquity.

Ver. 13. Gr. ſigns and great miracles.—V. 15. Ch. ii. 38.—V. 16. Ch. xix. 2. Matth. xxviii. 19. Ch. ii. 38. Ch. x. 48. xix. 5. V. 17. Ch. vi. 6. xix. 6. Hebr. vi. 2.—V. 20. Matth. x. 8. See 2 Kings v. 16.—V. 22. Dan. iv. 27. 2 Tim. ii. 25.—V. 23. Hebr. xii. 15.

It is with particular elegance and propriety that the ſame word which had been uſed to expreſs the manner in which the Samaritans were affected with Simon's inchantments, ver. 9, 11. is here uſed to deſcribe the impreſſion which Philip's miracles made on him, it being there expreſſed by ἐξιστῶν and ἐξεστακέναι, and here by ἐξίστατο. It ſeems therefore quite wrong to tranſlate the former bewitched, and the latter wondered, or was aſtoniſhed. See Benſon, Doddridge, and L'Enfant.

Ver. 14. They ſent unto them Peter and John] John was one of the two who were for calling down fire from heaven upon the Samaritans, when they refuſed to entertain Chriſt. To ſuch a length did his zeal then carry him; but it was a zeal without knowledge. After the Spirit, however, was poured out upon him, his mind was enlarged, and his zeal guided by knowledge and charity; then he makes no ſcruple of going to the Samaritans, imparting unto them the gift of the Holy Spirit, and acknowledging them for Chriſtian brethren, whom his Jewiſh zeal would have burnt up and deſtroyed. As the Apoſtles ſent Peter along with John, and he went accordingly at their appointment, it is plain that neither he nor they had any notion of the ſupremacy of that Apoſtle. See Benſon and Whitby.

Ver. 15—17. Who, when they were come down] It appears very probable from hence, that the ſpirit had been conferred upon all the Chriſtian converts hitherto, and it was highly proper the Samaritans ſhould have that divine gift both as a confirmation of the truth of the Chriſtian doctrine in general, and as an evidence to them in particular, that however they had been formerly hated by the Jews, yet under the Goſpel they would be equally acceptable to God with the Jews, and as openly and fully admitted to all the privileges of the church, and of the people of God. From what follows it is plain, that the Holy Spirit was conferred in his ſupernatural and miraculous influences; for Simon the magician ſaw ſome of the wonderous effects of that divine gift immediately, by the new converts ſpeaking languages which they had never learned, or propheſying or working miracles; and it was this which made him ſo earneſtly covet that apoſtolic power. They who fancy that the Apoſtles conferred thoſe, which in theſe later ages have been called the ſtanding, or the ſanctifying influences of the Spirit, ſurely cannot deny, that if it had been ſo, ſuch influences could not have been diſcerned, but gradually, and from the tenor and habit of the life and converſation: And there was not time ſufficient for making ſuch exact obſervations between the Apoſtles conferring the gifts, and Simon's offering money to purchaſe that power. Nor would that magician, very probably, have given any thing, either for the ſanctifying influences of the Spirit, or for the power to confer them upon others, ſuppoſing God would have beſtowed ſuch an extraordinary favour upon him.

The Apoſtles, who alone had a power of imparting them, appear to have conferred ſome or other of the miraculous gifts upon all adult Chriſtians wherever they came. Upon the Apoſtles themſelves, and the reſt of the hundred and twenty, the Spirit was poured down immediately from heaven, and without the laying on of the hands of any man; and upon the other Jewiſh converts, the Apoſtles laid their hands, and thereby conferred that divine gift. As the Samaritans were now Jews, by religion, and many of them even deſcended from Jewiſh parents, and as our Lord himſelf had during his own perſonal miniſtry treated them as Jews, there was no occaſion for the pouring down of the Holy Spirit upon them before baptiſm, to prepare the way for their being received into the Chriſtian church; as there manifeſtly was afterwards in the caſe of the firſt fruits from among the Gentiles: And on the other hand, ſuppoſe the Samaritans had not been favoured with any ſpiritual gifts and miraculous powers; i. e. neither before baptiſm nor after it; they would have come behind other churches, and might thereupon have been ready to queſtion, whether they who had been ſo peculiarly odious to the Jews were now accepted of God equally, and to like privileges with the Jews, from among whom came the Saviour and ſalvation to mankind. The two Apoſtles, therefore, went down and conferred upon them the extraordinary gifts of the Holy Ghoſt. Thus, according to the wiſe and beauteous ſcheme of raiſing the new creation, the Jewiſh and Samaritan Chriſtians were both treated alike; and how great ſoever their mutual averſion had been, the benign ſpirit of Chriſtianity laid the foundation, for abating their mutual prejudices; for healing their unhappy differences, and for making them look upon one another as brethren in Chriſt Jeſus, and equally acceptable unto God; who is in the Goſpel moſt plainly declared to be the God and Father of all who believe and obey the Chriſtian revelation, whether Jews, Samaritans, or Gentiles. See Benſon.

Ver. 18, 19. And when Simon ſaw, &c.] As the Apoſtles ſeem generally to have imparted the Holy Spirit to all profeſſed Chriſtians, wherever they came, and to ſome who did not prove ſincere, perhaps they imparted ſome ſpiritual gifts to Simon Magus amongſt the reſt. But as the perſons upon whom ſuch miraculous gifts were beſtowed, might either ſtir them up or quench them, as they were diligent or careleſs in working the works of God; ſuppoſing that grand impoſture had any ſpiritual gifts conferred upon him, he immediately and entirely quenched them by his inſincerity and vile temper, diſcovered in the propoſal before us. See the preceding note.

Ver. 20. Thy money periſh, &c.] This is not an imprecation, but a ſtrong way of admoniſhing Simon of his danger; and of expreſſing how much rather the Apoſtle would ſee the greateſt ſum of money loſt and caſt away, than receive any part of it on ſuch ſhameful terms. From this crime of Simon, a purchaſing the miniſterial function with money or bribes, was called ſimony in the ancient canons of the Chriſtian church; but it is now called ſo, to procure eccleſiaſtical benefices by money. See the canons of our church.

Ver. 21. Thou haſt neither part nor lot] "No intereſt in the important ſpiritual bleſſings, to which all theſe extraordinary gifts are ſubſervient, for thy heart is not upright in the ſight of God." This is no inſtance of Peter's miraculouſly diſcerning ſpirits; for every common miniſter or Chriſtian might have made the inference in ſuch circumſtances. But on the other ſide, this ſtory will by no means prove St. Peter to have been deſtitute of this gift. He might, like Chriſt in the caſe of Judas, have diſcerned Simon's hypocriſy long before he thought fit to diſcover it openly; or, he might have the gift really in ſome inſtances, though not in this. For there is no more reaſon to ſuppoſe that Chriſt ever gave any of his ſervants an univerſal power of diſcerning the hearts and characters of all they converſed with, than there is to believe he gave any of them a power of healing all the ſick they came near; which we are ſure they had not. Comp. Phil. ii. 25, 27. 2 Tim. iv. 10.

Ver. 22. And pray God, &c.] Here is ſo inconteſtable an evidence of an unconverted ſinner being exhorted to repentance and prayer, while he was known to be in that ſtate, that it is aſtoniſhing it ſhould ever have been diſputed. And one would think none could be ſo vile as to imagine that faith in Chriſt was not included in that repentance and prayer, which an Apoſtle preaches to a baptized perſon, as the way of obtaining forgiveneſs. The dubious manner in which St. Peter ſpeaks of Simon's being forgiven, intimates, not that his ſincere repentance might poſſibly fail of acceptance, for that is contrary to the whole tenor of the Goſpel; but that, after the commiſſion of a ſin of ſo heinous a nature, there was little reaſon to hope he would ever be brought truly to repent. See Doddridge, and Heylin.

Ver. 23. In the gall of bitterneſs] That is, the bittereſt gall. The whole ſentence expreſſes, in Peter's ſtrong manner of ſpeaking, how odious and wretched a creature Simon now appeared to him. How much more odious in the ſight of a Holy God muſt ſuch a ſinner be! De Dieu would render it, I ſee as the very gall of bitterneſs, and a bundle of iniquity. The gall of bitterneſs ſeems to have been an alluſion to Deut. to xxix. 18. or xxxii. 32. and the bond of iniquity to Iſaiah lviii. 6. See Albert, Obſervat. p. 236. and Beza.

24 Then anſwered Simon, and ſaid, Pray ye to the Lord for me, that none of theſe things which ye have ſpoken come upon me.

25 And they, when they had teſtified and preached the word of the Lord, returned to Jeruſalem, and preached the goſpel in many villages of the Samaritans.

26 And the angel of the Lord ſpake unto Philip, ſaying, Ariſe, and go toward the ſouth, unto the way that goeth down from Jeruſalem unto Gaza, which is deſart.

27 And he aroſe and went: and behold, a man of Ethiopia, an eunuch of great authority under Candace queen of the Ethiopians, who had the charge of all her treaſure, and had come to Jeruſalem for to worſhip, 28 Was returning, and ſitting in his chariot, read Eſaias the prophet.

29 Then the Spirit ſaid unto Philip, Go near, and join thyſelf to this chariot.

30 And Philip ran thither to him, and heard him read the prophet Eſaias, and ſaid, Underſtandeſt thou what thou readeſt?

31 And he ſaid, How can I, except ſome man ſhould guide me? and he deſired Philip that he would come up, and ſit with him.

32 The place of the ſcripture which he read, was this, He was lead as a ſheep to the ſlaughter; and like a lamb dumb before his ſhearer, ſo opened he not his mouth:

33 In his humiliation his judgement was taken away: and who ſhall declare his generation? for his life is taken from the earth.

34 And the eunuch anſwered Philip, and ſaid, I pray thee, of whom ſpeaketh the prophet this? of himſelf, or of ſome other man?

35 Then Philip opened his mouth, and began at the ſame ſcripture, and preached unto him Jeſus.

36 And as they went on their way, they came unto a certain water: and the eunuch ſaid, See, here is water; what doth hinder me to be baptized?

37 And Philip ſaid, If thou believeſt with all thine heart, thou mayeſt. And he anſwered and ſaid, I believe that Jeſus Chriſt is the Son of God.

38 And he commanded the chariot to ſtand ſtill: and they went down both into the water, both Philip and the eunuch; and he baptized him.

Ver. 24. Numb. xxi. 7. 1 Kings xiii. 6.—V. 27. Zeph. iii. 10. John xii. 20.—V. 32. Iſai. liii. 7.—V. 36. Ch. x. 47.—V. 37. Matth. xvi. 16. John vi. 69. xi. 27. Ch. ix. 20. 1 John iv. 15. v. 5.

Ver. 24. Pray ye to the Lord for me] It is greatly to be feared that this pretence of conviction and humiliation was only to prevent Peter and John from diſgracing him among the body of Chriſtians; for it is reaſonable to ſuppoſe this converſation paſſed in private between them; and perhaps Simon might have ſome hope that if the ſecret were kept, he might reduce the people, when the Apoſtles were gone, to their former ſubjection to him, notwithſtanding their converſion to Chriſtianity. The words, theſe things which YE have ſpoken, being plural, ſeem naturally to refer to the aweful things which Simon had heard in the courſe of Chriſtian preaching, concerning the terrible effects of the divine diſpleaſure againſt impenitent ſinners in the future world. Perhaps too he might have heard of the dreadful puniſhment inflicted upon Ananias and Sapphira, ch. 5.

Ver. 25. When they had teſtified, &c.] When they had borne their teſtimony, &c. that is, to the truth of the Goſpel. See on Luke xxiv. 48.

Ver. 26. And the angel of the Lord ſpake unto Philip] It gives us a very high idea of the Goſpel, to ſee the miniſters of it receiving immediate direction from celeſtial ſpirits, in the particular diſcharge of their office. The conſtruction of the Greek leaves it dubious whether the clauſe which is deſart, refers to Gaza, or the way that led to it. Thoſe who are of the former opinion obſerve, that the ancient city of this name was demoliſhed by Alexander the Great, and afterwards rebuilt with great magnificence, though at ſome diſtance from the ſpot on which the old city ſtood, which was left in ruins, and therefore called Gaza the Deſerted, or Deſolate. But they who queſtion the truth of this aſſertion think, that Philip was directed to take that road to Gaza, which lay through the wilderneſs, and which, though perhaps it might not be the ſhorteſt, was choſen by the eunuch as the more retired; and the Greek ſeems to favour this interpretation. The Ethiopic verſion renders it, into the way which leads through the deſart from Jeruſalem to Gaza. See Grotius, Druſius, Reland, and Caſaubon.

Ver. 27, 28. A man of Ethiopia, an eunuch, &c.] A certain Ethiopian eunuch, a grandee of Candace, &c. Concerning the meaning of the word eunuch, ſee the note on Gen. xxxvii. 36. It appears, that Candace was a name common to ſeveral of the queens who reigned in Meroe, a part of Ethiopia, to the ſouth of Egypt. Perhaps the eunuch had been lately brought over to the Jewiſh religion; to which it is plain he was a proſelyte, and ſo was not much acquainted with the national expectation of a Meſſiah, and much leſs with their prophecies. See ver. 31. Probably the chariot in which he was ſitting was ſomething in the form of our chaiſes with four wheels; for though the eunuch did not guide it himſelf, there was room for another perſon to come and ſet with him; the driver therefore ſeems to have ſat on a ſeat by himſelf. See Wetſtein, Benſon, and De Dieu.

Ver. 33. In his humiliation, &c.] This is the tranſlation of the LXX, and, if it be admitted, ſeems to mean, that Jeſus appeared in ſo humble a form, that though Pilate was convinced of his innocence, he ſeemed a perſon of ſo little importance, that it would not be worth while to hazard any thing to preſerve him. To take away a perſon's judgement, is a known proverb for oppreſſing him. See Job xxvii. 2. Dr. Heylin reads it, In his humiliation was his criſis; He was taken away, but who ſhall declare, &c? Criſis, ſays he, is the word in the original, which I underſtand here, in its Engliſh ſignification, for "a deciſive trial, in which he ſtood the teſt." The ſubject brings to mind that apt phraſe of the chymiſts, experimentum crucis, "the experiment of the croſs." Dr. Hammond expreſſes the clauſe, Who ſhall declare his generation? Thus, "Who can deſcribe the obſtinate infidelity and barbarous injuſtice of that generation of men, among whom he appeared, and from whom he ſuffered ſuch things?" But ſee the notes on Iſai. liii. 8. and Vitringa.

Ver. 35. And preached unto him Jeſus] Limborch very largely ſhews, in his commentary on this paſſage, how ſhamefully the Jews pervert the whole 53d of Iſaiah, in expounding it of the afflictions of Iſrael, where, as we have ſhewn in our notes on that chapter, it can refer only to Chriſt. The reader, deſirous of ſeeing more on that ſubject, may conſult Sharpe's 2d argument, p. 227. and Bullock's Vindication, p. 147, &c. See alſo the Reflections.

Ver. 36. And as they went, &c.] In one manuſcript this verſe begins thus: But as they went along, conferring with one another, they came, &c. See Mill and Wetſtein.

Ver. 37. I believe that Jeſus Chriſt is the Son of God] There are many ancient copies and verſions in which this verſe is omitted: "Neverthelеſs, ſays Beza, well, God forbid that I ſhould think it ought be expunged, ſince it contains ſuch a confeſſion of faith, as was in the apoſtolic times required of the adult, in order to their being admitted to baptiſm." Allowing it to be genuine, it fully proves, ſays Dr. Doddridge, that Philip had opened to the eunuch the doctrine of Chriſt's divinity; and indeed, if he had not done it, he muſt have given him a very imperfect account of the Goſpel." See the note on ch. xiii. 33.

Ver. 38. And they went down both into the water] Conſidering how bathing was uſed in thoſe hot countries, it is not to be wondered that baptiſm was generally adminiſtered by immerſion; though there does not appear any proof that it was eſſential to the inſtitution. It would be very unnatural to ſuppoſe, that they went down to the water merely that Philip might take a little water in his hand to pour on the the eunuch. A perſon of his dignity had, no doubt, many veſſels in his baggage, on ſuch a journey, through ſo deſart a country; a precaution abſolutely neceſſary for travellers in thoſe parts, and never omitted by them. See Shaw's Trav. Pref. p. 4. And for the place where Philip baptized the eunuch, Fuller's Miſcel. Sacr. lib. ii. c. 8. Pearſon, Lect. in Act. Apoſt. p. 72. and Reland's Paleſt. p. 487.

39 And when they were come up out of the water, the Spirit of the Lord caught away Philip, that the eunuch ſaw him no more: and he went on his way rejoicing.

40 But Philip was found at Azotus: and paſſing through, he preached in all the cities, till he came to Ceſarea.

Ver. 39. 1 Kings xviii. 12. 2 Kings ii. 16. Ezek. iii. 12, 14.

Ver. 39. The Spirit of the Lord caught away Philip] The Alexandrian MS. and ſeveral other ancient copies, read, The Holy Spirit fell upon the eunuch; but the angel of the Lord caught away Philip, &c. See ver. 26. This appears to be the true and original reading; and from hence we learn, that as ſoon as they were come up from the water, the Holy Spirit deſcended upon the eunuch immediately from heaven, and without the impoſition of Philip's hands. Probably the effuſion was attended with a viſible glory, like cloven tongues, or pointed flames of fire; for that external ſymbol ſeems always to have accompanied the pouring down of the Holy Spirit. Though the eunuch thereby received ſome ſpiritual gifts, or miraculous powers, or both, yet this effuſion of the Spirit was not in order to prepare the way for his reception into the Chriſtian church, which was the caſe with Cornelius and his company, who were the firſt fruits of the Gentiles, and then it ought to have been conferred on him before baptiſm; wheras the eunuch was a proſelyte of righteouſneſs, and therefore Philip made no ſcruple of baptizing him as ſoon as ever he profeſſed the Chriſtian faith, as knowing the rule in that caſe, Exod. xii. 49. namely, one law ſhall be unto him that is home-born, that is a Jew by birth as well as religion, and to the ſtranger who ſojourns among you: for ſo it plainly appears from the foregoing verſe to be the circumciſed proſelyte, or proſelyte of righteouſneſs, and not of the gate. But as Philip was only an Evangeliſt,—no Apoſtle at hand,—the eunch going directly into a diſtant country, and God, unwilling that he ſhould go without the extraordinary atteſtation, which was ſo commonly afforded to the Chriſtians of that primitive age, and yet reſolved not to break in upon the common method, which was to communicate the Holy Spirit by the hands of no other men than the Apoſtles only:—For theſe reaſons God ſeems to have poured the Holy Spirit upon him by an immediate effuſion; and hereby this illuſtrious convert had the Spirit conferred in the moſt honourable manner, and in the way in which the higheſt and beſt gifts uſed to be beſtowed. Preſently after this ſignal evidence had been granted to the eunuch, an angel of the Lord caught away Philip; perhaps by a rapture through the air, in the ſight of the eunuch and his attendants. See 1 Kings xviii. 12. 2 Kings ii. 16. Ezek. iii. 14. And, after he was removed beyond their utmoſt ken, the eunuch ſaw him no more; nor did he ſearch after, or follow the Evangeliſt: He was ſatisfied that it was the will of God that they ſhould be ſo ſeparated, and therefore he purſued his journey to Ethiopia, greatly rejoicing at what had happened. For he was not only convinced of the truth of Chriſtianity himſelf, but he had ſuch gifts and powers as enabled him to inſtruct and convince others alſo; and accordingly he is ſaid to have planted the Goſpel in Ethiopia, where there was a flouriſhing church, as moſt of the ancient hiſtories of the country aſſure us: And as the Apoſtles Bartholomew, Matthew, and Matthias preached the Goſpel there, it is not only an additional proof that he had paved the way for them: but as ſo many Apoſtles were ſent into thoſe parts, it is a ſtrong preſumption in favour of the ſucceſs of his miniſtry. See Euſeb. Hiſt. Eccleſ. lib. ii. cap. 1. Jortin's Remarks, vol. ii. p. 73. and Benſon.

Ver. 40. But Philip was found at Azotus] Or Aſhdod, a city that was more than thirty miles from Gaza, in the ſouthern part of the country, which had been formerly one of the five governments belonging to the Philiſtines, 1 Sam. vi. 17. From thence Philip paſſed through the towns nigh or upon the ſea-coaſt, as Joppa, Lydda, Saron, &c. and planted the Goſpel all along till he came to Cæſarea, which was then the metropolis of Paleſtine, and different from the Cæſarea Philippi mentioned Matth. xvi. 13. This Cæſarea was not far diſtant from Cæſarea Philippi, which was ſituated to the north, in the tribe of Naphtali, and near the ſources of the Jordan. It was rebuilt by Herod the firſt, who greatly enlarged and beautified it with many fine edifices of poliſhed marble; but the greateſt and moſt beneficial of all his works here, was the harbour which he made, equal in largeneſs to the Piræus at Athens. The beauty of this Cæſarea, which was anciently called Stratonice, or Straton's Tower; and the conveniencies of its ſituation, were ſo extraordinary, that when the Romans reduced Judea into the form of a province, they made it the ſeat of their government, in preference even to Jeruſalem itſelf. See Joſeph. Antiq. b. xiii. c. 11. the note on Matth. xvi. 13. and Macknight's Harmony, Sect. 17. Philip ſettled at Cæſarea for ſome time, probably for life; for we find long after this, that St. Paul and his company lodged at his houſe in Cæſarea, and that then he had four daughters, virgins, who were propheteſſes. See ch. xxi. 8, 9. But though he ſettled at Cæſarea, we may reaſonably preſume that Philip would continue to preach the Chriſtian doctrine to the Jews, and make as many converts among them as he could.

REFLECTIONS ON CHAP. VIII.

The laſt token of reſpect here paid by theſe devout men to the remains of St. Stephen, reflects the higheſt honour on their memories; ſince by carrying him to his funeral with ſolemn pomp and lamentation, who had died like an infamous criminal, they themſelves alſo bore noble teſtimony to the Chriſtian cauſe. The wrath of man ſhall praiſe thee, O Lord; and very ſingularly was it made to praiſe thee in this inſtance, by the conſequent ſending out of the Goſpel miſſionaries, ver. 1. who, during the ſhort repoſe of the church, had been qualified for their work, and by diſperſing them through all the neighbouring countries.

Had the calm continued longer while the diſciples were ſo happy in the love and friendſhip of each other, they might have been too much inclinable to build their tabernacles at Jeruſalem, and to ſay, it is good for us to be here. Such delightful mutual converſe might have engaged them to prolong their abode there to future months, and perhaps years, ver. 4. In mercy to the churches therefore, and even to themſelves, whoſe trueſt happineſs was connected with their uſefulneſs, were they, like ſo many clouds big with the rain of heaven, driven different ways by the wind of perſecution, that ſo they might empty themſelves in fruitful ſhowers on the ſeveral tracts of land through which they went preaching the Goſpel.

And thus did the continued outrages and cruelties of Saul, (ver. 3.) ſerve more and more to illuſtrate the ſovereignty and freedom of divine grace, in that converſion which we are hereafter ſoon to ſurvey and admire; and to give the view of a very delightful contraſt between the warmth of thoſe efforts which he made firſt to deſtroy, and then with proportionable zeal to ſave.

It is pleaſing to obſerve how the Goſpel conquered the mutual and rooted prejudices between the Jews and the Samaritans, ver. 5, &c. teaching the Jews to communicate, and the Samaritans to receive its bleſſed meſſage with pleaſure. It was a wonderful Providence which had permitted the enchantments of Simon to be ſo ſucceſsful before; but at length, Simon himſelf believes, and is baptized, ver. 9—11. In this, as in a thouſand nearer inſtances, we ſee that there may be ſpeculative faith in the Goſpel, where there is no true piety. And if ſuch perſons, on the profeſſion of that faith, where nothing appears contrary to it, be admitted to thoſe ordinances, by which Chriſtians are diſtinguiſhed from the reſt of mankind, it is an evil, in the preſent ſtate of things, unavoidable; and the conduct of Chriſtian miniſters and ſocieties in admitting ſuch, will be leſs diſpleaſing to God than a rigorous ſeverity. May that God give us wiſdom to guide our way, and determine our reſolutions, that ſo we may obtain the happy medium, between proſtituting divine ordinances by a fond credulity, and defrauding the children of their bread, becauſe they have not reached ſuch a ſtature, or do not ſeek it in thoſe forms and geſtures, which our miſtaken caution may ſometimes be ready to demand. See ver. 13.

With how peculiar honour were the Apoſtles diſtinguiſhed, (ver. 14—17.) that the Holy Spirit ſhould be given by the impoſition of their hands! Thus did Chriſt bear his teſtimony to them, as the authorized teachers of his church: and hence it evidently appears, that we may with great ſafety and pleaſure ſubmit ourſelves to their inſtruction; for theſe extraordinary gifts were intended in ſome meaſure for our benefit, that by an intire reſignation to their authority, thus atteſted, we might be made partakers of thoſe graces, in compariſon of which, the tongues of men and of angels would be but as ſounding braſs, or a tinkling cymbal.

Who can read without horror the infamous propoſal of Simon, to purchaſe the gift of God with money? ver. 18, 19. With ſomewhat of the ſame horror muſt we look on all thoſe, by whom things ſacred are either bought or ſold. It is an infamous traffic, about which an upright man cannot deliberate a moment, but will reject it at once with an honeſt ſcorn and indignation, like that of Peter in the preſent inſtance. God grant that none of the ordinances of Chriſt may ever be proſtituted to ſecular ends, which ſeems a crime almoſt equally enormous! In vain it is for men to "profeſs and call themſelves Chriſtians;" in vain to ſubmit, like Simon, to baptiſm, or, like him, to adhere conſtantly to the miniſters of the Goſpel, if their hearts be not right before God. ver. 20, 21. An hypocritical conduct, like this, will proclaim it aloud, that they are in the gall of bttterneſs, and in the bond of iniquity, ver. 23.—Waſh us, O holy God, from this odious and polluting gall, which naturally overſpreads us! and do thou looſen theſe bonds of ſin with which Satan ſometimes binds even thoſe who have a name and place in thy church, and in which he conveys them to final and everlaſting deſtruction.

Let us not, however, deſpair even of the worſt of men, but direct them rather from their errors, (ver. 22.) to that great univerſal remedy,—a deep and ſerious repentance of their ſins, and an earneſt addreſs to God in prayer;—to Him, who alone can waſh us from crimes or ſtains, and break in pieces fetters of iron. It is ſome token for good, when ſinners ſeem to fall under reproof, and to deſire the prayers of thoſe who are more upright than themſelves, ver. 24. But if men are animated in ſuch requeſts and ſubmiſſions, by a more noble and generous principle than fear of deſtruction from God, there is great reaſon to ſuſpect the ſincerity of that repentance which they profeſs; and to apprehend that, like Simon, they will unſay all their fair confeſſion, and perhaps like him, (if we may credit the moſt authentic uninſpired hiſtories of the church) become open enemies to that Goſpel, which they pretended for a while to reverence and believe. See Euſeb. Eccl. Hiſt. lib. ii. cap. 14. Theodoret. Hæret. Fab. l. i. c. 1. and the note on ver. 9.

We have great reaſon to adore the gracious counſels and purpoſes of God, with reſpect to this Ethiopian eunuch before us, ver. 27. He was a choſen veſſel; and being deſirous to improve that weak light which he had, God, we ſee, took effectual methods to impart to

CHAP. IX.

Saul going towards Damaſcus, is ſtricken down to the earth, is called to the apoſtleſhip, and is baptized by Ananias: he preacheth Chriſt boldly: the Jews lay wait to kill him; ſo do the Grecians: but he eſcapeth both. The church having reſt, Peter healeth Eneas of the palſy, and reſtoreth Tabitha to life.

AND Saul yet breathing out threatenings and ſlaughter againſt the diſciples of the Lord, went unto the high prieſt,

2 And deſired of him letters to Damaſcus to the ſynagogues, that if he found any of this way, whether they were men or women, he might bring them bound unto Jeruſalem.

Ver. 1. Ch. viii. 3. Gal. i. 13. 1 Tim. i. 13.—V. 2. Gr. of the way: So ch. xix. 9, 23.

him more. Thus as the prophet Hoſea expreſſes it, ſhall we know, if we follow on to know the Lord. (ch. vi. 3.) An angel of the Lord ſhall be ſent to give directions to an Evangeliſt to meet him in the deſart, and to inſtruct him there in what he had been unable to learn in his attendance at Jeruſalem: Philip, in prompt obedience to the divine command, immediately retires from the more public ſervice he had been engaged in at Samaria, to execute whatever the Lord ſhall pleaſe to call him to, though he ſhould order him to go into a wilderneſs; for even there he could open a door of opportunity to make him uſeful: and while, like Philip, the miniſters and diſciples of Chriſt govern themſelves by the intimations of ſupreme wiſdom, they ſhall not run in vain, nor labour in vain. Phil. ii. 16.

It was a prudent and exemplary care, eſpecially in a perſon engaged in ſuch a variety of public buſineſs as the eunuch was, to improve that vacant leiſure which a journey allowed him, in reading what might edify and inſtruct him, even as he ſat in his chariot, ver. 28. This is truly to redeem the time. He choſe the ſacred oracles, which are able to make men wiſe unto ſalvation; and while peruſing them, we ſee he was in an extraordinary manner, taught of God their author. The queſtion which Philip put to him, ver. 30. we ſhould often put to ourſelves: Underſtandeſt thou what thou readeſt? Let us chooſe thoſe writings which may be worth our ſtudy, and then labour to digeſt them into knowledge: It is unworthy the character of rational creatures to reſt in the empty amuſement, which a few wandering, unconnected, undiſtinguiſhed ideas may give us, while they paſs through the mind, like images over a mirror, and leave no trace or impreſſion at all behind them.

The Scriptures eſpecially will be worthy of our ſtudy, that we may underſtand them; and we ſhould earneſtly pray that this ſtudy may be ſucceſsful. For this purpoſe let us be willing, like the Ethiopian convert, to make uſe of proper guides; (ver. 31.) though it muſt be confeſſed, none we are likely to meet with at preſent can have a claim to that authority with which Philip taught. It is pleaſant, nevertheleſs, with a becoming humility to offer what aſſiſtance we can to our fellow-travellers, on ſuch an occaſion as this: And indeed the practice is generally attended with a bleſſing, both to teacher and learner. God Almighty grant that we who attempt it, eſpecially in that way which is moſt extenſive and laſting, may "neither be deceived in Scripture ourſelves, nor deceive others by miſrepreſenting its ſenſe!"

If we enter into the true ſenſe of the ancient prophecies, we muſt undoubtedly ſee Chriſt in them, and particularly in that excellent chapter of Iſaiah, which the pious eunuch was now reading. Indeed we may ſafely reſt the proof from prophecy, in ſupport of Chriſtianity, upon this ſingle oracle. If it relates to the Meſſiah, and was accompliſhed in every part by Jeſus, and by no other, he muſt be the Chriſt. He appealed to it himſelf, (Luke xxii. 37.) the Apoſtles often refer us to it; and Philip, under the conduct of the divine Spirit, converted the eunuch by it.

A more extraordinary inſtance of the power and efficacy of this oracle, in converting believers, cannot be given, than in the caſe of that prodigy of wit, frolic, and immorality, John Wilmot, earl of Rocheſter. They who are only unhappily acquainted with his deteſtable poems and diſſolute life, will ſcarcely imagine, that he died a ſincere penitent and a Chriſtian; and that before he expired, he made no bad comment upon ſome parts of this prophecy. The following account, therefore, is given in Bp. Burnet's own words, who attended him during his laſt illneſs, and publiſhed his caſe after his death. "He ſaid (to the biſhop) that Mr. Parſons, in order to his conviction, read to him, Iſai. liii. and compared that prophecy with the hiſtory of our Saviour's paſſion, that he might there ſee a prophecy concerning it, written many years before it was done; which the Jews that blaſphemed Jeſus Chriſt, ſtill kept in their hands, as a book divinely inſpired. He ſaid to me, that as he heard it read, he felt an inward force upon him, which did ſo enlighten his mind, and convince him, that he could reſiſt it no longer; for the words had an authority, which did ſhoot like rays or beams into his mind; ſo that he was not only convinced by the reaſonings he had about it, which ſatisfied his underſtanding; but by a power which did ſo effectually conſtrain him, that he did ever after as firmly believe in his Saviour, as if he had ſeen him in the clouds. He had made it be read ſo often to him, that he had got it by heart; and went through a great part of it in diſcourſe with me, with a ſort of heavenly pleaſure, giving me his reflections upon it. Some few I remember: Who hath believed our report? Here, he ſaid, was foretold the oppoſition the Goſpel was to meet with from ſuch wretches as he was.—He hath no form or comelineſs: and when we ſhall ſee him, there is no beauty, that we ſhould deſire him. On this he ſaid, The meanneſs of his appearance and perſon, has made vain and fooliſh people diſparage him, becauſe he came not in ſuch a fool's coat as they delight in, &c. &c." It were to be wiſhed, that this "ſhort account" of that nobleman, by this learned prelate, was in the hands of all who have any doubts about religion, natural or revealed: And God grant that the prophecy in queſtion may have the ſame effect upon the minds of all, to convert them to, or confirm them in the belief, that Jeſus is the Chriſt, the Son of God! ver. 37.

Let us often view our divine Maſter in that amiable and affecting light in which he is here repreſented, ver. 32, 33. Let us view him, though the Son of God, by a generation which none can fully declare, yet brought as a lamb to the ſlaughter, and as a ſheep dumb before his ſhearers: Nor let us refuſe patiently to ſuffer with him, if called to it, in humble hope of reigning with him too, even though, like his, our judgement alſo ſhould be taken away, and we be cut off from the land of the living.

When once men are come to a point, thus ſolemnly to give themſelves up to the Lord, and have done it in his appointed method, let them, as they have reaſon, go on their way rejoicing, (ver. 39.) though Providence ſhould ſeparate from them thoſe ſpiritual guides, who have been the happy inſtruments of their converſion and edification.

To conclude: The ſervants of Chriſt are called to glorify him, in every different ſcene and ſtation of life: Happy, if in one ſtate and country, or other, (ver. 40.) they may ſpread the ſavour of his name, and gather in converts to him, whether from among the ſons of Iſrael, or of Ethiopia!

Chap. IX. Ver. 1. And Saul yet breathing out threatnings, &c.] This is a very emphatical expreſſion, and ſhews the implacable hatred, which Saul bore to the Chriſtian profeſſion; and it muſt have increaſed his rage to hear, that thoſe whom he had been inſtrumental in driving from Jeruſalem, were ſo ſucceſsful in ſpreading the religion which he was ſo eager to root out. The perſon now in the office of high-prieſt, ſeems to have been Caiaphas, the inveterate enemy of Chriſt: he would therefore gladly employ ſo active and bigotted a zealot as Saul, and it is well known that the ſanhedrim, however its capital power might be abridged by the Romans, was the ſupreme Jewiſh court, and had great influence and authority among their ſynagogues abroad. There are ſeveral diſputes concerning the time of this tranſaction. Spanheim advances ſeveral arguments to prove, that it happened ſix or ſeven years after Chriſt's death, about the fourth year of Caligula, A. D. 40. Benſon and others, agreeable to Pearſon's Chronology, think it was ſooner, but the exact time cannot be fixed by any circumſtances tranſmitted to us. See Spanheim, Benſon, and Doddridge.

Ver. 2. And deſired of him letters] Theſe letters contained a mandate from the high-prieſt, impowering him to act, as appears from chap. xxvi. 12. where they are explained by the words authority and commiſſion; and Saul ſeems to have been a very proper perſon for executing thoſe orders at that time; being a young man, warm in his temper, and poſſeſſed with an intemperate zeal for Judaiſm. Damaſcus was the principal city of Cyria, ſituated on the eaſt ſide of the mountain Antilibanus, about 120 miles north-eaſt from Jeruſalem. How much it abounded with Jews may partly appear from Joſephus, who in one place takes notice of the inhabitants ſhutting up and deſtroying in the Gymnaſium 10,000 Jews in one hour. In another place he repreſents the Damaſcenes, as having murdered 18,000 Jews, with their wives and children; a place which ſo much abounded with Jews, was very likely to have ſome Chriſtians; and Saul moſt probably had heard that there were ſeveral converts at this place. But it may be inquired by what authority Saul could execute at Damaſcus the commiſſion given him by the high-prieſt? The letters were directed to the ſynagogues at Damaſcus, and the Jews were generally indulged in foreign ſtates where they ſettled, with their ſynagogue worſhip, and the exerciſe of their church diſcipline; but can it be ſuppoſed they were impowered to ſend perſons, even thoſe of their own nation, out of other countries, in order to their being puniſhed at Jeruſalem? This ſeems inconſiſtent with the laws of nations, and derogatory to the honour of ſtates in general. However, as Herod, who beheaded John the Baptiſt, was at that time in poſſeſſion of Damaſcus, greater liberty might then be granted them than afterwards; for the year following a war broke out between Herod and his father-in-law, Aretas king of Arabia, in which Herod being defeated, Damaſcus came into the hands of Aretas, who placed a governor in it; and therefore not long after, when Saul returned thither, and preached Chriſt in the ſynagogues, though the Jews deſigned to kill him, yet they did not attempt it without the governor's notice, who favoured them ſo far, as to place a garriſon at the gates, in order to apprehend him. 2 Cor. xi. 32. and this perhaps he might do, both to prevent diſturbances, and the better to reconcile them to the government of their new prince, as the Jews were always apt to be turbulent, when oppoſed in any thing relating to their religion. See Pearſon, Annal. Paulin. anno 37. Witſius's Life of Paul, cap. 2. ſect. 2. Ward's 40th Diſſert. Benſon, and on Iſaiah xvii. 1.

3 And as he journeyed he came near Damaſcus: and ſuddenly there ſhined round about him a light from heaven.

4 And he fell to the earth, and heard a voice ſaying unto him, Saul, Saul, why perſecuteſt thou me?

5 And he ſaid, Who art thou, Lord? And the Lord ſaid, I am Jeſus whom thou perſecuteſt. It is hard for thee to kick againſt the pricks.

6 And he trembling and aſtoniſhed, ſaid, Lord, what wilt thou have me to do? And the Lord ſaid unto him, Ariſe, and go into the city, and it ſhall be told thee what thou muſt do.

7 And the men which journeyed with him ſtood ſpeechleſs, hearing a voice, but ſeeing no man.

8 And Saul aroſe from the earth; and when his eyes were opened, he ſaw no man: but they led him by the hand, and brought him into Damaſcus.

9 And he was three days without ſight, and neither did eat nor drink.

10 And there was a certain diſciple at Damaſcus, named Ananias; and to him ſaid the Lord in a viſion, Ananias! And he ſaid, Behold, I am here, Lord.

11 And the Lord ſaid unto him, Ariſe, and go into the ſtreet which is called Straight, and enquire in the houſe of Judas, for one called Saul of Tarſus; for behold, he prayeth.

12 And hath ſeen in a viſion a man named Ananias coming in, and putting his hand on him, that he might receive his ſight.

13 Then Ananias anſwered, Lord, I have heard by many of this man, how much evil he hath done to thy ſaints at Jeruſalem.

14 And here he hath authority from the chief prieſts, to bind all that call on thy name.

15 But the Lord ſaid unto him, Go thy

Ver. 3. Ch. xxii. 6. xxvi. 12. 1 Cor. xv. 8.—V. 4. Matth. xxv. 40, &c.—V. 5. Ch. v. 39.—V. 6. Luke iii. 10. Ch. ii. 37. xvi. 30.—V. 7. Dan. x. 7. See ch. xxii. 9. xxvi. 13.—V. 10. Ch. xxii. 12.—V. 11. Ch. xxi. 39. xxii. 3.—V. 13. Ver. 1.—V. 14. Ver. 21. Ch. vii. 59. xxii. 16. 1 Cor. i. 2. 2 Tim. ii. 22.

Ver. 3—6. Suddenly there ſhined round about him a light, &c.] It was about noon that Saul with his company came nigh the city of Damaſcus; when ſuddenly there appeared the Shechinah, or the Glory of the Lord, far more bright and dazzling than the ſun in his meridian ſplendor: and this great light from heaven ſhone peculiarly round about them; upon which they all fell flat upon their faces, as the prophet Daniel had done upon like occaſions. Dan. viii. 17. x. 9. Saul, who had his head full of Jewiſh learning, was well acquainted with the notion of the Shechinah, and therefore he ſoon apprehended this to be the Excellent Glory. But, upon hearing a voice from it, which charged him with perſecution, he was greatly ſurprized, and inquired, "Who art thou, Lord, that I ſhould be charged with perſecuting thee?" The voice out of the midſt of the glory replied, "I am Jeſus the Nazarene, whom thou perſecuteſt; for the perſecution of my diſciples and members is the perſecution of me: It is hard for thee to kick againſt the goads,—κέντρα,"—a proverbial expreſſion of impotent rage, which hurts oneſelf and not thoſe againſt whom it is levelled. See chap. xxii. 8. Elſner ſuppoſes with De-Dieu, that this brightneſs was lightning, and the voice thunder; and is large in ſhewing how generally the heathens thought ſuch phœnomena attended the appearance of their deities. See Benſon, Patrick's Witneſſes, Hammond, and Lord Barrington's Miſcel. Sacr. Eſſay 3. p. 5.

Ver. 7. Stood ſpeechleſs, hearing a voice] Stood perfectly aſtoniſhed;—ſtood fixed and confounded. The original implies the attitude of a perſon who is ſo aſtoniſhed as not to be able to ſtir. In chap. xxii. 9. it is ſaid, that they did not hear the voice of him that ſpake; however this is eaſily reconciled (ſays Dr. Ward, diſſert. 40.) with the preſent paſſage, by the double ſenſe of the Greek word φωνὴ, which ſignifies either an human voice, or indiſtinct ſound of words, in general; or a diſtinct voice or ſpeech. In the paſſage before us it is to be underſtood in the general ſenſe, and in the other as denoting a diſtinct and articulate ſound of words, intelligible to the hearers: ſo that the companions of Saul heard a voice, but not in ſo clear a manner as to underſtand what was ſaid. And this ſeems to be further confirmed from hence, that we do not find that any of them were converted, which probably we ſhould have done, had it been deſigned for the conviction of any but Saul himſelf. So John xii. 29. thoſe preſent when the voice from heaven came to Chriſt, heard the ſound, ſo as to take it for thunder, without diſtinctly underſtanding what was ſaid. From St. Paul's taking ſuch particular notice that the voice ſpake unto him in the Hebrew tongue, chap. xxvi. 14. Dr. Benſon thinks we may gather that poſſibly his companions might be Helleniſtick Jews, who, though they heard the ſound of the words, yet did not underſtand their meaning,—for not hearing is frequently put in ſcripture for not underſtanding; ſee particularly 1 Cor. xiv. 2. in the original. And it does not appear, that Saul informed them who it was that made this glorious appearance unto him, or what the voice had ſaid: very likely he kept it ſecret from every one, at leaſt, till he had received further directions in Damaſcus. It is ſaid further, that they ſaw no man; the caſe was the ſame with the men who were with Daniel when he ſaw the viſion, Dan. x. 7. and the heathens, however they came by the notions, thought their deities often rendered themſelves viſible to one only in a company conſiſting of many. See Biſcoe's Lectures, p. 665. Elſner's Obſervat. vol. i. p. 403. Whitby and Beza.

Ver. 8. And when his eyes were opened, he ſaw no man] And though his eyes were open, he was incapable of diſcerning objects, and ſaw no one man of thoſe who ſtood near him; for his nerves were ſo affected with the glory of that light, which had ſhone from the body of Jeſus, that he had loſt the power of ſight. The divine glory had ſtruck his bodily eyes quite blind; as the eyes of his underſtanding had hitherto been in the midſt of the marvellous light of the Goſpel: See ch. xxii. 11. But the judicious reader, deſirous of entering fully into this wonderful tranſaction, will refer not to ſingle verſes only, but will diligently compare the whole account, as given by St. Paul himſelf.

Ver. 9. And he was three days without ſight] Scales grew over his eyes, not only to intimate to him the blindneſs of the ſtate he had been in, but to impreſs him alſo with the deeper ſenſe of the Almighty power of Chriſt, and to turn his thoughts inwards, while he was rendered leſs capable of converſing with external objects. This would alſo be a manifeſt token to others, of what had happened to him in his journey, and ought to have been very convincing and humbling to thoſe bigotted Jews, to whom, as the moſt probable aſſociates in the cruel work he intended, the ſanhedrim had directed thoſe letters, which Saul would no doubt deſtroy as ſoon as poſſible. It is very doubtful, and cannot at preſent be determined, whether the faſt of three days here mentioned was a voluntary one, undertaken by Saul, in conſequence of his deep humiliation, on account of his former perſecutions, or whether it was the reſult of that bodily diſorder, into which he was thrown by the viſion, and of the attachment of his mind to thoſe new and aſtoniſhing divine revelations, with which during this time he ſeems to have been favoured. See 2 Cor. xii. 1. Gal. i. 11. If we compare the prophet Daniel's being affected by ſome of his viſions, with this caſe of Saul, we ſhall find that they bear a great reſemblance; only Daniel had not been guilty of ſuch great crimes, and conſequently had not occaſion for ſuch bitter repentance as Saul had. See Grotius, Doddridge, Benſon, and the Reflections on this chapter.

Ver. 10. Ananias] As we read of Ananias only in this ſtory, it is difficult to determine who he was. Some ſuppoſe him to have been a native of Jeruſalem, and to have firſt planted the Goſpel at Damaſcus. Some of the ancients ſay, he was one of the ſeventy diſciples; others, from his being called a devout man according to the law, ch. xxii. 12. have thought he was a proſelyte of righteouſneſs: Perhaps he was a native of Damaſcus, converted at the firſt pentecoſt, when the Holy Spirit deſcended, and honoured him with this embaſſy to Saul, as a Chriſtian of the oldeſt ſtanding in that place; and ſo very probably an officer of the church there; which the commiſſion to baptize him may further intimate. We may remark, that God himſelf appoints a man to teach Saul, as an angel did in the caſe of Cornelius, ch. x. 5. in admirable condeſcenſion, dealing with us by men like ourſelves. See Calmet, Benſon, and L'Enfant.

Ver. 15. He is a choſen veſſel, &c.] Beza obſerves, that an inſtrument of building, agriculture, &c. is often in Greek called σκεῦος; and the word may very probably have that ſignification here. For he is my choſen inſtrument, to bear my name, &c. Polybius uſes this ſame word perſonally, in order to denote one extremely proper for a particular deſign. Ananias could not infer from theſe words of our Lord, that the Goſpel was to be preached to the Gentiles while they continued uncircumciſed, and ſo aliens from the commonwealth of Iſrael, &c. A way: for he is a choſen veſſel unto me, to bear my name before the Gentiles, and kings, and the children of Iſrael:

16 For I will ſhew him how great things he muſt ſuffer for my name's ſake.

17 And Ananias went his way, and entered into the houſe: and putting his hands on him, ſaid, Brother Saul, the Lord (even Jeſus that appeared unto thee in the way as thou cameſt,) hath ſent me, that thou mighteſt receive thy ſight, and be filled with the Holy Ghoſt.

18 And immediately there fell from his eyes as it had been ſcales: and he received ſight forthwith, and aroſe, and was baptized.

19 And when he had received meat, he was ſtrengthened. Then was Saul certain days with the diſciples which were at Damaſcus.

Ver. 15. Ch. xiii. 2. xxii. 21. Rom. i. 1. Gal. i. 15. Epheſ. iii. 8. 1 Tim. ii. 7. 2 Tim. i. 11. Rom. i. 5. Ch. xxv. 22. V. 16. Ch. xxi. 11. 2 Cor. xi. 23.—V. 17. Ch. xxii. 12. Ch. viii. 17. Ch. viii. 15.

myſtery, which St. Peter did not yet know; for Chriſt might have uſed theſe expreſſions, had St. Paul been brought before heathen kings for preaching him as the Meſſiah to the Jews and proſelytes. It is worthy obſervation, that the bleſſed Jeſus gave originally men of no learning or power for the propagators of his religion; and the divine wiſdom wonderfully contrived, that the very inability and ignorance of the propagators of Chriſtianity, ſhould be of the greateſt uſe to the advancement of his religion. When Jeſus had choſen theſe mean and weak inſtruments, he ſuffered them to continue in their national prejudices, concerning his character, the nature of his kingdom, and the extent of his juriſdiction; as the ſole means of keeping them attached to his ſervice, not only during the courſe of their attendance on his miniſtry, but for ſome time after his reſurrection, and the deſcent of the Holy Ghoſt upon them; that power, which was to lead them into all truth, but by juſt and equal ſteps. Let us ſee the uſe of this in the following circumſtance. From the order of the whole of God's diſpenſation to mankind, as laid down in the Scripture, we learn that the offer of the Goſpel was to be firſt fairly made to the Jews, and then afterwards to the Gentiles. Now when ſoon after the aſcenſion of our Lord, the church was forced by the perſecution of the ſynagogue to leave Judea, and to diſperſe itſelf throughout all the neighbouring regions; and the Apoſtles, on their retirement, being fully inſtructed in the deſign of God to call the Gentiles;—reſentment for their ill uſage in Judea, and the ſmall proſpect of better ſucceſs amongſt thoſe of the diſperſion, which they of Jeruſalem had prejudiced againſt the Goſpel, would naturally have diſpoſed them to turn immediately to the Gentiles; by which means God's purpoſe, without a ſupernatural force upon their minds, had been defeated, as ſo great a part of the Jews would not have had the Goſpel firſt preached to them: but now, puſhed on by this commodious prejudice—that the benefits properly belonged to the race of Abraham,—they directly addreſſed themſelves to their brethren of the diſperſion, where meeting with the ſame ill ſucceſs, their ſenſe of the deſperate condition of the houſe of Iſrael, would now begin to abate their prejudice; and then came the time to enlighten them in this matter, without putting too great a force upon their minds. Accordingly, this purpoſe was clearly revealed to Peter at Joppa.—Though ignorance in the propagator of a divine truth amongſt particulars may ſerve to theſe important ends; yet, when ſo great a number of Gentiles were converted to Chriſt, that it became neceſſary to form them into a church, that is, a religious ſociety,—which of courſe has its policy, as well as the civil; ſo hurtful was ignorance in its governing miniſters, that divers of them, though graced with many gifts of the Holy Ghoſt, cauſed ſuch diſorders in the aſſemblies, as required all the abilities of the learned Apoſtle to reform and regulate. And then it was, and for this purpoſe, that Paul, the proper Apoſtle of the Gentiles, was in an extraordinary manner called in, to conduct, by his learning and abilities, and with the aſſiſtance of his companion Luke, a learned man alſo, this part of God's purpoſe to its completion. The reſt were properly Apoſtles of the Jews, which people being a religious ſociety already formed, the converts from thence had a rule to go by, which ſerved them for their preſent occaſions, and therefore theſe needed no great talents of parts and learning,—nor had they any: But a new ſociety was to be formed among the Gentile converts, and this required an able conductor,—and ſuch an one they had in Paul. See the Div. Leg. vol. iii. b. 4. ſect 6. Grotius and Beza.

Ver. 16. I will ſhew him how many things he muſt ſuffer] If this intimates, as ſome very learned commentators ſeem to think, that Saul ſhould preſently have a revelation, and perhaps a viſionary repreſentation of all his ſufferings, it muſt appear a moſt heroic inſtance of courage and zeal, that with ſuch a view he ſhould offer himſelf to baptiſm, and go on ſo ſteadily in his miniſterial work. Never ſurely was there, on that ſuppoſition, a more lively image of that adorable Lord, who ſo reſolutely perſevered in his work, though he knew all things that were to come upon him. See Grotius, Doddridge, and Witſius's Life of Paul.

Ver. 17. Ananias went his way, &c.] Had St. Paul been an impoſtor, he could not have acted his part but in confederacy. He was to be inſtructed by one at Damaſcus; ver. 6. that inſtructor therefore muſt have been his accomplice, though they appeared to be abſolute ſtrangers to each other, and though he was a man of an excellent character, and ſo was very unlikely to have engaged in ſuch a buſineſs. Notwithſtanding theſe improbabilities, this man muſt have been his confident and accomplice in carrying on this fraud, and the whole matter muſt have been previouſly agreed on between them. But here this objection occurs:—How could this man venture to act ſo dangerous a part, without the conſent of the other diſciples, eſpecially of the Apoſtles? Or by what means could he obtain their conſent? And how abſurdly did they contrive their buſineſs, to make the converſion of Saul the effect of a miracle, which all thoſe who were with him muſt certify did never happen?—How much eaſier would it have been to have made him be preſent at ſome pretended miracle wrought by the diſciples, or by Ananias himſelf, when none were able to diſcover the fraud, and then have imputed his converſion to that, or to the arguments uſed by ſome of his priſoners, whom he might have diſcourſed with and queſtioned about their faith, and the grounds of it, in order to colour his intended converſion? Beſides, is it not ſtrange, if the ſtory had been an impoſture, and Ananias had been joined with Saul in carrying it on, that, after their meeting at Damaſcus, we ſhould never hear of their conſorting together, or acting in concert, or that the former drew any benefit from the friendſhip of the latter, when he became ſo conſiderable among the Chriſtians?—Did Ananias engage and continue in ſuch a dangerous fraud without any hope or deſire of private advantage? Or was it ſafe for Saul to ſhake him off, and riſque his reſentment?—We will ſuppoſe then, that, in order to account for this viſion without a miracle, that as Saul and his company were journeying to Damaſcus, an extraordinary meteor did really appear, which caſt a great light, at which they being affrighted, fell to the ground; ſee ch. xxvi. 14. this might be poſſible, and fear grounded on ignorance of ſuch a phænomenon, might make them imagine it to be a viſion from God; nay, even the voice or ſound they heard in the air might be an exploſion attending this meteor;—or, at leaſt, there are thoſe who would rather recur to ſuch a ſuppoſition as this, however incredible, than acknowledge the miracle; but how will this account for the diſtinct words heard by Saul, to which he made anſwer?—How will it account for what followed when he came to Damaſcus, agreeable to the ſenſe of thoſe words which he heard?—How came Ananias to go to him there, and ſay, "He was choſen by God to know his will, &c. ch. xxii. 14—xxvi. 16? Or why did he propoſe to him to be baptized? What connection was there between the Meteor which Saul had ſeen, and thoſe words of Ananias?—Will it be ſaid, that Ananias was ſkilful enough to take advantage of the fright he was in at the appearance, in order to make him a Chriſtean? But could Ananias inſpire him with the viſion, in which he ſaw him before he came, ver. 12? If that viſion was the effect of imagination, how came it to be verified ſo exactly in fact?—But, allowing that he dreamed by chance of Ananias's coming, and that Ananias came by chance too; or, if you pleaſe, that, having heard of his dream, he came to take advantage of that, as well as of the meteor which Saul had ſeen; will this get over the difficulty? Certainly no; for there was more to be done. Saul was ſtruck blind, and had been ſo for three days. Now, had this blindneſs been natural, from the effects of the meteor or lightning upon him, it would not have been poſſible for Ananias to heal it, as we find that he did, merely by putting his hands upon him, and ſpeaking a few words.—This undoubtedly ſurpaſſed the power of nature; and if it was a miracle, it proves the other to have been a miracle too, and a miracle done by the ſame Jeſus Chriſt. See that excellent tract of lord Lyttelton on the Converſion of St. Paul, which does no leſs honour to the pen than to the rank of the noble writer.

Ver. 18. There fell from his eyes as it had been ſcales] Perhaps the outward coat of his eyes might be ſcorched with the lightning, and what fell from them might have ſome reſemblance to the ſmall ſcales of fiſhes. His being thus reſtored to ſight was, however, a moſt lively emblem of the veil's being done away from his heart. Immediately Saul roſe up, and was baptized, and, as appears by the event, was then alſo filled with the Holy Spirit; i. e. as that phraſe commonly ſignifies, the Holy Spirit was poured down upon him immediately from heaven, and not conveyed by the laying on of the hands of any man; and very probably that effuſion upon Saul was accompanied with a glory, cloven tongues, or pointed flames, like as of fire, which was the external ſymbol when the Spirit was given in the moſt honourable manner, as well as in the higheſt meaſure; and if that ſymbol attended his receiving the Holy Spirit, it was proper that his eyes ſhould be firſt opened, that he himſelf might ſee the glory, and ſo be convinced both by external ſigns and internal gifts, that he who had formerly been a perſecutor, was now graciouſly accepted as a Chriſtian and a prophet. See particularly Dr. Benſon, vol. i. p. 177, &c.

20 And ſtraightway he preached Chriſt in the ſynagogues, that he is the Son of God.

21 But all that heard him were amazed, and ſaid, Is not this he that deſtroyed them which called on this name in Jeruſalem, and came hither for that intent, that he might bring them bound unto the chief prieſts?

22 But Saul increaſed the more in ſtrength, and confounded the Jews which dwelt at Damaſcus, proving that this is very Chriſt.

23 And after that many days were fulfilled, the Jews took counſel to kill him.

24 But their laying wait was known of Saul. And they watched the gates day and night to kill him.

25 Then the diſciples took him by night, and let him down by the wall in a baſket.

26 And when Saul was come to Jeruſalem, he aſſayed to join himſelf to the diſciples: but they were all afraid of him, and believed not that he was a diſciple.

27 But Barnabas took him, and brought him to the apoſtles, and declared unto them how he had ſeen the Lord in the way, and that he had ſpoken to him, and how he had

Ver. 20. Ch. viii. 37.—V. 24. 2 Cor. xi. 32.—V. 25. Joſh. ii. 15. 1 Sam. xix. 12.—V. 26. Ch. xxii. 17.—V. 27. Ch. iv. 36.

Ver. 20. He preached Chriſt, &c.] He preached in the ſynagogues, maintaining that Jeſus is the Son of God. So the Vulg. and ſeveral MSS. The Jews knew that Chriſt, or the Meſſiah, is the Son of God. See Heylin, Bengelius, and Wetſtein.

Ver. 21. And came hither for that intent] And came hither on purpoſe to carry them priſoners to the high-prieſts. See 1 Sam. x. 11, 12. Heylin.

Ver. 22. Proving that this is very Chriſt] Evincing that he [Jeſus] is the Chriſt. Heylin and Doddridge. As Saul had blaſphemed Chriſt, and perſecuted the Chriſtians through ignorance, and whilſt he really diſbelieved the Goſpel, he more eaſily obtained mercy at the hands of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt. But, though our Lord forgave him, he could hardly forgive himſelf, and thought he could not ſufficiently teſtify his love and affection, without the greateſt ſtudy and diligence to convert others; and indeed, by ſhewing mercy to him, who had been, as he calleth himſelf, a blaſphemer and a perſecutor, our Lord gave a moſt remarkable inſtance of his long-ſuffering and abundant mercy. In ſhewing mercy to him, who was the firſt that, from a blaſphemer and perſecutor, became a Chriſtian, the bleſſed Jeſus afforded a moſt ſignal pattern unto them who ſhould afterwards believe on him to eternal life, 1 Tim. i. 15, 16. For what could be a greater encouragement to others to hope for mercy, upon their repentance and embracing the Goſpel? To the Jews,—for inſtance, who had procured the murder of the Meſſiah, the Lord of life and glory. To the Samaritans,—who had formerly been ſo odious to the Jews, and corruptors of the Old Teſtament. To the devout Gentiles,—with whom the Jews would not eat, nor freely converſe, as long as they remained uncircumciſed. And, above all, to the idolatrous Gentiles, who had a long time lived without the true God in the world, and as aliens to his church and covenant; and to whom more particularly this Saul, this ſingular monument of mercy, was in due time to be an Apoſtle. See Benſon.

Ver. 23. And after—many days] After an interval of about three years; during which period Saul went into Arabia, and preached the Goſpel there. See Gal. i. 17, 18. Though St. Luke has not given us a particular account of this part of Saul's travels, yet it appears ſufficiently from the expreſſion before us, that he was not ignorant of it. Saul himſelf hath led us to conclude, that the Jews at Damaſcus did not plot his death till after he returned thither from Arabia, juſt before he went up to Jeruſalem. Poſſibly the reaſon why St. Luke ſo tranſciently paſſed over this prophetic journey of Saul was, becauſe it was the moſt private and inconſiderable; or rather, becauſe he thought he had other inſtances ſufficient to lay before his reader, of Saul's promoting Chriſtianity as a ſuperior prophet. Beſides, it is evident that he haſtened to the hiſtory of Saul's apoſtleſhip, which was much more material, and of which he deſigned to treat more largely. As Saul's abode at Damaſcus, both upon his converſion, and at his return from Arabia, appears to have been very ſhort, he muſt, according to his own account, have ſpent almoſt three years in Arabia. His going ſo ſoon from Damaſcus, and preaching the Goſpel ſo long in a remote country, where there were no Chriſtians before his coming, is a proof, as he himſelf very juſtly alledges, that he received not the knowledge of the Goſpel doctrine from any other of the Apoſtles or Chriſtians, but immediately from our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, or by the illumination of the Spirit; and as none but Jews had hitherto been accepted into the Chriſtian church, it is reaſonable to ſuppoſe that Saul preached in Arabia to none but Jews only. Returning from Arabia, he came again to Damaſcus, and going into one of the ſynagogues there, he preached the Chriſtian doctrine to the Jews, as he had done before. But they not being content with barely rejecting his doctrine, conſulted how they might take away his life; for they looked upon him as a grand apoſtate, whoſe converſion greatly ſtrengthened the intereſts of Chriſtianity. But a ſtronger proof can ſcarce be produced of the malignity of theſe people; that when ſo great a perſecutor was in ſo wonderful a manner converted to Chriſtianity, they ſhould be ſo far from following his example, as to attempt his life. See Doddridge, and Benſon.

Ver. 24, 25. And they watched the gates, &c.] This ſhews there were great numbers engaged in this bloody deſign; for Damaſcus was a large city, and had many gates. Damaſcus now belonged to Aretas, king of Arabia, (ſee on ver. 2.) who governed it by an Ethnarch, or deputy governor; comp. 2 Cor. xi. 32, 33. After Aretas had broken with his ſon-in-law Herod, very probably the Jews in general would have leſs intereſt in his dominions, and rather be watched and ſuſpected by him. This might be the reaſon, perhaps, why they could not apprehend Saul in the ſynagogue, as he himſelf thought to have apprehended the Chriſtians three years before; ſee ver. 2. However, though the Jews could not by their own power compaſs their deſign, nor would Aretas himſelf, perhaps, have granted them ſuch a favour, yet they made intereſt with his governor, that the garriſon might have orders to apprehend Saul, and deliver him into their hands. Poſſibly the Jews might incenſe the governor againſt him, by pretending that though they were loyal ſubjects, Saul was a ſpy for Herod, or for the Romans, and an enemy to the Arabians, and ſo might draw him into their quarrel: for what will not perſecuting and malicious men ſay or do, in the current of their blind zeal, and when hotly engaged to oppoſe truth and goodneſs? However, their zeal and rage was ineffectual; for Saul, having knowledge of their deſigns, was let down by the Chriſtians, as ſoon as they could do it with ſafety, by night, in a large baſket, ſuſpended to a rope, through the window of a houſe which joined to the walls of the city. See Benſon, Miſcell. Sacr. vol. i. and Joſephus's Antiq. l. xiv. c. 2.

Ver. 26, 27. And when Saul was come to Jeruſalem] Upon his eſcaping from Damaſcus, Saul went up to Jeruſalem, where he had never been ſince his converſion to Chriſtianity; and thither he went chiefly to viſit the great Apoſtle of the circumciſion, Gal. i. 18. who, as ſome of the Chriſtians had informed him, then reſided at that city. He had very probably heard much of St. Peter, which made him long for the ſight and acquaintance of one, ſo eminent in the Chriſtian church:

> Great ſouls by inſtinct to each other turn,
> Demand alliance, and in friendſhip burn.

And indeed there was ſomething ſimilar in their caſe, for the one had been recovered to the dignity of one of the firſt miniſters of the circumciſion, after a threefold denial of his Lord and Maſter; the other, from a perſecutor of the Chriſtians, was already converted, and made an eminent prophet; and was further deſigned for the apoſtolate of the Gentile world. But, though Saul went as a friend, to viſit St. Peter and the Chriſtian church, yet as he had been ſo zealous and diſtinguiſhed a perſecutor, and had been ſince his converſion chiefly in Arabia-deſerta, a country with which Jeruſalem had but little correſpondence, the Chriſtians were ſtill afraid of him. They knew how he had heretofore perſecuted their brethren in Jeruſalem, and gone to Damaſcus in purſuit of them; but they very probably had received no certain intelligence of his converſion. Though it may ſeem ſtrange that ſo remarkable an event ſhould have been ſo long hid from them, yet ſome very probable reaſons have been urged why they had not a full and ſatisfactory account of the affair; ſuch as, 1. The war between Herod and Aretas, which might greatly interrupt the communication between Jeruſalem and Damaſcus. 2. As the Chriſtians in Judea were under a violent perſecution, thoſe of Damaſcus might be afraid of going to Jeruſalem, and the Chriſtians of Jeruſalem might not be able to carry on their correſpondence ſo regularly with the Chriſtians at a diſtance; beſides, it ſhould be remembered, that there were not then ſuch conveniences of correſpondence as now. 3. Perhaps the perſecuting Jews, to prevent the argument which might be drawn from Saul's converſion, might affect to give themſelves myſterious airs, as if he was only acting a concerted part; ſure to find their account in ſuch a pretence, by mortifying the diſciples, and bringing Saul into ſuſpicion.—But whatever was the cauſe, the Chriſtians at Jeruſalem ſtill doubted his integrity, till Barnabas convinced them to the contrary. Some affirm that Barnabas had been his old acquaintance, and had ſat with him at the feet of Gamaliel; and therefore might know him to be a man of too much veracity to act an inſincere part; but this account is to be queſtioned. Barnabas, however, was ſome way or other fully ſatisfied of the truth and reality of Saul's converſion; he therefore, with preached boldly at Damaſcus in the name of Jeſus.

28 And he was with them coming in, and going out at Jeruſalem.

29 And he ſpake boldly in the name of the Lord Jeſus, and diſputed againſt the Grecians: but they went about to ſlay him.

30 Which when the brethren knew, they brought him down to Ceſarea, and ſent him forth to Tarſus.

31 Then had the churches reſt throughout all Judea, and Galilee, and Samaria, and were edified; and walking in the fear of the Lord, and in the comfort of the Holy Ghoſt, were multiplied.

32 And it came to paſs, as Peter paſſed throughout all quarters, he came down alſo to the ſaints which dwelt at Lydda.

33 And there he found a certain man named Eneas, which had kept his bed eight years, and was ſick of the palſy.

34 And Peter ſaid unto him, Eneas, Jeſus Chriſt maketh thee whole: ariſe, and make thy bed. And he aroſe immediately.

35 And all that dwelt at Lydda, and Saron, ſaw him, and turned to the Lord.

36 Now there was at Joppa a certain diſciple named Tabitha, which by interpretation is called Dorcas: this woman was full of good works, and alm-deeds which ſhe did.

Ver. 28. Gal. i. 18.—V. 29. Ch. vi. 1.—V. 32. Ch. viii. 14.—V. 35. 1 Chron. v. 16.—V. 36. Or, Doe, or Roe. Titus iii. 8.

with great propriety, introduced him to the Apoſtles, namely, to St. Peter, who went with St. John to Samaria, and was now returned; and to St. James, the kinſman of our Lord, Gal. i. 18, 19. For theſe were the only Apoſtles whom Saul now ſaw at Jeruſalem: the reſt had diſperſed themſelves to plant or water the Chriſtian religion in different places, and eſpecially to confirm and eſtabliſh ſuch converts as the Chriſtians had made in their ſeveral diſperſions, by the laying on of their hands, and imparting unto them the gift of the Holy Spirit. See Benſon, Beza, and Reading's life of Chriſt, p. 565.

Ver. 29. Againſt the Grecians] The Helleniſts; or thoſe foreign Jews who uſed the Greek language, and came out of other parts to worſhip at Jeruſalem; Saul being earneſtly deſirous that they might carry along with them the knowledge of Chriſt into their own lands. See Beza, and the note on ch. vi. 1.

Ver. 30. To Cæſarea] This muſt have been Cæſarea Philippi, near the borders of Syria, as it may be collected from St. Paul's own words, that he went by land through the regions of Syria and Cilicia; ſee Gal. i. 21. otherwiſe he might eaſily have gone from the celebrated Cæſarea in the Mediterranean ſea, by ſhip to Tarſus, his own native city, whither the brethren ſent him, no doubt, that he might find protection among his friends and relations, and perhaps plant the goſpel amongſt them. They poſſibly might not have heard of his former bigottry againſt the Chriſtians; or as the ſpiritual harveſt of the Jews was not yet gathered in at Tarſus, as it had been ſome time ago at Jeruſalem, there were hopes of better treatment and more ſucceſs there. See on chap. viii. 40.

Ver. 31. Then had the churches reſt] This reſt is by no means to be aſcribed merely or chiefly to Saul's converſion, who though a great zealot, was but a young man of no immediate or ſupreme authority, and whoſe perſonal danger proves the perſecution in ſome meaſure to have been continued at leaſt three years after it. The period here ſpoken of, appears to be that which commenced at or quickly after Saul's ſetting out for Cilicia; and the beſt commentators ſeem agreed, that this repoſe of the Chriſtians was occaſioned by the general alarm which was given to the Jews, then the ſole perſecutors of the Chriſtians, about A. D. 40. when Petronius, by the order of Caligula, incenſed by ſome affront ſaid to have been offered him by the Alexandrian Jews, attempted to bring the ſtatue of that emperor among them, and to ſet it up in the holy of holies; an horrid profanation, which the whole people deprecated with the greateſt concern in the moſt ſolicitous and affectionate manner, and by which they were ſo much taken up, that they had neither the heart nor the leiſure to look after or perſecute the Chriſtians. How long this reſt continued, we do not certainly know; probably, till Herod interrupted it, chap. xii. ver. 1. Dr. Doddridge, following Beza's conſtruction of this intricate verſe, renders it as follows, Then the churches through all Judæa, and Galilee, and Samaria, being edified, had reſt. And walking in the fear of the Lord, and the conſolation of the holy Spirit, were multiplied. Dr. Heylin reads it, At that time the churches, &c. had peace; being edified, and advancing in the fear of the Lord; and they became more numerous by the aſſiſtance of the Holy Ghoſt. Inſtead of the churches, Dr. Waterland reads the church, after ſeveral MSS. The word οἰκοδομούμεναι, edified, is figurative; properly a term of architecture, ſignifying the erecting or conſtructing the whole ſuperſtructure upon a foundation; in this place, it muſt ſignify by analogy, that the churches were properly inſtructed in all the fundamental doctrines of the Goſpel. See Hammond, Joſeph. Jewiſh War, b. ii. chap. 10. Lardner's Credib. b. i. chap. 2. and Benſon's Hiſt. b. i. chap. 9. ſect. 3. where he has given a large and uſeful account of the ſtate of the Jews at this time.

Ver. 32. And it came to paſs, &c.] And as Peter was making a general viſitation; Heylin. Now it came to paſs that Peter making a progreſs, &c. As St. Peter had gone formerly through the metropolis and other towns of Samaria, to plant or water Chriſtianity, ſo during this peaceful interval, he reviſited the ſeveral churches in Judæa and Galilee, to rectify their diſorders, to inſtruct them further, and to impart the Holy Spirit to the new converts. Among other places, he went down to Lod or Lydda, a town of Phœnicia ſituated in the tribe of Ephraim, lying between Azotus and Cæſarea. It was afterwards called Dioſpolis, and was about one day's journey diſtance from Jeruſalem. There were ſeveral celebrated Jewiſh ſchools there, and the great ſanhedrim ſometimes met near it. Saron or Sharon, which is connected with it, ver. 35. was not a town, but a large, fruitful, and well-inhabited valley, which lay near Lydda, and is ſaid to have extended from mount Tabor to the Lake of Tiberius, and from Cæſarea to Joppa. Compare 1 Chron. xxvii. 29. Iſa. xxxiii. 9. xxxv. 2. lxv. 10.

Ver. 34. Eneas, Jeſus Chriſt maketh thee whole] It is worth our while to obſerve the great difference there is between the manner in which this miracle is wrought by Peter, and that in which Chriſt performed his works of divine power and goodneſs. The different characters of the ſervant and the ſon, the creature and the God, are every where apparent. In working this miracle, St. Peter however ſeems to have imitated our Lord, partly as to the manner of expreſſion, but principally, as to the ſign and evidence of the perfection of the miracle; (Mark ii. 9. John v. 8.) only with this remarkable difference and decorum, namely, that the two men whom our Lord cured, were not at their own home, and therefore they were ordered to take up their bed, or the couch on which they had lain, and walk away. But Eneas, whom St. Peter cured, was at home, and kept his bed there, and therefore he was ordered to ariſe, and make his bed; ςρῶσον σεαυτῷ, ſhake up and ſmooth your own bed, as an evidence of the certainty and perfection of your cure. We may obſerve, that no faith on the part of the perſon to be healed was required, and the like is obſervable in many other caſes, where perſons perhaps ignorant of Chriſt, were ſurprized with an unexpected cure. But were perſons petitioned themſelves for a cure, a declaration of their faith was often required, that none might be encouraged to try experiments out of curioſity, in a manner which would have been very indecent, and have tended to many bad conſequences. See Lightfoot, Benſon, De Dieu, and Clarius.

Ver. 36. At Joppa] Another city of Phœnicia, lying upon the Mediterranean, and the neareſt maritime town to Jeruſalem, more than a day's journey diſtant from it,—about 40 miles, though ſome have ſaid that Jeruſalem might be ſeen from thence. We find it mentioned in the Old Teſtament by the name of Japho, as belonging to the tribe of Dan, Joſh. xix. 46. It was the place to which the materials for building Solomon's temple were brought in floats by ſea, and carried from thence by land to Jeruſalem; 2 Chron. ii. 16. Jonah took ſhip from hence for Tarſhiſh; Jon. i. 3. and as it lay between Azotus and Cæſarea, it was probably one of the cities where Philip preached the Goſpel in his progreſs, chap. viii. 40. Simon, ſon of Matthias and brother to Judas Maccabeus, repaired and fortified Joppa, and made it a ſeaport to Jeruſalem and all Judea, it being the fitteſt place on all that coaſt, for the carrying on of their trade to the iſles and countries in the Mediterranean; for which purpoſe it ſerved them many ages after the Maccabees, as it ſtill ſerveth the inhabitants of that country to this very day, being called by the ſame name, though vulgar pronunciation hath changed it to Jaffa. It was at Jabneh or Jamnia nigh this place, that the great ſanhedrim ſometimes ſat; and yet for all their conſultations, authority, and learning, Chriſtianity there took root and flouriſhed. Among the Chriſtians at Joppa, there was a woman, whoſe Hebrew name was Tabitha, which in Greek is Dorcas, that is, a roe or wild goat; for it was common among the heathens to call men or women by the names of ſome inferior animal. Thus Rachel ſignifies a ſheep, and Eglah a calf. Dr. Shaw, in the Supplement to his Travels, p. 74. takes Δορκὰς to be the Gazel or Antelope, which Ariſtotle deſcribes to be the ſmalleſt of the horned animals, being even ſmaller than the roe. The Δορκὰς is deſcribed to have fine eyes, and in the eaſtern countries, thoſe of the Gazel are ſo to a proverb. Thus the damſel whoſe name was Tabitha, which is by interpretation Dorcas, might be ſo called from this particular feature and circumſtance. See Deut. xii. 15. 22. 2 Sam. ii. 18. Cantic. ii. 9. iv. 5, &c.

37 And it came to paſs in thoſe days, that ſhe was ſick, and died: whom when they had waſhed, they laid her in an upper chamber.

38 And foraſmuch as Lydda was nigh to Joppa, and the diſciples had heard that Peter was there, they ſent unto him two men, deſiring him that he would not delay to come to them.

39 Then Peter aroſe, and went with them. When he was come, they brought him into the upper chamber: and all the widows ſtood by him weeping, and ſhewing the coats and garments which Dorcas made while ſhe was with them.

40 But Peter put them all forth, and kneeled down and prayed; and turning him to the body, ſaid, Tabitha, ariſe. And ſhe opened her eyes: and when ſhe ſaw Peter, ſhe ſat up.

41 And he gave her his hand, and lifted her up; and when he had called the ſaints and widows, he preſented her alive.

42 And it was known throughout all Joppa; and many believed in the Lord.

43 And it came to paſs, that he tarried

Ver. 37. Ch. i. 13.—V. 38. Or, be grieved.—V. 40. Ch. vii. 60.

Ver. 37. Whom when they had waſhed] This cuſtom prevailed both amongſt the Hebrews, Greeks, and Latins, and is ſtill in uſe amongſt us. See Mark xiv. 8. John xii. 7. xix. 38—40.

Ver. 38. Deſiring him that he would not delay, &c.] We can hardly imagine they urged his coming merely to comfort them under this loſs: but if they had any view to what followed, it was a remarkable inſtance of faith, as it does not appear that the apoſtles before this had raiſed any one from the dead. Were we to have been judges, perhaps we ſhould have thought it better that Stephen ſhould have been raiſed than Dorcas, but it is our happineſs and duty to ſubmit our reaſonings on what we think fitteſt and beſt, to the infinitely-wiſer determinations of Providence.

Ver. 39. Shewing the coats and garments, &c.] "Shewing ſome of the under and upper garments, which ſhe, with her own hands had made, to clothe the naked and relieve the poor." The Vulgate reads, which ſhe had made for them.

Ver. 40. But Peter put them all forth] Herein the ſervant followed not only the path, but the very ſteps of his Lord, in diſmiſſing all witneſſes, that nothing might look like vain-glory, that nothing might interrupt the favour of that addreſs which he was to pour out before God. Firſt, he bends his knees in prayer to the Lord of Life, and knowing certainly by a divine impulſe that his prayer was heard, he directs his voice with a divine efficacy to the dead: but who can fully conceive the ſurprize of Dorcas, when thus called back again to life, or of her pious friends, when they ſaw her alive; for their own ſake, and the ſake of the indigent and diſtreſſed, there was cauſe of rejoicing, and much more in the view of ſuch a confirmation given to the Goſpel, and ſuch a token of Chriſt's preſence with his ſervants. Yet to herſelf it muſt have been matter of reſignation and ſubmiſſion, rather than exultation, that ſhe was called back to theſe ſcenes of vanity, which ſurely would have been ſcarce tolerable, had not a veil of oblivion been drawn over thoſe glories which her ſeparate ſpirit enjoyed. But we pleaſe ourſelves with the charitable and reaſonable hope, that the remainder of her days were yet more zealouſly and vigorouſly ſpent in the ſervice of her Saviour and her God; yielding herſelf to him as in a double ſenſe alive from the dead. Thus would a richer treaſure be laid up for her in heaven, and ſhe would afterwards return to a far more exceeding weight of glory, than that from which ſo aſtoniſhing a Providence had for a ſhort interval recalled her. See Doddridge and Benſon.

Ver. 42, 43. And it was known throughout all Joppa] The report of this miracle ſwiftly ſpread throughout all Joppa: upon which Simon the ſon of Jonas, became more famous there, than Jonas himſelf had been, for the ancient prophet Jonas, after he had taken ſhip at Joppa, was raiſed only from the belly of the fiſh; but Simon the ſon of Jonas, raiſed the pious and charitable Tabitha from the dead, and thereby promoted a religion of greater and more extenſive uſefulneſs, than even the beneficent work of reducing Nineveh to repentance. After this St. Peter tarried ſeveral days at Joppa, lodging in the houſe of one Simon a tanner or currier, as ſome render βυρσεῖ. His buſineſs perhaps is mentioned, that it might appear the apoſtle was not elevated by the dignity of the late miracle, above mean perſons and things.

Thus ends the firſt grand period of the hiſtory of the firſt planting the Chriſtian religion, in which the Goſpel was preached to the Jews only. This period began at the day of pentecoſt, ch. ii. and is computed to have laſted till the year of Chriſt 41. that is, about the ſpace of eight years. Till ſuch of the Jews as would embrace Chriſtinanity were brought in, eſpecially the Jews in Paleſtine, God, in his great wiſdom and goodneſs, would not ſuffer the Goſpel to be offered to one Gentile; but when ſuch great numbers were gathered in, and the Apoſtles had gone a ſecond time to viſit and ſettle the churches; when Chriſtianity had taken root among them, and they were ſufficiently inſtructed and eſtabliſhed; and when, at the ſame time, the providence of God had ſo ordered things, that the perſecution was ceaſed, then, but not till then, the ſame divine wiſdom and goodneſs prepared the way for the ſpreading of the Goſpel among the devout Gentiles. The more particular account whereof will be read in the following chapter. See Benſon.

REFLECTIONS ON CHAP. IX.

The converſion and Apoſtleſhip of St. Paul is in itſelf a full and undeniable proof of the truth of the Chriſtian religion, and of conſequence our faith in it, and its divine author is well and wiſely founded.

If the facts laid before us in the preſent chapter, and the various other circumſtances related of him and by him in other parts of the ſacred writings are true, the religion of Chriſt muſt alſo be true, whoſe divine author ſo wonderfully converted him, and afterwards enabled him to work ſo many miracles, and to plant his religion in ſo many places: And that theſe facts are true, according to the relation made of them by St. Luke in the Acts, and by St. Paul in his own Epiſtles, will clearly follow from hence, namely, that either they are true, or that St. Luke and St. Paul related them with an intent to deceive, or that they were themſelves deceived, which is equally incredible. The facts recorded of St. Paul are true, or elſe he was either an impoſtor, or an enthuſiaſt. Now it ſhall be the buſineſs of the following reflections to ſhew, that St. Paul cannot be ſuppoſed either to have ſaid what he did with an intent to deceive others, or that it was poſſible for him to have been deceived himſelf, and conſequently that what is related of and by him is true.

1. St. Paul could not have been an impoſtor, or have ſaid what he did, with an intent to deceive others; for if he had done ſo, he muſt have had ſome reaſon for ſuch a conduct. But it is impoſſible to ſhew any rational motives which he could have to undertake ſuch an impoſture; and it is as eaſy to ſhew, that he could never have carried it on with any ſucceſs by the means which we know he uſed.

Now for the firſt, the only inducement to ſuch an impoſture, muſt have been one of theſe two, either the hope of advancing himſelf by it in his temporal intereſt, or the gratification of ſome of his paſſions under the authority of it, and by the means it afforded. But a review of his life abundantly ſhews us, that ſo far from taking a method to advance his temporal intereſt, he took the only method to deſtroy it; leaving the party with whom was wealth, power, and credit, and joining himſelf to thoſe who had neither wordly power or eſteem, and whoſe principles led them to give up all earthly bleſſings. His ſingular humility, purity, and labour as undeniably ſhew, that the gratification of no other paſſion under the authority of the Goſpel could be the motive of his actions; and the treatment he met with, and the ſufferings he endured, for a long courſe of years, and in propagating a faith, the rewards of which were confined to another world, beyond all controverſy, demonſtrates, that he could be actuated by no ſpirit of impoſture, but by that divine hope only which led him to look beyond the grave for the fruition of his toils.

But as no rational motive can be aſſigned for St. Paul's conduct, ſuppoſing him an impoſtor, ſo was there no poſſibility that he could ever have met with any ſucceſs, had he really been ſuch: for he had no ſword or temporal power, (like Mahomet) no intereſt or friends, or money to aſſiſt him in the undertaking. The weapons of his warfare were not carnal; only the fooliſhneſs of preaching; and yet with this, by the power of God, he made his way againſt all the oppoſition of his own country, as well as of all the Gentile world.

Again, had he been an impoſtor, all the Apoſtles muſt have been the ſame, and he muſt have conferred with them to have been duly inſtructed in his ſtory; the great difficulty, or rather the impoſſibility of which, will appear to every one, who conſiders the ſituation he was in before his converſion, and the part he acted through life after it.

And as thus, if he had been an impoſtor, it was impoſſible he could have carried on his fraud in Judea; ſo was it much more impoſſible he could have had any ſucceſs in the Gentile world. At Rome, Corinth, Athens, Epheſus, in all which places he preached, he had obſtacles to remove, the moſt inſurmountable by human power, and which, without the divine aſſiſtance, we may as well ſuppoſe he could have removed, as that he could have made a world; he had the policy and power of the civil magiſtrates to combat; for it is well known, that in all heathen countries the eſtabliſhed religion was interwoven with the civil conſtitution. He had the intereſt, credit, and craft of the prieſts, the prejudices and paſſions of the people, and, which perhaps was a greater obſtacle than all, the wiſdom and the pride of the philoſophers, to obviate and ſubdue: And yet, ſpite of all theſe, he eſtabliſhed churches in every place; and by the power of God, he ſpread the Goſpel of Chriſt and him crucified in every realm through which he travelled. The event therefore ſufficiently proves that God was with him, and that his miſſion was divine.

many days in Joppa, with one Simon a tanner.

CHAP. X.

Cornelius a devout man, being commanded by an angel, ſendeth for Peter: who by a viſion, is taught not to deſpiſe the Gentiles. As he preacheth Chriſt to Cornelius and his company, the Holy Ghoſt falleth on them, and they are baptized.

THERE was a certain man in Cæſarea, called Cornelius, a centurion of the band called the Italian band,

2 A devout man, and one that feared God with all his houſe, which gave much alms to the people, and prayed to God alway:

3 He ſaw in a viſion evidently, about the ninth hour of the day, an angel of God coming in to him, and ſaying unto him, Cornelius.

4 And when he looked on him, he was afraid, and ſaid, What is it, Lord? And he ſaid unto him, Thy prayers and thine alms are come up for a memorial before God.

Ver. 43. Ch. x. 6.——V. 2. Ch. xxii. 12.

2. As a proof that St. Paul was not himſelf deceived, either by his own warmth of fancy, or by the cunning of others, we need only conſider briefly the circumſtances of his converſion, and the conſequences attending it.

It is well known that the power of imagination, in an enthuſiaſtical mind, always acts in conformity to the opinions imprinted upon it at the time of its working. Now nothing can be more certain, than that when St. Paul ſet out for Damaſcus, (ver. 3.) his mind was ſtrongly poſſeſſed againſt Chriſt and his followers. If in ſuch a diſpoſition of mind an enthuſiaſtical man had imagined he ſaw a viſion from heaven denouncing the anger of God againſt the Chriſtians, and commanding him to perſecute them without mercy, it might be accounted for by the natural power of enthuſiaſm. But that in the very inſtant of his being engaged in the fierceſt and hotteſt perſecution againſt them,—no circumſtance having happened to change his opinions, or alter the bent of his diſpoſition, but rather to foment and inflame it,—that he ſhould at once imagine himſelf to be called by an heavenly viſion to be an Apoſtle of that Jeſus whom he preſecuted, is in itſelf wholly incredible; is ſo far from being a natural or probable effect of enthuſiaſm, that juſt the contrary effect muſt have been produced by ſuch a cauſe.

3. This is ſo clear a propoſition, that the whole argument might be ſafely reſted upon it. But ſtill further, to ſhew that this viſion could not be a phantom of St. Paul's own creating, we muſt remember, that he was not alone when he ſaw it. There were many others in company, whoſe minds were no better diſpoſed than his to the Chriſtian faith. Could it then be poſſible that the imaginations of all thoſe men ſhould at the ſame time be ſo ſtrongly infatuated, as to make them believe, that they ſaw a great light ſhining about them, above the brightneſs of the ſun at noon-day, and heard the ſound of a voice from heaven, though not the words which it ſpake,—when in reality they neither heard nor ſaw any ſuch thing? Could they be ſo infatuated with this conceit of their fancy, as to fall down from their horſes, together with Saul, and be ſpeechleſs through aſtoniſhment and fear, when nothing had happened extraordinary either to them or to him? Eſpecially conſidering that this apparition did not happen in the night, when the ſenſes are more eaſily impoſed upon; but at mid-day. If a ſudden frenzy had ſeized upon Saul from any diſtemper of body or mind, can we ſuppoſe his whole company, men of different conſtitutions and underſtanding, to have been at once affected in the ſame manner, ſo that not the diſtemper alone, but the effects of it ſhould exactly agree? And if all had gone mad together, would not the frenzy of ſome have taken a different turn, and preſented to them different objects? This ſuppoſition is ſo contrary to natural reaſon and all poſſibility, that unbelief muſt find out ſome other ſolution, or give up the point.

But if to this conſideration we add the conſequences of this marvellous appearance, it will no longer admit of diſpute. Could Paul have been ſo deceived, as to imagine himſelf three days blind,—as to have ſcales fall from his eyes, when baptized by Ananias? Could he be ſo deceived as to abandon his own profeſſion, and to embrace Chriſtianity, with the loſs of all he had and hoped? Could he be deceived in the full knowledge he had gained of that religion from Chriſt himſelf?—For as he had never converſed with the Apoſtles, how ſhould he have been ſo perfectly inſtructed in the deepeſt myſteries of the Chriſtian faith, unleſs he had received them by the immediate revelation of Chriſt?—And, to ſay no more, could he have been deceived in the miraculous gifts he poſſeſſed, and the miracles he wrought;—or, if he could, was it poſſible that others alſo ſhould be as mad as himſelf, and imagine that they ſaw him ſtruck blind, or another reſtore him to ſight, when no ſuch events happened?

Theſe are things ſo impoſſible to be reconciled with any ſelf-deluſion, that they abundantly prove the truth of St. Paul's converſion and miſſion; to which, if we add the purity of his doctrines, as well as his imparting ſpiritual gifts to the churches which he planted, we ſhall have the fulleſt teſtimony of the fact; the higheſt proof that he ſpoke the words of truth and ſoberneſs, and that God was with him.

4. And as it was impoſſible that St. Paul ſhould have deceived himſelf, ſo was it much more incredible that he ſhould have been deceived by others. We need ſay little to ſhew the abſurdity of this ſuppoſition. It was morally impoſſible for the diſciples of Chriſt, conſidered as impoſtors, to conceive ſuch a thought as that of turning his perſecutor into his Apoſtle, and of doing this by a fraud, in the very inſtant of his greateſt fury againſt them and their Lord. But could they have been ſo extravagant as to conceive ſuch a thought; it was naturally impoſſible for them to execute it in the manner we find his converſion to have been effected. Could they produce a light in the air, which at mid-day was brighter than the ſun? Could they make Saul hear words from out of that light, which were not heard by the reſt of the company? Could they make him blind for three days after that viſion, and then make ſcales fall from his eyes, and reſtore him to his ſight by a word? Beyond diſpute no fraud could effect theſe things;—but much leſs could the fraud of others produce thoſe miracles ſubſequent to his converſion, in which he was not paſſive, but active; which he did himſelf, and which he appeals to in his Epiſtles, as proofs of his divine miſſion. So that it clearly follows, that he was not, could not be deceived by the fraud of others; that what is ſaid of him, and what he hath ſaid of himſelf, cannot be imputed to the power of that deceit, no more than to wilful impoſture, or to enthuſiaſm: From all which the plain concluſion is, that what is here and elſewhere related to have been the cauſe of St. Paul's converſion, and to have happened in conſequence of it, did all really happen; is all certainly and infallibly true as we have it related; and therefore, that the Chriſtian religion is true, is a divine revelation from God; and bleſſed are all they who ſo believe and embrace it.

Chap. X. Ver. 1. Cornelius the centurion, &c.] A Roman cohort or band was a company of ſoldiers commanded by a tribune, conſiſting generally of about a thouſand. It is probable that this was called the Italian cohort, becauſe moſt of the ſoldiers belonging to it were Italians. It might perhaps be the life-guard of the Roman governor, who generally reſided in this moſt ſplendid and celebrated city of Cæſarea. Cornelius was a centurion, or captain of one hundred ſoldiers in this cohort. See on John xviii. 3. Biſcoe's Lectures, p. 330. and Pitiſc. Lex. in voce Cohors. Dr. Waterland renders the original—a captain of the regiment called the Italian regiment.

Ver. A devout man, &c.] Cornelius had diſtinguiſhed himſelf by his great virtue, piety, and charity, and was well prepared for the reception of the Goſpel, as the proſelytes of the gate were in general above all ſorts of people. The ceremonial law moſt grievouſly entangled the minds of the Jews, and by means of their ſtrong prejudices, their attachment to it degenerated into ſuperſtition. The idolatrous Gentiles, by their ignorance and wickedneſs, which were continued and ſupported by their idolatry, were with much difficulty brought to embrace Chriſtianity; whereas the devout Gentiles had caſt off idolatry on the one hand, and on the other hand had not ſubmitted to the ceremonial part of the Jewiſh law. Thus were they prepared in general; but the uncommon virtues and great piety of Cornelius rendered him a proper perſon to begin with, among that well-diſpoſed ſet of people. He excelled in piety towards God, and benevolence towards mankind, even to men of different ſects, without confining his charity to perſons of his own ſentiment and party; for he is ſaid to have given much alms to the people of the Jews;—the way, as our Saviour intimates, Luke xi. 41. to render all things clean to any perſon;—as well as to have prayed at thoſe hours of the day at which the Jews uſed to offer up their prayers. The great God, the wiſe and benevolent governor of reaſonable creatures, in pitching upon a perſon ſo pious in himſelf, and ſo charitable to the Jews, made the gradation as gentle as poſſible; and began with one of the fitteſt perſons in the world, when he was about to unite Jew and Gentile into one church and body, through Jeſus Chriſt, the prince of peace. It was indeed with great difficulty that the Jewiſh converts were brought to bear with the admiſſion of one uncircumciſed Gentile; but if they could bear with any, they muſt own, that one of Cornelius's virtue and charity was the moſt proper perſon among all the Gentiles; and when they came to reflect upon it, ſurely they could not help admiring the divine condeſcenſion, in ſtooping to their prejudices, and ſo graciouſly bearing with their infirmities. See Beza, Benſon, and Lardner.

Ver. 3. About the ninth hour of the day] That is, about three o'clock in the afternoon, at the time of the evening ſacrifice. See Daniel ix. 21, &c. Perhaps Cornelius might be praying for the coming of the kingdom of the Meſſiah, when the Gentiles were to be accepted as the people of God; for there was then a general expectation that this kingdom would appear. In ver. 31. his particular prayer, which he was offering up at that time, is ſaid to have been heard.

Ver. 4. What is it, Lord?] That is, "Protect me from all danger, and let me know the meaning of this viſion." The expreſſion, 5 And now ſend men to Joppa, and call for one Simon, whoſe ſurname is Peter.

6 He lodgeth with one Simon a tanner, whoſe houſe is by the ſea-ſide: he ſhall tell thee what thou oughteſt to do.

7 And when the angel which ſpake unto Cornelius was departed, he called two of his houſhold-ſervants, and a devout ſoldier of them that waited on him continually;

8 And when he had declared all theſe things unto them, he ſent them to Joppa.

9 On the morrow, as they went on their journey, and drew nigh unto the city, Peter went up upon the houſe-top to pray, about the ſixth hour:

10 And he became very hungry, and would have eaten: but while they made ready, he fell into a trance,

11 And saw heaven opened, and a certain veſſel deſcending unto him, as it had been a great ſheet, knit at the four corners, and let down to the earth:

12 Wherein were all manner of four-footed beaſts of the earth, and wild beaſts, and creeping things, and fowls of the air.

13 And there came a voice to him, Riſe, Peter; kill, and eat.

14 But Peter ſaid, Not ſo, Lord; for I have never eaten any thing that is common or unclean.

15 And the voice ſpake unto him again the ſecond time, What God hath cleanſed, that call not thou common.

16 This was done thrice: and the veſſel was received up again into heaven.

17 Now while Peter doubted in himſelf what this viſion which he had ſeen ſhould mean, behold, the men which were ſent from Cornelius, had made enquiry for Simon's houſe, and ſtood before the gate, 18 And called, and aſked whether Simon, which was ſurnamed Peter, lodged there.

19 While Peter thought on the viſion, the Spirit ſaid unto him, Behold, three men ſeek thee.

20 Ariſe therefore, and get thee down, and go with them, doubting nothing: for I have ſent them.

21 Then Peter went down to the men which were ſent unto him from Cornelius; and ſaid, Behold, I am he whom ye ſeek: what is the cauſe wherefore ye are come?

22 And they ſaid, Cornelius the centurion, a juſt man, and one that feareth God, Ver. 6. Ch. ix. 43.—V. 9. Ch. xi. 5, &c.—V. 11. Ch. vii. 56. Rev. xix. 11.—V. 14. Lev. xi. 4. Deut. xiv. 7. Ezek. iv. 14. V. 15. Matth. xv. 11. Rom. xiv. 17, 20. 1 Tim. iv. 4. Titus i. 15.—V. 20. Ch. xv. 7.

thy prayers, &c. are come up for a memorial, is borrowed from the incenſe offered under the law, which aſcended in fumes, when burned; and implies that the prayers and alms of Cornelius were more grateful than the ſteam of burnt-incenſe, or of the moſt coſtly ſacrifice which he could have offered. It was a common expreſſion among the ancients, that our prayers are carried to heaven on two wings, faſting, and works of mercy. See Hammond, Grotius, and Ainſworth on Levit. ii. 2.

Ver. 8. He ſent them to Joppa] "From Joppa the prophet Jonah was ſent to preach to the Gentiles at Nineveh; and from thence the Apoſtle Peter was ſent to preach the Goſpel to the Gentiles of Cæſarea." See Benſon.

Ver. 9. On the morrow, &c.] As the meſſengers of Cornelius were upon the road, and juſt entering the town, St. Peter went up to the top of the houſe, to ſpend ſome time in retirement and devotion; for the Jews had two ſtated hours of prayer in the day, namely, the time of morning and evening ſacrifice. See on ch. iii. 1. The more devout among them added a third, which was about noon, and which they called "the time of the great meat-offering." See Pſ. lv. 17. Dan. vi. 10. Whether Peter was induced by this or by ſome other reaſon to retire for prayer at this time, it ſeems at leaſt to have been cuſtomary, in the firſt ages of the Chriſtian church, to offer up their daily prayers at the third, the ſixth, and the ninth hours. We have before obſerved, that in the eaſtern countries the roofs of the houſes were commonly flat; and the flat roofs, or ſome of the upper parts of the houſes were the uſual places for devout retirement, where it was their cuſtom to pray with their faces turned towards the temple at Jeruſalem. See 1 Kings viii. 29, 30, &c. Pſ. cxxxviii. 2. Jonah ii. 4. and the note on Mark ii. 4.

Ver. 10. Would have eaten] "Would have taken a little refreſhment" ſeems the proper import of the word γεύσασθαι. The word ἔκστασις, rendered trance, properly ſignifies ſuch a rapture of mind, as gives the perſon who falls into it a look of aſtoniſhment, and renders him inſenſible to external objects; while, in the mean time, his imagination is agitated in an extraordinary manner, with ſome ſtriking ſcenes which paſs before it, and take up all the attention. The reader may ſee ſome extraordinary inſtances of this nature in Gualtperius's note on the place. See Elſner, vol i. p. 407.

Ver. 11. And a certain veſſel, &c.] And ſomething deſcending, in the form of a great ſheet. As we do not in Engliſh call ſheets veſſels, the general word here uſed more properly anſwers to Σκεῦος, concerning which, ſee on chap. ix. 15. We have no word in our language exactly anſwering to it. The other word ὀθόνη ſignifies any large piece of linen, in which things are wrapped; and ſeems to have been uſed as an emblem of the Goſpel, which extends to all nations of men. See Doddridge and Heylin.

Ver. 13. Riſe, Peter; kill and eat] This appears a general intimation that the Jewiſh Chriſtians were by the Goſpel abſolved from the ceremonial law, in which the diſtinction between clean and unclean meats made ſo conſiderable a part. L'Enfant, and ſome other critics have obſerved, that the Jews looked on unclean animals as an image of the Gentiles; which, if it were the caſe, renders this emblematical interpretation peculiarly proper. See particularly the note on Levit. xi. 2.

Ver. 15. What God hath cleanſed, &c.] The ſingle propoſition is, "That which God hath cleanſed is not common or impure." But no one who reads this ſtory could doubt of its having this double ſenſe; firſt, that the diſtinction between clean and unclean meats was to be aboliſhed. Secondly, that the Gentiles were to be called into the church of Chriſt. Here then the true ſenſe of this paſſage is not one, but two; and yet the intention or meaning is not on this account the leaſt obſcured or loſt, or rendered unintelligible. See Div. Leg. b. vi. ſect. 6.

Ver. 16. This was done thrice] In order to confirm the matter: ſee Gen. xli. 32.—Before we proceed in the hiſtory, it may not be amiſs to reflect upon the propriety and decorum with which things were managed in erecting Chriſt's ſpiritual kingdom. The Lord Jeſus Chriſt himſelf appeared to Saul, and granted the knowledge of the Goſpel unto him by immediate revelation, becauſe he was to be firſt a ſuperior prophet, and afterwards an Apoſtle; but Cornelius was admoniſhed by an angel to ſend for Peter, and hear him preach the Chriſtian doctrine, becauſe he was to open the door of faith to the Gentiles; and Cornelius was not deſigned for ſo high an office in the Chriſtian church as Saul. Again, the angel who appeared to Cornelius was not ſent to preach the Goſpel to him, but only to order him to ſend for an Apoſtle, who was one of the witneſſes choſen of God to atteſt the truth of Chriſt's life and miracles, and upon thoſe facts to found the Chriſtian doctrine. And further, St. Peter did not go of himſelf, and attempt the converſion of the uncircumciſed Gentiles, even though the body of the Jews in Paleſtine who would embrace the Goſpel were gathered in. If he had done ſo, he would have met with a more ſevere rebuke from the zealous Jewiſh Chriſtians at Jeruſalem, and could not have offered half ſo much for his own vindication: but as he did not go till he was ſent for, and that in ſo extraordinary a manner, he maintained the apoſtolic dignity, and could alledge the determination of heaven in his favour. And, finally, we may obſerve, that an angel was ſent to Cornelius; but the Lord Jeſus Chriſt himſelf ſpoke to St. Peter, not only as he bore an higher character in the church than Cornelius was to bear, but as he was to execute a new and moſt extraordinary commiſſion; for ſuch that of beginning to call in the uncircumciſed Gentiles certainly was. See Benſon.

Ver. 20. Doubting nothing] "Without any heſitation or ſcruple on account of the meſſengers being Gentiles, and coming from one of the ſame denomination; for I have ſhewn you, that the great ceremonial diſtinction between Jew and Gentile, clean and unclean, is now to be aboliſhed." See Matth. xxi. 21. Mark xi. 23. Rom. iv. 20. James i. 6.

Ver. 22. To hear words of thee] To hear thee diſcourſe. Heylin. "To receive orders and inſtructions from thee." Benſon.

and of good report among all the nation of the Jews, was warned from God by an holy angel to ſend for thee into his houſe, and to hear words of thee.

23 Then called he them in, and lodged them. And on the morrow Peter went away with them, and certain brethren from Joppa accompanied him.

24 And the morrow after they entered into Cæſarea. And Cornelius waited for them, and had called together his kinſmen and near friends.

25 And as Peter was coming in, Cornelius met him, and fell down at his feet, and worſhipped him.

26 But Peter took him up, Saying, Stand up; I myſelf alſo am a man.

27 And as he talked with him, he went in, and found many that were come together.

28 And he ſaid unto them, Ye know how that it is an unlawful thing for a man that is a Jew to keep company with, or come unto one of another nation; but God hath ſhewed me, that I ſhould not call any man common or unclean.

29 Therefore came I unto you without gainſaying, as ſoon as I was ſent for: I aſk therefore for what intent ye have ſent for me.

30 And Cornelius ſaid, Four days ago I was faſting until this hour; and at the ninth hour I prayed in my houſe, and behold, a man ſtood before me in bright clothing, 31 And ſaid, Cornelius, thy prayer is heard, and thine alms are had in remembrance in the ſight of God.

32 Send therefore to Joppa, and call hither Simon, whoſe ſurname is Peter; he is lodged in the houſe of one Simon, a tanner, by the ſea-ſide: who, when he cometh, ſhall ſpeak unto thee.

33 Immediately therefore I ſent to thee; and thou haſt well done that thou art come. Now therefore are we all here preſent before God, to hear all things that are commanded thee of God.

34 Then Peter opened his mouth, and ſaid, Of a truth I perceive that God is no reſpecter of perſons:

Ver. 22. Ch. xxii. 12.—V. 26. Ch. xiv. 14. Rev. xix. 10. xxii. 9.—V. 28. John iv. 9. xviii. 28. Ch. xi. 3. Ch. xv. 8. Epheſ. iii. 6.—V. 30. Ch. i. 10. Matth. xxviii. 3. Mark xvi. 5. Luke xxiv. 4.—V. 34. Deut. x. 17. Job xxxiv. 19. Rom. ii. 11. Gal. ii. 6. Eph. vi. 9. Col. iii. 25. 1 Pet. i. 17.

Ver. 23. And lodged them] Or hoſpitably entertained them that night, ἐξένισε. The next day Peter went along with them, and ſix Jewiſh Chriſtians from Joppa accompanied him. It is probable that the Apoſtle himſelf deſired them to go along with him, that they might be witneſſes of what happened, as this was an affair in which ſome difficulties might ariſe, and ſome cenſure be incurred from the Jewiſh converts, and ſuch as were not apprized of his divine direction. How pleaſing a mixture of prudence and humility!—ſufficient to teach us, on all proper occaſions, to expreſs at once a becoming deference to our brethren, and a prudent caution in our own beſt-intended actions; that even our good may not be evil ſpoken of, when it lies in our power to prevent it. See Rom. xiv. 16.

Ver. 24—26. And the morrow after] When St. Peter came nigh Cæſarea, one of the ſervants ran before, and ſignified to Cornelius that he was approaching. (See the reading in the Cambridge MS. Greek and Latin.) Cornelius was impatient for his coming, and big with expectation of ſome ſignal event: And therefore, he had called together his relations and intimate friends, who were devout Gentiles, as well as himſelf. As ſoon as he heard that the Apoſtle was juſt at hand, he went out of his houſe to meet him; and approaching him with profound reverence, he fell down at his feet to worſhip him; for he had a moſt exalted idea of that Apoſtle, looking upon him as the ambaſſador of the moſt high God; or as if he had been ſomething more than a man. The Apoſtle himſelf, who knew that his meſſage was divine, and that he was only the medium of conveyance, with great humility raiſed him up, ſaying, "Do not proſtrate yourſelf to me; I am only a mere man, as you are, and deſerve no ſuch homage." In the eaſtern world their ſalutations differ conſiderably, according to the different rank of the perſons they ſalute. The common ſalutation, as Sandys informs us, conſiſts in laying the right hand on the boſom, and declining the body a little: But when they ſalute a perſon of great rank, they bow almoſt to the ground, and kiſs the hem of his garment. Dr. Shaw's account of the common Arab compliment, "Peace be unto you," agrees with the above; but he further tells us, that inferiors out of deference kiſs the feet, the knees, or the garments of their ſuperiors. He might have added, or their hands: For D'Arvieux aſſures us, that though the Arab Emir he viſited withdrew his hand when he offered to kiſs it, yet he frequently offered it to the people to kiſs, when he had a mind to require that homage. Dr. Shaw further obſerves, that in theſe reſpects the Arabs were juſt the ſame 2 or 3000 years ago as they are now; and ceremonies of the like kind, we may preſume, were anciently uſed among the neighbouring people too, as they are at this time. See particularly Matth. xviii. 26, 29. Luke viii. 41. v. 8. and viii. 44. where the Evangeliſt repreſents the afflicted woman as touching the hem of our Lord's garment; which, we may ſuppoſe, means her kiſſing it. See alſo Mark vii. 26, 27. not to mention the inſtances of remoter antiquity in the Old Teſtament. There is certainly ſomething very graceful and noble in the forms of eaſtern ſalutation; ſome of them, however, have appeared too low, and expreſſive of too much diſproportion; on which account the natives of the weſt, even when they have been in thoſe eaſtern countries, have not been ready to adopt theſe profound expreſſions of reſpect: Nay, they ſeem ſometimes to have thought theſe obeiſances too great for mortals, or at leaſt have ſpoken of them in that light. Thus Curtius tells us, (lib. vi. c. 6.) that Alexander thought the habit and manners of the Macedonian kings unequal to his greatneſs, after the conqueſt of Aſia, and was for being treated according to the modes of Perſia; where kings were reverenced after the manner of the immortal gods. This infatuated monarch, therefore, ſuffered the people, in token of their reſpect, to lay upon the ground before him, &c. This was enough to lead St. Peter to ſay to Cornelius, a Roman, who received him with a reverence, eſteemed the loweſt and moſt ſubmiſſive, even in the ceremonious eaſt, and which the Romans were wont to ſpeak of as too ſolemn to be paid to mere men,—Stand up; I myſelf alſo am a man: Though Cornelius intended nothing idolatrous, nor did St. Peter ſuppoſe it to be his intention. In truth, there was ſomething extraordinary in this proſtration of Cornelius, but without any thing of idolatry. He was a perſon of rank: St. Peter made no figure in civil life; and yet Cornelius received him not only with reſpect, as his ſuperior; not only as his ſuperior, but with the greateſt degree of reverence, according to the uſages of his own nation; nay, not only ſo, but with an expreſſion of veneration, which though common in the country where Cornelius then reſided, his countrymen were ready to ſay ought to be appropriated to thoſe who were more than men. But it ſeems he felt the greateſt degree of reverence and awe at the ſight of the Apoſtle; and thoſe emotions threw him into the attitude he had frequently ſeen the inhabitants of Syria put themſelves in, when they would expreſs the greateſt reſpect and deference; and the rather, as the Apoſtle was a native of that country. See Benſon, the Obſervations on Sacred Scripture, p. 247, &c. and the notes on Rev. xix. 10. xxii. 9.

Ver. 29. I aſk therefore, &c.] Peter knew this by revelation, and by the meſſengers who were ſent from Cornelius; but he puts him on telling the ſtory, that the company might be informed, and Cornelius himſelf awakened and impreſſed by the narration; the repetition of which, even as we here read it, gives great dignity and ſpirit to Peter's ſucceeding diſcourſe. See Doddridge.

Ver. 31. Thy prayer is heard, &c.] Can any man ſay that theſe were only ſplendid ſins, or that they were an abomination before God? And yet it is certain Cornelius was then an unbeliever: He had not then faith in Chriſt. So certain it is that every one who ſeeks faith in Chriſt, ſhould ſeek it in prayer, and in doing good to all men; though, in ſtrictneſs, what is not exactly according to the divine rule, muſt ſtand in need of the divine favour and indulgence. See Bp. Burnett on the 13th article.

Ver. 34, 35. Of a truth I perceive, &c.] See on Deut. x. 17. The phraſe, No reſpecter of perſons, has principally, if not always, a judicial meaning. It is uſed in this ſenſe, Levit. xix. 15. Deut. i 17. and in the 16th verſe of that chapter, this is expreſly ſaid to be a charge given to the judges of the land. In Deut. xvi. 19. Reſpect

35 But in every nation he that feareth him, and worketh righteouſneſs, is accepted with him.

36 The word which God ſent unto the children of Iſrael, preaching peace by Jeſus Chriſt; (he is Lord of all:)

37 That word, I ſay, ye know, which was publiſhed throughout all Judea, and began from Galilee, after the baptiſm which John preached;

38 How God anointed Jeſus of Nazareth with the Holy Ghoſt, and with power: who went about doing good, and healing all that were oppreſſed of the devil; for God was with him.

39 And we are witneſſes of all things which he did both in the land of the Jews, and in Jeruſalem; whom they ſlew and hanged on a tree:

40 Him God raiſed up the third day, and ſhewed him openly;

41 Not to all the people, but unto witneſſes

Ver. 36. Iſai. lvii. 19. Epheſ. ii. 14, 16, 17. Col. i. 20. Rom. x. 12.—V. 37. Luke iv. 14.—V. 38. Luke iv. 18. Ch. ii. 22. John iii. 2.—V. 39. Ch. ii. 32.—V. 40. Ch. ii. 24.—V. 41. John xiv. 17, 22. Ch. xiii. 31.

of perſons, (ſtill confined to a judicial ſenſe,) ſtands to denote corruption and taking of bribes, which, as it is there ſaid with great eloquence, blind the eyes of the wiſe, &c. and this likewiſe is the conſtant notion, when it is applied to God; that there is no iniquity with the Lord, &c. See 2 Chron. xix. 7. and Foſter's Sermons, vol. iii. ſerm. 1. Bp. Sherlock, in his Sermons, vol. i. p. 327, &c. obſerves, that the words before us, if not carefully attended to, may ſeem to carry a ſenſe contrary to the meaning of the Apoſtle in delivering them. St. Peter declares, that God, without reſpect to any national or perſonal privileges, was ready to admit all perſons into the covenant made with Jeſus Chriſt, provided they were duly prepared for ſuch admiſſion. Some have concluded from the words, that there is no neceſſity of becoming diſciples of Chriſt, but that it is ſufficient if we live according to the principles and light of nature; foraſmuch as every one who feareth God, and worketh righteouſneſs, is accepted with him: And thus ſupported, as they think, by one paſſage of Scripture, they have been emboldened to deſpiſe and reject all the reſt, as of no uſe to them; and to put their ſalvation upon their own ſtrength, in oppoſition to the method revealed and declared by the Son of God. This error is common, as well as dangerous; and ſince the great regard which ſome pay to moral virtue, is purely oppoſition to the Goſpel, it is worth while to examine this paſſage of St. Peter, and to place his meaning in a true light, that the doctrine of the Goſpel may not appear to be overthrown by its own authority. The Jews had a notion that the bleſſings of the promiſed Meſſiah were to be peculiar to themſelves, and not to be extended to any other nation or people whatever, whom they looked upon as aliens from God, and not under his care and protection, as they were. Hence, in the prophets they plead their privilege, and tell God, that he is not the God of the heathen, but of the people of Iſrael: Which conceit of theirs St. Paul refers to, and confutes in his Epiſtle to the Romans:—Is he the God of the Jews only? Is he not alſo of the Gentiles?—Yes, of the Gentiles alſo. The diſciples of our Lord, and eſpecially St. Peter, were as deep in this opinion as others; and during our Saviour's abode on earth they were confirmed in it, by what they obſerved in him. He declared, that he was not ſent but unto the loſt ſheep of the houſe of Iſrael: And when he ſent out his diſciples to preach, he expreſly charged them not to go into the way of the Gentiles, nor to enter into any city of the Samaritans; but to go rather to the loſt ſheep of the houſe of Iſrael: And after his reſurrection, when he enlarged their commiſſion, and bade them go and teach all nations, they underſtood him not, but were inquiſitive about his reſtoring the kingdom to Iſrael. After the aſcenſion, the Apoſtles continued at Jeruſalem preaching to their own nation, till upon the perſecution of St. Stephen, many fled into other parts; and though they went as far as Phenice, Cyprus, and Antioch, yet they preached the word to none but Jews only, ch. xi. 19. nay, and when St. Peter, admoniſhed by an heavenly viſion, had admitted ſome Gentiles into the church of Chriſt through baptiſm, he was called to an account for it by the Apoſtles and brethren who were in Judea; ch. xi. 1. nor were they ſatisfied, till he told them what a viſion he had ſeen, what alſo Cornelius had ſeen, and in what a miraculous manner the Holy Ghoſt was poured forth on the Gentiles, before he ventured to baptize them. And then, under the aſtoniſhment of this conviction, they held their peace, blaming his behaviour no longer; but glorified God, ſaying, (ver. 18.) Then hath God alſo unto the Gentiles granted repentance unto life. St. Peter himſelf was equally ſurprized, when he found by comparing Cornelius's viſion with his own, that God had determined to admit the Gentiles, as well as the Jews, into the church of Chriſt; and he expreſſes himſelf in the ſame manner, though not juſt in the ſame words with the Apoſtles and brethren. They ſay, Then hath God alſo unto the Gentiles granted repentance unto life. St. Peter ſays, Of a truth I perceive that God is no reſpecter of perſons; but in every nation he that feareth him, and worketh righteouſneſs, is accepted with him. Theſe two reflections, as they are made upon the ſame caſe, ſo are they in ſubſtance the ſame; and both St. Peter, and the Apoſtles and brethren, evidently mean one and the ſame thing: And therefore, in the paſſage before us, to be accepted with God means no more than to have from God the offer of repentance unto life; and both certainly mean, our having admiſſion into the covenant with God through Jeſus Chriſt. So that the whole of what St. Peter ſays in the text amounts to this: "I now, at length, perceive that God has not confined his mercies to a particular nation only, but that all are capable of inheriting the promiſes in Chriſt Jeſus, who are duly prepared by righteouſneſs, and the fear of God." This will further appear to be the true interpretation, if we conſider the caſe of Cornelius, and what the acceptance was which he found. And for this we refer the reader to the Reflections at the end of the chapter.

Ver. 36, 37. The word which God ſent, &c.] This paſſage is extremely embarraſſed in the Greek; and there ſeems to me no doubt that ſome errors have crept into the text, as indeed appears upon the face of the various readings. Some commentators ſuppoſe that the 36th verſe refers to the two preceding; as if St. Peter had ſaid, "And this which I have juſt delivered, I apprehend to be the meaning of that meſſage which he ſent to the children of Iſrael, proclaiming the glad tidings of mutual peace by Jeſus Chriſt, the great Ambaſſador of peace; who, after all his abaſement, being exalted to his kingdom, is become Lord of all,—not of the Jews only, but of the Gentiles alſo; and under that character will manifeſt the riches of his mercy unto all that call upon him." Comp. Rom. iii. 29. x. 12. But, according to this interpretation, there is no verb for τὸν λόγον in the accuſative caſe; which certainly in this view ſhould have been ὁ λόγος, or οὗτος ἐστὶν ὁ λόγος. Dr. Heylin reads the paſſage thus, ver. 36. God hath revealed himſelf to the children of Iſrael; [literally, has ſent his word. The Vulgate is, Verbum miſit Deus] publiſhing the Goſpel of peace by Jeſus Chriſt: He is Lord of all men. Therefore no reſpecter of perſons or outward characters: ver. 37. You know the doctrine which has been taught through all Judea, after having begun, &c. The word which Heylin renders doctrine, and our verſion word, ver. 37. is ῥῆμα, and not λόγον, as in ver. 36. and I apprehend, as it is wanting in ſome manuſcripts, that it is redundant here; that it ſhould be omitted; and that we ſhould read τὸν γενόμενον καθ' ὅλης, &c. and render the paſſage thus: The word which God ſent to the children of Iſrael, &c. ver. 37. you know: It having been publiſhed throughout all Judea, &c. Which word, or report, is this, That God anointed Jeſus of Nazareth, &c. ver. 38. After having made a general obſervation, St. Peter goes on to the main ſubject of his diſcourſe; namely, the informing of Cornelius and his company concerning the divine meſſage of redemption through Jeſus Chriſt; and it ſhould be obſerved, that, with reſpect to them, he only ſays concerning this meſſage or report, that they muſt have been in general acquainted with it. The words preaching peace by Jeſus Chriſt, &c. do not at all refer to the prior knowledge of Cornelius and his friends, but are thrown in by St. Peter, to elucidate his ſubject; and in this view the objection made by Dr. Doddridge, &c. to this interpretation, wholly vaniſhes. St. Peter certainly appeals to their knowledge of Chriſt, as preached throughout Judea and Galilee; and upon the foundation of this general knowledge, builds what he had to advance concerning Jeſus. See Wetſtein, Mill, Grotius, Doddridge, and Eraſmus.

Ver. 38. How God anointed Jeſus of Nazareth] It was a proverb among the Jews, Can any good thing come of Nazareth? John i. 47. And yet the Apoſtles very frequently call our Lord by the name of Jeſus of Nazareth. They ſeem to have mentioned this as one circumſtance of his humiliation; and yet they ſhewed that the very Jeſus of Nazareth, of whom the Jews had ſo contemptible an opinion, and whom they had treated ſo cruelly and ignominiouſly, was nevertheleſs a very great and glorious perſon, and atteſted to be ſuch in a moſt remarkable manner; that to him angels bow, and all nature is in ſubjection: And indeed, if we ſet the predictions of the prophets, the great expectations which were raiſed of him before his coming, the miracles which he wrought, his wonderous exaltation after leaving our world, and the ſupernatural gifts and powers which he conferred on his Apoſtles and the primitive Chriſtians;—if we ſet all theſe againſt his poverty, contempt and ſufferings, the offence of the croſs will ceaſe, and the ignominy of his low eſtate of humiliation will vaniſh away. See Benſon, Sir Norton Knatchbull, and Matth. xii. 36. in the original.

Ver. 41. Not to all the people, &c.] After the words, did eat and drink with him, many manuſcripts and verſions read, for forty days. It has frequently been aſked, Why Chriſt did not ſhew himſelf to all the people, but to his diſciples only? Now it may be ſufficient to reply, that where there are witneſſes enough, no judge or jury complains for want of more; and therefore, if the witneſſes we have for the reſurrection are ſufficient, it is no objection that we have not others or more. If three credible men atteſt a will, which are as many as the law requires, would any body aſk why all the town were not choſen before of God, even to us who did eat and drink with him after he roſe from the dead.

42 And he commanded us to preach unto the people, and to teſtify, that it is he not called to ſign their names to it? But it may be objected, why were theſe witneſſes called and choſe out? Why for this reaſon, that they might be good ones. Does not every wiſe man chooſe proper witneſſes to his deed? And does not a good choice of witneſſes give ſtrength to every deed? How comes it to paſs then, that the very thing which ſhuts out all ſuſpicion in other caſes, ſhould in this be of all others the moſt ſuſpicious thing itſelf? What reaſon there is to make any complaints in the Jews, may be judged from the evidence already offered concerning the reſurrection: Chriſt ſuffered openly in their ſight, and they were ſo well apprized of his prediction, that they ſet a guard on his ſepulchre; every ſoldier was to them a witneſs of his reſurrection of their own chooſing; after this, they had not one Apoſtle only, but all the Apoſtles, and many other witneſſes with them; the Apoſtles teſtified the reſurrection to them, not only to the people, but to the elders aſſembled in ſenate; to ſupport their evidence, they worked miracles openly in the name of Chriſt; theſe people therefore have the leaſt reaſon to complain, and have of all others the fulleſt evidence, and in ſome reſpects ſuch as none but themſelves could have, for they only were the keepers of the ſepulchre. But the argument goes further. It is ſaid, that Jeſus was ſent with a ſpecial commiſſion to the Jews, that he was their Meſſias: and as his reſurrection was his main credential, he ought to have appeared publickly to the rulers of the Jews after his reſurrection; that in doing otherwiſe, he acted like an ambaſſador pretending authority from his prince, but refuſing to ſhew his letters of credence. In reply to this objection it ſhould be obſerved, that, by the accounts we have of Jeſus, it appears he had two diſtinct offices; one, as the Meſſias, particularly promiſed to the Jews; another, as he was to be the great high-prieſt of the world. With reſpect to the firſt office, the writer ſpeaks, Heb. iii. 1. and he ſpeaks of himſelf, Matth. xv. 24. I am not ſent but to the loſt ſheep of the houſe of Iſrael." Chriſt continued in the diſcharge of this office during the time of his natural life, till he was finally rejected by the Jews; and it is obſervable, that the laſt time he ſpoke to the people, according to St. Matthew's account, he ſolemnly took leave of them, and cloſed his commiſſion. He had been long among them publiſhing glad things; but when all his preaching, all his miracles had proved in vain, the laſt thing he did was to denounce the woes they had brought upon themſelves. Matth. xxiii. recites theſe woes, and at the end of them Chriſt takes this paſſionate leave of Jeruſalem, "Ye ſhall not ſee me from henceforth, till ye ſhall ſay, Bleſſed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord." It is remarkable that this paſſage, which is recorded by Matthew and Luke twice over, is determined by the circumſtances to refer to the near approach of his own death, and the extreme hatred of the Jews to him; and therefore thoſe words, Ye ſhall not ſee me henceforth, are to be dated from the time of his death, and manifeſtly point out the end of his particular miſſion to them. From making this declaration, as it ſtands in St. Matthew, his diſcourſes are to his diſciples, as they chiefly relate to the miſerable condition of the Jews, which was now decreed, and ſoon to be accompliſhed; let us now aſk, whether in this ſtate of things any farther credentials of Chriſt's commiſſion to the Jews could be demanded or expected? He was rejected, his commiſſion was determined, and with it the fate of the nation was determined alſo; what uſe then of more credentials? As to appearing to them after his reſurrection, he could not do it conſiſtently with his own prediction, Ye ſhall ſee me no more, &c. The Jews were not in the diſpoſition after the reſurrection, nor are they in it yet. The reſurrection was the foundation of Chriſt's new commiſſion, which extended to all the world. This prerogative the Jews had under this commiſſion, that the Goſpel was every where firſt offered to them. Since then this commiſſion, of which the reſurrection was the foundation, extended to all the world alike; what ground is there to demand ſpecial and particular evidence to the Jews? The emperor and ſenate of Rome were a much more conſiderable part of the world than the chief prieſts and the ſynagogue; why is it not then objected, that Chriſt did not ſhew himſelf to Tiberias and his ſenate? And ſince all men have an equal right in this caſe, why may not the ſame demand be made for every country? nay, for every age? and then we may bring the queſtion nearer home, and aſk why Chriſt did not appear in king George's reign? The obſervation already made upon the reſurrection, naturally leads to another, which will help to account for the nature of the evidence we have in this great point. As the reſurrection was the opening a new commiſſion, in which all the world had an intereſt, ſo the concern naturally was to have a proper evidence to eſtabliſh this truth, and which ſhould be of equal weight to all. This did not depend upon the ſatisfaction given to private perſons, whether they were magiſtrates or not magiſtrates, but upon the conviction of thoſe whoſe office it was to bear teſtimony to this truth. In this ſenſe, the Apoſtles were choſen to be witneſſes of the reſurrection, becauſe they were choſen to bear teſtimony to it in the world, and not becauſe they only were admitted to ſee Chriſt after his reſurrection; for the fact is otherwiſe. The Goſpel, indeed, concerned to ſhew the evidence on which the faith of the world was to reſt, is very particular in ſetting forth the ocular demonſtration which the Apoſtles had of the reſurrection, and mentions others who ſaw Chriſt after his reſurrection only accidentally, and as the thread of the hiſtory led to it; but yet it is certain, there were many others who had this ſatisfaction as well as the Apoſtles; ſo that it is a miſtake to infer from the paſſage before us, that a few only were choſen to ſee Chriſt after he came from the grave. The truth of the caſe is this, that out of thoſe who ſaw him, ſome were choſen to bear teſtimony to the world, and for that reaſon had the fulleſt demonſtration of the truth, that they might be the better able to give ſatisfaction to others: and what was there in this conduct to complain of? What to raiſe any jealouſly or ſuſpicion? To alledge the meanneſs of the witneſſes as an objection, is very weak; for men may be good witneſſes without having great eſtates, and be able to report what they ſee with their eyes, without being philoſophers. As far then as the truth of the reſurrection depended on the evidence of ſenſe, the Apoſtles were duly qualified. Did their meanneſs ſtand in the way of the evidence, which aroſe from the great powers with which they were endued from above? Conſider their natural and ſupernatural qualifications, they were in every reſpect proper witneſſes; take theſe qualifications together, and they were witneſſes without exception. It is indeed ſaid, that they were intereſted in the affair. Would we then have evidence from unbelievers? A witneſs, who does not believe the truth of what he affirms, is a cheat. No body therefore could be an evidence of the reſurrection but a believer, and ſuch a one is ſaid to be intereſted. But this is an abſurd objection, becauſe it is an objection to every honeſt witneſs that ever lived; for every honeſt witneſs believes the truth of what he ſays. If the objection is intended to charge the Apoſtles with views or hopes of temporal advantage, it is built upon an utter ignorance of the hiſtory of the church. It may be demonſtrated, that if Jeſus ſhewed himſelf to his enemies, and to all the people, theſe appearances, inſtead of putting his reſurrection beyond doubt, would rather have weakened the evidence of it in after-ages, and ſo would have been of infinite detriment to mankind; for upon the ſuppoſition that our Lord had ſhewed himſelf openly, either his enemies, yielding to the evidence of their ſenſes, would have believed his reſurrection, or, reſiſting that evidence, they would reject it altogether. To begin with the latter ſuppoſition: Such of our Lord's enemies as then reſiſted the evidence of their ſenſes, muſt have juſtified their unbelief, by affirming, that the man who appeared to them was not Jeſus, but an impoſtor who perſonated him. The evidence of the fact would therefore have gained nothing by ſuch public appearance, becauſe the generality of the Jews were not capable of paſſing a judgement upon the falſhood, which Chriſt's enemies muſt have made uſe of to ſupport the denial of his reſurrection. Being unacquainted with Jeſus, they could not certainly tell whether he was really the perſon whom the Romans had crucified. His Apoſtles, who knew his ſtature, ſhape, air, voice, and manner, were the only proper perſons by whoſe determination the point in diſpute could be terminated. Wherefore, notwithſtanding our Lord had appeared to all the people, the whole ſtreſs of the evidence, in caſe of any doubt or objection, muſt have reſted on the teſtimony of the very perſons who bear witneſs to it now, and on whoſe teſtimony the world has believed it. So that inſtead of gaining any additional evidence by Jeſus's ſhewing himſelf publickly to all the people, we ſhould have had nothing to truſt to but the teſtimony of his diſciples, and that clogged with this incumbrance, that his reſurrection was denied by many to whom he appeared. But, in the ſecond place, it may be fancied, that, on ſuppoſition that our Lord roſe from the dead, the whole people of the Jews muſt have believed, if he had ſhewed himſelf publickly. To this ſuppoſition it may be replied, that the greateſt part of our Lord's enemies cannot be ſuppoſed to have been ſo well acquainted with his perſon, as to have been able to know him again with certainty; for which reaſon, though he had ſhewed himſelf to to them, even their belief of his reſurrection muſt have depended on the teſtimony of his diſciples and friends. If ſo, it is not very probable that his appearing publickly would have had any great influence on the Jews. But ſuppoſing the Jewiſh nation in general ſhould have been converted by his appearance, and have become his diſciples, what advantage would the cauſe of Chriſtianity have reaped from this effect? Would the evidence of the reſurrection have become unqueſtionable? Or would modern infidels have been better diſpoſed to believe it? By no means. The truth is, the objections againſt his reſurrection would have been ten-fold more numerous and forceable than they are at preſent: for would not the whole have been called a ſtate trick, a Jewiſh fable, a mere political contrivance, to patch up their broken credit after ſo much talk of a Meſſiah, who was to come at that time? Beſides, ſhould we not have been told, that the government, being engaged in the plot, a fraud of this kind might eaſily have been carried on, becauſe it ſuited with the prejudices of the people; and becauſe the few, who had the ſagacity to detect the fraud, had no opportunity to examine into it? Or if they did examine and detect the fraud, durſt not make a diſcovery? And to conclude, would not the very proofs which now are ſufficient to prove this fact, been buried in oblivion, and been intirely loſt, for want of that oppoſition which the Jews themſelves made to it, and which was the occaſion of their being recorded in the Scripture? See the Trial of the Witneſſes, p. 76—82. Sequel to the Trial, p. 136. Benſon's Reaſonableneſs of the Chriſtian Religion, p. 216. and Summary View of the Evidences of the Reſurrection, p. 40. Archbp. Sharpe, vol. ii. Serm. viii. p. 152. Macknight's Harm. ſect. 158. Thoſe who are deſirous to ſee more on this ſubject, may conſult Ditton on the Reſurrection, part iii. ſect. 60—70. Bp. Burnet's Four Diſcourſes, p. 52, &c. Sykes of Chriſtianity, p. 164, &c. Fleming's Chryſtology, vol. iii. p. 494, &c. Bp. Blackwall's Sermons at Boyle's Lectures, ſerm. 4. Bp. Atterbury's Sermons, vol. iii. p. 182, &c. Miſcell. Sacra, eſſay ii. p. 77. and Sermons de Superville, tom. iv. p. 9, &c.

Ver. 41. Luke xxiv. 43. John xxi. 13.—V. 42. Matth. xxviii. 19. Ch. i. 8. John v. 22, 27. Ch. xvii. 31.

which was ordained of God to be the Judge of quick and dead.

43 To him give all the prophets witneſs, that through his name, whoſoever believeth in him ſhall receive remiſſion of ſins.

44 While Peter yet ſpake theſe words, the Holy Ghoſt fell on all them which heard the word.

45 And they of the circumciſion which believed, were aſtoniſhed, as many as came with Peter, becauſe that on the Gentiles alſo was poured out the gift of the Holy Ghoſt.

46 For they heard them ſpeak with tongues, and magnify God. Then anſwered Peter, 47 Can any man forbid water that theſe ſhould not be baptized, which have received the Holy Ghoſt as well as we?

48 And he commanded them to be baptized in the name of the Lord. Then prayed they him to tarry certain days.

Ver. 42. Rom. xiv. 9, 10. 2 Tim. iv. 1. 1 Pet. iv. 5.—V. 43. Jer. xxxi. 34. Mic. vii. 18. Ch. xxvi. 22. Ch. xv. 9.—V. 44. Ch. iv. 31. viii. 15, 16.—V. 47. Ch. xv. 8.—V. 48. 1 Cor. i. 17. Ch. viii. 16.

Ver. 42. It is he who was ordained of God] Pointed out, and determined:—ὡρισμένος. This was declaring, in the ſtrongeſt terms, how entirely their happineſs depended on a timely and humble ſubjection to him who was to be their final Judge. See Doddridge.

Ver. 43. To him give all the prophets witneſs] It is obſervable that in this diſcourſe to an audience of Gentiles, the Apoſtle firſt mentions Chriſt's perſon, miracles, and reſurrection, and contents himſelf with telling them in the general, that there were many prophets in former ages who bore witneſs to him, without entering into a particular enumeration of their predictions. And perhaps this is the beſt way of beginning the controverſy with the Jews themſelves, as being liable to leaſt cavil. Further, we do not read of St. Peter's working any miracle on this great occaſion. The preceding teſtimony of the angel, and the deſcent of the Holy Spirit in his miraculous gifts, while he was ſpeaking to them, were ſufficient proofs, both of the truth of the Goſpel, and of Peter's being an authorized interpreter of it. See Doddridge, Benſon, and the note on Luke xxiv. 27.

Ver. 44. The Holy Ghoſt fell on all them, &c.] Probably this effuſion of the Holy Spirit was attended with a glory, as when it fell upon the Apoſtles and their company on the famous day of pentecoſt: And it is moſt likely, that a glory always attended the immediate effuſion of the Spirit, from the time of our Lord's baptiſm to the calling of the idolatrous Gentiles. Thus was the ſpirit poured down upon Cornelius and his friends, as upon our Lord himſelf, upon his Apoſtles, and the hundred and twenty; and was not communicated by the laying on of the hands of the Apoſtles, as it had been to the Jews and Samaritan converts; and the reaſon why God communicated the Holy Spirit in this moſt honourable manner, to the firſtfruits of the devout Gentiles, was to remove the prejudices of the Jewiſh Chriſtians, and to make way for their chearfully receiving the devout Gentiles into the Chriſtian church, and all its privileges. Dr. Lightfoot obſerves, that one important effect of this deſcent of the Holy Spirit upon them, was, that hereby they were enabled to underſtand the Hebrew language; and ſo had an opportunity of acquainting themſelves with the prophecies of the Old Teſtament. See ver. 46.

Ver. 45, 46. They of the circumciſion—were aſtoniſhed, &c.] The Jews had a proverb among them, that the Holy Spirit would not dwell upon any heathen, nor even upon any Jew in an heathen country; and accordingly the prophets had hitherto commonly riſen in Iſrael, and not among the uncircumciſed Gentiles. The Jewiſh Chriſtians, therefore, who came with St. Peter from Joppa, to be eye-witneſſes of this great event, were quite ſurpriſed to ſee that the divine gift of the Holy Spirit was poured down upon Gentiles; for they preſently found that this effuſion produced like effects upon them, as it had done upon the Jewiſh converts. Cornelius and his company immediately exerciſing the gift of tongues, moſt probably in repeating and explaining ſome part of the Old Teſtament in the original language; and magnifying God, by ſinging pſalms, or hymns and ſpiritual ſongs, by immediate inſpiration. See Benſon, and Lightfoot's works, vol. i. p. 285.

Ver. 47. Can any man forbid water, &c.] That is, "Can any man, how ſtrongly ſoever he might formerly be prejudiced againſt ſuch a thing, any longer heſitate, or offer one juſt reaſon, why theſe uncircumciſed Gentiles ſhould not be baptiſed with water, ſeeing they have received the baptiſm of the Holy Spirit, in the ſame honourable manner that we, Chriſt's Apoſtles and firſt converts, have received it: Καθὼς καὶ ἡμεῖς, even as we?" It deſerves to be remarked, that of all the inſtitutions of our holy religion, that of water-baptiſm was leaſt proper to be called in queſtion; being moſt invincibly eſtabliſhed by the practice both of St. Peter and Paul. The former finding that the houſhold of Cornelius had received the Holy Ghoſt, regards it as a certain direction for him to admit them into the church of Chriſt, which he does by the initiatory rite of water-baptiſm. St. Paul, in his travels through the Leſſer Aſia, finding ſome of the Jewiſh converts, who had never heard of the Holy Ghoſt, and on enquiry underſtanding that they had only been baptized by water unto John's baptiſm, thought fit to baptize them with water in the name of the Lord Jeſus; i. e. to admit them into the church; and then laying hands on them, the Holy Ghoſt came upon them, &c. See ch. xix. 4—6. Yet notwithſtanding theſe two memorable tranſactions, we have a ſect among us which rejects water-baptiſm, pretending that water-baptiſm is John's baptiſm, and only a type of baptiſm by the Holy Ghoſt, or by fire: So that when this laſt came in uſe, the former ceaſed, and was aboliſhed. In the two hiſtories, however, given above, theſe fancies are fully reproved, and in ſuch a manner, as if the ſtories had been recorded for no other purpoſe; for in the adventure of St. Paul, the water-baptiſm of Jeſus is expreſly diſtinguiſhed from the water-baptiſm of John; and in that of St. Peter it appears, that water-baptiſm was neceſſary for an admittance into the church of Chriſt, even after the adminiſtration of baptiſm by fire, or the communicated power of the Holy Ghoſt. St. Peter does not ſay, "They have the baptiſm of the Spirit, therefore they do not need baptiſm with water;" but juſt the contrary, "They have received the Spirit, therefore baptiſe them with water." Indeed this queſtion were eaſily decided, if we would take the plain word of God for our rule. Either men have received the Holy Ghoſt or not; if they have not, Repent, ſaith God, and be baptized, and ye ſhall receive the gift of the Holy Ghoſt; if they are already baptized with the Holy Ghoſt, then, Who can forbid water? We may juſt obſerve further, that theſe two heads of the miſſions to the two great diviſions of mankind, the Jews and Gentiles, here acted in each others provinces. Peter, the Apoſtle of the Jews, adminiſtring baptiſm to the Gentile houſhold of Cornelius; and Paul, the Apoſtle of the Gentiles, adminiſtring the ſame rite to the Jewiſh converts: And why was this croſſing of hands, but to obviate that ſimple evaſion, that water-baptiſm was only partial and temporary. See Div. Leg. b. vi. ſect. 1. Barclay's Apology, prop. xii. ſect. 7, &c. Eraſmus, and Whitby.

Ver. 48. Baptized in the name of the Lord] Which implies the Father, who anointed him, and the Spirit, with which he was anointed to his office. But as theſe devout Gentiles had before believed in God the Father, and could not but now believe in the Holy Ghoſt, under whoſe powerful influence they were at this very time, there was the leſs need of taking notice that they were baptized into the belief and profeſſion of the ſacred Three, though doubtleſs the ordinance was adminiſtered in that very form which Chriſt himſelf had preſcribed. St. Peter poſſibly might chuſe to make uſe of the miniſtry of his brethren in performing this rite, rather than to do it with his own hands, that by this means the expreſſion of their conſent might be the more explicit. Thus he, who, as the Rock, on which the Chriſtian church was to be built, and as having the keys of the kingdom of heaven, had formerly laid the foundation of a Chriſtian church among the Jews, and opened the door of faith unto them, did now in like manner to the uncircumciſed Gentiles; and though all the other Apoſtles were foundations of the Chriſtian church, and had the ſame laſting powers and commiſſion; though they preached the ſame doctrine, and confirmed it by like extraordinary evidences; yet they had none of them the power of the keys in the ſame ſenſe that St. Peter had: For it was peculiar to him, firſt to open the door of faith, or to lead the way to the converſion both of Jews and Gentiles; but though he began the work, they, as well as he, carried it on with vigour and ſucceſs. After all theſe things had happened, the new converts deſired St. Peter to tarry with them ſome days longer; and, as willing further to aſſiſt, inſtruct, and comfort them, he readily conſented; and moſt probably the Goſpel in conſequence gained much ground in Cæſarea. It is obſervable, that the Goſpel made its way firſt through the metropolitan cities: It firſt prevailed in Jeruſalem and Cæſarea, afterwards in Philippi, Athens, Corinth, Epheſus, and Rome itſelf. Mr. Moyle ſuppoſes, that there were ſeveral idolatrous rites required at that time of the Roman ſoldiers, entirely inconſiſtent with the profeſſion of Chriſtianity; and that therefore Cornelius muſt have quitted the army upon his becoming a Chriſtian. But he was no idolater when St. Peter went to preach to him, and the Scripture is entirely ſilent about his continuing in the army or leaving it, on his taking up the profeſſion of Chriſtianity. See Benſon, Calmet, and Moyle's works, vol. ii. p. 200.

REFLECTIONS ON CORNELIUS, &c.

This celebrated centurion was a Gentile, and one of the beſt of them; a devout man, and one that feared God, &c. ver. 2. and yet his goodneſs did not make it unneceſſary for him to become a Chriſtian. The heavenly viſion was not ſent to ſatisfy him that his righteouſneſs was ſufficient, and that he had no need to look out for farther aſſiſtance or direction: On the contrary, it was ſent to inform him where

CHAP. XI.

Peter being accuſed for going in to the Gentiles, maketh his defence, which is accepted. The goſpel being ſpread into Phenice, and Cyprus, and Antioch, Barnabas is ſent to confirm them. The diſciples there are firſt called Chriſtians: they ſend relief to the brethren in Judea in time of famine.

AND the apoſtles and brethren that were in Judea, heard that the Gentiles had alſo received the word of God.

2 And when Peter was come up to Jeruſalem, they that were of the circumciſion contended with him,

Ver. 2. Ch. x. 45.

where he might ſeek and find a proper inſtructor. St. Peter had alſo a viſion, to prepare him to do the duty of an Apoſtle to the Gentile centurion; and when this devout man came to him, in obedience to the heavenly warning, he inſtructs him in the faith of Chriſt, and baptizes him with water; upon which the Apoſtle ſays, "He finds that men of all nations, who do righteouſly, are accepted with God." He could not poſſibly mean, that thoſe who did their beſt by the light of nature, had no need of any other teacher; that reflection could never riſe from the caſe before him: For why did he then inſtruct Cornelius in the faith of Chriſt, and baptize him in his name?—St. Peter, therefore, certainly meant, that all Gentiles, duly prepared, were capable of the bleſſings of the Goſpel, through the mercy of God, in oppoſition to his former error. That none but the Jews had ſuch a privilege: (See on ver. 34, 35.) and he as certainly underſtood, that the beſt of the Gentiles had need of the Goſpel; or elſe his commendation of the goodneſs of God amounts to this only, that he perceived that God would give to the honeſt-minded Gentiles who feared him, and did righteouſly, that which they had no occaſion to receive.

Thus we learn what is the true notion of that acceptance, which St. Peter ſays the Gentiles of all nations are intitled to, through the mercy of God.

But then there ariſes a difficulty from the terms to which St. Peter has limited this privilege: For he does not ſay that men of all nations are accepted of God, but that in every nation he that feareth God, and worketh righteouſneſs, is accepted of him. Now one great end of the Chriſtian religion being to inſtruct us in the fear of God, and in works of righteouſneſs, it may ſeem ſtrange, that in order to the obtaining of this benefit of being duly inſtructed in the fear of God, and in works of righteouſneſs, it ſhould be required as a previous condition that we ſhould fear God, and do righteouſly; a condition which ſuppoſes us already in poſſeſſion of the main thing for which the privilege itſelf is granted; and conſequently the privilege becomes in a manner uſeleſs, by our having the qualifications neceſſary to the obtaining it.

To clear this matter, we ſhould conſider what the Apoſtle to the Hebrews teaches us, ch. xi. 6. Without faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe God; for he that cometh to God muſt believe that he is, and that he is the rewarder of them that diligently ſeek him. The meaning of which is, "That a man cannot offer himſelf to God, much leſs enter into the covenant of his mercy without a firm perſuaſion of his being, and a due notion of his attributes." He muſt know that he is; otherwiſe he can never move or advance towards him. He muſt know alſo, that he is the Rewarder of them who diligently ſeek him, or elſe he cannot be encouraged to move towards him: Which two articles of belief infer a juſt fear of God, as the ſupreme Governor of the world, and a deſire to pleaſe him; as the Diſpenſer of rewards and puniſhments, according to the good or evil which men do. This is the faith, without which the Apoſtle to the Hebrews ſays, It is impoſſible to pleaſe God: This is the faith, with which, as St. Peter ſays, the men of every nation are accepted with him.

And in truth theſe qualifications are ſo neceſſary to a man's being accepted with God, and admitted into the covenant of his grace through Jeſus Chriſt, that without them the Goſpel cannot be ſo much as tendered to him: For upon what footing could we preſs men to become Chriſtians, in order to obtain the mercy of God, who have no ſenſe of the fear of God, and conſequently no concern about pleaſing or diſpleaſing him? The Goſpel does not teach, but ſuppoſe this doctrine: And, was even an Apoſtle to preach to a nation perfectly ignorant of God, he muſt lay by the Goſpel, and firſt convince the people, from reaſon and nature, of the being of God, and the neceſſity of righteouſneſs, in order to deſerve his favour, before he could invite them to embrace the Goſpel, as the perfect rule of righteouſneſs, preſcribed by God himſelf. And therefore, when St. Peter ſays, that in every nation he that feareth God, and worketh righteouſneſs, is accepted of him, he is not to be underſtood as limiting the mercies of God to certain perſons of the beſt character, but rather as declaring the natural order of things.

It is frequently taught, that our Lord came to ſave ſinners; and therefore he began his preaching with an exhortation to repentance, in the ſame words that John the Baptiſt had uſed before him, Repent ye, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand; which is as much as if he had ſaid, "Turn to God and fear him, working righteouſneſs, that ye may be made members of the kingdom of his Son, which is now approaching."

But ſhould the caſe of Cornelius, who was a devout man, &c. (from which caſe St. Peter makes the reflection, ver. 34, 35.) incline us to believe, that he means a greater degree of goodneſs, by fearing God, and working righteouſneſs, than was commonly to be found; and conſequently that what St. Peter ſays can be applied only to the moſt virtuous and beſt-diſpoſed heathens;—upon this ſuppoſition, both the caſe of Cornelius, and the declaration of St. Peter, evidently prove that the beſt of men ſtand in need of the aſſiſtances of the Goſpel of Chriſt to make themſelves ſecure of obtaining the end of their hopes, glory and immortality from God, who is the rewarder of them who diligently ſeek him. I would deſire thoſe who are of a contrary diſpoſition, and think that they have no reaſon to trouble their heads about the Chriſtian religion, provided they lead good lives,—to conſider the character of Cornelius. He was devout, and feared God, with all his houſe; he was very charitable, and gave alms to the people, and prayed to God continually. This, I ſuppoſe, they will allow to be a deſcription of ſuch a moral man as they mean; and I would aſk them for what purpoſe did God ſend a viſion to Cornelius, and another to St. Peter, that Cornelius might be made a Chriſtian? Was all this care thrown away upon a mere unneceſſary point, which might as well have been let alone? Was Cornelius thus called to the profeſſion of the Goſpel, and was it of no conſequence whether he had been called or no? If God made choice of Cornelius, one of the beſt of the Gentiles, to ſhew that ſome of them were capable of this grace, he did, at the ſame time, demonſtrate that all had need of it: For if the beſt, with all the light they enjoyed, wanted this aſſiſtance, what could the worſt do without it?

It may be aſked, perhaps, "what would have become of Cornelius, had he died as he had ſome time lived, a devout Gentile, in the fear of God, full of alms and of prayers, without having been called to the knowledge of Chriſt Jeſus?" Which queſtion, if purſued through all its views, would open a larger field of reflection than our work can admit of, but ſuch as would afford rather ſpeculation than profit; ſince the caſe, however determined, could no way affect us, who have been called to the knowledge of Chriſt Jeſus. Let it then be taken for granted that Cornelius, had he died in the circumſtances before deſcribed, would have found reſt to his ſoul from the mercy and goodneſs of God; and let this other queſtion be conſidered, which is much more to our purpoſe. "What would have been the caſe with Cornelius, if he had rejected the call,—refuſed to hearken to St. Peter, and had inſiſted on his own merit and virtue, in oppoſition to the grace which was offered him freely through the Goſpel?" Would ſuch a refuſal have been a pardonable error? Could he have maintained the character of one fearing God with all his houſe, after ſuch an open contempt of the divine call? Could he ever have prayed more to God, to guide and direct his way, after he had abſolutely denied to be guided and directed by him? Would even his alms have been an acceptable offering to the Almighty, after he had renounced that obedience, which is better than ſacrifice, and which is the only thing that can ſanctify our imperfect works? If reaſon and natural religion teach us, that it is our duty to pleaſe and to obey God, what part even of natural religion could this centurion have exerciſed, after he had ſolemnly rejected the counſel of God, and followed his own will, in oppoſition to that of his Maker, declared in the heavenly viſion?

And yet, bad as this ſuppoſed caſe of Cornelius would have been, it is the very caſe of thoſe, who, having been betimes inſtructed in the knowledge of the Goſpel, and called to the faith and obedience of Chriſt Jeſus, do deſpiſe and reject that faith, under the colour of preſerving the purity of natural religion, and living according to the dictates of reaſon and morality. It makes no difference in the caſe that their call has been through the ordinary adminiſtrations of the church, and that Cornelius's was by a viſion directed to himſelf; the voice of God is the ſame, whether he ſpeaks by his Apoſtles, or by his angels. Whoever acts by the appointment of God, ſpeaks with his authority; and the regular power of the church being ordained by him, when the church ſpeaks to her children conformably to the commiſſion received, it is the voice of God calling men to repentance unto life through Jeſus Chriſt: and whatever the condition of thoſe may be, who have never heard of the Lord who bought them, ours is certainly very bad, if, having heard of him, we reject and deſpiſe him. It is one thing to believe in Chriſt, becauſe we know him not; it is another to know him, and to diſbelieve him: and though ſuch ignorance may be an excuſe, yet ſuch knowledge muſt be condemnation.

Chap. XI. Ver. 2. They that were of the circumciſion contended with him] How good an argument ſoever this may be againſt the ſupremacy of St. Peter, it is none againſt the inſpiration of the Apoſtles; for it only proves, that ſome who did not well underſtand the principles on which they went, took upon them, without reaſon, to arraign their conduct, and conſequently did not, in this reſpect, pay a become deference to them. It plainly ſhews how little deference was paid to any uncircumciſed perſons, whatever profeſſion they might make of worſhipping the God of Iſrael. It appears from the reading in the Cambridge MS. that St. Peter either ſuſpected or knew that the Jewiſh Chriſtians at Jeruſalem had heard of what he had lately done, and that they were diſpleaſed. See Mill, Beza, and Wetſtein.

3 Saying, Thou wenteſt in to men uncircumciſed, and didſt eat with them.

4 But Peter rehearſed the matter from the beginning, and expounded it by order unto them, ſaying,

5 I was in the city of Joppa, praying: and in a trance I ſaw a viſion. A certain veſſel deſcend, as it had been a great ſheet, let down from heaven by four corners; and it came even to me.

6 Upon the which when I had faſtened mine eyes, I conſidered, and ſaw four-footed beaſts of the earth, and wild beaſts, and creeping things, and fowls of the air.

7 And I heard a voice ſaying unto me, Ariſe, Peter; ſlay and eat.

8 But I ſaid, Not ſo, Lord: for nothing common or unclean hath at any time entered into my mouth.

9 But the voice anſwered me again from heaven, What God hath cleanſed, that call not thou common.

10 And this was done three times: and all were drawn up again into heaven.

11 And behold, immediately there were three men already come unto the houſe where I was, ſent from Cæſarea unto me.

12 And the ſpirit bade me go with them, nothing doubting. Moreover, theſe ſix brethren accompanied me, and we entered into the man's houſe:

13 And he ſhewed us how he had ſeen an angel in his houſe, which ſtood and ſaid unto him, Send men to Joppa, and call for Simon, whoſe ſurname is Peter;

14 Who ſhall tell thee words, whereby thou and all thy houſe ſhall be ſaved.

15 And as I began to ſpeak, the Holy Ghoſt fell on them, as on us at the beginning.

16 Then remembered I the word of the Lord, how that he ſaid, John indeed baptized with water; but ye ſhall be baptized with the Holy Ghoſt.

17 Foraſmuch then as God gave them the like gift as he did unto us, who believed on the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, what was I that I could withſtand God?

18 When they heard theſe things, they held their peace, and glorified God, ſaying, Then hath God alſo to the Gentiles granted repentance unto life.

19 Now they which were ſcattered abroad upon the perſecution that aroſe about Stephen, travelled as far as Phenice, and Cyprus, and Antioch, preaching the word to none but unto the Jews only.

20 And ſome of them were men of Cyprus and Cyrene, which when they were come to Antioch ſpake unto the Grecians, preaching the Lord Jeſus.

21 And the hand of the Lord was with them: and a great number believed, and turned unto the Lord.

V. 3. Ch. x. 28. Gal. ii. 12.—V. 4. Luke i. 3.—V. 5. Ch. x. 9, &c.—V. 12. Ch. x. 19. xv. 7.—V. 15. Ch. ii. 4.—V. 16. John i. 26. Ch. i. 5. xix. 4. Iſai. xliv. 3. Joel ii. 28. iii. 18.—V. 17. Ch. xv. 8. Ch. x. 47.—V. 19. Ch. viii. 1.—V. 21. Ch. ii. 47.

Ver. 3. Saying, thou wenteſt in to men uncircumciſed] Saying, wherefore—διατι—did you aſſociate and eat with the uncircumciſed? See Gen. xliv. 4. Luke ii. 49. Pricæus, Heylin, and Wetſtein.

Ver. 4. But Peter rehearſed the matter, &c.] But Peter beginning, opened to them the matter in order. As it is probable that they were only ſome of the Jewiſh converts who queſtioned Peter about what he had done, he might, no doubt, have overborn them, by urging his apoſtolical authority, and referring them to the miracles by which it was eſtabliſhed; but as he could with no great propriety blame them, becauſe he himſelf, till of late, had been as bigoted to the Jewiſh nation as any of them, he pretends not to vindicate what he had done, by inſiſting upon his infalibility and pontifical authority; but treats them in the moſt gentle and condeſcending manner, laying before them the reaſon of his conduct, and appealing to their judgements, whether, in ſuch circumſtances, he had not acted according to reaſon and the divine direction: herein giving a moſt amiable example of humility and condeſcenſion, which it would be the glory and happineſs of Chriſt's miniſters to follow in circumſtances which bear any reſemblance to this. See Doddridge and Benſon.

Ver. 5. I ſaw—a certain veſſel deſcend, &c.] I ſaw—ſomewhat deſcending, in the form of a great ſheet. See on ch. x. 11. It is generally ſuppoſed, that in this ſheet all ſorts of creatures, clean and unclean, were repreſented, promiſcuouſly mixed together; but ſome expoſitors are of opinion, that they were only of the ſorts prohibited by the law; becauſe, ſay they, there would have been no room for Peter's ſcrupling to eat, had he ſeen any creatures there but what he apprehended to be prohibited by the law; but his expreſſion of nothing common or polluted and unclean, may lead us to conclude, that the Apoſtle, according to the Jewiſh principles, conceived the clean animals to be polluted by their intermixture and communication with the unclean.

Ver. 14. Who ſhall tell thee words] Who ſhall teach thee what is neceſſary for the ſalvation of thyſelf and thy family. Heylin.

Ver. 17. Foraſmuch then as God gave them, &c.] Since therefore God has granted the ſame gift to them as to us, &c. Heylin.

Ver. 18. When they heard theſe things, &c.] When they had heard St. Peter's apology, they were ſilent, and acquieſced for the preſent, turning their accuſations of the Apoſtle into praiſe and thankſgiving to Almighty God, who had granted unto the devout Gentiles, through Jeſus Chriſt his Son, ſpace to repent of their ſins; with a promiſe of full pardon and acceptance to eternal life, upon their repentance, faith, and future obedience, and who had received them into the Chriſtian church, equally with the believing Jews, without their being firſt circumciſed and brought into ſubjection to the whole law of Moſes. But though theſe particular perſons now acquieſced, yet this was the foundation of the grand controverſy in the apoſtolic age; for we ſhall find, as the hiſtory proceeds, that it broke out again with reſpect to the devout Gentiles, ch. xv. and was afterwards extended to the converts from among the idolatrous Gentiles, as appears from moſt of St. Paul's Epiſtles; and the attentive reader will there find how very difficult it was to allay the prejudices of the Jews and Jewiſh Chriſtians againſt the admiſſion of the Gentiles, unleſs they would firſt become proſelytes of righteouſneſs. See Benſon and Calmet.

Ver. 20. And ſome of them were men of Cyprus] But ſome of them, &c. St. Peter having opened the door of faith, and laid the foundation of a Chriſtian church among the Gentiles, after God had teſtified very plainly that it was agreeable to his mind and will, other Chriſtians hearing of this event, took occaſion from thence to imitate St. Peter's example; particularly ſome Jewiſh Chriſtians of the iſland of Cyprus, and of the country of Cyrene in Africa, travelling in their diſperſions to Antioch in Syria, preached the Chriſtian doctrine there, not to the Jews only, but alſo to the Gentiles, and God bleſſed and ſucceeded their labours. In our common copies of the Greek teſtament, the reading is πρὸς τοὺς Ἑλληνιστὰς, to the Helleniſts, or græciſing Jews; but in the Alexandrian manuſcript, and in the Syriac, Vulg. Coptic, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions, it is πρὸς τοὺς Ἕλληνας, to the Greeks, or uncircumciſed Gentiles: and all the beſt commentators are agreed, that this is evidently the true and original reading; for St. Luke had ſpoken of the converſion of the Helleniſts long before, ſee ch. vi. 1. But he is now proceeding to a new period, and, after having intimated that the diſperſed Chriſtians had hitherto preached to none but Jews, he, with great propriety, acquaints us, that when St. Peter had converted uncircumciſed Gentiles, they followed the example, and preached to the Gentiles alſo. The Jews frequently called all nations except their own Greeks, from the time of the Macedonian or Grecian empire, juſt as the Roman empire was afterwards called the whole world, becauſe it extended over the moſt conſiderable part of the then known world. See Rom. x. 12. 1 Cor. xiii. 13. Gal. iii. 28. Col. iii. 11. Mill, Wetſtein, Bengelius, Uſher, Le Clerc, &c. Concerning Antioch, ſee on ver. 26.

22 Then tidings of theſe things came unto the ears of the church which was in Jeruſalem: and they ſent forth Barnabas, that he ſhould go as far as Antioch.

23 Who, when he came, and had ſeen the grace of God, was glad, and exhorted them all, that with purpoſe of heart they would cleave unto the Lord.

24 For he was a good man, and full of the Holy Ghoſt, and of faith: and much people was added unto the Lord.

25 Then departed Barnabas to Tarſus, for to ſeek Saul:

26 And when he had found him, he brought him unto Antioch. And it came to paſs, that a whole year they aſſembled themſelves with the church, and taught much people. And the diſciples were called Chriſtians firſt in Antioch.

27 And in theſe days came prophets from Jeruſalem unto Antioch.

28 And there ſtood up one of them named Agabus, and ſignified by the Spirit, that there ſhould be great dearth throughout all the world: which came to paſs in the days of Claudius Cæſar.

29 Then the diſciples, every man according to his ability, determined to ſend relief unto the brethren which dwelt in Judea:

Ver. 22. Ch. ix. 27.—V. 23. Ch. xiii. 43. xiv. 22.—V. 24. Ch. vi. 5.—V. 25. Ch. ix. 30.—V. 26. Or, in the church.—V. 28. Ch. xxi. 10.—V. 29. 2 Cor. ix. 11.

Ver. 23, 24. The grace of God] The happy effects of the divine goodneſs, in taking ſuch a number of uncircumciſed Gentiles into the Chriſtian church. Barnabas, like a true ſon of exhortation, exhorted them to perſevere with ſteadfaſtneſs and reſolution;—to adhere to the Lord with full determination of heart; and indeed he was a very proper man to be ſent amongſt theſe converts, for he was not only a Cypriot, and born on Gentile ground, but he was a man of great benignity, and ſweetneſs of temper,—Ἀνὴρ ἀγαθὸς,—and on theſe accounts, leſs bigotted to his own, and againſt the Gentile converts, and leſs likely to lay any unneceſſary burden upon them. See Benſon, and Lord Barrington's Miſcell. Sacra.

Ver. 26. When he had found him, he brought him to Antioch] Barnabas might go in queſt of Saul, from a perſuaſion, that as he was by his country a Greek, though by deſcent an Hebrew of the Hebrews, i. e. deſcended from two Jewiſh parents, he would be peculiarly fit to aſſiſt him in his great work, eſpecially conſidering on the one hand, his fine accompliſhments as a ſcholar, and on the other, his extraordinary converſion, and eminent zeal and piety. Antioch was the metropolis of Syria; for magnitude, ſituation, and other agreeable circumſtances, the third city in the Roman empire, being excelled by none except Rome and Alexandria. It was built by Seleucus, and called Antioch from the name of his ſon Antiochus. There was a Jewiſh univerſity in this city, and a great number of proſelytes, according to Joſephus, out of whom was formed a large Chriſtian church, which was looked upon as the mother church of the Gentiles, as the church of Jeruſalem was of the Jewiſh, or of all the Chriſtian churches; and they were likewiſe the firſt fruits of the devout Gentiles out of Paleſtine. The Jewiſh converts had hitherto been called by their enemies, Men of that way, or ſect; Galileans, Nazarenes, and other like names of reproach; and among themſelves they had been called diſciples, believers, the church, the ſaints; and to denote the unity and concord which were among them, they ſtiled one another brethren. But now the Gentile converts at Antioch were (poſſibly not without a divine admonition, as we ſhall ſhew more fully by and by) called by the name of CHRISTIANS, taking their denomination immediately from their Lord and Maſter CHRIST himſelf, juſt as amongſt the philoſophers, the Platoniſts, Pythagoreans, &c. took their names from their ſeveral maſters. This name which has ſince ſpread far and wide, and whoſe ſound hath filled the earth, which hath been ſo dear to ſome, and ſo odious to others, was firſt given to the converts at Antioch, as is ſuppoſed, by divine appointment, at leaſt the word χρηματίσαι, here here uſed, ſignifies "to be warned by a divine admonition;" See Matth. ii. 12. Luke ii. 26. Acts x. 22. and accordingly Doddridge renders it, were called by divine appointment. Dr. Mill hath informed us, that the Cambridge MS. reads this ſentence thus; and then they firſt named by divine appointment, εχρηματισαν, the diſciples CHRISTIANS in Antioch; whereby is ſignified, that Barnabas and Saul firſt gave them the name of Chriſtians; and indeed the common reading fairly rendered, ſeems to intimate the ſame thing: and it came to paſs that they aſſembled, &c. and that they called the firſt diſciples at Antioch by the name of Chriſtians. Barnabas knew how unlikely it was that the church at Jeruſalem ſhould allow them the name of brethren, conſidering how ſtrongly they had been prejudiced againſt them, and how backward they had been to receive them into the Chriſtian church, though afterwards indeed the appellation of brethren was given them by the church at Jeruſalem, upon a full and mature conſideration of their caſe. See chap. xv. 23. However, as the Jewiſh Chriſtians could not preſently get over all their former prejudices, and allow thoſe Gentile converts to be upon a level with themſelves, and as it was nevertheleſs proper that they ſhould have ſome name to diſtinguiſh them from ſuch devout Gentiles as had not embraced the Chriſtian religion; for theſe, and ſuch-like wiſe reaſons, they were called and diſtinguiſhed by the name of Chriſtians, and if that name was given them by a divine admonition, as we have endeavoured to prove, it ſhews the divine concern for them, and the honour which Heaven put upon them, in dignifying and diſtinguiſhing them by ſo high and honourable an appellation. Witſius thinks it a circumſtance of remarkable wiſdom, that this celebrated name ſhould ariſe from Antioch, a church conſiſting of a mixture of Jews and Gentiles, rather than from Jeruſalem, dignified in ſo many other reſpects, and that it was a kind of victory gained over Satan, who, from Antioch ſome ages before, had raiſed ſo many cruel perſecutors of the church of God. See his Life of Paul, chap. iii. ſect. 5. Pearſon on the Creed, page 103. Uſher, Calmet, Benſon, and the Reflections.

Ver. 28. And there ſtood up one of them, named Agabus] Inſtead of the preſent reading of the beginning of this verſe, the Cambridge MS. reads, and there was great joy; and when we were gathered round him, one of them, &c. According to this reading, St. Luke the hiſtorian reckons himſelf as one of the Chriſtians then preſent. This agrees very well with the account which hath frequently been given of him, namely, that he was a native of Antioch in Syria; and as he is evidently diſtinguiſhed from them of the circumciſion, (Coloſſ. iv. 11. comp. with ver. 14.) he was moſt probably a devout Gentile. Agabus propheſied that the famine ſhould ſpread, ἐφ' ὅλην τὴν οἰκουμένην, which we render, throughout the whole world; but hereby was meant no more than the land of Judea. See on Matth. iv. 8. and on Luke ii. 1. Beſides, had the famine been to reach through the whole world, theſe diſciples at Antioch would very probably have ſent relief to other countries, if they had been able; or rather, perhaps they would have ſent to none at all, as fearing they ſhould want themſelves. But it is plain they underſtood the famine would happen in Judea, for there is not the leaſt hint, of their thinking of ſending relief to any other place; nor were they afraid of ſuffering by it themſelves; on the contrary, they ſent relief to the place where it was to happen, every man as he abounded, καθὼς ηυπορεῖτό τις, v. 29. whereby it is intimated, that they themſelves had plenty. This famine came to paſs about the latter end of the fourth or the beginning of the fifth year of Claudius Cæſar, the Roman emperor, and is taken notice of by Joſephus, Euſebius, and Oroſius. See Lardner's Credib. part i. p. 318. Wetſtein, Druſius, Uſher, Biſcoe's Lectures, p. 60. and Benſon.

Ver. 29. Then the diſciples every man, &c.] It had been a cuſtom for the Jews and proſelytes, in their ſeveral diſperſions, to ſend preſents to Judea, and eſpecially to Jeruſalem; and the Jews in Judea, ſeem to have expected it, as in ſome ſort their due; particularly we find that Helena, queen of the Adiabenes, and her ſon Izates, who had lately become proſelytes to the Jewiſh religion, were very generous to the poor at Jeruſalem, in this enſuing famine; for the queen went to ſee the temple, and to offer ſacrifices there; and finding Jeruſalem oppreſſed by the famine, and many periſhing through want, ſhe ſent abroad her officers, ſome of them to Alexandria, to buy corn; others to Cyprus to purchaſe dryed figs; who returned quickly and diſtributed food to the neceſſitous; by which means ſhe laid a laſting obligation upon the whole nation of the Jews, and her ſon Izates alſo, having heard of the famine, ſent a large ſum of money to the chief men at Jeruſalem. In conformity to ſo laudable a cuſtom, the Gentile Chriſtians at Antioch, upon Agabus's prediction of a famine in Judea, determined to give (every man in proportion to his own ability and plenty) towards a charitable collection for the relief of the Jewiſh converts in Judea and eſpecially in Jeruſalem, from whence the ſound of the goſpel firſt proceeded. See Rom. xv. 25, &c. &c. For "as they were made partakers of their ſpiritual things, they thought it their duty, to miniſter unto them in temporal things." Thus remarkably doth the wiſe and over-ruling Providence of God, adapt the common courſe of things ſo, as to ſubſerve his own great and beneficent deſigns, as plainly appears in the inſtance now before us. For the reception of uncircumcized Gentiles into the Chriſtian church, had a little ſowered the minds of the Jewiſh converts, but upon this approach of a famine, an early occaſion was given for cementing and uniting the Jewiſh and Gentile converts into one church and body, under Jeſus Chriſt their common Head and Lord: kindneſs and charity, moſt of all things tending to ſweeten men's minds, and beget a favourable opinion of the perſons who are ſo bounteous and liberal; the helping them in their diſtreſs, therefore, was the 30 Which alſo they did, and ſent it to the elders by the hands of Barnabas and Saul.

CHAP. XII.

King Herod perſecuteth the Chriſtians, killeth James, and impriſoneth Peter, whom an angel moſt effectual way to win over the Jewiſh converts; and the knowing of the famine before hand, ſo as to give them an opportunity to provide for it. When the church was in its tender infant ſtate, and many had forſaken all, to preach the Goſpel, plainly teſtifies the excellence and utility of the gifts of the ſpirit, and particularly that of propheſying: and indeed ſuch extraordinary difficulties and diſcouragements could hardly have been prevented or ſuſtained, without extraordinary helps and directions; ſee Joſephus's Antiq. b. xx. chap. 2. Euſebius, b. ii. chap. xii. Lardner, as above, Benſon, Witſius on the Life of Paul, chap. iii. ſect. 6. and Vitringa, de Synag. Vet. lib. iii. part 1.

Ver. 30. Sent it to the elders] The elders or early converts in the primitive church, were of three ſorts, 1ſt, αὐτόπται, the eye-witneſſes, or thoſe who had ſeen our Lord in the fleſh, and were amongſt the firſt diſciples or moſt early converts; 2dly, ἀπάρχαι, the firſt converts in any particular place, who were always honoured for their early converſion, and ready acceptance of the Goſpel, and were the primary elders of particular churches; 3dly, the διαδόχοι, ſucceſſors of the ἀπάρχαι, elders of the ſecond ſort. Thoſe elders to whom Barnabas and Saul carried a charitable collection, were probably of the firſt ſort, and ſuch of them as were not apoſtles, were honoured as next in dignity and eminence to the apoſtles. Upon the perſecution which followed the martyrdom of St. Stephen, moſt of the Chriſtians had fled from Jeruſalem, except the apoſtles: when that perſecution ceaſed, as it did ſome time before this, many of them returned again to Jeruſalem, among whom were very probably the elders here mentioned. When they returned, the apoſtles could the better leave that city, and viſit the other countries, as having left the mother church at Jeruſalem in ſafe hands, and the abſence of all the apoſtles appears to have been known to the Chriſtians at Antioch, from their ſending their contribution to the elders at Jeruſalem. See more concerning theſe elders in Benſon's Eſſay, annexed to 2 Tim. part 1. ch. iii. &c. and Lord Barrington's Miſc. Sacra, Eſſay 2. p. 110. It may be proper juſt to obſerve, that this is the firſt mention we have of elders in the Chriſtian church; and that Dr. Hammond labours to prove in a large note on this place, that theſe elders were the ſame officers with thoſe who were called ἐπισκοποι, or biſhops, and he thinks there is no certain evidence from Scripture, that the name of πρεσβυτεροι, or elders, was given ſo early to another order between them and deacons.

REFLECTIONS ON THE NAME OF CHRISTIANS.

Ver. 26.

Who can help making a ſerious pauſe of gratitude and wonder, that caſts his eye over this comprehenſive ſentence; The diſciples were called Chriſtians firſt at Antioch!—Chriſtians!—The followers of the Son of God incarnate, how honourable a diſtinction!—The diſciples of Jeſus Chriſt!—Thoſe who are alive from the dead! Called from darkneſs into the marvellous light of the Goſpel! How glorious a change and how inexpreſſible the goodneſs of God towards guilty ſinners in effecting this change!

Juſt at the time that mens abominations had rendered them ripe for deſtruction, the Almighty Father publiſhed his glad tidings of mercy to all, and aſſured them of his everlaſting loving-kindneſs, if they would hearken unto the voice of his well beloved Son. Chriſt Jeſus came into the world not to condemn the world, but that the world through him might be ſaved; to deliver us by the word of truth, the Goſpel of our Salvation; to caſt down all abominations, and every thing that loveth and maketh a lie; to recover envying mortals to the uſe of their reaſon; to dethrone the empire of ſin and ſatan; to put iniquity to open and univerſal ſhame; to baniſh all animoſities, and revenge, and ſedition, all bitterneſs, envying, and every evil work from the earth; to humanize the tempers, and ſoften the hearts of men, by inculcating upon their minds every civil and ſocial virtue, by enforcing them under new and more powerful ſanctions, and by uniting all mankind together in the bands of love. In ſhort, to conquer death and the grave, and upon the ruins of darkneſs and violence, to eſtabliſh a kingdom of light and peace; that ſo he might lead us, not to a land flowing with milk and honey, but to an heavenly country,—the everlaſting city of the great king.

Theſe were the glorious purpoſes of the captain of our ſalvation, and in order to accompliſh thoſe purpoſes, what a multitude of troubles did he encounter? what calumny and ſcorn? what watchings and faſtings? what poignant diſtreſſes of every kind did he endure? and, how undauntedly did he brave them all! The bar of Pilate could not move his integrity; the coronet of thorns could not make him deſert his cauſe; the ignominious croſs could not terrify or ſhame him. Unconquered even in death, obedience to the will of his heavenly Father, and the good of periſhing ſouls, were his only concern. As a lamb therefore led to the ſlaughter, he opened not his mouth: when ſtretched out on the accurſed tree, he could behold the hands of the executioners raiſed againſt him, and the horrid nails juſt ready to pierce his ſacred body, without recoiling, without a ſingle complaint: nay, and under the inconceivable load of ſorrows which oppreſſed him, his compaſſion towards ſinful creatures never failed him, but inſtead of reproaching them for that barbarous uſage which he met with, in the midſt of his agonies, he prayed to his heavenly father, to have mercy even upon thoſe wicked men, by whom he was crucified and ſlain!

Such was the Saviour of the world; ſuch that maſter after whom we are called Chriſtians; ſuch his love to frail mortals, from his cradle to his grave! yea, and after he had ſhaken off the fetters of mortality, his love was ſtill the ſame; he roſe from the dead to ſatisfy the diffident, and to confound the gainſayers; he converſed with his diſciples for 40 days together, and at laſt, to confirm all their hopes beyond the poſſibility of being deceived, he aſcended up viſibly into Heaven in the preſence of above five hundred brethren at once; nay, and ſtill further to animate and eſtabliſh their ſouls in the faith, he ſealed thoſe who believed with the Spirit of Promiſe, his almighty power from on high.

Hence therefore we now know, and are aſſured, that we have not followed after cunningly deviſed fables; that the calls of the Goſpel are not weak and deluſive, but the Power of God, and the Wiſdom of God. Hence we know, that we are no longer, aliens from the commonwealth of Iſreal, but a choſen generation, a peculiar people, the favourites of Heaven, created for immortality; the ſons of God, and heirs of glory. Our great Redeemer hath purchaſed for us an inheritance incorruptible, undefiled, and that fadeth not away: he hath brought us out from the moſt dreadful abyſs of miſery and confuſion, into the light of truth, and the adoption of celeſtial love: he hath ſeparated us from the more than brutal follies of paganiſm, and taught us to conſider the ruler of the univerſe as the only object of religious worſhip; Baal and Dagon are alike fallen: The Lord, he is the God, and Emmanuel is our King!

How glorious a revolution, would we but duly conſider its bleſſings! how ſtrikingly expreſſive of the grace of God! The temple is no more at Jeruſalem only; every true believer is himſelf a temple of the Holy Ghoſt; and in every corner of the globe, where the ſound of the Goſpel has been heard, the foundations are laid for the dwelling-place of the Moſt High. The middle wall of partition is thus broken down, and the doctrines of a future ſtate are as certainly eſtabliſhed, as that Jeſus himſelf is riſen from the grave. An happy, an everlaſting poſſeſſion is put into our hands, if we walk worthy of the vocation wherewith we are called in him; an incomparable inheritance far above all ſublunary enjoyments; a kingdom never to be moved; a treaſure that never can periſh or decay, and which is more than the moſt exalted conceptions we can form of ſuch objects; for eye hath not ſeen, nor ear heard, neither hath it entered into the heart of man to conceive the things which God hath prepared for them that love him. Such are the privileges which we enjoy as Chriſtians.

Can we then poſſibly reflect upon them without being moved? Can we reflect upon them, without ever after making them the moſt delightful ſubject of our meditations? What are all the pomp and glory, the riches and power, nay, the health, or ſtrength, or beauty, or any other gratification we can enjoy in this world? What but mean and contemptible, uncertain and fluctuating things, no more to be eſteemed than as droſs and dung, when compared with theſe durable, theſe Chriſtian privileges?

And ſhall we then reſign theſe privileges for any other acquiſitions of inferior name? Give up the ſubſtance for the ſhadow, and the treaſures of eternity for the things of time?—Shall the wiſe man glory in his wiſdom, the mighty in his ſtrength, the rich in his riches, the man of gallantry in his folly and his vices, and every ſinner in his ſhame? And ſhall not we much more glory in what is ſo truly glorious,—that we are Chriſtians? What is the name of Greek or Roman, what the name of Briton, when contradiſtinguiſhed with this, which we are ſo proud to bear? "CHRISTIAN, as the poet finely expreſſes it, Chriſtian is the higheſt ſtile of man;" a name which hath ſpread ſo far and wide, whoſe ſound hath filled the earth, and which hath been ſo dear to ſome, and ſo odious to others; a name, which, in its genuine and original meaning, includeth in it every thing that is virtuous or amiable, juſt or charitable, noble and divine; and a name which would ſtill have had the ſame glorious meaning, had it not been ſo frequently and ſo vilely proſtituted by multitudes, who have made great pretentions to it, while their tempers and practices have been very different from their profeſſion. Abominable and provoking in the ſight of God, as well as uncharitable and highly injurious to men!

Would to God that Chriſt had been the only Maſter, in whoſe name Chriſtians had ever gloried! that all who had ever been called by this ſacred and venerable name of Chriſtians, had anſwered their character by their temper and conduct! Then would they not have ranked under ſo many different heads and leaders, to the promoting of ſtrife and contention, inſtead of truth and piety, of virtue and charity; nor would the enemies of our holy religion have had any the leaſt occaſion to glory over us, and to deſecrate, by their contumelies, the ſacred appellation we aſſume.

All other nominal diſtinctions are too often the offspring of pride, or ignorance, or folly, and not at all to be deſired to make one wiſe; but Chriſtian, like that of its great original, is a name that is above every name; more precious than riches; more honourable than all the enſigns of royalty; and every one who is poſſeſſed with the leaſt inſight into its excellence and importance will aſpire after, will contend for, will rejoice in it, more than in any other name.

But alas! what avails it that we call ourſelves Chriſtians, if we do not delivereth upon the prayers of the church. In his pride, taking to himſelf the honour due to God, he is ſtricken by an angel, and dieth miſerably. After his death the word of God proſpereth.

NOW about that time, Herod the king ſtretched forth his hands to vex certain of the church.

2 And he killed James the brother of John with the ſword.

3 And becauſe he ſaw it pleaſed the Jews, he proceeded further, to take Peter alſo. (Then were the days of unleavened bread.)

4 And when he had apprehended him, he put him in priſon, and delivered him to four quaternions of ſoldiers to keep him; intending after Eaſter to bring him forth to the people.

5 Peter therefore was kept in priſon; but prayer was made without ceaſing of the church unto God for him.

Ver. 1. Or, began.—V. 2. Matth. iv. 21.—V. 3. Exod. xxiii. 15.—V. 4. John xxi. 18.—V. 5. Or, inſtant and earneſt prayer was made.

not receive with unfeigned aſſent whatever Chriſt has delivered?—If we do not obey with ready ſouls all thoſe ſacred precepts which he hath enjoined? If we are not indeed followers of Chriſt, why do we ſtile ourſelves Chriſtians? If we call ourſelves Chriſtians, why do we not prove ourſelves ſuch, and imitate our maſter? He hath ſet us a bright, a glorious example; and in vain, utterly in vain, ſhall we bear his name, if we labour not alſo to conform ourſelves to the pattern he hath ſet us. If we hold not pure the ſacred faith which he hath delivered; if we obey not ſincerely and affectionately the divine leſſons which he hath taught us.

What a diſgrace then, what a reproach are they to the Chriſtian name, who, ſo far from imitating the example, keeping pure the faith, and ſincerely obeying the laws of Chriſt, live in a direct—in a continued contrariety to each, to all of theſe? and call themſelves Chriſtians, while they live worſe than heathens, earthly, ſenſual, deviliſh! Far better would it be for ſuch, that they had never known, that they had never heard the name of Chriſt, that his bleſſed croſs had never been marked upon their infant brows! Far better had it been for them never to have been born, than to have wiped off that bleeding croſs by their foul miſdeeds, than to have defiled that holy name by their unholy practices. For alas! all the benefits and all the bleſſings which ariſe from that croſs, and that name, to the ſincere and upright, will to them be turned into curſes;—for they rejected the ſalvation of Chriſt; they deſpiſed his laws; they would not have this man to reign over them; and therefore they muſt not, they ſhall not reign eternally with him.

Let the reflection awaken us to duty; for if it be deſervedly accounted baſeneſs and degeneracy, to ſtain our blood, and reflect ſhame and diſhonour back upon thoſe forefathers, who were men of like frailties and paſſions with ourſelves, think how incomparably more heinous a provocation it muſt be, when thoſe, who name the name of Chriſt, depart not from iniquity, but miniſter occaſion to libertines and infidels to blaſpheme the Son of God and his Goſpel, through their impure and vicious, that is, indeed, their infamouſly-abſurd and contradictory converſation? For it is no indifferent matter how we behave, nor does it affect only ourſelves. As Chriſtian is a common name, ſo a wicked Chriſtian is a common reproach, and a common evil;—a ſtumbling-block in the way of numbers, drawing many weak ones to offend, who are apt to cry out, "In what are theſe Chriſtians, as they call themſelves, better than others? Nay, we ſee, in many reſpects, they are as bad or worſe than others?—Tell us not of embracing Chriſtianity, till we ſee that its profeſſors are more holy and exemplary men." To ſuch diſcreditors of the Goſpel and Chriſtian name, we may apply what Alexander the Great ſaid to a pitiful coward, of the ſame name with himſelf, Aut nomen aut mores muta; "Either change thy name or thy manners. No longer profeſs thyſelf Chriſtian, or act and live as becomes that high and venerable appellation! otherwiſe, when thou ſhalt give an account of thyſelf to the impartial almighty Judge, what canſt thou urge in plea? What canſt thou offer in excuſe of thy evil deeds, having been called a Chriſtian, and yet never having imitated the example, obeyed the precepts, or regarded the doctrines of Chriſt thy Lord and Maſter!"

There cannot ſurely be a character ſo odious, ſo juſtly abominable in the ſight of God and man, as that of him, who calling himſelf a Chriſtian, thus gives up all regard to every duty of Chriſtianity; who dares to call Jeſus Chriſt, Lord, Lord! tho' he doeth not the will of his heavenly Father. Amazing and unaccountable temerity! how can we reflect upon it without a generous diſdain and indignation.

Have we then, my readers, enliſted ourſelves under the ſacred banners of truth, and righteouſneſs, and peace? Let our lives be a ſtanding demonſtration to whom we belong. We who preach, A man ſhould not ſteal, let us never dare to ſteal. We who ſay, A man ſhould not commit adultery, let us abhor the thought of ſo contaminating a pollution. We who make our boaſt of the Goſpel, let us not diſhonour God and Chriſt, through tranſgreſſion of that Goſpel. We who profeſs to embrace that religion which deſcendeth from above, let us not give occaſion to Jews and Mahometans, and baptized infidels, through our vices, to blaſpheme its bleſſed Author. For, to uſe the argument of the great Apoſtle, "Verily, Chriſtianity profiteth, if we keep the laws of the Goſpel; otherwiſe our Chriſtianity is as no Chriſtianity, a mere farce and horrid mockery of God. For, to whomſoever we yield ourſelves ſervants to obey, his ſervants we are to whom we obey; whether of ſin unto death, or of obedience unto righteouſneſs and life eternal, through Jeſus Chriſt our Lord."

Chap. XII. Ver. 1. Herod the king] The Syriac verſion reads, Herod the king, ſurnamed Agrippa: Joſephus ſtyles him Agrippa; which probably was his Roman, as Herod was his Syrian name. He was the grandſon of Herod the Great, by his ſon Ariſtobulus, nephew to Herod Antipas, who beheaded John the Baptiſt, brother to Herodias, whom that inceſtuous Tetrarch married; and father to that Agrippa, before whom St. Paul made his defence, ch. xxv. 13. Caius Caligula, with whom he had an early friendſhip, when he became emperor, releaſed this Agrippa from the confinement under which Tiberius had on that very account kept him, and crowned him king of the Tetrarchy of his uncle Philip; to which he afterwards added the territories of Antipas, whom he baniſhed to Lyons in Gaul: In this authority Claudius confirmed him, and made him king of Judea, adding to his former dominions thoſe of Lyſanias. Mr. Fleming thinks it was high-treaſon againſt the Meſſiah, for him to aſſume the title of king of Judea, and that this arrogance, joined with his cruelty, rendered him more deſerving the terrible death mentioned ver. 23. This perſon deſired to ingratiate himſelf with the Jews by every method; and finding that the Chriſtians were under the popular odium, he ſtretched forth his hands to harraſs and moleſt them: He did not reflect upon the injuſtice of perſecuting the Chriſtians, though he and his countrymen had taken it ſo ill that the heathens, and particularly Caligula, had perſecuted the Jews; as if it had been perſecution only to moleſt the Jews for their religion; but had loſt its nature, and ceaſed to be perſecution, when practiced by the Jews upon the Chriſtians. See on ch. ix. 31. Fleming's Chriſtology, vol. iii. p. 358. Joſeph. Antiq. b. ix. c. 6, &c. and Lardner's Credib. part i. p. 19, &c.

Ver. 2. And he killed James] Thus was our Lord's prediction, relating to him, fulfilled, Matth. xx. 23. I know not how far we are to depend upon the tradition which we find cited by Euſebius, from a book of Clemens Alexandrinus, now loſt, in which he reported, "That the perſon who had accuſed James, obſerving the courage with which he bore his teſtimony to Chriſtianity, was converted, and ſuffered martyrdom with him;" but it ſeems very beautifully obſerved by Clarius, who had a great deal of the true ſpirit of criticiſm, that this early execution of one of the Apoſtles, after our Lord's death, would illuſtrate the courage of the reſt in going on with their miniſtry; as it would evidently ſhew, that even all their miraculous powers did not ſecure them from dying by the ſword of their enemies. Hereby the number of Apoſtles was reduced to eleven; and we do not find that any other Apoſtle was ſubſtituted in the ſtead of James, nor had the Apoſtles any ſucceſſors in their apoſtolic office, authority, and dignity. See Euſeb. Hiſt. Eccleſ. l. ii. c. 9. and Doddridge.

Ver. 3. And becauſe he ſaw it pleaſed the people] This prince, as Joſephus tells us, was a great zealot for the Moſaic law; dwelt much at Jeruſalem, and was fond of all opportunities to oblige the Jews, as his grandfather Herod had been of pleaſing ſtrangers: A character very agreeable to what St. Luke here ſays of him. Peter was apprehended about the beginning of April; and moſt probably in the third year of Claudius Cæſar. See Benſon, and Joſeph. Antiq. l. xix. c. 7.

Ver. 4. Four quaternions of ſoldiers] That is, to ſixteen, conſiſting of four in each party, who were to watch him by turns four at a time; two of them being chained to him, and two of them watching before the door of the priſon; one end of one chain was faſtened to St. Peter's right-hand, and the other end to the left arm of one of the ſoldiers; the other chain was in like manner faſtened to St. Peter's left arm, and to the ſoldier's right-arm: ſee ver. 6. Very likely the Jews remembered how all the apoſtles had eſcaped when they had formerly put them in priſon; and perhaps they ſuſpected the fidelity of the guards. It was therefore moſt probably at their requeſt, that ſuch a number of ſoldiers were appointed to guard the apoſtle, but the confining him was not all; for Herod intended after the paſchal lamb was eaten, and the ſeven days feſtival quite finiſhed, to bring him out to the people, and gratify them with putting him to death, and that publickly. During the feſtival, the Jews uſed to ſpend their time in ſuch mirth and feſtivity, that priſoners were commonly releaſed, rather than executed. But notwithſtanding all their zeal about rituals, they could ſubmit to be concerned in the vileſt immoralities. See chap. xxviii. 16. and Lardner's Credib. part I. b. i. chap. x. Inſtead of after Eaſter, the Greek would more properly be rendered after the paſſover.

Ver. 5. Without ceaſing] Ἐκτενὴς ſignifies not only continuance, but likewiſe earneſtneſs, importunity, and vehemence. See Hammond, Stockius, &c.

6 And when Herod would have brought him forth, the ſame night Peter was ſleeping between two ſoldiers, bound with two chains; and the keepers before the door kept the priſon.

7 And behold, the angel of the Lord came upon him, and a light ſhined in the priſon: and he ſmote Peter on the ſide, and raiſed him up, ſaying, Ariſe up quickly. And his chains fell off from his hands.

8 And the angel ſaid unto him, Gird thyſelf, and bind on thy ſandals: and ſo he did. And he ſaith unto him, Caſt thy garment about thee, and follow me.

9 And he went out and followed him, and wiſt not that it was true which was done by the angel; but thought he ſaw a viſion.

10 When they were paſt the firſt and the ſecond ward, they came unto the iron gate that leadeth unto the city; which opened to them of his own accord: and they went out, and paſſed on through one ſtreet; and forthwith the angel departed from him.

11 And when Peter was come to himſelf, he ſaid, Now I know of a ſurety, that the Lord hath ſent his angel, and hath delivered me out of the hand of Herod, and from all the expectation of the people of the Jews.

12 And when he had conſidered the thing, he came to the houſe of Mary, the mother of John, whoſe ſurname was Mark; where many were gathered together, praying.

13 And as Peter knocked at the door of the gate, a damſel came to hearken, named Rhoda.

14 And when ſhe knew Peter's voice, ſhe opened not the gate for gladneſs, but ran in, and told how Peter ſtood before the gate.

15 And they ſaid unto her, Thou art mad. But ſhe conſtantly affirmed that it was even ſo. Then ſaid they, It is his angel.

16 But Peter continued knocking: and when they had opened the door, and ſaw him, they were aſtoniſhed.

17 But he beckening unto them with the hand to hold their peace, declared unto them how the Lord had brought him out of the priſon. And he ſaid, Go ſhew theſe things unto James, and to the brethren. And he departed, and went into another place.

18 Now as ſoon as it was day, there was no ſmall ſtir among the ſoldiers, what was become of Peter.

19 And when Herod had ſought for him, and found him not, he examined the keepers, and commanded that they ſhould be put to death. And he went down from Judea to Cæſarea, and there abode.

Ver. 7. Ch. v. 19.—V. 9. Pſ. cxxvi. 1.—V. 10. Ch. xvi. 26.—V. 11. Dan. vi. 22.—V. 12. Ch. iv. 23. Ch. xv. 37.—V. 13. Or, to aſk who was there.—V. 17. Ch. xiii. 16. xix. 33. xxi. 40.

Ver. 7. The angel of the Lord] An angel of the Lord. Inſtead of ſmote Peter on the ſide. Dr. Heylin reads, touched Peter on the ſide.

Ver. 9. And wiſt not] And knew not. MS.

Ver. 10. When they were paſt the firſt and ſecond ward] The firſt and ſecond watch, where the guards were placed to ſecure the priſon. Heylin renders it very agreeably to the Greek, the firſt and ſecond guard. It was uſual amongſt the eaſterns to plate over their gates with thick iron. Pitts tells us, that Algiers hath five gates, and ſome of theſe have two, ſome three other gates within them, and ſome of them are plated all over with thick iron; and Dr. Pococke tells us the ſame of ſome gates not far from Antioch. See obſervations on Sacred Scripture, p. 111. The angel having conducted St. Peter into the ſtreet, left him; for when things are within men's own power, it is folly and preſumption to expect extraordinary aſſiſtance.

Ver. 11. Now know I of a ſurety, &c.] The apoſtle may be underſtood here as alluding to a ſimilar deliverance, chap. v. 19. The time in which he was delivered was very critical,—it being the night preceeding the day appointed for his execution; and if the apoſtle had not been thus miraculouſly freed, he would probably have been put to death like Stephen or James. See Doddridge and Grotius.

Ver. 12. And when he had conſidered the thing] And making haſte, (σπευδων) Hammond. And deliberating with himſelf, or recollecting where he was; Heylin and Doddridge. The Mark here mentioned, is thought by Grotius to have been a different perſon from Mark the Evangeliſt. He was the ſon of Mary, as we are here informed, and he is ſpoken of as ſiſter's-ſon to Barnabas, (Col. iv. 10.) who appears to have had a great affection for him, not only by taking him with him to Antioch, and from thence to Pamphylia, but by his inſiſting afterwards, when ſetting out upon another progreſs, that Mark ſhould go with them to viſit the churches, to which Paul was ſo averſe, that they parted; chap. xv. 37—40. We have no further account of him in the Acts, but he appears to have ſo far retrieved his character, that he is recommended afterwards by the apoſtles to the Coloſſians as above; and when he was at Rome, St. Paul mentions him among his fellow-labourers, Phil. v. 24. and at laſt ſpeaks of his deſire to ſee him, as one who was uſeful to him in the miniſtry, 2 Tim. iv. 11. See Grotius and Calmet.

Ver. 13. At the door of the gate] The word πυλῶν, here properly ſignifies what we generally call the gateway of a large houſe, by which, if there be an area ſurrounded with buildings, you paſs into it; and it is probable that this was no ſmall houſe, as many were aſſembled there. Rhoda ſignifies in Engliſh roſe; and Grotius has obſerved, that the Jews frequently gave to their female children the name of agreeable flowers or plants. Thus Suſanna ſignifies a lily, Hedeſſa a myrtle, Tamar a palm-tree, &c. See Shaw's Travels, p. 207. Grotius, and the note on Mark ii. 4. Inſtead of to hearken, Dr. Waterland reads to aſk who was there.

Ver. 15. It is his angel] Many commentators underſtand this as if they had ſaid, "It is his meſſenger, or one ſent from him;" and it is certain that the word Ἄγγελος hath frequently this ſenſe in the Scripture; but as the maid averred that ſhe knew his voice, and was aſſured that it was Peter himſelf, it ſeems more probable that they judged it to be ſomething ſupernatural. Poſſibly they might imagine that it was an angel who aſſumed his form, to bring them ſome tidings of him; or that he had been executed in priſon, as John the Baptiſt was, in the night, and that his ſeparate ſpirit appeared as a token of its being employed, as angels are, in miniſtring to the church on earth. See Matth. xviii. 10. It is by no means certain, that they imagined this to be his guardian angel; for Philo ſpeaks of it as a received notion amongſt the Jews, that the ſouls of good men deceaſed officiated as miniſtring ſpirits. But whatever their notion was, one way or other, no argument can be drawn from it, as to the truth of either of theſe ſuppoſitions. See Sir Thomas Brown's Religio Medici, p. 19. and Waterland's Sermons, vol. ii. p. 90.

Ver. 17. Unto James] As James the brother of John was dead, ver. 2. the perſon here referred to muſt be James the leſs, the ſon of Alpheus, who was probably the only Apoſtle then at Jeruſalem, except St. Peter. He was in great eſteem among the Apoſtles, and wrote the Epiſtle which bears his name. The Papiſts will have it that St. Peter, at this time retiring from Jeruſalem, went to Rome, to found a Chriſtian church there; but they ſay ſo, only becauſe they apprehend it makes for their purpoſe to have men believe ſo: for they have no ancient or authentic hiſtory to ſupport their aſſertion of his going thither ſo early, if at all. See Grotius, Benſon, Beza, and the writers in the Popiſh controverſy.

Ver. 19. And commanded that they ſhould be put to death] And commanded them to be led away to execution. It is well know that the word απαχθηναι, has this ſignification; thus the wicked ſuffered in the room of the righteous. Herod, probably, puniſhed the keepers with ſuch ſeverity, leſt the apprehenſion of a miraculous deliverance ſhould have prevailed, and ſo Chriſtianity have gained, as it probably did, additional ſtrength. What had ſo notoriouſly happened to all the twelve Apoſtles, in a circumſtance much reſembling this, ch. v. 19. would no doubt add great weight to ſuch a repreſentation; and it ſeems 20 And Herod was highly diſpleaſed with them of Tyre and Sidon: but they came with one accord to him, and having made Blaſtus, the king's chamberlain, their friend, deſired peace; becauſe their country was nouriſhed by the king's country.

21 And upon a ſet day, Herod, arrayed in royal apparel, ſat upon his throne, and made an oration unto them.

22 And the people gave a ſhout, ſaying, It is the voice of a god, and not of a man.

23 And immediately the angel of the Lord ſmote him, becauſe he gave not God the glory: and he was eaten of worms, and gave up the ghoſt.

24 But the word of God grew and multiplied.

25 And Barnabas and Saul returned from Jeruſalem, when they had fulfilled their miniſtry, and took with them John, whoſe ſurname was Mark.

Ver. 20. Or, bare an hoſtile mind, intending war. Gr. that was over the king's bed-chamber.. 1 Kings v. 9, 11. Ezek. xxvii. 17.—V. 24. Iſai. lv. 11. Ch. vi. 7. xix. 20. Col. i. 6.—V. 25. Or, charge, ch. xi. 29, 30. Ch. xiii. 5, 13.

ſeems that this ſeaſonable interpoſition of Providence, joined with the death of Herod ſoon after, put a ſpeedy end to this perſecution. See Beza, Heinſius, and Calmet.

Ver. 19, 20. And he went down from Judea, &c.] See on ch. viii. 40. Herod the Great, after he had built Cæſarea Paleſtinæ, had inſtituted games to the honour of Cæſar, which were to be celebrated every fifth year. Not long after the apprehending of St. Peter, the uſual time recurred for the celebration of theſe games. Herod Agrippa went down to Cæſarea upon this occaſion. Another affair which called him to that part of his dominions was, his being highly offended with the inhabitants of Tyre and Sidon, againſt whom he meditated a war; but they being trading cities, and unable to carry on their traffic without a free commerce in Galilee, and other parts of Herod's dominions, from whence they uſed to purchaſe large quantities of corn and other proviſions, they bribed Blaſtus the king's chamberlain, who had great influence over his maſter, and by that means obtained peace. Joſephus confirms this account of Herod's journey, which, according to him, was the third year of his reign over the whole country. See Antiq, b. 19. ch. 8. Servius in Æn. i. v. 39. 1 King. v. 9—11. Ezek. xxvii. 17. Wetſtein and Benſon. Inſtead of was highly diſpleaſed, Heylin and Waterland read was preparing to make war,—θυμομαχῶν: And inſtead of nouriſhed, Heylin reads ſubſiſted.

Ver. 21—23. And upon a ſet day Herod, &c.] Upon occaſion of the games and approaching feſtival mentioned in the laſt verſe, there was a great reſort of the governors and principal men of the neighbouring provinces, and of perſons of figure from all the ſurrounding counties. On the ſecond day of that ſolemnity, Herod Agrippa came early in the morning, moſt probably into the amphitheatre, built by his grandfather Herod the Great, dreſſed in a robe of moſt curious workmanſhip, all made of ſilver, as Joſephus informs us; which reflecting the rays of the riſing ſun, with an unuſual and almoſt inſupportable ſplendor, gave him a moſt aweful and majeſtic appearance. In that magnificent manner he ſat upon his throne, and made an oration to the people; which, when he had finiſhed, they cried out with flattering acclamations, "Surely this is the Bath kol,—the ſpeech of God,—and not of any mortal man!" See the Syriac verſion. The king was pleaſed with this blaſphemous applauſe, and did not reprove the perſons, nor reject their impious adulation. Mr. Fleming imagines, that they herein refered to the glory with which the ſhechinah uſed to appear; and that Herod being profane enough to aſſume the honour of it, provoked the divine majeſty beyond any further ſufferance; ſo that he ſent a diſeaſe upon him, which rendered him equally contemptible and miſerable. "As he did not rebuke this impious flattery, ſays Joſephus, he was immediately ſeized with exquiſite and racking tortures in his bowels, ſo that he was compelled, before he left the place, to own his folly in admitting ſuch acclamations, and upbraided thoſe about him with the wretched condition in which they ſaw their God; and being carried out of the aſſembly to his palace, he expired in violent agonies the fifth day after he was taken, in the fifty-fourth year of his age, and the ſeventh of his reign;" reckoning from the time of his firſt advancement by Caligula, to the tetrarchy of his uncle Philip, being the fourth year of the emperor Claudius, A. D. 44. Some have ſuppoſed,—when it is ſaid an angel ſmote him, that this is only a Jewiſh phraſe, to ſignify that he was ſuddenly ſeized with this diſorder by the direction of Providence. See 2 Cor. xii. 7. 1 Theſſ. ii. 18. Others think, that a real though inviſible agency of a celeſtial ſpirit on this occaſion is expreſſed. Comp. 2 Sam. xxiv. 16. 2 Kings xix. 35. The word Σκωληκόβρωτος, ver. 23. ſignifies in the general conſumed with vermin, and may expreſs the diſeaſe called morbus pedicularis, of which ſeveral cruel and perſecuting princes have died. Elſner has given ſeveral inſtances of the madneſs of heathen princes, who arrogated divinity to themſelves, and came to the moſt infamous and ſhocking ends. Antiochus Epiphanes and Herod the Great both died in the ſame manner with Herod Agrippa. See 2 Maccab. ix. 9. and on Matth. ii. 19. Herod Agrippa's knowledge of the true God, and of his jealouſy with reſpect to divine honours, no doubt aggravated his guilt. The reader will find, by referring to Joſephus, a wonderful harmony between the accounts which he and St. Luke have given of this affair. Joſephus is indeed larger, and more expreſs; though, out of a partial fondneſs, as it ſeems, for Herod Agrippa, whom he had ſo much extolled, he hath concealed the particular diſeaſe, which was the true cauſe of the excruciating pains in the bowels which he mentions. Herod left behind him a ſon called Agrippa, then ſeventeen years of age, before whom St. Paul afterwards appeared, and made an apology for Chriſtianity. He left alſo two daughters, taken notice of in the New Teſtament; namely, Berenice, who was married to Herod king of Chalcis, his father's brother, being ſixteen years of age; and Druſilla, who was afterwards married to the governor Felix: as well as Mariamne, of whom there is no mention in the Scripture. After the death of Herod Agrippa, the kingdom was again reduced to a Roman province, when the perſecution of the Chriſtians for a while abated. See Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xix. c. 8. Lardner's Credibil. part i. p. 22. Beza, Elſner; and Mede's Med. Sacr. p. 101, &c.

Ver. 24. Grew and multiplied] The expreſſions here uſed relate properly to vegetables, and may be intended to ſignify, that the growth of the Goſpel, that is, its prevalency in the minds and lives of ſome, was, as it were, the means of ſowing that divine ſeed in the hearts of many more. See Doddridge, and on Mark iv. 26, &c.

Ver. 25. And when they had fulfilled their miniſtry] When they had diſtributed the alms which they brought from Antioch to the elders at Jeruſalem, ch. xi. 29, 30.——Thus ends the ſecond period of the hiſtory of the firſt planting of Chriſtianity, in which the converſion of the devout Gentiles, otherwiſe called proſelytes of the gate, is chiefly treated of; and here the hiſtory of the Apoſtles of the circumciſion is very naturally dropped; for it does not appear from the New Teſtament that they ever preached to idolatrous Gentiles, at leaſt, before the deſtruction of Jeruſalem: That was the province of the Apoſtles of the uncircumciſion, whoſe labours with, and ſucceſs among the idolatrous Gentiles, is the ſubject of the following chapters.

REFECTIONS ON CHAP. XII.

How ſtrange a conſideration is it, that a murder like this of St. James ſhould pleaſe the Jews! ver. 1—3. To ſee the ſlaughter of one of the moſt excellent perſons that ever adorned their nation; one of the greateſt benefactors that had ever appeared in all the liſt of the prophetic and inſpired race, ſlain with the ſword of a lawleſs, time-ſerving tyrant! yet thus it was that they proceeded to fill up the meaſure of their fathers, Matth. xxiii. 32. and ſuch was ſtill the hardneſs of their hearts, that after having rejected the meſſage, they ſoon came to hate the meſſengers, and to thirſt for their blood;—the ſureſt token of wrath coming upon them to the uttermoſt! As indeed it it was but a few years more, and ſuch an execution was done upon them, as ſeemed to be the accumulated vengeance due for all the righteous blood from Abel to James.

Peter is alſo impriſoned, and bound in chains; but the prayers and tears of the church contending for his delivery, deſpicable as they might appear to his enemies, pierce the clouds of heaven; and they find, to their ſhame and confuſion, that his redeemer is ſtrong, Jer. i. 34. The angel of the Lord Jeſus is ſent to his faithful ſervant in his tribulation: he comes, and finds him, ſecure in his innocence, and happy in hope, ſleeping between thoſe two guards, who perhaps, in a few hours, were to have been his executioners; and ſleeping ſo ſweetly ſound, that the brightneſs of the angelic preſence did not immediately awaken him, ver. 5, 6. The angel ſmites him, and his chains fall off; the iron gates are opened, as with a thought, and the priſoner is ſet at full liberty:—And thus doth the angel of death ſmite as it were, but with a gentle blow, the ſervants of Chriſt, and the fetters of mortality fall off; the doors of the dungeon are opened; they are led triumphantly into the new Jeruſalem, and there find another kind of ſociety, another kind of reſt, another kind of joy, far more noble, ſweet, and high, than Peter knew even in the firſt tranſports of his wonderous deliverance: Ver. 7—10.

The Apoſtle was ſo venerated and beloved by the diſciples, that on his behalf we find the prayers of the night are added to thoſe of the day. Pious men and women, the aged and the young, with equal ſolicitude, aſſemble on this important occaſion; and while they are praying, the God who heareth prayer, anſwers them: while they are yet ſpeaking, he hears their cry, Iſai. lxv. 24. Behold! Peter himſelf is ſent among them, to bring the aſtoniſhing news of that real deliverance, which at firſt ſeemed to him but as a viſion of the night. What delight muſt ſuch a mercy give their melting hearts, eſpecially when conſidered as an anſwer of prayer! What an encouragement muſt it be to them all, to hold faſt the profeſſion of their faith without wavering, and in every future exigence by prayer and ſupplication to make their requeſts known unto God! ver. 9, 12—16.

CHAP. XIII.

Paul and Barnabas are choſen to go to the Gentiles. Of Sergius Paulus, and Elymas the ſorcerer. Paul preacheth at Antioch, that Jeſus is Chriſt. The Gentiles believe; but the Jews gainſay, and blaſpheme: whereupon they turn to the Gentiles. As many as were ordained to life, believed.

NOW there were in the church that was was at Antioch, certain prophets and teachers; as Barnabas, and Simeon that was called Niger, and Lucius of Cyrene, and Manaen, which had been brought up with Herod the Tetrarch, and Saul.

2 As they miniſtered to the Lord, and faſted, the Holy Ghoſt ſaid, Separate me Barnabas and Saul, for the work whereunto I have called them.

3 And when they had faſted and prayed, and laid their hands on them, they ſent them away.

4 So they, being ſent forth by the Holy Ghoſt, departed unto Seleucia; and from thence they ſailed to Cyprus.

5 And when they were at Salamis, they preached the word of God in the ſynagogues of the Jews: and they had alſo John to their miniſter.

6 And when they had gone through the iſle unto Paphos, they found a certain ſorcerer, a falſe prophet, a Jew, whoſe name was Bar-jeſus:

7 Which was with the deputy of the country, Sergius Paulus, a prudent man; who called for Barnabas and Saul, and deſired to hear the word of God.

8 But Elymas the ſorcerer, (for ſo is his name by interpretation,) withſtood them, ſeeking to turn away the deputy from the faith.

Ver. 1. Ch. xiv. 26. Rom. xvi. 21. Or, Herod's foſter-brother.—V. 2. Ch. ix. 15. xxii. 21. Rom. i. 1. Gal. ii. 9. Matth. ix. 38. Rom. x. 15. Hebr. v. 4.—V. 3. Ch. vi. 6.—V. 4. Ch. iv. 36.—V. 5. Ch. xii. 25. xv. 37.—V. 8. Exod. vii. 11. 2 Tim. iii. 8.

Peter was ſolicitous it might be known to the ſurviving James, and the other Apoſtles, that ſo they might glorify God in him, and take encouragement from it to go on boldly in the proſecution of their work, ver. 17. With ſuch views as theſe ſhould we alſo own the goodneſs of God in any deliverance he grants us, that others may learn to confide in him, and may join their praiſes with ours.

Herod, in his diſappointment, turns his rage on the ſoldiers, and makes thoſe unhappy men the victims of his wrath, ver. 18, 19. Unhappy indeed, if they had not learnt from Peter, whilſt they had him in their power, that leſſon which his charity would be ſo glad to teach them, in what he apprehended to be the laſt moments of his life,—to believe in Jeſus for life and ſalvation. But whatever they ſuffered, a much ſeverer fate was reſerved for Herod, on whom God quickly began to viſit that innocent and pious blood which he had ſpilt, and that too after which he had thirſted; for in His all-piercing ſight he muſt have appeared the murderer of Peter, as well as of James.

The wrath of a king, ſays Solomon, is as the meſſengers of death; but a wiſe man will pacify it, Prov. xvi. 14. The world generally teaches this wiſdom to its votaries; and the ties of intereſt are felt, when thoſe of affection have but little force. Tyre and Sidon were nouriſhed by the King's country, and therefore they ſought peace with him, ver. 20. But how much more neceſſary is it for all countries and people, and princes to ſeek peace with the God of heaven, by whom the earth and all its inhabitants are nouriſhed; who giveth rain from heaven, and fruitful ſeaſons, and can, by his ſovereign word, turn the heavens into braſs, and the earth into iron. Deut. xxviii. 23.

How vain and impious was the applauſe of this ſervile multitude, when they were ſo ready to compliment a mortal man, in ſhining apparel, and on a royal throne, with the title of divinity! How wretched the infatuation of his mind, when he could receive that aſcription without horror, nay, and even with complacency! ver. 21, 22.—Thus do pomp and power, wealth and grandeur, corrupt and take away the heart of their poſſeſſors. Never is a mortal nearer to deſtruction, than when he forgets that he is a mortal.

With pleaſure, no doubt, did the angel of the Lord come down, ver. 23. to execute upon this proud and perſecuting prince the vengeance due to the honours of God which he had invaded, and the blood of his ſaints, which he had ſpilled.—Let us adore the triumph of the injured majeſty of heaven. Herod was ſmitten with death,—with a death equally tormenting and ignominious. Vermin devoured this god: nor could all his robes, his guards, or his phyſicians preſerve his living body from being as eaſy a prey to them, as the carcaſe of the meaneſt ſlave.

Thus is the Almighty Sovereign of the univerſe, known by the judgements which he executeth upon the haughty ones of the earth; and well might the Goſpel flouriſh on occaſion of ſuch an event, (ver. 24.) when this royal corpſe was (as it were) given for manure to the roots of that ſacred vine, which he, in contempt of the King of kings, by whom it was planted, had impiouſly endeavoured to root up and deſtroy.

Chap. XIII. Ver. 1. Now there was in the church at Antioch] The laſt verſe of the foregoing chapter, ought to have been the firſt of this; for ch. xii. 24. finiſhes the ſtory of Herod's death, and the effects which it had upon the Chriſtian church; and then, ver. 25. a new ſtory is begun, which is carried on in the preſent chapter. Some have conjectured that Niger, mentioned in this verſe, was Simon the Cyrenian, the father of Alexander and Rufus, who was compelled to bear the croſs after Chriſt; for it is very probable that he was called Niger, as being of a tawny or black complexion, as the Africans generally are. The only objection to this is, that Lucius, who is next mentioned, is called a Cyrenian, by way of diſtinction from the other, as if he had been the only Cyrenian there preſent: But this Simon, called Niger, might be a native of ſome other part of Africa. Whoever he was, the Romans moſt probably had given him the ſurname of Niger. This is one inſtance out of many, of St. Luke's latiniſing, where he preſerves even the Latin termination. Manaen, probably, from the circumſtance here mentioned, was a perſon of ſome rank and condition. Joſephus mentions one Manaen, an Eſſene, who had foretold Herod the Great, while he was a boy, that he ſhould be a king, and who was afterwards in high favour with him; and ſome have thought this was his ſon. See Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xv. c. 10. Benſon, and Biſcoe's Lectures, p. 79.

Ver. 2. For the work whereunto I have called them] If there be any reference to a paſt fact in theſe words, it is probably to ſome revelation perſonally made to Paul and Barnabas, to ſignify that they ſhould take a journey into ſeveral countries of Aſia Minor, to preach the Goſpel there. See Doddridge, and ch. xi. 20, 21.

Ver. 4. Sent forth by the Holy Ghoſt] This ſeems to be added to remind us, that though they were ſolemnly recommended to God by the prayers of their brethren, their authority was not derived from them, but from the Holy Ghoſt; and conſequently affords a further proof of the miraculous converſion of St. Paul. See the Reflections on ch. ix. Seleucia lay fifteen miles below Antioch, upon the ſame river, the Orontes, and was five miles from the place where that river falls into the ſea. It had its name from Seleucus Nicator, by whom it was built. From hence they ſailed to the iſland of Cyprus, ſituated in the eaſtern part of the Mediterranean ſea, being the native country of Barnabas. As this iſland was not far from Judea, it abounded with Jews. The firſt place which they arrived at in that iſland, was the city Salamis, which lay upon the eaſtern extremity, and was one of the nigheſt ports to Syria. See the next note.

Ver. 6—8. Paphos] The city of Paphos was ſeated on the weſtern extremity of the iſland of Cyprus, and famous among the heathens for the temple and obſcene worſhip of the Paphian Venus. There reſided Sergius Paulus, the Roman proconſul, who was a man of good underſtanding, and well diſpoſed to receive the truth, and obey it; and as he had heard of the character of theſe two Apoſtles, and, very probably, ſome imperfect rumour of the Chriſtian religion, he ſent for them, and deſired that they would give him an account of the Chriſtian doctrine. As he was the firſt of the idolatrous Gentiles, to whom the Goſpel was ever preached, Barnabas and Saul did not go to offer it to him; for they had ſcarce ſhook off their Jewiſh prejudices; but he ſent for them, as Cornelius, the firſt fruits of the devout Gentiles, ſent for St. Peter; requeſting it as a favour, that he might hear them preach the Goſpel. But with the proconſul there was one of the Magi, a falſe prophet of the nation of the Jews, whoſe name was Bar-jeſus: He had a great influence over the governor; and when this Bar-jeſus, (who was otherwiſe called Elymas, which in the Arabic tongue ſignifies the Magian) found that the proconſul was inclined to hear and embrace the Chriſtian doctrine; he ſecretly, and with all his might, endeavoured to diſſuade him from it. Saul ſoon detected his malice and wickedneſs, and ſeverely reprimanded him, denouncing againſt him the approaching judgements of God; juſt as St. Peter had reprimanded the hypocriſy and wickedneſs of Simon the Magian, and by his apoſtolic power inflicted death upon Ananias and Sapphira for their fraud and lying. See Lardner's Credib. b. i. part i. p. 31. Biſcoe's Lectures, p. 55; &c. Benſon, and Beza.

9 Then Saul, (who alſo is called Paul,) filled with the Holy Ghoſt, ſet his eyes on him,

10 And ſaid, O full of all ſubtilty and all miſchief, thou child of the devil, thou enemy of all righteouſneſs! wilt thou not ceaſe to pervert the right ways of the Lord?

11 And now, behold, the hand of the Lord is upon thee, and thou ſhalt be blind, not ſeeing the ſun for a ſeaſon. And immediately there fell on him a miſt and a darkneſs; and he went about ſeeking ſome to lead him by the hand.

12 Then the deputy, when he ſaw what was done, believed, being aſtoniſhed at the doctrine of the Lord.

13 Now, when Paul and his company looſed from Paphos, they came to Perga in Pamphylia: and John departing from them, returned to Jeruſalem.

14 But when they departed from Perga, they came to Antioch in Piſidia, and went into the ſynagogue on the ſabbath-day, and ſat down.

15 And after the reading of the law and the prophets, the rulers of the ſynagogue ſent unto them ſaying, Ye men and brethren, if ye have any word of exhortation for the people, ſay on.

16 Then Paul ſtood up, and beckoning with his hand, ſaid, Men of Iſrael, and ye that fear God, give audience.

17 The God of this people of Iſrael choſe our fathers, and exalted the people when they dwelt as ſtrangers in the land of Egypt, and with an high arm brought he them out of it.

Ver. 10. Matth. xiii. 38. John viii. 44. 1 John iii. 8.—V. 13. Ch. xv. 38.—V. 14. Ch. xvi. 13. xvii. 2. xviii. 4.—V. 15. Luke iv. 16. Ver. 27. Hebr. xiii. 22.—V. 16. Ch. xii. 17. Ver. 42, 43.—V. 17. Exod. i. 1. Exod. vi. 6. xiii. 14, 16.

Ver. 9. Saul, (who is alſo called Paul)] The reaſons which have been aſſigned for Saul's taking the name of Paul, are various and many. Some think that he had the name of Paul given him from converting Sergius Paulus, as Scipio was called Africanus, from his conquering Africa; and as other Romans had names given them from ſubduing other countries. Others ſuppoſe that he had received at his circumciſion the two names of Paul and Saul; that is, Paul as his Roman name,—for he was born a freeman of Rome;—and Saul, as his Jewiſh name; for he was a Jew, and even an Hebrew of the Hebrews. As therefore he uſed to be called Saul, while he continued among the Jews, that being a more common and acceptable name among them; ſo from henceforth, being to go among the Gentiles, he took the name of Paul, as one which would be better known, and more acceptable to them. For the ſame reaſon Silas, who was afterwards St. Paul's great companion, appears to have had alſo the name of Sylvanus, and to have gone by the former name among the Jews, and by the latter among the Romans; for he ſeems to have been a freeman of Rome, as well as St. Paul. Beza thinks, that St. Paul having converſed hitherto chiefly with Jews and Syrians, to whom the name of Saul was familiar, and now coming amongſt Greeks and Romans, they would naturally pronounce his name Paul; as one whoſe Hebrew name was Jochanan, would be called by the Greeks and Latins Johannes, by the French Jean, by the Dutch Hans, and by the Engliſh John; and he thinks that the family of this proconſul might be the firſt who addreſſed or ſpoke to him by the name of Paul. See Biſcoe's Lectures, p. 354. Ward's 41ſt Diſſertation, Beza, and Benſon.

Ver. 13. Now when Paul and his company] It is obſervable that from this period, St. Luke generally mentions Paul before Barnabas; whereas he had hitherto always mentioned him laſt: Nay, in reckoning up the five, who were only prophets and teachers in the church at Antioch, he put Barnabas the firſt, and Saul laſt; becauſe very probaby Barnabas was one of the oldeſt, and Saul the youngeſt convert amongſt them: But now when he became ſo eminent an Apoſtle, as not to come a whit behind the chief of the Apoſtles, he is mentioned the firſt, as the principal perſon of the ſtory, and the moſt honoured of them all. Looſing with the reſt of his company from Paphos, they ſailed, moſt probably, up the river Ceſtrus, to Perga, a town of Pamphylia, not far from the coaſt of Aſia Minor, near to which was a temple dedicated to Diana. There ſeems to have been neither a Jewiſh ſynagogue, nor proſeucha in that town; for we read nothing of their attempting to preach the Goſpel there at this time. But there it was that John Mark left them and went back to Jeruſalem; as ſuppoſing perhaps that St. Peter, in whoſe company he ſeems to have delighted moſt, might be returned thither; eſpecially as king Herod was dead, who had made ſuch an attempt upon the life of that Apoſtle. Whether Mark made any ſcruple of receiving the idolatrous Gentiles into the Chriſtian church, or was diſcouraged by the dangers and difficulties of ſuch an attempt; or was prevailed upon to return merely out of his extraordinary regard and affection for St. Peter, cannot now be determined with any certainty. See Benſon, and Calmet.

Ver. 14, 15. But when they departed from Perga, &c.] From Perga Paul and Barnabas went further into the country, and came to Antioch, a conſiderable city in the diſtrict of Piſidia; which lay north of Pamphylia, and conſequently further from the ſea. The ſituation of this place is particularized by the ſacred writer, to intimate how carefully it ſhould be diſtinguiſhed from Antioch in Syria, ſo much more frequently mentioned in this hiſtory. The Apoſtles, as was uſual, entered into the Jewiſh ſynagogue at Antioch on the ſabbath-day, and ſat down moſt probably in the chairs of the doctors, to intimate their errand. The ancient Jews had divided the law into fifty-three or fifty-four ſections, and the prophets into as many; and by uſually reading a ſection of each every ſabbath-day, and joining two of the ſhorteſt together for two ſabbath-days, they read the greateſt part of the Old Teſtament over once every year. Some ſay, that the cuſtom was introduced by Ezra, and indeed it appears to have been of an ancient date. Till that reading of the law and the prophets was over, Paul and Barnabas ſat as hearers; but after the reading of the Scriptures, the rulers of the ſynagogue uſed to permit or deſire whom they pleaſed to explain what had been read; or to make ſome uſeful exhortations to the people; and either knowing ſomething of the character of theſe two Apoſtles, or perhaps merely from their ſitting in the chairs of the doctors, the rulers of the ſynagogue ſent unto them, deſiring that if they had any doctrine or pious exhortation to deliver to the people, they would ſpeak freely and openly in the ſynagogue. See Biſcoe's Lectures, p. 271. Prideaux's Connect. vol. i. p. 333. Benſon, and the note on Luke iv. 16.

Ver. 16. Men of Iſrael, and ye that fear God] This diſcourſe ſeems chiefly intended to illuſtrate the divine œconomy in opening the Goſpel gradually, and preparing the Jews by temporal mercies, for others of a yet more important nature. The Apoſtle, in conſequence of this, had a very good opportunity of ſhewing his acquaintance with their Scriptures, which it is well known they eſteemed as the higheſt part of literature. The expreſſion, ye that fear God, is ambiguous, and would beſt ſuit thoſe who had, by embracing the Jewiſh religion, entered into covenant with the true God; yet ſo, as not to exclude any others, in whom a filial reverence for the divine Being was a governing principle. See Doddridge, and Grotius.

Ver. 17. The God of this people] The Apoſtles preached the ſame God in whom the Jews already believed, and would have perſuaded them likewiſe to have believed in Jeſus of Nazareth as the promiſed Meſſiah. To convince them that he was ſo, they argued both from facts, and from the prophecies of the Old Teſtament. This was their uſual method of treating both the Jews and devout Gentiles; but when they addreſſed devout Gentiles alone, they did not recite the hiſtory of the Old Teſtament, and take their riſe from the renowned anceſtors of the Jewiſh nation; on the contrary, their language then was, In every nation he that feareth God, and worketh righteouſneſs, is accepted of him; but when the Jews were the only, or the principal perſons addreſſed, then they took their riſe from the hiſtory of paſt diſpenſations, and particularly from Abraham the father of the nation, who was the firſt that was ſeparated from an idolatrous world, and had the moſt expreſs promiſe, that in his ſeed all the nations of the earth ſhould be bleſſed, as they were very eminently in Jeſus Chriſt, his great deſcendant. Abraham, for his probity, faith, and chearful obedience, was intitled, "The father of the faithful," and good men were ſtiled, "The children of Abraham." His name was in great eſteem amongſt the Jews, and one of the moſt likely to procure attention. St. Matthew, who wrote his Goſpel more immediately for the uſe of the converted Jews, begins our Lord's genealogy with Abraham. St. Peter introduces his diſcourſe to the Jews with the name of that great patriarch, ch. iii. 13. So does St. Stephen, ch. vii. 2. and St. Paul in this place very naturally, and with great propriety, mentions the name of Iſrael; taking occaſion from the hiſtory of paſt diſpenſations to introduce the Goſpel doctrine; which was in brief, that the great promiſe made of old to the fathers, was now accompliſhed, and the Meſſiah actually come; for the Abrahamick covenant and the Goſpel had a great affinity, the law of Moſes being only an intermediate ſtate, to preſerve, at leaſt, one nation from idolatry, and prepare them for the reception of the Meſſiah. May we not hence conjecture, whenever they are ſaid to go to the Jewiſh ſynagogue, and preach the word, that this was their 18 And about the time of forty years ſuffered he their manners in the wilderneſs.

19 And when he had deſtroyed ſeven nations in the land of Chanaan, he divided their land to them by lot.

20 And after that he gave unto them judges, about the ſpace of four hundred and fifty years, until Samuel the prophet.

21 And afterward they deſired a king: and God gave unto them Saul the ſon of Cis, a man of the tribe of Benjamin, by the ſpace of forty years.

22 And when he had removed him, he raiſed up unto them David to be their king; to whom alſo he gave teſtimony, and ſaid, I have found David, the ſon of Jeſſe, a man after mine own heart, which ſhall fulfil all my will.

23 Of this man's ſeed hath God, according to his promiſe, raiſed unto Iſrael a Saviour, Jeſus:

24 When John had firſt preached, before his coming, the baptiſm of repentance to all the people of Iſrael.

25 And as John fulfilled his courſe, he ſaid, Whom think ye that I am? I am not he. But behold, there cometh one after me, whoſe ſhoes of his feet I am not worthy to looſe.

26 Men and brethren, children of the ſtock of Abraham, and whoſoever among you feareth God, to you is the word of this ſalvation ſent.

27 For they that dwell at Jeruſalem, and their rulers, becauſe they knew him not, nor yet the voices of the prophets which are read every ſabbath-day, they have fulfilled them in condemning him.

Ver. 18. Exod. xvi. 35. Pſ. xcv. 10. Gr. ἐτροποφόρησεν perhaps for ἐτροφοφόρησεν, bore, or fed them, as a nurſe beareth, or feedeth her child, Deut. i. 31. 2 Macc. vii. 27. according to the LXX. and ſo Chryſoſtom.—V. 19. Deut. vii. 1. Joſh. xiv. 1, 2.—V. 20. Judg. iii. 9. V. 21. 1 Sam. viii. 5. x. 1.—V. 22. 1 Sam. xvi. 13. Pſ. lxxxix. 20. 1 Sam. xiii. 14.—V. 23. Iſai. xi. 1. 2 Sam. vii. 12.—V. 24. Matth. iii. 1.—V. 25. Matth. iii. 11. Luke iii. 16. John i. 20, 27.—V. 26. Matth. x. 6. Ver. 46. Ch. iii. 26.—V. 27. Ch. iii. 17. 1 Cor. ii. 8. Ch. xv. 21.

common method, which they uſed more largely or briefly, as they ſaw occaſion. Inſtead of exalted, Dr. Heylin reads ſignalized; and inſtead of, brought them out with an high hand, he reads, brought them forth with high demonſtrations of his power. The ſenſe of the verſe may be expreſſed thus: "The God of Iſrael, the one only living and true God, choſe our fathers, to bear their teſtimony againſt idolatry, and to receive the revelations of his mind and will; and he increaſed their numbers, and made them conſiderable, even when they were ſtrangers in the land of Egypt, and when they were oppreſſed there, he miraculouſly, and by his mighty power raiſed them from their low eſtate, and brought them out from thence." See Benſon, Beza, L'Enfant, and Elſner's Obſervations, vol. i. p. 418.

Ver. 18. Suffered he their manners] Ἐτροποφόρησεν: He endured their behaviour, perverſe and ungrateful as it was. However, according to the Alexandrian and Cambridge MSS. and the Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions, the genuine reading is, Ἐτροφοφόρησεν; "He fed and cheriſhed them, as a nurſing mother does her own children." See how the divine care over Iſrael is expreſſed, Deut. xxxii. 10—12. and compare Deut. i. 31. Ezek. xvi. 4, 5, 8. See alſo Mill, Druſius, Wetſtein, and Hammond. Dr. Waterland reads, He carried them, as a nurſe does her child, &c.

Ver. 20. And after that, &c.] And after theſe things, which laſted about four hundred and fifty years, he gave them judges, until Samuel the prophet. Mill in Loc. Carpzov. Introd. part i. p. 186. Waterland. This reading of Dr. Waterland's, which has the countenance of many great names, ſufficiently removes every difficulty that may ariſe from our verſion. According to this reading, the Apoſtle begins his computation from the birth of Iſaac, when Canaan was promiſed to Abraham and his ſeed, and carries it down to their getting poſſeſſion of that Land, and its being divided unto them by lot, which was about four hundred and fifty years; ſo that, according to this interpretation, the time in which the judges reigned in Iſrael is not hence determined. There are, however, chronologiſts who ſettle the matter ſatisfactorily enough, according to our verſion. Sir John Marſham, and others after him, have conjectured, that the judges in Iſrael did not reign over the whole nation one after another, but ſometimes more than one reigned at the ſame time in different parts of the land. However, the reigns of the ſeveral judges, when added together, amount exactly to four hundred and fifty years; and it is likely that was the common computation of the Jews in St. Paul's days, from which the Apoſtle had no particular occaſion to vary. See Whiſton's Short View of the Chronology of the Old Teſtament. Dr. Whitby alſo has the authority of many great names, ancient and modern, to juſtify him in following the chronology of Joſephus, who places the building of the temple in the five hundred and ninety-ſecond year after Iſrael's going out of Egypt; which would admit of allowing three hundred and thirty-nine years for the adminiſtration of the udges, and one hundred and eleven for the years of the ſeveral tyrannical oppreſſions; in all four hundred and fifty years; reſerving forty for Samuel and Saul together, forty for David, and four for Solomon, in whoſe fifth year the temple was begun; and the coincidence of the numbers in the book of Judges is remarkable, as illuſtrated by Dr. Lightfoot on the place, and Biſcoe in his Boyle's Lectures, p. 666. See Lampe's Compendium of Eccleſ. Hiſt. lib. i. cap. 5. Benſon, L'Enfant, Whitby, &c.

Ver. 21. By the ſpace of forty years] Several very conſierable critics are of opinion, that the forty years here ſpoken of do not all belong to the reign of Saul, but include at leaſt a conſiderable part of Samuel's government: and they found their opinion principally upon the following words of Joſephus, Antiq. lib. vi. c. ult. "Saul reigned eighteen years while Samuel was alive, and twenty-two years after his death:" Though they acknowledge that the moſt correct copies of Joſephus omit the word twenty, and leave two only; which agrees well with the fact,—the former reading being utterly incredible; and Biſcoe, who is followed by Bedford, in his Chronology, ſeems to have proved very ſatisfactorily, that the reign of Saul continued all theſe forty years. He is far from thinking that Saul's reign is to be reckoned only from Samuel's death; the contrary is moſt apparent; and he hath abundantly proved, that the actions aſſigned to him muſt have taken up many years. But of the forty in queſtion, it may well ſuffice to allow twenty to him from his anointing, and the former twenty (computed from the grand action at Miſpeh) to Samuel, who might at that time be paſt his prime, and ſo be inclined to aſſociate his ſons with him; till, on their miſcarriages, the people took occaſion to demand a king; who, at firſt, we are ſure, from the ſtory, lived privately, and whoſe authorlty was never ſo great, as to ſwallow up that of ſo illuſtrious a prophet and judge. It was a common opinion prevailing amongſt the Jews, that Saul ſurvived Samuel but little more than two years. See Grotius, Limborch, L'Enfant, Druſius, and Biſcoe's Lectures, p. 612.

Ver. 22. A man after mine own heart] Though we have ſpoken largely on this head in the proper place, (1 Sam. xiii. 13, 14.) yet as the expreſſion has been cavilled at by ſome, we cannot with-hold the following obſervation of Dr. Benſon's: "When it is ſaid, that king David was a man after God's own heart, it ought to be underſtood of his public, not of his private character: He was a man after God's own heart, becauſe he ruled his people Iſrael according to the divine will. He did not allow of idolatry; he did not ſet up for abſolute power; he was guided in the government of the nation by the law of Moſes, as the ſtanding rule of government, and by the prophet, or the divine oracle, whereby God gave directions upon particular emergencies. Whatever Saul's private character was, he was not a good king in Iſrael. He did not follow the law, the oracle, and the prophet, but attempted to be abſolute, and thereby to ſubvert the conſtitution of the kingdom. That this was the meaning of David's being a man after God's own heart, will eaſily appear from comparing the laſt-mentioned paſſage, 1 Sam. xv. 28. xxviii. 17, 18. 1 Chron. x. 13, 14. Pſ. lxxviii. 70, &c. and lxxxix. 20, &c."

Ver. 24. When John had firſt preached] St. Paul mentions the preaching of John the Baptiſt in this incidental manner, as a thing already known to them, becauſe it gave ſo univerſal an alarm to the whole Jewiſh nation, that it might probably be heard of in foreign countries, at leaſt as remote as Piſidia. Raphelius has taken pains to prove, from ſimilar paſſages in the Greek claſſics, that both the clauſes in the next verſe, Whom think ye that I am?—I am not He, may be conſidered as united in an affirmation, and rendered, "I am not the perſon whom you ſuppoſe me to be, that is, the Meſſiah." See Annot. ex Herodot. p, 251. The reader will refer for what follows to the paſſages in the margin.

Ver. 26. And whoſoever among you feareth God] That is, "You devout proſelytes, who worſhip the true God; and whom we look upon as brethren, as well as the Jews." See ver. 16.

Ver. 27. For they that dwell at Jeruſalem, &c.] He here anticipates a ſtrong objection, "Why did not they at Jeruſalem, and eſpecially their rulers, believe?"—They knew him not, becauſe they underſtood not thoſe very prophets whom they read or heard continually. Their very 28 And though they found no cauſe of death in him, yet deſired they Pilate that he ſhould be ſlain.

29 And when they had fulfilled all that was was written of him, they took him down from the tree, and laid him in a ſepulchre.

30 But God raiſed him from the dead:

31 And he was ſeen many days of them which came up with him from Galilee to Jeruſalem, who are his witneſſes unto the people.

32 And we declare unto you glad tidings, how that the promiſe, which was made unto the fathers, 33 God hath fulfilled the ſame unto us their children, in that he hath raiſed up Jeſus again; as it is alſo written in the ſecond pſalm, Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee.

34 And as concerning that he raiſed him up from the dead, now no more to return to corruption, he ſaid on this wiſe, I will give you the ſure mercies of David.

Ver. 28. Matth. xxvii. 22. Mark xv. 13. Luke xxiii. 21, 22. John xix. 6. Ch. iii. 13.—V. 29. Matth. xxvii. 59. Mark xv. 46. Luke xxiii. 53. John xix. 38.—V. 30. Matth. xxviii. 6. Ch. ii. 24.—V. 31. Matth. xxviii. 16. Ch. i. 3. 1 Cor. xv. 5, 6. Ch. i. 11. Ch. ii. 32.—V. 33. Pſ. ii. 7. Hebr. i. 5.—V. 34. Iſai. lv. 3. Gr, τὰ ὅσια, holy, or juſt things: which word the LXX both in the place of Iſai. lv. 3. and in many others, uſe for that which is in the Hebrew, mercies.

very condemning him, innocent as he was, proves that they underſtood not the prophecies concerning him. By a ſmall alteration in the pointing, ſome would read the verſe thus: Their rulers, by condemning him, have ignorantly even fulfilled the words of the prophets, which are read every ſabbath-day. There is a like tranſpoſition in the Greek, John xiii. 8. 1 Cor. x. 27. Philip. i. 21. James ii. 1. iii. 3. See Knatchbull, and Paillairet.

Ver. 29. They took him down from the tree] The Apoſtle was far from being aſhamed to mention the moſt ignominious circumſtances of his Maſter's ſufferings to thoſe who were ſtrangers to the Goſpel, knowing how ſufficiently he anſwered all that could be objected from thence, by what he added and teſtified concerning his reſurrection. See Doddridge, and the next note.

Ver. 33. Thou art my Son, &c.] This paſſage in the 2d pſalm hath been almoſt univerſally interpreted of the reſurrection of Chriſt; but a very ingenious writer, whoſe treatiſe hath but lately fallen into my hands, is of a different opinion, and ſuppoſes rather that it refers to the incarnation. As there is ſomething new, as well as important and judicious in what he hath advanced, I doubt not but it will be agreeable to my readers to ſee it here, and I hope it will be a means of recommending to the peruſal of many, a treatiſe which appears to me to merit a very ſerious conſideration. "The genuine ſenſe of Pſ. ii. 7. (ſays the author) ſeemeth to be this, I have this day decreed, that my Son [the Meſſiah] ſhall be born of thy [David's] ſeed. But be this as it will, ſince it is thrice quoted in the New Teſtament, and applied to the man Chriſt Jeſus, this is ſufficient to ſhew, that it alludeth to a future time. I have often wondered how it ſhould come to paſs, that all the commentators whom I have ever conſulted, ſhould unanimouſly underſtand it, not of the incarnation, but of the reſurrection of Chriſt. Perhaps they were afraid of the Socinians, who deny the exiſtence of the Son before he was born of the virgin. It is diſagreeable to me to diſſent, in the interpretation of Scripture, from the many and the great; but I will give the reaſons why I do ſo, and let the reader judge of their validity. 1. The literal meaning of the words evidently pointeth at the incarnation, rather than at the reſurrection. 2. In the Epiſtle to the Hebrews, ch. v. 5. where this text is quoted by St. Paul, it evidently is not applied to the reſurrection: The words are, Chriſt glorified not himſelf to be made an high-prieſt, but he that ſaid unto him, Thou art my Son, &c. Now, our Saviour's prieſthood did moſt certainly commence before his death, becauſe his life was the ſacrifice, which, as a prieſt, he offered up. And that the Apoſtle here alludeth to the days of his fleſh, is clear from the whole tenor of the paſſage. But ſuppoſe that his prieſthood had really commenced after his reſurrection; yet will it not follow, that the words, Thou art my Son, &c. are to be underſtood of his reſurrection, becauſe, even in that caſe, his generation and birth muſt, in the courſe of things, neceſſarily precede his entrance into this office, as well as his reſurrection; the only difference is, that the reſurrection would immediately precede it. 3. The preſent paſſage doth not require it to be underſtood of the reſurrection, but, if rightly conſidered, of the incarnation. The promiſe, &c. God hath fulfilled the ſame unto us their children, in that he hath raiſed up Jeſus, [not raiſed up Jeſus again, Gr. ἀναϛήσας Ἰησοῦν,—having raiſed up Jeſus,] as it is alſo written, &c. Now it muſt depend intirely upon the promiſe in what ſenſe this raiſing up is to be taken; and if we look back to the 23d verſe, we ſhall find that the promiſe is there mentioned, almoſt in the ſame words; of this man's [David's] SEED, hath God, according to his promiſe, raiſed up unto Iſrael a Saviour Jeſus. Further, the words unto us their children, in my opinion, plainly ſhews, that this 33d verſe is meant of the incarnation; for Chriſt was raiſed up from the dead, for the juſtification of all men, who ſhould believe in him, both Jews and Gentiles; not of the Jews (the children of the fathers) excluſive of all others; whereas, in reſpect of his incarnation, he was raiſed up of the ſtock of Abraham, and in the days of his fleſh, converſed with the Jews only. (See ch. iii. 25, 26.)—Again, if this raiſing up be meant of the reſurrection, why doth St. Paul add, in the very next verſe, and as concerning that he raiſed him up from the dead, now no more to return to corruption, &c? What occaſion was there for the words from the dead, if he had immediately before been ſpeaking of the reſurrection, and if it were not to diſtinguiſh this raſing up from the other before-mentioned? Beſides, it appears from the words, and as concerning, that the Apoſtle there paſſeth to a different ſubject. Moreover, if the 33d verſe alludes to the reſurrection, it is plainly ſuperfluous; becauſe the next verſe, which ſpeaketh of a reſurrection, no more to return to corruption, includeth it; and it is not likely that St. Paul ſhould mention a ſimple reſurrection, diſtinct from a reſurrection no more to return to corruption, eſpecially in ſo ſhort a diſcourſe.—But let us attend a little to the Apoſtle's argument in this place. He had before given his audience an account of our Saviour, and proved to them, from the teſtimony of John the Baptiſt, ver. 24, 25. that he was the Chriſt (i. e. the Son of God, or Meſſiah, promiſed to the fathers;) then, at ver. 30, 31. he proved his reſurrection to them by appealing to the teſtimony of living witneſſes. At the 32d verſe he begins to ſhew, that theſe things were foretold, and promiſed by God in the Scriptures; and accordingly the promiſe of a Chriſt is mentioned by him in ver. 33. and the promiſe of his reſurrection, ver. 34, 35. At the 38th verſe he tacitly joineth together the teſtimonies and the promiſes; and thence draws this inference, that through this man [this very Jeſus] is preached forgiveneſs of ſins. Now if the 33d verſe be not meant of the incarnation, there is wanting a promiſe of Scripture to anſwer to the teſtimony of John the Baptiſt, as the promiſes of the reſurrection in ver. 34, 35. do to the teſtimony of the living witneſſes. I have nothing more to add concerning this paſſage than to ſhew, that the word ἀναϛήσας, (there tranſlated raiſed up again, viz. from the dead) hath not neceſſarily that ſignification, unleſs joined with ἐκ νεκρῶν, or the like. The word is uſed in the LXX tranſlation of Jer. iii. 4, 5. Gen. xxviii. 8. 1 Chron. xvii. 11. 1. Sam. ii. 25. alſo in Matth. xxii. 24. Acts ii. 30. and to name no more, ch. iii. 22. vii. 37. It is plain from ſeveral of theſe paſſages, that the word is often uſed for a raiſing up of SEED. 4. In Heb. i. 5. where the text is quoted again, it is not applied to the reſurrection; for there it is introduced as follows: Chriſt, being made ſo much better than the angels, as he hath by inheritance [birthright] obtained a more excellent NAME than they (and what name can that be but Son of God?) For to which of the angels ſaid he at any time, Thou art my SON, &c? But that our Saviour had this name, and aſſumed it to himſelf, whilſt he was here on earth, is moſt certain;—therefore the text is not, in this place, applied to the reſurrection.—It is granted, that HE himſelf was, in that ſtate of humiliation, a little lower than the angels; but his name was even then more excellent than theirs,—which is all that the Apoſtle contended for at that time; and ſays, that He is now advanced into a ſtate ſuitable to that name, far above all angels; being MADE ſo much better than the angels, as he hath by inheritance [birthright] obtained a more excellent name than they.—For theſe reaſons, I cannot agree with interpreters, when they apply the text in queſtion to the reſurrection of Chriſt, which ſeems to me to be a prophecy of his incarnation. But even if it were really to be underſtood of the reſurrection in all the three paſſages where it is quoted, we ought not ſurely, from thence, to infer, "that our Saviour was the Son of God by virtue of his reſurrection;" at the moſt, ſuch filiation can be but figurative, not real. I ſhall not deny that, in a rhetorical and leſs ſtrict way of ſpeaking, the reſurrection may be elegantly enough ſtiled a filiation, not only as it was a reſtoration to life, but alſo as by that act he was acknowledged by God for his Son, in whom he was well pleaſed, and thereupon advanced to power and majeſty; according to that of St. Paul, Rom. i. 3, 4.—Who was made of the ſeed of David, according to the fleſh, (i. e. on the mother's ſide) and DECLARED to be the Son of God with power, according to the Spirit of holineſs, (i. e. on the Father's ſide) by the reſurrection from the dead." See "The Doctrine of the Trinity, as it ſtands deduced by the Light of Reaſon, from the Data laid down in the Scriptures." p. 42, &c.

Ver. 34. Now no more to return to corruption] As Chriſt never ſaw corruption at all, ver. 37. the Greek word διαφθορὰ, corruption, muſt ſignify the grave, as שחת, ſhechet, in the Hebrew alſo does; (comp. Pſ. xciv. 13. cvii. 20. and Lam. iv. 20.) juſt as the coffin of a man raiſed from the dead, as ſoon as he was put into it, might be called his ſarcophagus, though his fleſh had not been conſumed in it, the bleſſings of the Meſſiah's reign may be called the ſure mercies of David, either as they were promiſed to that prince,—to which ſenſe

35 Wherefore he ſaith alſo in another pſalm, Thou ſhalt not ſuffer thine Holy One to ſee corruption:

36 For David, after he had ſerved his own generation by the will of God, fell on ſleep, and was laid unto his fathers, and ſaw corruption:

37 But he, whom God raiſed again, ſaw no corruption.

38 Be it known unto you therefore, men and brethren, that through this man is preached unto you the forgiveneſs of ſins:

39 And by him, all that believe are juſtified from all things, from which ye could not be juſtified by the law of Moſes.

40 Beware therefore, leſt that come upon you which is ſpoken of in the prophets, 41 Behold, ye deſpiſers, and wonder, and periſh: for I work a work in your days, a work which ye ſhall in no wiſe believe, though a man declare it unto you.

42 And when the Jews were gone out of the ſynagogue, the Gentiles beſought that theſe words might be preached to them the next ſabbath.

43 Now when the congregation was broken up, many of the Jews, and religious proſelytes, followed Paul and Barnabas: who ſpeaking to them, perſuaded them to continue in the grace of God.

44 And the next ſabbath-day came almoſt the whole city together to hear the word of God.

45 But when the Jews ſaw the multitudes, they were filled with envy, and ſpake againſt thoſe things which were ſpoken by Paul, contradicting and blaſpheming.

46 Then Paul and Barnabas waxed bold, and ſaid, It was neceſſary that the word of God ſhould firſt have been ſpoken to you: but ſeeing ye put it from you, and judge yourſelves unworthy of everlaſting life, lo, we turn to the Gentiles, 47 For ſo hath the Lord commanded us, ſaying, I have ſet thee to be a light of the Gentiles, that thou ſhouldeſt be for ſalvation unto the ends of the earth.

48 And when the Gentiles heard this, they were glad, and glorified the word of the Lord: and as many as were ordained to eternal life, believed.

Ver. 35. Pſ. xvi. 10. Ch. ii. 31.—V. 36. Or, after he had in his own age ſerved the will of God. 1 Kings ii. 10. Ch. ii. 29.—V. 38. Luke xxiv. 47. 1 John ii. 12.—V. 39. Rom. iii. 28. viii. 3. Hebr. vii. 19.—V. 40. Iſai. xxix. 14. Hab. i. 5.—V. 42. Gr. in the week between, or in the ſabbath between.—V. 43. Ch. xi. 23. xiv. 22.—V. 45. Ch. xviii. 6. 1 Pet. iv. 4.—V. 46. Matth. x. 6. Ch. iii. 26. Rom. i. 16. Exod. xxxii. 10. Iſai. lv. 5. Matth. xxi. 43. Rom. x. 19. Ch. xviii. 6. xxviii. 28.—V. 47. Iſai. xlix. 6. Luke ii. 32.

the tranſlation of 1729. determines it, by rendering the paſſage, I will faithfully perform the promiſe made to David; or, as the name of David is ſometimes given to the Meſſiah himſelf, as the great heir of David, of whoſe victories and glories David's were but a faint ſhadow: and when Iſaiah calls them ſure mercies, he may probably refer to the laſt words of David, in which he uſes the ſame expreſſion with regard to them, 2 Sam. xxiii. 5. The propriety of the application here is evident, as it was the reſurrection of Chriſt which rendered the bleſſings he promiſed ſure to his people, who, without that, could have had no hope from him, as the Apoſtle argues at large, 1 Cor. xv. 14, &c. See Iſai. lv. 3. Mr. Jefferys's "True Grounds," p. 139. and Beza.

Ver. 36. David, after he had ſerved, &c.] After that in his generation he had ſerved the will of God. Blackwall, p. 184. and Waterland.

Ver. 39. From which ye could not be juſtified, &c.] The law appointed ſin-offerings to expiate ſmaller offences; ſo far, as that the offender who offered them ſhould be free from all further proſecution on account of them; but this very view of them ſhews how abſolutely neceſſary it was to the being of ſociety, that they ſhould not be admitted, in caſes of murder, adultery, &c. Theſe crimes therefore were made capital; nor was the dying criminal, however penitent, allowed to offer them, which would have been quite inconſiſtent with the temporal pardon connected with them: but the expiatory ſacrifice of Chriſt takes away the guilt of all ſin; and though it by no means affects the manner in which offenders would ſtand in human courts, (which the Moſaic ſacrifice did) it delivers from the condemnation of God in the inviſible world, with reſpect to which, the others could have no efficacy at all; as it was a very ſuppoſeable caſe, that an impenitent ſinner might preſent them in all their exacteſt forms. See Rom. viii. 3. Gal. ii. 16. Heb. x. 4. and Hallet's Diſcourſes, vol. ii. p. 269, &c.

Ver. 41. And periſh] And diſappear, ἀφανίσθητε. See the note on Matth. vi. 16. Dr. Heylin reads the ſentence, Conſider, ye deſpiſers; be amazed, and utterly confounded. Inſtead of ſhall in no wiſe, &c. Dr. Waterland and the MS. read will, &c.

Ver. 42. And when the Jews were gone out] But when the Jews were going out. MS. Heylin, Doddridge. Some interpret the words εἰς τὸ μεταξὺ σάββατον (or σαββάτων, as they would read) which we render the next ſabbath, of a day between the two ſabbaths; as there is a tradition among the Jews, mentioned by Dr. Lightfoot and others, that Ezra commanded them to aſſemble on the ſecond and fifth days of the week,—our Monday and Thurſday,—for the ſtudy of the law in their ſynagogues. But ver. 44. ſeems fully to determine the expreſſion to the ſenſe our verſion gives it; and Capellus and Whitby have ſhewn, that it is not an unexempled manner of ſpeaking. See Grotius, Druſius, Scaliger, and Caſaubon.

Ver. 43. In the grace of God] In that religious diſpoſition which divine grace had produced in them, or in the faith and practice of the Goſpel, which is often called the grace of God, and the word of his grace, with the utmoſt propriety, as containing the richeſt diſplay of his grace, in the free pardon of our ſins by Chriſt, and the proviſion he has made for our ſanctification in eternal happineſs. See ch. xiv. 3. xx. 24. Rom. vi. 14. Gal. v. 4. Col. i. 6. Tit. ii. 11. 1 Pet. v. 12. Doddridge and Heylin.

Ver. 45. They were filled with envy] Now that circumſtance in the parable of the elder brother's murmuring at the return of the prodigal ſon, was remarkably fulfilled. See Luke xv. 25. The word blaſphemy, in this connection with contradicting, muſt ſignify their giving them abuſive language; the MS. reads contradicting and reviling; and Dr. Heyling,—With abuſive language oppoſed what Paul taught. Probably they charged the Apoſtles to their faces with falſhood and villany, and repreſented the cauſe they were carrying on, as moſt contemptible and wicked. It may ſeem ſtrange that this did not prevent the converſion of the Gentiles; but they would eaſily ſee it was the regard that Paul and Barnabas expreſſed for them, which had exaſperated the Jews; and it is not improbable, that ſome miracles might have been wrought during the preceding week, which would ſet the character of theſe divine teachers above the danger of being overthrown by the malicious inſinuations, or confident aſſertions of thoſe furious oppoſers. See Wetſtein, Doddridge, and Bengelius.

Ver. 46. Then Paul and Barnabas waxed bold, &c.] With great freedom of ſpeech ſaid, &c. See on ch. iv. 29. The words, Judge yourſelves unworthy of everlaſting life, plainly ſhew that perſons are ſaid to be ſelf-condemned, who furniſh out matter of condemnation from their own words, though they do not actually paſs ſentence on themſelves; for nothing was further from the thoughts of theſe Jews, than declaring themſelves unworthy of eternal life for not believing the Goſpel. They rather expected that life by rejecting it. See on ver. 48. When the Apoſtles ſay, Behold, we turn to the Gentiles, their meaning is not, that they intended no more to make an offer to the Jews; for we find they continued to addreſs them firſt, wherever they came; but they openly declared, that while they continued at Antioch they would loſe no more time in fruitleſs attempts on their ungrateful countrymen, but would employ themſelves in doing what they could for the converſion of the Gentiles. See Doddridge, Grotius, and Calmet.

Ver. 47. For ſo hath the Lord commanded us] They might have argued this very properly from the paſſage which they quote, as well as from their very commiſſion itſelf. Comp. Matth. xxviii. 19. and Acts i. 8. But St. Paul had alſo received a more expreſs command to this purpoſe. See ch. xxii. 21. xxvi. 17, 18.

Ver. 48. As many as were ordained to eternal life] We obſerve, 1ſt, upon this text, that whatever the exact meaning of the word rendered ordained may be, it does not here refer to the decrees of God, but

49 And the word of the Lord was publiſhed throughout all the region, 50 But the Jews ſtirred up the devout and honourable women, and the chief men of the city, and raiſed perſecution againſt Paul and Barnabas, and expelled them out of their coaſts.

51 But they ſhook off the duſt of their feet againſt them, and came unto Iconium.

52 And the diſciples were filled with joy, and with the Holy Ghoſt.

CHAP. XIV.

Paul and Barnabas are perſecuted from Ico-

Ver. 50. 2 Tim. iii. 11.—V. 51. Matth. x. 14. Ch. xviii. 6.

but to the diſpoſition of the minds of theſe Gentiles; as is very evident, from its being uſed by way of antitheſis to the perſons mentioned, ver. 46. that is, to the unbelieving Jews; who, by their obſtinacy and wickedneſs, condemned themſelves as unworthy of eternal life; whereas, on the contrary, ſeveral of theſe Gentiles, by their candour and probity of mind, manifeſted in ſo readily ſubmitting to truth and evidence, and embracing a religion ſo different from what they had received, and ſo contrary to their worldly intereſts, ſhewed themſelves to be well diſpoſed for the reception of the Goſpel. And this we obſerve, 2dly, appears to be the true meaning of the original; τεταγμένοι moſt commonly ſignifying diſpoſed, or ſet in order; and hence it is very frequently uſed as a military term, for the regularly drawing up, or ſetting in rank and order, an army. Thus it is uſed by St. Luke, ch. vii. 8. I am a man ranked under authority. And thus it is uſed by many of the beſt Greek claſſicks. So that the meaning of the paſſage ſeems to be this: As many as were diſpoſed, or determined for eternal life, and brought to a reſolution of courageouſly facing all oppoſition in the way to it, believed; and openly embraced the Chriſtian religion, as the beſt means to prepare them for an endleſs life of the greateſt virtue and purity, as well as of the greateſt glory, and moſt perfect happineſs." In this ſenſe the Syriac, one of the moſt ancient verſions of the New Teſtament, hath rendered theſe words;—which is of great moment, as that tranſlation was made before the ſenſe of this place was diſputed by the different ſects and parties of Chriſtians. In this ſenſe Dr. Waterland and the MS. underſtand it, following many of the moſt learned expoſitors. Dr. Heylin's tranſlation and gloſſary upon it is, "As many as were in a fit diſpoſition for eternal life believed:" Literally, in a rank, in a fit temper or diſpoſition to enter into that ſpiritual life, which is rightly called eternal; for juſtice is immortal. They were ευθετοι, well-diſpoſed, Luke ix. 62. therefore τεταγμένοι, ranked. Thoſe who think themſelves, in their preſent ſtate, not capable of that experimental knowledge of God and Chriſt, in which conſiſts eternal life, John xvii. 3. judge themſelves unworthy of it, ver. 46." That we may leave nothing, which can elucidate and explain this text, we here ſubjoin Dr. Doddridge's judicious obſervations upon it, which confirm what has been before advanced: "In the Greek claſſicks τεταγμενοι generally ſignifies men who having been appointed for ſome military expedition, and ſet in their proper offices, are drawn up in battle array for that purpoſe." So that it expreſſes, or refers at once to, the action of their commander in marſhalling them according to the plan he had formed in his own mind, and their own preſenting themſelves in their proper places, to be led on to the intended expedition. This I take to be preciſely its ſenſe here, and have therefore choſen the word determined, as having an ambiguity, ſomething like that in the original. Perhaps if one word alone were to be uſed for τασσω, in all the places where it is uſed, it ſhould be ordered. The meaning of the ſacred penman ſeems to be, that all who were deeply and ſeriouſly concerned about their eternal happineſs, (whether that concern began now, or were of longer date) openly embraced the Goſpel; for ſurely none could be ſaid to believe, who did not make an open profeſſion of Chriſtianity, eſpecially in ſuch circumſtances. And wherever this temper was, it was undoubtedly the effect of a divine operation on their hearts, and of God's gracious purpoſe thus to call them, and liſt them, as it were, in their proper places in his army, under the great Captain of their ſalvation." We obſerve, 3dly, that St. Luke does not ſay προτεταγμένοι, fore-ordained; for he is not ſpeaking of what was done from eternity, but of what was then done, through the preaching of the Goſpel. He is deſcribing that ordination, or diſpoſition, and that only, which was at the very time of hearing it. "During this ſermon thoſe believed, ſays the Apoſtle, to whom God then gave the gift of faith." It is as if he had ſaid, "They believed, whoſe hearts the Lord opened;" as he expreſſes it in a clearly parallel place, ſpeaking of the ſame kind of ordination, ch. xvi. 14, &c. It is obſervable, that the original word is not once uſed in Scripture to expreſs eternal predeſtination of any kind. It is rendered ordained, ordered, determined, addicted, and moſt frequently appointed.—The ſum is, all thoſe, and thoſe only, who were now ordained or diſpoſed, now believed; not that God rejected the reſt: It was his will that they alſo ſhould be ſaved, but they thruſt ſalvation from them; nor were they who then believed, conſtrained to believe; but grace was then firſt copiouſly offered them, and they, being well inclined, embraced and improved it thankfully. In a word, the expreſſion properly implies a preſent operation of divine grace, working faith in well-diſpoſed hearts. 4thly, Though what we have above given ſeems the plain and clear ſenſe of this paſſage, yet perhaps we may be thought deficient if we do not obſerve, that ſome learned men have underſtood it in a different ſenſe. 1. Mede thinks that the τεταγμενοι εις ζωην, means the proſelytes of the gate, the σεβομενοι, or devout Gentiles, who were prepared, or fitted to embrace everlaſting life. 2. Sir Norton Knatchbull underſtands τετηγμενοι, in the ſenſe of συνηγμενοι, and placing a comma after it, reads the paſſage thus: As many of them as were collected together, i. e. of the Gentiles, believed to, or in everlaſting life. 3. And with the ſame diſtinction, Markland would render it, So many of them of them as had appointed a day, profeſſed their belief in eternal life; επιστευσαν, declared their belief, as it ſhould be rendered, chap. viii. 13. Rom. xiii. 11. Ησαν τεταγμενοι, is here uſed, ſays this critic, in the ſame ſenſe with ἦν διατεταγμένος, he had appointed, ch. xx. 13. See particularly Dr. Hammond's note on the place, with Le Clerc's addition to it; Raphel. ex Herod. p. 353, &c. Wetſtein, and Archbp. Sharpe's Works, vol. vi. p. 348.

Ver. 50. Devout and honourable women] As Antioch in Piſidia was a Gentile city, the Jews had not the civil power in their hands; but they were ſo incenſed at the ſucceſs of the two Apoſtles, and particularly at the reception of the idolatrous Gentiles, without requiring them firſt to become proſelytes of righteouſneſs, that they exaſperated ſome women, who were devout Gentiles, and perſons of ſome quality and diſtinction; and by their means drew their huſbands, or ſuch other leading men of the city as they could influence into their quarrel. If we ſuppoſe that theſe devout women were newly proſelyted to Judaiſm, and full of an opinion of the ſanctity and privileges of the people to whom they now belonged, nothing can be more natural than to ſuppoſe that they would inſtigate their huſbands and other relations, to the warmeſt reſentment againſt Paul and Barnabas, whom they would look upon as levellers and apoſtates. See Doddridge, and Benſon.

Ver. 51. And came to Iconium] This is at preſent Coghi. It was formerly the capital of Lycaonia, and lay, not in the middle, as it is often placed, but on the weſtern borders of it; on the confines of Piſidia, Galatia, and Phrygia, to the latter of which it ſeems once to have belonged. See Raphel. ex Xenoph. p. 161, &c.

REFLECTIONS ON CHAP. XIII.

We, who were once ſinners of the Gentiles, and now, by the divine goodneſs, are brought to the knowledge of the Goſpel, have abundant reaſon to be thankful, that inſpired meſſengers were ſent to teach it, ver. 2. being ſeparated for that purpoſe, by the direct appointment of the Holy Spirit. May they that go out to this ſacred work, in all nations, and in all times, maintain a becoming regard to his influences; and may he make their way proſperous! ver. 4.

Wherever the meſſengers of the Goſpel go, they muſt not be ſurpriſed, if Satan raiſe up his inſtruments and children to oppoſe them; ver. 6—8. eſpecially where they would endeavour to introduce religion into the hearts of princes, or other great men. Well does the Prince of the power of the air know, how dangerous every ſuch blow is to his kingdom. Nevertheleſs, the King of kings knows how to make way to the hearts of the greateſt amongſt the children of men: Nor can any of them ſhew a more ſolid and important prudence, than to enquire impartially into the evidence of the Goſpel, and to give themſelves up as rational and accountable beings, to be governed by it. An happy reſolution! which they will moſt probably be diſpoſed to form, in proportion to the degree in which they obſerve its nature and tendency; for ſurely every intelligent perſon that does ſo, muſt, like Sergius Paulus, (ver. 12.) be ſtruck with the doctrine of the Lord, as well as with the miracles which were wrought to confirm it.

Juſtly might Paul pronounce that man who endeavoured to obſtruct the progreſs of divine truth in the world, a child of Satan, and an enemy of all righteouſneſs, ver. 9. Juſtly might God, who knew all his ſecret wickedneſs and perverſeneſs of ſoul, ſmite him with a blindneſs, which, while it rendered him incapable of ſeeing the light of the meridian Sun, ſeemed but a doleful emblem of that more fatal darkneſs, which, through the corruption of his heart, had ſpread itſelf over his mind, and prevented the light of the Goſpel of Chriſt, who is the image of God, from ſhining upon it. See ver. 10, 11. and 2 Cor. iv. 4.

And have not we reaſon to fear, that God may, in his righteous judgement, puniſh that iniquity of ſpirit with which many now riſe up againſt the right ways of the Lord,—not ceaſing to pervert and diſguiſe them, that ſo they may more plauſibly and effectually oppoſe them? And what puniſhment ſo likely or ſo ſuitable as an internal blindneſs, a darkneſs of ſoul, in which they may wander on through life to their deſtruction?—And if others ſtupidly permit themſelves to be guided by them, what can be expected, but that the blind leading the blind, both leaders and followers ſhould fall into the pit?

That the ſcriptures have been publickly read in Jewiſh and Chriſtian aſſemblies, from the primitive times, (ver. 15.) is a noble evidence of their genuine authority, which it will be our undoubted wiſdom to tranſmit to thoſe who may ariſe after us. From them ſucceeding generations will be fully informed of that edifying ſtory, which the Apoſtle here briefly recounts;—of the deliverance of Iſrael from Egypt, and their ſettlement in the land of Canaan, according to the nium. At Lyſtra Paul healeth a cripple; whereupon they are reputed as gods. Paul is ſtoned. They paſs through divers churches, confirming the diſciples in faith and patience: returning to Antioch, they report what God had done with them.

promiſe

AND it came to paſs in Iconium, that they went both together into the ſynagogue of the Jews, and ſo ſpake, that a great multitude both of the Jews, and alſo of the Greeks, believed.

2 But the unbelieving Jews ſtirred up the Gentiles, and made their minds evil-affected againſt the brethren.

3 Long time therefore abode they ſpeaking boldly in the Lord, which gave teſtimony unto the word of his grace, and granted ſigns and wonders to be done by their hands.

4 But the multitude of the city was divided: and part held with the Jews, and part with the apoſtles.

5 And when there was an aſſault made both of the Gentiles, and alſo of the Jews, with their rulers, to uſe them deſpitefully, and to ſtone them,

6 They were ware of it, and fled unto Lyſtra and Derbe, cities of Lycaonia, and unto the region that lieth round about:

7 And there they preached the goſpel.

8 And there ſat a certain man at Lyſtra, impotent in his feet, being a cripple from his mother's womb, who never had walked:

9 The ſame heard Paul ſpeak: who ſtedfaſtly beholding him, and perceiving that he had faith to be healed,

10 Said with a loud voice, Stand upright on thy feet. And he leaped and walked.

Ver. 3. Mark xvi. 20. Hebr. ii. 4.—V. 4. Ch. xiii. 3.—V. 5. 2 Tim. iii. 11.—V. 6. Matth. x. 23.—V. 8. Ch. iii. 2.—V. 9. Matth. viii. 10.—V. 10. Iſai. xxxv. 6.

promiſe of God made to their fathers; and they will alſo learn the ungrateful returns which they made to the divine goodneſs, when they rejected the Lord from being King over them. ver. 17—21.

Were we the greateſt princes upon earth, we, like David, muſt ſee corruption in the grave, whither we are going. But let us rejoice to think that Jeſus, whom God raiſed up according to his promiſe, ſaw no corruption; and that if we are indeed his people, he will ranſom and redeem us from it. ver. 33, 37. and ſee Hoſ. xiii. 14.

Nor let us ever forget that this ſame Jeſus, though ſo outrageouſly and infamouſly treated by the Jews, was, nevertheleſs, in the moſt powerful and convincing manner, declared to be the Son of God, his only-begotten Son, ver. 28, 29. Such a reſurrection as his proclaimed him to be ſo: And in conſequence of it, the ſure mercies of David are now given us by him; and the plenary remiſſion of all the moſt aggravated tranſgreſſions, is through him proclaimed. ver. 34, 38. For ever adored be his glorious name; moſt thankfully accepted be his overflowing grace! which frees us from the guilt of thoſe offences which the law of Moſes condemned without mercy, and takes out the dye of ſcarlet and crimſon ſins! ver. 39.

Let us take heed, leſt if we deſpiſe ſo great a ſalvation, we meet with an aſtoniſhing vengeance; the juſtice of which will be atteſted and applauded by the meſſengers of God, to the Jewiſh and the Chriſtian church, ver. 40. All the prophets, and John the Baptiſt, ſuperior to them all, who bore witneſs to Chriſt, and all the Apoſtles and ſucceeding miniſters, in every age, have concurred to admoniſh us of our danger; and they will another day riſe up together in judgement againſt us, if all theſe admonitions are given in vain. ver. 24—27, 41.

It is a great comfort for the miniſters of the Goſpel that, amidſt that incredulity which too generally prevails, any are found who will credit the Goſpel; ver. 43. any to whom the arm of the Lord is revealed, in conquering their prejudices againſt it. With a choſen remnant of theſe God will ſupport his faithful ſervants: and may the inſtances of that conſolation be more numerous, and more remarkable continually in our days!

It is matter of ſome encouragement, when numbers crowd to attend upon the preaching of the Goſpel, ver. 44. for faith cometh by hearing. They who reject the counſel of God againſt themſelves, will no doubt be provoked at ſuch a circumſtance; ver. 45. and the malignity and envy of their hearts will ſtir up oppoſition and contention. But God knows how to bring good out of evil; nor ſhould his miniſters be diſcouraged by the contradiction of ſinners, but rather turn themſelves to thoſe who may be more willing to hear. In the mean time, let thoſe that thruſt from them the word of God, (ver. 46.) know, that, in the language of Scripture, they adjudge themſelves unworthy of everlaſting life; and ſince they will not accept of it on theſe terms, the great author thereof will not condeſcend to give it on any other: and the day is coming, when we ſhall ſee, and the whole world ſhall ſee, how much reaſon they have to glory in that height of Spirit which they now ſhew.

Let it be the daily joy of our ſouls, that the Lord Jeſus Chriſt was given for a light of the Gentiles, and for God's ſalvation to the ends of the earth. ver. 47. Through the tender mercies of our God, the day-ſpring from on high hath viſited us, Luke i. 78. let us pray that it may ariſe, and ſhine upon the remoteſt nations, and that the whole earth may be filled with the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the ſea! And indeed, if we are intirely unconcerned about its propagation in the world, we have great reaſon to fear, that we ourſelves have no part in the ſaving benefits which it confers. May the ſilver trumpet every where ſound, to awaken the nations to lift themſelves in the holy war under Chriſt, againſt all the enemies of ſalvation; and may many champions appear determined for eternal life, (ver. 48.) and, like theſe converts at Antioch, courageouſly ſet themſelves in battle-array againſt every thing which would oppoſe their progreſs towards it!

Vain then will all the rage of perſecution be, by whomſoever it is excited or maintained, though by perſons of the higheſt rank, or the moſt honoured characters. ver. 50. If the meſſengers of Chriſt be caſt out of one place, they will appear with renewed zeal in another, ver. 51. and they who are proſelyted to Chriſtianity, though in never ſo great a fight of afflictions, will have the Spirit of God and glory reſting upon them; and be enabled to rejoice, not only in the midſt of their trials, but even on account of them. ver. 52. In the mean while, the duſt ſhaken from the ſhoes of the rejected ambaſſadors of the Prince of peace will be recorded as a witneſs againſt thoſe who have deſpiſed the meſſage, and will expoſe their ſouls to a final condemnation in the day of judgement: a condemnation more intolerable than that which was once executed on the cities of Sodom and Gomorrah, or which their wretched inhabitants are then to expect. See Mark vi. 11.

Chap. XIV. Ver. 1. Of the Greeks] Several writers ſuppoſe that theſe were proſelytes of the gate; but it ſeems more probable that they were Gentiles of the place, who, though they did not uſually attend the ſynagogues, yet might naturally be drawn thither by the fame of ſuch extraordinary teachers as Paul and Barnabas. See Doddridge and Whitby.

Ver. 2. Brethren] That is, the Chriſtians; of whom this was one appellation before they were ſo called at Antioch. See on ch. xi. 26.

Ver. 3. Long time therefore] Some think the 2d verſe ſhould be included in the parentheſis, and that the particle therefore refers to the ſucceſs which Paul and Barnabas had met with at Iconium, mentioned ver. 1. as what induced them to continue preaching there for a long time; while others, who would make no breach in the connection, chooſe rather that Μὲν οὖν ſhould be rendered for indeed; and ſuppoſing the rage of the Jews to have been exaſperated by their long ſtay and preaching there, they would render the beginning of the verſe, for indeed they had tarried a long time, &c. But the connection may properly enough be preſerved, though we retain the uſual ſenſe of the particle οὖν, as in our verſion, if we conſider what is here expreſſed as an account of the great firmneſs and undaunted zeal with which theſe faithful miniſters purſued their work: that ſince the Jews were ſo intent upon oppoſing them, and laboured to incenſe the Gentiles too againſt them, they therefore thought it needful to continue preaching with the greateſt boldneſs, and to make the longer ſtay there, for the eſtabliſhment and confirmation of the new converts, and for the vindication of their own character, and of the cauſe they were engaged in, from the injurious calumnies and aſperſions of their neighbours, till they proceeded to ſuch violent methods, that they no longer could remain with any ſafety there. See Doddridge, Whitby, and Benſon.

Ver. 6. They were ware of it] Having received intelligence of it, they fled, &c. Doddridge.

Ver. 7. And there they preached the Goſpel] Some MSS. add, And the whole multitude were moved at their doctrine; but Paul and Barnabas continued at Lyſtra. See Wetſtein.

Ver. 8. Being a cripple from his mother's womb] This circumſtance ſerves greatly to illuſtrate the miracle; for weakneſſes born with a perſon, and continuing inveterate to a more advanced age, hardly ever give way to art. See Grotius, Ader on the Scripture Diſeaſes, and on ch. iii. 2.

Ver. 10. Stand upright on thy feet] Some MSS. here read, I ſay unto thee, in the name of Jeſus Chriſt, ſtand upright, &c. See Wetſtein and Mill.

11 And when the people ſaw what Paul had done, they lifted up their voices, ſaying in the ſpeech of Lycaonia, The gods are come down to us in the likeneſs of men.

12 And they called Barnabas, Jupiter; and Paul, Mercurius, becauſe he was the chief ſpeaker.

13 Then the prieſt of Jupiter, which was before their city, brought oxen and garlands unto the gates, and would have done ſacrifice with the people.

14 Which when the Apoſtles, Barnabas and Paul, heard of, they rent their clothes, and ran in among the people, crying out,

15 And ſaying, Sirs, why do ye theſe things? We alſo are men of like paſſions with you, and preach unto you, that ye ſhould turn from theſe vanities unto the living God, which made heaven and earth, and the ſea, and all things that are therein:

16 Who in times paſt ſuffered all nations to walk in their own ways.

17 Nevertheleſs, he left not himſelf without witneſs, in that he did good, and gave us rain from heaven, and fruitful ſeaſons, filling our hearts with food and gladneſs.

18 And with theſe ſayings ſcarce reſtrained they the people, that they had not done ſacrifice unto them.

19 And there came thither certain Jews from Antioch, and Iconium, who perſuaded the people, and having ſtoned Paul, drew him out of the city, ſuppoſing he had been dead.

Ver. 11. Ch. xxviii. 6.—V. 13. Dan. ii. 46.—V. 14. Matth. xxvi. 65.—V. 15. Ch. x. 26. James v. 17. 1 Theſſ. i. 9. Gen. i. 1. Pſ. xxxiii. 6. cxlvi. 6. Rev. xiv. 7.—V. 16. Pſ. lxxxi. 12. Ch. xvii. 30. 1 Pet. iv. 3.—V. 17. Ch. xvii. 27. Rom. i. 20.—V. 19. 2 Cor. xi. 25. 2 Tim. iii. 11.

Ver. 11. In the ſpeech of Lycaonia] This, as ſome ſay, was not a dialect of the Greek, but rather approached the Syriac, as the language of Cappadocia is ſaid to have done. It appears from numberleſs paſſages in the heathen writers, that they ſuppoſed it a very common thing for their gods to come down in the likeneſs of men; and Elſner on the place has ſhewn, that this notion particularly prevailed with reſpect to Jupiter and Mercury. See Grotius, and Elſner's Obſervations, vol. i. p. 420.

Ver. 12. They called Barnabas Jupiter, &c.] The heathens repreſented Jupiter as an old but vigorous man, of a noble and majeſtic aſpect, and large robuſt make, which probably might be the form of Barnabas; whereas Mercury appeared young, lively, and active, as Paul might probably do; for he was yet but a young man. This is St. Chryſoſtome's obſervation: St. Luke, however, aſſigns a different reaſon why the Lyſtrians gave the Apoſtles theſe appellations. Mercury was generally repreſented as the attendant on Jupiter, and was eſteemed the god of eloquence. Mr. Harrington well obſerves, in his works, p. 330. that this perſuaſion might gain the more eaſily on the minds of Lycaonians on account of the well-known fable of Jupiter and Mercury, who are ſaid to have deſcended from heaven in an human ſhape, and to have been entertained by Lycaon, from whom the Lycaonians received their names. See Fleming's Chriſtology, vol. ii. p. 226. and Biſcoe's Boyle's Lectures, p. 313, &c.

Ver. 13. Then the prieſt of Jupiter] This might be rendered more exactly, then the prieſt of the Jupiter, i. e. of the image of Jupiter, before the city gate. It was cuſtomary to build temples to their deities in the ſuburbs, and to ſet up their images before the city, at the gates. The heathens conſidered their ſeveral images—of Jupiter, for inſtance, or any other of their goods,—as ſo many diſtinct Jupiters; that is, as having ſome Spirit ſent from the god, to whom their worſhip was ultimately referred, to reſide in them. It may, however, by a common ellipſis, be, the prieſt of the temple of Jupiter. So Terence ſays, Ubi ad Dianæ veneris: that is, templum Dianæ. Some are of opinion, that the garlands here mentioned were thoſe which the heathens uſed to put on the horns of their victims, being generally made of ſuch leaves of trees or flowers as were ſacred to the gods to whom they were offered; but others have obſerved, that petitioners, both to the gods and men, uſed to ſupplicate them with green boughs in their hands, and crowns upon their heads, or garlands upon their necks. Theſe boughs were commonly of laurel or olive, about which they wrapped wool, and theſe were what the Greek called στέμματα, the very word made uſe of in the ſacred text, and rendered garlands. The ſcholiaſt on Sophocles explains the word στέμμα to ſignify "wool wrapped about a green bough." With theſe boughs it was uſual to touch the knees of the ſtatue or man whom they addreſſed, if they had confidence of ſucceſs, they were raiſed as high as his chin. This ſeems to have been the intention of the prieſt of Jupiter at this time; and the garlands mentioned were probably theſe boughs, not the chaplets or crowns about the horns of the unicorn. See Biſcoe's Lectures, p. 315. Potter's Grecian Antiquities, vol. i. ch. 5. and Raphel. annot. ex Herod. p. 364. Inſtead of unto the gates, ſome would read to the door, i. e. of the houſe where the two Apoſtles were, not to the temple of Jupiter, which was out of the city; for which reaſon it is better to read ἐπὶ τοῦ πυλῶνος, as in Steph. MS. and Ed. Wechel. Schmid.

Ver. 15. Of like paſſions, &c.] Obnoxious to the ſame common infirmities, Ὁμοιοπαθεῖς: So it alſo ſignifies James v. 17. "We are only frail and mortal men, like yourſelves; liable to the common evils, afflictions, and infirmities of life. The word vanities is, as we have obſerved in the Old Teſtament, frequently uſed for idols. It appears a bold expreſſion, when conſidered and addreſſed to a whole crowd of bigotted idolaters with their prieſts at their head. It naturally leads us to reflect, how unlike the conduct of the Apoſtles was to that of the heathen philoſophers, who, inſtead of entering a generous proteſt againſt the abſurdities of the eſtabliſhed worſhip, though it often led to ſuch ſcandalous immoralities, meanly conformed to it themſelves, and taught their diſciples to eſteem ſuch conformity an eſſential part of a good citizen's character, which ſeems to have been the deſign even of the dying words of Socrates himſelf. See Div. Leg. vol. i. p. 322. Sherlock's Diſ. vol. i. p. 163. and on ch. xvii. 29.

Ver. 16. Who, in times paſt, ſuffered all nations, &c.] All the Gentiles. MS. and Wat. God left all nations, except the Jews, to the light of nature alone, to uſe or abuſe it as they were diſpoſed. It does not appear that any prophet, except Jonah, was ſent to the Gentile world, from the days of Noah or Abraham. See 1 Pet. iii. 20. ch. vii. 2, 3.

Ver. 17. He left not himſelf without witneſs] Though left to the light of nature alone, the Gentiles were culpable for their idolatry, and other abuſes of the light afforded them, inaſmuch as the works of creation always manifeſt the being of the true God; and it is a plain evidence of his goodneſs, power, and providence, in that He, the one true God, is the author of all good, and ſendeth rain from heaven, and fruitful ſeaſons to the juſt and unjuſt; not only providing neceſſaries for mankind, but filling their hearts with joy and gladneſs, and thereby inviting ſinners to repent and hope for mercy. The author of "nature diſplayed," obſerves very pleaſingly, that, as a friend, in ſending us frequent preſents, expreſſes his remembrance of us, and affection to us, though he neither ſpeak nor write; ſo all the gifts of the divine bounty, which are ſcattered abroad on every ſide, are ſo many witneſſes ſent to attend the divine care and goodneſs, and ſpeak it in a very ſenſible language to the heart, though not to the ear. Aratus, a pagan poet, aſſerts particularly, that "rain is given from God:" and as St. Paul was converſant in theſe writings, has quoted this very poet in another ſpeech, and was addreſſing himſelf to perſons who might be no ſtrangers to this author, his ſpeech will appear in a beautiful light, if it be conſidered as alluding to that paſſage. Dr. Hammond mentions a Jewiſh proverb upon this place, "That the keys of life, rain, and the reſurrection were always kept in God's own hand;" by which they ſeem to to have looked upon rain as much an incommunicable attribute of God, as either the giving or reſtoring life. Hence it is frequently ſtiled, "the power of rain," becauſe it deſcends not but by power, and it is one of the things in which the power of God ſhews itſelf. The difference between this and other acts of power is, that it is given both to the juſt and the unjuſt; whereas, according to them, the reſurrection comprehends the juſt only; though the latter ſentence is queſtionable, yet the former is adopted by our Lord himſelf, Matth. v. 45. See Nature Diſplayed, vol. ii. p. 7. Raphelius, Hammond, Benſon, and Jer. xiv. 22.

Ver. 19. Having ſtoned Paul, they drew him out, &c.] The remarkable humility wherewith the Apoſtles behaved, in ſo uncommon an inſtance of popular applauſe as that above related, plainly ſhewed by what Spirit they were actuated. This, however, could not prevent them from the attacks of envy and malice. The Jews, their moſt conſtant enemies, followed them from Antioch and Iconium; and incenſing the populace againſt them as impoſtors, and ill-deſigning men, they prevailed with them to ſtone St. Paul, upon the ſame account as he himſelf had formerly conſented to the ſtoning of St. Stephen; and when they had, not in a legal, but in a tumultuous manner ſtoned him, they dragged him out of the city, thinking that he was quite dead. The Apoſtle very probably alludes to this, 2 Cor. xi. 23—25. So ſhort-lived are human paſſions, not moderated by reaſon and principle, that from imagining him to be a God, the thoughtleſs multitude were eaſily perſuaded to ſtone St. Paul, as one of the vileſt of men. Thus Iſrael fell into idolatry within forty days from God's giving them the law from mount Sion; nor could St. Paul expect any better treatment, when he conſidered that his Lord 20 Howbeit, as the diſciples ſtood round about him, he roſe up, and came into the city: and the next day he departed with Barnabas to Derbe.

21 And when they had preached the goſpel to that city, and had taught many, they returned again to Lyſtra, and to Iconium and to Antioch.

22 Confirming the ſouls of the diſciples, and exhorting them to continue in the faith, and that we muſt through much tribulation enter into the kingdom of God.

23 And when they had ordained them elders in every church, and had prayed, with faſting, they commended them to the Lord, on whom they believed.

24 And after they had paſſed throughout Piſidia, they came to Pamphylia.

25 And when they had preached the word in Perga, they went down into Attalia:

26 And thence ſailed to Antioch, from whence they had been recommended to the grace of God, for the work which they fulfilled.

27 And when they were come and had gathered the church together, they rehearſed all that God had done with them, and how he had opened the door of faith unto the Gentiles.

28 And there they abode long time with the diſciples.

Ver. 21. Matth. xxviii. 19. Gr. had made many diſciples.—V. 22. Ch. xi. 23. xiii. 43. Luke xxii. 28, 29. Rom. viii. 17. 2 Tim. ii. 11, 12. iii. 12.—V. 23. Tit. i. 5.—V. 26. Ch. xiii. 1, 3.—V. 27. Ch. xv. 4, 12. 1 Cor. xvi. 9. 2 Cor. ii. 12.

and Maſter was applauded as king of the Jews, and followed with the acclamations of the ſame multitude, which, about ſix days after, petitioned Pilate that he might be crucified. But though Paul's enemies left him for dead, yet the Chriſtians would not leave him: Moſt probably there was ſomething extraordinary in the appearance of his body in this circumſtance, which led them to conclude he was dead, while he was yet alive; for one can hardly imagine, that ſuch bitter perſecutors would have been content with any very ſlight and tranſcient inquiry, whether he were dead or not. It is obſervable, we read of no ſuch injury offered to Barnabas, who ſeems to have had no ſhare in the effects of this popular fury: and it is probable that Paul's diſtinguiſhed zeal marked him out as the object of their diſtinguiſhed cruelty. See Doddridge, Benſon, and Calmet.

Ver. 20. He roſe up, &c.] That, juſt after he had been ſtoned, dragged about the ſtreets, and left for dead, he ſhould riſe, and walk back into the city, muſt certainly be the effect of a miraculous cure, approaching as near as one can conceive to a reſurrection from the dead. This is the more illuſtrated by his going the next day to Derbe; whereas, in the courſe of nature, he would then have felt his bruiſes much more than at firſt; and probably, after the beſt care that could have been taken of him, would ſcarcely have been able to move. Poſſibly, by coming into the city, and ſhewing himſelf to the new converts at leaſt, if not to others, he hoped, as he reaſonably might, to confirm their faith, and their courageous attachment to the Goſpel. St. Paul evidently alludes to his treatment at theſe places, and at the time of his being there, 2 Tim. iii. 10, 11. As Timothy was a Lydian, he had very probably been an eye-witneſs of the ſufferings of St. Paul at that place; and particularly one of them who ſtood by when the Apoſtle revived, after he was ſtoned, and left for dead. See Doddridge and Benſon.

Ver. 23. When they had ordained them elders] Though χειροτονεῖν, rendered ordain, was originally uſed by the Greeks in a peculiar ſenſe, to ſtretch out, or lift up the hand, as the people did, when they gave their votes in popular elections; yet it came, in time, to be uſed in a laxer ſenſe, and to ſignify nothing more than barely to appoint or conſtitute; for it is uſed by ſeveral Greek authors concerning one perſon's appointing another to an office, as Dr. Hammond on this place has abundantly ſhewn; and here it is predicted of the two Apoſtles, and not of the people. See ch. x. 41. Hammond, Benſon, and Wolfius.

Ver. 25. Attalia] This was a maritime town on the coaſt of the Mediterran ſea. Some MSS. and Verſions read here,—and preaching the Goſpel there. See Beza and Wetſtein.

Ver. 26. And ſailed to Antioch] Not thinking it proper at that time to travel through Cilicia, though they were then on the borders of it, and ſome Chriſtian churches had already been planted there, (ſee ch. ix. 30. xv. 41.) they took ſhipping, and ſailed from thence to the coaſt of Syria, and went up the river Orontes to Antioch in that province. See Doddridge and Calmet.

Ver. 27. And how he had opened the door of faith, &c.] It is certain that the Goſpel was carried by the Apoſtles, in this journey, to many celebrated countries, which it had never before reached. In the Ottomon empire at this day, when a call, or new levy of Janiſſaries is made, it is ſaid to be "the opening of a door for Janiſſaries." See Craddock's Apoſtolical Hiſtory, p. 88. and D'Herbelot's Bibliotheque Orientale.

REFLECTIONS ON CHAP. XIV.

Happy are the miniſters of Chriſt, in the midſt of labours and of perſecution too, if they have but the preſence of their Maſter with them; if the Lord, as in this inſtance, (ver. 3.) bear witneſs to the word of his grace. Almighty Saviour! leave us not deſtitute of that preſence, which is our hope and our joy! but bear witneſs with all thy faithful ſervants, while they are bearing their teſtimony to thee.

Infinite wiſdom governs thoſe revolutions in Providance, which ſeems moſt myſterious. The repeated oppoſitions which the Apoſtles met with in their work, (ver. 4—6.) ſeemed to threaten their deſtruction; but they ſerved in effect to render their teſtimony more credible, when borne amidſt ſo many dangers: and while they tended eſpecially to exerciſe the graces of theſe new converts, and to add a growing evidence to Chriſtianity throughout the remoteſt ages, they were alſo the means of ſpreading the Goſpel to a greater variety of places, when the Apoſtles were forced to make ſuch ſhort viſits at many, through the inhoſpitality of thoſe, from whom they deſerved a far different reception.

The cure of the cripple above-mentioned was but one miracle of a thouſand which the power of Chriſt rendered common in thoſe days. The effect of it one way and another (ver. 8—10.) was very remarkable. The multitude, ſtruck with this exertion of an energy truly divine, by an error to which human nature is, alas! but too incident, fix their eyes on the inſtruments, and pay that honour to mortal men, which was due only to that God by whom the wonderful operation was wrought. Yet is there a mixture of piety amidſt all that ſuperſtition, which cannot fail to ſtrike the mind with ſome pleaſure, joined to the compaſſion we muſt feel, to find it ſo wretchedly miſguided. When they thought that the gods were come down in human form, (ver. 11.) they were deſirous immediately to pay honour to them. ver. 12, 13. Such was the conduct of heathens, under an idea of the divine preſence: What then ſhould that of the ſincere Chriſtian be?—The Lord Jeſus Chriſt is God manifeſt in the fleſh; but alas! in how different a manner was he generally received! With what outrage and infamy, with what malice and contradiction of ſinners, inſtead of that proſtrate adoration and praiſe, to which he had ſo juſt and infinite a claim!

How different is the behaviour of the Apoſtles before us! With an honeſt indignation they reject the homage offered them; they juſtly conceive it robbery thus to be made equal with God, and regard all theſe pompous ſolemnities with horror rather than delight. ver. 14. It was a courageous teſtimony which they bore to the vanity of thoſe heathen deities, while ſurrounded with adorers and their prieſts. Their addreſs in the preſent critical circumſtance is remarkable and exemplary:—While they confeſs their own infirmities, as weak and mortal men, they with heroic boldneſs, and ſacred truth, proclaim the one living and true God, Creator and Governor of the heavens and the earth, the ſea, and all that is therein. ver. 15. May we follow the fair example, and adore this Almighty Being, as the Author of all the bleſſings of Providence, giving us rain from heaven and fruitful ſeaſons; and while our hearts are filled with food and gladneſs, may they rejoice to Him, and to Him devote all that vigour which we derive from his daily bounties. ver. 17.

Above all, let us praiſe Him, that we have not theſe witneſſes alone, of his preſence, his power, and his goodneſs; but that He, who once left the nations to go on in their own ways, (ver. 16.) has now revealed unto us the path of ſalvation, and given us that true bread from heaven, of which if a man eat, he ſhall live for ever. See John vi. 58.

Who would value himſelf upon the applauſes of a multitude, when he ſees how ſoon theſe changeable inhabitants of Lyſtra were inſtigated to aſſault him as a malefactor, whom but a few days before they were ready to adore as a God, and how eaſily they were perſuaded to exchange the inſtruments of ſacrifice, for thoſe of murder! ver. 19. Behold,—they ſtone him, and drag him out of the city for dead. And who that had ſeen this lamentable ſight, would not have concluded that here the labours of St. Paul were ended, and that henceforward we ſhould hear no more of him in this glorious hiſtory? But God, who amidſt all their outrage, ſecretly preſerved the flame of life from being utterly extinguiſhed, miraculouſly interpoſes to heal his wounds and bruiſes, and on a ſudden reſtores him to perfect health. ver. 20.

And thus could he always have protected his Apoſtles, ſo that in a literal ſenſe, not an hair of their heads ſhould have periſhed: But it was more ſuitable to thoſe wiſe maxims on which he proceeded in the CHAP. XV.

Great diſſenſion ariſeth touching circumciſion. The apoſtles conſult about it: and ſend their determination by letters to the churches. Paul and Barnabas, thinking to viſit the brethren together, fall at ſtrife, and depart aſunder.

AND certain men which came down from Judea, taught the brethren, and ſaid, Except ye be circumciſed after the manner of Moſes, ye cannot be ſaved.

2 When therefore Paul and Barnabas had no ſmall diſſenſion and diſputation with them, they determined that Paul and Barnabas, and certain other of them, ſhould go up to Jeruſalem unto the apoſtles and elders about this queſtion.

3 And being brought on their way by the church, they paſſed through Phenice and Samaria, declaring the converſion of the Gentiles: and they cauſed great joy unto all the brethren.

4 And when they were come to Jeruſalem, they were received of the church, and of the apoſtles and elders, and they declared all things that God had done with them.

5 But there roſe up certain of the ſect of the Phariſees which believed, ſaying, That it was needful to circumciſe them, and to command them to keep the law of Moſes.

6 And the apoſtles and elders came together for to conſider of this matter.

7 And when there had been much diſputing, Peter roſe up and ſaid unto them, Men and brethren, ye know how that a good while ago, God made choice among us, that the Gentiles by my mouth ſhould hear the word of the goſpel, and believe.

8 And God, which knoweth the hearts, bare them witneſs, giving them the Holy Ghoſt, even as he did unto us:

9 And put no difference between us and them, purifying their hearts by faith.

10 Now therefore why tempt ye God, to put a yoke upon the neck of the diſciples, which neither our fathers nor we were able to bear?

11 But we believe, that through the grace of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt we ſhall be ſaved even as they.

12 Then all the multitude kept ſilence,

Ver. 1. John vii. 22. Gal. v. 2. Phil. iii. 2. Col. ii. 8, 11, 16. Gen. xvii. 10. Lev. xii. 3.—V. 2. Gal. ii. 1.—V. 3. Rom. xv. 24. 1 Cor. xvi. 6, 11. Ch. xiv. 27.—V. 4. Ver. 12. Ch. xiv. 27.—V. 5. Or, roſe up, ſaid they, certain.—V. 7. Ch. x. 20. xi. 12. V. 8. 1 Chron. xxviii. 9. Ch. i. 24. Ch. x. 44.—V. 9. Ch. x. 43. 1 Cor. i. 2. 1 Pet. i. 22.—V. 10. Matth. xxiii. 4. Gal. v. 1. V. 11. Epheſ. ii. 8. Tit. iii. 4.

government of the world, to ſuffer them at length to fall by the hands of their enemies, and to pour out their blood, as a ſeal of their doctrine, and of the ſincerity with which they taught it: Nor could any death be more glorious, or, when taken in its full connection, any more happy.

With pleaſure let us trace theſe holy men, in all the ſtages of their undaunted and unſucceſsful courſe; converting ſome, confirming others, and, upon the whole, like their divine Maſter, ſcattering bleſſings wherever they come. Let their exhortation ſtill have its power with us to engage our ſtedfaſt continuance in the Chriſtian faith, through whatever tribulations we are called to paſs. Be the way ever ſo rugged and painful, it is enough for us that it leads to the kingdom of heaven: ver. 21, 22. Let us thankfully own the divine goodneſs, in all the aſſiſtances we receive, as we paſs through it, and particularly in that which all ages derive from the Chriſtian miniſtry; ſettled in the church by the wiſe care of its bleſſed Founder, to be a perpetual bleſſing to it. May all the prayers which are offered for thoſe, who in ſucceeding generations are ſet apart to the work, in thoſe ſolemn devotions which attend their ordination to it, be heard and anſwered! And may both miniſters and people flouriſh in knowledge and piety, under the conſtant care of the great Shepherd and Biſhop of ſouls! ver. 23.

To conclude; The ſucceſs which attended theſe two Apoſtles in their courſe, and the pleaſure with which they returned to the place from whence they had ſo affectionately been recommended to the grace of God, ſhould be an encouragement to our prayers and our labours. Whatever we do in the advancement of the Goſpel, let us, with theſe holy men, acknowledge, that God does it by us; and pray, that the door of faith may be opened ſo wide, that all the nations of the earth may enter in, and be ſaved. ver. 26, 27.

Chap. XV. Ver. 1. And certain men, &c.] A circumſtance now occurred, which was the occaſion of very conſiderable conſequences in the Chriſtian church: For ſome perſons who came from Antioch to Judea, full of Jewiſh prejudices,—among whom it was a common maxim, that all uncircumciſed perſons go to hell;—taught the Chriſtians, in their public and private diſcourſes, that except they were circumciſed, according to the manner preſcribed in the law of Moſes, and became obedient to all the whole ſyſtem of his precepts, they could not poſſibly be ſaved by the Goſpel; which, they urged, was intended to make all that were converted to it Jews, and that they could not otherwiſe be true and genuine Chriſtians;—objections, which it was of the greateſt conſequence entirely to remove.

Ver. 2. They determined that Paul and Barnabas, &c.] It is generally allowed, that this is the journey to which St. Paul refers, Gal. ii. 1, 2. when he ſays, that he went up by revelation; which is very conſiſtent with this; for the church in ſending them might be directed by a revelation, made either immediately to Paul, or to ſome other perſon, relating to this important affair. Important indeed it was, and neceſſary that theſe Jewiſh impoſitions ſhould be ſolemnly oppoſed in time; becauſe great number of converts, who were zealous for the law, would eagerly fall in with ſuch a notion, and be ready to contend for the obſervance of it. Many of the Chriſtians at Antioch, undoubtedly knew that Paul was under an extraordinary divine direction, and therefore would readily have acquieſced in his determination alone: But as others might have prejudices againſt him, on account of his having been ſo much concerned with the Gentiles, it was highly expedient to take the concurrent ſenſe and judgement of the Apoſtles to the circumciſion upon this occaſion.

Ver. 3. And being brought on their way] Being brought forward on their journey. This is plainly the ſenſe of the word προπεμφθέντες; which is conſtantly uſed to expreſs the regard ſhewn to thoſe who travelled any where to preach the Goſpel, or to take care of the affairs of the church. Comp. ch. xx. 38. xxi. 5. Rom. xv. 24. 1 Cor. xvi. 6, 11. 2 Cor. i. 16. Tit. iii. 13. and 3 John, ver. 6.

Ver. 5. But there roſe up certain of the ſect of the Phariſees] Some conſiderable commentators have thought this verſe a circumſtance which St. Paul adds to his ſtory; though the connection evidently ſhews, that they are the words of the hiſtorian; informing us that theſe meſſengers found ſome at Jeruſalem, who had the ſame unhappy principles, which had ſo much diſturbed the peace of the church at Antioch. See Raphelius, Beza, L'Enfant, and Wolfius.

Ver. 7. And when there had been much diſputing] The debate which aroſe in this aſſembly may indeed prove, that there were ſome in the church at Jeruſalem who had not a due regard to the authority of the Apoſtles; but it cannot, as many have ſuppoſed, afford any juſt argument againſt their inſpiration; for this diſpute does not appear to have been among the Apoſtles themſelves; and if they really had debated the caſe a while, their deciſion at laſt might have been under an unerring direction. There ſeems no reaſon to conclude, that their inſpiration was always ſo inſtantaneous and expreſs, as to ſuperſede any deliberation in their own minds, or any conſultation with each other. See Doddridge, Beza, and L'Enfant.

Ver. 10. To put a yoke upon the neck, &c.] "A grievous and heavy burden,—which neither our fathers nor we have been able chearfully and regularly to bear, without being expoſed to great inconveniences, and many tranſgreſſions in conſequence of it." The rabbinical writers apply this phraſe to any practical doctrine or precept. See Jer. xxviii. 14. Matth. xxiii. 4. Though the MSS. in general have the word God, Why tempt ye God? yet it is omitted in ſome very ancient fathers; and the ſentence appears to run better without it. Now therefore why do ye attempt to impoſe a yoke, &c.? But if the common reading be true, the ſenſe is, "Why tempt ye God, diſtruſting and diſbelieving him, by impoſing this yoke upon the Gentile converts, after he has declared his acceptance of them, by pouring forth the gift of the Holy Spirit upon them without their being circumciſed?" See Beza, and Mill.

Ver. 11. Saved even as they] After the ſame manner as they. MS. and Doddridge.

Ver. 12. Then all the multitude kept ſilence] St. Peter's ſpeech ſilenced and gave audience to Barnabas and Paul, declaring what miracles and wonders God had wrought among the Gentiles by them.

13 And after they had held their peace, James anſwered, ſaying, Men and brethren, hearken unto me:

14 Simeon hath declared how God at the firſt did viſit the Gentiles, to take out of them a people for his name.

15 And to this agree the words of the prophets; as it is written,

16 After this I will return, and will build again the tabernacle of David, which is fallen down; and I will build again the ruins thereof and I will ſet it up:

17 That the reſidue of men might ſeek after the Lord, and all the Gentiles, upon whom my name is called, ſaith the Lord, who doeth all theſe things.

18 Known unto God are all his works from the beginning of the world.

19 Wherefore my ſentence is, that we trouble not them, which from among the Gentiles are turned to God:

20 But that we write unto them, that they abſtain from pollutions of idols, and from fornication, and from things ſtrangled, and from blood.

21 For Moſes of old time hath in every city them that preach him, being read in the ſynagogues every ſabbath-day.

Ver. 12. Ch. xiv. 27.—V. 13. Ch. xii. 17.—V. 16. Amos ix. 11, 12.—V. 19. See ver. 28.—V. 20. Exod. xx. 3. 1 Cor. viii. 1. x. 20. 1 Theſſ. iv. 3. Gen. ix. 4. Lev. iii. 17.—V. 21. Ch. xiii. 15, 27.

lenced all the multitude, and the zealots had nothing to reply, to ſuch clear and convincing arguments. The whole body of the aſſembly, therefore, were then diſpoſed patiently to attend to what Paul and Barnabas thought fit to communicate to them, concerning the wonders and miracles which God had enabled them to do among the Gentiles: Which was a plain confirmation that God had ſent them, and approved of their attempt to convert ſuch perſons, though they were not circumciſed, nor ſubject to the burden of the Moſaic law. See Benſon, and Beza.

Ver. 13. And after they had held their peace] The ſilence being renewed, the Apoſtle James made a ſpeech, in which he ſummed up the debate, and formed the queſtion, to which they all unanimouſly agreed. It is plain from hence, that the matter was not determined by virtue of any ſuperior authority in Peter; and it ſeems very providential that James ſhould have made ſuch a ſpeech on this occaſion; and that he ſhould have uſed the expreſſion κρίνω, I determine, ver. 19. which, had it been found in Peter's ſpeech, would have been a much more plauſible argument in favour of his weakly-boaſted ſupremacy, than the whole Scripture now affords. See Doddridge, Benſon, and Grotius.

Ver. 16, 17. After this I will return, &c.] After this I will overthrow, and I will rebuild, &c. Wat. Theſe words are quoted from Amos ix. 11, 12. according to the reading of the LXX. Bp. Chandler ſeems very juſtly to argue that the Jews underſtood and admitted the words in the ſenſe that James quotes them; or they would not have ſubmitted to his interpretation, conſidering how ſtrongly they were prejudiced againſt the conſequence he drew from them. Inſtead of the reſidue of men, it is in the Hebrew, the remnant of Edom; one of the nations which was the bittereſt enemy to Iſrael, and a remnant of the moſt abandoned and profligate idolaters; and if they were to be received, the Jews might conſequently expect that the other Gentiles would be much more reconciled to the true religion. The Gentiles, upon whom the name of the Lord is called, is a moſt proper deſcription of thoſe who are converted to the true religion. See the note on Amos ix. 11. Bp. Chandler's Defence of Chriſtianity, p. 174. Sykes of Chriſtianity, p. 294. Grotius, Craddock, and particularly De Dieu on the place.

Ver. 18. Known unto God are all his works] The Apoſtle plainly ſpeaks here, not of God's works in the natural world, but of his diſpenſations towards the children of men: Now he could not know thoſe, without knowing the actions and characters of particular perſons, on a correſpondence to which, the wiſdom and goodneſs of thoſe diſpenſations, is founded. Thus, for inſtance, he muſt have known that there would be Gentile idolaters; a matter, as dependant on the freedom of the human mind, as any thing we can imagine; or he could not have known that he would call them into his church. This text, therefore, muſt remain an unanſwerable proof, amongſt a thouſand more from the word of God, that he certainly foreknows future contingencies. See Doddridge, and Elſner. Dr. Clarke's paraphraſe of the text is, "The method of his univerſal government, through the whole ſyſtem, both of the natural and moral world, is according to certain uniform rules eternally eſtabliſhed by unerring wiſdom." See his ſermons, vol. ix. ſerm. 3.

Ver. 19—21. Wherefore my ſentence is, &c.] Wherefore I determine Κρίνω may naturally expreſs this, and be taken to imply, "Judging in our own minds, without pretending to impoſe that judgement on others." I. With reſpect to this difficult, and much-controverted paſſage of Scripture, we obſerve in the firſt place, that it is plainly the determination of St. James, with which the whole council concurred, ver. 28, 29.—That the Gentiles were not to be burdened with the yoke of the Moſaic law; whence it ſhould ſeem to follow, by immediate conſequence, that the particulars here enjoined upon them for obſervance, were rather of a civil than a religious kind, and ſuited to the immediate circumſtances of the perſon and times. II. And this we obſerve, ſecondly, appears to be collected very evidently from the 21ſt verſe; where the Apoſtle aſſigns a reaſon for the particular injunctions in the 20th verſe, "My opinion is, ſays he, that we write to them to abſtain from ſuch and ſuch things; for, or becauſe Moſes, that is, the law of Moſes, has been publiſhed for a long time, being read in the ſynagogues every ſabbath-day; καταπόλιν, in the city, that is, of Antioch;" not in every city, as we render it; for it would then have been, as in ver. 36. κατα πᾶσαν πόλιν. And as this was the caſe,—the church not yet being ſeparated from the ſynagogue, which was ſtill frequented by the Gentile proſelytes, as well as the Jewiſh converts,—theſe things were forbidden to the Gentile converts, becauſe the Jews had ſuch an averſion to them, that they could not converſe freely with any who uſed them. In order, therefore, to keep up an harmonious agreement between the Gentile and Jewiſh converts, at Antioch in particular, and wherever elſe there might be the ſame mixture of Jews and Gentiles; the council at Jeruſalem wiſely enjoined, that the Gentile converts ſhould abſtain from theſe things; as hereby they would not only avoid giving offence to their Jewiſh brethren, but afford them a ſtrong teſt of their real converſion from idolatry, and, by the way, they would thus alſo be preſerved from many temptations to it. This being the ſtate of the caſe, as ſoon as the reaſon for abſtaining from theſe things ceaſed, [we mean to ſpeak with a reſerve reſpecting the word rendered fornication, hereafter to be explained] the obligation to abſtain from theſe ceaſed with it: But were we in like circumſtances with theſe firſt converts, Chriſtian charity would ſurely require us to lay ourſelves under the ſame reſtraint. Indeed we have remarkable inſtances of this reſtraint and condeſcenſion in St. Paul, than whom no man was more zealous for that liberty wherewith Chriſt hath made us free. See particularly ch. xvi. 3. and xxi. 19—26. III. Theſe things premiſed, we obſerve thirdly, that by the pollutions of idols is meant the fleſh of thoſe ſacrifices which had been offered to idols:—By things ſtrangled is meant, the fleſh of whatever is ſtranged with a deſign to keep the blood in it;—and by blood is meant either pure blood, ſeparated from the fleſh of any animal, or mixed with any thing elſe. Theſe things particularly prohibited by the law of Moſes, certainly neither have nor can have any moral evil in them, which ſhould make the eating them abſolutely and univerſally unlawful; comp. 1 Cor. viii. 1, 8, 9. Rom. xiv. 14, &c. 1 Tim. iv. 4. Matth. xv. 11. But as this does not appear to be the caſe with the fourth particular,—πορνεία, which we have rendered fornication, many learned writers have been at great pains to aſſign different ſenſes to the word, conſiſtent with its union here with things of no moral turpitude. The celebrated Dr. Bentley propoſed to read in this and the 29th verſe χοιρείας, ſwine's fleſh, inſtead of πορνειας, which certainly is in perfect agreement with the other particulars. But there is no foundation for the criticiſm in any MS. or verſion; nor, I apprehend, when the paſſage is properly underſtood, is there any need of it. L'Enfant, Heinſius, &c. would explain the word of "victims offered by proſtitutes, out of their ſcandalous hire;" Deut. xxiii. 18. which, they obſerve, makes a beautiful ſenſe, and obviates a conſiderable difficulty: But ſurely this is a very uncommon ſenſe of the word πορνεια,—at the ſame time that it too narrowly limits the expreſſion; nor could any converts be ſuppoſed guilty of ſuch a crime. Others, by the word πορνεια, underſtand (and that as it ſeems with the beſt reaſon) not fornication ſimply, but inceſt, or marrying within the degrees of conſanguinity prohibited by the Moſaic law, (ſee Lev. xviii.) and in general all kind of impurity forbidden by that law. St. Paul, 1 Cor. v. 1. uſes the word πορνεία in this extenſive ſenſe; for it evidently cannot mean fornication there. So that what the council at Jeruſalem mean to forbid by this word, appears to be every branch of an inceſtuous and impure commerce forbidden by the law of Moſes, and, as it is well known, too commonly practiſed amongſt the Gentiles, who had no idea of the ſinfulneſs of fornication, and in many places looked upon inceſt with no degree of abhorrence; as indeed it is not eaſy to conceive how they ſhould, when they had ſuch examples before them in the deities whom they worſhipped. Bp. Saunderſon has an excellent obſervation upon this place. "Many heathens, ſays he

22 Then pleaſed it the apoſtles and elders, with the whole church, to ſend choſen men of their own company to Antioch, with Paul and Barnabas; namely, Judas, ſurnamed Barſabas, and Silas, chief men among the brethren:

23 And they wrote letters by them after this manner; The apoſtles, and elders, and brethren, ſend greeting unto the brethren which are of the Gentiles in Antioch, and Syria, and Cilicia:

24 Foraſmuch as we have heard, that certain which went out from us, have troubled you with words, ſubverting your ſouls, ſaying, Ye muſt be circumciſed, and keep the law; to whom we gave no ſuch commandment:

25 It ſeemed good unto us, being aſſembled with one accord, to ſend choſen men unto you, with our beloved Barnabas and Paul;

26 Men that have hazarded their lives for the name of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt.

27 We have ſent therefore Judas and Silas, who ſhall alſo tell you the ſame things by mouth.

28 For it ſeemed good to the Holy Ghoſt, and to us, to lay upon you no greater burden than theſe neceſſary things;

29 That ye abſtain from meats offered to idols, and from blood, and from things ſtrangled, and from fornication: from which if ye keep yourſelves, ye ſhall do well. Fare ye well.

30 So when they were diſmiſſed, they came to Antioch: and when they had gathered the multitude together, they delivered the epiſtle:

31 Which when they had read, they rejoiced for the conſolation.

32 And Judas and Silas, being prophets alſo themſelves, exhorted the brethren with many words, and confirmed them.

33 And after they had tarried there a ſpace, they were let go in peace from the brethren unto the apoſtles.

34 Notwithſtanding, it pleaſed Silas to abide there ſtill.

35 Paul alſo and Barnabas continued in Antioch, teaching and preaching the word of the Lord, with many others alſo.

36 And ſome days after, Paul ſaid unto Barnabas, Let us go again and viſit our brethren, in every city where we have preach-he, thought the body was as much made for fornication, as the belly for meats; and that fornication was as fit and convenient for the body, as meats for the belly. Upon this conſideration the Apoſtles, in the firſt general council, thought it needful, by eccleſiaſtical canon, among other indifferent things for the church's peace, to lay this reſtraint upon the converted Gentiles,—that they ſhould abſtain from fornication. Not as if fornication was in itſelf an indifferent thing, as thoſe other things were; nor as if thoſe other things were in themſelves innocent, and ſimply unlawful, as fornication was; but the Apoſtles did therefore join fornication and them together, becauſe the Gentiles counted fornication as a thing indifferent." IV. We obſerve, fourthly, that while the three firſt particulars received their obligation only from poſitive command, and had no moral turpitude in themſelves, and conſequently might well ceaſe to be obſerved when the cauſe of their injunction ceaſed; yet was this by no means the caſe with reſpect to the fourth, for ſome of the ſpecies of uncleanneſs mentioned Lev. xviii. are evidently contrary to the light and law of nature; and all the ſpecies of it are forbidden to all ſorts of Chriſtians by the law of Chriſt: Their obligation, therefore, from the political law of the Jews, to abſtain from impurity, being made void by the deſtruction of the Jewiſh polity, they yet continued under the ſtrongeſt obligations to abſtain from it, by the Chriſtian law, notwithſtanding their full liberty to eat blood, &c. That is to ſay, the obligation to abſtain from the three laſt aroſe entirely from the particular polity of the Jews, and therefore of courſe ceaſed with that polity; but their obligations to abſtain from the firſt aroſe alſo from other laws and engagements, even after the Jewiſh polity was deſtroyed; and which, to this day, continue in force. I would juſt remark further, that as the Chriſtian religion was yet by no means clearly ſeparated from the Jewiſh,—the firſt converts being all Jews, and zealous for the law of Moſes; ſo, when the Gentile converts were admitted amongſt them, the doing any of the things here prohibited would have been a plain confeſſion, that they were not abſolutely and ſincerely converted from idolatry; or if they were, that they held not a right and brotherly communication with the Jewiſh converts, and conſequently could not be accounted brethren. I do not quote any particular author on this place, as the reader will find every expoſitor full upon it.

Ver. 22. Ch. i. 23.—V. 26. Ch. xiii. 50. xiv. 19.—V. 27. Gr. word.—V. 29. Ch. xxi. 25. Lev. xvii. 14.—V. 31. Or, exhortation.—V. 33. 1 Cor. xvi. 11. Hebr. xi. 31.

Ver. 22. Judas, ſurnamed Barſabas] Some have thought that this is the ſame with Joſeph called Barſabas, (ch. i. 23.) candidate with Matthias for the apoſtleſhip, the ſon of Alpheus or Cleophas, and brother to at leaſt two of the apoſtles, James now preſent, and Jude; than whom there was not any one perſon, not an apoſtle, of greater note in the church at this time. Others, however, ſuppoſe that he was the brother of this perſon. Silas, the other, ſeems to have been the perſon elſewhere called Sylvanus, the moſt intimate friend and beloved companion of St. Paul, and as it appears alſo, a citizen of Rome. See ch. xvi. 37. and Benſon.

Ver. 24. Subverting your ſouls] Unſettling your minds. Doddridge. The word ἀνασκευάζοντες is primarily and properly applied to the removing a veſſel from one place to another. In a ſecondary ſenſe, it implies the moving of the mind from one object to another; or unſettling it. See Hammond and Mintert. When the apoſtles poſitively declare that they gave no ſuch commandment to the perſons who had troubled the converts, this was directly fixing the lie upon them, if they had pretended to uſe the apoſtles' name in impoſing their tenets; and as the matter of fact was known, would be a proper means of weakening their credit, and ſo render them leſs capable of doing miſchief.

Ver. 26. Men that have hazarded their lives] Such a teſtimony to the reputation of Paul and Barnabas, was far from being a mere compliment, but exceedingly prudent, as it might be the means of removing the prejudices conceived againſt them by the Jewiſh converts or teachers; who, as it appears from many paſſages of the epiſtles, endeavoured as much as poſſible to leſſen the character of theſe apoſtles. It would alſo be an uſeful expreſſion of the harmony between them, and thoſe of the circumciſion. See Doddridge.

Ver. 28. It ſeemed good to the Holy Ghoſt and to us] Though this may include the deciſion which the Spirit had given by his deſcent upon Cornelius and his friends, yet it ſeems more directly to expreſs the conſciouſneſs which this aſſembly had, of being guided by his influences on their minds in their preſent determination. When the apoſtles call theſe things neceſſary, they mean, by a common mode of ſpeaking, neceſſary for thoſe times and circumſtances. They were undoubtedly neceſſary, as we have ſhewn in the note on ver. 19, &c. in order to promote a free converſe between the Jewiſh and Gentile Chriſtians, and eſpecially to ſecure communion at the table of the Lord; where we cannot imagine that Jews would have eaten and drunk with perſons whom they thought in ſo polluted a ſtate as thoſe, who indulged themſelves in the things here prohibited. On the other hand, it ſeems that the Jews on theſe conditions gave up any further debate about other forbidden meats, as well as circumciſion, &c. See Burnett on the Articles, p. 196. Sanderſon on Gen. ch. vi. 20. and Benſon, vol. ii. p. 61, &c.

Ver. 29. From which if ye keep yourſelves, ye ſhall do well] That is, "You may hope it will end well:" This gentle manner of concluding was worthy the apoſtolical wiſdom and goodneſs. Too ſoon did ſucceeding councils of inferior authority change it for the ſtile of anathemas; forms, which have doubtleſs proved an occaſion of conſecrating ſome of the worſt paſſions of the human mind, under ſacred names; and which, like ſome ill-adjuſted weapons of war, are moſt likely to hurt the hand from which they are thrown. See Doddridge.

Ver. 32. Being prophets] See on 1 Cor. xii. 28.

ed the word of the Lord, and ſee how they do.

37 And Barnabas determined to take with them John, whoſe ſurname was Mark;

38 But Paul thought not good to take him with them, who departed from them from Pamphylia, and went not with them to the work.

39 And the contention was ſo ſharp between them, that they departed aſunder one from the other: and ſo Barnabas took Mark, and ſailed unto Cyprus;

40 And Paul choſe Silas, and departed, being recommended by the brethren unto the grace of God.

41 And he went through Syria and Cilicia, confirming the churches.

Ver. 37. Ch. xii. 12, 25. xiii. 5. Col. iv. 10. 2 Tim. iv. 11. Philem. 24.—V. 38. Ch. xiii. 13.—V. 40. Ch. xiv. 26.—V. 41. Ch. xvi. 5.

Ver. 39. The contention] Παροξυσμος, a paroxyſm, is a medical term, and ſignifies here a ſharp fit of anger.—And there was a ſharp contention,—ſo that, &c. It has been obſerved, that nothing in the text implies that the ſharpneſs was on both ſides. It is far more probable that it was not; and that St. Paul, who had the right on his ſide, as he ſeems undoubtedly to have had, maintained it with love: However, be this as it may, we find not only that Paul and Barnabas were afterwards thoroughly reconciled, (comp. 1 Cor. ix. 6. Gal. ii. 9.) but alſo that St. Mark was taken into St. Paul's favour again, and admitted by him as a companion in his labour. Comp. Col. iv. 10. Philem. ver. 24. 2 Tim. iv. 11. Some have thought that notwithſtanding this contention, theſe two excellent men parted in as friendly a manner as Abraham and Lot did after their contention, Gen. xiii. 7, &c. But, ſuppoſe they parted with diſlike and reſentment, there is nothing wonderful in it; for though they were inſpired with the whole ſcheme of the Chriſtian doctrine, and ſo far under the guidance of an unerring Spirit; yet no Chriſtian ſuppoſes they were inſpired in their ordinary conduct, or diveſted of all human infirmities; and it would be ridiculous to make ſuch things any objection to the truth of the Chriſtian religion. On the contrary, it ought to be looked upon as a proof of the great fairneſs and impartiality in the ſacred writers, that they frankly owned, and without reſerve publiſhed, the foibles and imperfections of their fellow Chriſtians, and even of the apoſtles and firſt planters of the glorious Goſpel. But whatever human infirmity there was in this contention, God, in his good providence, made this ſeparation of the two apoſtles, turn to the greater and more extenſive welfare of mankind; Chriſtianity by this means being more generally and widely ſpread. See Benſon, Craddock, &c. and the Reflections.

Ver. 40. Being recommended by the brethren] St. Luke deſigning here to drop the ſtory of Barnabas, and purſue that of St. Paul alone, ſays nothing of the former's being recommended to the grace of God; but there can be no doubt that as the church of Antioch wiſhed them both ſucceſs, ſo they recommended both of them, together with their aſſiſtants, unto God for his bleſſing, before they ſet out upon ſo great an undertaking. See Benſon.

Ver. 41. And he went through Syria, &c.] Lord Barrington has with great judgement ſhewn, that either the fourth and fifth verſes of the next chapter are miſplaced, and ought to have been added to the concluſion of this chapter; or that ver. 1, 2, 3. of the next chapter ought to be read in a parentheſis; and the different readings of the preſent verſe, mentioned by Mill and Wetſtein, confirm this obſervation. See Miſcel. Sacra, eſſay iv. p. 33, &c.

REFLECTIONS ON CHAP. XV.

How early did the ſpirit of bigotry and impoſition begin to work in the Chriſtian church! That fatal humour of impoſing a yoke on the neck of Chriſt's diſciples, by making indifferent things neceſſary! (ver. 1, 5, 10.) That unmanly and antichriſtian diſpoſition, which has almoſt ever ſince been rending the church to pieces, and clamorouſly throwing the blame on thoſe, who have been deſirous, on principles truly evangelical, to ſtand faſt in the liberty with which Chriſt, their divine Maſter, hath made them free! How fooliſh and how miſchievous the error, of making terms of communion which Chriſt never made! and how preſumptuous the arrogance of invading his throne, to pronounce from thence damnatory ſentences on thoſe, who will not, who dare not ſubmit to our uncommiſſioned and uſurped authority!

Prudent, undoubtedly, was the part which theſe Antiochian Chriſtians acted upon this occaſion, in ſending theſe meſſengers to the Apoſtles, (ver. 2.) for their determination; and it will be our prudence, now we can no longer in perſon conſult thoſe ambaſſadors of Chriſt, to make their writings our counſellors, and the ſtandard both of our faith and worſhip; appealing to the tribunal of Chriſt, our Maſter, and our Judge, from thoſe uncharitable cenſures which we may ſometimes incur, even from his faithful, though miſtaken ſervants, for retaining the ſimplicity of that religion, which theſe authorized interpreters of his will taught.

Great joy was occaſioned to the churches through which Paul and Barnabas paſſed, when they recounted the converſion of the heathen. And may ſuch joy alſo be renewed to us, by the ſucceſs of all, who, with a truly apoſtolic ſelf-denial and zeal go forth at any time to the vaſt multitudes of the Gentiles, who yet remain on this uncultivated earth of ours, ſo great a part of which is yet, in a ſpiritual ſenſe, a wilderneſs! Whatever ſucceſs they may have in one part of our Lord's vineyard, or we in another, let us all remember it is in conſequence of what God does by us, and by them; (ver. 4.) and let us adore the riches of divine grace, to which we owe it that we are choſen to make a part of God's people ourſelves, and to carry the knowledge and power of his Goſpel to others.

May our hearts be purified by a vital, and not merely enlightened by a notional faith! May that God, who knoweth all hearts, bear witneſs to us, by giving us his Holy Spirit, to ſeal us to the day of redemption! (ver. 8, 9.) that ſo being, under the influence of this ſacred agent, animated in the moſt amiable manner to adorn our profeſſion, when we have done all, we may humbly repoſe ourſelves upon the grace of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt; ver. 11. as knwing that it is only by the rich and free diſplay of it, that after all our labour, obedience and care, we can expect ſalvation!

With what gratitude ſhould we adore the divine condeſcenſion, in looking with pity upon the Gentiles, to take from among them a people for his name! ver. 14. We are that people. Let it then be our concern, that as his name is named upon us, we render it becoming honours, and remember what an obligation it lays upon us to depart from iniquity: and may the fallen tabernacle of David alſo, in due time, be raiſed up, and all its ruins repaired; (ver. 16, 17.) that ſo, when God's ancient people are remembered by him, the reſidue of men may ſeek after the Lord, and the fulneſs of the Gentiles may be brought in! God, who hath a compleat view of all his ſchemes, and of all his works from the foundation of the world, ver. 18. will accompliſh this alſo in its ſeaſon: and in the mean time, we ought gratefully to acknowledge what he hath already done.

While we are peculiarly thankful that we are freed from the burdens of the Moſaic inſtitution, and called to a law of liberty, (ver. 19—21) les us take due heed not to abuſe it to licentiouſneſs: Gal. v. 13. From the tenour of this decree we may learn tenderly to regard even the prejudices of our Chriſtian brethren, and to be careful that we do nothing violently; but rather, that ſo far as honour and conſcience will allow, we become all things to all men, and be willing, in ſome reſpects, to deny ourſelves, that we may not give unneceſſary offence to others.

Moſt prudently did the Apoſtles determine this affair, ver. 28. under the influence of the divine Spirit; and therefore, whatever hath ſeemed good to the Holy Ghoſt and to them, let us treat with all becoming reverence and regard. The meſſengers from Antioch, by whom they returned this decree, were perſons of an amiable character indeed: ver. 25, 26. they had hazarded their lives in the ſervice of Chriſt, and joyfully went on to expoſe them to new dangers; thinking themſelves, no doubt, exceeding happy in the ſucceſs of this negociation, as alſo in the ſociety of thoſe pious brethren of the circumciſion, who accompanied them in their return with this letter: ver. 27. May the bleſſed time come, when the miniſters of Chriſt, of all denominations, laying aſide their mutual animoſities, ſhall agree to ſtudy the things which make for peace, and wherewith one may edify another! Rom. xiv. 19. Then will liberty and truth have a more eaſy and univerſal triumph; while love melts and cements thoſe ſouls, whom rigorous ſeverity has only ſerved to harden, to diſunite, and to alienate.

How happy an office had theſe good men, to go about from one place to another, comforting and confirming the ſouls of their brethren, wherever they came! ver. 30, 31. They had their preſent reward in the pleaſure of it, and are now alſo reaping, in the heavenly world, the fruits of their labour of love. Deliver us, O Father of mercies, from lording it over thine heritage, and overbearing the conſciences and liberties of our brethren, with whatever ſecular advantages it might be attended; and give us to taſte at leaſt ſomething of the generous pleaſure of theſe faithful meſſengers, though it ſhould be with all their labours and perſecutions!

While we endeavour to comfort, may we be alſo ready to exhort and quicken one another. Chriſtians ſhould animate each other at every opportunity, in the work and warfare to which they are called; and miniſters ſhould eſpecially remember, how great a part of their work conſiſts in practical addreſſes, to which, like Judas and Silas in the inſtance before us, (ver. 32.) they ſhould chooſe to digreſs, rather than intirely omit them.

Who can wonder that Paul and Barnabas were deſirous to viſit the churches they had planted?—ver. 36. It is natural for thoſe who have been ſpiritual fathers to have a peculiar affection for their offſpring: It is equally natural for the children which God hath given them to honour and love thoſe, who, as the Apoſtle expreſſes it, have begotten them in Chriſt Jeſus. 1 Cor. iv. 15. Happy is it indeed when the viſits of miniſters, animated by ſuch a ſpirit, are improved to the bleſſed purpoſes of advancing the work which divine grace hath already begun, and of addreſſing cautions as well as encouragements, with ſuch affection, wiſdom, and zeal, that it may finally appear they have not run in vain, nor laboured in vain.

It is with ſenſible regret that we read of any difference,—much more of CHAP. XVI.

Paul, having circumciſed Timothy, and being called by the Spirit from one country to another, converteth Lydia, and caſteth out a ſpirit of divination. For which cauſe he and Silas are whipped and impriſoned. The priſon-doors are opened. The jailor is converted, and they are delivered.

THEN came he to Derbe and Lyſtra: and behold, a certain diſciple was there, named Timotheus, the ſon of a certain woman, which was a Jeweſs, and believed; but his father was a Greek:

2 Which was well reported of by the brethren that were at Lyſtra and Iconium.

3 Him would Paul have to go forth with him; and took and circumciſed him, becauſe of the Jews which were in thoſe quarters: for they knew all that his father was a Greek.

4 And as they went through the cities, they delivered them the decrees for to keep, that were ordained of the apoſtles and elders which were at Jeruſalem.

5 And ſo were the churches eſtabliſhed in the faith, and increaſed in number daily.

6 Now when they had gone throughout Phrygia, and the region of Galatia, and were forbidden of the Holy Ghoſt to preach the word in Aſia, 7 After they were come to Myſia, they aſſayed to go into Bithynia: but the Spirit ſuffered them not.

8 And they paſſing by Myſia, came down to Troas.

9 And a viſion appeared to Paul in the night; There ſtood a man of Macedonia, and prayed him, ſaying, Come over into Macedonia, and help us.

10 And after he had ſeen the viſion, immediately we endeavoured to go into Macedonia; aſſuredly gathering, that the Lord had called us for to preach the goſpel unto them.

Ver. 1. Ch. xiv. 6. Rom. xvi. 21. Phil. ii. 19. 1 Theſſ. iii. 2. 2 Tim. i. 5.—V. 2. Ch. vi. 3.—V. 3. 1 Cor. ix. 20. Gal. ii. 3. See Gal. v. 2.—V. 4. Ch. xv. 28, 29.—V. 5. Ch. xv. 41.—V. 8. 2 Cor. ii. 12.—V. 9. Ch. x. 30.—V. 10. 2 Cor. ii. 13.

of a ſharp contention, ariſing between Paul and Barnabas, ſo dear as they were to each other in the bonds of human and Chriſtian friendſhip. ver. 39, 40. But (ſo frail is man, even at the beſt!) we ſee it aroſe to ſome degree of ſeverity, in conſequence of a remainder of imperfection in the temper of the one or the other,—and probably of both. They therefore ſeparated;—but it plainly appears, that they did not become enemies. They preached the ſame Goſpel, though in different companies, each taking his proper circuit: And thus the work of the Lord was performed with greater diſpatch, and perhaps with greater ſucceſs; while Mark, (who afterwards appears, as well as Barnabas, to have been reſtored to the intimate friendſhip of Paul) was on the one hand endeavouring to ſhew, that Barnabas had not choſen an unworthy aſſociate; and on the other hand, Silas, the fellow-labourer and fellow-ſufferer of St. Paul, would take care to behave in ſuch a manner, that this great Apoſtle might have no reaſon to repent of the preference which had been given to him.

To conclude, we ſee that both Barnabas and Paul go to their native country. ver. 41. Some peculiar affection to it, when it is not injurious to the general good of mankind, it natural and allowable; and it is certain we cannot ſhew our love to it in any nobler and more important inſtance, than by endeavouring to promote the progreſs and ſucceſs of the Goſpel in it.

Chap. XVI. Ver. 1. A certain diſciple—named Timotheus] See the paſſages in the margin, and the introductory note to the Firſt Epiſtle to Timothy.

Ver. 3. And circumciſed him] In order to do juſtice to St. Paul's conduct in this affair, we muſt recollect, that he always openly avowed that the Gentiles were free from the yoke of the Moſaic ceremonies, and that the Jews were not to expect ſalvation by them; and he alſo taught, that they were not in conſcience obliged to obſerve them at all, except in caſes where the omiſſion of them would give offence. But becauſe his enemies repreſented him as teaching people to deſpiſe the law of Moſes, and even as blaſpheming it; he therefore took ſome opportunities of conforming to it publickly himſelf, to ſhew how far he was from condemning it as evil. This is the true key to his conduct here, and in ch. xxi. 21, &c. and though, when the Jewiſh zealots would have impoſed it upon him to compel Titus, who was a Greek and Gentile, and of Gentile parents, to be circumciſed, even while he was at Jeruſalem, he reſolutely refuſed, Gal. ii. 3—5. yet here he voluntarily perſuaded Timothy to ſubmit to that rite; knowing that the omiſſion of it in him, who was a Jew by the mother's ſide, would have given offence; and being the more deſirous to obviate any prejudices againſt this excellent youth, whoſe early acquaintance with the Scriptures of the Old Teſtament (2 Tim. iii. 15.) might render him peculiarly capable of preaching in the ſynagogues with advantage; which, had he been uncircumciſed, would not have been permitted. Timothy had moſt probably been baptized when he firſt embraced Chriſtianity; but it does not appear that he then received any ſpiritual gifts, or miraculous powers, very probably becauſe of his unripe age; but as he had, ſince his baptiſm, approved himſelf in a diſtinguiſhing manner, and much beyond his age, and was now pointed out for an Evangeliſt by the Spirit of prophecy, (1 Tim. i. 18. iv. 14.) The Apoſtle laid his hands upon him, and imparted unto him the Holy Spirit, 2 Tim. i. 6. that is, to qualify him for the great work, whereunto God, by the mouth of his prophets, had appointed and called him. See Doddridge and Benſon.

Ver. 4. The decrees] Namely, thoſe which were determined as a rule for their direction, by the Apoſtles and elders in full council at Jeruſalem. See the preceding chapter, ver. 22, &c. Δογματα, rendered decrees, ſays L'Enfant, always ſignifies ſomething temporary and ceremonial, and not laws of perpetual and univerſal obligation. Compare Epheſ. ii. 15. Col. ii. 14.

Ver. 6. To preach the word in Aſia] That is, in Aſia Proper, or Proconſular Aſia, as all the places mentioned in the former verſes lay in Aſia Minor. It is alſo apparent that flouriſhing churches were afterwards planted there; particularly at Coloſſe, Laodicea, Sardis, Thyatira, and Philadelphia; ſo that it ſeems to have been the determination of Providence, that, inſtead of going through this region now, by ſuch a leiſurely progreſs as that in which they proceeded in their former journey through Pamphylia, Piſidia, Lycaonia, &c. they ſhould haſten to Europe directly, and preach the Goſpel firſt in Philippi, which was a Roman colony, and then in the neighbouring parts; while, in the mean time, the Aſian provinces now paſſed over, might hear ſome report of it from their neighbours, and ſo be prepared to receive with greater advantage the labours of the Apoſtles, when they ſhould return to them, as Paul afterwards did. ch. xviii. 23, &c. By this means the ſpread of the Goſpel would, in any given time, be wider than (other circumſtances being equal) it would have been, had they taken all the interjacent places in their way. See Doddridge, Benſon, and Pearce.

Ver. 7. The Spirit] Many manuſcripts and verſions of undoubted authority read here, The Spirit of Jeſus. See Wetſtein and Mill.

Ver. 9. There ſtood a man of Macedonia] Some think St. Paul knew his country by his dreſs, or language; but there was no need of his attending to ſuch particularities, as the viſion itſelf mentions the country. It has alſo been thought, by ſome, to have been a particular perſon with whom Paul was acquainted in Macedonia, and therefore they would render the Greek literally a certain Macedonian. Some MSS. would read ὡσει Ανηρ, as it were a man. Grotius has ſuggeſted, that it was the guardian angel of Macedonia, who appeared in human form. See his note on the place, and Wetſtein.

Ver. 10. Immediately we endeavoured] This is the firſt place in which St. Luke intimates his attending on the Apoſtles; and it is remarkable, that here he does it in a very oblique manner; nor does he indeed, throughout the whole hiſtory, once mention his own name, or relate one thing which he ſaid or did for the ſervice of Chriſtianity; though St. Paul ſpeaks of him in the moſt honourable terms, Col. iv. 14, 2 Tim. iv. 11. and probably 2 Cor. viii. 18. as the brother, whoſe praiſe in the Goſpel went through all the churches. The ſame remark may be made on the reſt of the ſacred hiſtorians, who every one of them ſhew the like amiable modeſty; and what is admired ſo much in a Cæſar, ſurely ſhould not paſs unapplauded in the inſpired penman. We may obſerve, that when St. Paul ſpeaks of his own ſervices, it is by no means in an oſtentatious way, but in his own neceſſary vindication; appealing to his enemies for the known truth of them: by which means Providence has ſo ordered it, that the memory of many important facts, which would otherwiſe have been loſt, are preſerved, and preſerved in ſuch a manner, as to carry the ſtrongeſt evidence along with them. Such inſtances of the divine wiſdom occurring in the Scripture, are worthy our attentive obſervation, and thankful acknowledgment. See Doddridge, Beza, and Mill.

11 Therefore looſing from Troas, we came with a ſtraight courſe to Samothracia, and the next day to Neapolis;

12 And from thence to Philippi, which is the chief city of that part of Macedonia, and a colony: and we were in that city abiding certain days.

13 And on the ſabbath, we went out of the city by a river-ſide, where prayer was wont to be made; and we ſat down, and ſpake unto the women which reſorted thither.

14 And a certain woman named Lydia, a ſeller of purple, of the city of Thyatira, which worſhipped God, heard us: whoſe heart the Lord opened, that ſhe attended unto the things which were ſpoken of Paul.

15 And when ſhe was baptized, and her houſhold, ſhe beſought us, ſaying, If ye have judged me to be faithful to the Lord, come into my houſe, and abide there: And ſhe conſtrained us.

16 And it came to paſs, as we went to prayer, a certain damſel, poſſeſſed with a ſpirit of divination, met us, which brought her maſters much gain by ſoothſaying:

17 The ſame followed Paul, and us, and cried, ſaying, Theſe men are the ſervants of the moſt high God, which ſhew unto us the way of ſalvation.

18 And this did ſhe many days. But Paul being grieved, turned and ſaid to the ſpirit, I command thee in the name of Jeſus Chriſt to come out of her. And he came out the ſame hour.

19 And when her maſters ſaw that the hope of their gains was gone, they caught Paul and Silas, and drew them into the market-place unto the rulers,

20 And brought them to the magiſtrates, ſaying, Theſe men, being Jews, do exceed-

Ver. 12. Or, the firſt.—V. 13. Gr. ſabbath-day.—V. 14. Luke xxiv. 45.—V. 15. Gen. xix. 3. xxxiii. 11. Judg. xix. 21. Luke xxiv. 29. Hebr. xiii. 2.—V. 16. 1 Sam. xxviii. 7. Or, of Python. Ch. xix. 24.—V. 18. See Mark i. 25, 34. Mark xvi. 17.—V. 19. Ch. xix. 25, 26. 2 Cor. vi. 5. Or, court.—V. 20. 1 Kings xviii. 17. Ch. xvii. 6.

Ver. 11, 12. Samothracia, &c.] An iſland in the Ægean ſea, near the Helleſpont: Neapolis was a city of Macedonia. Sailing from thence up the river Strymon, they came to Philippi, which was a city or town of the firſt diviſion of Macedonia, and a Roman colony. It had more anciently gone by the name of Crenides, probably from the ſprings or fountains which aroſe there. It had afterwards the name of Datus, becauſe of the gold mines which were near it; and, laſtly, it was called Philippi, from Philip king of Macedonia, the father of Alexander the Great, who very much improved the town, and increaſed the number of its inhabitants. St. Luke calls it a colony; and as he makes uſe of the Latin word κολώνια, inſtead of the proper Greek term αποικια, it is moſt likely he deſigned to intimate, that it was made a colony by the Romans; which is further confirmed in ver. 21. where he repreſents the Philippians, as calling themſelves Romans. From ſome ancient coins and inſcriptions it appears, that a colony was planted there by Julius Cæſar, and afterwards much augmented by Auguſtus. Livy informs us, (lib. xlv. ch. 29.) that Paulus Æmilius, who conquered Macedonia, and brought it into ſubjection to the Romans, ordered it to be divided into four parts or regions; and that one of theſe, and the firſt part, ſhould be all that lay between the rivers Strymon and Neſſus. In that firſt part, and between thoſe two rivers ſtood Philippi: But, as Livy hath informed us in the ſame chapter, Amphipolis was the chief city of the firſt part, or firſt diviſion, and not Philippi: Neither was Philippi the firſt city which they came to, as ſome ſuppoſe, for that was Neapolis. We ought therefore to follow Eraſmus's notes on ver. 11. and Caſtellio's tranſlation of ver. 12. and render it, a city of the firſt part of Macedonia; for it was very eaſy, through the inadvertency of ſome tranſcriber, for πρώτη της, to have crept into the text, inſtead of πρώτης. See Wetſtein, Caſaubon, Le Clerc, Benſon, Pearce's Synopſis of the Epiſtle to the Philippians, and Spanheim de uſu numiſm. diſſert. ii. p. 105.

Ver. 13. And on the ſabbath we went out, &c.] It ſhould ſeem that there were but few Jews ſettled in this city, and thoſe chiefly women, who could not afford to have a ſynagogue; but where they could not have a ſynagogue, they uſed to have an oratory, or a proſeucha; that is, "an open court of prayer," commonly built upon the ſea-ſide, or on the banks of the river, which places they preferred, as more pure and holy. Some of the Latin poets make mention of proſeuchas. See Juven. Sat. iii. l. 215. and into one of them our Saviour is ſaid to have gone; Luke vi. 12. Dr. Waterland renders the Greek here, where, as uſual, there was an oratory. Theſe proſeuchas differed from the ſynagogues in ſeveral particulars: For, firſt, in the ſynagogues the prayers were offered up in public forms, in common for the whole congregation.; but in the proſeuchas they prayed, as in the courts of the temple, every one apart. Secondly, the ſynagogues were covered houſes; but the proſeuchas were open courts, like the forums, which were incloſures open at the top, or like the court of the women before the temple of Jeruſalem. Thirdly, Synagogues were generally built within the cities to which they belonged; whereas the proſeuchas were commonly out of the city, either by a river, or by the ſea-ſide, and often upon an hill, or mountain. One of theſe being near Philippi, St. Paul and his aſſiſtants well knowing that it was the cuſtom of the Jews to aſſemble there for their devotion on the ſabbath-days, attended there on the firſt ſabbath after their arrival; and though the proſeuchas were commonly uſed only for private prayers, and there was no reading of the law or the prophets in them, nor any diſcourſes uſually made there, Yet they ſat down, after the manner of the Jewiſh doctors, and diſcourſed concerning the Goſpel doctrine to the women who aſſembled there, and who were partly Jews, and partly proſelytes of the gate; for it was the cuſtom of the great Apoſtle of the Gentiles every where to begin with ſuch, and firſt to offer the Goſpel to them. See Elſner's Obſervat. vol. i. p. 430. Lardner's Credibil. b. i. ch. 3. Vitringa de vet. Synag. p. 217. Prideaux's Connect. vol. i. p. 387. Hammond, Wolfius, and Benſon.

Ver. 14. Thyatira] Was a city bordering both on Aſia and Lydia, and this woman ſeems to have derived her name from the latter on that account. She was a proſelyte of the gate; that is, one who worſhipped the true God, though ſhe did not conform to the Jewiſh law in all its rites and ceremonies. Being of a well-diſpoſed mind, ſhe heard St. Paul with ſerious attention; and through the goodneſs of God, in ſetting before her the light of the Goſpel with ſufficient evidence, her heart was affected, and her mind convinced of the truth and excellence of the Chriſtian religion, which ſhe immediately embraced, being baptized, with her whole family. It perhaps may not be unworthy obſervation here, that it appears not only from this caſe of Lydia, but from ver. 48. of the 13th chapter, and alſo from the ſtory of Cornelius, that a good and well-diſpoſed heart, full of piety and ſincerity, is a proper and neceſſary qualification for the reception of the Goſpel; and that, contrary to the wild and dangerous aſſertion of ſome enthuſiaſts, virtuous and upright diſpoſitions will as ſoon incline God to favour men with the further grace of his Goſpel, as defiled minds and vicious practices.

Ver. 16. As we went to prayer] To the oratory. Wat. The manner in which St. Luke relates this ſtory, plainly implies that he thought it a real poſſeſſion, and that St. Paul took it himſelf in that view: Nor is it eaſy to account either for the woman's behaviour, for St. Paul's, or for that of her maſters afterwards, without allowing this to be the caſe. A ſpirit of divination, is in the original, a ſpirit of Pytho, or of Apollo; concerning which, ſee the notes on Lev. xix. 31. and Deut. xviii. 11.

Ver. 18. But Paul, being grieved] He might imagine that if the Gentiles believed the teſtimony of the woman, it might invalidate his doctrine and miracles; and by leading them to ſuppoſe that there was a confederacy between them and the evil ſpirit, it might make the one to be eſteemed the effect of magic, and the other no better than the doctrine of devils. He could not but be perſuaded, that if the Jews heard of this teſtimony, it might have a bad influence upon their minds, and make them entertain a ſuſpicion of St. Paul and his aſſociates, for having the approbation and praiſe of the prince of darkneſs. The diſpoſſeſſion of the damſel wholly obviated all thoſe inconveniences. See Benſon, and Doddridge.

Ver. 19, 20. Unto the rulers] The Syriac and Arabic verſions omit theſe words; and indeed they ſeem more than unneceſſary, as it is unuſual with the ſacred writers to ſtile the ſame perſons by two different names in the compaſs of two lines. The word στρατηγοι, made uſe of in the 20th verſe, denotes with the Greeks Roman prætors; and if it was applied to the Duumviri, who were the governors of colonies, it was by way of compliment. Dr. Waterland renders it officers of the army. At the firſt appearance of the Chriſtian religion, ſome of the Gentiles conſidered it as no other than a particular ſect of Judaiſm, becauſe at that time thoſe who profeſſed it were deſcended from the ſame ſtock, born in the ſame country, and received the ſame Scriptures: And this was certainly enough to denominate them Jews, as we find them called here among thoſe who were ſtrangers to both religions. See Wetſtein, Benſon, and Biſcoe's Lectures, p. 346.

21 And teach cuſtoms which are not lawful for us to receive, neither to obſerve, being Romans.

22 And the multitude roſe up together againſt them: and the magiſtrates rent off their clothes, and commanded to beat them.

23 And when they had laid many ſtripes upon them, they caſt them into priſon, charging the jailor to keep them ſafely.

24 Who, having received ſuch a charge, thruſt them into the inner priſon, and made their feet faſt in the ſtocks.

25 And at midnight Paul and Silas prayed, and ſang praiſes unto God: and the priſoners heard them.

26 And ſuddenly there was a great earthquake, ſo that the foundations of the priſon were ſhaken: and immediately all the doors were opened, and every one's bonds were looſed.

27 And the keeper of the priſon awaking out of his ſleep, and ſeeing the priſon-doors open, he drew out his ſword, and would have killed himſelf, ſuppoſing that the priſoners had been fled.

28 But Paul cried with a loud voice, ſaying, Do thyſelf no harm: for we are all here.

29 Then he called for a light, and ſprang in, and came trembling, and fell down before Paul and Silas;

Ver. 22. 2 Cor. xi. 25. 1 Theſſ. ii. 2.—V. 26. Ch. iv. 31. Ch. v. 19. xii. 7.

Ver. 21. And teach cuſtoms which are not lawful, &c.] Tertullian and Euſebius aſſert, that the Romans had an ancient law, which forbad the worſhip of new deities, without the permiſſion of the ſenate; and it is plain from Livy, that as often as it was violated, it was publickly vindicated by the authority of the ſtate. It is remarkable that Tully, in his "Book of Laws," gives us the very law in queſtion: The ſenſe of it is to this effect: "No man ſhall worſhip the gods clandeſtinely, or have them ſeparately to himſelf; nor ſhall any new and foreign god be worſhiped by individuals, till ſuch god hath been legally approved of, and tolerated by the magiſtrates." If the plea of theſe Gentiles be founded upon this law, as undoubtedly it was, the inferences they drew from it were univerſally acknowledged. The comment which the great author juſt quoted, hath given us on this law, not only ſupports this aſſertion, but ſeems to be the ſame: "For each man to have his gods, ſays he, in peculiar, whether new or ſtranger-gods, without public allowance, tends to defeat and confound religion:" And what was that but to trouble the city exceedingly? But the letter of Mecænas to Auguſtus, in Dion Caſſius, ſets this matter in a ſtronger light. According to him, "The introducing a new religion, or a new God, if indulged, would indiſpoſe men toward the magiſtrate, and make them leſs fond of the civil and religious conſtitutions of their country; from whence factions and confederacies againſt the ſtate would undoubtedly ariſe." The Apoſtle's enemies ſeem to lay great ſtreſs upon their being Romans; and the reaſon of their doing ſo, appears from what we have obſerved, that the Romans were remarkable for not introducing into their public or eſtabliſhed worſhip, any new rites, though the Grecians did. This difference was founded on the different genius and origin of the two people; for Rome riſing on her own foundation, independant on, and unrelated to any other ſtate, and highly poſſeſſed with the enthuſiaſm of diſtinction and empire, would naturally eſteem her tutelary gods as her own peculiar deities, and therefore would reject all foreign mixtures. On the contrary, the Grecian ſtates, related to, and dependant on each other, would more eaſily admit of an aſſociation of their national deities; yet we muſt not conclude from hence, that the introduction of a new public worſhip was allowed even in the Grecian ſtates: It was permitted, but not without the licence of the civil magiſtrates. Plato has recorded the ſame law as we quoted from Cicero; and it is further remarkable, that the crime for which Socrates was brought to his trial, and capitally condemned, was the introducing new deities. But the Apoſtles went further; they carried the pretenſions of the Chriſtian religion ſo high, that they claimed the title of the only true one for it; and not ſtopping here, they urged a neceſſity for all men to forſake their national religions, and embrace the Goſpel; and this ſo ſhocked the pagans, that it ſoon brought upon the Chriſtian profeſſors all the bloody ſtorms which followed. See Div. Leg. b. ii. ſect. 6 Jortin on Chriſtianity, p. 55. Biſcoe, p. 334. Grotius, and Whitby.

Ver. 22. The magiſtrates rent off their clothes] This was the Roman method of proceeding in ſuch caſes, and it was alſo practiſed among the Jews. The latter part of this verſe might be rendered more clearly thus: And the officers, tearing off their garments, that is, of Paul and Silas, commanded them to be beaten with rods, by the hands of the lictors, or public beadles, to whom that office belonged. See the margin, Biſcoe, and De Dieu.

Ver. 24. Made their feet faſt in the ſtocks] It is generally ſuppoſed, that theſe were the cippi, or large pieces of wood uſed among the Romans, which not only loaded the legs of priſoners, but ſometimes diſtended them in a very painful manner. So that the ſituation of Paul and Silas muſt have been very affecting, eſpecially if they lay with their bare backs, ſo lately ſcourged, on the ground, as it is very poſſible they did. This circumſtance renders their ſongs of praiſe the more remarkable. Beza explains the original word of the numellæ, or pieces of wood, containing five holes, in which the neck, hands, and feet were confined in the moſt uneaſy poſture that can well be imagined. See Potter's Greek Antiq. vol. i. b. 1. ch. 25. Biſcoe, p. 348. and Elſner's Obſervat. vol. i. p. 439.

Ver. 25, 26. And at midnight Paul and Silas, &c.] Theſe bleſſed Apoſtles were as little daunted at ſuffering, as elevated when they were careſſed and about to be adored for their miraculous cures. This was true fortitude; a compoſure and firmneſs of mind ariſing from a ſenſe of having done their duty, and being accepted by the ſupreme Ruler of heaven and earth. From this conſciouſneſs of their integrity, and this ſenſe of the divine favour, Paul and Silas, at midnight, when ſuch wounds and torments as they endured give the greateſt uneaſineſs, inſtead of uttering ſighs and groans, prayed and ſang hymns of praiſe and thankſgiving to Almighty God ſo loudly and ſo chearfully, that all the priſoners heard them, rejoicing that they were counted worthy to ſuffer ſhame for Chriſt. While they were at this extatic devotion, they had a miraculous and extraordinary token of the divine acceptance, as remarkable as the ſending fire from heaven to conſume the ſacrifices of old; for on a ſudden there was a great earthquake, all the priſon-doors were opened, and all the priſoner's bonds were looſed. Each of theſe three things was eſteemed by the pagans a token of ſome divine appearance in favour of the oppreſſed and afflicted, who ſuffered wrongfully, and were dear to them. See Benſon, and Elſner's Obſervat. vol. i. p. 441.

Ver. 27. He drew his ſword, &c.] By the Roman law, if a priſoner eſcaped, the gaoler was to ſuffer what the priſoner was to have ſuffered. When therefore this man apprehended that all the priſoners were fled, and remembered what ſtrict orders he had received the day before concerning Paul and Silas, he was afraid of the moſt rigorous treatment from the magiſtrates, for having executed their orders no better; and on this account, in his hurry and conſternation, was about to have killed himſelf. Though it be true that ſome of the philoſophers condemned ſelf-murder, yet it was not only juſtified by many others, but had in fact prevailed much among the Romans, eſpecially about that time; and had, in the memory of ſome then living, been dignified, as it were, in Philippi, by the example of thoſe great men, Brutus and Caſſius, who fell on their own ſwords there. See Grotius, Biſcoe, p. 340, and Adams on Self-murder.

Ver. 28. But Paul cried with a loud voice] St. Paul, like a true Chriſtian, a benevolent and brave man, was tender and ſolicitous about the life of one, who, but a few hours before, had treated him with ſuch rigour. As they were all at preſent in the dark, it is not eaſy to ſay how St. Paul knew of the gaoler's purpoſe, unleſs it were by hearing ſome deſperate words that declared it, or by ſome immediate ſuggeſtion from God; which, amidſt ſuch a ſcene of wonders, is by no means incredible. See Benſon and Doddridge.

Ver. 29, 30. Then he called for a light] As φῶτα, lights, is plural, it ſeems to imply, that, on this alarm, ſeveral of his attendants came with torches, and were preſent at the inquiry which immediately followed; nor did he in the leaſt ſcruple to throw himſelf down before his domeſtics at the feet of theſe his holy priſoners, who were ſo evidently honoured by the God of Nature. Grotius thinks, that in his inquiry what he ſhould do to be ſaved, the gaoler went upon the natural principles of the immortality of the ſoul. Whitby, with much greater propriety, ſuppoſes that he ſpoke thus, as referring to the teſtimony of the Pythoneſs, which had been ſo often and ſo publickly repeated: (ver. 17, 18.) But the ſenſe of what he utters ſeems to be more extenſive; as if he ſhould have ſaid, "What method ſhall I take for my ſecurity?" Probably, a vaſt multitude of ideas ruſhed into his mind at once. He ſaw, by the earthquake, the power and diſpleaſure of God; and, together with this, the ſweetneſs and joy of Paul and Silas in their bonds;—their willing continuance in priſon, when they might ſo eaſily have eſcaped; their generous ſolicitude for the life of one who had uſed them ſo ill, were all circumſtances fitted to ſtrike powerfully on a mind ſo paſſionate as his ſeems to have been; and might concur towards convincing him, that theſe men were indeed divine meſſengers, and that the divine diſpleaſure was falling on the city, and particularly on himſelf, for perſecuting them. Perhaps ſome kind and pious words, which Paul and Silas, who took all opportunities of doing good, may have uttered while he was faſtening their feet in the ſtocks, might throw farther 30 And brought them out, and ſaid, Sirs, what muſt I do to be ſaved?

31 And they ſaid, Believe on the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and thou ſhalt be ſaved, and thy houſe.

32 And they ſpake unto him the word of the Lord, and to all that were in his houſe.

33 And he took them the ſame hour of the night, and waſhed their ſtripes; and was baptized, he and all his, ſtraightway.

34 And when he had brought them into his houſe, he ſet meat before them, and rejoiced, believing in God with all his houſe.

35 And when it was day, the magiſtrates ſent the ſerjeants, ſaying, Let thoſe men go.

36 And the keeper of the priſon told this ſaying to Paul, The magiſtrates have ſent to let you go: now therefore depart, and go in peace.

37 But Paul ſaid unto them, They have beaten us openly uncondemned, being Romans, and have caſt us into priſon; and now do they thruſt us out privily? nay verily; but let them come themſelves, and fetch us out.

38 And the ſerjeants told theſe words unto the magiſtrates: and they feared, when they heard that they were Romans.

39 And they came and beſought them, and brought them out, and deſired them to depart out of the city.

40 And they went out of the priſon, and entered into the houſe of Lydia: and when they had ſeen the brethren, they comforted them, and departed.

Ver. 30. Luke iii. 10. Ch. ii. 37. ix. 6.—V. 31. John iii. 16, 36. vi. 47. 1 John v. 10.—V. 34. Luke v. 29. xix. 6.—V. 37. Ch. xxii. 25.—V. 39. Matth. viii. 34.—V. 40. Ver. 14.

light on his mind, when recollected amidſt ſuch extremity of danger: and no doubt the Spirit of God added conviction and energy to all. See Doddridge, Benſon, and Calmet.

Ver, 31, 32. And they ſaid, believe, &c.] Or, in other words, "Embrace the Chriſtian religion; humbly truſt in, and fully commit thyſelf to the protection of that great and only Saviour whom we preach, and thou and thine houſe will be brought into the ſure way to eternal ſalvation." The meaning cannot be, that the eternal ſalvation of his family could be ſecured by his faith, but that his believing in Chriſt would be the beſt ſecurity of his family from preſent danger; and that if they alſo themſelves believed, they would be intitled to the ſame ſpiritual and everlaſting bleſſings with himſelf; which St. Paul might the rather add, as it is probable that many of them, under this terrible alarm, might have attended the maſter of the family in the dungeon. When St. Paul exhorts the gaoler, as the way to ſalvation, to believe in Chriſt, that is, to embrace his religion, and commit himſelf to him, it naturally and immediately implies a ſubmiſſion to the further inſtructions of theſe his ſpecial ambaſſadors and authorized meſſengers, concerning the whole wonderful ſcheme of this ſalvation, the full import whereof Paul and Silas would not fail to open to their new convert as ſoon as poſſible; and accordingly it is added by the ſacred writer, that they ſpake unto him the word of the Lord. They taught him and all his family the Chriſtian doctrine, laying before them the proofs, evidences, and nature of it, as far as the time and circumſtances would permit; the reſult of all which was, thatthe gaoler was convinced, and embraced Chriſtianity. See Locke, Benſon, and Watts's "Harmony of all Religions," ch. viii. p. 65.

Ver. 33. And he took them the ſame hour, &c.] It appears from this circumſtance of the gaoler's waſhing their ſtripes, that the Apoſtles had not a power of working miraculous cures whenever they pleaſed, either on their own bodies, or thoſe of their deareſt friends. Had they poſſeſſed ſuch a power, it would have been their duty to have uſed it, unleſs they had (as Chriſt with ſuch a power in fact had) a diſcovery of the divine will, that in ſuch and ſuch inſtances the uſe of it ſhould be waved. The continual uſe of ſuch a power would certainly have fruſtrated many of thoſe noble purpoſes in Providence, which their ſufferings anſwered, and would have introduced many inconvenienies. The gaoler, in proof of his altered ſentiments, not only waſhed the ſtripes, and took care of the Apoſtles, but was baptized, he and his houſe immediately, as the converts to Chriſtianity commonly were, in the apoſtolic age; for that had been the way by which the Jews uſed to receive whole families of the heathens, when they became full proſelytes to the Jewiſh religion; and our Saviour had appointed it as the way of initiating perſons into the Chriſtian church. The Jews would naturally have inquired of John the Baptiſt what the meaning of baptiſm was, and not why he baptized, though he profeſſed he was not the Meſſiah, if it had not been a rite which they themſelves had made uſe of when they received proſelytes into the church; and our Saviour, in like manner, would not have commanded his Apoſtles, Go, and baptize all nations, without explaining what he meant by baptizing them, unleſs it had been a thing well known, and which they had no need to have explained to them. It is very remarkable, that we have two inſtances in this one chapter of whole houſholds being in this manner, and at once received into the Chriſtian church; and ſuch expreſſions as Lydia's being baptized and her houſe, and the gaoler and all his family, cannot be underſtood with their proper emphaſis, unleſs we ſuppoſe them to be alluſions to ſuch a remarkable and well-known cuſtom. We may juſt obſerve, that the practice of Abraham, with reſpect to the initiating rite of circumciſion, was agreeable to this. See Gen. xvii. 26, 27. Doddridge, and Benſon.

Ver. 35. The magiſtrates ſent] The magiſtrates who had ordered Paul and Silas to be ſcourged and impriſoned, without a legal trial, or any crime proved againſt them, ſeem to have had a more diſturbed night than their innocent priſoners. Very probably they had ſince reflected in a more cool manner upon their miraculouſly curing the Pythoneſs; and, according to the reading of two ancient MSS. had felt the earthquake, and were terrified thereby: But whether that reading be genuine or no, before the next morning they appear to have been very ſenſible that they had gone beyond their commiſſion; and that they were in danger of being called to an account by their ſuperiors for their illegal and raſh proceedings: for the Jews were generally, throughout the whole Roman empire, allowed the free exerciſe of their religion, and to make as many proſelytes as they could by fair and legal methods; and the Chriſtians were thus far looked upon as a ſect of the Jews, and had the ſame privileges. See Mill, Wetſtein, and Benſon.

Ver. 37. They have beaten us, &c.] The magiſtrates, in their treatment of Paul and Silas, had violated no leſs than three laws: Firſt, in puniſhing them without a trial, which was not only an infringement of the Roman, but of the law of nations. They had likewiſe violated the Valerian law, which forbad that a Roman citizen ſhould be bound. And, thirdly, the Sempronian, or Porcian law, which forbad any man to puniſh a Roman citizen with rods. If it be aſked, Why Paul and Silas did not plead their privilege before? We anſwer, That the hurry and noiſe of the execution prevented it; and perhaps, amidſt ſuch a tumult, it might be apprehended that the people would have murdered them, if they had not been in ſome meaſure appeaſed by their ſufferings; not to ſay how poſſible it is, that the plea, if made, might not be regarded, amidſt ſo riotous a mob. The circumſtances of St. Paul, when he pleaded it, ch. xxii. 25. were very different. If it be further aſked, Why it was now ſo ſoon believed? It may be replied, not only that it was extremely hazardous to make ſuch a claim falſely, (for Claudius puniſhed it with death,) but alſo that there was a certainty dignity in the manner in which St. Paul made this plea, which added a ſenſible credibility to it; eſpecially as they had now no further ſufferings to apprehend, and as the earthquake, which might perhaps affect the whole city, ſeemed to have referred ſo evidently to their caſe. See Biſcoe, Lardner, and Le Clerk.

Ver. 38. And the ſerjeants told, &c.] St. Paul ſeems, in his own conduct here, to have had a regard to the honour and intereſts of Chriſtianity in this place, as well as to their own civil rights as men and Romans; for ſuch a token of public reſpect from the magiſtrates, as the ſerjeants or lictors were commiſſioned to require, would undoubtedly encourage the new converts, and remove a ſtumbling-block out of the way of others, who might not have diſcerned the true luſtre of the characters of Paul and Silas, amidſt ſo much infamy as they had before ſuffered. See Doddridge.

Ver. 39. And beſought them] Παρεκάλεσαν, here rendered beſought, is in the very next verſe, as well as in many other places, rendered comforted; and ſo it ſhould have been rendered here, as it gives us the idea of a more reſpectful treatment. Some MSS. have an addition here, importing that the magiſtrates, in a reſpectful manner, conducted them out of the priſon, and humbly begged of them to leave the city. See De Dieu, Mill, and Wetſtein.

Ver. 40. They comforted them, and departed] Such an extraordinary interpoſition of God for his ſuffering ſervants, and ſuch an addition made to their church, had a natural tendency both to chear their hearts, and to invigorate their pious reſolutions. Accordingly, it appears from St. Paul's Epiſtle to this church, that there were many excellent Chriſtians among them, who expreſſed an affection for him, and a zeal for their religion, in a conſiderable degree correſpondent to ſuch encouragements and obligations. See Philip. i. 5—7, 29, 30. iv. 10, 14—18. Though many circumſtances might now have invited

CHAP. XVII.

Paul preacheth at Theſſalonica: where ſome believe, and others perſecute him: he is ſent to Berea, and preacheth there: being perſecuted at Theſſalonica, he cometh to Athens, and diſputeth, and preacheth the living God, to them unknown, whereby many are converted unto Chriſt.

vited their ſtay at Philippi, they wiſely complied with the requeſt of the magiſtrates, that they might not ſeem to expreſs any degree of obſtinacy or revenge, and might give no ſuſpicion of any deſign to ſtir up the people to ſedition. See Lardner, Doddridge, and Brennius.

REFLECTIONS ON THE CASE OF THE GAOLER, &c.

From the chapter before us, we ſee by what various methods divine grace operates upon different perſons. As for Lydia, ſhe was touched by a gentle influence, deſcending upon her like dew from heaven: ver. 14. Her heart was melted under the word, as ſnow by the ſun; and by the ſoft, yet powerful hand of our bleſſed Saviour, was made willing and obedient.—But when the Lord came to ſubdue the ſtubborn heart of the ſavage gaolor, who ſeems to have taken a barbarous pleaſure in afflicting his pious priſoners. (ver. 24.) He comes in the whirlwind, the tempeſt, and the fire. 1 Kings xix. 11, 12. His ſoul, as well as his houſe, was ſhaken with an earthquake, and the foundations, as it were, laid bare. ver. 26, 27. A ſudden tranſport of aſtoniſhment convinces him of his extreme danger. His hand is mercifully ſtopped in that terrible moment, in which he was ruſhing on to ſeek a refuge in hell from the ſeeming dangers of earth; ver. 28. and being taught by a ſecret grace, which he had not as yet been inſtructed to ſeek, he falls down before Paul and Silas, and honours them, as among the firſt of mankind, whom he had juſt before treated, not only as ſlaves, but as the worſt of miſcreants. ver. 29. God hath given him a new heart; and he is now ready to receive the law and the goſpel from their mouth; ſeeking the way of ſalvation from them, and declaring his readineſs to ſubmit to whatever they ſhould tell him. ver. 30.

In this man we have a ſtriking example of true converſion, which ſeems to afford very uſeful matter for ſerious conſideration: Though our church, upon the authority of the Scriptures, continually acquaints us with the neceſſity of converſion, and with God's deſire of it in all his creatures; yet are there ſome, ſo wholly unacquainted with that neceſſity, and with the nature of true converſion, as to imagine the very idea abſurd.

Indeed, were all baptized Chriſtians really ſuch, or were all profeſſors of Chriſt's faith what that faith requires,—holy in heart, and exemplary in life, Converſion would be impoſſible, and we muſt confine it to the heathens and infidels alone. But while the caſe is ſo notoriouſly different; while perſons baptized and profeſſing Chriſtianity, live as if they were downright infidels; there is the ſame neceſſity for their converſion, if they would enter into the kingdom of heaven, as there was for any of theirs, to whom the apoſtles firſt preached the Goſpel.

For converſion, in the direct meaning of the word, is nothing more than a turning from, and particularly, a turning from the ſervice of ſin and Satan, to the ſervice of God and holineſs. And in this ſenſe it is uſed by God himſelf to the children of Iſrael, who, like the Chriſtians now, were then his profeſſing people: And if they were called upon to turn, or be converted, ſurely there is the ſame reaſon for the ſame proceedings with ſinners now. As I live, ſaith the Lord, I have no pleaſure in the death of the wicked; but, that the wicked ſhould turn from his way, and live: Turn ye, turn ye from your evil ways, for why will ye die, O houſe of Iſrael?

Converſion, therefore, it plainly follows, is abſolutely neceſſary for all thoſe, whatever name they bear, who walk in evil ways, if they would live, if they would ſave their ſouls alive. The true nature and full meaning of converſion is ſhewn us by the hiſtory of the gaoler; and we learn from thence, that three things are required to a real converſion; namely, 1. a conviction of ſin: 2. a belief in the divine propitiation for ſin in Chriſt Jeſus: 3. a change of life and diſpoſition.

Now firſt, a miracle highly alarming convinced the gaoler, and laid him proſtrate at the apoſtles' feet, deſiring to know what he ſhould do to be ſaved. Fears for his ſoul's eternal welfare now firſt filled his heart, and a ſenſe of his own ſinfulneſs, and the divine greatneſs and juſtice, awakened in his boſom the moſt dreadful apprehenſions. There was the ſame reaſon for theſe apprehenſions and fears before, as now; but his danger had never been ſo great, his views of eternity never ſo near. And the ſame is the caſe with all ſinners: There is at all times, while in a ſinful ſtate, the ſame reaſon to be alarmed; for death may come in a moment;—in a moment we, poor, periſhing mortals, may be diſabled from making the enquiry!

It too commonly happens, that while worldly things engage and take up the mind, men's eyes are cloſed to this danger, and the fear of eternity falls not upon them.—But when a ſick-bed, or ſome other providential call, repreſents the true ſtate of things to view, and ſhews the ſoul, juſt ſtanding upon the verge of time and eternity, the real value of each; then the awakening queſtion is ſet home upon the heart, as in thunder, and with all its power; and then the trembling ſoul, like the gaoler, cries out, What muſt I do to be ſaved!

Now, by whatever means this important enquiry is firſt raiſed in the heart; by whatever means the ſoul is led to ſee the danger, and guilt, and condemnation of ſin, and ſtirred up to ſeek after ſalvation,—this is the beginning of converſion; this is the happy entrance on the way of life, and if properly purſued, will end in the everlaſting welfare of the ſoul ſo convicted.

But, 2dly, faith in Jeſus Chriſt; a faith founded on the apoſtolick teſtimony, as recorded ver. 31. provides ſuch a convicted ſinner with a full and perfect anſwer to the great queſtion urged, ver. 30. and with full and perfect peace for his conſcience. There, in the grand atonement on the croſs, he ſees how God was juſt, in puniſhing ſin; there he ſees how God may be merciful, conſiſtent with his juſtice, in pardoning him, a miſerable ſinner: And thus finding in his belief of this glorious truth ſufficient quiet for his ſoul, he becomes a thankful diſciple of the ſuffering Jeſus; and by the power of the bleſſed Spirit, walks in his ſteps, and is renewed in heart and life.

This is the grand teſt of converſion, the indiſputable proof of his ſincerity, both to the ſinner and to others. This was the grand touchſtone which the fathers and firſt preachers of the Goſpel always applied to the reformation of their hearers, by the word of faith which they preached. "What great command the divine precepts of the Goſpel, ſay they, have upon the minds of men, daily experience ſhews. Give us a man that is paſſionate, and we will make him mild; covetous, and we will make him liberal; luſtful, and we will make him temperate; cruel, and we will make him merciful; unjuſt and vicious, and we will make him juſt and unblameable. Haſt thou an unchaſte wife? bring her to religion; it will make her continent: Haſt thou an undutiful child? bring him to religion, it will make him obedient: haſt thou an unfaithful ſervant? it will teach him fidelity. We warrant our faith, not by working of wonders, but by converting of ſinners; by changing filthineſs into holineſs; by turning incarnate devils into mortal angels."

Juſt ſuch was the mighty operation wrought upon the gaoler in the inſtance before us: His works immediately witneſſed the ſincerity of his faith and converſion. Thoſe ſervants of the moſt high God, whom ere now he had thruſt into the loweſt dungeon, he brings out, and the ſame hour of the night waſhes their ſtripes, ſets meat before them, and rejoices, believing in God. He witneſſes his faith and repentance by a real reformation in his nature; and not content to hear Paul preach, to believe, and be baptized, and ſo to reſt in the common duties of Chriſtianity; he ſhews, moreover, the power of his converſion, in his private perſonal calling and profeſſion. He is not only a good Chriſtian, but a good gaoler; full of pity and compaſſion towards his priſoners: he becomes a good father, and a good maſter: All his houſe muſt be taught and baptized, as well as himſelf.

And certainly the truth of converſion will evidence itſelf in the ordering and reforming of our perſonal calling. Religion is not a matter merely of public and common profeſſion; dwells not in churches and temples only; but it will enter into our houſes, and bid itſelf home to us, as Chriſt did to Zaccheus, "Come, I muſt lodge in thine houſe:" It will have acceſs and ſway in all our employments; it will ſhew itſelf in all our dealings one with another; and make a man no leſs careful to diſcharge his duty to his neighbour, and his brother, than to his God and Father.

True converſion will moreover manifeſt itſelf in commiſerating the poor ſervants of God, and ſhewing mercy to them; in making all poſſible amends to thoſe whom we have by any means injured; and in ſhewing all thankfulneſs to thoſe whom God hath been pleaſed to make the inſtruments of conveying to us his ſalvation. A proof of all theſe,—of love to his neighbour, of pity to the afflicted ſervants of God, of reparation for injuries, and thankfulneſs to the miniſters of ſalvation,—was that act of the gaoler's, which evidences his true converſion; namely, his waſhing the ſtripes of Paul and Silas.

And thus we ſee that true converſion conſiſts in real repentance for ſin; ſincere belief in that great atonement wrought out by Chriſt Jeſus; and in a reformation of the diſpoſitions and the life. In ſhort, a change of nature and actions; ſuch a change as fills the heart with love to every brother, and draws it forth in real acts of kindneſs and regard.

The only queſtion then with Us all, ſhould be, Whether or not we are in this ſaving ſtate? It is in vain, and a ſelf-deluſion, to reply, "Doubtleſs we are; for we have been baptized; we frequent the church, and the other means of grace." Alas, how many periſh under this ſpecious deceit! If we have ſeriouſly and truly taken that ſolemn baptiſmal vow upon us; if we have repented, believed and lived in obedience, as we there promiſed; we then have all the evidences of true converſion, and may with the goaler, rejoice in that God in whom we believe. But if, as is too commonly the caſe, we grow up from baptiſm in an utter neglect of our vow, never think of taking it upon ourſelves, and ſo far from conforming to it, live in direct oppoſition to that virtue and godlineſs of life, to which by covenant we have engaged our ſouls. If this be our caſe,—we muſt never think ourſelves converted perſons; we want the very firſt principles: and to ſuch it may be ſtill ſaid, Turn ye, turn ye, from your evil ways; for why will you die? O houſe of Iſrael!

It is not to bear a name, or to perform the mere outward ſervices of religion, which will bleſs us with God's favour, or preſerve us from death eternal. A true and anxious deſire for our ſouls ſalvation; an experimental knowledge of the guilt and danger of ſin; a faith unfeigned in the great work of redemption, and a life of obedience and love; theſe alone can truly ſtile us children of God, and joint heirs with

NOW when they had paſſed through Amphipolis, and Apollonia, they came to Theſſalonica, where was a ſynagogue of the Jews:

2 And Paul, as his manner was, went in unto them, and three ſabbath-days reaſoned with them out of the ſcriptures,

3 Opening and alledging, that Chriſt muſt needs have ſuffered, and riſen again from the dead; and that this Jeſus, whom I preach unto you, is Chriſt.

4 And ſome of them believed, and conſorted with Paul and Silas; and of the devout Greeks a great multitude, and of the chief women not a few.

5 But the Jews which believed not, moved with envy, took unto them certain lewd fellows of the baſer ſort, and gathered a company, and ſet all the city on an uproar, and aſſaulted the houſe of Jaſon, and ſought to bring them out to the people.

6 And when they found them not, they drew Jaſon, and certain brethren, unto the rulers of the city, crying, Theſe that have turned the world upſide down, are come hither alſo;

7 Whom Jaſon hath received: and theſe all do contrary to the decrees of Cæſar, ſaying, That there is another king, one Jeſus.

8 And they troubled the people, and the rulers of the city, when they heard theſe things.

9 And when they had taken ſecurity of Jaſon, and of the other, they let them go.

10 And the brethren immediately ſent away Paul and Silas by night unto Berea: who coming thither, went into the ſynagogue of the Jews.

11 Theſe were more noble than thoſe in Theſſalonica, in that they received the word with all readineſs of mind, and ſearched the ſcriptures daily, whether thoſe things were ſo.

12 Therefore many of them believed; alſo of honourable women which were Greeks, and of men not a few.

Ver. 2. Luke iv. 16.—V. 3. Luke xxiv. 26, 46. Or, whom, ſaid he, I preach.—V. 4. Ch. xxviii. 24. Ch. xv. 40.—V. 5. Rom. xvi. 21.—V. 6. Ch. xvi. 20.—V. 7. Luke xxiii. 2. John xix. 12.—V. 10. Ch. ix. 25.—V. 11, Iſai. xxxiv. 16. Luke xvi. 29. John v. 39.

with Chriſt. Whatever may be the deluſions with which men labour to ſoothe and ſatisfy their conſciences, theſe are marks wherein no man can eaſily deceive himſelf: and ſurely in a matter of ſo great moment, as that of final acceptance with God, no man would wiſh to deceive himſelf. The Scriptures are plain and explicit, that without this converſion—this repentance for ſin, this living faith, and this life of obedience, we can never ſee God. Be it then our care, as we tender our eternal ſalvation, to ſee that thoſe marks by God's grace be found in us, as they were in the goaler before us; Ever bearing in mind, that it is the moſt unreaſonable folly, to pray conſtantly for theſe things, as Chriſtians do, and not to exert one endeavour towards the obtaining of them. We pray to God that "he would give us true repentance, and his holy ſpirit:" but if notwithſtanding we never forſake ſin, and turn to God,—what mockery is it, to pray for repentance? Out of their own mouths, ſhall all ſuch hypocrites be condemned; God enable us to be wiſe for ourſelves in time; and thus to avoid a conduct ſo ſcandalous to our profeſſion, and ſo ruinous to our immortal ſouls!

Chap. XVII. Ver. 1. Amphipolis and Apollonia] Were two cities of Macedonia; the firſt was built by Cimon the Athenian, who ſent 10,000 Athenians as a colony thither. It ſtood in an iſland of the river Strymon, and had the name of Amphipolis, from the river's running on both ſides of the city. The latter was a colony of Corinthians and Corcyreans, near the ſea-ſide. St. Luke ſeems to have gone no further than Philippi with the Apoſtle at this time, but Silas and Timothy ſtill accompanied him; and paſſing through theſe two cities, they came to Theſſalonica, another celebrated city, and the metropolis of that part of Macedonia; very famous for its origin, ſituation, and amplitude. It was a maritime town, remarkable for its trade and commerce, in which many Jews had ſettled. It ſtood upon the Thermaian bay, and was antiently called Thermæ; but being rebuilt and enlarged by Philip the father of Alexander the Great, upon his victory over the Theſſalians, it was in memory of the fact called Theſſalonica, which ſignifies, "The victory of Theſſalia." It is now, by a corrupt pronunciation, called Saloniki, and is a maritime trading town in the poſſeſſion of the Turks. Where was a ſynagogue of the Jews, might perhaps be rendered more properly, Where was the ſynagogue of the Jews; the only ſynagogue, poſſibly, which they had in Macedonia. See Thucid. L. 4. Benſon and Wells.

Ver. 2. Three Sabbath-days reaſoned with them, &c.] It has been concluded from hence, that St. Paul continued but three weeks at Theſſalonica; but as it evidently appears, that while he was in this city, he not only wrought with his own hands to procure ſubſiſtance, (1 Theſſ. ii. 9. 2 Theſſ. iii. 8.) but alſo received ſupplies more than once from Philippi, (comp. Philip. iv. 16.) it ſeems much more probable, that after the Jews appeared ſo obſtinate in their infidelity, as moſt of them did, he deſiſted from diſputing or teaching in their ſynagogue after the third Sabbath; and then preached for ſome time among the Gentiles, before the aſſault mentioned, ver. 5. which drove him from this city. It appears that during his ſtay here great numbers of Gentile idolaters received the Goſpel with remarkable zeal and affection: 1 Theſſ. i. 9, 10. So that a church was founded in the midſt of their perſecutions, which became famous in all Macedonia and Achaia; (ibid. ver. 5—8.) And though the Apoſtle after having treated the new converts with extraordinary tenderneſs during his abode with them, was quickly forced to leave them, (chap. ii. 7, &c.) and they about the ſame time loſt ſome Chriſtian brethren by death, who were dear to them, and might have been remarkably uſeful; (chap. iv. 13, &c.) yet they continued to behave ſo well, that Paul received a comfortable account of them by Timothy, and they afterwards advanced in faith, charity, and courage, amidſt their growing trials. See 2 Theſſ. i. 3, 4. Doddridge and Benſon.

Ver. 3. Alledging] Evidently ſhewing. The proper import of the word παρατιθέμενος is, "laying a thing open before the eyes of ſpectators." Grotius and Elſner think, that the laſt words of the preceding verſe ſhould be joined to the beginning of this; thus, Opening and evincing from the Scriptures, &c.

Ver. 5. Jaſon] It ſeems from Rom. xvi. 21. that Jaſon was a relation of St. Paul's, and probably an Helleniſtic Jew. See L'Enfant and Calmet. Inſtead of certain lewd fellows of the baſer ſort, Doddridge and others render it well, ſome mean and profligate fellows.

Ver. 6. Who have turned the world up-ſide down] "Have cauſed great confuſion and diſturbance in every place through which they have paſſed."

Ver. 7. Contrary to the decrees of Cæſar, &c.] Though the Roman emperor did not pretend to be the only king or monarch, yet in the conquered provinces or dependant ſtates, there could be no king eſtabliſhed without his conſent; and it is not improbable, that the title of Lord, ſo frequently and ſo juſtly given by Chriſtians to their great Maſter, might be uſed as an handle of accuſation, on ſuch an occaſion as this. One cannot however forbear remarking from hence, how proper it was that our Lord ſhould aſcend, before his diſciples declared him to be Lord or King; when this accuſation, at Theſſalonica, though relating to a perſon in another world, and his kingdom not a kingdom of this world, but merely ſpiritual, could yet give umbrage to the higher powers, or at leaſt afford matter of accuſation againſt his diſciples.

Ver. 10, 11. Berea] Was another city of Macedonia, not far from Pella, the birth-place of Alexander the Great. There is a peculiar ſpirit and propriety in the expreſſion, Theſe were more noble, &c. As the Jews boaſted that they were free and noble by virtue of their deſcent from Abraham and the other patriarchs, theſe Bereans, imitating the rational faith of their great progenitor, were εὐγενέστεροι, his more genuine offspring. The word literally ſignifies more nobly born; and in a ſecondary ſenſe implies candour, impartiality, good-diſpoſition, and elevated ideas, or noble conceptions, when applied to the mind. Dr. Waterland reads, Theſe were of a more generous temper—more ingenuous. The word προθυμίας, rendered readineſs, ſignifies avidity or alacrity; and the original of the next clauſe implies, "a careful, anxious, and minute examination or reſearch into the Scriptures". They did not this from any ſuſpicion of the veracity of Paul and Silas, but that, by comparing their aſſertions with the Scriptures, they might build their faith on rational grounds, and at the ſame time that they convinced themſelves, might be enabled alſo to convince others. See Grotius, Benſon and Whitby.

13 But when the Jews of Theſſalonica had knowledge that the word of God was preached of Paul at Berea, they came thither alſo, and ſtirred up the people.

14 And then immediately the brethren ſent away Paul, to go as it were to the ſea: but Silas and Timotheus abode there ſtill.

15 And they that conducted Paul, brought him unto Athens: and receiving a commandment unto Silas and Timotheus, for to come to him with all ſpeed, they departed.

16 Now while Paul waited for them at Athens, his ſpirit was ſtirred in him, when he ſaw the city wholly given to idolatry.

17 Therefore diſputed he in the ſynagogue with the Jews, and with the devout perſons, and in the market daily with them that met with him.

18 Then certain philoſophers of the Epicureans, and of the Stoicks, encountered him. And ſome ſaid, What will this babbler ſay? other ſome, He ſeemeth to be a ſetter-forth of ſtrange gods: becauſe he preached unto them Jeſus, and the reſurrection.

Ver. 15. Ch. xviii. 5.—V. 16. Or, full of idols.—V. 18. Or, baſe fellow.

Ver. 13. And ſtirred up the people] The word σαλευοντες—rendered ſtirred up, ſignifies primarily raiſing a ſtorm. It expreſſes a violent agitation of the ſea, and admirably illuſtrates the rage and fury of a ſeditious multitude. Comp. Pſ. xc. 3, 4. Iſa. xvii. 12, 13. Jer. xlvi. 7, 8. Elſner's Obſervat. vol. i. p. 446. Blackwall's Sacr. Claſ. vol. i. p. 230.

Ver. 14. To go as it were to the ſea] The Cambridge manuſcript has not ὡς, as it were. Dr. Mill mentions ſome antient manuſcripts and verſions which read, ἕως ἐπὶ,—to go unto the ſea. Some learned commentators underſtand the paſſage as our tranſlators did; to explain which, Grotius ſuppoſes that Paul was brought down to the ſea-coaſt, as one about to ſail, and that the rumour thereof was ſpread; but that in reality he haſtened by land to Athens. However Raphelius has clearly and abundantly proved, that the proper tranſlation is, to go towards or unto the ſea; and as there is nothing ſaid of his going by land, the truth of Grotius's interpretation ſeems more than doubtful.

Ver. 15. Athens] This celebrated city, whether we conſider the antiquity, valour, power or learning of its inhabitants, hath had few to rival it. It is ſituated in the middle of a large plain, on the Gulph of the Ægean ſea, which comes up to the Iſthmus of the Peloponneſe or Morea. It is about 25 miles diſtant from Thebes to the S. E.; 28 from Negro-point to the S.; 35 from the Iſthmus of Corinth to the E. and about as many S. W. from Cape Raphti, the moſt eaſtern land of Achaia. It was and is ſtill the capital of Attica. The people of Athens, proud of their antiquity, owned no original but the earth they dwelt upon, and pretended that they were coeval with the ſun. They planted no leſs than 40 colonies, to which they gave names and laws: they were maſters of the Ægean ſea, and the greateſt part of the iſles in it; and carrying their conqueſts as far as the borders of Egypt, they had no leſs than 1000 cities ſubject to them. This city was, in its moſt flouriſhing ſtate, a day's journey, or ſomething more than 22 Roman miles in circumference. Its buildings were finiſhed with the higheſt elegance, of which the temples of Jupiter-Olympus, and Minerva, which is now called Parthenion, are a ſtanding proof to this very day. It might juſtly be ſtiled, "the Univerſity of the whole World," as well as, "the Soul and Sun of all Greece." Royal perſonages reſorted hither for education from all parts of the world; and it was celebrated no leſs for the inviolable fidelity of its citizens, than for being the nurſery of the greateſt ſcholars, orators, and philoſophers; and for having produced the greateſt number of heroes of all the other cities in the world. So that the fine encomium of Cicero, (Orat. pro L. Flac.) is far from being too high, though he ſays, "That politeneſs, learning, religion, rites, and laws, had their origin here, and were from hence diſſeminated all over the world; that its beauty was ſo great, there was a tradition that even the gods diſputed for the poſſeſſion of it; and its antiquity ſo high, that the ground is ſaid to have producnd the citizens which inhabited it, being at the ſame time their parent, nurſe, and country." It has ſuffered great viciſſitudes, and is now in the poſſeſſion of the Turks; who have made a moſque of the Parthenion, which was very much damaged in the Venetian wars. The number of its inhabitants is ſaid to be about 1000, of which three parts are Chriſtians, who have a great number of churches and oratories, and a Greek biſhop reſiding among them, who is a metropolitan: the other inhabitants are Turks, who have five moſques. Few cities in Turkey have preſerved themſelves ſo well as this, or enjoy greater privileges under the Roman tyranny. Their bad fortune has not been able to deprive them of their ſubtilty and wit, which has been aſcribed to the ſerenity and goodneſs of the air. It is peculiarly remarkable, that when the plague rages round about it, it ſeldom reaches there. St. Paul, expecting perhaps that ſome conſiderable ſucceſs would attend his labours at this city, ordered Silas and Timothy to attend him there, as deſirous to engage their aſſiſtance. Nevertheleſs God did not ſee fit to anſwer thoſe expectations; and though they came to him as he had ordered, or at leaſt one of them, (i. e. Timothy) he was quickly obliged to ſend him away, eſpecially as he was ſo ſolicitous about his friends at Theſſalonica. See 1 Theſſ. iii. 1, 2. Potter's Greek Antiq. vol. i. b. 1. ch. 1—8. and Calmet.

Ver. 16. His ſpirit was ſtirred in him] The word παρωξυνετο, ſignifies that a ſharp edge was as it were ſet upon his ſpirit; and that he was wrought up to a great eagerneſs of zeal. Yet it is obſervable, that it did not throw him into any ſallies of rage, either in words or action; but only engaged him courageouſly to attempt ſtopping the torrent of popular ſuperſtition, by the moſt ſerious and affectionate, yet at the ſame time manly and rational remonſtrances. The character of being wholly enſlaved to idolatry, [κατειδωλον, full of idols, Wat.] is ſupported by the whole current of Antiquity. Athens was therefore called by Ælian, "the altar of Greece;" and Xenophon obſerves, that it had twice as many ſacred feſtivals, as any other city. Pauſanias tells us, it had more images than all the reſt of Greece; and Petronius humorouſly ſays, "It is eaſier to find a god than a man there." The full inſcription of the altar mentioned ver. 23. was, "To the gods of Aſia, Europe, and Lybia: to the unknown and ſtranger God." Whence Theophylact concludes, that they received all the ſtrange gods of the world,—of Aſia, Europe, and Africa, and moreover one, whom they knew not who or where he was. Mr. Biſcoe mentions, that a fool had been capitally condemned at Athens for killing one of Eſculapius's ſparrows; and that a little child, accidentally taking up a piece of gold which fell from Diana's crown, was put to death for ſacrilege. The prevalence of ſuch a variety of ſenſeleſs ſuperſtitions in this moſt learned and polite city, which all its neighbours beheld with ſo much veneration, gives us a moſt lively and affecting idea of the need we have, in the moſt improved ſtate of human reaſon, to be taught by a divine Revelation. If the admirers of Grecian wiſdom would ſeriouſly conſider this, they would find almoſt every one of their claſſicks an advocate for the Goſpel. See Biſcoe, p. 317. "The Knowledge of Divine Things from Revelation," p. 238. Doddridge, and Hammond.

Ver. 17. The market] The forum. Heylin.

Ver. 18. The Epicureans and Stoicks] The Epicureans, founded by Epicurus, are ſaid to have aſcribed neither creation nor providence to God; but held that the world was made by a caſual conflux of atoms: That the gods, if there were any, were of human ſhape, who lived in voluptuous eaſe and indolence in heaven, intirely unconcerned about human affairs. They likewiſe held, that, in the preſent ſtate, pleaſure is the chief good; that man's exiſtence was limited to the preſent being, and that conſequently no reſurrection from the dead, nor any future ſtate of rewards and puniſhments was to be expected. The founder of the Stoick ſect was Zeno; but the name of it was derived from the place in which they aſſembled, the Στοα, Stoa, or famous portico at Athens, which was adorned with the deſigns of the greateſt maſters in Greece. They held, that there were two general ſubſtances in nature, God and matter, and that both were eternal. Some of them indeed maintained, that God was a coporeal ſubſtance; that either God was the world, or the world itſelf God. They looked upon all things, even the Deity himſelf, as ſubject to an irreſiſtable fatality; and as they held that the gods could neither be angry, nor hurt any one, they took away one main prop of the rewards and puniſhments of a future ſtate: And as a further weakening of this neceſſary ſuperſtructure, they held a conflagration and renovation, by which the preſent ſyſtem would be periodically and alternately deſtroyed and renewed; ſo that the ſame perſons would be brought on earth again, to do and ſuffer the ſame things as the former generations had done, or other perſons like them, who would bear the ſame names, be placed in ſimilar circumſtances, and perform ſimilar actions. But what heightened the malignity of their opinions was this, that they held the ſoul to be originally a diſcerped part of God; and that immediately after death it was reunited again to the Deity, by which it was exempted from all ſenſe of miſery, and loſt its perſonal identity. As the ſouls of the bad as well as the good were held to undergo this reunion or refuſion, and as all perſonal identity was loſt, it is evident that a future ſtate of rewards and puniſhments muſt be excluded from their creed. Their morality, though ſo highly cried up, was of a piece with their metaphyſics, and led to the very ſame concluſion; for they held that all crimes were equal: and ſo far were they from any proper ideas of religion, that they denied that their wiſe man was any way inferior to the ſupreme Deity; that he was not at all indebted to him for his wiſdom; that the ſupreme Deity could not be more than a wiſe man; that virtue in this life was its own and ſufficient reward; and, to conclude theſe out lines of their character, they denied, in common with the other ſects, the reſurrection of the body. From this ſketch of the opinions of theſe 19 And they took him, and brought him unto Areopagus, ſaying, May we know what this new doctrine, whereof thou ſpeakeſt, is?

20 For thou bringeſt certain ſtrange things to our ears: we would know therefore what theſe things mean.

21 (For all the Athenians and ſtrangers which were there, ſpent their time in nothing elſe, but either to tell, or to hear ſome new thing.)

22 Then Paul ſtood in the midſt of Mars-hill, and ſaid, Ye men of Athens, I perceive that in all things ye are too ſuperſtitious.

23 For as I paſſed by, and beheld your devotions, I found an altar with this inſcription, TO THE UNKNOWN GOD.

Ver. 19. Or, Mars-hill. It was the higheſt court in Athens.—V. 22. Or, the court of the Areopagites.—V. 23. Or, gods that you worſhip, 2 Theſſ. ii. 4.

two ſects, the reader may ſee how oppoſite the genius of each of them was to the pure and humble ſpirit of Chriſtianity; and how happily the Apoſtle points his diſcourſe at ſome of the moſt diſtinguiſhing and important errors of each; while, without expreſly attacking either, he ſeems only intent upon giving a plain ſummary of his own religious principles; in which he appears an excellent model of the true way of teaching and reforming mankind. It cannot be wondered that ſuch men as the Epicureans and Stoicks ſhould give St. Paul the contemptuous appellation of Σπερμολόγος, babbler; the word literally ſignifies, "a contemptible creature, which picks up ſcattered ſeeds in the market, or elſewhere." It might be rendered a retailer of ſcraps, "A trifling fellow, who has ſomewhere or other picked up ſome ſcattered notions, with which he is vain enough to think he may make a figure here." As St. Paul has adorned this diſcourſe with quotations from the Greek writers, poſſibly he purſued the ſame method in his former diſcourſes with the Athenians, who were ſo blinded by prejudices, that they endeavoured to turn this circumſtance to his diſgrace; and, inſtead of admiring his extenſive reading, ſtiled him a retailer of ſcraps. Be this as it may, the word ſtrongly expreſſes the contempt they had for an unknown foreigner, who pretended to teach all the ſeveral profeſſors of their learned and illuſtrious body of philoſophers. Witſius has taken great pains to ſhew, by many authorities, that the word comprehends the three ideas of meanneſs, garrulity, and impiety; but this ſeems ſtraining the matter to an extreme. Chryſoſtom, whom Dr. Hammond and ſeveral other learned interpreters follow, ſuppoſe that the Athenians underſtood St. Paul, as ſetting forth the 'Ανάστασις, or Reſurrection, as a goddeſs. Stupid as this miſtake ſeems, it is the leſs to be wondered at, ſince the reſurrection might as well be counted a deity, as modeſty, fame, deſire among the Athenians; or as the fever, and ſome other things too ſcandalous here to name, were among the Romans. In deference, however, to ſuch great names, I cannot help thinking, that the Athenians muſt have underſtood the meaning of the word Ανάστασις too well, to have taken it for a goddeſs; and indeed it is evident from ver. 32. that they did underſtand the word as we commonly do, of mens riſing from the dead. See Bentley's Boyle's Lectures, ſerm. 2. at the beginning, Div. Leg. b. iii. ſect. 4. Critical Inquiry, &c. ch. v. 8. and, for a larger account of the Epicureans and Stoicks, the Prolegomena to Le Clerc's Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory, ch. iv. 5. Budæus Hiſt. Philoſoph. ch. iv. ſect. 45. Lipſius's Manuduc. ad Phil. Stoic. l. i. c. 14. Adams on Self-murder, and particularly Mrs. Carter's Introductory Diſcourſe to her Tranſlation of Epictetus.

Ver. 19. They brought him unto Areopagus] The original word is the ſame with that rendered Mars-hill, ver. 22. The name of this ſenate was taken from the place in which it was aſſembled, being an hill not far diſtant from the city; for the word πάγος, pagos, in compoſition, ſignifies a rock, hill, or eminence. With reſpect to the firſt part of the name, authors are not ſo well agreed: Some derive it from the Greek word 'Αρης, which ſignifies Mars, becauſe he is ſuppoſed to have been the firſt perſon who was arraigned in this court. But others, with more probability, derive it from the ſame name, as Mars was the god of war and bloodſhed, and as all wilful murders fell under the cognizance of this court; and the word Αρης itſelf is uſed to ſignify murders. When this court was firſt inſtituted is uncertain, ſome making it as ancient as Cecrops, and others bringing it down as low as Solon. It has indeed been objected to the latter opinion, that one of Solon's laws makes mention of the Areopagus as already exiſting. The difficulty is how to reconcile theſe accounts. The caſe might have been this: Solon, we know, was employed by the Athenians to new-model their commonwealth, by reforming the ill conſtitutions, and ſupplying ſuch as were defective; ſo that, in the number of his regulations, that againſt the admiſſion of foreign gods, without a licence from the Areopagus, might be one, as of great moment to public utility: and having thus enlarged and ennobled its juriſdiction, he was afterwards regarded as the founder. The number of perſons that compoſed this venerable aſſembly is variouſly repreſented. By ſome it is reſtrained to nine, by others enlarged to thirty-one, by others to fifty-one; but when Socrates was condemned by this court, there were no leſs than two hundred and eighty-one giving their votes againſt him. Ariſtides obſerves, that this court was the moſt ſacred and venerable tribunal in all Greece; and if we conſider the juſtice of their ſentences, the unblameableneſs of their manners, their wiſe and prudent behaviour, and their quality and ſtation in the commonwealth, this character will be found not to be undeſerved. So impartial and exact were their proceedings, that, as Demoſthenes informs us, in his time there never had been ſo much as one of their determinations which either plaintiff or defendant had reaſon to complain of. They had three meetings in the Areopagus every month. They ſat in the open air, which was cuſtomary in ſuch courts as took cognizance of murder; partly becauſe it was unlawful for the accuſer and criminal, in ſuch caſes, to be under the ſame roof; and partly that the judges might not contract any pollution from converſing with men ſo profane: And they heard all cauſes at night, and in the dark, that they might not be influenced by ſeeing either the plaintiff or defendant. As there is no mention of the oath to be taken previous to the trial, no mention of any accuſer, ſo eſſential to form one, nor any account of the court giving their votes or ſuffrages, ſo neceſſary to the acquittal or condemnation of any criminal, we conclude, with Bp. Warburton, that this was no formal trial, as it is generally ſuppoſed to have been. There are ſome remains of the place wherein this aſſembly met ſtill viſible in the foundations, which form a ſemicircle, built with ſquare ſtones of a prodigious ſize. See Hammond, Potter's Greek Antiq. vol. i. p. 101. Div. Leg. b. ii. ſect. 6. and particularly on ver. 34.

Ver. 21. (For all the Athenians and ſtrangers which were there, &c.] Who ſojourn there. Wat. and Doddridge. It is well known that the young nobility and gentry of Italy, and moſt of the neighbouring countries, generally ſtudied ſome time at Athens; where there were the moſt celebrated profeſſors in all the liberal arts and ſciences. It appears from the teſtimony of many ancient writers of the firſt credit, that the Athenians were moſt remarkable for their love of novelty, agreeable to the character here given of them by St. Luke. The reader will find abundant proofs in Raphelius's Annot. et Xenoph. page 172.

Ver. 22. Ye are too ſuperſtitious] Dr. Doddridge renders the original, Ye are exceedingly addicted to the worſhip of inviſible powers; which, he obſerves, is very agreeable to the etymology of Δεισιδαιμονεστέροι, and has, what a verſion of Scripture ſhould always have, if poſſible, the ambiguity of the original; which learned writers have proved to be capable of a good as well as a bad ſenſe. (comp. ch. xxv. 19.) whereas neither ſuperſtitious nor religious have that ambiguity. This ſenſe too ſeems preferable to that in our verſion on another account; as the giving the original the worſt ſignification of which it is capable, does not well ſuit the decorum which ſo well-bred a man as St. Paul would no doubt maintain before this polite aſſembly; whereas on this interpretation, his diſcourſe opens not only in an inoffenſive, but in a very obliging manner. Beſides, ſtrangers at Athens generally uſed to begin their publick diſcourſes with ſome compliment to the place and its inhabitants: The medium, therefore, which St. Paul chooſes, cannot be ſufficiently admired. See the note on ver. 34. Hammond, Grotius, Revius on Vala, Lardner's Credibil. b. i. ch. 8. and Samuel Drake, S. T. P. De Ara ignoto Deo Sacra, p. 12.

Ver. 23. And beheld your devotions] Σεβάσματα;—the objects, and inſtruments of your worſhip. This is the proper ſignification of the original, which has no Engliſh word exactly correſponding to it. Comp. 2 Theſſ. ii. 4. We have the expreſs teſtimony of Lucian, that there was an altar with ſuch an inſcription at Athens as that here mentioned; the whole whereof has been given in the note on ver. 16. Diog. Laertius, in his life of Epimenides, gives us this moſt probable account of the inſcription. He tells us, that in the time of that philoſopher, about 600 years before Chriſt, there was a terrible peſtilence at Athens; and when none of the deities to whom they ſacrificed appeared able or willing to avert it, Epimenides adviſed them to bring ſome ſheep to the Areopagus, and letting them looſe from thence, to follow them till they lay down; and then to ſacrifice them to the god, near whoſe temple or altar they then were. Now it ſeems probable that Athens, not being then ſo full of theſe monuments of ſuperſtition as afterwards, theſe ſheep lay down in places where none of them were erected, and ſo occaſioned the rearing what the hiſtorian calls anonymous altars, or altars each of which had the inſcription, "To the unknown God;" meaning thereby, the god that had ſent the plague, whoever he were; one of which altars, at leaſt, however it might have been repaired, remained till St. Paul's time, and long after. Now as the God whom St. Paul preached, was indeed the Deity who ſent and removed this peſtilence; the Apoſtle might with great propriety tell the Athenians, He declared to them Him, whom, without knowing him, they worſhipped; as the latter clauſe of this verſe ſhould be read. It may be proper juſt to obſerve, that Witſius, with Heinſius, &c. underſtand this inſcription of Jehovah, whoſe name not being pronounced by the Jews themſelves, might, they think, give occaſion to this appellation; and to this ſenſe Biſcoe inclines. Dr. Wellwood, in the introduction to his tranſlation of "The Banquet of Xenophon," obſerves, "I know there are different opinions about this altar, and upon what occaſion it came to be erected; but it is very probable, and I have ſeveral ancient hiſtorians and divines for vouchers, Whom therefore ye ignorantly worſhip, him declare I unto you.

24 God that made the world, and all things therein, ſeeing that he is Lord of heaven and earth, dwelleth not in temples made with hands:

25 Neither is worſhipped with men's hands, as though he needed any thing, ſeeing he giveth to all life, and breath, and all things;

26 And hath made of one blood all nations of men, for to dwell on all the face of the earth, and hath determined the times before appointed, and the bounds of their habitation;

27 That they ſhould ſeek the Lord, if haply they might feel after him, and find him, though he be not far from every one of us:

28 For in him we live, and move, and have our being; as certain alſo of your own poets have ſaid, For we are alſo his offspring.

29 Foraſmuch then as we are the offspring of God, we ought not to think that the Godhead is like unto gold, or ſilver, or ſtone graven by art and man's device.

30 And the times of this ignorance God winked at; but now commandeth all men every where to repent:

Ver. 24. Ch. xiv. 15. Ch. vii. 48.—V. 25. Pſ. l. 8. Gen. ii. 7.—V. 26. Deut. xxxii. 8.—V. 27. Rom. i. 20. Ch. xiv. 17. V. 28. Col i. 17. Hebr. i. 3. Tit. i. 12.—V. 29. Iſai. xl. 18.—V. 30. Ch. xiv. 16. Rom. iii. 25. Luke xxiv. 47.

vouchers, that it was done by Socrates. It ſeems, inſtead of raiſing an altar, as was the cuſtom, to any of the fictitious gods of Greece, he took this way, as the ſafeſt, to expreſs his devotion to the one true God; of whom the Athenians had no notion, and whoſe incomprehenſible being, he inſinuated by this inſcription, was far beyond the reach of their, or of his own underſtanding: And it is very reaſonable to think, that it was owing to the veneration they had for the memory of its founder, that it came to be preſerved ſo many ages after, though they underſtood not the ſenſe of the inſcription." To theſe obſervations we may add, that though the heathens held Jupiter to be the one ſupreme god, yet their Jupiter was not the true God, but a being whom they ſuppoſed to be attended with many imperfections, and to whom they aſcribed ſeveral enormities; and whether that altar was erected by Socrates, or by whatever other perſon, or upon whatever occaſion, it appears highly probable that it was deſigned in honour of the true God; i. e. the God of the Jews. For as the Jews neither erected any image to the true God, nor were willing to diſcover his name to ſtrangers, He had therefore neither image nor name at Athens; though there was an altar dedicated to him, at once to expreſs the Athenians reverence for, and ignorance of him. We will conclude this note with Lord Lyttelton's remarks on the ſubject of it: "St. Paul's holineſs, ſays he, conſiſted in the ſimplicity of a good life, and the unwearied performance of thoſe apoſtolical duties to which he was called. The ſufferings which he met with on that account, he chearfully bore, and even rejoiced in them, for the love of Jeſus Chriſt; but he brought none on himſelf. We find, on the contrary, that he pleaded the privilege of a Roman citizen, to avoid being ſcourged; and many inſtances might be produced, of his having uſed the beſt methods which prudence could ſuggeſt, to eſcape danger, and ſhun perſecution, whenever it could be done without betraying the duty of his office, or the honour of God. A remarkable inſtance of this appears in his conduct amongſt the Athenians. There was at Athens a law which made it capital to introduce or teach any new gods in their ſtate: Therefore, when St. Paul was preaching Jeſus and the reſurrection to the Athenians, ſome of them carried him before the court of Areopagus, (the ordinary judges of criminal matters, and in a particular manner entruſted with the care of religion) as having broken this law, and being a ſetter-forth of ſtrange gods. Now, in this caſe, an impoſtor would have retracted his doctrine, to ſave his life; and an enthuſiaſt would have loſt his life, without trying to ſave it by innocent means. St. Paul did neither the one nor the other. He availed himſelf of an altar which he had found in the city, inſcribed To the unknown God, and pleaded that he did not propoſe to them the worſhip of any new god, but only explained to them one, whom their government had already received: Whom therefore you ignorantly worſhip, Him declare I unto you. By this he avoided the law, and eſcaped being condemned by the Areopagus, without departing in the leaſt from the truth of the Goſpel, or violating the honour of God. An admirable proof, in my opinion, of the good ſenſe with which he acted, and one which ſhews there was no mixture of fanaticiſm in his religion." See his Obſervations on St. Paul's converſion, p. 71. the note on ver. 34. Hammond, Beza, Benſon, and Hallet's Diſcourſes, vol. i. p. 307.

Ver. 25. Neither is worſhipped with men's hands] Neither is ſerved: θεραπεύεται. This refers to the fooliſh notion among the heathens. that the gods fed on the fumes of ſacrifice. Their votaries alſo clothed their images with ſplendid garmnets, and waited upon them in other ſervices, ill becoming the majeſty and purity eſſential to the divine Nature. The words immediately following fully explain the Apoſtle's meaning, and intimate that God is not worſhipped for his own ſake, but for ours: that he does not ſtand in need of our ſervices, but that we cannot ſubſiſt without his. See Bentley's, Boyle's Lectures, Serm. ii. p. 43.

Ver. 26. And hath made of one blood all nations, &c.] Πᾶν ἔθνος Ἀνθρώπων, the whole generation of men. By this expreſſion the Apoſtle ſhewed them in the moſt unaffected manner, that though he was a Jew, he was not enſlaved to any narrow views, but looked on all mankind as his brethren. The word Αἵματος, blood, is not found in ſome conſiderable MSS. and verſions. However, Wolfius hath ſhewn, that the antients did ſometimes uſe Αἵματος, for Σπέρματος; and therefore the ſenſe is the ſame, whether we retain or reject the common reading. Dr. Doddrigde renders the next clauſe, having marked out the times fore-allotted to each, and the boundaries of their habitation. "Having regulated every circumſtance of time and place relating to them,—in what age and country they ſhould be born, &c." The expreſſion προτεταγμένες καιρὲς, fore-alloted times, ſignifies the wiſdom as well as reality of this divine diſpoſition of events, as fixed by God in his eternal counſels, under the conduct of his providence. This evidently ſtruck at the root of the Epicuræan ſyſtem. See Elſner's Obſervat. vol. i. p. 449. Heylin, Mill, Wetſtein.

Ver. 27. That they ſhould ſeek the Lord] Dr. Heylin renders this verſe, That they ſhould ſeek God, ſo as to feel and find him: who is indeed already not far from any of us. Εἰ, here, ſays he, is the ſame as ὅτι. See chap. xxvi. 8. The word Ψηλαφήσειαν, imports actually feeling. So it is rendered handle me, Luke xxiv. 39. The ſame word is uſed Judges xvi. 26. where Sampſon ſays, ſuffer me that I may feel the pillars. I have been particular, ſays Dr. Heylin, in my remarks upon this verſe, becauſe I am very deſirous to draw the readers attention to it: Sua res agitur. The following paſſage from Cicero de legibus, lib. 1. ad finem, will ſerve as a fine comment upon this paſſage of the ſacred writer. "Cultumq; Deorum, & puram religionem ſuſceperit, & exacuerit illam, ut oculorum, ſic ingenii aciem, ad bona deligenda, & rejicienda contraria. Idemq; cum cœlum, terras, maria, rerumq; omnium naturam perſpexerit, eaq; unde generata, quo recurrant, quando, quo modo obitura, quid in iis mortale & caducum, quid divinum æternumq; ſit, viderit, ipſumq; ea moderantem & regentem pœne prehenderit, ſeſeque non unis circumdatum moenibus, popularem alicujus definiti loci, ſed civem totius mundi, quaſi unius urbis, agnoverit, &c."

Ver. 28. For in him we live, and move, &c.] No words can better expreſs that continued and neceſſary dependance of all derived beings, in their exiſtence, and all their operations, on their firſt and almighty cauſe, which the trueſt philoſophy as well as theology teaches. The thought, in words juſt like theſe, is found in an old Greek poet:—but St. Paul not mentioning it as a quotation, the reader perhaps may be inclined to thihk with Le Clerc, that the poet borrowed it from hence; though without queſtion, many of the antients had before expreſſed themſelves much to the ſame purpoſe. The laſt words, for we are alſo his offspring, are well known to be found in Aratus, a poet of Cilicia, Paul's own country, who lived almoſt 300 years before this time. They are alſo to be found in the hymn of Cleanthes to Jupiter, which is one of the pureſt and fineſt pieces of natural religion of its length extant in the whole world of pagan antiquity. As theſe words are found in two different poets, this poſſibly may be the reaſon why St. Paul ſpeaks in the plural number, certain of your own poets have ſaid; though ſome have thought this refers to the firſt clauſe: However, Homer, Heſiod, and many other of the Greek poets, have ſaid pretty nearly the ſame thing, calling Jove Πατὴρ ἀνδρῶν τε θεῶν τε, the Father of Men and of Gods. See Gataker ad Antonin. lib. 4. ſect. 23. lib. 5. ſect. 27. Raphelius, Wolfius; Cudworth's Intel. Syſt. b. 1. ch. 4. p. 432. for the Greek and Latin of Cleanthes's Hymn, and the Chriſtian's Magazine, vol. ii. p. 91. for an Engliſh verſion of it.

Ver. 29. We ought not to think, &c.] For the obſervations propoſed on this verſe, and referred to, chap. xiv. 15. ſee the Reflections at the end of this chapter.

Ver. 30. The times of this ignorance God winked at] The original Ὑπεριδὼν, ſignifies overlooked; that is, he did not appear to take notice of them, by ſending expreſs meſſages to them, as he did to the Jews, and now alſo to the Gentiles;—as it follows, But now commandeth: and the reader will eaſily perceive that there is a dignity in this latter expreſſion, becoming one who was conſcious to himſelf, that he was indeed an ambaſſador from the King of Heaven. This univerſal demand of repentance, declared in the ſtrongeſt terms univerſal 31 Becauſe he hath appointed a day in the which he will judge the world in righteouſneſs, by that man whom he hath ordained; whereof he hath given aſſurance unto all men, in that he hath raiſed him from the dead.

32 And when they heard of the reſurrection of the dead, ſome mocked: and others ſaid, We will hear thee again of this matter.

33 So Paul departed from among them.

34 Howbeit, certain men clave unto him, and believed: among the which was Dionyſius the Areopagite, and a woman named Damaris, and others with them.

Ver. 31. Ch. x. 42. Rom. ii. 16. Or, offered faith. Ch. ii. 24.

verſal guilt, and admirably confronted the pride of the haughtieſt ſtoic of them all; and at the ſame time it bore down all the idle plea of fatality; for who could repent of doing what he apprehended he could not but have done. See Poole, Wolfius, and Dodderidge.

Ver. 32. When they heard of the reſurrection] St. Paul, from the article of the one true God, was ſliding gently into the other grand article of the Chriſtian faith, namely, that Jeſus of Nazareth was the Lord, Saviour, and Judge of all, the principal proof whereof was his reſurrection from the dead. But the vain and conceited auditory would hear no more. Upon the mention of the reſurection from the dead, ſome mocked, and laughed out: very probably the Epicureans, who believed no reſurrection, nor any future ſtate, or judgement to come; while others ſaid, We ſhall be glad to hear you again upon this ſubject. Moſt likely theſe were the Stoicks, who had ſome notions of a judgment to come, and of the conflagration and renovation of the world, as well as of a future ſtate of rewards and puniſhments. Though with reſpect to the doctrine of the reſurrection of the body, every ſect of philoſophers was no leſs ignorant of it, than highly contemptuous reſpecting it when revealed to them. See on ver. 18. Benſon, and Minucius Felix, 8*vo.* p. 96.

Ver. 34. Dionyſius the Areopagite] As the court of Areopagus conſiſted of thoſe who had borne the office of archon, and ſuch of the nobility as were eminent for their virtue and riches; as the moſt rigid manners were required of its members, and even their countenances, words, and actions were required to be ſerious and grave, to a degree beyond what was expected from any other, even the moſt virtuous men, the acquiſition of ſuch a convert as Dionyſius muſt have done ſingular ſervice to the Chriſtian cauſe, and ſhewn it in a reſpectable light. See Witſius Meletem. p. 86. and Biſcoe's Lectures, p. 325. We will beg leave to cloſe our obſervations on this chapter with the remarks of a learned writer: "By the laws of Athens, no ſtrange god or foreign worſhip was permitted, till approved and licenſed by the court of Areopagus. This is the reaſon why St, Paul, who was regarded as the bringer in of foreign gods, was had up to that tribunal; not as a criminal, but rather as a public benefactor, who had a new worſhip to propoſe to a people religious above all others, for ſo the words ſignify which we render too ſuperſtitious, ver. 22. a people, as Strabo tells us, "moſt addicted to the recognition of foreign worſhip," and, of all the Greeks, as Julian obſerves, moſt devoted to religion, and moſt hoſpitable to ſtrangers. The Areopagus was by far the moſt formidable judicature in the republic. And it is obſervable, that Ariſtophanes, who ſpares neither the fleets, the armies, the courts of juſtice, the perſon of the ſupreme magiſtrate, the aſſemblies of the people, or the temple of the gods themſelves, does not dare to hazard the leaſt injurious reflection on that venerable body. St. Chryſoſtom ſuppoſed the Apoſtle was convened before this court as a criminal; and this is become the general opinion: But it ſeems rather that the philoſophers who encountered him, invited him thither rather as a public benefactor, who had a new worſhip to propoſe to the people. 1. St. Paul was taken up to this court by the philoſophers; but the philophers of that time abhorred the character of perſecutors for religion. The worſt opinion they had of St. Paul was his being a babbler, as the Epicureans called him; though the Stoics thought more reverently of his character, as a ſetter forth of ſtrange or foreign gods; for their hoſpitality extended to all ſtrangers, whether gods or men, and this could not but be a welcome office to a people diſpoſed to raiſe altars even to gods unknown, ver. 23. 2. Their addreſs to him, when they had brought him thither, "May we know, &c." implies rather a requeſt to a teacher, than an interrogatory to a criminal. 3. At leaſt the reaſon they give for their requeſt goes no farther than a deſire to be ſatisfied about a doubtful matter.—For thou bringeſt ſtrange things to our ears, ver. 20. or rather, certain foreign ceremonies or cuſtoms. Strabo, as we ſee, tells us, the Athenians were moſt addicted to foreign worſhip. 4. The very words of the ſacred hiſtorian ſeem to ſhew that this was the whole of the matter.—For all the Athenians and the ſtrangers which were there, [i. e. ſuch as reſided there for education, or out of love for the Athenian manners] ſpent their time in nothing elſe, but either to tell or hear ſome new thing. Had the hiſtorian underſtood the citation to be of the criminal form, he would ſurely have given a more pertinent reaſon for the conduct of the Athenians, ſuch as their jealouſy of danger to the ſtate, or the eſtabliſhed religion. 5. St. Paul's ſpeech to the court has not the leaſt air of an apology ſuiting to a perſon accuſed; but is one continned information of an important matter, ſuch as befitted a teacher or benefactor to give. 6. Had he appeared as a criminal, the charge againſt him would have been ſimply, the ſetting forth of ſtrange gods. Now this charge, of leſs importance, he declines to anſwer; and yet confeſſes a much greater crime of which he was not accuſed, namely, a condemnation of their eſtabliſhed worſhip, and the times of their ignorance, &c. ver. 30. 7. The behaviour of the court towards him, ſhews he was not heard as a criminal. He is neither acquitted nor condemned; but diſmiſſed as a man coram non judice.—And when they heard of the reſurrection of the dead, &c. ver. 32. 8. He left the court as one thus diſmiſſed.—So Paul departed from amongſt them, ver. 33. A ſtrange way of intimating a juridical acquittal; but very naturally expreſſing the reſentment of his ſlighted miſſion. For as ſome mocked, and others refered him to an indefinite audience, nothing was left him but to depart, and according to his Maſter's direction, to ſhake the duſt from his feet. 9. The hiſtorian's reflection on the whole, ſupports the foregoing reaſons.—Howbeit, certain men clave unto him, &c. ver. 34. A very natural concluſion of the ſtory, if only a tranſaction within the ſphere of his miſſion; for then, having related its ill ſucceſs in general, ſome mocking, and others putting off the hearing, he adds, that however it was not altogether without effect, for a few converts he did make, &c. But if we ſuppoſe it a narrative of a juridical progreſs, we ſhall not find in it one circumſtance of a proper relation. We are not ſo much as told whether he was acquitted or cenſured, or whether he gave caution for a new appearance: but as if ſo illuſtrious a proſecution (where the moſt learned of the apoſtles was the criminal, the Greek philoſphers his accuſers, and the court of Areopagus his judges) was below the hiſtorian's notice, we are told a thing quite foreign to the matter,—That he made but few converts. In a word, take this hiſtory in the ſenſe here explained, and the whole narrative is ſimple, exact, and luminous; take it in the other, and it ſcarce affords us one ſingle quality of a pertinent relation, but is obſcured from one end to the other, both by redundancies and omiſſions. See Div. Leg. vol. ii. p. 58.

REFLECTIONS ON CHAP. XVII.

Nothing can be more ſtriking than the conduct of St. Paul at Athens; more particularly if it be contraſted with the behaviour of the philoſophers and wiſe men of the heathen world. He himſelf hath aſſerted, that even thoſe of them who knew God, did not glorify him as God. To prove the truth of this aſſertion, by an induction of particulars, would carry us beyond the limits of a work like this: but yet the point is too material to be paſſed over in ſilence. Let us then conſider the caſe of one only, but of one who among the good men was the beſt, and among the wiſe ones the wiſeſt; I mean Socrates, the great philoſopher of Athens: And were the wiſe men of antiquity to plead their cauſe in common, they could not put their defence into better hands.

We have an account of the ſpeculative opinions of many of the wiſe men of Greece, preſerved to us in authors of great credit; but of their practice and perſonal behaviour in life, little is ſaid: which makes it hard to judge how far their own practice and conduct were influenced by their opinions, or how conſiſtent they were in purſuing the conſequences of their own doctrines. The caſe might have been the ſame with Socrates, had not a very particular circumſtance put him under a neceſſity of explaining his conduct with reſpect to the religion of his country.

He had talked ſo freely of the heathen deities, and the ridiculous ſtories told of them, that he fell under a ſuſpicion of deſpiſing the gods of his country, and of teaching the youth of Athens to deſpiſe their altars and their worſhip. Upon this accuſation, he is ſummoned before the great court of the Areopagites, and happily the apology he made for himſelf is preſerved to us by two of the ableſt of his ſcholars, and the beſt writers of antiquity, Plato and Xenophon; and from both their accounts it appears, that Socrates maintained and aſſerted before his judges, that he worſhipped the gods of his country, and that he ſacrificed in private and in public upon the allowed altars, and according to the rites and cuſtoms of the city. After this publick confeſſion, ſo authentically reported by two ſo able hands, there can be no doubt of his caſe. He was an idolater, and had not by his great knowledge and ability in reaſoning, delivered himſelf from the practice of the ſuperſtition of his country. We ſee how far the wiſdom of the world could go; let us now obſerve what the fooliſhneſs of preaching could do in the very ſame caſe.

St. Paul was in the ſame caſe as related in the chapter before us. He was accuſed in the ſame city of Athens of the ſame crime, that he was a ſetter forth of ſtrange Gods; and before the ſame great court of Areopagites, he made his apology. We have then the greateſt and the ableſt among the wiſe men of Greece, and an Apoſtle of Chriſt in the ſame circumſtances; we have heard the philoſopher's defence, that he worſhipped the gods of his country, and as his country worſhipped them. Let us now take a view of the Apoſtles; "Ye men of Athens, &c. ver. 22—26, 29, a defence, which he cloſes with calling upon them, in the name of that great God whom he deſcribes, to repent of their ſuperſtition and idolatry, which God would no longer bear, becauſe he hath appointed a day, &c." ver. 31.

Which now of theſe two was a preacher of true religion?—Let thoſe who value human reaſon at the higheſt rate determine the point.

CHAP. XVIII.

Paul laboureth with his hands, and preacheth at Corinth to the Gentiles: the Lord encourageth him in a viſion: he is accuſed before Gallio the deputy, but is diſmiſſed: afterwards paſſing from city to city, he ſtrengtheneth the diſciples. Apollos being more perfectly inſtructed by Aquila and Priſcilla, preacheth Chriſt with great efficacy.

AFTER theſe things, Paul departed from Athens, and came to Corinth;
2 And found a certain Jew named Aquila,

Ver. 2. Rom. xvi. 3. 1 Cor. xvi. 19.

The manner in which Socrates died, was the calmeſt and the braveſt in the world, and excludes all pretence to ſay that he diſſembled his opinion and practice before his judges out of any fear, or meanneſs of ſpirit; vices, with which he was never taxed, and of which he ſeems to have been incapable.

Conſider we then,—Was it poſſible for any man, upon the authority of Socrates, to open his mouth againſt the idolatry of the heathen world, or to make uſe of his name for that purpoſe, who had ſo ſolemnly, in the face of his country, and before the greateſt judicature of Greece, borne teſtimony to the gods of his country, and the worſhip paid them?—

The city of Athens ſoon grew ſenſible of the injury done to the beſt and wiſeſt of their citizens, and of their own great miſtake in putting Socrates to death. His accuſers and his judges became infamous; and the people grew extravagant in doing honours to the memory of the innocent ſufferer. They erected a ſtatue, nay a temple to his memory, and his name was had in honour and reverence. His doctrine upon the ſubjects of divinity and morality were introduced into the world, with all the advantage that the ableſt and politeſt pens could give; and they became the ſtudy and entertainment of all the conſiderable men who lived after him.

It is alſo well worth obſerving, that from the death of Socrates to the birth of Chriſt, were about 400 years; a time ſufficient to make the experiment, how far the wiſdom of Socrates, attended with all the advantages before-mentioned, could go in reforming the world.—And what was the effect of all this? Can we name the place where religion was reformed? Can we name the man who was ſo far reformed, as to renounce the ſuperſtition of his country?—None ſuch are to be found: And how ſhould there? ſince the greater the credit and reputation of Socrates, the more ſtrongly did they draw men to imitate his example, and to worſhip as their country worſhiped.

Let us conſider, on the other ſide, what was the conſequence of preaching the Goſpel. St. Paul entertained the Athenians with no fine ſpeculations; but he laid before them, in the plaineſt dreſs, the great and momentous truths of religion: He openly rebuked their idolatry, and condemned their ſuperſtition. The Goſpel was publiſhed in the ſame manner every where. The firſt preachers of it were enabled to ſupport it by miracles, and moſt of them ſhed their blood in defence of its truth.

By theſe means they became likewiſe to have credit and authority in the world: But in theſe two caſes there was this great difference; the corrupt example of Socrates was a dead weight upon the purity of his doctrine, and tended to perpetuate ſuperſtition in the world. The authority and example of St. Paul and the other apoſtles went hand in hand, and united their force to root out idolatry. There was likewiſe this farther difference: The doctrines of Socrates could go only among the learned; the doctrines of the Goſpel were artleſs and plain, and ſuited to every man's capacity.

For near 400 years the diſciples of Socrates had the world to themſelves, to reform it, if they could. In all which time there is no evidence remaining, that the religion of the world was the better for their wiſdom. But in much leſs time the Goſpel prevailed in moſt parts of the known world; wherever it came, ſuperſtition and idolatry fled before it; and in little more than three centuries the Roman empire became Chriſtian, which compleated the victory over the heathen deities. And if we may judge by this compariſon, between the wiſeſt of men, and an apoſtle of Chriſt, the words of that apoſtle will appear fully verified, where he declares that the world by wiſdom knew not God, and that by the fooliſhneſs of preaching God has provided ſalvation for them who believe. 1 Cor. i. 21.

If then it appears from hiſtory, and the experience of the world before us, that men for ages together lived in ignorance of the true God, and of true religion; and that reaſon was not able to contend againſt inveterate errors and ſuperſtitions; let us not be ſo vain as to imagine that we could have done more in the ſame circumſtances, than all or any who lived in the many ages of idolatry. If we conſider to what height arts and ſciences were carried in thoſe days, and the politeneſs of Greece and Rome in all parts of learning, we ſhall have little reaſon to imagine that men have grown wiſer, as the world has grown older. If we have more reaſon, in matters of religion, (and undoubtedly we have more) it ſhould lead us to conſider, to whom we are indebted for the happy change: and to give praiſe to him who ſet the reaſon of mankind free from the chains under which it had been faſt bound for ages together by ſuperſtition and idolatry.

When we conſider the means made uſe of by God, for reſtoring true religion in the world, and pretend to judge of the fitneſs of them to attain the end propoſed, we ſhould be aware of being miſled by the conceits of ſome, who think themſelves wiſe enough to give directions in a matter of ſo great moment. Some may imagine it might be better, if the Goſpel had reaſoned more philoſophically on the nature of the Deity, or more fully explained the nature of the human ſoul; and others may wiſh that other abſtruſe points of reaſon and divinity had been cleared to their ſatisfaction. But this was not the errand upon which Chriſt came. He came to teach true religion, and to teach it to all men; and therefore, what was not fit for all, was no part of his buſineſs. The Greeks ſought after wiſdom, and the Jews required a ſign: But the preachers of the Goſpel had no commiſſion to ſatisfy the curioſity of the one, or of the other; but to teach the doctrines of God in ſuch a manner, and to prove them by ſuch means, as might influence and affect, as well the loweſt as the higheſt.

If then the means made uſe of to introduce the Goſpel into the world were ſuch, as were proper and neceſſary to ſubdue ancient errors and prejudices; if the truths taught by Chriſt are a proper foundation for all the duties of religion in which men have any concern; if they are left to be ſupported in the world, and propagated from age to age, by methods which from experience have been found effectual, and which, human nature conſidered, muſt be effectual to preſerve the profeſſion of religion among men:—If we diſcover theſe marks in the Goſpel, ſurely we ſee enough to convince us, that the Goſpel is the power of God, and the wiſdom of God unto ſalvation; which is ſeeing all that we are concerned to look after, or have any pretence to expect from him who came to ſave and to redeem us.

Laſtly; ſince we have the experience of many ages before us, to ſhew us how unable human reaſon is to ſtruggle againſt the errors and follies of ſuperſtition, when once they have got poſſeſſion; ſince from our own experience we know, how much human reaſon is indebted to the light of the Goſpel; we ſhould be careful to preſerve this light, for fear of falling back again into the wretched ſtate from which we have been delivered, or into a worſe. Reaſon was once, what the light of the Goſpel is now, a ſufficient guide in religion: but when men grew corrupt and vain in their imaginations, ſuperſtition and error prevailed over the world, and falſe religion led reaſon in triumph for ages together. As reaſon was ſubdued, ſo the light of the Goſpel may be; and will be, when the ſame cauſes meet to work together. A conſideration, which ſhould make all men, who have any ſenſe of religion, think ſeriouſly of the treatment that the Goſpel every day meets with. If we uſe it no better, it may ſoon leave us; and when once we get rid of this fooliſhneſs of preaching, we know by ſad experience, what is to be expected from all the wiſdom of the world.

Chap. XVIII. Ver. 1, 2. To Corinth] Achaia Propria was a part of Greece, and Corinth the metropolis of Achaia Propria. It was a famous mart town; for by ſtanding in the middle of the Iſthmus, it had the trade of both the eaſtern and weſtern ſeas, that is, through Aſia and Europe. It was at firſt called Ephyre; but it had the name of Corinth from one Corinthus, who took and rebuilt it; and it had now gone by that name for ſeveral years. Cenchrea was its port or haven for the eaſt or Ægean ſea; as Jochæum or Lechæum was for the weſt or Adriatic ſea. Corinth and Carthage had been deſtroyed by the Romans in one and the ſame year: An hundred years after which Julius Cæſar ordered them both to be rebuilt, and in a little time ſent Roman colonies to them. From the colony which he ſent to Corinth were deſcended the Gentiles of that city, to whom the apoſtle now went and preached the Goſpel. Corinth was almoſt as famous as Athens for philoſophers and orators, and made very great pretences to learning and wiſdom; and being a place of ſuch great trade and reſort, it was a rich and luxurious city, even to a proverb. It had a temple dedicated to Venus, to whom, as Strabo informs us, lib. 8. a thouſand harlots were conſecrated. It appears from this ſhort account of the city of Corinth, what reaſon the apoſtle had to condemn their extravagant pretences to wiſdom and eloquence, as well as their luxury and uncleanneſs. In this city St. Paul found Aquila, who was a Jew by nation, but by religion a Chriſtian. See particularly ver. 26. He had lately come from Italy, with his wife Priſcilla, becauſe the Roman emperor Claudius had commanded all Jews to depart from Rome. Dio ſays that Claudius did not baniſh the Jews from Rome, but only prohibited their aſſemblies; but though that was in effect to baniſh all the moſt zealous and conſcientious perſons among them, Suetonius, who lived nearer the time, ſays, that he expelled the Jews from Rome, who were continually making tumults; Chreſtus inciting them, or being the occaſion of their diſturbances. It is indeed a matter of diſpute among learned men, whether by Chreſtus Suetonius meant Jeſus Chriſt or not; it is likely enough he might mean ſo, for he hath in other places ſhewn himſelf peculiarly virulent againſt the Chriſtians. But if he meant to ſay that Chriſt incited the Jews to make tumults at Rome, he could not with any propriety charge our Lord with doing it in perſon. One cannot ſuppoſe that Suetonius ſhould ſo far miſtake both in point of time and place, as to think that Jeſus Chriſt was at Rome in the reign of Claudius Cæſar, and that there he incited the Jews to tumults and ſeditions: He could therefore intend only to charge it upon Chriſt's doctrine and followers; And that the Jews ſhould make tumults, when Chriſtianity began to ſpread in Rome, born in Pontus, lately come from Italy, with his wife Priſcilla; (becauſe that Claudius had commanded all Jews to depart from Rome:) and came unto them.

3 And becauſe he was of the ſame craft, he abode with them, and wrought: (for by their occupation they were tent-makers.)

4 And he reaſoned in the ſynagogue every ſabbath, and perſuaded the Jews, and the Greeks.

5 And when Silas and Timotheus were come from Macedonia, Paul was preſſed in ſpirit, and teſtified to the Jews, that Jeſus was Chriſt.

6 And when they oppoſed themſelves, and blaſphemed, he ſhook his raiment, and ſaid unto them, Your blood be upon your own heads; I am clean: from henceforth I will go unto the Gentiles.

7 And he departed thence, and entered into a certain man's houſe, named Juſtus, one that worſhipped God, whoſe houſe joined hard to the ſynagogue.

8 And Criſpus, the chief ruler of the ſynagogue, believed on the Lord, with all his houſe: and many of the Corinthians hearing, believed, and were baptized.

9 Then ſpake the Lord to Paul in the night by a viſion, Be not afraid, but ſpeak, and hold not thy peace:

10 For I am with thee, and no man ſhall ſet on thee, to hurt thee: for I have much people in this city.

11 And he continued there a year and ſix

Ver. 3. Ch. xx. 34. 1 Cor. iv. 12. 1 Theſſ. ii. 9. 2 Theſſ. iii. 8.—V. 5. Ch. xvii. 14, 15. Or, is the Chriſt.—V. 6. Ch. xiii. 45. 1 Pet. iv. 4. Neh. v. 13. Matth. x. 14. Ch. xiii. 51. 2 Sam. i. 16. Ezek. xviii. 13. Ezek. iii. 18, 19. Ch. xx. 26. Ch. xiii. 46. xxviii. 28.—V. 8. 1 Cor. i. 14.—V. 9. Ch. xxiii. 11.—V. 11. Gr. ſat there.

Rome, is not wonderful, if we conſider their behaviour towards St. Stephen, towards the other apoſtles, and towards St. Paul himſelf; and when tumults were made, Claudius's timorous and ſuſpicious temper would very naturally lead him to puniſh both the guilty and the ſuſpected. However, neither Chriſt himſelf, nor Chriſtianity, were in the leaſt to be charged with being the criminal cauſes of thoſe tumults, ſuppoſing they were the innocent occaſion of them. If bigots and perſecutors will abuſe the virtuous and the modeſt, for ſpeaking the truth, and ſupporting it with proper evidence, ſuch zealots are criminal, and not the innocent perſons whom they perſecute. This baniſhment of the Jews from Rome was not ordered by a decree of the ſenate, but of the emperor only; and therefore it died with him at the fartheſt: But as the Chriſtians were then looked upon by the Romans to be only a ſect of the Jews, it affected them no leſs than the Jews, while it continued. Joſephus hath no where particularly mentioned this edict; as it was inforced for ſo ſhort a time only, he might partly for that reaſon omit it: But a more prevailing reaſon was, probably, that it reflected diſhonour upon the Jews, and was therefore diſagreeable to a Jewiſh hiſtorian; and if ſome diſpute between the Jews and the followers of Jeſus was really the occaſion of this order, as Suetonius ſeems to affirm, that might be another reaſon for the ſilence of Joſephus: for he was very reſerved, if not altogether ſilent, about the affairs of the Chriſtians. See Dio, lib. lx. p. 669. Suet. in Vit. Claud. c. 25. in Nero. Witſius Meletem. p. 90. Lardner's Credibil. p. i. page 326. and Benſon.

Ver. 3. Becauſe he was of the ſame craft—occupation] Trade—trade. Wat. and MS. Aquila and Priſcilla ſeem to have had an houſe at Corinth; for they had ſettled ſo far in that city, as to enter upon their uſual employment, which was to make tents and pavilions of linen or of ſkins; ſuch as in thoſe hot countries they ſometimes lived in, during the ſummer ſeaſon; ſuch as travellers made uſe of, when they had no houſes or caravanſeras to lodge in, and ſuch as ſoldiers lodged in, when encamped in the field. This was not only a gainful, but, according to Joſephus, an honourable employment. St. Paul having been brought up to this occupation in his younger days, went and lodged and worked with them. It has been frequently obſerved, that ſuch of the Jews as had the moſt liberal education, and were the moſt zealous and diligent ſtudents of the law, were likewiſe very frequently trained up to ſome handicraft buſineſs. Hence one of the rabbis is ſurnamed the Butcher, and the other the Baker; and this cuſtom ſtill prevails among the Eaſterns. St. Paul's caſe, therefore, was not peculiar, nor his birth and education leſs liberal on that account. He might indeed, in his apoſtolic character, and even by the reaſon of things, have expected that ſuch as partook of his ſpiritual things, ſhould have miniſtered to him in temporals. But though it was lawful, the apoſtle would not do it, becauſe it was not always expedient: It might have given occaſion for his enemies to ſay, that he compaſſed ſea and land to make a gain of his converts; and that he ſought what they had, more than their ſoul's benefit; and it might likewiſe have afforded a pretence to the falſe apoſtles to have demanded a maintenance; (ſee 2 Cor. xi. 7—20.) and to the ſlothful perſons who embraced Chriſtianity, to live in idleneſs, as if diligence and induſtry in ſome honeſt calling was no longer required of them. Whereas, now, he could from his own example ſhew his converts, that ſuch as would not work, when they were able, ought not to eat; at the ſame time that he cut off all occaſion from the falſe apoſtles, for demanding a maintenance under his example. And finally, by deſpiſing the pleaſures, profits, and honours of this world, he gave mankind the moſt convincing proofs, that he believed Chriſtianity to be true; and that upon ſuch ſtrong evidences, as could leave no room for any reaſonable doubt or heſitation. To this diligence and diſintereſted behaviour of his, he makes frequent appeals in his Epiſtles, and that with the greateſt juſtice and propriety; for what could more effectually have cleared him from all ſuſpicion of carrying on a ſiniſter and worldly deſign? See Benſon, Druſius, Grotius, Biſcoe, p. 272. and Craddock's Apoſt. Hiſt. p. 111.

Ver. 4. And he reaſoned, &c.] Philo ſays, that the Jews inhabited Corinth, and the chief and beſt parts of Peloponneſus. And St. Luke in this place, as well as St. Paul in his two Epiſtles to Corinth, have given plain intimation that there were ſeveral Jews in that city; for they had a ſynagogue there, into which the Apoſtle went, as uſual, every ſabbath-day, and there he diſcourſed concerning the Chriſtian doctrine, and laboured to convince—ἔπειθε—both the Jews and devout Gentiles that it was true, and worthy of their regard. Among them was Epenetus, who was the firſt convert in Achaia, Rom. xvi. 5. as the houſhold of Stephanus was the firſt family converted there. The whole family of Stephanus was baptized by the Apoſtle himſelf, and he alſo afterwards baptized Criſpus and Caius; but he himſelf baptized no other of the Corinthians: he left that to his aſſiſtants, or to ſome of the firſt converts of the place; for the buſineſs of an Apoſtle was not to baptize, but to preach the Goſpel, 1 Cor. i. 14, 17. See Heylin, Benſon, and Wetſtein.

Ver. 5. And when Silas and Timotheus were come, &c.] St. Paul was at Corinth ſome time before his two aſſiſtants came up to him, and ſo long he frequented the ſynagogue; but when Timothy was come from Theſſalonica, and Silas from Beræa, and they had told him what ſucceſs they had met with in watering the Goſpel which he had planted in Macedonia, he was preſſed in the ſpirit, and grieved that he had hitherto preached to the Jews in Corinth with ſo little ſucceſs; for which reaſon he reſolved to puſh the matter in the ſynagogue there; and therefore he left off arguing by diſtant hints and inſinuations, and aſſerted in the plaineſt terms that Jeſus was actually the Meſſiah; which freedom and plainneſs of ſpirit preſently made the unbelieving Jews diſcover themſelves. See the next verſe, and Ezek. xxxiii. 4, 8. 1 Kings ii. 33. Matth. xxvii. 25. Some explain the phraſe, which we render preſſed in ſpirit, by "He was borne away by an unuſual impulſe in his ſpirit." Comp. ver. 25. ch. xix. 21. Rom. xii. 11. and Heinſius.

Ver. 6. From henceforth I will go, &c.] That is, "From henceforth I will apply myſelf to the Gentiles only in this city, and no longer fruitleſly attempt the converſion of you Jews."

Ver. 7. Juſtus] Some of the ancient MSS. and verſions read Titus here, and others Titus Juſtus; but whether Titus or Juſtus, or both the names be the true reading, we cannot ſuppoſe that Titus the Evangeliſt is here to be underſtood: for as he was a Chriſtian long before this, St. Luke would not now, contrary to his cuſtom, have deſcribed him under the lower character of a devout Gentile, but would have called him one of the brethren, diſciples, or believers: whereas, from the account here given of this Juſtus, he was a devout Gentile, whom St. Paul now converted to Chriſtianity at Corinth. The Jews had, in ſome places, houſes annexed to their ſynagogues, for the entertainment of ſtrangers and travellers; the houſe of Juſtus was probably of this kind; and it is likely that the Apoſtle preferred the houſe of Juſtus to that of Aquila, becauſe it was ſo nigh the ſynagogue, that he might give any of the Jews or Greeks an opportunity, if they pleaſed, to attend upon him more conveniently, or more privately. See Benſon, Mill, Wetſtein, and Miſcel. Sacra, eſſay iv. p. 59.

Ver. 8—11. And Criſpus] St. Paul's labours in the ſynagogue had not been without ſome ſucceſs; for Criſpus, one of the rulers of the ſynagogue, embraced Chriſtianity with his whole family; and afterwards many other of the Corinthians, when they heard the Chriſtian doctrine, and the evidences of it, embraced the Goſpel, and were baptized. His teaching ſo nigh the ſynagogue, in the houſe of an uncircumciſed Gentile; his converting and receiving the uncircumciſed Gentiles into a full communion with the Jewiſh Chriſtians, months, teaching the word of God among them.

exaſperated

12 And when Gallio was the deputy of Achaia, the Jews made inſurrection with one accord againſt Paul, and brought him to the judgement-ſeat.

13 Saying, This fellow perſuadeth men to worſhip God contrary to the law.

14 And when Paul was now about to open his mouth, Gallio ſaid unto the Jews, If it were a matter of wrong, or wicked lewdneſs, O ye Jews, reaſon would that I ſhould bear with you:

15 But if it be a queſtion of words, and names, and of your law, look ye to it; for I will be no judge of ſuch matters.

16 And he drave them from the judgement-ſeat.

17 Then all the Greeks took Soſthenes, the chief ruler of the ſynagogue, and beat him before the judgement-ſeat. And Gallio cared for none of thoſe things.

18 And Paul after this tarried there yet a good while, and then took his leave of the brethren, and ſailed thence into Syria, and with him Priſcilla and Aquila; having ſhorn his head in Cenchrea: for he had a vow.

19 And he came to Epheſus, and left

Ver. 14. Ch. xxv. 11.—V. 17. 1 Cor. i. 1.—V. 18. Numb. vi. 18. Ch. xxi. 24. Rom. xvi. 1.

exaſperated the unbelieving Jews, which ſeems to have diſcouraged St. Paul; and as he had already planted a conſiderable church in that city, he might poſſibly begin to think of leaving the place, as having little expectation of bringing in any conſiderable addition to the number of converts which he had hitherto made there. But to prevent his departure, and to encourage him in his own work, the Lord Jeſus himſelf appeared to him in a viſion by night. I have much people in this city, ver. 10. means all thoſe who ſhould be converted to Chriſtianity, whatever their tempers and diſpoſitions then were. See 1 Cor. vi. 9, 11. Limborch, Benſon, and Doddridge. During this time of St. Paul's continuance at Corinth, he wrote his firſt Epiſtle to the Theſſalonians, which ſeems to be the earlieſt of thoſe which occur in the New Teſtament; and quickly after it he wrote the ſecond. Lord Barrington and Dr. Benſon alſo think, that from hence he wrote his Epiſtle to the Galatians.

Ver. 12. When Gallio was the deputy of Achaia] The proconſul of Achaia, —'Ανθύπατος. This is another inſtance of the exact propriety with which St. Luke expreſſes himſelf. The provinces of the Roman empire were of two ſorts; Cæſarean, or ſuch as were ſubject to the emperor; and proconſular, or ſuch as were ſubject to the people and the ſenate. Achaia was a proconſular province under Auguſtus Cæſar. Tiberius, at the requeſt of the Achaians, made it a Cæſarean province. About eight years before the event here mentioned, Claudius reſtored it to the ſenate; and from that time a proconſul was ſent into this country. Gallio was the preſent proconſul; and though the country ſubject to him was all Greece, yet he was by the Romans called proconſul of Achaia. St. Luke therefore appears to have been maſter of all theſe circumſtances, which he had occaſion to mention, and to have expreſſed himſelf in the proper manner. This Gallio was Marcus Annæus Novatus, elder brother to the famous Lucius Annæus Seneca, the Stoic philoſopher, and Nero's tutor; but having been adopted by Lucius Junius Gallio, he was denominated after him. It was moſt probably by the intereſt of his brother Seneca that Gallio was made proconſul of Achaia; for Agrippina, who was wife to the emperor Claudius, and Mother to Nero, had ſuch an influence over her huſband, that almoſt all things were managed according to her direction; and her ſon's preceptor would, it is moſt probable, be readily gratified in ſuch a requeſt for his brother. Seneca hath deſcribed Gallio as a man of the moſt mild and excellent diſpoſition, compoſed in himſelf, and benign and gentle to mankind in general; and his behaviour upon the following occaſion agrees very well with the character his brother hath given him. Seneca's Prefat. ad Nat. Quæſt. lib. 4. Lardner's Credib. b. i. ch. 1. and Biſcoe, p. 57.

Ver. 14. If it were a matter of wrong, &c.] If it were a matter of injuſtice, or miſchievous licentiouſneſs. Doddridge. Heylin reads the paſſage, If your accuſation were for ſome act of injuſtice, or other immorality, I would bear you patiently, as reaſon requires I ſhould.

Ver. 15. But if it be a queſtion of words] But ſince your diſpute is only about words, and names, aud your own law, you muſt decide it yourſelves. The truth is, that religious and civil affairs are of an intirely diſtinct nature; that the latter come under the cognizance of the magiſtrate, and that it is not his buſineſs to interpoſe in an affair relating to the former, any further that to keep the peace, and to allow all good ſubjects openly to profeſs their own religion, and to worſhip in their own way. Accordingly, when the Apoſtle was going to ſpeak, Gallio would not give him the trouble of making his apology, becauſe he did not look upon him as a criminal: He told his accuſers, that he would have nothing to do with their religious opinions, the ſubject of which he had heard, no doubt, from the accuſation which the Jews brought, and determined not to concern himſelf with ſuch things as did not come within his proper province. He therefore, not without threatening, ordered them to depart from the tribunal. "Would to God, ſays Dr. Benſon, that all princes, judges, and magiſtrates had always been of Gallio's mind, and diſcouraged ſuch tumults, by protecting the innocent, and diſcountenancing perſecutors, and ſo had left every one to judge for himſelf in matters of a religion, which concern only God and man's own conſcience!"—A commentator remarks, "The names of the heathen gods were fables and ſhadows; but the queſtion concerning the name of Jeſus is of more importance than all things elſe under heaven. Yet there is this, among a thouſand other ſingularities in the Chriſtian religion, that human reaſon, curious as it is in all other things, abhors to inquire into it."

Ver. 17. Then all the Greeks took Soſthenes] The Jews did not pay a proper regard to Gallio's orders: they had indeed the power of ſcourging in their ſynagogues whom they thought proper, of their own nation and religion: but they were at preſent ſo enraged and inſolent, as to ſeize upon Soſthenes, who had been one of the chief rulers of their ſynagogue, but was now, it is moſt likely, become a convert to Chriſtianity, and to beat him,—τύπτειν,—even before the tribunal. However, Gallio regarded none of theſe things; all their inſolence could not provoke him to intermeddle, as long as they beat only one of their own people; and though it was not in the ſynagogue, but before the tribunal, he choſe rather to let it paſs, as conſidering, very probably, the mutinous temper of the Jews, which rather increaſed by oppoſition. Many have thought that the Greeks beat Soſthenes in complaiſance to Gallio, and to check the inſolence of the Jews; but it may be proper to obſerve, that many conſiderable verſions and MSS. have not the words Οἱ Ἕλληνες, and one MS. reads, Οἱ Ἰουδαῖοι, the Jews; but ſuppoſing ἕλληνες only left out, the connection would incline one to underſtand what follows of the Jews; for it is highly probable that Soſthenes was now a favourer of the Chriſtians, or rather himſelf a Chriſtian, and that he is mentioned as ſuch, 1 Cor. i. 1. For though he was then with St. Paul at Epheſus, it is evident that he muſt have been well known at Corinth, from his joining with the Apoſtle in that Epiſtle to the Corinthians. Beſides, this ſenſe of the place much better agrees to that expreſſion, but Gallio cared, &c. that is, All the inſolence of the Jews did not move him, ſo far as to interpoſe, or give an hearing to the diſpute btween St. Paul and them. See Mill, Wetſtein, and Doddridge.

Ver. 18. Paul, after this, tarried, &c.] The Apoſtle, thus ſcreened by Gallio, tarried at Corinth a good while longer; ſo that his ſtay in that city was in all about two years. Conſidering his unwearied diligence, and that he did not uſe to ſtay long in any place, unleſs he had a proſpect of ſucceſs, we may reaſonably ſuppoſe that he had gathered a large church there: and from St. Luke's account, and eſpecially from St. Paul's ſecond Epiſtle to Corinth, it appears that moſt of that church conſiſted of converts from among the idolatrous Gentiles. Silas and Timothy ſeem ſtill to have continued at Corinth; but St. Paul, taking leave of the Chriſtian brethren there, ſet out for Syria, and along with him Aquila and Priſcilla. When they arrived at Cenchrea, the eaſtern part of the iſthmus, St. Paul ſhaved his head, becauſe he was under the Nazarite's vow; (ſee ch. xxi. 24. Numb. vi. 18.) for to the Jews he became as a Jew, and made all lawful condeſcenſions, in compliance with their prejudices, as we ſhall ſee in other inſtances in the progreſs of this hiſtory. St. Paul ſeems to have made this vow upon ſome remarkable deliverance from his enemies; perhaps, upon the account of Gallio's ſcreening him from the fury of the unbelieving Jews; and poſſibly ſome of the Jewiſh Chriſtians at Corinth might alſo be in danger of throwing off Chriſtianity itſelf, if St. Paul had not condeſcended ſo far in that or ſome other inſtances. It is evident that Judaizers did afterwards make a very great diſturbance in that church; but whatever was the particular reaſon, it appears that St. Paul ſubmitted to that Jewiſh cuſtom. See particularly the next note. We muſt not, however, fail to obſerve here, that ſome very conſiderable critics think that this latter clauſe of the verſe refers to Aquila; and accordingly Dr. Waterland reads it Priſcilla, and Aquila, who had ſhorn his head, &c. And for this conſtruction's ſake Caſtalio and Grotius obſerve, the writer ſeems to have named the wife before the huſband. But it ſeems much more probable from the conſtruction, that this clauſe, as well as the beginning of the next verſe, muſt refer to the ſame perſon, that is, to St. Paul. And as to Priſcilla's being named firſt, this is done elſewhere, where there could be no ſuch reaſon inducing to it. See Rom. xvi. 3. 2 Tom. iv. 19. Some have imagined that Mephiboſheth's vow during David's exile, 2 Sam. xix. 24. might be ſomething of the ſame kind with this of St. Paul. See Spencer de Leg. Heb. lib. iii. c. 6.

Ver. 19—22. And he came to Epheſus] For the ſhort time that the Apoſtle now tarried at Epheſus, which ſeems to have been but one them there: but he himſelf entered into the ſynagogue, and reaſoned with the Jews.

20 When they deſired him to tarry longer time with them, he conſented not:

21 But bade them farewel, ſaying, I muſt by all means keep this feaſt that cometh in Jeruſalem: but I will return again unto you, if God will. And he ſailed from Epheſus.

22 And when he had landed at Cæſarea, and gone up and ſaluted the church, he went down to Antioch.

23 And after he had ſpent ſome time there, he departed, and went over all the country of Galatia and Phrygia in order, ſtrengthening all the diſciples.

24 And a certain Jew named Apollos, born at Alexandria, an eloquent man, and mighty in the ſcriptures, came to Epheſus.

25 This man was inſtructed in the way of the Lord; and being fervent in the ſpirit, he ſpake and taught diligently the things of the Lord, knowing only the baptiſm of John.

26 And he began to ſpeak boldly in the ſynagogue: whom when Aquila and Priſcilla had heard, they took him unto them, and expounded unto him the way of God more perfectly.

27 And when he was diſpoſed to paſs into Achaia, the brethren wrote, exhorting the diſciples to receive him: who, when he was come, helped them much which had believed through grace:

28 For he mightily convinced the Jews, and that publickly, ſhewing by the ſcriptures, that Jeſus was Chriſt.

Ver. 21. Ch. xix. 21. 1 Cor. iv. 19. Hebr. vi. 3. Jam. iv. 15.—V. 23. Gal. iv. 14.—V. 24. 1 Cor. i. 12.—V. 25. Ch. xix. 3. V. 27. 1 Cor. iii. 6.—V. 28. Or, is the Chriſt.

ſabbath-day, he went into the ſynagogue, and diſcourſed with the Jews, and with ſuch Gentiles as uſually attended the ſynagogue ſervice, concerning the Chriſtian doctrine; but when they deſired him to ſtay longer with them, he refuſed, and took his leave of them, telling them, ver. 21. that he muſt by all means go up to Jeruſalem, upon the account of his being under the Nazarite's vow; for it was a maxim, that if any one had vowed the Nazarite's vow out of the land of Judea, he was bound to go into the land, and there fulfil his vow. The Apoſtle added, that he choſe to be at Jeruſalem time enough to keep the approaching feſtival in that city; and this not from any apprehenſion that he was obliged in conſcience to celebrate the Jewiſh feaſts, but for the reaſon above given, and becauſe he deſired to ſeize that opportunity of meeting a great number of his countrymen at Jeruſalem, to whom he might preach the Goſpel, or whom, if already converted, he might farther inſtruct, or might remove the prejudices which were groundleſly imbibed againſt him. Looſing therefore from Epheſus, he ſailed to Cæſarea, from whence he went up to pay his reſpects to the Chriſtian church at Jeruſalem; which, as it was the mother church, or the firſt of all the Chriſtian churches, was, by way of eminence, called the church. When he had ſeen the Chriſtians at Jeruſalem, affectionately ſaluted them, made his offering as a Nazarite at the temple, and kept the feaſt in that city, he left the place, and went down to Antioch in Syria, and there ended his ſecond apoſtolical journey. See Reland de Antiq. Heb. "de Sacris Perſonis," p. 277. Lardner's Credib. p. i. b. 1. c. 9. The Syriac verſion, Tremellius, and Grotius. Concerning Epheſus, ſee the note on ver. 1. of the next chapter.

Ver. 23. And after he had ſpent ſome time there] After St. Paul had made ſome ſtay in Antioch, he ſet out upon his third apoſtolical journey, and went through Galatia and Phrygia, καθεξῆς, from church to church, in that order in which he had founded them. See Mill's Proleg. p. 538. As this would take him up a great deal of time, moſt commentators very reaſonably allow four years for this journey; that is, from the year 54 to 58. Coming to Galatia, he gave thoſe directions concerning charitable contributions referred to 1 Cor. xvi. 1, 2. See Doddridge and Benſon.

Ver. 25. And being fervent in the Spirit] The baptiſm of John we find, ch. xix. 2. was attended with very imperfect inſtruction, or divine illuminations; yet upon that foundation Apollos, being a man of warmth and eloquence, is ſaid to have preached the Goſpel ἀκριϐῶς, perfectly; an unuſual encomium paid to natural abilities! But if he taught perfectly, would one expect to find in the next verſe that Aquila and Priſcilla were obliged to inſtruſt him ἀκριϐέςερον, more perfectly?—All is clear, if we ſuppoſe that ȣκ, from its likeneſs to the beginning of the next word, has been omitted; and that we ſhould read ἐδίδασκεν ȣκ ἀκριϐῶς, he taught of Chriſt NOT perfectly, knowing ONLY the baptiſm of John. Mr. Bowyer, in his Conjectural Emendations on the New Teſtament, produces this judicious criticiſm, as received from the mouth of the late learned Bp. Sherlock; and Mr. Markland inſtances a ſimilar omiſſion of an ȣκ, in Athenæus, Δειπνος, lib. iii. c. 13. p. 91.

Ver. 27. Who—helped, &c.] Some, with the Syriac, would read this, He helped, by his powerful grace, thoſe who had believed; and others, He aſſiſted thoſe who had believed by the preaching of the Goſpel. The beſt comment on his words is what we are told elſewere, 1 Cor. iii. 6. Paul planted, and Apollos watered; but God gave the increaſe. It is indeed true, both that the Corinthians had believed through grace, and that through grace Apollos helped them. The latter ſtrongly implies the former, and the original words may poſſibly ſpeak either. It appears from many paſſages in St. Paul's Epiſtles to the Corinthians, that ſeveral of the Chriſtians there, charmed with the eloquence of Apollos, were ready to ſet him up as the head of a party, and to make invidious and fooliſh compariſons between him and the Apoſtle, who had been their father in Chriſt; and who, though he might have leſs volubility of ſpeech, was, on the moſt important accounts, far ſuperior to this eloquent and zealous teacher. See 1 Cor. i. 12. iii. 4—8, 21, 22. iv. 6. Yet this occaſioned no breach between Paul and Apollos; the latter of which plainly appears to have come to Epheſus when Paul returned thither, and to have declined going to Corinth again, even when Paul would have perſuaded him to it; probably to avoid any the remoteſt appearance of deſiring to countenance any party, which might have been formed in his own favour. See 1 Cor. xvi. 12. Grotius, Caſtalio, L'Enfant, and Limborch.

Ver. 28. For he mightily convinced the Jews] Inſtead of διακατηλέγχετο, which is never uſed in the New Teſtament in the middle voice, or if it were, would require an accuſative, not a dative caſe after it, ſome critics propoſe to read διακατηλέγετο, he reaſoned or diſputed ſtrongly againſt the Jews; publickly proving by Scripture, that Jeſus is the Chriſt, or the Meſſiah. See Markland, and Bowyer's Conjectural Emend. on the New Teſtament.

REFLECTIONS ON CHAP. XVIII.

The divine wiſdom and goodneſs is very obſervable from hence, in providing for thoſe who are employed in the work of the Goſpel, ſuitable aſſociates and companions in their labours, ver. 1. 2. and particularly happy are they, to whom God hath been pleaſed to give, as to the pious Aquila, ſuch a companion in the neareſt relation of life, as may help them forward in the way to heaven, and aſſiſt them in the ſervice of religion, while they continue upon earth.

God has always, in the treaſures of his goodneſs, proper conſolations for thoſe who ſuffer, and who have recourſe to him. How great a one is this, to meet with the company of an Apoſtle,—of a St. Paul! Happy baniſhment, which is the occaſion that theſe perſons fall under the direction of a man of God!

Much were the fatigues of St. Paul's life ſoftened by the converſe of ſuch friends, who no doubt rendered the common buſineſs of life more pleaſant, as well as the work of the Lord more delightful. We find them, while endeavouring to propagate the Goſpel, maintaining themſelves (for reaſons peculiar to that ſituation) by the labour of their own hands; and even Paul the Apoſtle wrought with them. ver. 3. Not becauſe he had not a right to demand ſupport, (for he ſtrenuouſly maintains that right at large, in his addreſs to thoſe very Corinthians, 1 Cor. ix. 1—14.) but to ſhame his mean-ſpirited enemies, who accuſed him of acting on mercenary principles; and becauſe he thought in his conſcience, on ſome other accounts, that his fidelity to Chriſt would be ſo much the more apparent, and his labours, by this means, ſo much the more ſucceſsful. And what faithful miniſter, who in his conſcience apprehended that to be the caſe, would not chooſe to act as he did! It is no derogation from the honour of the eccleſiaſtical miniſtry, for a miniſter to gain his livelihood by the ſweat of his brows. It is always a great thing to imitate Jeſus Chriſt, and his Apoſtles.

During this his temporal employment, we find St. Paul engaged, as uſual, every ſabbath-day, in diſcourſing to the Jews, and in demonſtrating to them the truth of the Goſpel: ver. 4. And it is pleaſant and edifying to obſerve, with what earneſtneſs he applied himſelf to do it. His unwearied diligence in the miniſtry, though he received no manner of temporal advantage from it, is a tacit, yet emphatical condemnation of thoſe, who enrich themſelves out of the revenues of the church, while they do nothing at all in it, or that which

CHAP. XIX.

The Holy Ghoſt is given by Paul's hands: the Jews blaſpheme his doctrine, which is confirmed by miracles. The Jewiſh exorciſts, are beaten by the man poſſeſſed by the evil ſpirit. Magical books are burnt. Demetrius for love of gain, raiſeth an uproar againſt Paul; which is appeaſed by the town-clerk.

AND it came to paſs, that while Apollos was at Corinth, Paul having paſſed through the upper coaſts, came to Epheſus: and finding certain diſciples,

2 He ſaid unto them, Have ye received the Holy Ghoſt ſince ye believed? And they ſaid unto him, We have not ſo much as heard whether there be any Holy Ghoſt.

Ver. 1. 1 Mac. iii. 37. vi. 1.—V. 2. Ch. viii. 16. See 1 Sam. iii. 7.

which is next to nothing; his zeal and charity are patterns which all paſtors ought frequently to conſider.

How melancholy is it to find the inveterate prejudices of his hearers, prevailing over all the cogency of his demonſtrations, and all the warmth of his addreſs! Yet let us obſerve how he gave them up, ver. 6. With what grief, mixed with juſt indignation at their folly and ingratitude! Shaking his garments, and ſaying, Your blood be upon your own heads! I am clean. Thus are impenitent unbelievers their own murderers; they bring upon themſelves even the blood and deſtruction of their own ſouls. Grievous it is that it ſhould reſt upon them; but abſolutely neceſſary, that they who are meſſengers of God to them ſhould take heed, if ſuch muſt, after all, bleed by the ſword of divine juſtice, that themſelves may at laſt be found pure; for terrible beyond expreſſion muſt it be, if, through a treacherous or neglectful conduct, the blood of ſuch perſons ſhould be required at their hands!

The Apoſtle's ſucceſs among the Gentiles raiſed new oppoſition, and his infirmities frequently occaſioned returning fears. But how graciouſly did our Lord interpoſe for his encouragement and ſupport, aſſuring him of his protection, and promiſing him yet more abundant ſucceſs! ver. 9, 10. Bleſſed JESUS, thy grace was ſufficient even for this thy ſervant, amidſt all the labours of the miniſterial and apoſtolical office, amidſt all the internal as well as external difficulties he had to encounter in the diſcharge of it! 2 Cor. xii. 9. May that grace be imparted to us alſo! and may it appear that thou haſt much people, wherever thou fixeſt the bounds of our habitation, and the ſphere of our miniſtry!

The tumultuous rage of the Jews is nothing ſurpriſing, for we have been accuſtomed often to read it; but the prudence and moderation of Gallio is truly exemplary. ver. 12. That wiſe Roman well knew the extent of his office, and was aware that it gave him no title or pretence to dictate in matters of conſcience, or to reſtrain mens religious liberties, ſo long as they abſtained from injuſtice or miſchievous licentiouſneſs, by which the public peace might be diſturbed, and the rights of ſociety invaded. ver. 14, 15. May God give to all magiſtrates ſuch a Spirit! The Goſpel will then, under the influences of divine grace, become an univerſal religion, and ſhew the world how little need it has of being ſupported by civil penalties, to which thoſe are generally moſt ready to have recourſe, who, like theſe Jews, are confounded by fair arguments.

Who can help obſerving from their conduct, ver. 13. how apt ignorance and paſſion are to cauſe that to be looked upon as contrary to religion, which is the very ſpirit of it. We eaſily perſuade ourſelves, (unleſs God be of our council,) that what is contrary to our inclinations, is contrary to his law; and the pretence of his intereſts too often, alas! ſerves as a veil to cover the malice and obſtinacy of men.

The whole conduct of the Apoſtle teaches paſtors to apply themſelves particularly to thoſe whom they have inſtructed; to cultivate the good planted among them by frequent and exact viſitations, and to have a conſtant regard to the weak, who ſtand in need of encouragement from time to time. ver. 23. There are no ſorts of labour which the paſtoral charity does not embrace: Behold we it in the great St. Paul; it looks upon the toil and fatigues of ſo many journeys and voyages as nothing,—but as duty and the trueſt delight. What an example is this, for every ſucceſſor of the Apoſtles to contemplate!

It was well for the churches, that ſo promiſing and hopeful a fellow-labourer as Apollos was raiſed up both to St. Paul and to them. We ſee in this inſtance how profitable it is to ſtudy the word of God. To be fervent and courageous in ſpirit, to be eloquent and mighty in the Scriptures, are happy talents for ſuch as are devoted to the miniſtry. Would to God all that enter on this work among us may come forth with a zeal and courage like this; nay, and with an humility too like that, which, in Apollos, adorned all the bright talents with which he was endowed! ver. 24, 25. What he knew, he zealouſly taught; what he did not know, he was ready thankfully to learn; and that not only from the mouth of an Apoſtle, but of a fellow Chriſtian in inferior life, from Aquila, yea, and from Priſcilla too. ver. 26. Since God had given that wiſe and pious woman to know the way of God by longer experience and to greater perfection than he, Apollos, amidſt all his popularity and applauſe, was willing to become her as well as her huſband's diſciple, and to learn from them both in private diſcourſes thoſe evangelic leſſons, in which they were at preſent more ſkilful than himſelf.

From this circumſtance we learn, that devout Chriſtians may perform conſiderable ſervices to the church of God, without being admitted to the ſacred miniſtry, or taking upon them to ſpeak in public. A ſolicitous concern for the intereſts of the church, and a conſtant application to thoſe things which promote the glory of God, are to be found, and may well be exerciſed in all ſtates and conditions. Every good man, like Aquila, may have a zeal and ſpirit of the prieſthood, though without the character, and may confer with his friends and neighbours, to their mutual edification.

It was prudent in Apollos to take, as well as juſt in the brethren to grant, proper letters of recommendation, when he was going to the churches in Achaia, where he was a ſtranger; ver. 27. and well did he anſwer this recommendation, and make himſelf known amongſt them by his valuable ſervices. Mighty as he was in the Scriptures of the Old Teſtament, he might well demonſtrate from them to the Jews at Corinth, that JESUS was the Meſſiah. Happy had it been for the church and ſynagogue there, had they known no diſtinguiſhing name but his. See ver. 28. It is a fond and indecent partiality which leads one man to ſay, I am of Paul; and another, I am of Apollos: And we may reaſonably hope that this zealous Evangeliſt expreſſed the ſame diſpleaſure which the Apoſtle himſelf did on the like occaſion; (1 Cor. iii. 4.) and that he laboured with all his might to impreſs them with the thought, that neither he that planted, nor he that watered, was any thing, but God, who gave the increaſe to both. May this important thought be more deeply impreſſed on the hearts both of miniſters and people; that ſo all the glory may be rendered to him, from whom all our gifts and graces, and all our ſucceſſes proceed!

Chap. XIX. Ver. 1. Paul—came to Epheſus] Epheſus was the metropolis and principal mart not only of Ionia, but even of all the Proconſular Aſia, ſituated on the river Cayſter, celebrated for its ſwans, on the ſide of a hill, which towards the weſt has the proſpect of a lovely plain, watered and beautified with the pleaſant circles of the river, turning and winding in ſo many curions mazes, that ſome travellers have miſtaken it for the Meander; and this the rather, becauſe the Turks have given it the name of Mendres. It was moſt celebrated for the magnificent temple of Diana, which was two hundred and twenty years in building, was reared at the common charge of all Aſia Propria, and was accounted one of the ſeven wonders of the world. It was four hundred and twenty-five feet long, and two hundred and twenty broad, ſupported by an hundred and twenty-ſeven marble pillars, each of them ſixty feet high; the work of a king, who erected them as a token of his piety and magnificence. It had been twice burned down before this period; the firſt time was on the very day in which Socrates was poiſoned, about four hundred years before Chriſt; and the ſecond was on the night in which Alexander the Great was born. It was then ſet on fire on purpoſe by Eroſtratus, who being condemned to die for it, confeſſed, that he had deſtroyed ſo exquiſite a ſtructure purely that he might be remembered in future ages: upon which they not only put him to death, but made a decree, very fruitleſs indeed in its effects, that his name ſhould never be mentioned more. It was again rebuilt,—the famous Denocrates, whom Alexander the Great afterwards employed in planning and building the magnificent city of Alexandria, being architect; and it was wonderſully adorned, eſpecially by the Epheſians, the ladies contributing very largely towards it. After this, Nero plundered it of its riches; but in St. Paul's time it retained a great deal of its ancient grandeur. In the days of Gallienus the emperor, the Goths intirely ruined it. It is at preſent become a mean and ſordid village, with ſcarcely a ſingle family of Chriſtians dwelling in it: Nay, indeed the place where it ſtood is ſo little known, that it affords matter of conjecture to travellers. The only two buildings worth obſerving, are a ſtrong and lofty caſtle, ſituated on an eminence, and a beautiful church, honoured with the name of St. John, but now converted into a Turkiſh moſque; and, according to ſome travellers, there are a few ſtately ruins, which they ſuppoſe to be the remains of the once-magnificent temple. See Herodot. Clio. cap. 26. Plutarch's life of Alexander, Chiſhul's travels. p. 27. Calmet, and Bp. Newton on Rev. ch. iii. Inſtead of upper coaſts, the MS. reads upper parts.

Ver. 2. He ſaid unto them, Have ye received, &c?] St. Paul found at Epheſus twelve diſciples, who had been converted, or, as is more probable, had come to Epheſus out of ſome remote country ſince he had left that city;—for theſe men it is moſt likely were pious Jews, who having waited for the kingdom of God, and being many years before baptized by John, or ſome of his diſciples, had, on receiving ſomething of the evidence of Chriſtianity, believed in Jeſus; but perhaps coming, as we have obſerved, out of ſome diſtant and obſcure country, they had not enjoyed an opportunity before of being inſtructed in any thing relative to the Holy Spirit, more than might be learnt from the Old Teſtament. As it was his uſual cuſtom to impart the Holy Spirit to all the adult converts wherever he came, if they had not already received the divine gift, He aſked theſe twelve, whether they had received the Holy Spirit ſince they believed? To which they anſwered, "We have not ſo much as heard that the Holy

3 And he ſaid unto them, Unto what then were ye baptized? And they ſaid, Unto John's baptiſm.

4 Then ſaid Paul, John verily baptized with the baptiſm of repentance, ſaying unto the people, That they ſhould believe on him which ſhould come after him, that is, on Chriſt Jeſus.

5 When they heard this, they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jeſus.

6 And when Paul had laid his hands upon them, the Holy Ghoſt came on them; and they ſpake with tongues, and propheſied.

7 And all the men were about twelve.

8 And he went into the ſynagogue, and ſpake boldly for the ſpace of three months, diſputing and perſuading the things concerning the kingdom of God.

9 But when divers were hardened, and believed not, but ſpake evil of that way before the multitude, he departed from them, and ſeparated the diſciples, diſputing daily in the ſchool of one Tyrannus.

10 And this continued by the ſpace of two years; ſo that all they which dwelt in Aſia, heard the word of the Lord Jeſus, both Jews and Greeks.

11 And God wrought ſpecial miracles by the hands of Paul:

12 So that from his body were brought unto the ſick, handkerchiefs or aprons, and the diſeaſes departed from them, and the evil ſpirits went out of them.

13 Then certain of the vagabond Jews, exorciſts, took upon them to call over them which had evil ſpirits, the name of the Lord Jeſus, ſaying, We adjure you by Jeſus whom Paul preacheth.

14 And there were ſeven ſons of one Sceva, a Jew, and chief of the prieſts, which did ſo.

15 And the evil ſpirit anſwered and ſaid,

Ver. 3. Ch. xviii. 25.—V. 4. Matth. iii. 11. Ch. i. 5. xi. 16.—V. 5. Ch. viii. 16.—V. 6. Ch. vi. 6. viii. 17. Ch. ii. 4. x. 46. V. 8. Ch. i. 3.—V. 9. 2 Tim. i. 15. See ch. ix. 2. xxiv. 14. Ver. 23.—V. 10. See ch. xx. 31.—V. 11. Mark xvi. 20. Ch. xiv. 3. V. 12. Ch. v. 15. See 2 Kings iv. 29.—V. 13. Matth. xii. 27. See Mark ix. 38.

Spirit is poured out, or that any perſon hath been favoured with that extraordinary gift, which the prophets foretold, and John the Baptiſt frequently intimated would be granted unto numbers." Ainſworth on Exod. xxviii. 30. has rightly obſerved, that by the Holy Spirit is here meant the gifts of the Spirit, in prophecy, tongues, &c. as it follows, ver. 6. The Holy Spirit came on them, and they ſpake with tongues, and propheſied; which gifts having before ceaſed, were reſtored by the Goſpel: an evident proof that Chriſt was come. See Joel ii. 28. &c. Acts ii. 4, 17, 18. According to our tranſlation, theſe twelve diſciples of John the Baptiſt are repreſented as ſaying, We have not ſo much as heard whether there be any Holy Ghoſt. If by this be meant, that they had never heard of the Holy Spirit, it appears to be incredible. If we are to underſtand that they had not yet heard of the effuſion of the Holy Spirit, of which John the Baptiſt had given intimations, that indeed ſeems to be the true ſenſe, but very ill expreſſed. The Cambridge MS. reads λαμβανουσι τινες, that is, we have not ſo much as heard that any perſons do receive the Holy Spirit. This is a juſt interpretation; but the authority of the reading is not ſufficient. In our verſion, John vii. 29. the ſame ſort of phraſe is more juſtly tranſlated, the Holy Ghoſt was not yet given. If our tranſlators had kept to that manner of reading, they would have made this paſſage as clear and intelligible: We have not ſo much as heard whether the Holy Ghoſt be yet given. See Benſon, Beza, Mill, and Ridley's Sermons at Lady Moyer's Lectures, Ver. 5. When they heard this] This verſe has been generally underſtood as containing the words of the ſacred hiſtorian; but ſome very conſiderable criticks have conſidered it as a continuation of the words of St. Paul: The arguments are certainly ſtrong on both ſides. We may, however, remark that in all the New Teſtament, there is not any other clear inſtance or proof (ſuppoſing this to be one) of the rebaptizing ſuch as had been the diſciples of John. On the other hand, it does not appear that our Lord himſelf, or any of the apoſtles of the circumciſion were baptized with water by any other than by the baptiſm of John; and when they who had followed John became the diſciples of Jeſus, we read nothing of their being rebaptized by Jeſus, or by his diſciples. See Druſius, Beza, Grotius, and L'Enfant. Dr. Doddridge expreſſes himſelf ſtrongly on the other ſide of the queſtion: We will give his words, and the reader muſt judge for himſelf: "I think it evident, ſays he, beyond all diſpute, that the baptiſm of John and of Chriſt were in their own nature quite different; and that it is plain in fact, that when perſons were converted to Chriſtianity, they were baptized of courſe without enquiring whether they had, or had not received the baptiſm of John; which we know vaſt numbers did, (Matth. iii. 5, 6.) who probably afterwards received Chriſtian baptiſm; (comp. ch. ii. 38—41. iv. 4. vi. 7.) and therefore, if I were aſſured that the conſtruction of ver. 4, 5. were that which Beza, Grotius, &c. inſiſt upon, I ſhould interpret the 5th verſe in a ſenſe quite contrary to theirs; as if it was ſaid, "But they who payed not due regard to John, when they came more explicitly to underſtand who the promiſed Meſſiah was, were baptized into the name of Jeſus; as you therefore muſt be, in order to a regular admittance into his church:"—And then I ſhould ſuppoſe that St. Luke, having given this intimation of the baptiſm of theſe converts, which muſt of courſe follow ſuch a declaration of St. Paul, left us to collect that for ourſelves, and only mentioned the communication of miraculous gifts to them, on their being thus baptized. But on the whole, as the expreſſion is not, Οἱ δὲ ἀκούσαντες, but Ἀκούσαντες δὲ; as αὐτοῖς, them, ver. 6. ſeems ſo plainly to refer to the perſons juſt before ſaid to be baptized; and as it is ſo natural to ſuppoſe that Luke would not omit to mention the baptiſm of theſe men, I rather conclude that there is an ellipſis in the 4th verſe, though, I own it, not a very common one; ſo that τῳ λαῳ λέγων, is put for λέγων δὲ τῳ λαῳ: as if the expreſſion were, "But he ſaid to the people at the ſame time, that they ſhould believe in Jeſus;" and the particle δὲ might more probably be omitted by St. Luke, as it is uſed three times beſides in theſe three verſes.

Ver. 8, 9. He ſpake boldly for the ſpace of three months] Lord Barrington ſuppoſes, that after St. Paul had been ſome time at Epheſus, he viſited the neighbouring towns of Aſia, and then returned to Epheſus again; and it ſeems not improbable that the foundation of ſome others of the ſeven churches in Aſia, ſo particularly favoured by the epiſtles of our Lord, might now be laid. Comp. ver. 10. St. Paul frequented the ſynagogue of the Jews for three months; but, when ſeveral of the leading men among them were hardened beyond all conviction, and not only refuſed to believe themſelves, but even caſt wicked and injurious reflections upon the Chriſtian religion before the multitude, and did all that they could to deter others from believing;—the apoſtle left the ſynagogue, and taking with him the converts whom he had made, he went and taught daily in the ſchool of one Tyrannus, or Turnus; who probably was a converted Jew, and his ſchool, perhaps, what the Jews called Beth-midraſh, or a divinity ſchool; in which they uſed to handle intricate queſtions and difficult doctrines. There St. Paul kept his aſſembly for two years together; and, according to a different reading in two ancient MSS. he taught five hours a day; i. e. from eleven o'clock in the morning to four in the afternoon. By his indefatigable diligence for ſo long a time, Chriſtianity ſpread very much; for all the inhabitants of proconſular Aſia, whether Jews or Gentiles, had thereby an opportunity to learn the true Chriſtian doctrine, and to ſee it confirmed by mighty and convincing atteſtations. See ver. 11. Lord Barrington's Miſcell. Sacr. abſtract, p. 33. Knatchbull, Lightfoot, Benſon, Beza, and Wetſtein. Inſtead of diſputing, the MS. reads diſcourſing; and Dr. Heylin renders it conferred,—and daily held conferences.

Ver. 12. Handkerchiefs or aprons] Σουδάρια ἢ σιμικίνθια, were originally Latin words,—Sudaria and Semicincthia; and are further inſtances of St. Luke's latiniſing. They have been differently rendered: The etymology of the firſt plainly determines it to ſignify a piece of linen, with which the ſweat was wiped from the face; and as the latter, literally rendered, ſignifies things girt half round the waiſt, it is properly enough rendered aprons. Some read it ſaſhes. It is juſtly obſerved by many writers, that theſe cures wrought upon abſent perſons, ſome of them perhaps at a conſiderable diſtance from Epheſus, might conduce greatly to the ſucceſs of the Goſpel amongſt thoſe, whoſe faces St. Paul had never ſeen. See Stockius, Druſius, and Calmet's Diſſertation, vol. i. p. 232.

Ver. 13. Vagabond Jews, exorciſts] Several of the Jews about this time pretended to a power of caſting out demons, particularly by ſome arts and charms derived from Solomon. Some of theſe ſtrolling exorciſts, obſerving that St. Paul, by invoking the name of Jeſus, did ſucceſsfully what they only pretended to, reſolved to attempt the ſame; the conſequence of which was not only the preventing ſuch impoſtors from abuſing the ſacred and venerable name of Jeſus in future, but the rendering it more aweful. See Joſeph. Antiq. b. viii. c. 2. Whitby, and Biſcoe's Lectures, p. 281.

Ver. 15. And the evil ſpirit anſwered] Not to inſiſt on the demonſtration Jeſus I know, and Paul I know; but who are ye?

16 And the man in whom the evil ſpirit was, leaped on them, and overcame them, and prevailed againſt them, ſo that they fled out of that houſe naked and wounded.

17 And this was known to all the Jews and Greeks alſo dwelling at Epheſus; and fear fell on them all, and the name of the Lord Jeſus was magnified.

18 And many that believed came, and confeſſed, and ſhewed their deeds.

19 Many alſo of them which uſed curious arts, brought their books together, and burned them before all men: and they counted the price of them, and found it fifty thouſand pieces of ſilver.

20 So mightily grew the word of God, and prevailed!

21 After theſe things were ended, Paul purpoſed in the ſpirit, when he had paſſed through Macedonia, and Achaia, to go to Jeruſalem, ſaying, After I have been there, I muſt alſo ſee Rome.

22 So he ſent into Macedonia two of them that miniſtered unto him, Timotheus and Eraſtus; but he himſelf ſtayed in Aſia for a ſeaſon.

23 And the ſame time there aroſe no ſmall ſtir about that way.

24 For a certain man named Demetrius, a ſilver-ſmith, which made ſilver ſhrines for Diana, brought no ſmall gain unto the craftſmen;

25 Whom he called together with the workmen of like occupation, and ſaid, Sirs, ye know that by this craft we have our wealth:

26 Moreover, ye ſee and hear, that not alone at Epheſus, but almoſt throughout all Aſia, this Paul hath perſuaded and turned away much people, ſaying, that they be no gods which are made with hands:

27 So that not only this our craft is in

Ver. 18. Matth. iii. 6.—V. 20. Ch. vi. 7. xii. 24.—V. 21. Rom. xv. 25. Gal. ii. 1. Ch. xx. 22. Ch. xviii. 21. Rom. xv. 24—28.—V. 22. Ch. xiii. 5. Rom. xvi. 23. 2 Tim. iv. 20.—V. 23. 2 Cor. i. 8. See ch. ix. 2.—V. 24. Ch. xvi. 16, 19.—V. 26. Pſ. cxv. 4. Jer. x. 3.

ſtration ariſing from the preſent ſtory, that this demoniac was not merely a lunatic, We may obſerve that the evil ſpirit, under whoſe operation this man was, ſeems either to have been compelled by a ſuperior power, to bear an unwilling teſtimony to Jeſus, or craftily to have intended it, to bring St. Paul under a ſuſpicion, as acting in confederacy with himſelf; and if the latter of theſe was the caſe, God, as in other inſtances, over-ruled this artifice of Satan to the deſtruction of his own cauſe and kingdom. See Doddridge, Biſcoe, and Calmet.

Ver. 18—20. And many that believed, came, &c.] Exorciſms and incantations had been very much practiced at Epheſus: The Gentiles there imagined that Diana, or the moon, preſided over their incantations; but upon the diſaſter which befel theſe exorciſts, many of them who had lately embraced the Chriſtian religion, came to the apoſtle, acknowledging that they alſo had formerly been guilty of pretenſions to ſorcery and exorciſms, and confeſſed that they now looked upon ſuch things as highly criminal. Nay, ſeveral of them even brought with them their books, which contained Εφισια γραμματα, Epheſian letters, or the myſteries and inſtitutions of that pretended art; ſuch as the methods of incantation, the words to be made uſe of, and the proper ſeaſons and places for making uſe of them;—and they threw thoſe books into the fire, and burned them publickly, in the face of the whole city. The value of them being computed, was found to be fifty thouſand pieces of ſilver. By a piece of ſilver, ἀργυρίον, is meant a Jewiſh ſhekel: See Matth. xxvi. 15. xxvii. 3—9. Dr. Arbuthnot ſays that a ſhekel was equal to two ſhillings, three-pence, and three eighths of a penny of our money: According to that valuation, fifty thouſand ſhekels would amount to 5,703*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.* of our Engliſh money; and yet, though the books were valued at that large ſum, they now chearfully burned them. So mighty was the evidence of the Chriſtian religion, and ſo great its effects! as appeared particularly in the diſintereſted piety of theſe men; for they would not ſell thoſe books to others, becauſe the art was in itſelf unlawful, and ought not to have been practiſed by any one: And being enlightened by the knowledge of the Goſpel, and animated with the proſpect of a better and more enduring ſubſtance, they made no account of that large ſum of money, in compariſon of an honourable and faithful diſcharge of their duty. See Benſon, Grotius, Prideaux, and Biſcoe's Lectures, p. 290.

Ver. 21. After theſe things—Paul purpoſed, &c.] It is not certain from the original, whether this relates to a determination to which St. Paul was moved by the Holy Spirit, by whom he was directed in his journeys, or to a purpoſe which he formed in his own mind: But as we find that he delayed the execution of it, and was led by ſeveral circumſtances to alter his intended courſe, and to continue longer in his progreſs than he firſt deſigned, it ſeems more reaſonable to refer it to his own ſpirit; and therefore Beza renders the original, Statuit apud ſe; and Stephens, Induxit in animum; "He reſolved, or determined in himſelf." Many events referred to in the Epiſtles happened during this period. It is probable that Philemon, a convert of St. Paul, and Epaphras, afterwards a miniſter of the church of Coloſſe, were converted about this time. The apoſtle was alſo viſited by ſeveral Chriſtians, from neighbouring parts, during his abode here; and there is great reaſon to believe, that he wrote his firſt Epiſtle to the Corinthians from hence, and about this time. See the introductory note to that Epiſtle, Doddridge, and Benſon.

Ver. 22. Timotheus and Eraſtus] Timothy was a perſon very proper to be employed on this occaſion; not only on account of his excellent character, but alſo as he had formerly been at Macedonia with Paul, and had aſſiſted in planting the churches there. Eraſtus, who was joined with him, was chamberlain at Corinth; and they were charged with a commiſſion to promote the collection which St. Paul was making, both in the European and Aſiatic churches, for the poor Chriſtians in Judea; which is afterwards ſo largely urged in the ſecond Epiſtle to the Corinthians, ch. viii. and ix. See Locke, and Lardner's Credib. vol. ii. part ii. p. 51.

Ver. 24. Demetrius—who made ſilver ſhrines for Diana] Theſe ſhrines, it has been generally ſuppoſed, were little models of the famous temple of Diana, with folding doors; which being opened, the image of the goddeſs was ſeen placed therein. The votaries of Diana, who came to worſhip at Epheſus, uſed to purchaſe them; and it is not unlikely, that upon their return home, they ſet them up, and conſecrated them in their private or domeſtic chapels. This opinion is rendered probable by a variety of paſſages in ancient authors. Beza, however, and others conjecture, that the buſineſs of Demetrius might poſſibly be, making a ſort of coins or medals, on the reverſe of which the temple was repreſented: And in Beza's Greek Teſtament, we have a print of one of theſe medals, in which the image itſelf, with its various rows of breaſts, is exhibited, as ſeen through the open doors of the temple. It is poſſible this company of workmen might take in thoſe who wrought in all theſe ſacred commodities; and likewiſe thoſe who made a kind of pageants, intended for public proceſſions, in which Diana was repreſented in a kind of moveable chapel, reſembling her great temple, in a larger proportion than theſe ſuppoſed ſhrines or models. See Hammond, Grotius, Biſcoe, p. 300. and Raphel. ex Herod. p. 380. Inſtead of craftſmen, and craft, in this and the next verſe, Dr. Waterland and the MS. read, tradeſmen—trade.

Ver. 26. That not alone at Epheſus, &c.] That this Paul has perſuaded great numbers of people, not only of Epheſus, but of almoſt all the provinces of Aſia, as they have occaſionally viſited us; and has turned them aſide from the eſtabliſhed religion, ſaying, that they are not true deities, which are made with hands, nor worthy of being at all worſhipped or regarded." The laſt clauſe of this verſe plainly ſhews, that the contrary opinion generally prevailed; namely, that there was a kind of divinity in the images of their ſuppoſed deities; which Elſner fully ſhews that the heathens did think; though ſome of them, and particularly Maximus Tyrius and Julian, had learnt to ſpeak of them juſt as the Papiſts do now; who indeed ſeem to have borrowed ſome of their apologies from theſe late heathens. See Doddridge, and Elſner's Obſervations, vol. i. p. 455, &c.

Ver. 27. Whom all Aſia and the world worſhippeth] As Diana was known under a great variety of titles and characters, as the goddeſs of hunting, of travelling, of child-birth, of inchantments, &c. as Luna, Hecate, Lucina, Proſerpine, and ſo on,—ſhe had undoubtedly, in one or other of theſe views, a vaſt number of votaries. She was one of the objects of the Eleuſinian myſteries; which were not only reſorted to from the remoteſt regions, but were likewiſe ſaid to be ſo extenſive, as to take in the whole race of mankind. The Epheſian Diana was of a ſingular form, being always repreſented with ſeveral tiers or rows of breaſts; intimating her to be the mother of mankind: And in this form it appears from a curious MS.

preſerved

danger to be ſet at nought; but alſo that the temple of the great goddeſs Diana ſhould be deſpiſed, and her magnificence ſhould be deſtroyed, whom all Aſia and the world worſhippeth.

28 And when they heard theſe ſayings, they were full of wrath, and cried out, ſaying, Great is Diana of the Epheſians!

29 And the whole city was filled with confuſion: and having caught Gaius and Ariſtarchus, men of Macedonia, Paul's companions in travel, they ruſhed with one accord into the theatre.

30 And when Paul would have entered in unto the people, the diſciples ſuffered him not.

31 And certain of the chief of Aſia, which were his friends, ſent unto him, deſiring him that he would not adventure himſelf into the theatre.

32 Some therefore cried one thing, and ſome another: for the aſſembly was confuſed, and the more part knew not wherefore they were come together.

33 And they drew Alexander out of the multitude, the Jews putting him forward: And Alexander beckoned with the hand, and would have made his defence unto the people.

34 But when they knew that he was a Jew, all with one voice, about the ſpace of two hours cried out, Great is Diana of the Epheſians!

35 And when the town-clerk had appeaſed the people, he ſaid, Ye men of Epheſus, what man is there that knoweth not how that the city of the Epheſians is a worſhipper of the great goddeſs Diana, and of the image which fell down from Jupiter?

36 Seeing then that theſe things cannot be ſpoken againſt, ye ought to be quiet, and to do nothing raſhly.

37 For ye have brought hither theſe men, which are neither robbers of churches, nor yet blaſphemers of your goddeſs.

38 Wherefore, if Demetrius, and the craftſmen which are with him, have a matter againſt any man, the law is open, and there are deputies: let them implead one another.

Ver. 29. 1 Cor. i. 14. Ch. xx. 4. xxvii. 2. Col. iv. 10.—V. 33. Ch. xii. 17.—V. 35. Gr. the temple-keeper.—V. 38. Or, the court-days are kept.

preſerved in the Britiſh Muſeum, that ſhe was known even to the Druids. See Div. Leg. b. ii. ſect. 4. my tranſlation of the third hymn of Callimachus to Diana, and the 35th hymn of Orpheus, p. 204. of that tranſlation.

Ver. 28. Great is Diana, &c.] This epithet of great, was frequently given by the heathens to Jupiter, Diana, and others of their ſuperior deities: The Aſcription of it to the true God, is in Scripture called magnifying him. See Elſner's Obſervat. vol. i. p. 461.

Ver. 29. Ariſtarchus—of Macedonia] Ariſtarchus was afterwards impriſoned with St. Paul, his friend and companion, at Rome, in the cauſe of the Goſpel. See Col. iv. 10. The famous games in honour of Diana, were celebrated in the theatre here mentioned, which was the uſual place of concourſe in publick commodities. See Grotius, and Doddridge.

Ver. 31. And certain of the chief of Aſia] It has from this and the following paſſage been concluded by many, that the people at Epheſus were then celebrating the public games in honour of Diana, over which theſe officers preſided; and as it is not likely that in ſuch a tumultuous hour ſeveral of them ſhould have ſent to him at once with ſuch a meſſage, unleſs they had been in the theatre together, this opinion ſeems exceedingly probable; though it is certain that the theatres were places in which the Greeks often met for the diſpatch of public buſineſs, when there were no ſhews exhibited. Some would render the original word uſed here Ἀσιαρχοι, Aſiarchs, or Primates of Aſia, which appears to be a very juſt tranſlation: and as they were perſons of great dignity, and ſome of them prieſts too, this civil meſſage from them, was at once a proof of their candour, and of the moderation wherewith St. Paul had behaved, which made them thus kindly ſolicitous for his ſafety. Dr. Benſon thinks they recollected the danger to which St. Paul had been expoſed in a combat with wild beaſts in this very theatre, to which ſome have ſuppoſed that the Apoſtle refers, 1 Cor. xv. 32. where ſee the note, and Hammond, Grotius, Raphelius, and Biſcoe's Lectures, p. 302.

Ver. 33, 34. Alexander, &c.] Many writers ſuppoſe that this was Alexander the copperſmith, who was one of the moſt violent judaizing Chriſtians, conſequently one of the greateſt enemies of St. Paul, and moſt in favour with the unbelieving Jews of any who profeſſed Chriſtianity; and, if ſo, no wonder that the Jews ſhould be deſirous of his making his oration to the people. But when he himſelf would have ſpoken, and beckoned with his hand for ſilence, the people would not hear him; for they knew that he was of the race of the Jews, and conſequently an enemy to Diana, and to their idolatry. But though Alexander was hereby prevented from ſpeaking in public, he afterwards did the Apoſtle and the Chriſtian intereſt a great deal of harm by his private treachery, and oppoſing the liberty of the Gentile converts; that is, their freedom from the Moſaic law. See 1 Tim. i. 20. 2 Tim. iv. 14. Grotius and Benſon.

Ver. 35. The town-clerk] Γραμματεὺς literally ſignifies a ſcribe, or ſecretary; but as this perſon appears to have been of ſome authority, as well as learning, the word chancellor, or recorder, ſeems to be very properly uſed by ſeveral learned tranſlators. Mr. Biſcoe endeavours to prove that the office referred not to the city of Epheſus, but to the games; and that the perſon who bore it repreſented Apollo, one of the chief of their deities, and the ſuppoſed brother of Diana; which, if it were indeed the caſe, would give great weight to his interpretation. He appears, by this ſpeech, a perſon of conſiderable prudence and abilities; for he urged in a few words that there was no need of a public declaration that they were votaries of Diana, ſince every body knew it; ver. 35, 36. that the perſons accuſed were not guilty of any breach of the law, or any public offence, ver. 37. that if they were, this was not a legal method of proſecuting them, ver. 38, 39. and that they were themſelves liable to proſecution for ſuch a tumultuous proceeding, ver. 40. See Limborch, Doddridge, Harrington's Works, p. 338, and Biſcoe, p. 305. The word Νεωκόρος, here rendered a worſhipper, properly ſignifies a prieſt, or prieſteſs, devoted to ſome particular deity; whoſe buſineſs it was to look after the temple, and ſee that it was not only kept in good repair, but alſo neat and clean, and beautified in a proper manner. It appears by ancient inſcriptions on marbles, coins, and other authentic teſtimonies, that there were ſome particular perſons at Epheſus who bore this office; but the chancellor, with great ſtrength and beauty of language, to expreſs the unanimity and zeal of the whole city in the ſervice of Diana, ſpeaks of it as one ſuch attendant devotee in the temple; and as Νεωκόρος is compounded of a word, which ſignifies to ſweep, it imports the humility with which they were ready to ſtoop to the loweſt office of ſervice there. As for the tradition of this image's falling down from Jupiter, there was the like legend concerning ſeveral other images among the heathens; as there is likewiſe concerning ſome pictures of the virgin Mary in popiſh churches. The reader will find many learned quotations on theſe images in Biſcoe, p. 307. See alſo Pool's Synopſis, and Raphel. ex Xenoph. p. 177.

Ver. 37. Men, who are neither robbers of churches, &c.] It is very ungenerous in Orobio to inſinuate from hence, that the fear of ſuffering kept St. Paul from declaring againſt the eſtabliſhed idolatries here; and it is much more ſo in lord Shafteſbury, to repreſent the Apoſtle and his companions as acquieſcing in this defence of the chancellor, and ſheltering themſelves under it, though it maintained that they allowed the divinity of Diana, and her image. Now, not to inſiſt on the remark, that nothing ſaid againſt gods made with hands could affect an image which was ſuppoſed to have fallen down from heaven; nor to urge St. Paul's abſence, though that puts him quite out of the queſtion, as to any reply to this ſpeech,—It is obvious to anſwer, that the chancellor's aſſertion is only this, "that the perſons in queſtion had not diſturbed the public peace by any riotous attempt to plunder or demoliſh the temple or altar of Diana, nor did they abuſe her by ſcurrilous language." This was much to their honour; but in how ſerious, ſtrenuous, and how courageous a manner the Apoſtles bore an open, though always modeſt and peaceable teſtimony againſt idolatry, the whole ſeries of their hiſtory and writings ſhews. See Limborch's Collat. cum Jud. p. 134. Characteriſticks, vol. iii. p. 36. and Doddridge.

Ver. 38. The law is open, &c.] It is term time, and the judges are ſitting. Wat. and MSS. The courts are held, in which they may have juſtice 39 But if ye enquire any thing concerning other matters, it ſhall be determined in a lawful aſſembly.

40 For we are in danger to be called in queſtion for this day's uproar, there being no cauſe whereby we may give an account of this concourſe.

41 And when he had thus ſpoken, he diſmiſſed the aſſembly.

Ver. 39. Or, ordinary.

juſtice done them, if they have a charge of any private injury to offer; and there are the proconſuls, if they have any crime relating to the ſtate to alledge." Doddridge.' Αγορα originally ſignifies a congregation or aſſembly of people, and from thence it comes to ſignify likewiſe the place of aſſembly,—the forum, whether underſtood of a market, or a court of judicature. 'Αγοραῖος denotes what belongs to the 'Αγορα in either ſenſe. Hence αγοραῖος ανθρωπος is, "one of the rabble; a man beating the ſtreets, or ſauntering in the market-places;" in which ſenſe it is frequently uſed by Ariſtophanes and other writers, as in ch. xvii. 5. It likewiſe ſignifies "a perſon converſant in law and court pleadings;" and ἡ 'Αγοραῖος is frequently uſed for 'Αγοραῖος συνάξις, conventus, a court of juſtice, or ſeſſions. If the article had been prefixed in the preſent paſſage, ('Οι Αγοραῖοι, ſcil. Συναξεις) the expreſſion had been plain and clear; but the want of the article ſeems to be compenſated by the word ἄγονται, and by the addition ἀνθύπατοι εἰσιν, that is, there are courts or ſeſſions held; and there are proconſuls, or judges; for the proconſuls or prætors were judges in theſe provincial courts, and Aſia being one of the provinces belonging to the ſenate, was governed by proconſuls, as the word ἀνθύπατοι implies. See Caſaubon, Salmaſius, Baſnage's Annals, vol. i. p. 674. Biſcoe, p. 308. and Harrington's Works, p. 339. We may juſt obſerve, that the word implead is a forenſic term, and alludes to the methods practiſed in the Grecian courts. After the plaintiff had delivered in the name of the perſon againſt whom he brought his action, with an account of his offence,—the magiſtrate finding it to belong to his cognizance, and worthy of a public trial, the plaintiff was allowed to call upon or ſummon his adverſary to appear in court, to anſwer the complaint: and this ſummons is what is alluded to by the word ἐγκαλείτωσαν, here rendered implead. See ver. 40. in the original.

Ver. 39. But if ye inquire, &c.] "But if the cauſe be not properly either civil or criminal, and you are inquiring any thing concerning other matters relating to the common utility, or to religion, which may ſeem of a ſpecial nature, you need not doubt but it ſhall be determined, to the general ſatisfaction, in a lawful aſſembly of the Aſiatic ſtates; who will inquire into it impartially, and with a diligence proportionable to its importance." Doddridge and Biſcoe.

Ver. 40. For] Καὶ γὰρ, And indeed. Raphelius has ſhewn that γὰρ often ſignifies indeed. Dr. Waterland reads, for we are in danger of being indicted [ἐγκαλεῖσθαι] for a riot, on account of this day. There was a Roman law, which made it capital to raiſe a riot: Qui coetum et concurſus fecerit, capite puniatur. The words in the original στάσεως and συστροφῆς, remarkably anſwer to thoſe of this law. Fire, inundations, the ſudden invaſion of enemies, &c. might have excuſed and juſtified a ſudden concourſe of people ruſhing together with ſome violence; but the chancellor, with great propriety, obſerves, there was no ſuch cauſe here, nor any other adequate one to be aſſigned. Dr. Heylin renders the laſt clauſe, there being no juſtifiable occaſion for ſuch a commotion.

REFLECTIONS ON CHAP. XIX.

How highly does it behove every Chriſtian to propoſe to himſelf the inquiry of St. Paul, ver. 2. Have I received the Holy Ghoſt ſince I believed? Is my faith a principle working by love? Have I had that ſeal of the truth of Chriſt's doctrine in myſelf?—We are not now to expect any of thoſe extraordinary gifts which at firſt gave ſanction to the apoſtolic miniſtry. The canon of the New Teſtament hath been long ſince compleated and ratified; and we are now to depend upon that, as the moſt ſure word of prophecy.

But yet there are graces of the Spirit given to all believers, as earneſts to them of their real reception of that Spirit. The Holy Ghoſt is promiſed to all believers,—to all petitioners: (Luke xi. 13.) But how many deceive themſelves in this matter, who think they have received, when really they have not! As there are pretenders to the gifts of the divine Spirit, ſo are there likewiſe to his graces and his comforts: And hence we ſee the neceſſity ſtrictly to examine ourſelves by the Apoſtle's inquiry: The tree will be known by its fruits,—Do we bring forth the fruits of the Spirit? Are we led by it?—Do we walk in its light? Do we live under its government?—How ſimple, yet how unſpeakably important is this inquiry! Conſcience here may ſerve for a thouſand witneſſes.

What could be more reaſonable than St. Paul's application to theſe converts? (ver. 3.) We have not ſo much as heard, ſay they, whether there be any Holy Ghoſt. ver. 2. We may take up his words to every nominal diſciple of our Lord, and ſay, Unto what then were we baptized?—ignorance of the Holy Ghoſt being as inconſiſtent with a ſincere profeſſion of Chriſtianity, as ignorance of Chriſt is. It is an inquiry we ſhould often make, not only to whoſe honour we were born, but to whoſe ſervice we were from infancy conſecrated; that ſo we may ſtudy to anſwer the ends both of our birth and of our baptiſm. How ſhall they ever hope to live up to a Vow, who neither conſider its tenor, nor regard it ſolemn obligations!

Wonderful was the change wrought on a ſudden in theſe ſincere diſciples, when baptized in the name of the Lord Jeſus. ver. 5, 6. Having the Spirit of prophecy communicated, that they might underſtand thoſe myſteries of the kingdom of God, which by the gift of tongues they were enabled to preach to every nation, in every language; and hence, they that but juſt now had not even heard of an Holy Ghoſt, are now filled with its ſacred influences, and prophecy its bleſſed effects.

In order to the continued production of theſe effects, may thoſe amongſt Us, who reſt indifferent to its ſacred operations, be animated by the ſame divine principle, and made obedient to its motions! But it eſpecially concerns them, to whom the myſteries of the Goſpel are committed, to declare them boldly, with St. Paul, (ver. 8, 9.) whoever may be hardened, whoever may oppoſe, or how evil ſoever ſome, who boaſt of their knowledge of God, may ſpeak of this way to life eternal.

How glorious a character does the great Apoſtle exhibit, ver. 11, 12! every where advancing the kingdom of Chriſt, and ſubduing that of the prince of darkneſs! We cannot expect that the miracles of his days ſhould be renewed in ours; but we may humbly hope, that the nobleſt effects of his preaching will be renewed; we may ſtill hope that dead ſouls will be quickened, the languiſhing revived, and the minds of men reſcued from the dominion of their ſpiritual adverſary;—thoſe minds, where his poſſeſſion is ſo infinitely more fatal and dangerous, than that which the body ever experienced of old.

The caſe of theſe Jewiſh exorciſts, and their harſh treatment from the man who was poſſeſſed by the evil ſpirit, v. 13—16. tended to convince the Jews and all the world, that none but the Apoſtles, and ſuch as believed in Chriſt, were really able to work miracles, or had power over unclean ſpirits. Theſe ſons of Sceva had ſaid, We adjure you by Jeſus,—not "whom we believe in," or depend upon; but whom Paul preacheth. The event ſhews, that God is not mocked. The name of Jeſus is powerful ſo far only as it is accompanied with his virtue and his Spirit. It is true religion in his ſervants, to put their confidence in his name, and to avail themſelves of it againſt his enemies; but it is an abuſe and a blaſphemy, it is irreligion and an uſurpation, for thoſe to pretend to aſſume or apply it, who are not ſincerely devoted to his ſervice. The narrative before us is a ſtriking caution to all thoſe who name the name of Chriſt, while they do not depart from iniquity. If we reſiſt the devil by a true and lively faith in Chriſt, he will flee from us; but if we think to ſubdue him by the bare uſing of Chriſt's name, or by a mere profeſſion of his faith, no wonder if he prevail againſt us, and we come off naked and wounded, both in body and ſoul; no wonder if ſuch a conduct proves the means of irritating rather than of curing thoſe diſorders, which the influence of Satan has introduced, but which the Spirit of Chriſt alone can effectually remove.

We find, as one happy effect of the Apoſtle's preaching, that thoſe who employed wicked books, in the reſearch of curious and impertinent arts, burned them; ver. 19. it is the natural conſequence of that true contrition expreſſed, ver. 18. They thus ſhewed a holy indignation at the ſins they had been guilty of; juſt as the idolaters of old, when brought to repentance, ſaid to their idols, Get ye hence; and caſt even thoſe of ſilver and gold to the moles and to the bats. Iſai. xxx. 32. ii. 20. And thus alſo they took a pious revenge on thoſe things which had been to them the inſtruments of ſin, and proclaimed the force of their convictions how evil it appeared in their eſteem. Thoſe that truly repent of ſin, like theſe Epheſians, will, like them, keep far as poſſible from the occaſions of it; and thoſe who are recovered from ſin themſelves, will do all they can to keep others from falling into it, and be eſpecially afraid and averſe to lay the leaſt occaſion of ſin in their way.

Of all ſuch occaſions, perhaps, there are few or none ſo dangerous and ſo deſtructive as trifling, indecent, or impious books: It is the good effect of a ſincere faith in Chriſt to render all ſuch books as deteſtable, as they might once be inticing; and they who are truly impreſſed by a ſenſe of his character, will, like the Epheſians before us, commit to the flames every ſuch vile incentive to ſin.

Nothing acts with greater force upon the minds of carnal men than the love of money; nothing raiſes their paſſions ſo high, as the hazard of its loſs. We ſee it in the caſe of Demetrius and his fellows. 23—24. God grant that the zeal of the heathens, in the worſhip of their imaginary deities, may not riſe up in judgment againſt us, for the neglect of the living Jehovah! They rent the ſkies with acclamations of the greatneſs of their goddeſs, and ſpared no coſt to adorn her temple, and to purchaſe the models of it. May a ſenſe of the greatneſs of Our God, who dwelleth not in temples made with hands, fill our minds continually, and make us ready to ſpend and be ſpent in his ſervice!

In too many inſtances, indeed, religion has degenerated into craft, and been made the pretence of promoting mens ſecular intereſt: How greatly were it to be wiſhed, that all artifices of this kind were to be found amongſt pagans only:—But the ſpirit of theſe votaries to Diana has, alas! but too often invaded the Chriſtian church, and where open violence has failed, ſecret diſſimulation has ſometimes but too well ſucceeded. We may clearly obſerve for this whole relation, that as the devil ſupports his empire only by ſoothing the paſſions of men, and eſpecially the deſire of earthly wealth; ſo Chriſt Jeſus eſtabliſhes his only by correcting thoſe paſſions, and particularly the love of periſhable treaſures.

CHAP. XX.

Paul goeth to Macedonia: he celebrateth the Lord's ſupper, and preacheth. Eutychus being killed by a fall, is raiſed to life. At Miletus he calleth the elders together, telleth them what ſhall befal to himſelf, committeth God's flock to them, warneth them of falſe teachers, commendeth them to God, prayeth with them, and goeth his way.

AND after the uproar was ceaſed, Paul called unto him the diſciples, and embraced them, and departed for to go into Macedonia.

2 And when he had gone over thoſe parts, and had given them much exhortation, he came into Greece,

3 And there abode three months: and when the Jews laid wait for him, as he was about to ſail into Syria, he purpoſed to return through Macedonia.

4 And there accompanied him into Aſia, Sopater of Berea; and of the Theſſalonians, Ariſtarchus and Secundus; and Gaius of Derbe, and Timotheus; and of Aſia, Tychicus and Trophimus.

5 Theſe going before, tarried for us at Troas.

6 And we ſailed away from Philippi, after the days of unleavened bread, and came unto them to Troas in five days; where we abode ſeven days.

7 And upon the firſt day of the week, when the diſciples came together to break bread, Paul preached unto them, (ready to depart on the morrow;) and continued his ſpeech until midnight.

8 And there were many lights in the upper chamber, where they were gathered together.

9 And there ſat in a window a certain young man, named Eutychus, being fallen into a deep ſleep: and as Paul was long preaching, he ſunk down with ſleep, and

Ver. 1. 1 Tim. i. 3.—V. 4. Ch. xix. 29. xxvii. 2. Col. iv. 10. Epheſ. vi. 21. Col. iv. 7. 2 Tim. iv. 12. Tit. iii. 12. Ch. xxi. 29. 2 Tim. iv. 20.—V. 6. Ch. xvi. 8.—V, 7. 1 Cor. xvi. 2. Rev. 1. 10. Ch. ii. 42, 46. 1 Cor. x. 16. xi. 20, &c.—V. 8. Ch. i. 13.

The prudence of the Epheſian chancellor, (ver. 35, &c.) in finding a way to quiet this uproar, is worthy of eſteem and imitation. Good ſenſe, and mere human probity teach us never to favour or ſupport calumnious accuſations againſt any man, under any pretence whatſoever. Happy had it been for this judicious officer, if the underſtanding he ſhewed on this occaſion had led him to ſee the vanity of thoſe idle traditions,—that an image fell down from their imaginary Jupiter, or that they could be Gods which were made with hands. But the world by wiſdom knew not the true God: the God of this world, hath in all ages blinded the minds of multitudes, who have acted like ideots in religion, while in other inſtances their ſagacity hath commanded and deſerved the univerſal approbation. Of this we cannot have a clearer, or more melancholy demonſtration, than the prevalence of idolatry through ſo many nations, ancient and modern, as well thoſe who were poliſhed and learned, as thoſe who were ſavage and ignorant.

This great tumult was at laſt appeaſed, though with difficulty, by the chancellor, and St. Paul by this means reſcued from the danger that threatened him. We learn from hence, how the over-ruling providence of God preſerves the public peace, by an unaccountable power over the ſpirits of men; while thus the jarring world is kept in ſome order, and men are reſtrained from being like the fiſhes of the ſea, where the greater devour the leſs. We ſee how very dangerous are tumults and ſeditions, notwithſtanding the utmoſt care and vigilance to quell them; and therefore as men, as citizens, as Chriſtians, we ought to avoid every thing that tends to excite them; and to uſe every means poſſible to calm and ſuppreſs their fury, when excited. And to conclude, we ſee how many ways the Almighty has of protecting his faithful people: Very probably this chancellor was no friend at all to the apoſtle, or to the doctrines he preached; and yet his human prudence is made to ſerve the divine purpoſe. Many are the troubles of the righteous, but the Lord delivereth him out of all.

Chap. XX. Ver. 2. And when he had gone through thoſe parts] The ſecond Epiſtle to the Corinthians ſeems to have been written from Macedonia at this time. See Benſon, and Boyce's works, vol. ii. p. 293.

Ver. 3. And there abode three months] It ſeems that St. Paul met with buſineſs here and in other places, which detained him longer than he expected. From hence he probably wrote his celebrated Epiſtle to the Romans. See Rom. xv. 25, 27. xvi. 21.

Ver. 4. There accompanied him—Sopater, &c.] The ſeveral perſons mentioned in this verſe are thought by ſome to have been joined with Paul, as meſſengers of the churches, in carrying their contributions to the poor brethren at Jeruſalem. Comp. 1 Cor. xvi. 3, 4. and 2 Cor. viii. 19—23. We know but few particulars of moſt of them. Sopater, who in moſt ancient MSS. is called the ſon of Pyrrhus, is generally thought to be the ſame with Soſipater, whom St. Paul has mentioned as his kinſman, Rom. xvi. 21. Ariſtarchus of Theſſalonica is mentioned before as a Macedonian, ch. xix. 21. He attended Paul in his voyage to Rome, ch. xxvii. 2. and was his fellow-labourer, Philem. ver. 24. and a fellow-priſoner with him, Col. iv. 10, 11. Secundus is not mentioned any where but there. Gaius of Derbé, (if he be not a different perſon of the ſame name) is elſewhere mentioned as a man of Macedonia, ch. xix. 26. of which, as ſome ſuppoſe, he was a native; but deſcended of a family that came from Derbé. He was baptized by St. Paul at Corinth, 1 Cor. i. 14. and entertained him as his hoſt while he abode there, Rom. xvi. 23. and afterwards St. John directs his third Epiſtle to him. Timothy was a native of Lyſtra, ch. xvi. 1. whom Paul particularly honoured with the appellation of his friend, and diſtinguiſhed by his two Epiſtles to him, as well as by joining his name with his own, in the title of ſeveral other Epiſtles. Tychicus of Aſia was often employed on meſſages by St. Paul, and is more than once recommended by him to the churches, as a beloved brother, a faithful miniſter, and fellow-ſervant in the Lord; whom he employed not only to acquaint them with his own affairs, but for this purpoſe alſo, that he might know their ſtate, and comfort their hearts, Epheſ. vi. 21, 22. Col. iv. 7, 8. Trophimus, of Epheſus, appears to have been a Gentile convert, whom we find afterwards with Paul at Jeruſalem, ch. xxi. 29. and who attended him in other journeys, till he left him at Miletum ſick, 2 Tim. iv. 20. Theſe two laſt are ſaid to be Aſiaticks; and being diſtinguiſhed here from Gaius and Timothy, who were of Derbé and Lyſtra, which lay in Aſia Minor, it is plain they are ſo called, as being natives of the proconſular Aſia. See Doddridge, Le Clerc, Benſon, and Calmet.

Ver. 6. Where we abode ſeven days] Paul might chooſe to do this ſo much the rather, as he had declined ſuch great views of ſervice as were open to him when he paſſed through it before, in his way to Macedonia, 2 Cor. ii. 12, 13. Perhaps he might now lodge at the houſe of Carpus: But it ſeems to have been in a later journey, that he left there the books and other things to which he refers, 2 Tim. iv. 13. It plainly appears from the manner in which St. Luke ſpeaks here, and all along afterwards, that he attended St. Paul in all this journey and voyage; though by his altering the expreſſion, he does not ſeem to have been with him ſince he was at Philippi, in his former progreſs See ch. xvi. 10, 12.

Ver. 7. The diſciples came together to break bread] That is, to celebrate the euchariſt. It is ſtrange that Barclay, in his Apology, (prop. xiii. ſect. 8.) ſhould argue from ver. 11. that this was only a common meal, and not the Lord's Supper. It is well known that the primitive Chriſtians adminiſtered the euchariſt every Lord's day; and as that was the moſt ſolemn and appropriate, as well as the concluding act of their worſhip, there is no wonder that it ſhould be mentioned as the end of their aſſembly: Whereas, had nothing more than a common meal been intended, St. Luke would hardly have thought that worth mentioning; eſpecially when, St. Paul being with them on a Lord's day, they would naturally have ſomething far nobler, and more important in view: In which accordingly we find them employed; and it is quite unreaſonable to ſuppoſe that they ſpent their time in feaſting, which neither the occaſion, nor the hour would well admit. The argument which ſome over-zealous Papiſts have drawn from this text, for denying the cup in the ſacrament to the laity, was ſo ſolemnly given up in the council of Trent, that it is aſtoniſhing any who profeſs to believe the divine authority of that council, ſhould ever have preſumed to plead it again. See Father Paul's Hiſtory, b. iii. p. 486. and Doddridge.

Ver. 9. In a window] The word θυρὶς, plainly ſignifies an open window, with a ſort of wooden caſement, or little door, which was ſet open, that the room might not be over-heated with ſo much company, and ſo many lamps. It is well known that the ancients had not yet glaſs in their windows; nor indeed are the windows glazed at this day in the eaſt, and many parts of Europe. See Doddridge, and Shaw's Travels, p. 109.

fell down from the third loft, and was taken up dead.

10 And Paul went down, and fell on him, and embracing him, ſaid, Trouble not yourſelves; for his life is in him.

11 When he therefore was come up again, and had broken bread, and eaten, and talked a long while, even till break of day, ſo he departed.

12 And they brought the young man alive, and were not a little comforted.

13 And we went before to ſhip, and ſailed unto Aſſos, there intending to take in Paul: for ſo had he appointed, minding himſelf to go afoot.

14 And when he met with us at Aſſos, we took him in, and came to Mitylene.

15 And we ſailed thence, and came the next day over againſt Chios; and the next day we arrived at Samos, and tarried at Trogyllium; and the next day we came to Miletus.

16 For Paul had determined to ſail by Epheſus, becauſe he would not ſpend the time in Aſia: for he haſted, if it were poſſible for him, to be at Jeruſalem the day of Pentecoſt.

17 And from Miletus he ſent to Epheſus, and called the elders of the church.

18 And when they were come to him, he ſaid unto them, Ye know, from the firſt day that I came into Aſia, after what manner I have been with you at all ſeaſons,

19 Serving the Lord with all humility of mind, and with many tears, and temptations which befel me, by the lying in wait of the Jews:

20 And how I kept back nothing that was profitable unto you, but have ſhewed you, and have taught you publickly, and from houſe to houſe, 21 Teſtifying both to the Jews, and alſo to the Greeks, repentance toward God, and faith toward our Lord Jeſus Chriſt.

22 And now, behold, I go bound in the ſpirit unto Jeruſalem, not knowing the things that ſhall befall me there:

23 Save that the Holy Ghoſt witneſſeth in every city, ſaying, that bonds and afflictions abide me.

24 But none of theſe things move me, neither count I my life dear unto myſelf, ſo that I might finiſh my courſe with joy, and the miniſtry which I have received of the Lord Jeſus, to teſtify the goſpel of the grace of God.

25 And now behold, I know that ye all, among whom I have gone preaching the Ver. 10. 1 Kings xvii. 21. 2 Kings iv. 34. Matth. ix. 24.—V. 16. Ch. xxi. 4, 12. Ch. xxiv. 17.—V. 18. Ch. xviii. 19. xix. 1, 10.—V. 20. Ver. 27.—V. 21. Mark i. 15. Luke xxiv. 47.—V. 22. Ch. xix. 21.—V. 23. Ch. xxi. 4, 11. Or, wait for me.—V. 24, Ch. xxi. 13. 2 Tim. iv. 7. Ch. i. 17. Gal. i. 1. Tit. i. 3.—V. 25. Ver. 38. Rom. xv. 23.

Ver. 10. For his life is in him] Some have imagined, that as God immediately intended to raiſe this young from the dead, the ſoul ſtill remained in the body, though not united to it. But if we conceive of the ſoul as purely an immaterial ſubſtance, ſuch kind of expreſſions are not very intelligible. It is well known, that ψυχὴ, the word here uſed, often ſignifies life, and the paſſage only imports that though he was dead before, the Apoſtle now perceived ſome ſymptoms of his returning life. The word ἐπέπεσεν, he fell upon him, may ſignify, that Paul threw himſelf on the body, as Elijah and Eliſha did on thoſe they intended to raiſe. 1 Kings xvii. 21. 2 Kings iv. 34. Συμπεριλαβὼν, may either ſignify his embracing him at the ſame time, or his lifting him up in his arms with the aſſiſtance of ſome who ſtood near. See Craddock's Apoſtol. Hiſt. vol. ii. p. 120. Stockius, and Wolfius.

Ver. 13—15. Aſſos, &c.] Aſſos was a principal town on the ſea-coaſt of Aſia in Myſia. Mitylene, (ver. 14.) was a celebrated ſea-port in the iſland of Leſbos. Chios (ver. 15.) was an iſland between Lesbos and Samos, famous for producing ſome of the fineſt Grecian wines. Samos was a famous iſland of the Archipelago upon the coaſt of Aſia Minor. Trogyllium was a promontory of Ionia, not far from Samos. Miletus was a town on the continent of Aſia Minor, and in the province of Caria; memorable for being the birth-place of Thales, one of the ſeven wiſe men, and founder of the Ionic ſect of philoſophy: at preſent the place is called by the Turks Melas. Not far diſtant from it is the famous river Mæander, which, though it incircles the plains it runs through with innumerable mazes and windings, yet in ſome places rolls with a very rapid and impetuous current. St. Paul put into the mouth of this river in his courſe towards Miletus. See Strabo, lib. 13. p. 581. Wells's Geography, and Calmet.

Ver. 16. If poſſible, to be at Jeruſalem, &c.] This was, that he might have an opportunity of meeting a greater number of people from Judea, and other parts, the days being then longer than at any other feaſt. In conſequence of this, ſome journeys might perhaps be ſaved, and many prejudices againſt St. Paul's perſon and miniſtry obviated; and, which was particularly conſiderable, the readieſt and beſt opportunity taken of diſtributing to thoſe Jewiſh Chriſtians, who lived perhaps at ſome diſtance from Jeruſalem, the alms with which he was charged. Yet, by a myſterious Providence, this very circumſtance of meeting ſo many ſtrangers at the feaſt, was the occaſion of his impriſonment. See ch. xxi. 27, &c. the note on ch. xviii. 21. and Doddridge.

Ver. 21. Teſtifying both to the Jews, &c.] The word rendered teſtifying ſometimes means to prove a thing by teſtimony, (ch. ii. 40. viii. 25.) and ſometimes, from a conviction of its truth and importance, to urge it with great earneſtneſs; 1 Tim. v. 21. 2 Tim. ii. 14. It is plain that we are to take it in the latter ſenſe in this place, but both are included, ver. 24. Repentance towards God, is a proper expreſſion, as he is offended by ſin,—and in order to recover his favour, we muſt turn to him; as faith towards Jeſus Chriſt, is no leſs proper, He being the principal object of the Chriſtian's faith. So that by teſtifying to the Jews and Gentiles repentance towards God, &c. we are to underſtand, that the Apoſtle did earneſtly impreſs upon them repentance of their ſins, whereby they had offended God, and faith in the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, as the Meſſiah; the perſon ordained of God to be their Saviour from their ſins. See Doddridge, Hammond, and Tillotſon's Works, vol. iii. p. 2.

Ver. 22. I go bound in the ſpirit] "Under the ſtrong impulſe of the ſpirit of God upon my mind; intimating my duty to me in ſuch a manner, that I can neither omit nor delay it, but am firmly reſolved to proceed to Jeruſalem."

Ver. 24. But none of theſe things move me] But I make no account of any of theſe things. Doddridge. It adds great beauty to this and all the other paſſages of Scripture, in which the Apoſtles expreſs their contempt of the world, that they were not uttered by perſons, like Seneca and Antoninus, in the full affluence of its enjoyments; but by men under the preſſure of the greateſt calamities, who were every day expoſing their lives, for the ſake of God, and in the expectation of an happy immortality. To what has been obſerved reſpecting the word teſtify, on ver. 21. we add, that in heathen writers it is uſed in a forenſic ſenſe, for "conteſting by law, and pleading in a cauſe;" and from hence it ſignifies, earneſtly to contend, or to perſuade by arguments and threatenings. In the LXX it ſignifies to proteſt, to convince, to preſs earneſtly, to perſuade. It is moſt frequently uſed by St. Luke in a very intenſe ſignification, and is ſometimes joined with exhorting or earneſtly perſuading to a thing: as in ch. xviii. 5. where being preſſed in the ſpirit, ſignifies intention and vehemency in teſtifying to them;—that he did vehemently endeavour to convince them; and it ſeems to be equivalent to the expreſſion, ver. 28. where it is ſaid, Apollos did mightily convince them. St. Paul uſes this word in a moſt vehement ſenſe, 1 Tim. v. 21. The word here, ſignifies not only St. Paul's bearing his teſtimony to the truth of the Goſpel, but his preaching, preſſing, and perſuading to the acceptance of it with the great earneſtneſs. See Hammond, Grotius, and Tillotſon as above.

Ver. 25. I know that you all, &c.] It appears more than probable, that the Apoſtle had received ſome particular revelation, that if he ſhould ever return to theſe parts of Aſia again; (as from Philem. ver. 22. it ſeems likely he might) Yet that he ſhould not have an opportunity of calling at Epheſus, or of ſeeing the miniſters whom he now addreſſed. See Benſon and Clarke.

kingdom of God, ſhall ſee my face no more.

26 Wherefore I take you to record this day, that I am pure from the blood of all men.

27 For I have not ſhunned to declare unto you all the counſel of God.

28 Take heed therefore unto yourſelves, and to all the flock, over the which the Holy Ghoſt hath made you overſeers, to feed the church of God, which he hath purchaſed with his own blood.

29 For I know this, that after my departing ſhall grievous wolves enter in among you, not ſparing the flock.

30 Alſo of your own ſelves ſhall men ariſe, ſpeaking perverſe things, to draw away diſciples after them.

31 Therefore watch, and remember, that by the ſpace of three years, I ceaſed not to warn every one night and day with tears.

32 And now, brethren, I commend you to God, and to the word of his grace, which is able to build you up, and to give you an inheritance among all them which are ſanctified.

33 I have coveted no man's ſilver, or gold, or apparel.

34 Yea, ye yourſelves know, that theſe hands have miniſtered unto my neceſſities, and to them that were with me.

35 I have ſhewed you all things, how that ſo labouring ye ought to ſupport the weak; and to remember the words of the Lord Jeſus, how he ſaid, It is more bleſſed to give than to receive.

36 And when he had thus ſpoken, he kneeled down, and prayed with them all.

37 And they all wept ſore, and fell on Paul's neck, and kiſſed him.

38 Sorrowing moſt of all for the words which he ſpake, that they ſhould ſee his face no more. And they accompanied him unto the ſhip.

Ver. 26. Ch. xviii. 6. 2 Cor. vii. 2.—V. 27. Ver. 20. Luke vii. 30. John xv. 15. Epheſ. i. 11.—V. 28. 1 Tim. iv. 16. 1 Pet. v. 2. 1 Cor. xii. 28. Epheſ. i. 7. Col. i. 14. 1 Pet. i. 19. Rev. v. 9. See Hebr. ix. 14.—V. 29. Matth. vii. 15. 2 Pet. ii. 1.—V. 30. 1 Tim. i. 20.—V. 31. Ch. xix. 10.—V. 32. Hebr. xiii. 9. Ch. ix. 31. Ch. xxvi. 18. Epheſ. i. 18.—V. 33. 1 Sam. xii. 3. 1 Cor. ix. 12. 2 Cor. vii. 2. xii. 17.—V. 34. Ch. xviii. 3. 1 Cor. iv. 12. 1 Theſſ. ii. 9. 2 Theſſ. iii. 8.—V. 35. 1 Cor. ix. 12. 2 Cor. xi. 9. xii. 13. 1 Theſſ. iv. 11.—V. 36. Ch. vii. 60. xxi. 5.—V. 38. Ver. 25.

Ver. 27. I have not ſhunned to declare unto you] The proper import of the word ὑποςείλλω, here rendered ſhun, in ſuch a connection is, to diſguiſe any important truth; or at leaſt, to decline the open publication of it, for fear of diſpleaſing thoſe to whom it ought to be declared. "I have not declined to declare unto you, with the utmoſt freedom and integrity, all the counſel of God; but, on the contrary, have laid before you the whole ſyſtem of divine truths, relating to our redemption by Chriſt, and the way to eternal happineſs with him, in the moſt plain and faithful manner, whatever cenſure, contempt or oppoſition, I might incur by ſuch a declaration." See Brekell's Chriſtian Warfare, p. 33. and Mintert.

Ver. 28. Hath made you overſeers] Ἐπισκόπȣς, Inſpectors, or biſhops. The expreſſion over which the Holy Ghoſt hath made, &c. applied to men who had been regularly ſet apart to the miniſterial office, ſhews how abſurd it is for any to reject the miniſtry in general, under a pretence that they have the Holy Ghoſt to teach them. There are a few copies which read the church of the Lord, inſtead of God; and which therefore ſome expoſitors are very fond to conſider as the true reading; but the greater number countenance the reading of our verſion; and the word Lord inſerted in ſome, might poſſibly be owing to a marginal illuſtration, ſhewing that by God was meant the Lord Chriſt. This paſſage therefore muſt be allowed as an inconteſtible proof, that the blood of Chriſt is here called the blood of God, as being the blood of that man, who is God with us,—God manifeſted in the fleſh;" and I cannot but apprehend, ſays Dr. Doddridge, that it was by the ſpecial direction of the holy Spirit, that ſo remarkable an expreſſion is uſed. Inſtead of purchaſed, ſome read redeemed. Raphelius has ſhewn, that the original word περιποίειν, often ſignifies to preſerve from deſtruction. See Mill, Wetſtein, and Raphelius, ex Herod. p. 383.

Ver. 29. Grievous wolves] Some, thinking that the word βαρεῖς properly refers to the ſtrength of theſe animals, would render it oppreſſive; but there ſeems no reaſon to depart from our verſion. Their eager and overbearing temper made them, no doubt, grievous to the Chriſtian church, though deſtitute of the ſecular power. The Apoſtle evidently makes a diſtinction between the wolves, who were to break in upon them from without, and the perverſe teachers, who were to ariſe from among themſelves. Both may be interpreted of ſeducers, who call themſelves Chriſtians, as falſe prophets are called by Chriſt wolves in ſheeps cloathing, Matth. vii. 15. For St. Paul would not have ſpoken of heathen perſecutors, as to ariſe after his departure, conſidering—what extremities from perſons of that kind he had himſelf ſuffered in Aſia, 2 Cor. i. 8—10. It ſeems probable therefore, that, by the grievous wolves, he means, judaizing falſe Apoſtles, who though they had before this time done a great deal of miſchief at Corinth and elſewhere, had not yet got any footing at Epheſus; and by the perverſe men ariſing from among themſelves, he may mean ſuch as Phygellus and Hermogenes, and ſome others, who revived the exploded doctrine of Hymenæus and Alexander; as alſo thoſe who afterwards introduced the Nicolaitan principles and practices, of which Chriſt complains as prevailing here, as well as in the neighbouring city of Pergamus. See Rev. ii. 6, 14, 15. Doddridge, Calmet, and Heylin.

Ver. 31. To warn every one night and day with tears] If this expreſſion be taken in any other than a generel ſenſe for inceſſantly, or without intermiſſion, it may probably intimate, that the Chriſtians ſometimes aſſembled at nights, either about the time of the tumult, to avoid offence, or becauſe many of the Chriſtians, being poor, were obliged, as St. Paul himſelf was, to ſpend great part of the day in ſecular labours. Comp. ver. 7. and 34.

Ver. 32. Which is able] Who is able: for God is evidently the laſt perſon mentioned in the Greek, of the grace of Him [αυτȣ] who is able: Though the Goſpel may be ſaid to be able to edify men, yet it ſeems harſh to ſay, that doctrines or writings can can give us an inheritance.

Ver. 35. To ſupport the weak] To aſſiſt the infirm. MS. The word ἀσθενȣ́ντων has exactly the ſignification here given; and, as Raphelius has ſhewn, may expreſs either ſickneſs or poverty; yet here undoubtedly it ſignifies ſuch poor perſons as were diſabled by ſome means or other from maintaining themſelves by their own labour. Compare Epheſ. iv. 28. The Evangeliſts have aſſured us, that they neither intended, nor have related all that our Lord did and ſaid; this paſſage therefore quoted by St. Paul, was one of thoſe which they omitted, and was probably a favourite ſaying of our Lord's; and the Apoſtle might have received it from the mouths of his brethren, who had been converſant with Jeſus. It is a true and precious monument of apoſtolical tradition, and being found in theſe writings, there can be no doubt concerning its authenticity. There are paſſages in Plutarch, Seneca, and others of the ancients, which bear a great reſemblance to it. See Raphel. ex Herod. p. 384. Tillotſon, vol. iii. p. 387. and Ablancourt's Apophthegmes Anciens, p. 3.

REFLECTIONS ON THE CASE OF EUTYCHUS. Ver. 7—12.

We will endeavour to render the example of this young man as uſeful as we may to our readers, by making it a ſubject of general enquiry into the nature and neglect of preaching amongſt us; to which end we ſhall purſue the following method: Firſt, producing ſeveral inſtances to ſhew the great neglect of preaching amongſt us; 2dly, Some of the uſual quarrels which men have againſt preaching; 3dly, Setting forth the great evil of this neglect and contempt of preaching, and diſcover the real cauſes from whence it proceeds; and, in the laſt place, offering ſome remedies againſt this great and ſpreading evil.

1. The inſtances to ſhew the great neglect of preaching now amongſt us, may be reduced under two heads. Firſt, Men's abſence from the ſervice of the church; and ſecondly, their miſbehaviour when there.

There is no excuſe ſo trivial, that will not paſs upon ſome men's conſciences, to excuſe their attendance upon the public worſhip of God. Some chooſe to be always indiſpoſed on the Lord's day, and think nothing ſo unwholeſome as a church: Others have their affairs ſo oddly contrived, as to be always unluckily prevented by buſineſs: With ſome it is a mark of wit and deep underſtanding to ſtay at home on Sundays: Others again diſcover a propenſity to lazineſs, which they ſuffer to ſeize them particularly on that day, and even to confine them to their beds: Others abſent themſelves out of mere contempt of religion: And, laſtly, there are not a few who look upon

CHAP. XXI.

Paul will not by any means be diſſuaded from going to Jeruſalem. Philip's daughters, propheteſſes. Paul cometh to Jeruſalem; where he is apprehended, and in great danger, but is reſcued by the chief captain, and permitted to ſpeak to the people.

upon it as a day of reſt, and therefore claim the privilege of their caſtle, to keep the ſabbath by eating, drinking, and ſleeping, after the toil and labour of the week. In all which caſes, the worſt circumſtance is, that theſe perſons are ſuch, whoſe companies are moſt required, and who ſtand moſt in need of a phyſician.

Again, men's great neglect and contempt of preaching appear by their miſbehaviour when at church. If the audience were to be ranked under ſeveral heads, according to their behaviour when the word is delivered, how ſmall a number would appear of thoſe who receive it as they ought? how much of the ſeed ſown would be found to fall by the way ſide, upon ſtony ground, or among thorns? and how little good ground would there be to take it?—A preacher cannot look round from the pulpit without obſerving, that ſome are in a perpetual whiſper, and by their air and geſture giving occaſion to ſuſpect, that they are in thoſe very minutes defaming their neighbours: others, perhaps to gratify the moſt unwarrantable deſires, have their eyes and imagination conſtantly engaged in ſuch a circle of objects, that they never once attend to the buſineſs of the place; ſome have their minds wandering among idle, worldly, or vicious thoughts; ſome lie at catch to ridicule whatever they hear, and with much wit and humour, provide a ſtock of laughter, by furniſhing themſelves from the pulpit.

But of all miſbehaviour, none is comparable to that of thoſe who come to the houſe of God to ſleep. Were we to judge by appearances, opium is not ſo ſtupefying to many perſons as an afternoon ſermon: and perpetual cuſtom hath ſo brought it about to ſuch careleſs hearers, that the words of whatever preacher become only a ſort of uniform ſound at a diſtance, than which nothing is more effectual to lull the ſenſes. What would ſuch men,—ſo indolent and liſtleſs in the courts of the Lord's houſe,—what would they ſay to thoſe, who ſhould ſhew the like indolence and liſtleſſneſs in the preſence and court of their temporal king; nay, or in their own company and converſation?

II. But there are a ſort of people who have various quarrels againſt preaching: We will juſt reckon up ſome of the more uſual of theſe, and ſhew the unreaſonableneſs of them.

Such unwarrantable demeanor, as that above deſcribed, among Chriſtians,—in the houſe of God,—in a ſolemn aſſembly, while their faith and duty are explained, have put thoſe who are guilty upon inventing certain excuſes to extenuate their fault. This they do by turning the blame either upon the particular preacher, or upon preaching in general.—Either the preacher's manner, his delivery, his voice is diſagreeable, his ſtile and expreſſion is flat and low, or improper and abſurd; the matter is heavy, or inſipid, or ridiculous; or clad in words above uſual underſtandings, &c. &c. Or elſe the objection is againſt preaching in general. It is a perfect rote of talk; they know already whatever can be ſaid; they have heard the ſame an hundred times over. They quarrel that preachers do not relieve an old beaten ſubject with wit and invention, and that now the art of moving men's paſſion, ſo common among the ancient orators of Greece and Rome, is utterly loſt. Theſe, and the like objections, are frequently in the mouths of men who deſpiſe the fooliſhneſs of preaching: But let us examine the reaſonableneſs of them.

The doctrine delivered by all preachers of the Goſpel is the ſame: So we preach, and ſo ye believe. (1 Cor. xv. 11.) But the manner of delivering is ſuited to the ſkill and abilities of each, which differ in preachers, juſt as in the reſt of mankind. However, in perſonal diſlikes of a particular preacher, are theſe men ſure they are always in the right?—Do they conſider how mixed a thing is every audience, whoſe taſte and judgement differ, perhaps, every day, not only from each other, but from themſelves?—And how to calculate a diſcourſe that ſhall exactly ſuit them all, is beyond the reach of human reaſon, knowledge, or invention. Wit and eloquence are ſhining qualities, which God hath imparted, in great degrees, to very few; nor are they any more to be expected, in the generality of any rank among men, than riches and honour.

But farther; If preaching in general be indeed all old and beaten, and they are already ſo well acquainted with it, more ſhame and guilt to them who ſo little edify by it. And theſe men,—whoſe ears are ſo delicate as not to endure a plain diſcourſe of religion; who expect a conſtant ſupply of wit and eloquence on a ſubject handled ſo many thouſand times,—what will they ſay, when we turn the objection upon themſelves; who, with all the lewd and profane liberty of diſcourſe they take, upon ſo many thouſand ſubjects, are ſo dull, as to furniſh nothing but tedious repetitions, and little nauſeous common-places, ſo vulgar, and ſo obvious, as upon any other occaſion but that of advancing vice, would be hooted at and exploded?

Nor, laſtly, are preachers juſtly blamed for neglecting human oratory, merely to move the paſſions; which is not the buſineſs of a Chriſtian orator, whoſe office is only to work upon faith and reaſon. All other eloquence hath been a perfect cheat, to ſtir up men's paſſions againſt truth and juſtice, for the ſervice of a faction; to put falſe colours upon things, and by an amuſement of agreeable words, to make the worſe reaſon appear to be the better. This is certainly not to be allowed in Chriſtian eloquence, and therefore St. Paul took quite the other courſe; he came not with excellency of words, or inticing ſpeech of men's wiſdom; but in plain evidence of the ſpirit and power: And perhaps it was for this reaſon that the young man Eutychus, uſed to the Grecian eloquence, grew tired, and ſo fell faſt aſleep. ver. 9.

III. It ſeems no difficult matter, 3dly, to ſet forth the great evil of this neglect and ſcorn of preaching, and to diſcover the real cauſes from whence it proceeds. It is obvious to believe that this neglect hath very much occaſioned the great decay of religion among us: To this may be imputed no ſmall part of that contempt which ſome men beſtow on the clergy; for whoever talketh without being regarded, is ſure to be deſpiſed. To this we owe, in a great meaſure, the ſpreading of atheiſm and infidelity among us;—ſince religion, like all other things, is ſooneſt put out of countenance by being ridiculed; and thus are the laſt efforts for reforming mankind rendered wholly uſeleſs. To this neglect of preaching we may alſo impute that groſs ignorance among us in the very principles of religion, which it is amazing to find in perſons, who very much value their own knowledge and underſtanding in other things: and therefore it is that Chriſt himſelf ſo frequently rouſeth up the attention both of the multitude, and of his diſciples, with this expreſſion, He that hath ears to hear, let him hear.

But, among all the neglects of preaching, none is ſo fatal as that of ſleeping in the houſe of God. A ſcorner may liſten to truth and reaſon, and in time grow ſerious; an unbeliever may feel the pangs of a guilty conſcience: The wanderer, whoſe eyes or thoughts are among other objects, may by a lucky word be called back to attention, and to God; but the ſleeper ſhuts up all avenues to his ſoul, and the miniſters of Chriſt may preach with as good ſucceſs to the grave that is under his feet.

The great evil of this neglect will further appear, from conſidering the real cauſes whence it proceeds. Whereof the firſt ſeems to be, an uneaſy and evil conſcience. Many men come to church to ſave or gain a reputation, or becauſe they will not be ſingular, but comply with an eſtabliſhed cuſtom; yet all the while they are loaded with the guilt of old rooted ſins. Theſe men can expect to hear of nothing but terrors and threatenings, their ſins laid open in true colours, and eternal miſery their reward. No wonder, therefore, they ſtop their ears, and divert their thoughts, and ſeek any amuſements, rather than ſtir the hell within them!

Another cauſe of this neglect is, a heart ſet upon worldly things. Men, whoſe minds are much enſlaved to earthly affairs all the week, cannot diſengage or looſen the chain of their thoughts ſo ſuddenly, as to apply to a diſcourſe that is wholly foreign to what they have moſt at heart. To inſtance were endleſs in this particular; every man may apply it for, and to himſelf.

A third cauſe ariſeth from the practice of men, who ſet up to decry and diſparage religion. Theſe, being zealous to promote infidelity and vice, learn a rote of buffoonery that ſerves all occaſions, and refutes the ſtrongeſt arguments for piety and good manners. Theſe have a ſet of ridicule calculated for all ſermons, and all preachers, and can be extremely witty, as often as they pleaſe, upon the ſame fund.

IV. The remedies againſt this great evil, among others, ſeem to be the following. Firſt, rightly to conſider the end of preaching: There are many who place abundance of merit in going to church, although it be with no other proſpect than that of being well entertained; wherein if they happen to fail, they return utterly diſappointed. Our buſineſs, alas! is quite another thing,—either to learn, or at leaſt be reminded of our duty; to apply the doctrines delivered, to compare the rules we hear with our lives and actions, and ſo find wherein they have tranſgreſſed. Theſe are the diſpoſitions men ſhould bring into the houſe of God; and then they will be little concerned about the preachers wit or eloquence, nor be curious to enquire out his faults or infirmities, but conſider how to correct their own.

Another remedy againſt the contempt of preaching is, that men would conſider whether it be not reaſonable to give more allowances for the different abilities of preachers than they uſually do. In moſt other diſcourſes, men are ſatisfied with ſober ſenſe and plain reaſon; then why they ſhould be ſo over-nice and ſcrutinous for ſenſe, and refinement, and novelty, where it is neither neceſſary nor convenient, ſeems hard to imagine.

The ſcorners of preaching would do well to recollect, that this talent of ridicule which they value ſo much, is a perfection very eaſily acquired, and applied to all things whatever; neither is it any thing the worſe becauſe it is capable of being perverted to burleſque, ſince we know that the moſt celebrated pieces have been thus treated with the greateſt ſucceſs. It is in any man's power to ſuppoſe a fool's cap on the wiſeſt head, and then laugh at his own ſuppoſition. There are not perhaps many things cheaper than ſuppoſing and laughing; and if the uniting theſe two talents can bring a thing into contempt, it is really hard to ſay where it may end.

Theſe conſiderations may poſſibly have ſome effect, while men are awake; but what arguments ſhall we uſe to the ſleeper? What methods to hold open his eyes?—Will he be moved by conſiderations of common civility?—We know it is reckoned a point of very bad manners to ſleep in private company, when perhaps the tedious impertinence of many talkers would render it at leaſt as excuſable as at the moſt indifferent ſermon. Do ſuch think it a ſmall thing to watch four hours at a play, where all virtue and religion are openly reviled, and can they not watch one half hour to hear them defended? Is this

AND it came to paſs, that after we were gotten from them, and had launched, we came with a ſtraight courſe unto Coos, and the day following unto Rhodes, and from thence unto Patara:

2 And finding a ſhip ſailing over unto Phenicia, we went aboard, and ſet forth.

3 Now, when we had diſcovered Cyprus, we left it on the left hand, and ſailed into Syria, and landed at Tyre: for there the ſhip was to unlade her burden.

4 And finding diſciples, we tarried there ſeven days: who ſaid to Paul, through the Spirit, that he ſhould not go up to Jeruſalem.

5 And when we had accompliſhed thoſe days, we departed, and went our way; and they all brought us on our way, with wives and children, till we were out of the city: and we kneeled down on the ſhore, and prayed.

6 And when we had taken our leave one of another, we took ſhip; and they returned home again.

7 And when we had finiſhed our courſe from Tyre, we came to Ptolemais, and ſaluted the brethren, and abode with them one day.

8 And the next day we that were of Paul's company departed, and came unto Cæſarea; and we entered into the houſe of Philip the evangeliſt, (which was one of the ſeven;) and abode with him.

9 And the ſame man had four daughters, virgins, which did prophecy.

10 And as we tarried there many days, there came down from Judea a certain prophet, named Agabus.

11 And when he was come unto us, he took Paul's girdle, and bound his own hands and feet, and ſaid, Thus ſaith the Holy Ghoſt, So ſhall the Jews at Jeruſalem bind the man that owneth this girdle, and ſhall deliver him into the hands of the Gentiles.

12 And when we heard theſe things, both we and they of that place beſought him not to go up to Jeruſalem.

13 Then Paul anſwered, What mean ye to weep, and to break mine heart? for I am ready not to be bound only, but alſo to die at Jeruſalem, for the name of the Lord Jeſus.

14 And when he would not be perſuaded, we ceaſed, ſaying, The will of the Lord be done.

15 And after thoſe days we took up our carriages, and went up to Jeruſalem.

16 There went with us alſo certain of the diſciples of Cæſarea, and brought with them one Mnaſon of Cyprus, an old diſciple, with whom we ſhould lodge.

17 And when we were come to Jeruſalem, the brethren received us gladly.

18 And the day following Paul went in with us unto James; and all the elders were preſent.

19 And when he had ſaluted them, he declared particularly what things God had wrought among the Gentiles by his miniſtry.

20 And when they heard it, they glorified the Lord, and ſaid unto him, Thou ſeeſt, brother, how many thouſands of Jews there are which believe; and they are all zealous of the law:

Ver. 4. Ch. xx. 23.—V. 5. Ch. xx. 36.—V. 6. John i. 11.—V. 8. Epheſ. iv. 11. 2 Tim. iv. 5. Ch. vi. 5. viii. 26.—V. 9. Ch. ii. 17.—V. 10. Ch. xi. 28.—V. 11. Ver. 33. Ch. xx. 23.—V. 13. Ch. xx. 24.—V. 14. Matth. vi. 10. Luke xi. 2. xxii. 42. V. 18. Ch. xv. 13. Gal. i. 19.—V. 19. Ch. i. 17.—V. 20. Rom. x. 2. Gal. i. 14 dealing like an honeſt and upright judge, to liſten on one ſide of the cauſe, and ſleep on the other? Or is it acting like rational creatures, to be thus indolent and ſlovenly in a buſineſs, wherein the eternal intereſts of our ſouls are treated and concerned? Perſons of this ſort would do well to arouſe their hearts, and conſider, that Eutychus fell down as he was ſleeping, while St. Paul continued his diſcourſe, and was taken up dead, as the iſſue of his indulgence and inattention. God Almighty enable us to watch and be ſober, and give us all grace to hear and receive his holy word, not to the condemnation of our careleſs conduct, but to the eternal ſalvation of our ſouls! He that hath ears to hear, let him hear. See Swift's Works, vol. 13.

Chap. XXI. Ver. 1. Coos] Coos, or Cos, was one of the iſlands of the Cyclades, famous for the worſhip of Eſculapius, and the temple of Juno. There alſo Hippocrates, the prince of phyſicians, and Appelles, the celebrated painter, were born. Rhodes was another iſland, famous for the worſhip of the ſun, and the brazen Coloſſus erected there, which was reckoned one of the ſeven wonders of the world. Patara was the chief city and port of Lycia. See Sandys's Travels, p. 70. Prid. Conn. vol. 2. and Wells's Geogr.

Ver. 3. Tyre] The metropolis of Phœnicia, ver. 2. and the moſt famous mart of the eaſt. See the note on Iſai. xxiii.

Ver. 4. That he ſhould not go up to Jeruſalem] That is, if he tendered his own liberty and ſafety. It is neceſſary to take it with this limitation; for had the Spirit forbidden his journey to Jeruſalem, we may be ſure he would have deſiſted from it. This verſe might be rendered better, And we tarried there ſeven days, meeting with ſome diſciples, who ſaid, &c.

Ver. 7. Ptolemais] Was a celebrated city on the ſea-coaſt, which fell by lot to the tribe of Aſher; its ancient name was Accho. Judges i. 31. It was enlarged and beautified by the firſt of the Egyptian Ptolemies, from whence it took its new Appellation. It was the ſcene of many celebrated actions in the holy war. The Turks, who are now maſters of all this region, call it Acca, or Acra; and notwithſtanding all the advantages of its ſituation on one of the fineſt bays of that coaſt, and in the neighbourhood of mount Carmel, it is now, like many other noble and ancient cities, only a heap of ruins. See Maundrel's Journey, p. 53.

Ver. 8. Philip] One of the ſeven deacons, ch. vi. 5. and who had ſettled at Cæſarea after he had baptized the Eunuch, ch. viii. 40. Concerning Cæſarea, ſee the note on ch. viii. 40.

Ver. 9. Virgins, who did prophecy] The miraculous gifts of the Spirit were ſometimes communicated to women as well as to men, agreeably to the prophecy recorded ch. ii. 17, 18.

Ver. 11. He took Paul's girdle] This was in the manner of the ancient prophets, who frequently attended their predictions with ſignificant and prophetic actions. See Jer. xiv. 1.

Ver. 15. We took up our carriages] We packed up our things. MS. Making up our baggage, we went, &c. Doddridge.

Ver. 16. Brought with them one Mnaſon, &c.] Brought us to one Mnaſon, &c. Wat. Mnaſon was a native of Cyprus, but an inhabitant of Jeruſalem, who probably had been converted either by Chriſt or the Apoſtles, at the firſt opening of the Goſpel. With St. Paul's arrival in Jeruſalem at this time ended his third apoſtolical journey. See Sir Norton Knatchbul, and Benſon.

Ver. 18. James] The apoſtle, commonly called James the Leſs, and the brother of our Lord.

Ver. 20. How many thouſands] The original is μυριάδες, myriads, which may only denote in general a great number; and if we conſider what a vaſt confluence there muſt have been at Jeruſalem on occaſion of this great feſtival, we ſhall not think the expreſſion too ſtrong. See ver. 27.

21 And they are informed of thee, that thou teacheſt all the Jews which are among the Gentiles to forſake Moſes, ſaying, that they ought not to circumciſe their children, neither to walk after the cuſtoms.

22 What is it therefore? the multitude muſt needs come together: for they will hear that thou art come.

23 Do therefore this that we ſay to thee: we have four men which have a vow on them;

24 Them take, and purify thyſelf with them, and be at charges with them, that they may ſhave their heads, and all may know that thoſe things whereof they were informed concerning thee, are nothing, but that thou thyſelf alſo walkeſt orderly, and keepeſt the law.

25 As touching the Gentiles which believe, we have written and concluded, that they obſerve no ſuch thing, ſave only that they keep themſelves from things offered to idols, and from blood, and from things ſtrangled, and from fornication.

26 Then Paul took the men, and the next day purifying himſelf with them, entered into the temple, to ſignify the accompliſhment of the days of purification, until that an offering ſhould be offered for every one of them.

27 And when the ſeven days were almoſt ended, the Jews which were of Aſia, when they ſaw him in the temple, ſtirred up all the people, and laid hands on him, 28 Crying out, Men of Iſrael, help! This is the man that teacheth all men every where againſt the people, and the law, and this place: and further, hath brought Greeks alſo into the temple, and hath polluted this holy place.

29 (For they had ſeen before with him in the city, Trophimus, an Epheſian, whom they ſuppoſed that Paul had brought into the temple.)

30 And all the city was moved, and the people ran together: and they took Paul, and drew him out of the temple: and forthwith the doors were ſhut.

31 And as they went about to kill him, tidings came unto the chief captain of the band, that all Jeruſalem was in an uproar.

32 Who immediately took ſoldiers, and centurions, and ran down unto them: and when they ſaw the chief captain and the ſoldiers, they left off beating of Paul.

33 Then the chief captain came near and took him, and commanded him to be bound with two chains; and demanded who he was, and what he had done.

Ver. 24. Numb. vi. 2, 13, 18. Ch. xviii. 18.—V. 25. Ch. xv. 20, 29.—V. 26. Ch. xxiv. 18. Numb. vi. 13.—V. 27. Ch. xxiv. 18. Ch. xxvi. 21.—V. 28. Ch. xxiv. 6.—V. 29. Ch. xx. 4.—V. 30. Ch. xxvi. 21.—V. 33. Ver. 11.

Ver. 23, 24. Which have a vow] Of Nazariteſhip. See on ch. xviii. 18. Joſephus not only tells us in general, that it was cuſtomary with perſons in any ſickneſs or diſtreſs to make vows, and to ſpend at leaſt thirty days in extraordinary devotions; but alſo ſays, that when Agrippa came to Jeruſalem, he offered ſacrifices of thankſgiving, and ordered a good number of Nazarites to be ſhaved; a phraſe exactly anſwering to this before us: From whence Dr. Lardner very naturally argues, that to be at charges with Nazarites, was both a common and very popular thing among the Jews. Maimonides expreſly aſſerts, that a perſon who was not himſelf a Nazarite might bind himſelf by a vow to take part with one in his ſacrifices. The charges of theſe four Nazarites would be the price of eight lambs and four rams, beſides oil, flour, &c. Numb. vi. 14, 15. The circumſtance of ſhaving here ſhews that the vow was accompliſhed; for it was begun with letting the hair grow, and put an end to by ſhaving it off. See ver. 26. It is evident from the laſt clauſe of ver. 24. that whatever might have paſſed between Paul and James on the ſubject in private, (comp. Gal. ii. 2.) James and the brethren thought it moſt regular and convenient that the Jewiſh ritual ſhould ſtill be obſerved by thoſe of the circumciſion who believed in Chriſt: and conſidering what tribulation the church of Jeruſalem muſt otherwiſe have been expoſed to by the ſanhedrim, who no doubt would have proſecuted them to the utmoſt as apoſtates; and alſo how ſoon Providence intended to render the practice of it impoſſible, and to break the whole power of the Jews by the deſtruction of the temple, city, and nation; it was certainly the moſt orderly and prudent conduct to conform to it, though it were looked upon by thoſe who underſtood the matter fully, (which it was not neceſſary that all ſhould) as antiquated, and ready to vaniſh away. Heb. viii. 13. See Joſeph. Antiq. b. xix. ch. 9. Witſius, Meletem. ch. 6. ſect. 3. Doddridge and Locke. Inſtead of be at charges with them, Dr. Waterland reads for them.

Ver. 26 To ſignify the accompliſhment, &c.] Dr. Heylin renders this and declared how many days the purification was to laſt, and when the offering was to be made for each of them. This ſeems to be the true meaning of the paſſage: accordingly Dr. Benſon's account of it is this: "The next day, taking the four men, St. Paul began to purify himſelf along with them; entering into the temple, and pubickly declaring, that he would obſerve the ſeparation of a Nazarite, and continue it for ſeven days: at the end of which days of purification he would bring an offering for himſelf, and the other four who joined with him, according to what was appointed in the law of Moſes. See on Numb. vi. 4. To what has been ſaid in the preceding note, in order to vindicate the Apoſtle's character in this tranſaction, we may obſerve, that he had not taught all the Jewiſh Chriſtians in Gentile countries to forſake the law of Moſes; nay, he does not appear to have taught it as yet to any of them directly and immediately: that he took upon him the vow of a Nazarite, becauſe it was an indifferent thing, or lawful for him to comply with the deep-rooted prejudices of the Jewiſh Chriſtians: that if he had not complied at this time, and in the preſent circumſtances, the Chriſtianity of the Jewiſh converts would have been in danger, or at leaſt their charity for and union with the Gentile churches which he had planted; and that if he had gone about to have explained himſelf immediately and at large, the conſequence would probably have been as bad. See Witſius's Meletem. c. x. ſect. 4—6.

Ver. 27. The Jews which were of Aſia] St. Paul had lately ſpent three years in preaching there, and notwithſtanding the ſucceſs his labours were attended with, had met with great oppoſition from theſe people; ſo that it is no wonder they ſhould be the leaders in ſuch an aſſault upon him. See ch. xix. 9. xx. 3. 31. 1 Cor. xvi. 9.

Ver. 28. Teacheth—againſt—the law and this place] Every thing contrary to the law would be juſtly interpreted as contrary to the temple, which was ſo evidently ſupported by a regard to it: But perhaps St. Paul might have declared that the deſtruction of the temple was approaching; which declaration we know was charged on Stephen as a great crime: ch. vi. 14. They urged further againſt St. Paul, that he brought Greeks, or Gentiles into the temple. Now it is univerſally acknowledged, that any ſtranger might worſhip in that which was called "the court of the Gentiles;" but theſe zealots, without any proof but an uncertain conjecture and rumour, imagined Paul had brought ſome uncircumciſed Gentiles into the inner part of the court, which was appropriated to the people of Iſrael, and notified as ſuch by Greek and Latin inſcriptions on ſeveral of the pillars which ſtood in the wall that ſeparated it, viz. "No foreigner muſt enter here." If any perſon violated this law, he was liable to be put to death. But it is to be obſerved by the way, that a proſelyte, who by circumciſion had declared his ſubmiſſion to, and acceptance of the whole Jewiſh religion, was no longer looked upon as a foreigner, but as one naturalized,—and ſo a fellow-citizen; to which there may be an alluſion, Eph. ii. 19. See Joſeph. Jewiſh War, b. v. ch. 5. Philo de Leg. Att. Benſon, and Grotius.

Ver. 30—33. And all the city was moved] The accuſation brought againſt St. Paul, though falſe, put all the city in a commotion, and brought a vaſt concourſe of people together, who ſeized upon him, in order to kill him; and therefore they drew him out of the court of the Iſraelites, leſt it ſhould have been defiled with his blood; and hurried him into the court of the Gentiles, which was not accounted ſo holy. The gates of the temple being ſhut, they imme-

34 And ſome cried one thing, ſome another, among the multitude: and when he could not know the certainty for the tumult, he commanded him to be carried into the caſtle.

35 And when he came upon the ſtairs, ſo it was, that he was borne of the ſoldiers, for the violence of the people.

36 For the multitude of the people followed after, crying, Away with him!

37 And as Paul was to be led into the caſtle, he ſaid unto the chief captain, May I ſpeak unto thee? Who ſaid, Canſt thou ſpeak Greek?

38 Art not thou that Egyptian, which before theſe days madeſt an uproar and leddeſt out into the wilderneſs four thouſand men that were murderers?

39 But Paul ſaid, I am a man which am a Jew of Tarſus, a city of Cilicia, a citizen of no mean city: and, I beſeech thee, ſuffer me to ſpeak unto the people.

40 And when he had given him licence, Paul ſtood on the ſtairs, and beckoned with the hand unto the people. And when there was made a great ſilence, he ſpake unto them in the Hebrew tongue, ſaying,

CHAP. XXII.

Paul declareth at large how he was converted to the faith, and called to his apoſtleſhip. At the very mentioning of the Gentiles, the people exclaim on him. He would have been ſcourged; but claiming the privilege of a Roman, he eſcapeth.

MEN, brethren, and fathers, hear ye my defence which I make now unto you.

2 (And when they heard that he ſpake in the Hebrew tongue to them, they kept the more ſilence: and he ſaith,)

3 I am verily a man which am a Jew, born in Tarſus, a city of Cilicia, yet brought up in this city, at the feet of Gamaliel, and

Ver. 36. Luke xxiii. 18. John xix. 15. Ch. xxii. 22.—V. 38. This Egyptian roſe A. D. 55. Ch. v. 36.—V. 39. Ch. ix. 11. xxii. 3.—V. 40. Ch. xii. 17.——V. 1. Ch. vii. 2.—V. 3. Ch. xxi. 39. 2 Cor. xi. 22. Deut. xxxiii. 3. 2 Kings iv. 38. Luke x. 39. Ch. v. 34.

diately fell upon him, with what the Jews uſed to call the rebels beating; which was the peoples puniſhing ſuch as they apprehended had rebelled againſt their law, and that without any judicial proceſs. Their manner of beating them was with ſtaves, ſtones, whips, or any thing they could firſt lay their hands on; and they frequently inflicted this puniſhment ſo unmercifully, that ſeveral perſons have died under it. John Hyrcanus, high-prieſt and prince of the Jews, built the caſtle which is called Baris, that is, a palace or royal caſtle, on a ſteep rock, fifty cubits without the outer ſquare, on the north-weſt corner of the temple, but upon the ſame mountain, and adjoining to the ſaid ſquare. This was called The palace of the Aſmonæans in Jeruſalem, as long as they reigned there. When Herod the Great came to be king of Judæa, he rebuilt the caſtle, and made it a very ſtrong fortreſs, lining or caſing over the high rock on which it ſtood with poliſhed white marble, ſo as to make it inacceſſible from the ſubjacent valley, and building the caſtle itſelf ſo high, as to command the temple, and ſee what was done in the two outer courts of that ſacred place, that he might ſend down his ſoldiers in caſe of any tumult; and when he had made theſe alterations, he called it Antonia, in honour of his great friend Mark Antony. When the Romans afterwards reduced Judea from a kingdom to a province, they alſo kept a ſtong garriſon in the ſame place, particularly at the ſolemn feſtivals, when the Jews came in ſuch prodigious multitudes to the temple. A great tumult being now made about the Apoſtle, probably ſome of the centinels who kept watch on the ſouth-eaſt turret of the caſtle Antonia ſpied it, and gave notice to the Roman tribune, [Claudius Lyſias, (ch. xxiii. 26.) who was captain of the fortreſs, and had one thouſand ſoldiers under him,] that all Jeruſalem was in an uproar. Immediately upon this notice, the tribune took centurions, with the hundred ſoldiers whom they each of them commanded, and ran down the ſtairs which led from the ſouth-eaſt turret of the caſtle into the outer cloiſters of the temple, and from thence into the court of the Gentiles, where the tumult was. Upon ſeeing the tribune, attended with ſuch a number of armed men, they left off beating the innocent Apoſtle; when the tribune himſelf took him into his cuſtody, and fulfilled the prophecy of Agabus, ver. 10, 11. for he ordered him to be bound with two chains, concluding that he was ſome notorious malefactor. See Lightfoot, Lardner, and Benſon.

Ver. 37, 38. Who ſaid, Canſt thou ſpeak Greek?] St. Paul's addreſſing himſelf in Greek to the chief captain ſurprized him a good deal, as he took him for an Egyptian impoſtor; upon which he ſaid to him with ſome aſtoniſhment, "What then! can you ſpeak Greek? Are not you that Egyptian, who ſome time ago made a diſturbance in this country, and, under the pretence of being a mighty prophet, led out into the wilderneſs four thouſand of the Sicarii? (σικαρίων) a kind of aſſaſſins, ſo called from the daggers or ſmall crooked ſwords which they hid under their coats: for the Latin word ſica, ſignifies a ſhort ſword, or ſmall dagger. Theſe Sicarii, or aſſaſſins, came to Jeruſalem, under a pretence of worſhipping God at the temple; but they were ſo audacious, as to murder men in the day-time, in the middle of the city; and at the feſtivals more eſpecially, when multitudes came thither from all parts, they would mix with the crowd, and with their private daggers ſtab their enemies: and then, to conceal their wickedneſs, they would ſeem as full of indignation againſt the authors of ſuch crimes as any of the people; by which means they continued for ſome time unſuſpected: but being employed by the governor Felix to murder Jonathan the high-prieſt, and conſequently eſcaping with impunity for ſo notorious a crime, they became more bold and inſolent, and ſlew great numbers at every feſtival; ſome out of private revenge, but others as hired to it. And theſe ſlaughters they committed not only in the city, but alſo in the temple itſelf, making no ſcruple of violating that holy place. Four thouſand of theſe men, the Egyptian impoſtor here ſpoken of led out from Jeruſalem, and going into the country, and having raiſed his reputation among the people, he gathered together a great multitude, which amounted at laſt to thirty thouſand men. It is probable that before he left the city he had ſo concerted matters with ſome friends whom he left behind him, as to entertain hopes, that, upon his return, his deſign would be favoured by great numbers of the Jews in Jeruſalem, and that he ſhould have no oppoſition from any but the Romans. Having aſſembled a ſufficient number, he brought them round out of the wilderneſs up to the mount of Olives, from whence he intended to force his way into Jeruſalem; for, when he came thither, he promiſed his deluded followers that they ſhould ſee the walls of the city fall down at his command. However, he hoped, by ſurprize, to have attacked and beaten the Roman guards, and then deſigned to bring the people into ſubjection, and govern them by the help of his armed aſſociates. Upon his arrival at the mount of Olives, Felix came ſuddenly out upon him, with a large body of the Roman ſoldiers, both horſe and foot, and the citizens in general prepared alſo to defend themſelves againſt him. This ſpeedy and general oppoſition ſo ſurprized him, that he dared not venture an engagement; but preſently fled away, with a body of his moſt truſty friends, as is uſual in ſuch caſes. The Roman ſoldiers were ordered to engage with thoſe in particular, neglecting the reſt, who were only a confuſed multitude, and who immediately made off as they could by different ways. All accounts agree that the Egyptian himſelf eſcaped, though his attempt came to nothing. Upon a review of this account, which is taken from Joſephus, &c. the reader will remark the great accuracy with which St. Luke has repreſented Lyſias ſpeaking of this matter. The men were led into the wilderneſs; the impoſtor's name was unknown, he being only called that Egyptian: He had eſcaped alive, and moſt of his followers had deſerted him; ſo that the tumult of the Jews about him would have been no unnatural circumſtance, ſince he had long ceaſed to be their idol. See Joſeph. Jewiſh War, b. ii. c. 13. Lardner's Credib. b. ii. c. 8. and Benſon, vol. ii. p. 156.

Ver. 39. A Jew of Tarſus] The inhabitants of Tarſus, which ſeems to have taken its name from Tarſhiſh, the ſon of Javan, Gen. x. 4. boaſted extremely of their antiquity; and Strabo tells us, that they were ſo conſiderable on account of learning, as well as commerce, wealth, and grandeur, that they might diſpute the prize with Athens and Alexandria. Tarſus was the metropolis of Cilicia, and a free city. See ch. xxii. 25. St. Paul, by ſaying he was a Jew of Tarſus, proved that he had a right to be in the temple, and a claim to be heard in his own vindication. See Calmet, Doddridge, and Wells.

Ver. 40. In the Hebrew tongue] Literally, In the Hebrew dialect; which was the Syro-Chaldaic, and the language, or vulgar tongue then in uſe among the Jews.

Chap. XXII. Ver. 1. Men, brethren, and fathers] Brethren and fathers. See Gen. xiii. 8. Wat.

Ver. 3. Brought up at the feet of Gamaliel] Strabo tells us, that it was cuſtomary among the inhabitants of Tarſus, for the young people, and taught according to the perfect manner of the law of the fathers, and was zealous towards God, as ye all are this day.

4 And I perſecuted this way unto the death, binding and delivering into priſons both men and women.

5 As alſo the high-prieſt doth bear me witneſs, and all the eſtate of the elders: from whom alſo I received letters unto the brethren, and went to Damaſcus, to bring them which were there bound unto Jeruſalem, for to be puniſhed.

6 And it came to paſs, that as I made my journey, and was come nigh unto Damaſcus about noon, ſuddenly there ſhone from heaven a great light round about me.

7 And I fell unto the ground, and heard a voice ſaying unto me, Saul, Saul, why perſecuteſt thou me?

8 And I anſwered, Who art thou, Lord? And he ſaid unto me, I am Jeſus of Nazareth, whom thou perſecuteſt.

9 And they that were with me, ſaw indeed the light, and were afraid; but they heard not the voice of him that ſpake to me.

10 And I ſaid, What ſhall I do, Lord? And the Lord ſaid unto me, Ariſe, and go into Damaſcus; and there it ſhall be told thee of all things which are appointed for thee to do.

11 And when I could not ſee for the glory of that light, being led by the hand of them that were with me, I came into Damaſcus.

12 And one Ananias, a devout man according to the law, having a good report of all the Jews which dwelt there, 13 Came unto me, and ſtood, and ſaid unto me, Brother Saul, receive thy ſight. And the ſame hour I looked up upon him.

14 And he ſaid, The God of our fathers hath choſen thee, that thou ſhouldeſt know his will, and ſee that Juſt One, and ſhouldeſt hear the voice of his mouth.

15 For thou ſhalt be his witneſs unto all men, of what thou haſt ſeen and heard.

16 And now why tarrieſt thou? ariſe, and be baptized, and waſh away thy ſins, calling on the name of the Lord.

17 And it came to paſs, that when I was come again to Jeruſalem, even while I prayed in the temple, I was in a trance;

18 And ſaw him ſaying unto me, Make haſte, and get thee quickly out of Jeruſalem: for they will not receive thy teſtimony concerning me.

19 And I ſaid, Lord, they know that I impriſoned, and beat in every ſynagogue them that believed on thee:

20 And when the blood of thy martyr Stephen was ſhed, I alſo was ſtanding by, and conſenting unto his death, and kept the raiment of them that ſlew him.

21 And he ſaid unto me, Depart: for I will ſend thee far hence unto the Gentiles.

22 And they gave him audience unto this word, and then lifted up their voices, and

Ver. 3. Ch. xxi. 20. Gal. i. 14. Rom. x. 2.—V. 4. Ch. viii. 3. Ch. ix. 2.—V. 5. Luke xxii. 66.—V. 6. Ch. ix. 3. xxvi. 12. V. 9. Ch. ix. 7. Dan. x. 7.—V. 12. Ch. ix. 17. Ch. x. 22. 1 Tim. iii. 7.—V. 14. Ch. xxvi. 16. 1 Cor. ix. 1. xv. 8. Ch. iii. 14. vii. 52.—V. 15. Ch. iv. 20. xxvi. 16.—V. 16. Ch. ii. 38. Hebr. x. 22. Ch. ix. 14.—V. 17. Ch. ix. 28.—V. 18. Matth. x. 14. V. 19. Ver. 4. Matth. x. 17.—V. 20. Ch. vii. 58. viii. 1. Luke xi. 48. Ch. viii. 1. Rom. i. 32.—V. 21. Ch. ix. 15. xiii. 2. Gal. i. 15. ii. 8. Epheſ. iii. 8. 1 Tim. ii. 7. 2 Tim. i. 11.

people, when they had gone through a courſe of education at home, to travel abroad for further improvement. Concerning Gamaliel, ſee on ch. v. 34. The phraſe of being brought up at his feet, plainly alludes to the poſture in which the ſcholars were uſually placed, who ſat on the ground, or on low ſeats, while their teacher was raiſed on a kind of throne. Hence, in one of the Rabbies, "to duſt themſelves with the duſt of their feet." is a phraſe for being a diſciple. See on Luke ii. 46. x. 39. Inſtead of taught according to the perfect manner, &c. Dr. Waterland and the MS. read the ſtricteſt manner; and Dr. Doddridge, accurately inſtructed in the law of our fathers. Vitringa, and ſome other learned critics, would connect, and as it ſeems very properly πεπαιδευμένος, taught, or inſtructed, with the foregoing clauſe, at the feet of Gamaliel, which makes the enumeration more particular;—By profeſſion a Jew,—born at Tarſus,—bred in this city,—inſtructed in the law at the feet of Gamaliel.

Ver. 4. And I perſecuted this way unto the death] We know that he was concerned in the death of Stephen: ch. viii. 1. and if he was not ſo in that of many more, it was not for want of zeal and rage, but merely of power. However, there is no reaſon to think, that the ſacred hiſtory contains a full account of all the outrages committed againſt Chriſtians during the period to which it extends.

Ver. 5. The high-prieſt doth bear me witneſs] That is, "I can appeal to him for the proof of this. It will not follow from hence, that he who was now high-prieſt, alſo bore that office when Paul perſecuted the Chriſtians; he might then perhaps be only an inferior member of the ſanhedrim: On which ſuppoſition this appeal would be proper, and conſequently no light can be gained from hence to fix the date of St. Paul's converſion. Inſtead of all the eſtate of the elders, ſome read the whole court of the elders; the Greek is πρεσβυτέριον, the preſbytery, or ſanhedrim.

Ver. 9. But they heard not the voice] See on chap. ix. 7. Elſner has ſhewn, by a curious detail on this place, that the heathens thought divine voices, as well as viſions, might affect one perſon in a company, without being perceived by the reſt. See his Obſervations, vol. i. p. 466. and Fleming's Chriſtology, vol. i. p. 103.

Ver. 14. And ſee that Juſt-one] Some commentators refer this to a future viſion of Chriſt, and a future commiſſion to be received from him; but it plainly appears from St. Paul's own narration, that he had already ſeen him, and heard him ſpeak. It ſeems therefore moſt natural to refer it to the paſt, rather than to a future event; though it may poſſibly include both. See Lord Barrington, Benſon, and Doddridge.

Ver. 16. Be baptized] Baptiſm, in the adult, except in the very peculiar inſtance of our Lord, was a token of confeſſion, and humiliation for ſin; and of a deſire to be cleanſed from it, as the body was by water cleanſed from its pollution; and being adminiſtered to ſuch profeſſed penitents by divine appointment, as a token of favourable regard to them, it was a ſeal of pardon. On theſe accounts it is called the baptiſm of repentance, Matth. iii. 11. Mark i. 4. Luke iii. 3. Nor did God ordinarily give any particular perſon any public and viſible token of pardon, till he ſubmitted to baptiſm. This may explain in what ſenſe baptiſm might be underſtood to waſh away ſins, and to ſave. Comp. 1 Pet. iii. 21. and the note on ch. ii. 38.

Ver. 18. And ſaw him] That is, the Lord Jeſus. Some ſuppoſe, that this memorable event happened in the ſecond journey St. Paul made to Jeruſalem. See ch. xi. 30. But the expreſſion rather ſeems to intimate, that it was on his firſt return to Jeruſalem that he had this viſion in the temple; and what he pleads here, ver. xix. 20. as to the probability of their receiving his teſtimony, ſuits that circumſtance of time much better than the other. His diſpute with ſome Helleniſt Jews, who, towards the cloſe of his firſt viſit to Jeruſalem, attempted to kill him, ch. ix. 29. engaged the brethren alſo to haſten his departure; and our Lord's orders to him at this critical ſeaſon might determine him to yield to their inſtances, which perhaps his deſire and hope of uſefulneſs at Jeruſalem might otherwiſe have oppoſed. But when he had been forced in that manner to flee for his life, while the memory of his zeal againſt Chriſtianity was comparatively freſh in their minds, it does not ſeem natural to ſuppoſe that he would have pleaded the probability of their regarding it, after an interval of ſix years more. See Lord Barrington, Benſon, and Doddridge.

ſaid, Away with ſuch a fellow from the earth: for it is not fit that he ſhould live!

23 And as they cried out, and caſt off their clothes, and threw duſt into the air, 24 The chief captain commanded him to be brought into the caſtle, and bade that he ſhould be examined by ſcourging; that he might know wherefore they cried ſo againſt him.

25 And as they bound him with thongs, Paul ſaid unto the centurion that ſtood by, Is it lawful for you to ſcourge a man that is a Roman, and uncondemned?

26 When the centurion heard that, he went and told the chief captain, ſaying, Take heed what thou doeſt: for this man is a Roman.

27 Then the chief captain came, and ſaid unto him, Tell me, art thou a Roman? He ſaid, Yea.

28 And the chief captain anſwered, With a great ſum obtained I this freedom. And Paul ſaid, But I was free-born.

29 Then ſtraightway they departed from him which ſhould have examined him: and the chief captain alſo was afraid, after he knew that he was a Roman, and becauſe he had bound him.

30 On the morrow, becauſe he would have known the certainty wherefore he was accuſed of the Jews, he looſed him from his bands, and commanded the chief prieſts and all their council to appear, and brought Paul down, and ſet him before them.

Ver. 22. Ch. xxi. 36. Ch. xxv. 24.—V. 25. Ch. xvi. 37.—V. 29. Or, tortured him.

Ver. 24. He ſhould be examined by ſcourging] One of the ways of examining by torture amongſt the Romans, as well as amongſt the Jews, was by binding the perſon to a pillar, and ſeverely ſcourging him; ſo that this infamous practice of extorting a confeſſion has, to the diſgrace of human nature, prevailed amongſt almoſt all nations! See this ſubject well handled in Beccaria's 16th chapter of the "Eſſay on Crimes and Puniſhments."

Ver. 25. Is it lawful, &c?] See the note on ch. xvi. 37.

Ver. 28. But I was free-born] This is thought, by ſome, to have been in conſequence of his being a native of Tarſus; but Dr. Lardner has produced many ſtrong arguments againſt admitting that city to have been a colony, or what the Romans call municipium, i. e. a place where all the natives were free of Rome by birth. It ſeems therefore much more probable, that Paul's father, or ſome other of his anceſtors, might have been rewarded with the freedom of the city for his fidelity and bravery in ſome military ſervice, as an auxiliary to the Romans, as Joſephus ſays ſeveral Jews were. It is alſo moſt certain that the freedom of the city of Rome might be bought, (ver. 28.) and that ſome of Claudius's favourites and creatures at laſt ſunk the price ſcandalouſly low. See Craddock, Tillement, Joſeph. Antiq. l. xiv. c. 10. and Lardner's Credib. b. i. c. 10.

Ver. 29. Who ſhould have examined him] Put him to the queſtion, or torture. See on ver. 24. Doddridge, and Heylin. The latter part of the verſe might be better rendered, the chief captain was afraid,—becauſe he had bound him, knowing that he was a Roman. See Piſcator.

REFLECTIONS ON CHAP. XXI, XXII.

Who can fail to admire the excellent and heroic temper which appeared in the bleſſed Apoſtle, in the journey he took to Jeruſalem! ch. xxi. 1—15. when ſtill the Holy Spirit teſtified in every city that bonds and afflictions awaited him; when his friends, in ſo affectionate a manner, hung round, and endeavoured to divert him from his purpoſe. He was not inſenſible to their tender regards: ver. 13. So far from it, that his heart melted, and was even ready to break under the impreſſion; yet ſtill he continues inflexible. There glows a ſacred paſſion warmer in his ſoul than the love of friends, or liberty, or life. The love of Chriſt conſtrains him, 2 Cor. v. 14. and makes him willing, joyfully willing, not only to be bound, but to die at Jeruſalem for his name, who had indeed died for him there. May this be the temper, theſe the ſentiments of every miniſter, of every Chriſtian, in ſuch a caſe as his; where impriſonment is better than liberty, and death infinitely preferable to the moſt proſperous life, ſecured by deſerting the Redeemer's ſervice, or flying from any poſt which the great Captain of our ſalvation hath aſſigned us.

On the other hand, we may learn from theſe wiſe and pious friends of St. Paul, to acquieſce in the will of God, whenever its determination is apparent; how contrary ſoever it may be to our natural deſire, or even to thoſe views we have formed for the advancement of his cauſe and intereſt in the world; for who can teach him knowledge, or purſue the purpoſes of his glory by wiſer and ſurer methods than thoſe which he hath choſen? In the inſtance before us, the bonds of St. Paul, which theſe good men dreaded as ſo fatal an obſtruction to the Goſpel, tended, as he himſelf ſaw and witneſſed while he was yet under them, to the furtherance of it: and what they apprehended would prevent their ſeeing him any more, occaſioned his returning to Cæſarea, and continuing there for a long time, when, though he was a priſoner, they had free liberty of converſing with him. (See ch. xxiii. 33. xxiv. 23, 27.) And even to this day we ſee the efficacy of his ſufferings, in the ſpirit they have added to thoſe Epiſtles which he wrote while a priſoner of Jeſus Chriſt, and in that weight which ſuch a circumſtance alſo adds to his teſtimony. Let JESUS therefore lead us, and all his ſervants, whitherſoever he pleaſes, and we will bleſs his moſt myſterious conduct, in ſure expectation of that day, when what is now moſt aſtoniſhing and inexplicable in it, ſhall appear beautiful, and ordered for the beſt.

It is pleaſing to obſerve the honour paid to Mnaſon, as an old diſciple: ver. 16. It is truly an honourable title, and wherever it is found, may days ſpeak, and the multitude of years teach wiſdom! Job xxxii. 7. May there be a conſtant readineſs, as in this good old man, to employ all the remaining vigour of nature, in the ſervice of Chriſt, and in offices of cordial love and generous friendſhip to thoſe who are engaged, like the great Apoſtle, in the work of their redeeming Lord!

It is no leſs delightful to ſee how the ſame principles of humble and benevolent piety wrought in the mind of St. Paul on the one hand, and on the other, in thoſe of James, and the brethren of the circumciſion; ver. 19. while the one recounted, and the others rejoiced in, what God had done by his miniſtry among the Gentiles. Thus ſhould miniſters always remember, that whatever good is done by their miniſtry, it is the work of GOD, and that the praiſe of it is to be rendered to him only. Whenever ſuch aſſemble together for religious and friendly conference, may they have the ſame cauſe for mutual thankſgiving, while they hear and tell what efficacy God is giving to the word, as ſpoken by them; that efficacy, which never likely to be greater than when the miniſters of it appear leaſt in their own eyes!

A prudent precaution, conſiſtent with the ſtricteſt integrity, diſcovered itſelf in the advice of St. James, and the Jewiſh Chriſtians, to their beloved brother St. Paul, (ver. 20, &c.) to conform to certain cuſtoms of the Moſaic worſhip, in an affair in which he might ſo innocently comply. Yet what prudence or integrity may not ſometimes be miſtaken, or miſrepreſented? What good may not be evil ſpoken of, and abuſed as a cloak for miſchief, when mens hearts are overflowing with malice, and are ſo wretchedly corrupted, as to take pleaſure in indulging it under the diſguiſe of religion? What numerous falſhoods attended every article of the charge which theſe furious Jews brought againſt St. Paul, ver. 28?—And yet,—ſo ſtrong is bigotted prejudice!—it is believed, on the credit of a noiſy rabble. Who can help adoring that divine and remarkable Providence, whoſe gracious interpoſition prevented this light of Iſrael from ſudden extinction; which ſaved the holy Apoſtle from being torn in pieces by an outrageous mob, fierce and irrational as ſo many wild beaſts, before he could have liberty to ſpeak for himſelf?

Let religion only not be condemned unheard, and then ſurely it cannot be condemned at all. See ver. 31—36. Bleſſed be God he can raiſe up guardians for its ſupport, even from the moſt unexpected quarter, and animate men, like this Roman captain, from conſiderations merely ſecular, to appear moſt ſeaſonably and effectually in the defence of his faithful ſervants. Chriſtians ſhould learn to glorify the wiſe conduct of an over-ruling Providence, in inſtances ſo palpable as theſe,—and hence be ſtimulated in the firm and courageous purſuit of every duty, ſince God can never be at a loſs for expedients to ſecure them, in their honeſt adherence to his ſervice.

The learned education which St. Paul had received at the feet of Gamaliel, (ch. xxii. ver. 3.) was once, no doubt, matter of his boaſting and confidence. Unſanctified learning,—that potent ſnare to many an unſtable mind,—made his bonds ſtrong, and furniſhed him with frequent and ſpecious arguments to oppoſe the Goſpel; Yet, when once divine grace had changed his heart, and turned theſe accompliſhments into their proper channel, they made the conqueſt ſo much the more glorious, and rendered him the fitter inſtrument to ſubſerve the merciful purpoſes of the almighty and all-wiſe God, for the defence and propagation of Chriſtianity. Wherever learning is poſſeſſed, may it always be ſo directed and improved! and wherever it is perverted and abuſed, may Chriſt ſo manifeſt his victorious arm, to caſt down imaginations, and every high thing which exalts itſelf in daring rebellion againſt him!

By whatever methods God hath been pleaſed to bring us home to himſelf, and to introduce into our minds the ſaving light of his Goſpel, we ſhall have long,—nay, everlaſting reaſon, with St. Paul, to recollect it with pleaſure. ver. 6, &c. They who have obtained mercy of the Lord, ſhould make it their care often to bring back to remembrance

CHAP. XXIII.

As Paul pleadeth his cauſe, Ananias commandeth to ſmite him: diſſenſion among his accuſers: God encourageth him. The Jews laying wait for Paul, is declared unto the chief captain: he ſendeth him to Felix the governor.

AND Paul earneſtly beholding the council, ſaid, Men, and brethren, I have lived in all good conſcience before God until this day.

2 And the high-prieſt Ananias commanded them that ſtood by him, to ſmite him on the mouth.

3 Then ſaid Paul unto him, God ſhall ſmite thee, thou whited wall; for ſitteſt thou to judge me after the law, and commandeſt me to be ſmitten, contrary to the law?

4 And they that ſtood by ſaid, Revileſt thou God's high-prieſt?

5 Then ſaid Paul, I wiſt not, brethren, that he was the high-prieſt: For it is written, Thou ſhalt not ſpeak evil of the ruler of thy people.

Ver. 1. Ch. xxiv. 16. 2 Tim. i. 3. Hebr. xiii. 18.—V. 2. 1 Kings xxii. 24. Jer. xx. 2. John xviii. 22.—V. 3. Lev. xix. 35. Deut. xxv. 1, 2.—V. 5. Ch. xxiv. 17. Exod. xxii. 28.

brance the particular circumſtances of it, and be ready, on every proper occaſion, to recount thoſe wonders of power and love, for the encouragement and inſtruction of others. Comp. 1 Tim. i. 16.

How adorable the condeſcenſion of that bleſſed Redeemer, who ſpared this proſtrate enemy, and reduced him by the tender expoſtulations of mercy, rather than the terrors of wrath! ver. 7, &c. It is of the ſame divine mercy that We are not all conſumed, and becauſe his compaſſions fail not. Speak, ever ſpeak thus from heaven, O Lord, to thoſe who ignorantly perſecute thee; and make them humbly willing to receive the law from thy mouth, and to embrace thee as their only Saviour!

We learn from ver. 17, 18. as well as from many other paſſages of ſacred Writ, that our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, though inviſible, is preſent while the proclamation of his Goſpel is made, and ever attentive to the temper with which it is received. Juſtly therefore doth he reſent the injury which is done him, when theſe meſſages of life and peace are neglected: Juſtly doth he often, in the courſe of his Providence, remove thoſe ordinances, which men have ungratefully ſlighted, as did theſe Jews of Jeruſalem; and call away the faithful miniſters, who have all the day long ſtretched out their hands in vain to a diſobedient and gainſaying people. Rom. x. 21.

Bleſſed be God, that when his Goſpel is removed from one place, it is ſent to another; (ver. 21.) nor ſhall it ever be totally rooted out of the world, while ſeed-time and harveſt, ſummer and winter, continue their revolutions. Adored be that grace which ſent Paul and the other Apoſtles to ſpeak unto the Gentiles, that they might be ſaved! The life of our ſouls was in that commiſſion, and all our eternal hopes take their riſe from it.

But what cruel malignity did theſe Jews expreſs, (ver. 22.) whom all the wonders of that aſtoniſhing ſtory could not convince, nor all the eloquence of it perſuade!—On the contrary, for no crime—but that of being made the ambaſſadors of divine mercy, the inſtrument of deliverance to thouſands of periſhing ſinners,—they raiſe a clamour againſt the delegate of heaven, as if he were the moſt impious of blaſphemers, and would have hurried him from the face of the earth, as unfit to live upon it. How much leſs were they fit to continue there? But thus forbidding the Apoſtle to ſpeak unto the Gentiles, (as he himſelf obſerves) they filled up the meaſure of their iniquities; ſo that, after the abuſed mercy of God had waited a little longer, his deſerved wrath came upon them to the uttermoſt. 1 Theſſ. ii. 16.

As unrighteous as it was in the Roman officer, on this popular clamour, to attempt putting this holy Apoſtle to the torture, ſo reaſonable was St. Paul's plea, as a Roman citizen, to decline that ſuffering. ver. 25—29. It is a prudence worthy the imitation of the braveſt of men, not to throw themſelves into unneceſſary difficulties. True courage widely differs from raſh and heedleſs temerity; nor are we under any obligation, as Chriſtians, to give up our civil privileges, which ought to be eſteemed as the gifts of God, to every inſolent and turbulent invader. In a thouſand circumſtances, gratitude to God, and duty to men will oblige us to inſiſt upon them; and a generous concern for thoſe who are to come after us, ſhould engage us to labour and ſtrive that we may tranſmit them down to poſterity improved, rather than impaired.

Chap. XXIII. Men and brethren, I have lived, &c.] My brethren, I have lived, &c. Wat. St. Paul could not intend by this to intimate, that he thought himſelf free from guilt while perſecuting the Chriſtians, ſince he ſo expreſly declares the contrary elſewhere. See 1 Tim. i. 13. 1 Cor. xv. 9. Gal. i. 13. He was only examined with reſpect to his conduct as a Chriſtian; and therefore it would not have been pertinent here to refer to his conduct, while a perſecuting Jew; though it were indeed true, that he did not then act againſt his conſcience, how criminal ſoever he was in ſuffering it to continue miſinformed. The plain ſenſe of the paſſage is, "That his conſcience, when examined as in the ſight of God, with reſpect to what they alledged againſt him, did not charge him with any known and deliberate contradictions to its dictates:" And ſo it was, in effect, a ſolemn and very pertinent appeal to the Searcher of all hearts, that he had not devoted himſelf to the ſervice of the Goſpel, in which he was now engaged, from any mean and diſhonourable principle, but was fully convinced of the truth of it, and therefore prepared to abide all extremities in its defence. Well might there be, in ſuch a caſe, a natural ſally of joy ariſing in an upright heart, from a conſciouſneſs of its own integrity, amidſt ſuch violent calumnies as were now advanced againſt him. See Grotius, Doddridge, Benſon, and Div. Leg. b. v. ſect. 2.

Ver. 2. The high-prieſt Ananias] He was the ſon of Nebedæus, and by his ſtation head of the ſanhedrim. He had before this been ſent in chains to Rome, to give an account to Claudius Cæſar of his behaviour in the quarrel which had happened between the Jews and Samaritans, during the government of Cumanus in Judea; but being acquitted, probably at the interceſſion of Agrippa the younger, he returned to Jeruſalem, and ſtill enjoyed the dignity of the high-prieſthood. Full of prejudice againſt St. Paul and the Goſpel doctrine, he condemned his ſpeech, as too boaſting and arrogant; and ordered ſome of the apparitors who ſtood by the apoſtle, to ſmite him on the mouth, for taking upon him to glory ſo much in himſelf, though he had in reality uſed only a well-grounded and juſt defence. But St. Paul could not wonder at ſuch cruel and unrighteous treatment, when he conſidered that ſo had the falſe prophet Zedekiah dealt with the true prophet Micaiah; ſo had the high-prieſt Paſhur ſmitten the prophet Jeremiah; and what is more, in like manner had the wicked Jews ſtruck our Lord, when he had behaved with the greateſt modeſty and innocence. See Benſon, Biſcoe's Lectures, p. 70. and Grotius.

Ver. 3. God ſhall ſmite thee, thou whited wall, &c.] Alluding to the beautiful outſide of ſome walls, which are full of dirt and rubbiſh within. See on Matth. xxiii. 27. and Luke xi. 44. The account which Joſephus gives of the character and fate of Ananias, abundantly illuſtrates this prophetic ſpeech of St. Paul. He might well be called a whited wall, not only as he committed this indecency, in violation of the law, (Levit. xix. 15.) while gravely ſitting in a ſacred character on the tribunal of juſtice; but alſo, as at the ſame time that he carried it very plauſibly towards the citizens, and ſtood high in their favour, he moſt impiouſly and cruelly defrauded the inferior prieſts of the aſſiſtance which the divine law aſſigned them; ſo that ſome of them even periſhed for want:—And God did remarkably ſmite him: For after his own houſe had been reduced to aſhes, in a tumult begun by his own ſon, he was beſieged and taken in the royal palace; where, having in vain attempted to hide himſelf in an old aqueduct, he was dragged out and ſlain;—an event which happened five years after this, in the very beginning of the Jewiſh war. See Joſeph. Antiq. lib. x. c. 9. Jewiſh War, l. ii. c. 17. Doddridge, and Biſcoe.

Ver. 5. I wiſt not, brethren, that he was the high-prieſt] Animated on a ſudden by the ſecret impulſe of a prophetic ſpirit, which bore him, as it were, for that moment, beyond himſelf, St. Paul delivered the words of ver. 3. which being urged againſt him, he choſe not to enter upon a queſtion ſo difficult to be cleared up, as the divine original of that impulſe on his mind, by which he found himſelf inclined to utter thoſe remarkable words; and only touched upon a circumſtance attending it, which was of a more ambiguous nature; ſaying, "Indeed, brethren, in the ſudden tranſport of my mind, I was not aware that it was the high-prieſt." This is a natural rendering of the original words;—which cannot fairly be tranſlated, I do not acknowledge him to be the high-prieſt: Nor can it be imagined that Paul would enter on ſo curious, and ſo dangerous a queſtion, as the juſtice of his acceſſion to that office. Some have thought that St. Paul did not know him perſonally; but his habit and place in the ſanhedrim muſt have diſtinguiſhed him; or, if we were to ſuppoſe with Ribetus and others, that St. Paul, hearing the voice while looking another way, did not know from whence it came, the ſolution is utterly inſufficient; for his anſwer plainly ſhews, that he knew the perſon ſpeaking to be a judge. The beſt expoſition, therefore, of this matter, ſeems that above given; which will eaſily reconcile all that paſſed, with Chriſt's promiſe of being with his diſciples, when appearing before councils, Matth. x. 19. Mark xiii. 11. For, according to that expoſition, St. Paul by inſpiration uttered a true prediction, and then alledged a true fact, to prevent any ill uſe of the circumſtance in which it was ſpoken; only waving ſomething which he might have juſtly urged in his own vindication, and from which he had an undoubted right to recede, if he thought fit. In the mean time, the candour both of the apoſtle, and of the hiſtorian, is well worthy our remark. See Doddridge, Calmet, Grotius, L'Enfant, &c.

6 But when Paul perceived that the one part were Sadducees, and the other Phariſees, he cried out in the council, Men and brethren, I am a Phariſee, the ſon of a Phariſee: of the hope and reſurrection of the dead I am called in queſtion.

7 And when he had ſo ſaid, there aroſe a diſſenſion between the Phariſees and the Sadducees: and the multitude was divided.

8 For the Sadducees ſay that there is no reſurrection, neither angel, nor ſpirit; but the Phariſees confeſs both.

9 And there aroſe a great cry: and the ſcribes that were of the Phariſees part aroſe, and ſtrove, ſaying, We find no evil in this man: but if a ſpirit or an angel hath ſpoken to him, let us not fight againſt God.

10 And when there aroſe a great diſſenſion, the chief captain, fearing leſt Paul ſhould have been pulled in pieces of them, commanded the ſoldiers to go down, and to take him by force from among them, and to bring him into the caſtle.

11 And the night following, the Lord ſtood by him, and ſaid, Be of good cheer, Paul: for as thou haſt teſtified of me in Jeruſalem, ſo muſt thou bear witneſs alſo at Rome.

12 And when it was day, certain of the Jews banded together, and bound themſelves under a curſe, ſaying, that they would neither eat nor drink till they had killed Paul.

13 And they were more than forty which had made this conſpiracy.

14 And they came to the chief prieſts and elders, and ſaid, We have bound ourſelves under a great curſe, that we will eat nothing until we have ſlain Paul.

15 Now therefore, ye, with the council, ſignify to the chief captain, that he bring him down unto you to-morrow, as though ye would enquire ſomething more perfectly concerning him: and we, or ever he come near, are ready to kill him.

16 And when Paul's ſiſter's ſon heard of their lying in wait, he went and entered into the caſtle, and told Paul.

17 Then Paul called one of the centurions unto him, and ſaid, Bring this young man unto the chief captain: for he hath a certain thing to tell him.

18 So he took him, and brought him to the chief captain, and ſaid, Paul the priſoner called me unto him, and prayed me to bring this young man unto thee, who hath ſomething to ſay unto thee.

19 Then the chief captain took him by the hand, and went with him aſide privately, and aſked him, What is that thou haſt to tell me?

20 And he ſaid, The Jews have agreed to deſire thee, that thou wouldeſt bring down Paul to-morrow into the council, as though they would enquire ſomewhat of him more perfectly.

21 But do not thou yield unto them: for there lie in wait for him of them more than forty men, which have bound themſelves with an oath, that they will neither eat nor drink till they have killed him: and now are they ready, looking for a promiſe from thee.

22 So the chief captain then let the young

Ver. 6. Ch. xxiv. 15, 22. xxvi. 5. Philip. iii. 5. Ch. xxiv. 21. xxvi. 8.—V. 8. Matth. xxii. 23. Mark xii. 18. Luke xx. 27. V. 9. Ch. xxv. 25. xxvi. 31. Ch. xxii. 7, 17, 18. Ch. v. 39.—V. 11. Ch. xviii. 9.—V. 12. Ver. 21, 30. Or, with an oath of execration.—V. 20. Ver. 12.

Ver. 6. Of the hope and reſurrection, &c.] The MS. reads this verſe, But Paul, knowing, &c.—cried out,—of the hope of the reſurrection, &c. The apoſtle here refers particularly to the reſurrection of Jeſus, and, by him, of all mankind. All the Jews, long before, knew this to be the Chriſtian doctrine; and therefore here was no fraud nor artful gloſs, to obtain favour with the Phariſees; but only an appeal to their prevailing doctrine, as a point in which the apoſtle agreed with them, and as what greatly favoured the Chriſtian doctrine which he preached, and for which he ſuffered. See Limborch Collat. p. 134. Acts iv. 2. and v. 17.

Ver. 8. Neither angel, nor ſpirit] See the note on Luke xi. 14. Some ſuppoſe that the words μηδὲ ἄγγελον, neither angel, are a gloſs; for it follows, the Phariſees confeſſed both; that is, the reſurrection and the ſpirit, or the exiſtence of ſeparate ſpirits. In the next verſe St. Luke poſſibly explains πνεῦμα, ſpirit, by angel; If a ſpirit, or an angel. See Piſcator, and Bowyer's Conjectures.

Ver. 9. Let us not fight againſt God] When they mentioned it as a ſuppoſable caſe, that an angel might have ſpoken to him, they might probably allude to the many viſions and revelations which St. Paul had profeſſed to have received in his late ſpeech to the people. Gamaliel was now dead, otherwiſe one would have ſuppoſed that he had made this ſpeech, it being ſo very like that which he is recorded to have made, ch. v. 39. Party ſpirit now carried the Phariſees to ſay the ſame things concerning Chriſtianity, which policy and the national expectations led Gamaliel to ſay in the place above cited. See Benſon, and Prideaux's Connect. vol. ii. p. 529. Inſtead of cry, in the firſt clauſe, Dr. Waterland and the MS. read clamour.

Ver. 10. And when there aroſe a great diſſenſion] And the diſſenſion growing great. Wat.

Ver. 11. The Lord ſtood by him, &c.] This plainly ſhews that our Lord approved the part St. Paul had acted before the ſanhedrim, though ſome had cenſured it, without underſtanding or conſidering the circumſtances of it. Witſius well obſerves, that it muſt be a greater conſolation to ſo faithful a ſoldier of Chriſt as St. Paul was, having been thus approved and encouraged by his general, to be led on to further combats, than to be immediately diſmiſſed; and ſuch a temper he expreſſes Philip. i. 20, 26. See Meletem. ch. xi. ſect. 4.

Ver. 14. We have bound ourſelves under a great curſe] We have bound ourſelves by a ſolemn anathema, ſeems a proper rendering of the emphatic original. Such execrable vows as theſe were not unuſual with the Jews, who challenged to themſelves a right of puniſhing thoſe without any legal proceſs, whom they conſidered as tranſgreſſors of the law; and, in ſome caſes, thought that they were juſtified in killing them. Joſephus mentions a caſe not much unlike this, of ſome who bound themſelves with an oath to kill Herod; in which they gloried, as a laudable intention, becauſe he had violated the ancient cuſtoms of their nation. It is no wonder, therefore, that these Jews ſhould make no ſcruple of acquainting the chief prieſts and elders with their conſpiracy againſt the life of St. Paul; who were ſo far from blaming them for it, that not long after they renewed the ſame deſign themſelves. Dr. Lightfoot has ſhewn from the Talmud, that if they were prevented from accompliſhing ſuch vows as these it was an eaſy matter to obtain an abſolution from their rabbies. See his Horæ Hebraicæ on the place, Joſeph. Antiq. b. xv. c. 8. Lardner's Credib. b. i. ch. 9. and Biſcoe's Lectures, p 278.

Ver. 15. Or ever he come near] Before he come near. MS.

Ver. 17. Then Paul called one of the centurions unto him] Though St. Paul had an expreſs promiſe from Chriſt for his ſecurity, ver. 11. yet he did not neglect any proper means of ſafety. Comp. ch. xxvii. 24, 25, 31.

Ver. 19. Then the chief captain took him by the hand] It is obſervable, that Lyſias ſeems to have conducted this whole affair like a man of integrity, prudence, and generoſity. See Beza and Lardner.

man depart, and charged him, See thou tell no man that thou haſt ſhewed theſe things to me.

23 And he called unto him two centurions, ſaying, Make ready two hundred ſoldiers to go to Cæſarea, and horſemen threeſcore and ten, and ſpearmen two hundred, at the third hour of the night;

24 And provide them beaſts, that they may ſet Paul on, and bring him ſafe unto Felix the governor.

25 And he wrote a letter after this manner:

26 Claudius Lyſias, unto the moſt excellent Felix, ſendeth greeting.

27 This man was taken of the Jews, and ſhould have been killed of them: then came I with an army, and reſcued him, having underſtood that he was a Roman:

28 And when I would have known the cauſe wherefore they accuſed him, I brought him forth into their council:

29 Whom I perceived to be accuſed of queſtions of their law, but to have nothing laid to his charge worthy of death or of bonds.

30 And when it was told me, how that the Jews laid wait for the man, I ſent ſtraightway to thee, and gave commandment to his accuſers alſo, to ſay before thee what they had againſt him. Farewel.

31 Then the ſoldiers, as it was commanded them, took Paul, and brought him by night to Antipatris.

32 On the morrow they left the horſemen to go with him, and returned to the caſtle.

33 Who, when they came to Cæſarea, and delivered the epiſtle to the governor, preſented Paul alſo before him.

34 And when the governor had read the letter, he aſked of what province he was. And when he underſtood that he was of Cilicia;

35 I will hear thee, ſaid he, when thine accuſers are alſo come. And he commanded him to be kept in Herod's judgement-hall.

CHAP. XXIV.

Paul being accuſed by Tertullus the orator, anſwereth for his life and doctrine: he preacheth Chriſt to the governor and his wife. The governor hopeth for a bribe, but in vain. At laſt going out of his office, he leaveth Paul in priſon.

AND after five days, Ananias the high-prieſt deſcended with the elders, and with a certain orator named Tertullus, who informed the governor againſt Paul.

2 And when he was called forth, Tertullus began to accuſe him, ſaying, Seeing that by thee we enjoy great quietneſs, and that very worthy deeds are done unto this nation by thy providence,

3 We accept it always, and in all places, moſt noble Felix, with all thankfulneſs.

4 Notwithſtanding, that I be not further tedious unto thee, I pray thee, that thou wouldeſt hear us of thy clemency a few words.

5 For we have found this man a peſtilent fellow, and a mover of ſedition among all the Jews throughout the world, and a ringleader of the ſect of the Nazarenes:

6 Who alſo hath gone about to profane

Ver. 27. Ch. xxi. 33.——V. 1. Ch. xxi. 27. Ch. xxiii. 2.—V. 6. Ch. xxi. 28.

Ver. 27. With an army] With a band of ſoldiers. Wat. By the latter clauſe Lyſias ſeems in general to intimate, that he had, on the whole, been more ſolicitous to provide for St. Paul's ſecurity, out of regard to his being a Roman citizen.

Ver. 31. Antipatris] Very different accounts are given of the ſituation of Antipatris, which muſt however have been north-weſt of Jeruſalem, as it was in the way from thence to Cæſarea. Its ancient name was Caphar-Salama, 1 Macc. vii. 31. But Herod the Great rebuilt it, and gave it the name of Antipatris, in honour of his father Antipater. It was ſomething more than thirty-eight of our miles from Jeruſalem, which muſt have been too far for one night's march. But it is not neceſſary to conclude, that St. Paul was carried thither in one night, or that the ſoldiers returned in one day: It is only ſaid, that they travelled by night, which they might do, and reſt by the way; nor is it probable that they took St. Paul with them by night from Jeruſalem, and reached Cæſarea the next day, when it appears from Joſephus, that from Jeruſalem to Cæſarea was near ſeventy miles. See Biſcoe's Lectures, p. 388. and Reland's Palæſt. Sacr. p. 455.

Ver. 35. Herod's judgment-hall] This was a palace or court erected by Herod the Great, when he rebuilt and beautified Cæſarea. Probably ſome tower belonging to it might be uſed as a kind of ſtate-priſon, as is common in ſuch places. See Doddridge and Calmet. Dr. Waterland reads Herod's guard-room..

Chap. XXIV. Ver. 1. Ananias—deſcended] Went down. MS.

Ver. 2. Tertullus began to accuſe him] Almoſt every word of this oration is falſe,—the accuſation of St. Paul, the encomium on the government of Felix, and the declaration of a lawful intention in what they had done and attempted. When he ſays, we enjoy great quietneſs by thee, he probably refers to what Felix had done to clear the country of robbers and impoſtors; for all hiſtorians agree, that he was in every other reſpect a man of ſo bad a character, that his government was a plague to all the provinces over which he preſided; and as for Judea, its ſtate under Felix was ſo far from being what Tertullus here repreſents, that Joſephus, beſides what he ſays of the barbarous and cowardly aſſaſſination of Jonathan the high-prieſt by his means, declares, that the Jews accuſed him before Nero of inſufferable oppreſſions, and had certainly ruined him, if his brother Pallas had not interpoſed in his favour. Dr. Doddridge reads the next cauſe, and illuſtrious deeds are happily done to this nation by your prudent adminiſtration, which he obſerves to be the exact rendering of the original; and remarks, that the compliment was here the higher, as it was uſual even at this time among the Romans, at leaſt in publick diſcourſes, to refer ſuch events to divine Providence, rather than to human efforts. Of which many remarkable inſtances may be ſeen in Elſner on the place, which ſhew either the piety or the policy of the great men of antiquity, who made uſe of ſuch language;—on the other hand, apparent ſlights put upon religion by perſons in publick ſtations, are proofs of a weak underſtanding, which cannot fail of making them contemptible, not only among all religions, but all prudent men. See Joſeph. Antiq. b. xx. ch. 8. Mill, Wetſtein, Beza, and Grotius.

Ver. 4. Nevertheleſs] But. Wat.

Ver. 5. The ſect] The Hereſy. MS. See ver. 14.

Ver. 6. Who hath alſo gone about to profane the temple] Tertullus artfully mentions this as the moſt expreſs fact he had to charge upon him, well knowing that the Romans allowed the Jews a power of executing, even without forms of law, any perſon who ſhould be found in any ſuch act of profanation; and he ſeems to have deſigned to make a merit of their moderation, that they intended nevertheleſs, fairly to have tried him, and not to have deſtroyed him on the ſpot, as Lyſias had juſtly charged them with attempting. And it is obſervable, that Tertullus no where expreſsly avows ſo much as a deſign to have put Paul to death, though it was undoubtedly inthe temple: whom we took, and would have judged according to our law.

7 But the chief captain Lyſias came upon us, and with great violence took him away out of our hands,

8 Commanding his accuſers to come unto thee: by examining of whom, thyſelf mayeſt take knowledge of all theſe things, whereof we accuſe him.

9 And the Jews alſo aſſented, ſaying that theſe things were ſo.

10 Then Paul, after that the governor had beckoned unto him to ſpeak, anſwered, Foraſmuch as I know that thou haſt been of many years a judge unto this nation, I do the more chearfully anſwer for myſelf:

11 Becauſe that thou mayeſt underſtand, that there are yet but twelve days ſince I went up to Jeruſalem for to worſhip.

12 And they neither found me in the temple diſputing with any man, neither raiſing up the people, neither in the ſynagogues, nor in the city:

13 Neither can they prove the things whereof they now accuſe me.

14 But this I confeſs unto thee, that after the way which they call hereſy, ſo worſhip I the God of my fathers; believing all things which are written in the law and in the prophets:

15 And have hope towards God, (which they themſelves alſo allow,) that there ſhall be a reſurrection of the dead, both of the juſt and unjuſt.

16 And herein do I exerciſe myſelf to have always a conſcience void of offence toward God, and toward men.

17 Now after many years, I came to bring alms to my nation, and offerings.

18 Whereupon certain Jews from Aſia found me purified in the temple, neither with multitude, nor with tumult.

19 Who ought to have been here before thee, and object, if they had aught againſt me.

20 Or elſe, let theſe ſame here ſay, if they have found any evil-doing in me, while I ſtood before the council, 21 Except it be for this one voice, that I cried ſtanding among them, Touching the reſurrection of the dead, I am called in queſtion by you this day.

22 And when Felix heard theſe things, having more perfect knowledge of that way, he deferred them, and ſaid, When Lyſias the chief captain ſhall come down, I will know the uttermoſt of your matter.

23 And he commanded a centurion to

Ver. 10. Felix made procurator over Judea, A. D. 53.—V. 12. Ch. xxv. 8. xxviii. 17.—V. 14. See Amos viii. 14. Ch. ix. 2. 2 Tim. i. 3. Ch. xxvi. 22. xxviii. 23.—V. 15. Dan. xii. 2. John v. 28, 29.—V. 16. Ch. xxiii. 1.—V. 17. Ch. xi. 29, 30. xx. 16. Rom. xv. 25. Gal. ii. 10.—V. 18. Ch. xxi. 26, 27.—V. 21. Ch. xxiii. 6. xxviii. 20.

ended. The phraſe which he afterwards uſes, of the accuſers being commanded to come to Felix, (ver. 8.) though the high-prieſt himſelf was known to be one of them, ſhews plainly to what ſubjection they were reduced; and the expreſſion, with great violence took him, ver. 7. is another baſe and falſe inſinuation of this orator, as if Lyſias's juſt care of the life of a man had ſtopped the courſe of juſtice, and been an act of the higheſt outrage. See Doddridge and Benſon.

Ver. 10. Then Paul—anſwered, Foraſmuch, &c.] The phraſe many years, ſeems to be uſed here with ſome latitude. It was now about ſeven years ſince Felix entered on his government. The three articles of Tertullus's charge were, ſedition—hereſy—and a profanation of the temple. St. Paul's anſwer exactly correſponds to each of theſe. As to the firſt he ſuggeſts, that he had not been long enough at Jeruſalem to form a party, and attempt an inſurrection; and challenges his accuſers, in fact, to produce any evidence of ſuch practices, ver. 11—13. As to the ſecond, he confeſſes himſelf to be a Chriſtian; but maintains it to be a religion perfectly agreeable to natural light, and to the revelation of the prophets, and conſequently not deſerving to be branded with any infamous or invidious title, ver. 14—16. And as for the profanation of the temple, he tells them, that on the contrary he had entered it with ſome peculiar rites of religious purification, and had behaved himſelf therein in a moſt peaceful and regular manner; ſo that his innocence had been evident even before the ſanhedrim, where the authors of the tumult did not dare to appear againſt him; ver. 17—21. See Pearſon's Annals, Biſcoe's Lectures, p. 44. and Craddock's Apoſtol. Hiſt. part ii. p. 288.

Ver. 14. So worſhip I the God of my fathers] This was a very proper plea before a Roman magiſtrate; as it proved that he was under the protection of the Roman laws, ſince the Jews were ſo; whereas had he introduced the worſhip of new Gods, he had forfeited that protection. A regard to paternal deities was held honourable among the Greeks and Romans. See Gen. xvii. 7. Exod. vi. 7. xv. 2. Deut. xxix. 13. and Elſner's Obſervations, vol. i. p. 473.

Ver. 16. And herein] Εν τούτῳ, that is, in this work do I employ myſelf; or as others render it, "In the mean time, whilſt I am in this world;" or as others, (I think moſt probably) for this cauſe, and reaſon; ἐν τȣ́τῳ for διὰ τȣ́τω,—for this reaſon;—"becauſe I believe a reſurrection, therefore, I have a conſcientious care of my life, and all the actions of it." Tillotſon. Lord Clarendon obſerves, that "the term conſcience is not to be found throughout the whole Old Teſtament; nor is it uſed in Scripture till John viii. 7, 9. when the Jews brought the woman who had been taken in adultery before our Saviour, whom they importuned to do juſtice upon her; and he, who knew that their malice was more againſt him than the woman, ſaid, he that is without ſin, &c. And they—being convicted in their own Conſcience, went out, &c. Nor is the Greek word Συνείδησις, which throughout the New Teſtament ſignifies conſcience, ever uſed by the LXX, (as ſome learned men affirm) except only in Eccleſ. x. 20, which is tranſlated—curſe not the king, no not in thy thought. So that conſcience ſeems to be the proper and natural iſſue of the Goſpel; which introduced a ſtricter ſurvey of the heart of man, and a more ſevere inquiſition into the thoughts thereof, than the law had done. He, who could not be accuſed by ſufficient witneſſes to have violated the law, was thought to be innocent enough; but the Goſpel erected another judicatory, and another kind of examination, and brought men who could not be charged by the law, to be convicted by their own conſcience; and therefore St. Paul, in his juſtification before Felix, after he had denied all that the Jews had charged him with, and affirmed that he had broken no law, added, and herein do I exerciſe myſelf to have always a CONSCIENCE void of offence, &c."

Ver. 18. Neither with multitude, nor with tumult] If the Apoſtle had diſturbed other people in their religious worſhip, whether Jews or Gentiles, invaded their civil rights, or made any tumult, ſedition, or inſurrection, the Roman law would have condemned him: but as there were already ſeveral ſects among the Jews, the Chriſtians might, as a new ſect, differ from them all, and yet remain under the protection of the Roman law. See Lardner, Benſon, and Wetſtein.

Ver. 22. Having more perfect knowledge, &c.] Dr. Heylin, after many learned expoſitors, tranſlates this verſe thus: Felix, having heard both parties, put them off to another time, ſaying, When I ſhall be better informed concerning this ſect, and the chief-captain Lyſias ſhall be here, I will enquire more narrowly into this affair. If the paſſage is to be underſtood according to our verſion, the meaning muſt be "that Felix when he had heard theſe things, having been more accurately informed concerning this way of Chriſtianity, and knowing it not to be ſo miſchievous a thing as theſe accuſers ſuggeſted, put them off." But the former ſeems the beſt interpretation; and ſuch an anſwer in Felix was the more proper, as St. Paul did not deny that he was indeed a leading perſon among the Chriſtians, which was made a part of their accuſation; and we ſoon after find, that Felix ſent for Paul, to give him an account of his religion, ver. 24. and endeavoured by this, as well as other means, to inform himſelf concerning it. See Beza, Grotius, Hammond, and Pyle.

Ver. 23. That he ſhould forbid none of his acquaintance] This was a circumſtance graciouſly ordered by divine Providence, which would make St. Paul's confinement much lighter, than it could otherwiſe have been, and gave him an opportunity of much greater uſefulneſs. The keep Paul, and to let him have liberty, and that he ſhould forbid none of his acquaintance to miniſter, or come unto him.

24 And after certain days, when Felix came with his wife Druſilla, which was a Jeweſs, he ſent for Paul, and heard him concerning the faith in Chriſt.

25 And as he reaſoned of righteouſneſs, temperance, and judgement to come, Felix trembled, and anſwered, Go thy way for this time; when I have a convenient ſeaſon, I will call for thee.

26 He hoped alſo that money ſhould have been given him of Paul, that he might looſe him: wherefore he ſent for him the oftener, and communed with him.

27 But after two years, Portius Feſtus came into Felix' room: and Felix, willing to ſhew the Jews a pleaſure, left Paul bound.

Ver. 23. Ch. xxvii. 3. xxviii. 16.—V. 27. Ch. xxv. 9, 14.

The word Ὑπηρετεῖν, rendered miniſter, ſometimes is uſed for aſſiſtance in general, where perſonal miniſtration and attendance is out of the queſtion; and as it here diſtinguiſhed from and prefixed to coming to him, it may probably ſignify, "Sending him food, books, or other accommodations." See Raphelius, Annot. ex Xenoph. p. 185. and Limborch.

Ver. 24. His wife Druſilla] She was the daughter of Herod Agrippa, and ſiſter of the king Agrippa mentioned in the next chapter. She had been married to Azizus king of the Emeſenes, but Felix being ſtruck with her beauty, which was remarkably great, made uſe of the agency of one Simon, a wicked Jew, who profeſſed himſelf a magician, to perſuade her to abandon her huſband, and marry him: To which ſhe conſented, more to avoid the envy of her ſiſter Berenice, than out of love to Felix; and though Azizus had but a little before ſubmitted to circumciſion, and ſo embraced Judaiſm, as the condition of the nuptials. She was afterwards conſumed with the ſon ſhe had by Felix, in a terrible eruption of Veſuvius. See Joſeph. Antiq. lib. 20. c. 7. Lardner's Credib. b. i. ch. 1.

Ver. 25. And as he reaſoned of righteouſneſs, &c.] How ſuitable this diſcourſe was to the character and circumſtances of the perſons to whom it was addreſſed, appears ſufficiently from the former note, and from the note on ver. 2. but ſee more in the Reflections. It may be proper here to obviate ſome miſtakes, and perhaps dangerous ones, which have been drawn from this paſſage; as if reaſoning on theſe topicks was the alone preaching of faith in Chriſt. "This, ſays Dr. Benſon, was St. Paul's preaching Chriſt, or the faith of Chriſt;" Whereas, if the reader will caſt his eye on the preceding verſe, he will find that the foundation of St. Paul's diſcourſe was concerning that faith in Chriſt, the great Meſſiah, which this great Apoſtle ever laid down as the ground-work of what he delivered; in ſtrict conformity with what he himſelf had ſaid,—Other foundation can no man lay, than that which is laid, namely, Jeſus Chriſt. Upon this foundation he always raiſed the amiable and important ſuperſtructure of holy and virtuous practice; and agreeably hereto, upon the preſent occaſion, ſpeaking of faith in Chriſt, as the great and important ſubject of his miniſtry, he took an opportunity from the peculiar characters of his principal hearers, to dwell upon ſubjects in a particular manner adapted to them, and at the ſame time inſeparably dependant upon that faith in Chriſt which he preached. And undoubtedly this is the true and important method of preaching Chriſt; and they who think they diſcharge this duty properly, and imitate St. Paul's example by preaching of righteouſneſs, temperance, and other moral virtues, ſeparately and independantly from their living foundation, faith in Jeſus, not only miſtake this matter greatly, but certainly have no countenance from the Apoſtle's practice in this place.

Ver. 25. When I have a convenient ſeaſon, &c.] And I will take ſome future opportunity to call for thee. This is fully expreſſed by the original. He thought it did not become the dignity of a judge on the bench to receive even ſuch oblique admonitions and reproofs from a priſoner, and therefore might firmly intend to give him a fuller audience in private. St. Paul muſt, no doubt, diſcern thoſe marks of confuſion, which would be ſo apparent in his countenance, which would give him ſome hopes of ſucceeding in this important attempt for ſuch a converſion, and conſequently would animate him when he reſumed the diſcourſe: This muſt naturally increaſe in Felix a conviction of his innocence, and an eſteem for his virtues; yet, in ſpite of all, he was ſo far from reforming his life in general, that he would not do juſtice to St. Paul. However, the conviction might perhaps prevail ſo far, as to engage him to perſiſt in his reſolution of not delivering him up to the Jews. How affecting an inſtance and illuſtration of the treachery of the human heart! See Doddridg, Grotius, Benſon, and on ch. xxvi. 24.

Ver. 26, 27. He hoped alſo that money ſhould have been given him] This ſtroke finiſhes the character of Felix, and ſhews ſtill more plainly how appoſite the diſcourſe of St. Paul was. Felix might indulge ſuch expectations, from conſidering that Paul was a Roman citizen, and a principal of the ſect of the Chriſtians, who having formerly ſold their poſſeſſions to maintain their brethren, might contribute largely on this occaſion. He might even expect to have received a conſiderable preſent from the Apoſtle himſelf, knowing that he was intruſted with a large ſum of money collected from the brethren at Jeruſalem. But the Apoſtle, not being uſed to give bribes, continued in bonds for two years; for though a Roman citizen might not be bound with thongs, by way of puniſhment, or in order to be ſcourged, yet he might be chained to a ſoldier, and kept in cuſtody, upon juſt ſuſpicions, or when credible accuſations were brought againſt him;—though St. Paul was indeed detained unjuſtly. The policy however of Felix, and his deſire of conciliating the favour of the Jews, did not prevent their clamourous accuſations from following him to Rome, which had certainly ruined him, had not the intereſt of his brother Pallas prevailed to obtain his pardon from Nero. How much more effectually had he conſulted the peace of his mind, and on the whole the ſecurity of his fortune too, had he reformed his life on St. Paul's admonition, and cultivated thoſe ſerious impreſſions which were once ſo ſtrongly made upon his conſcience! It was during the two years of St. Paul's impriſonment here, that thoſe contentions aroſe between the Jews and Gentiles as to their reſpective rights in Cæſarea, which, after many tumults and ſlaughters of the Jews, were inflamed rather than appeaſed by the hearing at Rome, and did a great deal towards exaſperating the Jewiſh nation to that war, which ended in its utter ruin. See Joſeph. War, b. ii. c. 13. Pearſon's Annals, and Lardner's Credib. part i. p. 305.

REFLECTIONS ON ST. PAUL'S APPEARANCE BEFORE FELIX. Ver. 24, &c.

Who would not wiſh to have been preſent at this aſtoniſhing ſcene, which repreſents the Apoſtle of the Gentiles as giving an account of his faith to Felix the Roman governor; and that in ſo moving and convincing a manner, with ſuch force of eloquence and ſtrength of argument, that even he, before whom he ſtands capitally accuſed, is ſtruck, awed, confounded by his diſcourſe, and the judge himſelf quakes at the voice of the priſoner!

The ſubject matter of St. Paul's diſcourſe, is ſaid to have been righteouſneſs, temperance, and judgment to come: Not that we are to imagine that he confined himſelf ſolely to theſe three particulars; for the words of ver. 24. inform us, that Felix ſent for him, and heard him concerning the faith in Chriſt; and therefore all the articles of the Chriſtian faith, we may be ſure, were ſufficiently explained by him. But tho' many other doctrines might be handled at the ſame time, yet theſe of righteouſneſs, temperance, and future judgment had ſo large a ſhare in the Apoſtle's diſcourſe, and were ſo warmly and effectually urged by him, that St. Luke has not thought fit to take notice of any other part of his ſermon. From hence we are naturally led to draw this plain but profitable obſervation, that the moral duties we are to practice in this life, and the rewards or puniſhments we are to expect in another, are the important conſiderations in religion, which ſhould moſt often and earneſtly be inculcated by thoſe who preach the Goſpel, and be moſt attentively liſtened to, and weighed by thoſe who hear it.

Nothing could be more oppoſite than a diſcourſe concerning righteouſneſs and temperance, before a perſon ſo cruel and voluptuous as Felix ſo remarkably was; Nothing could be more proper than to put this unjuſt judge in mind of another, a more impartial and dreadful tribunal, before which he himſelf ſhould one day ſtand and be judged. Thus did St. Paul adapt what he delivered to the peculiar exigencies of the hearer; and in ſo doing he hath left us a pattern worthy of imitation, ſuch as, when attentively conſidered, will give us great occaſion to admire the dexterity and addreſs, the ſincere and diſintereſted conduct, the mighty courage and zeal of this eminent Apoſtle.

He fears not, we ſee, to utter neceſſary, though harſh and ungrateful truths, in the ears of one who had the power of life and death over him. He knew with what dangers the faithful diſcharge of his duty would, in this caſe, be attended; how impatient the great are under reproof, though couched in the moſt gentle and leaſt offenſive language; what abſolute dominion Druſilla had gained over the heart of Felix, and with what reſentments that impure woman might purſue any one who ventured to repreſent his guilt to him, and to rouſe his ſleeping conſcience. And yet none of theſe alarming conſiderations were able to repreſs his godly zeal, or check his freedom; which he conducted indeed with great caution and prudence, inſinuating his reproofs under the cover of certain evangelical doctrines then propoſed by him; however, with ſo great force and ſucceſs, as to ſtrike terror and confuſion into the perſon for whom they were intended.

Let us copy the excellent pattern, by taking all opportunities of ſpreading the kingdom of Chriſt in the hearts of men, and of advancing the intereſts of his Goſpel; and while we act in ſuch caſes as that before us, diſcreetly, warily, and wiſely, let us alſo act courageouſly, zealouſly, firmly, as diſregarding the fear of man, when once it comes in competition with the fear of God. Theſe are the intimations; theſe are the important inſtructions given us by the behaviour of St.

Paul

CHAP. XXV.

The Jews accuſe Paul before Feſtus: he anſwereth for himſelf, and appealeth unto Cæſar. Afterwards Feſtus openeth his matter to king Agrippa, and he is brought forth. Feſtus cleareth him to have done nothing worthy of death.

NOW when Feſtus was come into the province, after three days he aſcended from Cæſarea to Jeruſalem.

2 Then the high-prieſt, and the chief of the Jews, informed him againſt Paul, and beſought him,

3 And deſired favour againſt him, that he would ſend for him to Jeruſalem, laying wait in the way to kill him.

4 But Feſtus anſwered, that Paul ſhould be kept at Cæſarea, and that he himſelf would depart ſhortly thither.

5 Let them therefore, ſaid he, which

Paul, when before an oppreſſive, a diſſolute, and an unbelieving magiſtrate, he took an occaſion to diſcourſe of righteouſneſs, temperance, and a judgement to come.

Nor needs there any encouragement to ſuch a conduct, when we conſider the wonderful effect which followed his reaſoning on theſe important ſubjects:—Felix trembled! Even the mind of a Felix was filled with horror, at the remembrance of his paſt crimes, thus drawn up in battle-array againſt him; the dire apprehenſions of a future reckoning harrowed up his labouring ſoul; and theſe inward fears and forebodings appeared in the outward and viſible marks of a heart-felt conſternation.

Though he was one of the mightieſt upon earth, and Paul a poor deſpiſed priſoner; though he was then ſitting on the ſeat of judgment, where it behoved him to do nothing that miſbecame his high place and character; yet could he not diſſemble the pangs and agonies of his convicted mind: He trembled!

How mighty is the force and efficacy of the word of God, duly handled and applied! (Heb. iv. 12.) No ſin ſo ſecret, but it will find out and expoſe its deformity; no heart ſo abandoned, or ſo hard, but it can recal, pierce, and ſoften it; no conſcience ſo plunged in a lethargic ſtupor, but it is able to arouſe it. Strange are the various other inſtances of this kind recorded in holy writ; (compare Luke xxiv. 13. Acts viii. 35. ii. 37.) and here, while Paul reaſons from it, Felix trembles at its aweful thunderings! Such is the wonderful power of truth, when bleſſed by the God of truth, and bid to go forth and proſper! Such the great and aſtoniſhing influence of the divine word, when aſſiſted and animated by his Spirit! It prevails over all difficulties, levels all oppoſition, and is mighty to the pulling down of ſtrong-holds.

From the circumſtance before us, we are naturally led to obſerve, what a miſerable thing it is to have a conſcience burdened with guilt,—when a man dares not truſt himſelf to think, for fear of being alarmed, and filled with terror and confuſion. Felix does not ſeem to have been at all prone to ſuperſtition, or in general to have had any troubleſome ſenſe of his crimes. The flatteries of a court, the amuſements of grandeur and luxury gave him no time to cool, and diverted all grave and ſerious reflections; but when St. Paul began to diſcourſe to him of the immutable obligations of juſtice, againſt whom he had been a moſt heinous offender, he immediately ſaw the the vileneſs of his conduct, and trembled for the conſequences.

The caſe is very much the ſame with ſuch as indulge to any other kind of vice. As long as they are amuſed with company, or engaged in a hurry of buſineſs, or can keep their paſſions inflamed, and ſilence the voice of reaſon and natural conſcience by a courſe of intemperance, they may continue ſtupid and inſenſible; but when any thing happens that damps their gaiety, gives a ſhock to the mind, and puts them upon thinking, they are ſoon rouzed out of their lethargy, and entertained with none but dark and gloomy proſpects. And ſurely nothing can be a more perverted ſtate of human rational beings, than to derive all their relief, all their peace, from their ſuppreſſion or extinction of reaſon!—Not to be able to ſtand the deliberate judgment of their own minds, or bear thoſe exerciſes of ſedate and impartial reflection, which are their peculiar glory and happineſs! And beſides, as guilt is ſuch an enemy to conſideration, there is this dreadful circumſtance attending it, farther to aggravate and enhance its miſery,—that it cuts off, in a great meaſure, the only poſſible means of the ſinner's recovery and ſalvation.

How remarkably different is the ſucceſs of Tertullus's pleading, compared with that of St. Paul! The former, we may well preſume, was one of the moſt famous pleaders of his time; or the high-prieſt and elders, in a cauſe of ſuch conſequence, that they themſelves went down from Jeruſalem to Cæſarea, on purpoſe to proſecute it, would certainly not have pitched upon him for their advocate. And yet this great orator, with all his ſtudied eloquence, made no impreſſion that we find on Felix; whereas St. Paul's plain ſpeech ſoon after moved, terrified, and confounded him. What was the reaſon of this different effect,—but that the one was engaged with good words to varniſh over an ill cauſe, and by the power of rhetorick to ſupport a falſe and lying accuſation; whereas the other had right and truth of his ſide, and therefore preſſed them earneſtly?—He himſelf felt what he ſpake; had an inward and vital ſenſe of the truths he delivered; and therefore he made others feel them too. He ſpake from his own heart, and to the hearts and conſciences of thoſe who heard him, and therefore he prevailed.

O how doth this inſtance of the operative virtue of God's word, reproach our ſluggiſhneſs and inſenſibility! An impure and wicked heathen, we hear, trembled at St. Paul's doctrine:—The ſame doctrine ſounds every day in the ears of negligent Chriſtians, without terrifying, without alarming them! The ſame apoſtle ſtill reaſons with them, in the hiſtory before us, and in his Epiſtles concerning righteouſneſs, temperance, and judgement to come: but he reaſons to no purpoſe: His words ſeem to them as idle tales: They neither feel their force, nor regard their meaning. God Almighty grant that this hearing and trembling Felix, may not one day riſe up in judgement againſt them.

But though Felix ſhewed great concern on the occaſion, yet Druſilla, the partner of his crimes,—for aught that appears,—ſat by altogether unmoved. The moſt probable account for which ſeems to be this: Being born and bred a Jeweſs, (ver. 24.) ſhe had had better opportunities of knowing the will of God, and her own duty, and greater obligations to practice what ſhe knew, than thoſe who were guided only by the light of nature and reaſon: And yet, notwithſtanding the mighty reſtraints which her religion laid upon her, ſhe had forſaken her marriage vows, and gone from the bed of her affectionate huſband who was circumciſed, (ſee the note) into that of an uncircumciſed heathen. Hence her guilt was of a much deeper die than that of Felix; and conſequently her heart more obdurate and inſenſible of reproof; from all which we may raiſe to ourſelves this general and uſeful reflection.—"That the more advantages any man has towards diſcovering the truth, and the more freely the means of Grace have been indulged to him, the more deſperate is his caſe, if he happens to revolt, and the harder will the taſk be, if he turns profligate to reclaim him." It is a work of much leſs difficulty to make a good Chriſtian of a profeſſed Heathen, than to bring an ill Chriſtian, who now lives like an Heathen, to a feeling ſenſe of his ſins, and to any degree of true remorſe and compunction of heart for them.

But let us follow Felix to the conſequences of his trembling. He abruptly breaks off St. Paul's diſcourſe, and diſmiſſes him in haſte, ver. 25. but he ſoon recovers from his perturbation; and hopes that money ſhall be given him to looſe his priſoner from his bonds, ver. 26. Here we ſee, that the ſeed of the word ſown by the Apoſtle, fell among thorns, and immediately the thorns ſprung up and choaked it, Matth. xiii. 7. The love of unjuſt gain, that root of all evil, quickly returned upon his avaricious ſoul, and drove out all the impreſſions of St. Paul's reaſonings: and then,—when once he had ſtood the ſhock of his conſcience, and hood-winked his fears, he could hear the ſame things repeated without any degree of the ſame remorſe and concern. For it follows, he ſent for St. Paul often and communed with him.—So ſuddenly and totally may the beſt ſuggeſtions be ſtifled, and the ſtrongeſt convictions overborne by the force of any one prevailing vice or luſt, one eaſily-beſetting ſin, that hath gotten an abſolute dominion over us.

That this may not be our caſe, whenever we hear an awakening diſcourſe from the pulpit, or find our conſciences touched to the quick with ſome oppoſite arrow, ſhot from the quiver of God's word: let us not act like Felix, and endeavour inſtantly to get rid of the ſmart, and to diſmiſs ſuch troubleſome reflections with a go your way for this time, till a more convenient ſeaſon. Nay, but this is the proper time; this the moſt convenient ſeaſon for our entertaining and converſing with them, when they preſs to be admitted, and demand a hearing. Let us not therefore take ſomething, (as the way too commonly is) to put off the fit: let us not call in company, or buſineſs, or pleaſures, to divert our thoughts from their preſent, though melancholly employment, ſince by this ſadneſs and heavineſs, the heart is made better; but rather ſtudy every way to promote and cheriſh theſe good beginnings by retirement, meditation, and prayer: let us ſuffer theſe terrors of the Lord, freely to reaſon and plead with us, till they have perſuaded us there in private;—and may we ſo re-apply, re-inforce, and improve the good impreſſions received in public, as to rivet the influence of them faſt in the mind, and reach the end for which the good ſpirit of God intended them; even that repentance unto ſalvation not to be repented of! See Bp. Atterbury's Serm. vol. iv.

Chap. XXV. Ver. 1. Now when Feſtus was come, &c.] Now when Feſtus entered upon his government, after three days he went up. MS. and Wat. This was in conformity to the Roman law, and in order to make himſelf acquainted with the preſent ſtate of their public affairs. See Grotius, and Lardner.

Ver. 3. And deſired favour] And deſired this favour. Wat. Inſtead of, Laying wait, &c. Dr. Doddridge reads and paraphraſes the paſſage thus: "Laying an ambuſh of deſperate wretches for him, who they knew would readily undertake to intercept his journey, and to kill him by the way." Theſe aſſaſſins were probably ſome of the Sicarii, mentioned ch. xxi. 38. The high-prieſts about this time were, according to the account Joſephus gives of them, ſuch monſters of rapine, tyranny, and cruelty, that it is not be wondered ſuch a deſign ſhould be favoured by him who now bore the office. See Joſeph. Jewiſh War, b. ii. c. 13. Mill, and Wetſtein.

Ver. 4. Feſtus anſwered] It certainly was extraordinary that Feſtus, who, as a new governor could not but incline to make himſelf popular, among you are able, go down with me, and accuſe this man, if there be any wickedneſs in him.

6 And when he had tarried among them more than ten days, he went down unto Cæſarea; and the next day, ſitting on the judgement-ſeat, commanded Paul to be brought.

7 And when he was come, the Jews which came down from Jeruſalem, ſtood round about, and laid many and grievous complaints againſt Paul, which they could not prove;

8 While he anſwered for himſelf, Neither againſt the law of the Jews, neither againſt the temple, nor yet againſt Cæſar, have I offended any thing at all.

9 But Feſtus, willing to do the Jews a pleaſure, anſwered Paul, and ſaid, Wilt thou go up to Jeruſalem, and there be judged of theſe things before me?

10 Then ſaid Paul, I ſtand at Cæſar's judgement-ſeat, where I ought to be judged: to the Jews have I done no wrong, as thou very well knoweſt:

11 For if I be an offender, or have commited any thing worthy of death, I refuſe not to die: but if there be none of theſe things whereof theſe accuſe me, no man may deliver me unto them. I appeal unto Cæſar.

12 Then Feſtus, when he had conferred with the council, anſwered, Haſt thou appealed unto Cæſar? unto Cæſar ſhalt thou go.

13 And after certain days, king Agrippa and Bernice came unto Cæſarea to ſalute Feſtus.

14 And when they had been there many days, Feſtus declared Paul's cauſe unto the king, ſaying, There is a certain man left in bonds by Felix:

15 About whom, when I was at Jeruſalem, the chief prieſts and the elders of the Jews informed me, deſiring to have judgement againſt him.

16 To whom I anſwered, It is not the manner of the Romans to deliver any man to die, before that he which is accuſed have the accuſers face to face, and have licence to anſwer for himſelf concerning the crime laid againſt him.

17 Therefore, when they were come hither, without any delay, on the morrow I ſat on the judgement-ſeat, and I commanded the man to be brought forth.

18 Againſt whom when the accuſers ſtood up, they brought none accuſation of ſuch things as I ſuppoſed:

19 But had certain queſtions againſt him of their own ſuperſtition, and of one Jeſus,

Ver. 6. Or, as ſome copies read, no more than eight or ten days.—V. 8. Ch. vi. 13. xxiv. 12. xxviii. 17.—V. 9. Ch. xxiv. 27. V. 11. Ch. xviii. 14. Ch. xxvi. 32.—V. 14. Ch. xxiv. 27.

pular, ſhould deny this requeſt, when it ſeemed to be ſo reaſonable, and came from perſons of ſuch eminent rank in the Jewiſh nation. But when we conſider how much edification to the churches depended on the continuance of Paul's life; and how evidently, under God, his life depended on this reſolution of Feſtus, it muſt ſurely lead us to reflect by what inviſible ſprings the Almighty God governs the world; with what ſilence, and yet at the ſame time with what wiſdom and energy! See Doddridge and Benſon.

Ver. 10, 11. I ſtand at Cæſar's judgement-ſeat] Grotius quotes the following words from Ulpian, (lib. 1. De officio procuratoris) Quæ acta geſtaque ſunt à procuratore Cæſaris, ſic ab eo comprobantur, atque ſi à Cæſare geſta ſunt. "Thoſe things which are acted and done by Cæſar's procurator, are ſo approved of him, as if they had been done by Cæſar himſelf:" So that when St. Paul was ſtanding before Feſtus, the procurator of thatprovince, he might very juſtly be ſaid to be ſtanding before Cæſar's tribunal. When St. Paul ſays, as thou very well knoweſt,—he may either refer to the examination of him that day taken before him, or more probably to the information which we cannot but ſuppoſe Felix gave concerning him, when he reſigned up his government to Feſtus. The word χαρίσασθαι, which we render deliver, implies a deliverance in order to gratify. "No man can lawfully deliver me into their hands, ſo as to gratify them with my death." This, however, will by no means prove, that the Jews had the power of life and death in their hands; for St. Paul might reaſonably apprehend, not only that he might be murdered by the way, as he probably would have been; but that, had the ſanhedrim condemned him, Feſtus might, for particular reaſons, have acted the part which Pilate did with reſpect to our Lord, in permitting and warranting the execution, though in his own conſcience convinced of his innocence, and even declaring that conviction. See Matth. xxvii. 24—26. On theſe accounts St. Paul appealed to Cæſar. It is well known that the Roman law allowed ſuch an appeal to every citizen before ſentence was paſſed, and made it highly penal for any governor, after that, to proceed to any extremities againſt the perſon making it. See Benſon, Grotius, Lardner's Credib. b. i. ch. 2. and Biſcoe, p. 358.

Ver. 12. Then Feſtus, when he had conferred with the council] St. Paul does not appear to have abſolutely appealed unto Cæſar, but only conditionally: that is, rather than be ſent to Jeruſalem again, (as Feſtus had propoſed,) He claimed his privilege, and inſiſted upon his being heard before Cæſar: and becauſe the appeal was only conditional, Feſtus conferred with his own Roman council what he had beſt do. It was cuſtomary for a conſiderable number of perſons of ſome diſtinction to attend the Roman præfects into their provinces, with whom they were uſed to conſult, eſpecially in matters of judicature. See Lardner and Biſcoe as above.

Ver. 13. King Agrippa and Bernice] This Agrippa was ſon to Herod Agrippa, whoſe tragical death is related ch. xii. He was by profeſſion a Jew, had the power of the temple, and the ſacred treaſury, and could likewiſe diſpoſe of the high-prieſthood as he thought proper. Bernice, his ſiſter, was the eldeſt daughter of Herod Agrippa, and had been contracted in her infancy by Claudius Cæſar to Mark, the ſon of Alexander Lyſimachus, the Alabarch; but he dying before the marriage was conſummated, her father married her to his own brother Herod, king of Chalcis, though that was contrary to the law of Moſes. After his death ſhe went and lived with her brother Agrippa, with whom ſhe was ſuſpected of an inceſtuous commerce; of which Joſephus ſpeaks, and to which Juvenal is ſuppoſed to refer, in a celebrated paſſage, ſat. vi. ver. 154, &c. To wipe off this aſperſion, ſhe endeavoured to marry again, offering herſelf to Polemon, king of Cilicia, upon condition that he would become a proſelyte of righteouſneſs to the Jewiſh religion. Polemon, who had more regard to the riches than to the character of the lady, conſented to be circumciſed, and actually married her. But Bernice did not continue long with her huſband, which occaſioned his caſting off the Jewiſh religion; and notwithſtanding the ſcandal which ſhe had formerly lain under, ſhe went and lived where ſhe pleaſed, not only continuing in the good graces of her brother Agrippa, but afterwards inſinuating herſelf ſo far into the affections of Titus Veſpaſian, as to occaſion much diſcourſe; for ſhe was of great beauty, and remarkably liberal: nay, ſhe had even the proſpect of being empreſs, had not the murmurs of the people of Rome prevented it. See Suetonius in Tito. c. 7. Tacit. Hiſt. l. ii. c. 2. and 81. Joſeph. Antiq. b. xix. c. 5.

Ver. 16. It is not the manner of the Romans, &c.] Acoording to the Roman law, accuſations were never to be heard in the abſence of the accuſed perſon. A rule, which has juſtly gained to the Roman people the higheſt approbation of the beſt writers, and of all good men; a rule which as it is now happily common to almoſt all nations (courts of inquiſition only excepted) ſo ought it to direct our proceedings in all affairs, not only in public, but private life. It evidently appears from hence, that the judgement they demanded againſt St. Paul, ver. 15. was not a trial, but a ſentence upon a previous conviction, which they falſely and wickedly pretended; and probably it was the knowledge which Feſtus had of Paul's being a Roman citizen that engaged him to determine to try the cauſe himſelf. See Beza and Lardner.

Ver. 19. Of their own ſuperſtition] Of their own religion. See on ch. xvii.

which was dead, whom Paul affirmed to be alive.

20 And becauſe I doubted of ſuch manner of queſtions, I aſked him whether he would go to Jeruſalem, and there be judged of theſe matters.

21 But when Paul had appealed to be reſerved unto the hearing of Auguſtus, I commanded him to be kept till I might ſend him to Cæſar.

22 Then Agrippa ſaid unto Feſtus, I would alſo hear the man myſelf. To-morrow, ſaid he, thou ſhalt hear him.

23 And on the morrow, when Agrippa was come, and Bernice, with great pomp, and was entered into the place of hearing, with the chief captains, and principal men of the city, at Feſtus' commandment Paul was brought forth.

24 And Feſtus ſaid, King Agrippa, and all men which are here preſent with us, ye ſee this man, about whom all the multitude of the Jews have dealt with me, both at Jeruſalem, and alſo here, crying that he ought not to live any longer.

25 But when I found that he had committed nothing worthy of death, and that he himſelf hath appealed to Auguſtus, I have determined to ſend him.

26 Of whom I have no certain thing to write unto my lord. Wherefore I have brought him forth before you, and ſpecially before thee, O king Agrippa, that after examination had, I might have ſomewhat to write.

27 For it ſeemeth to me unreaſonable to ſend a priſoner, and not withal to ſignify the crimes laid againſt him.

CHAP. XXVI.

Paul, in the preſence of Agrippa, declareth his life from his childhood, and how miraculouſly he was converted, and called to his apoſtleſhip. Feſtus chargeth him to be mad, whereunto he anſwereth modeſtly. Agrippa is almoſt perſuaded to be a Chriſtian. The whole company pronounce him innocent.

THEN Agrippa ſaid unto Paul, Thou art permitted to ſpeak for thyſelf. Then Paul ſtretched forth the hand, and anſwered for himſelf:

2 I think myſelf happy, king Agrippa, becauſe I ſhall anſwer for myſelf this day before thee, touching all the things whereof I am accuſed of the Jews:

3 Eſpecially, becauſe I know thee to be expert in all cuſtoms and queſtions which are among the Jews. Wherefore I beſeech thee to hear me patiently.

4 My manner of life from my youth, which was at the firſt among mine own nation at Jeruſalem, know all the Jews,

5 Which knew me from the beginning (if they would teſtify) that after the moſt ſtraiteſt ſect of our religion, I lived a Phariſee.

Ver. 20. Or, I was doubtful how to enquire hereof.—V. 21. Or, judgement.—V. 22. See ch. ix. 15.—V. 24. Ch. xxii. 22.—V. 25. Ch. xxiii. 9. xxvi. 31.—V. 5. Ch. xxiii. 6. xxiv. 15, 22. Phil. iii. 5.

ch. xvii. 22. As Agrippa was a Jew, and now come to pay a viſit of reſpect to Feſtus, on his arrival at his province, it is improbable that he would uſe ſo rude a word as ſuperſtition; ſo that this text affords a further argument, that the word δεισιδαιμονία will admit a milder interpretation; and it is remarkable not only that the Jewiſh religion is ſpoken of by this word in ſeveral edicts reported by Joſephus, which were made in its favour, but that Joſephus himſelf uſes it in the ſame ſenſe too, Jewiſh War, lib. ii. c. 9. We may juſt obſerve from this, as well as many other places in the Acts, that St. Luke hath generally given us no more than the ſubſtance of the ſpeeches; for there is nothing of what is mentioned in this verſe related in the place where he ſpeaks of what paſſed when the Apoſtle made his firſt apology before Feſtus. See Benſon, and Elſner's Obſervat. vol. i. p. 476.

Ver. 21. Of Auguſtus] Of our auguſt emperor. As Auguſtus was not properly one of the names of Nero, though it was of Titus, the above verſion more juſtly expreſſes the import of Σεβαστὸς, which was plainly a complimental form of ſpeaking. See Doddridge.

Ver. 22. I would alſo hear the man myſelf] No doubt but Agrippa had learned from his father, (by whom, it is to be remembered James had been put to death, and Peter impriſoned, ch. xii. 2, 3.) and from many others, ſomething of the hiſtory and pretenſions of Chriſtianity; ſo that he would naturally have a curioſity to ſee and diſcourſe with ſo eminent a Chriſtian teacher as St. Paul; who, on account of what he had been in his unconverted ſtate, was certainly more regarded and talked of by the Jews, than any other of the Apoſtles. See Doddridge and Benſon.

Ver. 23. With great pomp] Dr. Hammond has ſhewn, by a variety of quotations, that the word φαντασίας here ſignifies train, or retinue;—with a numerous and ſplendid train, making a moſt pompous and magnificent appearance. When they were ſeated, Feſtus gave orders that Paul ſhould be brought forth; who came preſently, in his humble garb, and, as it ſhould ſeem, with his chains on; but his inward integrity was more honourable, and of greater excellence than all their external pomp and grandeur. See ver. 29. Hammond, and Benſon.

Ver. 24. Have dealt with me] Have applied to me. Wat. and MS. Have pleaded with me. Doddridge.

Ver. 26. Unto my lord] Τῳ κυρίῳ, plainly ſignifies to the great lord of the empire; a title by which it is well known the emperor was now frequently ſpoken of. Feſtus knew very well the account which Felix had left behind him, and the accuſations of the leading men among the Jews, both at Jeruſalem and Cæſarea; yet he was at a loſs what to alledge againſt the Apoſtle, becauſe the Romans had then no laws againſt the Chriſtians: They were ſo far looked upon as a ſect of the Jews, and provided they injured no man in civil rights, nor made any ſedition or diſturbance in the ſtate, they were protected by the Roman laws. He was therefore in hopes that king Agrippa, who underſtood the Jewiſh cuſtoms and privileges, would help him out of this difficulty, and teach him how to form his charge againſt the priſoner, in ſo uncommon and remarkable a caſe. See Benſon.

Chap. XXVI. Ver. 1. Paul ſtretched forth the hand] Elſner ſhews this to have been eſteemed at that time a very decent expreſſion of earneſtneſs in one who ſpoke in public; though ſome of the moſt illuſtrious Greek orators in earlier ages, as Pericles, Themiſtocles, Ariſtides thought it a point of modeſty to avoid it. But this was the effect of a falſe taſte; and it is certain that the prince of orators, Demoſthenes, often made uſe of this geſture. See Elſner's Obſervations, vol. i. p. 478.

Ver. 3. Becauſe I knew thee to be expert] As ſome MSS. omit the word rendered I know, this paſſage is accordingly read becauſe thou art expert in, or well acquainted with, &c. Agrippa muſt have had great advantages for an accurate acquaintance with the Jewiſh cuſtoms from his education under his father Herod Agrippa, and from his long reſidence at Jeruſalem; and agreeably to this, by the permiſſion of the emperor, he had the direction of the ſacred treaſure, &c. See on ch. xxv. 13. Lardner, Benſon, and Mill.

Ver. 4. Which was at the firſt, &c.] Doddridge reads this, Which from the beginning [of my youth] was ſpent among thoſe of mine own nation, &c. Probably he had in his childhood been brought up in the ſchools of Tarſus, and there formed to an acquaintance with Greek and Roman authors, till he entered on a kind of academical courſe under the celebrated Gamaliel, about the fifteenth or ſixteenth year of his age, when he came to Jeruſalem, and was there educated from the beginning of his youth. See Wells's Geography, vol. iii. p. 280.

Ver. 5. After the moſt ſtraiteſt ſect] The ſtricteſt ſect. So Joſephus calls the ſect of the Phariſees, almoſt in the very words which the Apoſtle

6 And now I ſtand, and am judged for the hope of the promiſe made of God unto our fathers:

7 Unto which promiſe our twelve tribes, inſtantly ſerving God day and night, hope to come. For which hope's ſake, king Agrippa, I am accuſed of the Jews.

8 Why ſhould it be thought a thing incredible with you, that God ſhould raiſe the dead?

9 I verily thought with myſelf, that I ought to do many things contrary to the name of Jeſus of Nazareth.

10 Which thing I alſo did in Jeruſalem: and many of the ſaints did I ſhut up in priſon, having received authority from the chief prieſts; and when they were put to death, I gave my voice againſt them.

11 And I puniſhed them oft in every ſynagogue, and compelled them to blaſpheme; and being exceedingly mad againſt them, I perſecuted them even unto ſtrange cities.

12 Whereupon, as I went to Damaſcus, with authority and commiſſion from the chief prieſts;

13 At mid-day, O king, I ſaw in the way a light from heaven, above the brightneſs of the ſun, ſhining round about me, and them which journeyed with me.

14 And when we were all fallen to the earth, I heard a voice ſpeaking unto me, and ſaying in the Hebrew tongue, Saul, Saul, why perſecuteſt thou me? It is hard for thee to kick againſt the pricks.

15 And I ſaid, Who art thou, Lord? And he ſaid, I am Jeſus, whom thou perſecuteſt.

16 But riſe, and ſtand upon thy feet: for I have appeared unto thee for this purpoſe, to make thee a miniſter and a witneſs both of theſe things which thou haſt ſeen, and of thoſe things in the which I will appear unto thee;

17 Delivering thee from the people, and from the Gentiles, unto whom now I ſend thee, 18 To open their eyes, and to turn them from darkneſs to light, and from the power of Satan unto God, that they may receive forgiveneſs of ſins, and inheritance among them which are ſanctified by faith that is in me.

19 Whereupon, O king Agrippa, I was not diſobedient unto the heavenly viſion:

20 But ſhewed firſt unto them of Damaſcus, and at Jeruſalem, and throughout all the coaſts of Judea, and then to the Gentiles, that they ſhould repent, and turn to God, and do works meet for repentance.

21 For theſe cauſes the Jews caught me in the temple, and went about to kill me.

22 Having therefore obtained help of God, I continue unto this day, witneſſing both to ſmall and great, ſaying none other things than thoſe which the prophets and Moſes did ſay ſhould come:

23 That Chriſt ſhould ſuffer, and that he ſhould be the firſt that ſhould riſe from the dead, and ſhould ſhew light unto the people, and to the Gentiles.

Ver. 6. Gen. iii. 15. xxii. 18. xxvi. 4. xlix. 10. Deut. xviii. 15. 2 Sam. vii. 12. Pſ. cxxxii. 11. Iſai. iv. 2. vii. 14. ix. 6. xl. 10. Jer. xxiii. 5. xxxiii. 14. Ezek. xxxiv. 23. xxxvii. 24. Dan. ix. 24. Micah vii. 20.—V. 7. James i. 1. Gr. night and day. Luke ii. 37. 1 Tim. v. 5. 1 Theſſ. iii. 10.—V. 10. Ch. viii. 3. Ch. ix. 14, 21.—V. 11. Ch. xxii. 19.—V. 12. Ch. ix. 2. xxii. 6. V. 18. Iſai. xxxv. 5. xlii. 7. Luke i. 79. Epheſ. i. 18. 2 Cor. vi. 14. Col. i. 13. 1 Pet. ii. 25. Epheſ. i. 11. Col. i. 12. Ch. xx. 32.—V. 20. Ch. ix. 19, 22. xiii. xiv. xxii. 17—21. Matth. iii. 8.—V. 21. Ch. xxi. 30.—V. 22. Ch. xxviii. 23. Rom. iii. 21. John v. 46.—V. 23. 1 Cor. xv. 20. Col. i. 18. Rev. i. 5. Luke ii. 32.

Apoſtle uſes. Jewiſh War, lib. i. c. 5. and in a variety of other places. They were in many reſpects ſtricter both as to doctrine and life than the Eſſenes. It appears from the Goſpels that many rigorous ſeverities were uſed by them. Comp. Luke xviii. 11, 12. Matth. xxiii. 5, 23, 25, 28. We are told, among other inſtances of their rigour, that they uſed to ſleep on narrow planks, that falling down from them, they might ſoon be awakened to prayer; and that others lay on gravel, and placed thorns ſo near them, that they could not turn without being pricked by them. See Whitby, Biſcoe, p. 92. and Witſius's Meletem, c. i. ſect. 15.

Ver. 7. Unto which promiſe, &c.] Great numbers of the ten tribes returned with the two tribes of Judah and Benjamin, from the Babyloniſh captivity, Ezra vi. 16, 17. viii. 35. Luke ii. 36. and many of them who did not return to the land of Canaan, did nevertheleſs entertain hopes of the coming of the Meſſiah, and of a reſurrection, and future ſtate of happineſs. See Benſon, and the note on Luke xx. 38.

Ver. 8. Why ſhould it be thought a thing incredible, &c.] Beza, with the Greek ſchoaliſt, would place a mark of interrogation after τί, and read it, What? is it thought incredible, &c? which is indeed well ſuited to the animated manner of St. Paul's ſpeaking.

Ver. 10. I gave my voice againſt them] St. Paul had no vote in the ſanhedrim, nor do we certainly know that any were put to death for Chriſtianity before St. Paul's converſion, except Stephen, in whoſe condemnation there was no voting at all. But the meaning plainly is, that he inſtigated the people againſt them as much as he could in that inſtance, and any other that might occur, whether at Jeruſalem or elſewhere; which, as we hinted on ch. xxii. 4. might perhaps be more than are recorded. Accordingly the Syriac renders it I joined with thoſe who condemned them. See Grotius, Doddridge, and Wetſtein.

Ver. 11. Compelled them to blaſpheme] A known paſſage in Pliny, lib. x. ep. 94. proves that the heathen perſecutors obliged Chriſtians who fell under their trial, not only to renounce Chriſt, but alſo to curſe him; and it appears from hence, that the Jews impoſed the like teſt upon them. See ch. xxii. 19, Doddridge, and Witſius's Meletem. cap. i. ſect. 22.

Ver. 12. Whereupon] Inſtead of ἐν οἷς, ſome would read ἐν αἷς, referring to πόλεις. Perſecuted them even in cities out of Jeruſalem; in which, as I went, &c. See Junius, Wetſtein, and Bowyer.

Ver. 14. To kick againſt the pricks] Againſt the goad. Wat.

Ver. 17. From the people] Beza mentions two MSS, and Dr. Mill adds the Syriac verſion, which read τῶν Ἰουδαίων, of the Jews, after λαοῦ, the people. But by the people, in the New Teſtament, are commonly meant the Jews, that therefore it ſeems to be the interpretation, though not the true reading. Several MSS. leave out the word now in the next clauſe.

Ver. 18. To turn them] That they may turn, ſeems to be the ſenſe of the original, which may properly be rendered thus, without the need of any ſupplement; and this will beſt agree with the conſtruction, and with the ſenſe in which the word ἐπιστρέψαι is generally uſed in other places. See ver. 20. ch. ix. 35. xi. 21. xv. 19. and De Dieu. Some would read the laſt clauſe, Receive forgiveneſs of ſins by faith that is in me, and inheritance, &c.

Ver. 21. The Jews—went about to kill me] The proper import of the word διαχειρίσασθαι is, to kill with their own hands; which was the more properly uſed here, as there was reaſon to apprehend that Paul would have been actually pulled to pieces in an aſſembly, as it ſeems leſs numerous and leſs violent than that which ſeized him in the temple. See ch. xxiii. 10. Beza, and Stockius.

Ver. 22. Having therefore obtained help of God] This may very probably expreſs the ſenſe he had of the late interpoſition of Providence in his favour, which we have touched upon in the note on ch. xxv. 4.

24 And as he thus ſpake for himſelf, Feſtus ſaid with a loud voice, Paul, thou art beſide thyſelf; much learning doth make thee mad.

25 But he ſaid, I am not mad, moſt noble Feſtus; but ſpeak forth the words of truth and ſoberneſs.

26 For the king knoweth of theſe things, before whom alſo I ſpeak freely. For I am perſuaded that none of theſe things are hidden from him; for this thing was not done in a corner.

27 King Agrippa, believeſt thou the prophets? I know that thou believeſt.

28 Then Agrippa ſaid unto Paul, Almoſt thou perſuadeſt me to be a Chriſtian.

29 And Paul ſaid, I would to God, that not only thou, but alſo all that hear me this day, were both almoſt, and altogether ſuch as I am, except theſe bonds.

30 And when he had thus ſpoken, the king roſe up, and the governor, and Bernice, and they that ſat with them.

31 And when they were gone aſide, they talked between themſelves, ſaying, This man doeth nothing worthy of death, or of bonds.

32 Then ſaid Agrippa unto Feſtus, This man might have been ſet at liberty, if he had not appealed unto Cæſar.

CHAP. XXVII.

Paul ſhipping toward Rome, foretelleth the danger of the voyage, but is not believed: they are toſſed to and fro with a tempeſt, and ſuffer ſhipwreck; yet all come ſafe to land.

Ver. 24. 2 Kings ix. 11. 1 Cor. iv. 10. Iſai. lix. 15.—V. 29. 1 Cor. vii. 7.—V. 31. Ch. xxiii. 9. xxv. 25.—V. 32. Ch. xxv. 11.

Ver. 24. Paul, thou art beſide thyſelf] Thou art diſtracted, much ſtudy drives thee to madneſs. Perhaps Feſtus might know that St. Paul, in his preſent confinement, ſpent a great deal of time in reading; and this was the moſt diſcreet turn which could have been given to ſuch a charge. Beſides, it would appear quite abſurd to Feſtus to hear Paul talk of a reſurrection from the dead accompliſhed in Jeſus, as the firſt-fruits, or pretend that a perſon ſhould come from the Jews, whom he looked upon as a barbarous nation, who ſhould enlighten not only his own nation, but even the Gentiles too, and, among the reſt, the polite and learned Romans and Greeks. This, in conjunction with what Paul had ſaid of the manner in which this was revealed to him, would naturally lead ſuch a half-thinker as Feſtus appears, to conclude roundly that he was a viſionary enthuſiaſt. Beſides, religious topics to men of rank and fortune among the heathens, were what they ever avoided; and thus it happened that, when Paul pleaded his cauſe before Feſtus, as well as before Felix, though his diſcourſe was altogether to the purpoſe, yet becauſe it turned upon religious ſubjects, it preſently tired the judges, and they would hear no more of it. See Jortin, Doddridge, and Beza.

Ver. 25. But he ſaid, I am not mad, &c.] Nothing can be more beautiful than this anſwer of St. Paul; and if great and good men, who meet with rude and inſolent treatment in the defence of the Goſpel, learn to behave with ſuch moderation, it will be a great acceſſion of ſtrength to the Chriſtian cauſe. The word σωφροσύνη, ſoberneſs, is with the ſtricteſt exactneſs oppoſed to μανία, madneſs; the MS. renders it ſoundneſs of mind. See Beza, and Raphel. Annot. ex Xenoph. p. 188.

Ver. 25. Before whom alſo I ſpeak, &c.] Before whom therefore, &c. MS.

Ver. 28. Almoſt thou perſuadeſt me, &c.] There can be no doubt that theſe words were delivered in the moſt ſerious manner by Agrippa. It plainly appears by St. Paul's anſwer, and from the ſenſe in which he there uſes ἐν ὀλίγῳ, almoſt, in oppoſition to ἐν πολλῷ, altogether, that he underſtood him to mean ſeriouſly that he was almoſt perſuaded, and conſequently that he did indeed mean ſo. To explain the words as if he had meant, thou perſuadeſt me to be almoſt a Chriſtian, or to become an almoſt Chriſtian, i. e. an hypocritical profeſſor, is quite foreign to the purpoſe; nor could Agrippa have any temptation to be ſo. See Doddridge, Calmet, and Weſley's Sermon, intitled "The Almoſt-Chriſtian."

Ver. 29. And Paul ſaid, I would to God, &c.] "When I conſider this Apoſtle (ſays lord Shaftſbury) as appearing either before the witty Athenians, or the Roman court of judicature, in the preſence of their great men and ladies, I ſee how handſomely he accommodateth himſelf to the apprehenſions and temper of thoſe politer people, &c." Charact. vol. i. p. 30. St. Paul is thought to have had his chain now wrapped about his own arm, and that he was not chained to a ſoldier while he ſtood before this grand and numerous audience. See Benſon, Grotius, and Tacit. Annal. lib. iv. ſect. 28.

Ver. 32. This man might have been ſet at liberty, if, &c.] Though this declaration of Agrippa would not ſecure Paul's deliverance, yet it might do him ſome ſervice, that a teſtimony to his innocence was pronounced by ſo learned and honourable a perſon of the Jewiſh nation and religion. Feſtus would probably entertain a better opinion of him upon this account, and would give directions to the officer who attended him, to treat him with ſo much the greater regard. Though it might ſeem in this view an unhappy circumſtance, that Paul had made his appeal to Cæſar; yet as it was, at the time when he made it, the propereſt method he could take for his own ſecurity, he would have reaſon to reflect upon it with ſatisfaction; and we before obſerved, that his viſiting Rome, under the character of a priſoner, was over-ruled by Providence to anſwer ſome important purpoſes. See Philip. i. 12, &c. Doddridge, Grotius, and Calmet.

REFLECTIONS ON ST. PAUL'S APPEARANCE BEFORE AGRIPPA.

The incident before us is another unanſwerable accompliſhment of our bleſſed Redeemer's promiſe, that when his diſciples were brought before governors and kings for his ſake, it ſhould be given them in that hour what they ſhould ſpeak, Matth. x. 18, 19. Indeed, it is impoſſible to imagine what could have been ſaid more ſuitable, or more graceful, than this diſcourſe of St. Paul before Agrippa; a diſcourſe, in which the ſeriouſneſs and ſpirituality of the Chriſtian, the boldneſs of the apoſtle, and the politeneſs of the gentleman and the ſcholar, appear in a moſt beautiful contraſt, or rather the moſt happy union.

There was no appearance of flattery, in the Apoſtle's congratulating himſelf upon having an opportunity to ſpeak before one ſkilled in the manners and records of the Jews, ver. 2. for the more they had been attended to, with the greater advantage would the cauſe of Chriſtianity have appeared. Nor could there be any arrogance in his inſiſting upon the ſtrictneſs of his former life, (ver. 4, 5.) ſince thoſe things which were once gain to him, he had long before counted loſs for Chriſt, Philip. iii. 7. The excellency of the end which inſpired him, was proportionable to the manner in which he was impreſſed with it: And well may they ſerve God inſtantly day and night, who have the hope of a happy reſurrection before them: Nor is the hope preſumptuous and vain, ſince it is founded on a divine promiſe. Why ſhould it ſeem incredible with any, that he who gave life ſhould reſtore it?—that God ſhould raiſe the dead? ver. 7, 8.

It was this expectation which ſupported the Chriſtians while Saul breathed out threatenings and ſlaughter againſt them, (ch. ix. 1.) while, mad with a profane and impious rage againſt Jeſus of Nazareth, he compelled them to blaſpheme, and perſecuted them even to ſtrange cities.* What keen remorſe muſt a conduct like this occaſion him, when he came to know what he did, and to ſee how gracious and condeſcending a Lord he had been perſecuting in his members! No wonder, when He took ſo kind a method to reclaim him, that it left an indelible impreſſion on his memory and his heart. ver. 9—15. Indeed, the whole unparalled ſtory is ſo pleaſant and inſtructive, that we may well bear to read it a ſecond and a third time; nay, and rejoice in it, as ſo many inſtructive circumſtances are added to thoſe already advanced. Comp. ch. ix. 2—16. and xxii. 5—16.

What can be more affecting than the view which our Lord here gives us of the ſtate in which the Goſpel found mankind, in compariſon with that into which it was intended to bring them? Its ſacred miniſtry, we ſee, was calculated to open their eyes, before ſpiritually blinded; to turn them from darkneſs to light, and from the power of Satan unto God; thus to enable them to receive the remiſſion of their ſins, and an inheritance among the ſaints in light. ver. 18. Wonderful ſcheme of divine goodneſs! Happy the men who are employed in promoting it! Let the profane world, like Feſtus, call their zeal madneſs, and account for it in a leſs decent and candid manner that this heathen ruler himſelf did: Still would theſe be found the words of truth and ſobriety; and the God of truth and wiſdom will ſtill approve them as ſuch, when all the wiſdom of the world ſhall appear fooliſhneſs and infatuation. ver. 24, 25.

God grant that none of us may reſt in being almoſt perſuaded to become Chriſtians! ver. 28. When convictions begin to open upon the benighted ſoul, let us follow the divine ray whitherſoever it leads, and not be diſobedient to the heavenly viſion: ver. 19. Would to God that all who ſhall read or hear the remarkable diſcourſe before us, might be not only almoſt, but altogether prevailed on to be what they profeſs, to become Chriſtians indeed; and ſo attain to a temper like that of the bleſſed apoſtle, even though his bonds were not to be excepted! (ver. 28, 29.) The religious joy which ſuch a diſpoſition muſt introduce, would

AND when it was determined that we ſhould ſail into Italy, they delivered Paul and certain other priſoners, unto one named Julius, a centurion of Auguſtus' band.

2 And entering into a ſhip of Adramyttium, we launched, meaning to ſail by the coaſts of Aſia, one Ariſtarchus, a Macedonian of Theſſalonica, being with us.

3 And the next day we touched at Sidon. And Julias courteouſly entreated Paul, and gave him liberty to go unto his friends to refreſh himſelf.

4 And when we had launched from thence, we ſailed under Cyprus, becauſe the winds were contrary.

5 And when we had ſailed over the ſea of Cilicia and Pamphylia, we came to Myra, a city of Lycia.

6 And there the centurion found a ſhip of Alexandria ſailing unto Italy; and he put us therein.

7 And when we had ſailed ſlowly many days, and ſcarce were come over againſt Cnidus, the wind not ſuffering us, we ſailed under Crete, over againſt Salmone,

8 And hardly paſſing it, came unto a place which is called, The fair havens; nigh whereunto was the city of Laſea.

9 Now when much time was ſpent, and when ſailing was now dangerous, becauſe the faſt was now already paſt, Paul admoniſhed them.

10 And ſaid unto them, Sirs, I perceive that this voyage will be with hurt and much damage, not only of the lading and ſhip, but alſo of our lives.

11 Nevertheleſs, the centurion believed the maſter and the owner of the ſhip, more than thoſe things which were ſpoken by Paul.

12 And becauſe the haven was not commodious to winter in, the more part adviſed to depart thence alſo, if by any means they might attain to Phenice, and there winter; which is an haven of Crete, and lieth toward the ſouth-weſt, and north-weſt.

13 And when the ſouth-wind blew ſoftly, ſuppoſing that they had obtained their purpoſe, looſing thence, they ſailed cloſe by Crete.

14 But not long after, there aroſe againſt it a tempeſtuous wind, called Euroclydon.

Ver. 1. Ch. xxv. 12.—V. 2. Ch. xix. 29.—V. 3. Ch. xxiv. 23. xxviii. 16.—V. 7. Or, Candy.—V. 9. The Faſt was on the Tenth day of the Seventh month, Lev. xxiii. 27, 29.—V. 10. Or, injury.—V. 14. Or, beat.

would render even heavier chains than his, light and tolerable; chains, which would quickly be transformed into ornaments of glory, and which ſhall deck the ſoul in the preſence of God, with a luſtre infinitely ſuperior to what the diadem of Agrippa, or the robes of Feſtus could diſplay.

Chap. XXVII. Ver. 1. That we ſhould ſail] Some ancient copies and verſions read it, that he ſhould ſail; which may ſeem moſt proper, as thoſe who ſent away Paul had no power over Luke or Ariſtarchus: yet they alſo determined, though freely, to ſail with him. Priſoners of importance uſed frequently to be ſent, as from other provinces, ſo from Judea to Rome. Julius was very probably a freed-man of the Julian or Cæſarean family, for freed-men had commonly the names of their maſters who gave them their freedom. He was centurion of a cohort, belonging to the legion called Auguſtus's legion. Lipſius mentions the inſcription of a ſtone, which confirms that there was ſuch a legion. See Lipſius in Tacit. Grotius, Wetſtein, and Lardner. Inſtead of into Italy, Dr. Waterland reads for Italy.

Ver. 2. Adramyttium] Was a city of Myſia, not far from Pergamos. Along with the apoſtle there went St. Luke, the writer of this book, and Ariſtarchus the Macedonian, from the city of Theſſalonica. Inſtead of being with us, the Vulg. reads, continuing (μενόντος) with us; intimating that the other meſſengers of the churches, which came with St. Paul and St. Luke to Jeruſalem, did not continue with them. Ariſtarchus had been with Paul in Epheſus at the time of the tumult there, ch. xix. 29. where he had been ſeized by the mob, and expoſed to great hazard. He afterwards attended him to Macedonia, and returned with him to Aſia, ch. xx. 4. Now accompanying him to Rome, he was there a fellow-priſoner with him, Col. iv. 10. and is mentioned in St. Paul's Epiſtle to Philemon, ver. 24. who was probably their common friend, as a valuable aſſiſtance in his miniſterial work. It was, no doubt, a great comfort to the Apoſtle to have the company of two ſuch friends as Luke and Ariſtarchus; as it was alſo a great inſtance of their affection to him, that they would follow him when he was going as a priſoner to Rome, not being aſhamed of his bonds; and eſpecially that they would attend him at a time when they knew ſailing to be dangerous. See ver. 9. Calmet, Doddridge, and Benſon.

Ver. 3. To refreſh himſelf] To enjoy the benefit of their care. Doddridge.

Ver. 5. When he had ſailed, &c.] When we had traverſed the ſea of Cilicia and Pamphilia, we arrived at Myra, &c. Wat. Inſtead of Myra, ſome read Lyſtra; but both are corrupted, according to Grotius, from Limyra, the name of a river and of a city in Lycia. Myra lies more within land, and Lyſtra is in Lycaonia.

Ver. 6. A ſhip of Alexandria ſailing, &c.] Bound for Italy, and put us board. Wat. There was a great trade carried on between Alexandria and the coaſts of Italy, conſiſting chiefly of the produce of Egypt, and of Perſian and Indian goods. The uſual port for this traffic was Italy, and the Alexandrians were indulged with a particular privilege, to engage their commerce.

Ver. 7. And when he had ſailed ſlowly] The Syriac aſſigns a reaſon for this, telling us, that it was owing to the ſhip's being deeply laden; but there ſeems to be another, and a very ſufficient reaſon aſſigned in the verſe itſelf, the wind not ſuffering; or rather, as ſome would read, not driving them, μὴ προσεῶντος. Cnidus was a city and promontory of Doris, in the peninſula of Caria. Crete is an iſland of the Mediterranean ſea, now called Candie; and Salmone is a promontory on the eaſtern coaſt of that iſland. See Heinſius, Bowyer's Conjectures, and Wells.

Ver. 8. And hardly paſſing it] And paſſing it with difficulty. The fair havens, ſo called to this day, was a conſiderable port in that part of Crete; not far from which was the city of Laſea, or Alaſſa, which appears to be the true reading, the city of Laſea being no where elſe mentioned. See Beza, Grotius, and Wetſtein.

Ver. 9. Becauſe the faſt was now already paſt] That is, the yearly faſt of atonement for the ſins of the people of Iſrael, mentioned in many places of the Old Teſtament; in two or three of which places it is ordered to be kept on the tenth day of the ſeventh month, five days before the feaſt of tabernacles. Now the feaſt of tabernacles began on the fifteenth day of the ſeventh month, which anſwers to part of our September and October; this Jewiſh faſt therefore fell about the twenty-fifth of September, and as it was now paſt for ſome time, the nights were growing long and dark, and the heavens cloudy: The Michaelmas floods were coming down upon the Mediterranean ſea, and the ſtormy months of autumn and winter advancing. Philo, in ſeveral paſſages, ſpeaks of this as an ill time to ſail; as does alſo Aratus. See Whitby, Raphel. Annot. ex Herod. p. 397. and Benſon.

Ver. 10. Of the lading and ſhip] Of the ſhip and cargo. Wat.

Ver. 22. And becauſe the haven, &c.] And that port not being commodious to winter in, moſt were of opinion to depart thence, and endeavour to reach Phenice, (a haven of Crete, which lies on the ſouth-ſide toward the weſtern part of that iſland,) and paſs the winter there. Heylin.

Ver. 13. Looſing from thence] That is, from the fair havens. Some have thought that the word ασσον rendered by, in the next clauſe, is a proper name; but it is uſed adverbially both by Homer and Herodotus. See Bowyer's Conjectures.

Ver. 14. Eroclydon] Among many other particulars reſpecting the air and weather of Syria, &c. we are told, that the weſterly winds there are generally attended with rain. (See Luke xii. 54. 1 Kings xviii. 41, &c.) But the eaſterly winds are uſually dry, notwithſtanding they are ſometimes exceeding hazy and tempeſtuous; at which times they are called, by the ſeafaring people, levanters, being not confined to any ſingle point, but blowing in all directions, from the north-eaſt, round by the north, to the ſouth-eaſt. The great wind, or mighty tempeſt, or vehement eaſt wind, deſcribed by the prophet Jonah, (i. 4. iv. 8.) appears to have been one of theſe levanters; as was alſo in all probability the Euroclydon here mentioned: For St. Luke deſcribes it to be ἄνεμος τυφωνικὸς, a violent or tempeſtuous wind, bearing away all before it; and, from the circumſtances which attended it, appears to have varied very little throughout the whole period 15 And when the ſhip was caught, and could not bear up into the wind, we let her drive.

16 And running under a certain iſland which is called Clauda, we had much work to come by the boat:

17 Which when they had taken up, they uſed helps, undergirding the ſhip; and fearing leſt they ſhould fall into the quickſands, ſtrake ſail, and ſo were driven.

18 And we being exceedingly toſſed with a tempeſt, the next day they lightened the ſhip;

19 And the third day we caſt out with our own hands the tackling of the ſhip.

20 And when neither ſun nor ſtars in many days appeared, and no ſmall tempeſt lay on us, all hope that we ſhould be ſaved was then taken away.

21 But after long abſtinence, Paul ſtood forth in the midſt of them, and ſaid, Sirs, ye ſhould have hearkened unto me, and not have looſed from Crete, and have gained this harm and loſs.

22 And now I exhort you to be of good cheer: for there ſhall be no loſs of any man's life among you, but of the ſhip.

23 For there ſtood by me this night the angel of God, whoſe I am, and whom I ſerve, 24 Saying, Fear not, Paul; thou muſt be brought before Cæſar: and lo, God hath given thee all them that ſail with thee.

25 Wherefore, ſirs, be of good cheer: for I believe God, that it ſhall be even as it was told me.

26 Howbeit, we muſt be caſt upon a certain iſland.

27 But when the fourteenth night was come, as we were driven up and down in Adria, about midnight the ſhipmen deemed that they drew near to ſome country;

28 And ſounded, and found it twenty fathoms; and when they had gone a little further, they ſounded again, and found it fifteen fathoms.

29 Then fearing leſt they ſhould have fallen upon rocks, they caſt four anchors out of the ſtern, and wiſhed for the day.

30 And as the ſhipmen were about to flee out of the ſhip, when they had let down the boat into the ſea, under colour as though they would have caſt anchors out of the fore-ſhip, period of it, from the true eaſt point. For after the ſhip could not ἀντοφθαλμεῖν, bear, or, in the mariner's term, loof up againſt it, (ver. 15.) but they were obliged to let her drive, we cannot conceive, as there are no remarkable currents in that part of the ſea, and as the rudder could be of little uſe, that it could take any other courſe than as the winds alone directed it. Accordingly, in the deſcription of the ſtorm, we find the veſſel was firſt of all under the iſland Clauda, (ver. 16.) which is a little to the ſouthward of the parallel of that part of the coaſt of Crete, from whence it may be ſuppoſed to have been driven; then it was toſſed along the bottom of the gulph of Adria, (ver. 27. and afterwards broken in pieces (ver. 41.) at Melita, which is a little to the northward of the parallel above-mentioned; ſo that the direction and courſe of this particular Euroclydon ſeems to have been firſt at eaſt by north, and afterwards pretty nearly eaſt by ſouth. Grotius, Cluver, and others, however authorized herein by the Alexandrian MS. and the Vulg. are of opinion, that the true reading ſhould be Εὐροακύλων, Euroaquilo, a word indeed as little known as Euroclydon, though perhaps leſs intitled to be received. For this Euroaquilo, agreeable to the words of which it is compounded, muſt have been a wind betwixt the Eurus and the Aquilo, and conſequently would be the ſame with the Cæcias, or Καικίας, a name ſo frequently taken notice of by the Roman authors, that it appears to have been adopted into their language. Thus we find Vitruvius (lib. i. c. 6.) deſcribing the poſition of the Cæcias, without diſtinguiſhing it by Greek characters, or making any apology for the introduction of a foreign name. Pliny likewiſe calls the ſame wind Helleſpontias, as blowing from the Helleſpont. The Cæcias, therefore, muſt have been known very early in the Roman navigation, and conſequently, even provided the mariners had been Romans, there was no neceſſity, at this time, and upon ſuch an occaſion, for the introduction of Euroaquilo, which muſt have been altogether a new term. Beſides, as we learn from ver. 6. that the ſhip was of Alexandria, ſailing to Italy, the mariners may well be ſuppoſed to have been Grecians, and muſt therefore be too well acquainted with the received and vernacular terms of their occupation, to admit of this Græco-Latin, or barbarous appellation. For it may be very juſtly objected, that provided the Euroaquilo had been a name ſo early received as this voyage of St. Paul, it is much that Pliny, Aul. Gellius, Apuleius, Iſidore, and other authors, who wrote expreſly upon the names and diverſities of winds, ſhould not have taken the leaſt notice of this. Whereas, if Euroclydon be a term or appellation peculiar to the mariners, denoting one of theſe ſtrong Levanters, we are to be the leſs ſurpriſed why St. Luke, (who was actually preſent in the ſtorm, and may be ſuppoſed to have heard the very word) is the only author who records it. Moreover, when we are told that this tempeſtuous wind was called Euroclydon, the expreſſion ſeems to ſuppoſe it not to have been one of the common winds, ſuch as were intirely denominated from their ſite and poſition, but ſuch an one as received its name from ſome particular quality and circumſtance which over and above attended it. As we find κλύδων uſed by the Seventy, Jonah i. 4, 12. inſtead of סער ſör, which always denotes a tempeſt properly ſo called, εὐροκλύδων will be the ſame with ευρε κλύδων, that is, an eaſtern tempeſt, and ſo far expreſs the very meaning which is affixed to a Levanter at this time. Virgil elegantly deſcribes one of theſe Levanters thus:

Ver. 19. Jonah i. 5.—V. 26. Ch. xxviii. 1.

> —— Ubi navigiis violentior incidit Eurus
> Nôſſe, quot Ionii veniant ad litora fluctus.
> Georg. ii. v. 107.

See Dr. Bentley on Free-thinking, ſect. 82. Mill, Wetſtein, Brekell's Introduct. to his Diſcourſe called "Euroclydon," and Shaw's Travels, p 329, &c.

Ver. 15. And when the ſhip was caught, &c.] And as the ſhip was violently hurried away, and was not able to bear up againſt the wind, &c. Doddridge and Heylin.

Ver. 16. Clauda] This iſland, otherwiſe called Gaudos, or Cauda, lay a little to the ſouth of the weſtern coaſt of Crete. See Mill.

Ver. 17. The quickſands] The greater and leſſer Syrtis on the African ſhore, infamous for their deſtruction of mariners. Many approved writers of antiquity have deſcribed them. Undergirding the ſhip was binding it round with robes and cables, in order to prevent it from bulging. See Gualtperius.

Ver. 20. And when neither ſun nor ſtars, &c.] Nor moon, is added in the Syriac verſion. See Mill and Wetſtein.

Ver. 21. And have gained this harm and loſs] Ὕβριν κ̀ ζημίαν, rendered harm and loſs, are uſed ver. 10. and no doubt they have a reference here to what the Apoſtle had before declared. Ὕβρις generally ſignifies ſome kind of wrong, and accordingly it is almoſt always uſed, with its compounds and derivatives, in this ſenſe: (comp. 2 Cor, xii. 10. Matth. xxii. 6. Luke xi. 45. xviii. 32.) but it extends to any violent aſſault, ch. xiv. 5. 1 Theſſ. ii. 2. and is here uſed for that of waves and winds. Our word injury exactly correſponds to it, and is uſed in the ſame latitude. Thus none would ſcruple to ſay, that a ſhip had been much injured by a ſtorm. Ζημία ſignifies a loſs, eſpecially a fine; (ſee Mark viii. 36.) and perhaps it may be uſed here to inſinuate that this loſs was a kind of fine paid for their own imprudence. To gain a loſs ſeems ſo odd a phraſe, that one would think κερδῆσαι was here put for ſuſtain, unleſs the uſe of it were intended to intimate, that, in ſuch extreme danger, they were to look upon it as a circumſtance of great advantage to eſcape with their lives; or, as it is elſewhere expreſſed with great ſpirit, to have life given for a prey, Jer. xxi. 9. xxviii. 2. See Elſner's Obſervat. vol. i. p. 486. Dr. Waterland renders it, but ſhould have ſaved this harm and loſs.

Ver. 23. The angel of God] An angel of the God, &c. There was great propriety in this, as Paul was ſpeaking to heathens.

Ver. 27. In Adria] In the Adriatic ſea. All that part of the Mediterranean which lay ſouth of Italy was called by the ancients the Adriatic ſea; and that which is now the gulph of Venice, was the Sinus Adriaticus, or Adriatic Bay. See Grotius, and Biſcoe's Lectures, p. 380.

31 Paul ſaid to the centurion, and to the ſoldiers, Except theſe abide in the ſhip, ye cannot be ſaved.

32 Then the ſoldiers cut off the ropes of the boat, and let her fall off.

33 And while the day was coming on, Paul beſought them all to take meat, ſaying, This day is the fourteenth day that ye have tarried, and continued faſting, having taken nothing.

34 Wherefore, I pray you to take ſome meat: for this is for your health: for there ſhall not an hair fall from the head of any of you.

35 And when he had thus ſpoken, he took bread, and gave thanks to God in preſence of them all; and when he had broken it, he began to eat.

36 Then were they all of good cheer, and they alſo took ſome meat.

37 And we were in all in the ſhip, two hundred threeſcore and ſixteen ſouls.

38 And when they had eaten enough, they lightened the ſhip, and caſt out the wheat into the ſea, 39 And when it was day, they knew not the land: but they diſcovered a certain creek with a ſhore, into the which they were minded, if it were poſſible, to thruſt in the ſhip.

40 And when they had taken up the anchors, they committed themſelves unto the ſea, and looſed the rudder-bands, and hoiſed up the main-ſail to the wind, and made toward ſhore.

41 And falling into a place where two ſeas met, they ran the ſhip aground; and the fore-part ſtuck faſt, and remained unmoveable, but the hinder part was broken with the violence of the waves.

42 And the ſoldiers counſel was to kill the priſoners, leſt any of them ſhould ſwim out, and eſcape.

43 But the centurion, willing to ſave Paul, kept them from their purpoſe, and commanded that they which could ſwim, ſhould caſt themſelves firſt into the ſea, and get to land:

44 And the reſt, ſome on boards, and ſome on broken pieces of the ſhip. And ſo it came to paſs, that they eſcaped all ſafe to land.

Ver. 34. 1 Kings i. 52. Matth. x. 30.—V. 35. 1 Sam. ix. 13. John vi. 11. 1 Tim. iv. 3, 4.—V. 40. Or, cut the anchors, they left them in the ſea, &c.—V. 41. 2 Cor. xi. 25.

Ver. 31. Except theſe abide in the ſhip, &c.] "Unleſs theſe mariners continue in the ſhip, without whoſe help we know not how to manage her, ye cannot be ſaved; for the promiſe made you of your lives was to be underſtood as given on condition of your taking the moſt prudential meaſures to ſecure them, which preſent circumſtances will admit." God foretold the deliverance of the ſhip's company as certain, though ſuſpended on this condition, becauſe he knew it would be complied with; and directed St. Paul to urge the neceſſity of that compliance, as what he knew would be the ſucceſsful means of ſecuring it: Though none can deny but theſe ſailors had a natural power of going out of the ſhip, or the ſoldiers a natural power of permitting them to do it. The application of this remark to other affairs of greater moment, appears both eaſy and important. See Doddridge, Bentley, and the Reflections.

Ver. 33. This day is the fourteenth, &c.] This is the fourteenth day, that, waiting for ſome favourable change, ye have continued faſting, and not taken one meal. Heylin. Comp. Matth. xi. 18. Appian ſpeaks of an army, which for twenty days together took neither food nor ſleep; by which he muſt mean, they never made full meals, nor ſlept whole nights together. The ſame interpretation muſt doubtleſs be given to the phraſe before us; which ſome alſo think may intimate, that they were now at ſhort allowance; as they were likely to have a much longer voyage than was at firſt intended, and had 276 ſouls on board. See Wetſtein, Calmet, and Brekell's Euroclydon, p. 26.

Ver. 34. There ſhall not an hair fall from the head, &c.] Some think this alludes to a cuſtom among mariners, to make vows in times of extremity, and to ſhave their heads, in conſequence of them; and ſo interpret theſe words, as if it were ſaid, "You need not vow your hair; you ſhall be ſafe without that expedient." But it appears rather to have been a proverbial and general expreſſion of entire ſafety. Comp. 1 Kings i. 52. Matth. x. 30. Luke xii. 7. xxi. 18. and Dryden's notes on Juvenal, p. 183.

Ver. 40. When they had taken up the anchors] When they had weighed their anchors, they committed [the ſhip] to the ſea. Some rather chooſe to render this, Having cut the anchors, they left them in the ſea. The original is certainly dubious, and will admit of either ſenſe. It is ſaid, they looſed the rudder-bands. Ships in thoſe days had commonly two rudders, one on each ſide, which were faſtened to the ſhip by bands or chains; and on looſing theſe bands, it is ſuppoſed that the rudders ſunk deeper into the ſea, and by their weight rendered the ſhip leſs ſubject to be overſet by the winds. But more probably the rudders had been faſtened when they let the veſſel drive; and were now looſened when they had need of them to ſteer her into the creek. For after they had juſt been throwing out their corn to lighten the ſhip, it is not eaſy to ſuppoſe they ſhould immediately contrive a method to increaſe the weight of it. The word 'Αρτέμονα, ſeems properly to be tranſlated main-ſail. Grotius contends, that it was a ſail near the fore-part of the ſhip, anſwering either to what we call the fore-maſt, or to the bowſprit; which laſt ſeems to agree beſt with the account which Stephens has collected from the moſt conſiderable authorities. See his Latin Theſaurus on the word Artemon. The laſt clauſe ſhould be rendered, Hoiſed up the main-ſail, and were carried by the wind to the ſhore. See Heinſius, De Dieu, Bochart's Hieroz. part ii. lib. iv. cap. 1. and Elſner's Obſervations, vol. i. p. 488.

Ver. 43. But the centurion, willing to ſave Paul, &c.] Thus God, for Paul's ſake, not only ſaved all the reſt of the ſhip's company from being loſt in the ſea, but kept the priſoners from being murdered, according to the unjuſt and barbarous propoſal of the ſoldiers: who could have thought of no worſe ſcheme, had they been all condemned malefactors, and had theſe guards, inſtead of conveying them to their trial, been carrying them to the place of execution. As we propoſe at the end of this book to make ſome general obſervations upon it, with reſpect to the proofs which it affords of the truth of Chriſtianity, we will anticipate a little, and ſubjoin here

REFLECTIONS ON CHAP. XXVII AND XXVIII.

How great is the force of a virtuous character, and a worthy and honourable behaviour, towards engaging the eſteem of all around us! Julius the centurion conceives a reverence and affection for St. Paul, (ch. xxvii. 3.) which, as in the beginning of this dangerous voyage it procured him the ſatisfaction of converſing with his friends at Sidon, and receiving the fruit of their affection, ſo was it, in the progreſs of the voyage, the occaſion of ſaving this great apoſtle's life, and with it that of the reſt of the priſoners. Let us learn thus to ſoften the fierce, and to convince the prejudiced; humbly truſting in that God, who, if our ways pleaſe him, can turn our enemies into friends, and preſerve and bleſs us by means of thoſe, who were intended to be only the inſtruments of affliction.

From the account which is here given us, (ver. 17—20) of the danger and diſtreſs ſuffered by St. Paul and his companions, let us learn to pity thoſe, who, being providentially engaged in a ſea-faring life, are often in ſuch deaths as theſe. When we hear, as it may be we do while far from the ſhores of our iſland, the ſtormy winds raging round us, and ſee the ſtupendous effects of their fury, which ſometimes appear, let us ſend up, as it were upon their rapid wings, our compaſſionate cries to the Almighty, who holdeth them all in his graſp, (Prov. xxx. 4.) that he would help and ſave thoſe, who are ready to be ſwallowed up alive in a watery grave; and perhaps many of them, while juſt on the brink of eternity, in the number of thoſe inconſiderates, who are of all others moſt unprepared for it!

Alas! to what perils will perſons expoſe themſelves, either to raiſe a fortune, or to gain a livelihood, or in obedience to the commands of men! Yet how few are there who would expoſe themſelves to the ſame for the ſake of God! They commit their all to the mercy of the waves; they truſt their life to a plank,—to a pilot; and yet it is often with great difficulty that they can truſt themſelves to the providence of that God, whoſe knowledge, goodneſs, and power are infinite, and the viſible effects of which they have ſo many times experienced.

Happy the man, in whatever extremities of danger, that is conſcious

CHAP. XXVIII.

Paul after his ſhipwreck is kindly entertained of the barbarians: the viper on his hand hurteth him not: he healeth many diſeaſes in the iſland: they depart towards Rome: he declareth to the Jews the cauſe of his coming: after his preaching ſome were perſuaded, and ſome believed not: yet he preacheth there two years.

AND when they were eſcaped, then they knew that the iſland was called Melita.

Ver. 1. Ch. xxvii. 26.

ſcious of a relation to the God of heaven, as his God, and his Father; that can ſay, like St. Paul, in this bleſſed parentheſis, whoſe I am, and whom I ſerve! May we be enabled to uſe the ſame language, to take the comfort of it, and commit ourſelves to the guardian care of our God with chearfulneſs. He knoweth them that are his, and will take care of his own. Let our faith put a reality into all his promiſes, that it ſhall certainly be, even as he hath ſaid: Thus may we continually encourage ourſelves in our God, nor will the event ſhame our hopes; but we ſhall find, by happy experience, that God will not only ſave us from ruin, but conduct us to joy, as well as to ſafety, everlaſting. ver. 22—25.

The conduct of St. Paul, (ver. 31, 32.) offers a remarkable illuſtration of the obligations we are under to uſe the moſt proper means for ſecurity and ſucceſs, even while we are committing ourſelves to the care of divine Providence, and waiting the accompliſhment of God's own promiſes: For it would be moſt unreaſonable to imagine that he ever intended any promiſe to encourage rational creatures to act in a wild and irrational manner; or to remain inactive, when he has given them natural capacities of doing ſomething, at leaſt, for their own benefit. It is in exerting theſe capacities, that we are to expect his powerful aid; and all the grace, beauty, and wiſdom of the promiſe would be loſt, if we were to take it in any other view. To abuſe it in a contrary view, is at beſt vain and dangerous preſumption, if all pretence to relying upon it be not profane hypocriſy.

How ſollicitous are men in danger, for the preſervation of this periſhing life! (See ver. 18, 19.) They caſt out their goods in a ſtorm; they throw away the tackling of the ſhip to lighten it, and for many ſucceeding days can abſtain even from eating their accuſtomed bread. O when ſhall we ſee a ſollicitude any thing like this, about the concerns of their never-dying ſouls! Alas! amidſt the extremeſt danger, they are rather like thoſe, who in ſuch a ſtorm as is here deſcribed, ſleep on the top of the maſt: (Prov. xxiii. 34.) Let us not wonder, therefore, if when awakened on a ſudden, and made to ſee and feel the exrremity of their caſe, they are for a while taken off from attending to their ſecular affairs; nor raſhly cenſure that as madneſs, which may be the firſt entrance of true wiſdom into their minds. Comp. Iſai. lix. 15.

Wee ſee how chearful St. Paul was, amidſt the rage of winds and waves, under a ſenſe of the faithful care of his God; and how the aſſurance which he gave the reſt, that their lives ſhould be preſerved, animated them to eat their bread with chearfulneſs ver. 34—38. With how much greater chearfulneſs may they ſuſtain all temporal loſſes, whoſe eternal life is ſecured by the word of God, and the engagement of a covenant which he has confirmed by an oath?

It was to St. Paul that the lives of thoſe who ſailed with him were given: And his fellow-priſoners owed to him a double preſervation,—both from the ſword, and from the ſea. ver. 42, 43. To be a priſoner in the company of a Paul, is a privilege preferable to liberty. Thus may a relation to God's faithful ſervants, and a community of intereſts with them, prove the means of great temporal advantages, even to thoſe who know not God themſelves. Happy theſe men, had they known that he was alſo ſtill more truly the miniſter of an eternal ſalvation! Surely, after ſo many remarkable circumſtances, pointing out the apoſtle to the company of this ſhip, as a teacher commiſſioned by God, and favoured with extraordinary intercourſes with him, they muſt be very inexcuſable, if they did not from henceforward commence his attentive hearers and diſciples; And yet, though they all eſcape ſafe to land on St. Paul's account, according to his prediction in the name of God, we hear not one word of gratitude and acknowledgement either to the Almighty Preſerver, or to him.

The cuſtoms of Greece and Rome taught them to call every nation but their own barbarous; but ſurely the generoſity which theſe uncultivated inhabitants of Malta ſhewed (chap. xxviii. 1, 2.) was far more valuable than all the varniſh which the politeſt education could give, where it taught not humanity and compaſſion.

It is with pleaſure we trace among them the force of conſcience, and the belief of Providence, which ſome more learned people have ſtupidly thought it philoſophy to deſpiſe;—Yet they erred, as every one muſt err, in concluding that calamities are always to be interpreted as divine judgements. ver. 4. Let us guard againſt the ſame miſtake, leſt, like them, we unwarily cenſure not only the innocent, but the excellent of the earth: candidly willing to correct and confeſs our erroneous ſentiments, when means of better information offer; and ſtudious to adjuſt our notions of mens characters according to truth; that ſo we may neither falſely calumniate, nor fondly deify them, but judge righteous judgement. ver. 5, 6, 10.

Happy wreck, on the ruins of which the temple of the Lord was built, and by occaſion whereof barbarians were transformed into Chriſtians! Who can ſay how many diſtempered minds were healed, how many ſons and daughters born to God and to glory in theſe three months ſpent here by St. Paul and Luke? ver. 11.—For, modeſt as that beloved phyſician of ſouls as well as of bodies is in every thing relating to himſelf, we cannot imagine that he was inactive, or unſucceſsful in the pious labour.

It is extremely probable, that the indulgence ſhewn to St. Paul at Rome, the remains of liberty which he enjoyed while in bonds there, and the much more valued opportunities of uſefulneſs which that liberty gave him, were, in ſome degree at leaſt, owing to the experience and report of theſe extraordinary events. ver. 16. Thus, O Lord, ſhalt thou lead us into whatever difficulties and dangers thou pleaſeſt, and we will chearfully wait the happy event, which ſhall at length prove the wiſdom and kindneſs of thy moſt myſterious conduct. In the mean time, even while travelling in the bonds of affliction, may we ſee thine hand in all the countenance which we meet with from our Chriſtian brethren. ver. 14—15. Cheared with their converſe and friendly offices, may we, like the bleſſed Apoſtle, thank God, and take courage, in an humble aſſurance that thou wilt ſtand by us in every future unknown extremity; and either manifeſt thy power and goodneſs in raiſing up human ſupports, or diſplay thy all-ſufficient grace, in a yet more glorious manner, by bearing us up when they fail us!

Who can fail to obſerve with pleaſure that uniform tenor of Chriſtian zeal, and compaſſionate regard to the ſalvation of men, which reigned in the mind of St. Paul, even to the very period, not of this hiſtory only, but to that of his life? No ſooner is he arrived at Rome,—a priſoner,—deſtitute,—afflicted,—deſpiſed,—but an earneſt deſire to communicate the bleſſings of the Goſpel to his kinſmen according to the fleſh, engages him to ſend for them, and to confer with them concerning the kingdom of God. ver. 17. Generouſly forgetting his own wrongs, and waving thoſe complaints which he might ſo juſtly have urged againſt his accuſers and perſecutors.—Yet he found them here, as well as in Judea, under prejudices which he could not conquer with all his ſtrength of Reaſon and eloquence. ver. 21, 22. They call Chriſtianity a ſect, and maintain that it is every where ſpoken againſt. But if this were indeed the caſe, how far was it from being a reaſon againſt embracing and obeying the Goſpel! ſince calumny is no diſcrimination of truth, and men might as well pluck the ſun from its ſphere, as by all their malice and rage dethrone that bleſſed Redeemer, whom God hath eſtabliſhed by a decree firmer than the ordinances of heaven.

That a religion every where oppoſed and ſpoken againſt, ſhould be every where received, in ſo ſhort a time, is ſurely no ſmall or inconſiderable miracle;—eſpecially when this religion is ſo far from promiſing any thing here below, to allure ſenſual men to embrace it, that it directly contradicts all their inclinations. All falſe religions have been readily received: The Chriſtian ſyſtem is that alone which, from its infancy, ſtood expoſed to all the powers of the earth, and which notwithſtanding in a little time ſpread its influences over the whole world. What ſtronger evidence can be offered, that it is indeed what it aſſumes to be,—the power of God unto ſalvation?

No Scripture of the Old Teſtament is more frequently referred to in the New, than thoſe words of Iſaiah, (ver. 26, 27.) which contain ſo juſt a deſcription of the ſtate of the Jewiſh nation, both in the days of that prophet, and in thoſe of Chriſt and his Apoſtles. How deplorable a caſe! to be ſpiritually blind and deaf, under the mid-day ſplendors of the Goſpel, and its loudeſt proclamations! To harden the heart againſt the moſt gracious offers of healing and life, and arm themſelves againſt their own ſalvation with weapons of eternal death! May divine pity and help be extended to thoſe, who are marching on by large ſteps towards the ſame character, and, as it is juſtly to be feared, to the ſame end! ver. 25. Mean time, adored be the divine grace, that any are inclined to hear and obey. To them the miniſters of Chriſt may turn with pleaſure, and find, in their faithful attention to the Goſpel, a ſufficient recompence for all the labours and hazards they encounter, in a zealous concern for its propagation.

To conclude, let us humbly and thankfully contemplate that gracious Providence, which ſecretly interpoſed to moderate the Apoſtle's confinement, and thereby gave him an opportunity of performing various and extenſive ſervices to the church, of which he muſt otherwiſe have been incapable. ver. 30, 31. Thus it is that the wrath of man praiſes God, and the remainder of it He reſtrains, (Pſ. lxxvi. 10.) He hath allotted to each of his ſervants, in his infinite wiſdom, a due proportion both of labours and ſufferings; and neither earth nor hell ſhall be able to break in upon HIS ſchemes, ſo as to obſtruct the one, or increaſe the other. The Sacred Hiſtory now cloſing upon us, affords many illuſtrations of this remark. May we be duly thankful for it; and, while we peruſe its important contents, let us indulge thoſe reflections which ſo naturally ariſe from them, to eſtabliſh our faith in the Goſpel, and to quicken our obedience to its laws. Amen.

Chap. XXVIII. Ver. 1. Eſcaped] Got ſafe to land. Wat. There were two iſlands called Melita; this was that which lay between Africa and Sicily, being about twelve miles broad and twenty long, and ſixty diſtant from Sicily to the ſouth. It took its name from the abundance of honey found therein,—for meli, in Greek, ſignifies honey. It alſo yields a great deal of cotton; and though the ſoil is but three feet

2 And the barbarous people ſhewed us no little kindneſs: for they kindled a fire, and received us every one, becauſe of the preſent rain, and becauſe of the cold.

3 And when Paul had gathered a bundle of ſticks, and laid them on the fire, there came a viper out of the heat, and faſtened on his hand.

4 And when the barbarians ſaw the venomous beaſt hang on his hand, they ſaid among themſelves, No doubt, this man is a murderer, whom, though he hath eſcaped the ſea, yet vengeance ſuffereth not to live.

5 And he ſhook off the beaſt into the fire, and felt no harm.

6 Howbeit, they looked when he ſhould have ſwollen, or fallen down dead ſuddenly: but after they had looked a great while, and ſaw no harm come to him, they changed their minds, and ſaid that he was a god.

7 In the ſame quarters were poſſeſſions of the chief man of the iſland, whoſe name was Publius; who received us, and lodged us three days courteouſly.

8 And it came to paſs that the father of Publius lay ſick of a fever, and of a bloody flux: to whom Paul entered in, and prayed, and laid his hands on him, and healed him.

9 So when this was done, others alſo which had diſeaſes in the iſland, came, and were healed:

10 Who alſo honoured us with many honours; and when we departed, they laded us with ſuch things as were neceſſary.

11 And after three months we departed in a ſhip of Alexandria, which had wintered in the iſle, whoſe ſign was Caſtor and Pollux.

12 And landing at Syracuſe, we tarried there three days.

Ver. 5. Mark xvi. 18. Luke x. 19.—V. 6. Ch. xiv. 11.—V. 8. Jam. v. 14, 15.—V. 10. Matth. xv. 6. 1 Tim. v. 17.

feet deep above the rock, it is very fruitful. It is now called Malta; and the place where St. Paul and his company were driven on ſhore, is at this time ſhewn to travellers, and goes by the name of St. Paul's ſhore, or haven. It is ſtrongly aſſerted, that ſince the landing of St. Paul, no vipers or other noxious animals are to be found on this iſland; and from hence it is that the earth and ſtones are ſuppoſed to have the power of driving away venomous creatures, and of preſerving for the bite of ſcorpions and ſerpents; for which purpoſe it is exported. The people of Malta were originally a colony of the Carthaginians, as appears from ſeveral old inſcriptions in Punic characters, and from the language of the preſent inhabitants, the number of whom is ſaid to be above 90,000. St. Paul's ſhipwreck here engaged a kind of religious veneration to the iſland; in conſequence of which, it was given in the year of our Lord 1530, by the emperor Charles V. to the knights of St. John in Jeruſalem, when they had been expelled from Rhodes by the Turks: they are 1000 in number, of whom 500 always reſide in the iſland, and are called Hoſpitalers, Knights Templars, or Knights of Malta. They were formerly compoſed out of eight nations, but now are only ſeven, becauſe the Engliſh knights are extinct ſince the reformation. They are, by the ſtatutes of their order, under a vow of celibacy, are obliged to repreſs all pirates, and to wage perpetual war with the Turks and other Mahometans. See Vertot's Hiſtory of the knights of Malta, Wells's Geogr. and Benſon.

Ver. 2. And the barbarous people] The ancients looked upon iſlanders in general as uncivilized, for want of a more free and common converſation with the reſt of mankind; and the Greeks and Romans in particular, looked upon all nations, except their own, as barbarous, (See Rom. i. 14.) juſt as the Jews contemned men of other nations, and called them heathens on account of their religion. The Malteſe however, were famous for their civility to ſtrangers. See Diodor. Siculus, lib. v. p. 204. Edit. Steph.

Ver. 4. The venomous beaſt] The fierce animal, ſeems the proper import of the word θηρίον: Bos has ſhewn that the phyſicians uſe it to expreſs any poiſonous animal; and Lucian applies it, as here, to a viper. To render it beaſt, is by no means juſtifiable: venomous creature, would be more allowable. It has been obſerved, that theſe people concluded St. Paul to have been guilty of murder, rather than of any other crime, becauſe they ſaw the viper hanging on his hand, which therefore they judged to have been the offending part; according to the rule which prevailed much among the ancients, that perſons were often remarkably puniſhed in that part of the body, which had been the immediate inſtrument of their ſin. Beza finely obſerves, in the true ſpirit of criticiſm, that ὐκ εἴασεν, ſhould be rendered, according to its exact form, hath not ſuffered; to ſignify, that they looked upon him as in effect a dead man, after having been bitten by that venomous creature. Though vengeance may here be underſtood of the divine vengeance in general, yet as theſe were the words of heathen idolaters, poſſibly they might refer to the deity worſhipped amongſt them under this name. See Bochart, Hieroz. pars ii. lib. 3. cap. 2. Elſner's Obſervations, vol. i. p. 489.

Ver. 5. And he ſhook off the beaſt] This was exactly agreeable to what our Lord had promiſed his diſciples ſhould do. See Mark xvi. 18. Luke x. 19. and compare with this the miracles of Moſes, Exod. iv. 2—5. vii. 10—12.

Ver. 6. But after they had looked a great while, &c.] Many of the heathens thought there was ſomething divine in the nature of ſerpents, and that deities, or good genii, who were made uſe of as the inſtruments of delivering and honouring thoſe who were the peculiar favourites of the gods, often appeared in that ſhape. Hence idols were often made with ſerpents near them; and there have been numerous, and indeed aſtoniſhing inſtances of religious worſhip, abſurd as it may ſeem, paid to that kind of animal. See the notes on Gen. iii. 15. Grotius, Whitby, and ſome others, think that the Meliteſe took St. Paul for Hercules, Αλεξικακος, (the driver-away of evil) who was worſhipped in this iſland, and was, according to Ptolemy, one of the gods of the Phœnicians. The Lyſtrans would have worſhiped St. Paul as a god, and afterwards ſtoned him as a blaſphemer, and the worſt of men; chap. xiv. 11—19. So ſoon do unthinking perſons run from one extreme to another, and ſo little regard is to be had to the warmth of affections, where it is not grounded upon reaſon and conviction! See "Rev. examined with candour." vol. i. p. 80. Jenkins on Chriſtianity, vol. ii. p. 246. Stillingfleet's Orig. Sacr. p. 516. Owen on Serpents, diſſert. iv. and Ptolemy's Geogr. lib. iv. cap. 4.

Ver. 7. Of the chief man of the iſland] Grotius has produced an ancient inſcription, by which it appears that the title of πρῶτος, or chief, was given to the governor of this iſland; and ſo it is uſed here by St. Luke, with his accuſtomed propriety of expreſſion.

Ver. 11. Whoſe ſign was Caſtor and Pollux] It was the cuſtom of the ancients to have images on their ſhips, both at the head and ſtern; the firſt of which was called the ſign, from whence the ſhip was named, and the other was that of the tutelar deity to whoſe care the ſhip was committed; which probably might give occaſion to the fable, that Europa was carried away by Jupiter in the ſhape of a bull. There is no doubt, but they had ſometimes deities at the head; and then, it is moſt likely, if they had any figure at the ſtern, it was the ſame; as it is hardly probable the ſhip ſhould be called by the name of one deity, and be committed to the care of another. The figure that was uſed for Caſtor and Pollux, was that of two young men on horſeback, with each a javelin in his hand, and by their ſide half an egg and a ſtar; but the ſign of Caſtor and Pollux was that of a double croſs. And though the Greeks took them for a ſign in the Zodiac called Gemini, or the Twins, and conſidered as ſacred to theſe fictitious deities, whom they ſuppoſed to be the ſons of Jupiter by Leda; it was not at firſt repreſented by two youths, but by two animals, as referring to the fruitfulneſs of goats, in producing twinkids, about the time the ſun was in that conſtellation. When theſe two appeared together, they were looked upon as propitious to ſailors, and therefore, for a good omen, they had them carved or painted on the head of the ſhip, and gave it a name from thence; and perhaps moſt of thoſe who ſailed in company with the apoſtle, might look upon it as fortunate, that they ſailed under ſuch a protection, and might promiſe themſelves a more proſperous voyage in that ſhip, than they had met with in that which brought them from Crete, as indeed they had; but it was owing to the protection, not of Caſtor and Pollux, but of a ſuperior deity, even that true God whoſe providence is continually over all his works. See Biſcoe's Lectures, p. 326. Hyde's Relig. Perſar. cap. xxxii. Natured Diſplayed, vol. i. p. 263. Lightfoot, Hammond, and Benſon.

Ver. 12. Syracuſe] Was the metropolis of Sicily, ſituated on the eaſt ſide of the iſland, and had a beautiful proſpect from every entrance, both by ſea and land. The port, which had the ſea on both ſides of it, was almoſt wholly ſurrounded with elegant buildings; all the ſuburbs being on both ſides banked up and ſupported with walls of marble. While in its ſplendour, this city was the largeſt and richeſt belonging to the Greeks; it was twenty two miles in circuit, and equalled Carthage in its wealth. It was called Quadruplex, becauſe it was divided into four parts; the firſt of which contained the famous temple of Jupiter; the ſecond, the temple of fortune; the third, a large amphitheatre, and a ſurpriſing ſtatue of Apollo; and the fourth, which was the iſland of Ortygia, the two temples of Diana and Minerva, and the celebrated fountain of Arethuſa: It was 13 And from thence we fetched a compaſs, and came to Rhegium: and after one day the ſouth-wind blew, and we came the next day to Puteoli:

14 Where we found brethren, and were deſired to tarry with them ſeven days: and ſo we went toward Rome.

15 And from thence, when the brethren heard of us, they came to meet us as far as Appii-forum, and the Three taverns: whom when Paul ſaw, he thanked God, and took courage.

16 And when we came to Rome, the centurion delivered the priſoners to the captain of the guard: but Paul was ſuffered to dwell by himſelf, with a ſoldier that kept him.

17 And it came to paſs, that after three days, Paul called the chief of the Jews together: and when they were come together, he ſaid unto them, Men and brethren, though I have committed nothing againſt the people, or cuſtoms of our fathers, yet was I delivered priſoner from Jeruſalem into the hands of the Romans.

18 Who when they had examined me, would have let me go, becauſe there was no cauſe of death in me.

19 But when the Jews ſpake againſt it, I was conſtrained to appeal unto Cæſar; not that I had aught to accuſe my nation of.

20 For this cauſe therefore have I called for you, to ſee you, and to ſpeak with you: becauſe that for the hope of Iſrael I am bound with this chain.

21 And they ſaid unto him, We neither received letters out of Judea concerning thee, neither any of the brethren that came, ſhewed or ſpake any harm of thee.

22 But we deſire to hear of thee what thou thinkeſt: for as concerning this ſect, we know that every where it is ſpoken againſt.

23 And when they had appointed him a day, there came many to him into his lodging; to whom he expounded and teſtified the kingdom of God, perſuading them concerning Jeſus, both out of the law of Moſes, and out of the prophets, from morning till evening.

Ver. 16. Ch. xxiv. 23. xxvii. 3.—V. 17. Ch. xxi. 33.—V. 18. Ch. xxii. 24. xxiv. 10. xxv. 8. xxvi. 31.—V. 19. Ch. xxv. 11. V. 20. Ch. xxvi. 6, 7. Ch. xxvi. 29. Epheſ. ii. 20. vi. 20. 2 Tim. i. 16.—V. 22. Ch. xxiv. 5, 14.—V. 23. See on ch. xxvi. 6. 22.

not far from mount Ætna. About 210 years before the birth of Chriſt, this city was taken and ſacked by Marcellus, the Roman general; and in ſtorming the place the famous Archimedes was ſlain by a common ſoldier, while he was intent upon his ſtudies. It was afterwards rebuilt by Auguſtus, and had at this time ſo recovered itſelf, as to anſwer its former ſplendour. It had at length three caſtles, three walls, and a marble gate, and was able to ſend out 12,000 heroes, and 400 ſhips; but it received ſuch a blow from the Saracens, A. D. 884. when they raſed it, that it has not been able to recover itſelf ſince. See Calmet, Wells's Geogr. and the Univ. Hiſt. vol. vii. p. 516. and vol. xvii. p. 29.

Ver. 13. And from thence we fetched a compaſs] From thence we coaſted round, and came over againſt Rhegium, a city and promontory in the ſouthernmoſt part of Italy; from which, as the name of the place implies, it was ſuppoſed the iſland of Sicily was broken off; for Rhegium, comes from the verb ῥηγνύω, or ῥήγνυμι, to break. It is now called Reggio, is an archbiſhop's ſee, and a conſiderable place for trade. See Juſtin. Hiſt. l. iv. cap. 1. Puteoli, now commonly called Pozzuoli, is a city in the Terra di Lavoro, a province in the kingdom of Naples, ſituated upon a hill, in a creek of the ſea, and juſt oppoſite to Baiæ. Within this city are five and thirty natural warm baths, celebrated for the cure of ſeveral diſeaſes; and from theſe baths, wells, or pits of water, called in Latin Putei, the name of the town is ſaid to be derived. At preſent it is a biſhop's ſee, under the archbiſhop of Naples. See Wells's Geogr. Benſon, and Addiſon's Travels, p. 134.

Ver. 15. When the brethren, &c.] That is, the Chriſtians reſiding at Rome,—came to meet him; ſenſible of the great character of St. Paul, and the important obligations which they were under to him, for his excellent Epiſtle to them, written a few years before this. It is very remarkable, that we have no certain information by whom Chriſtianity was firſt preached at Rome: Probably, as ſome inhabitants of that celebrated city were preſent at Jeruſalem on the day of pentecoſt, ch. ii. 10. they being converted themſelves, might, at their return, carry the Goſpel thither, confirming it by miraculous works, and by the exerciſe of extraordinary gifts. Appii-Forum was a town in the Appian-way, between Rome and Campania, at the diſtance of fifty-one miles from Rome. Tres Tabernæ, or the Three Taverns, was another place which ſtood on the Appian-way, about thirty miles from Rome. The rendering it Three Taverns gives us the idea of inns, or houſes appointed for refreſhment and accommodation. The proper meaning of the word Tabernæ is frontier towns, built to repreſs the inroads and inſults of foreigners. That this was a city, properly ſo called, and an epiſcopal ſee in the time of Conſtantine, is evident from Optatus, who mentions Felix a Tribus Tabernis, "of the Three Tabernæ," as one of the nineteen biſhops. See Hammond, and Wells's Geogr. The expreſſion at the end of the verſe, he thanked God, and took courage, may perhaps intimate, that his courage began in ſome meaſure to be ſhaken. He knew there was a famous church at Rome, which had been ſome time planted, (Rom. i. 8.) and to which, about three years before this journey, he had written a long Epiſtle, in which he had expreſſed an affectionate deſire to ſee them. Rom. i. 11. xv. 32. In a near view of doing this he now rejoiced, eſteeming it as the firſt-fruits of their friendſhip, that they had come a day's journey to meet him, no doubt in a very kind and reſpectful manner. He might reaſonably expect that they would contribute much to lighten his bonds, as without queſtion they did, though ſo ſtrange a panic ſeized them when he appeared before Cæſar to make his apology. See 2 Tim. iv. 16. Doddridge and Benſon.

Ver. 16. To the captain of the guard] It was cuſtomary for priſoners who were brought to Rome to be delivered to this præfect, or captain of the prætorian band, who had the charge of the ſtate priſoners, as appears from the inſtance of Agrippa, who was taken into cuſtody by Macro, the prætorian præfect, who ſucceeded Sejanus; and from Trajan's order to Pliny, when two were in commiſſion. The perſon who now held this office was the noted Burrhus Afranius; but before and after him it was held by two. Καθ' ἑαυτὸν rendered by himſelf, may ſignify either apart, or at his own pleaſure; and ver. 30. ſeems to fix the meaning of it to his dwelling apart in his own houſe. By this means he was excuſed from all the affliction, which lying in the common priſon, among the wretched creatures who would probably have been his companions there, muſt have given to a mind like his. The ſoldier was probably chained to him, as the Roman cuſtom was; concerning which ſee the note on ch. xii. 4. Who that had met the Apoſtle in theſe bonds would have gueſſed at his real character, and imagined him to have been one of the moſt upright, benevolent, and generous of mankind? It has been obſerved, that this entry of St. Paul in chains into the chief city of the world, in order to make it one of the chief of the church, is more glorious and triumphant to the eye of faith, than all the public entries of the Roman emperors. See Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xviii. c. 6. Plin. lib. x. ep. 65. Lardner's Credib. b. i. ch. 10. Biſcoe's Lectures, p. 360. Raphel Annot. ex Xenoph. p. 191, and Queſnelle.

Ver. 20. For the hope of Iſrael] "My ſufferings ariſe from my regard to that glorious Meſſiah, for whom Iſrael profeſſes to wait; and to that eternal life which he hath purchaſed, and ſecured for thoſe that receive him under that character."

Ver. 22. We know that every where it is ſpoken againſt] Juſtin Martyr hath aſſigned one of the chief reaſons why the Chriſtians laboured ſo univerſally under the popular odium: "for the Jews, ſaith he, not only curſed them in their ſynagogues, and did all they could to raiſe the hatred and enmity of mankind againſt them; but they ſent out choſen men from Jeruſalem, to acquaint the world, and more eſpecially the Jews every where, that the new ſect which aroſe from Jesus of Galilee was an atheiſtical and wicked ſect, to be avoided and deteſted by all mankind." The Jews ſpoke firſt againſt Jeſus himſelf, and afterwards againſt his Apoſtles; but it is not eaſy to fix the exact time when thoſe choſen men were ſent out by them. See Dial. cum Trypho, p. 170. Edit. Thirlby, Benſon, and Jortin.

Ver. 23. And teſtified the kingdom of God] Mr. Craddock obſerves, that Paul probably inſiſted on two topics; that the kingdom of God, which they had ſo long expected, was of a ſpiritual, and not of a temporal nature; and that Jeſus of Nazareth, in whoſe name he preached 24 And ſome believed the things which were ſpoken, and ſome believed not.

25 And when they agreed not among themſelves, they departed, after that Paul had ſpoken one word, Well ſpake the Holy Ghoſt by Eſaias the prophet unto our fathers, 26 Saying, Go unto this people, and ſay, Hearing ye ſhall hear, and ſhall not underſtand; and ſeeing ye ſhall ſee, and not perceive.

27 For the heart of this people is waxed groſs, and their ears are dull of hearing, and their eyes have they cloſed; leſt they ſhould ſee with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and underſtand with their heart, and ſhould be converted, and I ſhould heal them.

28 Be it known therefore unto you, that the ſalvation of God is ſent unto the Gentiles, and that they will hear it.

29 And when he had ſaid theſe words, the Jews departed, and had great reaſoning among themſelves.

30 And Paul dwelt two whole years in his own hired houſe, and received all that came in unto him, 31 Preaching the kingdom of God, and teaching thoſe things which concern the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, with all confidence, no man forbidding him.

Ver. 24. Ch. xvii. 4.—V. 26. Iſai. vi. 9. Matth. xiii. 14. Mark iv. 12. Luke viii. 10. John xii. 40. Rom. xi. 8.—V. 28. Ch xiii. 46. xviii. 6.—V. 31. Ch. iv. 31.

preached, was the perſon foretold, as the promiſed Meſſiah, and Lord of that kingdom. The frequent mention which we have of the proof of theſe points out of the law of Moſes, naturally leads us to conclude, that Paul expatiated on the typical nature of that law, from whence ariſes the ſtrongeſt and cleareſt proof of them. See Lowman's Rationale of the Heb. Rit. The length of the preſent conference ſhews how zealous a deſire St. Paul had for the converſion of his countrymen. It was undoubtedly a very curious and important diſcourſe, and every believer muſt have wiſhed to have been favoured with it, as well as with that of our Lord, of which we have only a general account, Luke xxiv. 27. But as God, for wiſe reaſons no doubt, hath thought fit to deny us that pleaſure, let us acquieſce in this, that we know enough to confirm our faith in the Goſpel, if we diſcover a teachable temper; and if we do not, the narration of other diſcourſes and facts would probably have occaſioned new cavils. For there is hardly any argument in favour of truth, from which a prejudiced and captious wit cannot draw an objection, and frame a ſophiſtry to maintain error. See on ch. xx, 21. Doddridge, and Craddock's Apoſt. Hiſt. part. ii. p. 306.

Ver. 25. Well ſpake the Holy Ghoſt] The Apoſtle could not refer to them all, becauſe ſome believed; but it is probable that moſt of them rejected the Goſpel. With reſpect to this paſſage from Iſaiah, which he applies to them, we obſerve that it is quoted oftener than any other text of the Old Teſtament, that is, ſix times, in the New; yet in ſuch a variety of expreſſion, as plainly proves that the Apoſtles did not confine themſelves exactly either to the words of the original, or of the Greek verſion. See the marginal references, and the Reflections at the end of the preceding chapter.

Ver. 30. And Paul dwelt two whole years, &c.] Before he was heard by Cæſar, or his deputy, upon his appeal. As St. Luke concludes his hiſtory with St. Paul's abode at Rome, before his journey into Spain, we may infer, that he wrote both his Goſpel and the Acts while the apoſtle was living; by whom it is very probable this book was reviſed, as the ancients alſo ſay his Goſpel was. Dr. Lardner proves from Ulpian, that the proconſul was to judge whether a perſon under accuſation was to be thrown into priſon, or delivered to a ſoldier to guard, or committed to ſureties, or truſted on his parole of honour. It appears from this paſſage, that the perſecution againſt the Chriſtians at Rome was not then begun: The Romans had not yet made any laws againſt the diſciples of Jeſus; for what is here related happened within the firſt ten years of the reign of Nero, before his cruelty againſt Chriſtians broke out; and it is moſt likely that St. Paul's friends in Nero's family (Philip. iv. 22.) uſed their intereſt with the emperor, to procure him the liberty which he now enjoyed. See More's Theological Works, p. 220. and Lardner's Credib. b. i. c. x. ſect. 9.

Ver. 31. Preaching the kingdom of God] In conſequence of St. Paul's ſermons and inſtructions, many converts were doubtleſs made; and this confinement, which ſeemed to have ſo diſcouraging an aſpect, was on the whole a means of promoting the Goſpel. Many of his retired hours were alſo employed in correſponding with the Chriſtian churches, and writing ſeveral of thoſe excellent Epiſtles, which have proved ſo great a bleſſing to the moſt diſtant ages. The Epiſtle to the Epheſians, to the Coloſſians and Philippians, as well as that to Philemon, were written from Rome during this impriſonment; and that to the Hebrews, as it is thought, in or quickly after it; but as for the ſecond to Timothy, it appears to be of a later date. It ſeems highly probable, that about the end of the two years here ſpoken of St. Paul was ſet at liberty. Some have queſtioned, whether he ever returned into the eaſt again; which yet from Philemon, ver. 22. and Heb. xiii. 23. he ſeems to have expected. Clemens Romanus (Epiſt. i. ad Cor. cap. v.) expreſly tells us, that he preached in the weſt, and that to its utmoſt bounds; which muſt at leaſt include Spain, whither he intended to go. Rom. xv. 24, 25. Theodoret adds, that he went to the iſlands of the ſea; and elſewhere he numbers Gaul, i. e. France, and Britain, among the diſciples of the tent-maker. But in what order he viſited theſe places, or how long he remained in any of them, cannot be determined. We are told, however, that about the year of Chriſt, 65, or 67, he returned to Rome, where ſome ſay he met with St. Peter, who was thrown into priſon with other Chriſtians, on a pretence of being concerned in the burning of the city. Chryſoſtom tells us, that he here converted one of Nero's concubines, which ſo incenſed that cruel prince, that he put him to death; probably after an impriſonment, in which the ſecond Epiſtle to Timothy was written. It ſeems to have been univerſally agreed among all ancient writers who mention his death, that he was beheaded at Aquæ Salviæ, three miles from Rome; for being free of that city, he could not be crucified,—as Peter was, according to the tradition of the Latin church, on the very ſame day. It is ſaid, and there is great reaſon to believe it, that this glorious confeſſor gave his head to the fatal ſtroke with the utmoſt chearfulneſs; and that he was buried in the Via Oſtenſis, two miles from Rome, where Conſtantine the Great erected a church to his memory, A. D. 318. which was ſucceſſively repaired and beautified by Theodoſius the Great, and the empreſs Placidia. But his moſt glorious monument remains in thoſe his immortal writings, which, with the aſſiſtance of God's grace, we now proceed to conſider. See Stillingfleet's Orig. Brit. p. 39. Euſeb. Eccleſ. Hiſt. lib. ii. cap. 22. Moſheim de Reb. Chriſtian, ante Conſtant. Magn. p. 107, 215. Wells's Geogr. part ii. chap. 6. and Witſius's Meletem, ſect. 12, and 13.

PROOFS OF THE TRUTH OF CHRISTIANITY, ARISING FROM THE ACTS OF THE APOSTLES.

There are many and ſtrong proofs of the truth of our divine religion, ariſing from this ſacred book, which we have now gone through by the aſſiſtance of God; and 1ſt, "The general doctrine contains nothing abſurd and unreaſonable." It teaches us that there is one only living and true God, who made heaven and earth, and all things that are therein; that we men in particular, are his offſpring; that his providence extends to all ages and nations; for he has never left himſelf without a witneſs, in that he has given men rain from heaven, and fruitful ſeaſons, filling their hearts with joy and gladneſs; that this univerſal creator, and wiſe governor, cannot poſſibly be confined within ſuch narrow limits, as temples built by men, nor be repreſented by any image or picture,—for he is omnipreſent, and in him we live, move, and have our beings; that, as he is infinite in wiſdom, and abundant in goodneſs, he loves all his creatures, and is no reſpecter of perſons; but, in every nation, he that feareth God, and worketh righteouſneſs, is accepted of him: that he requires of every man only according to his ability, and the opportunities which he enjoys; and therefore, the times of former darkneſs he winked at, and did not then expect ſo much knowledge and virtue among men, becauſe they were placed in leſs advantageous circumſtances: but that, when the world was over-run with ignorance, idolatry, and the moſt amazing wickedneſs, God ſent his own Son, a perſon of the higheſt dignity, and greateſt purity, to call mankind to repentance, and to aſſure them of mercy, if they did ſincerely repent. That, as the Son of God condeſcended ſo much as to appear in our nature, and to live among men for a number of years, in order to inſtruct them both by his doctrine and example, and even to lay down his life for their redemption;—therefore God hath raiſed him from the dead, and exalted him to his own right-hand, and made him Chriſt, or the anointed king, and Lord over all; having alſo conſtituted him judge both of the living and of the dead. In conſequence of which men are commanded to invoke his ſacred name;—to be initiated into his religion by the plain and ſignificant rite of baptiſm, which intitles them to all the privileges, and charges them with all the obligations of the members of his church and kingdom. And after that, they are frequently, and with great thankfulneſs, to commemorate his dying love, by eating bread, and drinking wine in remembrance of him; thereby profeſſing themſelves his diſciples, and repeating their reſolutions to imitate and obey him.

This glorious perſon converſed chiefly in Judea and Galilee, beginning his reformation among the Jews, who had then the ſoundeſt notions of God and religion; though they alſo were fallen into an amazing degeneracy. After he had duly prepared the well-diſpoſed among the Jews, he himſelf returned to heaven, and left the great work to be carried on by perſons whom he had inſtructed, and to whom he had not only gave a commiſſion, but communicated a fulneſs of the ſpirit. And when they had reaped the harveſt of what he had ſown among the Jews, they, according to his expreſs order, addreſſed themſelves to the Gentiles, teaching them the folly and wickedneſs, both of idolatry and every vice; and recommending it to all men, every where, to repent. Towards God, they recommended the great duties of love and fear, adoration and obedience: towards men, juſtice and charity, truth and ſincerity, love and beneficence: and, as to their own perſonal conduct, ſobriety and temperance, chaſtity and univerſal purity: frequently inculcating upon their converts the neceſſity of patience, and a contented mind; to get above this preſent world, and to have their affections ſo fixed on a better ſtate to come, that they might rather ſuffer difficulties, and perſecution, for the ſake of their religion, than betray or give it up. And all theſe excellent rules, they inforced by the weighty argument of a righteous judgment to come, when the Son of God ſhall deſcend as univerſal judge, and raiſe all mankind out of their graves; and will ſhow the higheſt favour to ſincere penitents, and the prevailingly good, but will puniſh the wicked with a dreadful and exemplary deſtruction.—Is there any thing in this doctrine abſurd and unreaſonable? any thing but what is highly worthy of God, and admirably ſuited to the preſent ſtate of men? Such is its intrinſic worth and excellence, that one would be ready to aſk, "What need could there be of miracles, to propagate a doctrine, which is in itſelf ſo reaſonable and good? Would it not have been ſufficient barely to have propoſed it, and then left it to recommend itſelf by its own worth and beauty?"—But, if we take a cloſer view of the prejudices of mankind, of the difficulty of breaking off wicked and inveterate habits, and of mens fondneſs for the religion in which they have been educated, as well as of their love of pomp and pleaſure; and what ſtrikes upon the ſenſes, more than of ſuch a ſimple doctrine as that of the goſpel, though founded upon the moſt ſolid truth, and recommending the pureſt, nobleſt virtue:—we ſhall no longer wonder, that infinite wiſdom ſhould grant the power of working miracles, and the atteſtation of the gifts of the ſpirit, to propagate a doctine, which is in itſelf ſo excellent and good.

2. "The particular doctrines taught by the Apoſtles were, with great propriety and wiſdom, ſuited to the ſtate of the perſons to whom they preached." The Jews did already believe in the one true God, and therefore they proceeded directly to prove to them that Jeſus was the Chriſt, that they might believe and obey him whom God had ſent.—The proſelytes of the gate had forſaken idolatry, and believed in the one true God; and therefore they likewiſe were exhorted to believe in Chriſt, and embrace his religion, as highly conducive to their increaſe in virtue and piety here, and to their being meet for the happineſs of the world to come. But as the idolatrous Gentiles truſted in falſe gods, and did not acknowledge the one only living and true God, they began with perſuading them to forſake their idolatry, and believe in him who is God alone; and when they had perſuaded them to turn from dead idols unto the living and true God,—they then, and not till then, laid before them the evidences for believing alſo in Jeſus, whom God had ſent, as the great prophet and Saviour of the world.

The Apoſtles never attempted to ſet men free from ſocial duties, or to abridge them of any of their civil rights and privileges. No; though they brought them over to a new religion, yet they often intimated that Chriſtianity alters nothing in mens civil affairs. The Chriſtian converts therefore continued under the ſame obligations as formerly, to obey the laws of the ſeveral countries where they lived, and had as good a claim as ever to all the privileges and advantages of civil ſociety. The moral law is of everlaſting obligation, and cannot poſſibly be aboliſhed; but Chriſtians are obliged to obey the moral law, not only from the fitneſs of things, but as it is adopted into the Chriſtian law, and inforced by goſpel motives.—The ceremonial law of the Jews was aboliſhed or vacated by the death of Chriſt, and the ſetting up of his religion in the world. For as it was deſigned to promote virtue and piety among the Jews only, till the time of reformation by the Goſpel, and as the Goſpel promotes theſe things after a nobler and more effectual manner, the ceremonial law was laid aſide, as no longer of any uſe. However, ſuch of the Jewiſh Chriſtians as could not ſhake off their fondneſs for it, were indulged in the obſervation of it; though they who underſtood and were convinced of their Chriſtian liberty, were no longer in ſubjection to it. But the Gentile converts were warned not to ſubmit to that yoke of bondage; for they could plead no prejudice in favour of it: they therefore were aſſured, that if they added the obſervation of the law of Moſes to that of the Goſpel as neceſſary to ſalvation, they would caſt the higheſt contempt on the Goſpel, and render it to them of none effect.

3. "The proofs and evidences which the Apoſtles gave of their miſſion and doctrine were abundantly ſufficient, both as to their ſtrength and number." Beſides the reaſonableneſs of what they advanced, they appealed to prophecies and miracles, and the various gifts of the Spirit. They did indeed always found their doctrine upon facts; but prophecy was a confirming evidence, both among the Jews, and proſelytes of the gate.

As to the argument drawn from ancient prophecy, I would obſerve, that ſome of the prophecies mentioned in the Acts, and other books of the New Teſtament, were expreſs predictions, and have been ſhewn by many writers to have been literally accompliſhed. See Dr. Sykes, Mr. Chandler, Bp. Chandler, Mr. Jeffries, Dr. Bullock, and ſeveral other anſwers to Collin's Grounds and Reaſons, &c. And ſuppoſing other paſſages, which have ſometimes been taken for prophecies, were no more than the Apoſtles applying a general rule or ſaving to a particular caſe, juſt as we ſay, upon ſeveral occaſions, "The old proverb is made good;" or, "The old ſaying is verified;" or their arguing from a ſimilar caſe, or uſing the words of the ancient prophets by way of accommodation, and to expreſs themſelves in phraſes that were familiar among the Jews,—that will not in the leaſt invalidate the argument from real predictions. And upon examining particular places, I am well ſatisfied that all the paſſages taken from the ancient prophets may be fairly reduced to one or other of theſe heads.—As the Jews and proſelytes of the gate were acquainted with the Scriptures of the Old Teſtament, and acknowledged their authority, when the apoſtles preached among them, they argued from the ancient prophecies; but in converting idolatrous Gentiles, they took another method, arguing for the being and perfections of the true God, from the works of creation and providence, and appealing to miracles and other facts, for the proof of Jeſus's being the great prophet and Saviour of mankind; and in this, as well as in all other things, they acted with great propriety. For it would have been abſurd to have argued from ancient prophecies among perſons who were either ignorant of them, or diſbelieved them.

As to miracles, and the various gifts of the Spirit,—it ſeems clear and evident to me, that there was nothing unbecoming the divine wiſdom, in granting men ſuch ſupernatural aids, when they were ſent by him to attempt an univerſal reformation; and the evidences have been ſhewn to be ſo full, and ſo many, that no man could reaſonably have expected more, even upon ſo great and uncommon an occaſion. Let us now, in the 4th and laſt place, ſum up the whole argument. As both the general and particular doctrines contained in the Acts of the Apoſtles are ſo reaſonable, and the proofs and evidences were ſo many and ſtrong, as well as wiſely ſuited to all ſorts of perſons,—certainly Chriſtianity, pure, primitive, original Chriſtianity was true, and ſufficiently atteſted to have come from God. And, "if it was once true, what pretence can any man now have for rejecting it?" Will he alledge, "that he cannot believe the hiſtory?" But, "for what reaſon will he alledge ſuch a thing? It is mere perverſeneſs to reject any hiſtory, without ſome ſufficient objections againſt its truth and validity." "Are all hiſtories to be rejected? and no facts credited but what we ourſelves have ſeen, and been perſonally acquainted with?" I never knew any man ſo hardy as to aſſert this, and ſtand to it; and if the hiſtories of former ages may be credible, why may not the hiſtory of the Acts of the Apoſtles deſerve regard? Will it be objected, that "it was written by a friend to Chriſtianity, and one that was himſelf a party concerned?" To this I would reply, that it is hardly poſſible (nay, morally ſpeaking, it is not poſſible) that any man ſhould write ſuch an hiſtory fairly and honeſtly but a friend to Chriſtianity. Can it be thought that an enemy to Chriſtianity (ſuppoſing ſuch things to have really happened, and that he had been acquainted with them,—can it be thought, I ſay, that an enemy to Chriſtianity) would have given us a faithful hiſtory of ſuch remarkable and uncommon things, and yet continue an enemy? Would not the whole thread of ſuch an hiſtory condemn ſuch a man? And would not all the world be ready to ſay, "Do you know this doctrine to be ſo excellent, and that ſo many, and ſuch great and ſurpriſing miracles were worked in confirmation of it? And yet do you yourſelf diſbelieve this doctrine, and deny the truth of this religion?" Surely no man, that had any value for his reputation, would have wrote ſuch an hiſtory, to condemn himſelf of the greateſt perverſeneſs; and one who had no value for his reputation, would certainly deſerve no credit nor regard: but ſuppoſing a man, upon conſidering Chriſtianity, together with its evidences, had turned Chriſtian, and after that wrote ſuch an hiſtory,—why then he was a friend, and in ſome meaſure a party concerned as well as St. Luke. And, if a friend to Chriſtianity, be the only perſon that can be reaſonably ſuppoſed to give a fair and full account of the doctrine, together with its grand atteſtations, "who could be more proper than a companion of the apoſtles? who not only converſed with thoſe that were eye and ear-witneſſes of the facts, but was perſonally concerned in many of the things which he relates?" There are few hiſtorians ſo immediately acquainted with the facts about which they write; and yet we generally give credit to their accounts, unleſs we have ſome weighty reaſons to the contrary.

Show the marks of forgery, or the ancient and credible hiſtory, which contradicts what is ſaid in the Acts of the Apoſtles, and then you may, with ſome reaſon, talk of rejecting that book. There are no inconſiſtencies nor contradictions in the hiſtory itſelf. Even the miraculous and extraordinary facts there related, were not impoſſible to the divine power, to which they are conſtantly and uniformly aſcribed; neither are they improbable, conſidering the grand deſign and occaſion of them. For, planting a new religion among men, in a time of ſuch univerſal darkneſs and degeneracy, muſt have required an extraordinary divine interpoſition; and great and ſtriking evidences were in a manner neceſſary to conquer men's great prejudices, and make them attentive. The plainneſs and ſimplicity of the narration are ſtrong circumſtances in its favour; the writer appears to have been very honeſt and impartial, and to have ſet down very fairly the objections which were made to Chriſtianity, both by Jews and heathens, and the reflections which enemies caſt upon it, and upon the firſt preachers of it. He has likewiſe, with a juſt and honeſt freedom, mentioned the weakneſs, faults, and prejudices, both of the apoſtles and their converts. There is a great and remarkable harmony between the occaſional hints diſperſed up and down in St. Paul's Epiſtles, and the facts recorded in this hiſtory; inſomuch, as that it is generally acknowledged, that the hiſtory of the the Acts is the beſt clue to guide us in the ſtudying of the Epiſtles written by that apoſtle. The other parts of the New Teſtament do likewiſe agree with this hiſtory, and give great confirmation to it; for the doctrines and principles are every where uniformly the ſame; the concluſions of the Goſpels contain a brief account of thoſe things which are more particularly related in the beginning of the Acts. And there are frequent intimations in other parts of the Goſpels, that ſuch an effuſion of the ſpirit was expected; and that with a view to the very deſign which the apoſtles and primitive Chriſtians are ſaid to have carried on, by virtue of that extraordinary effuſion which Chriſt poured out upon his diſciples after his aſcenſion: And finally, the Epiſtles of the other apoſtles, as well as thoſe of St. Paul, plainly ſuppoſe ſuch things to have happened as are related in the Acts of the Apoſtles; ſo that the hiſtory of the Acts is one of the moſt important parts of the ſacred hiſtory, for neither the Goſpels nor Epiſtles could have been ſo clearly underſtood without it; but by the help of it the whole ſcheme of the Chriſtian revelation is ſet before us in an eaſy and manifeſt view.

Even the incidental things mentioned by St. Luke are ſo exactly agreeable to all the accounts which remain of the beſt ancient hiſtorians, among the Jews and heathens, that no perſon who had forged ſuch an hiſtory, in later ages, could have had that external confirmation, but would have betrayed himſelf by alluding to ſome cuſtoms or opinions ſince ſprung up; or by miſrepreſenting ſome circumſtance, or uſing ſome phraſe or expreſſion not then in uſe. The plea of forgery therefore, in later ages, cannot be allowed; and for a man to have publiſhed an hiſtory of ſuch things ſo early as St. Luke wrote, (that is, while ſome of the apoſtles, and many other perſons were alive, who were concerned in the tranſactions which he has recorded) if his account had not been punctually true, could have been only to have expoſed himſelf to an eaſy confutation and certain infamy.

As therefore the Acts of the apoſtles are in themſelves conſiſtent and uniform,—the incidental things agreeable to the beſt ancient hiſtorians which have come down to us, and the main facts ſupported and confirmed by the other books of the New Teſtament, and by the unanimous teſtimony of ſo many of the ancient fathers,—we may, I think, very fairly, and with great juſtneſs, conclude, that if any hiſtory of former times deſerves credit, the Acts of the Apoſtles ought to be received and credited; and, if the hiſtory of the Acts of the Apoſtles be true, Chriſtianity cannot be falſe: For a doctrine, ſo good in itſelf, and attended with ſo many miraculous and divine teſtimonies, has all the poſſible marks of a true revelation.

I will therefore conclude, with moſt earneſtly wiſhing, that Chriſtianity were embraced by all mankind, according to its intrinſick worth and abundant evidence!—that the purity and ſimplicity of the original inſtitution, as it was left by Chriſt and his apoſtles in the ſcriptures, were more attended to!—and that all who believe Chriſtianity to be true would manifeſt it, by ſuch a virtuous holy life as that excellent religion doth every where recommend! See Benſon, vol. ii. p. 333, and more on the ſame ſubject in Biſcoe's Lectures, page 563.

THE EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE TO THE ROMANS.

CHAP. I.

Paul commendeth his calling to the Romans, and his deſire to come to them. What his goſpel is, and the righteouſneſs which it ſheweth. God is angry with all manner of ſin. What were the ſins of the Gentiles.

INTRODUCTION TO THE EPISTLE TO THE ROMANS.

THE ſum and ſubſtance of the Chriſtian religion is contained in the hiſtory of the life and death, the doctrine and diſcourſes of our Lord in the four Goſpels. The epiſtolary writings of the Apoſtles were occaſional, being intended to confirm the ſeveral churches to which they are addreſſed, in the rules of Goſpel faith and practice wherein they had before been inſtructed; and accommodated to the diſputes and controverſies, errors and falſe notions which prevailed amongſt them. The general method obſervable in theſe apoſtolical letters is, firſt, to diſcuſs the particular point debated in the church or among the perſons to whom they are addreſſed, and which was the occaſion of their being written: And in the next place to give ſuch exhortations to every Chriſtian duty and virtue, as would be at all times, and in every church, of neceſſary and abſolute importance; paying a particular regard to thoſe virtues, which the diſputes that occaſioned the Epiſtle might tempt them to neglect.

Now the former part of theſe epiſtolary writings cannot be properly underſtood, but by attending carefully to the ſtate of the queſtion there determined: Therefore, the errors and vain diſputes concerning faith and works, juſtification and ſanctification, election and reprobation, and the like, which have ſo much vexed and diſtracted the minds of Chriſtians, have all ariſen from one grand miſtake, of applying to themſelves, or other particular perſons now, certain phraſes or paſſages which plainly referred to the then ſtate and condition, not of particular perſons, but of whole churches, whether of Jews or Gentiles.

Of the Epiſtles, fourteen are written by St. Paul, which are not placed in our Bibles according to the order of time in which they were written, but according to the precedence, or ſuppoſed rank of the churches and perſons to whom they are addreſſed. We will here ſubjoin a brief chronological order, according to Michaelis and ſome others, from which Dr. Lardner varies a little, as the reader will find by referring to his Credibility.

Epiſtle to	Places where written.	A. D.
Galatians	Jeruſalem	49
1 Theſſalonians	Corinth	52
2 Theſſalonians	Corinth	52
1 Corinthians	Epheſus	57
2 Corinthians	Macedonia	58
1 Timothy	Macedonia	58
Romans	Corinth	End of 58
Philemon		61
Coloſſians Epheſians Philippians	Rome	62
Hebrews	Rome	63
Titus	Nicopolis	Uncertain
2 Timothy	Rome	67

It will be unneceſſary to ſay any thing concerning St. Paul, and the proofs ariſing to our common Chriſtianity from his wonderful converſion, after what has been offered in the notes on the foregoing book: To which, therefore, we refer our readers, particularly to the notes and Reflections on the ninth chapter.

That St. Paul was the author of the celebrated Epiſtle before us, appears firſt, from the inſcription; ſecondly, from his uſual ſalutation at the end; thirdly, from the ſtile and matter, both which are correſpondent with the reſt of his writings; and fourthly, from the conſent and tradition of the moſt early fathers, and the univerſal church. It was written from Corinth, when St. Paul was ſetting out from Jeruſalem with the ſupplies which had been collected in Macedonia and at Corinth; that is, in the year 58, which was the fourth of the emperor Nero. Paul had never been at Rome when he wrote this letter; and therefore it cannot turn upon ſome particular points, to revive the remembrance of what he had more largely taught in perſon, or to ſatiſfy the ſcrupulous in ſome things which he might not have touched upon at all. But we may expect a full account of his Goſpel, or thoſe glad tidings of ſalvation which he preached among the Gentiles, ſeeing this Epiſtle was intended to ſupply the total want of his preaching at Rome.

He underſtood perfectly well the ſyſtem of religion he taught; for he was inſtructed in it by the immediate revelation of Jeſus Chriſt; (Gal. i. 11. Epheſ. iii. 3. 1 Cor. xi. 23.) and being alſo endowed with the moſt eminent gifts of the Holy Spirit, and quite unbiaſſed by any temporal conſiderations, we may be ſure he has given us the truth, as he received it from our Lord: On the other hand, he was alſo well acquainted with the ſentiments and ſyſtem of the religion he oppoſed; for he was thoroughly ſkilled in Jewiſh literature and Jewiſh controverſy; and therefore we may very reaſonably ſuppoſe that the queries and objections, which in this Epiſtle he puts into the mouth of the Jew, were really ſuch as had been advanced in oppoſition to his arguments. He was a great genius, and a fine writer, and he ſeems to have exerciſed all his talents, as well as the moſt perfect Chriſtian temper, in drawing up this Epiſtle. The plan of it is very extenſive; and it is ſurpriſing to ſee what a ſpacious field of knowledge he has compriſed, and how many various deſigns, arguments, explications, inſtructions, and exhortations he has executed in ſo ſmall a compaſs.

This letter was ſent to the world's metropolis, where it might be expoſed to all ſorts of perſons, Heathens, Jews, Chriſtians, philoſophers, magiſtrates, and the emperor himſelf: No doubt the apoſtle kept this in view while he was writing, and guarded and adapted it accordingly. However, it is plain enough, the Epiſtle was deſigned to confute the unbelieving, and inſtruct the believing Jew; to confirm the Chriſtian, and to convert the idolatrous Gentile. Theſe ſeveral deſigns St. Paul reduces to one ſcheme, by oppoſing and arguing with the infidel, or unbelieving Jew, in favour of the Chriſtian, or believing Gentile. Upon this plan, if the unbelieving Jew eſcaped, and remained unconvinced, yet the Chriſtian Jew would be more inoffenſively, and more effectually inſtructed in the nature of the Goſpel, and the kind brotherly regard he ought to have to the believing Gentile, than if he had directed his diſcourſe plainly and immediately to him: But if his argument ſhould fail, in reference to the believing Jew, yet the believing Gentile would ſee his intereſt in the covenant and kingdom of God as ſolidly eſtabliſhed, by a full confutation of the Jewiſh objections, (which were the only objections that could, with any ſhew of reaſon, be advanced againſt it) as if the Epiſtle had been wrote for no other purpoſe: and thus it is of the greateſt uſe to us at this day.

Both ancients and moderns make heavy complaints of the obſcurity of this Epiſtle, though all agree it is a great and moſt uſeful performance: But we ſhall have a tolerable idea of it, if we obſerve that it conſiſts of four great parts or diviſions. The firſt diviſion contains the five firſt chapters; the ſecond the ſixth, ſeventh, and eighth; the third the ninth, tenth, and eleventh; the fourth the five laſt chapters.

Part I. diſplays the riches of divine grace, as free to all mankind; Jews and Gentiles were equally ſinful and obnoxious to wrath; and therefore, there was no way for the Jew to be continued in the kingdom of God, but by grace through faith; and by grace and faith the Gentile might be admitted into it. To reject this way of juſtification, was to reject the very method in which Abraham himſelf was juſtified, or intereſted in the covenant made with him; in which covenant believing Gentiles were included, as well as believing Jews; and had as great, or greater privileges to glory in. But if the Jew ſhould

PAUL, a ſervant of Jeſus Chriſt, called to be an apoſtle, ſeparated unto the goſpel of God,

2 (Which he had promiſed afore by his prophets in the holy ſcriptures,)

3 Concerning his Son Jeſus Chriſt our Lord, which was made of the ſeed of David, according to the fleſh,

4 And declared to be the Son of God with power; according to the ſpirit of holineſs, by the reſurrection from the dead:

Ver. 1. Acts ix. 15. xiii. 2. Gal. i. 15.—V. 2. See on Acts xxvi. 6. Ch. iii. 21. xvi. 26. Gal. iii. 8.—V. 3. Matth. i. 6, 16. Luke i. 32. Acts ii. 30. 2 Tim. ii. 8. John i. 14. Gal. iv. 4.—V. 4. Gr. determined. Acts xiii. 33. Hebr. ix. 14.

ſhould pertinaciouſly deny that, he could not deny that all mankind are intereſted in the grace of God, which removes the conſequence of Adam's offence. Through that offence all mankind are ſubjected to death, and through Chriſt's obedience all mankind ſhall be reſtored to life at the laſt day. The reſurrection from the dead is therefore a part of the grace of God in the Redeemer; and if all mankind have an intereſt in this part of the grace of God, why not in the whole of it? If all mankind were ſubjected to death through Adam's one offence, is it not much more reaſonable, that through the oppoſite nobler clauſe,—the goodneſs and obedience of the Son of God,—all mankind ſhould be intereſted in the whole of the grace which God has eſtabliſhed upon it: And as for law, or the rule of right action, it was abſurd for any part of mankind to expect pardon, or any bleſſedneſs upon the foot of that, ſeeing all mankind had broken it; and it was ſtill more abſurd to ſeek pardon and life by the law of Moſes, which condemned thoſe who were under it to death for every tranſgreſſion.

Part II. Having proved that believing Jews and Gentiles were pardoned, and intereſted in all the bleſſings and privileges of the Goſpel, through mere grace, St. Paul next ſhews the obligations laid upon them, to a life of virtue and piety under the new diſpenſation; and upon this ſubject he adapts his diſcourſe to the Gentile Chriſtians, in the 6th chapter; and in the 7th, and part of the 8th, he turns himſelf to the Jewiſh Chriſtians; then from ver. 12. to the end of the 8th chapter, he addreſſes himſelf upon the ſame head to both Chriſtian Jews and Gentiles; particularly giving them right notions of the ſufferings to which they were expoſed, and by which they might be deterred from the duties required in the Goſpel; and concluding with a very ſtrong and lively aſſertion of the certain perſeverance of all who ſincerely love God, notwithſtanding any infirmities or trials in this world.

Part III. Gives right ſentiments concerning the rejection of the Jews, which was matter of great moment to the due eſtabliſhment of the Gentile converts; concerning which ſee particularly the firſt note on ch. ix.

Part IV. Is taken up with a variety of practical inſtructions and exhortations; the grand deſign and uſe of all which is, to engage Chriſtians to act in a manner worthy of that Goſpel, the excellence whereof he had been illuſtrating.

It will be of great advantage to the reader, to have this ſketch of the Epiſtle ready in his thoughts: He cannot, however, enter entirely into the ſpirit of it, unleſs he enter into the ſpirit of a Jew in thoſe times, and have ſome juſt notion of his utter averſion to the Gentiles; his valuing and raiſing himſelf upon his relation to God and to Abraham, upon his law, and pompous worſhip, circumciſion, &c. as if the Jews were the only people in the world who had any manner of right to the favour of God: And it ſhould be well noted, that St. Paul, in this Epiſtle, diſputes with the whole body of the Jews, without reſpect to any particular ſect or party among them, and in oppoſition to the whole body of the Gentiles: For the grand propoſition, or queſtion in debate, is, "Are we Jews better than they Gentiles?" See ch. iii. 9, 29. In conſequence of this we obſerve further, that we cannot have clear conceptions of the argumentative, or controverſial part of the Epiſtle, unleſs we are clear in this point,—that the juſtification for which the apoſtle argues, is the right which we believing Gentiles have, through the favour and gift of God, to the bleſſings, honours, and privileges of his evangelical kingdom in this world: Not ſo, as thereby to have the poſſeſſion of the heavenly and eternal kingdom abſolutely ſecured to us, but ſo as to be bleſt with the aſſurance of pardon, the promiſes and hope of the eternal kingdom, and all proper light and means to prepare us for it, if we do not wickedly deſpiſe and abuſe it. It is this notion of juſtification alone which correſponds to the abovementioned general collective notion of Jews and Gentiles, and to the end and deſign of the Epiſtle.

We obſerve once more, that the whole Epiſtle is to be taken in connection, or conſidered as one continued diſcourſe, and the ſenſe of every part muſt be taken from the drift of the whole. Every ſentence or verſe is not to be regarded as a diſtinct mathematical propoſition or theorem, or as a ſentence in the book of Proverbs, whoſe ſenſe is abſolute, and independent of what goes before or comes after; but we muſt remember, that every ſentence, eſpecially in the argumentative part, bears relation to, and is dependant upon the whole diſcourſe, and cannot be underſtood, unleſs we underſtand the ſcope of the whole; and therefore the whole Epiſtle, or at leaſt the eleven firſt chapters of it, ought to be read over at once, as the moſt cloſely-connected piece.

With reſpect to the Apoſtle's manner of writing, it may be proper to take this opportunity to remark, that it is ſpirited, clear, and perſpicuous; for it will not be difficult to underſtand him, if our minds are unprejudiced, and at liberty to attend to the ſubject he is upon, and to the current ſcriptural ſenſe of the words he uſes: for he keeps very ſtrictly to the ſtandard of Scripture phraſeology. He takes great care to guard and explain every part of his ſubject, in which he is particularly cautious and exact; ſometimes writing notes upon a ſentence liable to exception, and ſometimes commenting upon a ſingle word. He was ſtudious of a perſpicuous brevity. See ch. v. 13, 14. He treats his countrymen the Jews with great caution and tenderneſs; he had a natural affection for them, and was very deſirous of winning them over to the Goſpel. He knew their paſſions and prejudices were very ſtrong for their own conſtitution; therefore, in his debates with them, he avoids every thing harſh, introduces every kind and endearing ſentiment, and is very nice in chooſing ſoft and inoffenſive expreſſions, ſo far as he honeſtly could; for he never flatters, or diſſembles the truth. His tranſitions and advances to an ungrateful ſubject are very dexterous aud appoſite,—as ch. ii. 1—17. viii. 17. He often carries on a complicated deſign, and while he is teaching one thing, gives us an opportunity of learning one or two more. So ch. xiii. 1—8. he teaches the duty of ſubjects, and at the ſame time inſtructs magiſtrates in their duty, and ſhews the true grounds of their authority. He is a nervous reaſoner, and a cloſe writer, who never loſes ſight of his ſubject, and who throws in every colour that may enlighten it. He writes under a deep and lively ſenſe of the truth and importance of the Goſpel, as a man who clearly underſtands it, and in whoſe heart and affections it reigned far ſuperior to all temporal conſiderations. But concerning St. Paul's manner of writing, ſee more in the note on 2 Pet. iii. 16.

We hope that what hath gone before will enable our readers to peruſe this Epiſtle with greater profit: However we ſhall ſubjoin, in the courſe of the annotations, a more particular detail of the contents of each part of it; while we refer thoſe who are deſirous of a more accurate analyſis to Taylor's "Key to the Apoſtolic Writings," and his Preface to the Romans, Locke's Synopſis, Michaelis's Introduction, p. 339, Turretin's Prælections, Calmet, and Doddridge.

Chap. I. Ver. 1. Paul, a ſervant, &c.] From this to the fifteenth verſe we have the introduction to this Epiſtle, in which St. Paul aſſerts his commiſſion as the Apoſtle to the Gentiles; throws in ſuch reflections concerning the Goſpel and our Lord, as were proper to arreſt the attention of the Jews; teſtifies his ſincere affection to the Chriſtians at Rome, and his earneſt deſire to preach the Goſpel among them. The firſt ſeven verſes of this chapter are but one compleat period, every member of it repreſenting to the mind of the devout reader ſome auguſt myſtery and edifying moral of our holy religion. Δουλ☉ is a bond-ſervant, or ſlave, who is the abſolute property of his maſter, and bound to him for life. He terms himſelf a called or invited Apoſtle, and therefore a true Apoſtle,—as an invited gueſt is a true and proper gueſt. See on ch. viii. 23. Concerning his ſeparation to the Goſpel, ſee on ch. xiii. 2. As the judaizing teachers diſputed St. Paul's claim to the apoſtolical office, it is with great propriety that he aſſerts it in the very entrance of an epiſtle, in which he propoſed an intire refutation of their principles. See Taylor, Locke, Calmet, and Blackwall.

Ver. 2. [Which he had promiſed afore, &c.] The Apoſtle, it is likely, aſſerts this to inſinuate a good idea of the Goſpel into the mind of the Jews at firſt ſetting out, and to put him upon inquiring; for even an unbelieving Jew, if at all diſpoſed to think, could not overlook or ſlightly regard this ſentiment. Taylor.

Ver. 3. According to the fleſh] That is, with regard to his human nature. Both the natures of our Saviour are here mentioned; but the human is mentioned firſt, becauſe the divine was not manifeſted in its full evidence till after his reſurrection. This too regards the Jew, and puts him in mind that Jeſus whom Paul preached was of the royal ſtock, whence they expected the Meſſiah would ſpring. See Taylor and Locke.

Ver. 4. With power] See on ver. 16. He who will read in the original what St. Paul ſays, Epheſ. i. 19, 20. concerning the power which God exerted in raiſing Chriſt from the dead, will hardly avoid thinking that he there ſees St. Paul labouring for words to expreſs the greatneſs of it. The word declared does not exactly anſwer the original, nor is it perhaps eaſy to find a word in Engliſh which perfectly anſwers to ὁρισθέντ☉, in the ſenſe the Apoſtle uſes it here. Ὁρίζειν ſignifies properly to bound, terminate, or circumſcribe; by which termination the figure of things ſenſible is made,—and they are known to be of this or that ſpecies, and ſo diſtinguiſhed from others. Thus St. Paul takes Chriſt's reſurrection from the dead, and his entering into immortality, to be the moſt eminent and characteriſtical mark whereby Chriſt is certainly known, and as it were determined to be the Son of God; and undoubtedly his reſurrection amply rolled away all the reproach of his croſs, and intitled him to the honour of the firſt-born among many brethren. The phraſe according to the Spirit of holineſs, ſays Mr. Locke, is here manifeſtly oppoſed to according to the fleſh in the foregoing verſe, and ſo muſt mean his divine nature; unleſs this be underſtood, the antitheſis is loſt. Doddridge, 5 By whom we have received grace and apoſtleſhip for obedience to the faith among all nations for his name:

6 Among whom are ye alſo the called of Jeſus Chriſt.

7 To all that be in Rome, beloved of God, called to be ſaints: Grace to you, and peace from God our Father, and the Lord Jeſus Chriſt.

8 Firſt, I thank my God through Jeſus Chriſt for you all, that your faith is ſpoken of throughout the whole world.

9 For God is my witneſs, whom I ſerve with my ſpirit in the goſpel of his Son, that without ceaſing I make mention of you always in my prayers,

10 Making requeſt (if by any means now at length I might have a proſperous journey by the will of God,) to come unto you.

11 For I long to ſee you, that I may impart unto you ſome ſpiritual gift, to the end ye may be eſtabliſhed;

12 That is, that I may be comforted together with you, by the mutual faith both of you and me.

13 Now I would not have you ignorant, brethren, that oftentimes I purpoſed to come unto you, (but was let hitherto,) that I might have ſome fruit among you alſo, even as among other Gentiles.

14 I am debtor both to the Greeks, and to the Barbarians, both to the wiſe, and to the unwiſe.

Ver. 5. Ch. xii. 3. xv. 15. 1 Cor. xv. 10. Epheſ. iii. 8. Or, to the obedience of faith. Acts vi. 7. Ch. xvi. 26.—V. 7. 1 Cor. i. 2. 1 Theſſ. iv. 7. 1 Gal. i. 3.—V. 8. 1 Cor. i. 4. Philem. 4. 1 Theſſ. i. 8.—V. 9. Ch. ix. 1. 1 Theſſ. ii. 5. 2 Tim. i. 3. Or, in my ſpirit. 1 Theſſ. iii. 10.—V. 10. Ch. xv. 23, 32. 1 Theſſ. iii. 10. Jam. iv. 15.—V. 11. Ch. xv. 29.—V. 12. Or, in you. Tit. i. 4. 2 Pet. i. 1.—V. 13. See Acts xvi. 7. Or, in you.—V. 14. 1 Cor. ix. 16.

dridge, however, and others think, that it appears little agreeable to the ſtile of Scripture in general, to call the divine nature of Chriſt the Spirit of holineſs, and therefore they rather refer it to the operation of the Spirit of God, in the production of Chriſt's body; by which means the oppoſition between the fleſh and the Spirit will be preſerved, the one referring to the materials acted upon, the other to the divine and miraculous agent. Comp. Luke i. 35. The ſenſe of the verſe may be expreſſed thus: "But determinately, and in the moſt convincing manner marked out to be the Son of God, as to that ſpiritual part in him, which remained perfectly holy and ſpotleſs under all temptations, by his being raiſed from the dead to univerſal dominion."

Ver. 5. We have received] This is a modeſt way of expreſſion; The Apoſtle meaning himſelf by the word we. Grace, or favour, and apoſtleſhip ſome think means the favour of being made an Apoſtle. Hence χάρις, grace, is put for the apoſtolic office; ch. xii. 3. xv. 15. 1 Cor. iii. 10. Epheſ. iii. 8. and in general grace or favour may ſignify any benefit, office, or endowment, which is the gift or effect of favour. But others would keep the clauſes diſtinct; "as it is certain, ſay they, that Paul did receive grace to ſubdue his heart to the obedience of Chriſt, and fit him to the miniſtry of the Goſpel, before he received his apoſtolical commiſſion, whenever we ſuppoſe that commiſſion to be dated." Dr. Waterland, after Wells, renders the next clauſe, to the obedience of faith concerning his name among all the Gentiles. Dr. Heylin's tranſlation, though rather paraphraſtical, ſeems to expreſs the Apoſtle's meaning: That I may, for the glory of his name [2 Theſſ. i. 12.] reduce to the obedience of faith [or of the Goſpel] ſome among all nations.

Ver. 6, 7. The called of Jeſus Chriſt, &c.] Called of Jeſus Chriſt,—called to be ſaints,—beloved of God, are but different expreſſions for Profeſſors of Chriſtianity. Any nation or people is called or invited of Jeſus Chriſt, called ſaints, who have in fact received the Goſpel, by what means ſoever it has been conveyed to them. In order to underſtand the Apoſtle aright in this firſt part of his introduction, all from the word Lord, in the middle of ver. 3. to the beginning of ver. 7. ſhould be read as in a parentheſis. The attentive reader will obſerve with great pleaſure what a variety of proper and important thoughts are ſuggeſted in theſe verſes; particularly the views which the Jewiſh prophets had given of the Goſpel,—the deſcent of Chriſt from David,—the great doctrine of the reſurrection and divinity of Chriſt,—the ſending the Goſpel to the Gentiles,—the privileges of Chriſtians, as the called and beloved of God, and the faith, obedience, and ſanctity to which they are obliged by their profeſſion. See Locke, Taylor, Doddridge, and Turretin.

Grace and peace] Grace, the peculiar favour of God; and peace, or all manner of bleſſings, temporal, ſpiritual, and eternal, from God the Father. This is the uſual way wherein the Apoſtles ſpeak:—God the Father,—God our Father: Nor do they often, in ſpeaking of him, uſe the word Lord, as it implies the Jehovah, the proper name of God. In the Old Teſtament indeed, holy men generally ſaid the Lord our God; for they were then as it were ſervants, whereas now they are ſons; and ſons ſo well known to their Father, that they need not frequently mention his proper name. It is one and the ſame peace, and one and the ſame grace, which is from God and from Jeſus Chriſt. Our truſt and prayer fix on God, as he is the Father of Chriſt; and on Chriſt, as he preſents us to the Father. Bengelius.

Ver. 8. Firſt, I thank] In the very entrance of this Epiſtle are the traces of all ſpiritual affections; but of thankfulneſs above all, with the expreſſion of which almoſt all St. Paul's Epiſtles begin. He here particularly thanks God, that what otherwiſe himſelf ſhould have done, was done at Rome already. My God, expreſſes faith, hope, love, and conſequently all true religion. In congratulations of the kind before us (that your faith, &c.) St. Paul deſcribes either the whole of Chriſtianity, as Col. i. &c. or ſome part of it, as 1 Cor. i. 5. Accordingly, he here mentions the faith of the Romans ſuitably to his deſign, ver. 12, 17. The goodneſs and wiſdom of God are remarkable, in that he eſtabliſhed the Chriſtian faith in the chief cities, ſuch as Jeruſalem and Rome, from whence it might be diffuſed throughout the whole world. Bengelius. Inſtead of your faith is ſpoken of, Dr. Waterland reads, is celebrated.

Ver. 9. With my Spirit] "Not only with my body, but with the whole bent, the greateſt integrity and ardour of my Soul."

Ver. 11. Some ſpiritual gift] That the Jews were the worſhippers of the true God, and had been for many ages his people, could not be denied by the Chriſtians; whereupon the former were very apt to perſuade their convert Gentiles, that the Meſſiah was promiſed and ſent to the Jewiſh nation alone, and that the Gentiles could claim or have no benefit by him; or if they were to receive any benefit by the Meſſiah, they were yet bound to obſerve the law of Moſes, which was the way of worſhip preſcribed by God to his people: This in ſeveral places very much ſhook the Gentile converts. St. Paul makes it his buſineſs in this Epiſtle, (as we have obſerved in the introduction) to prove that the bleſſings of the Meſſiah were intended for the Gentiles as well as the Jews; and that to make any one partaker of the benefits and privileges of the Goſpel, there was nothing more required than to believe and obey it: and accordingly here, in the entrance of the Epiſtle, he wiſhes to come to Rome, that, by imparting ſome miraculous gifts of the Holy Ghoſt to them, they might be eſtabliſhed in the true notion of Chriſtianity, againſt all attempts of Jews, who would either exclude them from the privileges of it, or bring them under the law of Moſes. So where St. Paul expreſſes his care that the Coloſſians ſhould be eſtabliſhed in the faith, it is viſible by the context, that what he oppoſed was Judaiſm. The Corinthians, who had enjoyed the preſence of St. Paul, abounded in ſpiritual gifts. See 1 Cor. i. 7. xii. i, &c. xiv. 1. So did the Galatians likewiſe; and indeed all thoſe churches which had enjoyed the preſence of any of the Apoſtles, had peculiar advantages in this from the laying on of their hands; for it was the particular office of the Apoſtles to beſtow miraculous gifts by this method: (Acts xix. 6. viii. 17, &c. 2 Tim. i. 6.) But as yet the Romans were greatly inferior to other churches in this reſpect; for which reaſon the Apoſtle, in the 12th chapter, makes a very beautiful mention of their ſpiritual gifts. He therefore deſires to impart ſome, that they might be eſtabliſhed; for by theſe the teſtimony of Chriſt was ſtrongly confirmed amongſt them. See Locke, Bengelius, and Bos.

Ver. 12. That is, that I may be comforted] St. Paul, in the former verſe, had ſaid, that he deſired to come among them, to eſtabliſh them. In theſe words that is, he explains, or as it were recalls what he had ſaid, that he might not ſeem to think them not ſufficiently inſtructed or eſtabliſhed in the faith; and therefore he turns the end of his coming to them, to their mutual rejoicing in one another's faith, when he and they came to ſee and know each other. This thought, ſo full of reſpect to his Chriſtian friends at Rome, is ſuggeſted with great delicacy and addreſs; and it is reaſonable to ſuppoſe that every new inſtance, in which miraculous gifts were communicated by the laying on the hands of any of the Apoſtles, would be a ſource of new edification and comfort to theſe holy men; as being ſo evident a token of the divine preſence with them, and a new and ſolemn ſeal ſet to the commiſſion they had received. This verſe would be more properly tranſlated, That is, that while I am among you, we may be comforted together by the mutual faith, &c. See Locke, Doddridge, Calmet, and L'Enfant.

Ver. 13. But was let] Hindered, Wat.

Ver. 24. I am debtor] As the Goſpel was committed to his truſt, he was a truſtee, and ſo a debtor to diſpenſe it freely to all, as he ſhould have opportunity, 1 Tim. i. 11. 1 Theſſ. ii. 4. St. Paul includes the 15 So, as much as in me is, I am ready to preach the goſpel to you that are at Rome alſo.

16 For I am not aſhamed of the goſpel of Chriſt: for it is the power of God unto ſalvation, to every one that believeth; to the Jew firſt, and alſo to the Greek.

17 For therein is the righteouſneſs of God revealed from faith to faith: as it is written, The juſt ſhall live by faith.

18 For the wrath of God is revealed from heaven againſt all ungodlineſs, and unrighteouſneſs of men, who hold the truth in unrighteouſneſs;

19 Becauſe that which may be known of God, is manifeſt in them; for God hath ſhewed it unto them.

20 For the inviſible things of him from the creation of the world are clearly ſeen, being underſtood by the things that are made, even his eternal power and Godhead; ſo that they are without excuſe:

Ver. 16. Pſ. xl. 9, 10. 2 Tim. i. 8. 1 Cor. i. 18. xv. 2. Acts iii. 26. xiii. 46. Ch. ii. 9.—V. 17. Ch. iii. 21. Hab. ii. 4. Gal. iii. 11. Col. iii. 6. Hebr. x. 38.—V. 18. Epheſ. v. 6.—V. 19. Acts xiv. 17. Or, to them. John i. 9.—V. 20. Pſ. xix. 1. Acts xiv. 17. xvii. 27. Or, that they may be.

the Romans under the term Greeks; for the Jews called all foreigners Greeks or Gentiles, as the Greeks and Romans called all foreigners barbarians; ſo that this diviſion comprizes all nations. The laſt clauſe ſhould be rendered both to the learned and the ignorant; for as σοφοι often ſignifies learned, (ſee 1 Cor. i. 20, &c.) conſequently ἀνόητοι muſt ſignify ignorant, or thoſe whoſe underſtandings had not been improved by cultivation. See Taylor, Bengelius, and L'Enfant.

Ver. 15. I am ready, &c.] The word πρόθυμον not only expreſſes readineſs, but in ſome caſes an eagerneſs of deſire. "I am ready and deſirous to preach the Goſpel even at Rome, though it be the capital of the world, a place of the greateſt politeneſs and grandeur, and a place where it might ſeem peculiarly dangerous to oppoſe thoſe popular ſuperſtitions to which the empire is ſuppoſed to owe its greatneſs and felicity: Yet ſtill, at all events, I am willing, I am anxious to come and publiſh this divine meſſage amongſt you, though it ſhould be at the expence of my reputation, my liberty, or life." See Doddridge and Raphelius.

Ver. 16. For I am not aſhamed, &c.] The Apoſtle here enters upon his ſubject, by affirming the excellency of the Goſpel, as a ſcheme of goodneſs calculated for the ſalvation of mankind, ver. 16, 17. and then ſhews what need the Gentile world had of the mercy of God, as they ſtood obnoxious to his wrath for their idolatry and abominable wickedneſs, which is deſcribed at large, ver. 18—32. This was proper to convince and awaken the Gentile, and to engage his attention; for this was proof enough, even to the wiſeſt philoſopher, how defective and erroneous he was in the knowledge of divine things, and how ineffectual any thing he had framed was to reform himſelf or the reſt of mankind. But the Apoſtle hath his eye too upon the Jew, and it is his deſign to point this black deſcription at his conſcience. Nothing would enter more readily into the thoughts of the Jew than the corruption of the Gentile world, which he would immediately and ſtrongly condemn, and ſo would be duly prepared for the Application in the next chapter: For what if his nation was not a whit better in their morals than the heathens? How could they, with any conſcience or modeſty, arrogate all the divine mercy to themſelves, or pretend that other men were unworthy of it, when they had done as much or more to forfeit it than others? See on ch. ii. 1. St. Paul calls the Goſpel the power of God. Δύναμις ſignifies frequently a moral power; either, firſt, objectively, as the power of evidence and motives to affect and influence the mind, Mark ix. 1. Acts iv. 33. 1 Cor. i. 18. Secondly, ſubjectively it ſignifies capacity, virtue or good diſpoſitions in the ſubject acting, Matth. xxv. 15. Luke i. 17. Acts i. 8. Hence we may conclude, that the Goſpel is the power of God to ſalvation, either as it is the effect of his great love and goodneſs, [his divine POWER hath given unto us all things that pertain to life and godlineſs, 2 Pet. i. 3.] or as it is admirably adapted to enlighten our minds, and ſanctify our hearts, or both. There is a noble frankneſs, as well as a very comprehenſive ſenſe in the laſt words of this verſe; to the Jew firſt, &c. by which St. Paul, on the one hand, ſtrongly inſinuates to the Jews their abſolute need of the Goſpel, in order to ſalvation; and on the other, while he declares to them that it was alſo to be preached to the Gentiles, he teaches the politeſt and greateſt of theſe nations, to whom he might come as an ambaſſador of Chriſt, both that their ſalvation alſo depended upon receiving it, and that the firſt offers of it were every where to be made to the deſpiſed Jews. See Taylor and Doddridge.

Ver. 17. For therein is the righteouſneſs of God revealed, &c.] Δικαιοσύνη Θεοῦ plainly ſignifies here, and in ſeveral other paſſages of this Epiſtle, not the eſſential righteouſneſs of God's nature, but the manner of becoming righteous which God hath appointed and exhibited in the Goſpel, (comp. ch. iii. 21, 22. x. 3. Philip. iii. 9. Matth. vi. 33.) and the phraſe may perhaps have the ſame ſenſe in many paſſages of the Old Teſtament. See Iſai. xlvi. 13. li. 5, 6, 8. lvi. 1. In this ſenſe it ſeems better to render the original by juſtification; for righteouſneſs, both in ſenſe and ſound, is too remote from juſtified. In thoſe places where it ſignifies moral rectitude in general, the word righteouſneſs properly anſwers the ſenſe of the Greek word. The juſtification of God revealed, in this verſe, is plainly in oppoſition to the wrath of God revealed in the next; and therefore juſtification muſt be underſtood in a ſenſe oppoſite to wrath. Some read this clauſe, the juſtification of God by faith is revealed to faith; but Vorſtius, and after him Mr. Locke, ſeem rightly to judge the ſenſe to be, "that the righteouſneſs of God is all through, from one end to the other, by faith; for the Goſpel ſalvation is indeed from firſt to laſt of faith on our part." By faith we were admitted, at the firſt converſion of the Gentile world, into this our preſent ſtate of grace and favour; ch. v. 2. by faith we continue in it; ch. xi. 20. by faith we duly improve it; Jude 20. and we are kept by the power of God, through faith, unto final ſalvation. 1 Pet. i. 5. But then a progreſſion or increaſe is at the ſame time implied; for this mode of ſpeaking is applied to things meaſurable or improveable, and denotes a ſucceſſion, acceſſion, or improvement; ἐκ, from, ſignifying the point from whence the progreſs or increaſe begins; and εἰς, to, ſignifying the point to which it tends. Thus, firſt, in things meaſurable, Exod. xxvi. 28. The bar ſhall reach from end to end. Secondly, in things improveable, Pſ. lxxxiv. 7. They go from ſtrength to ſtrength, that is, with a ſtill greater degree of ſtrength: Jer. ix. 3. They proceed from evil to evil; i. e. grow worſe and worſe. 2 Cor. iii. 18. From glory to glory; that is, from one degree of glory to another: and ſo here the ſalvation God hath provided in the Goſpel is from faith to faith, or wholly of faith on our part, by way of progreſs and improvement from the firſt faith to a ſtill higher degree; ſignifying the advances we ought to make in this grand principle of our religion. And this agrees very well with the Apoſtle's quotation, Hab. ii. 4. the juſt by faith ſhall live;—that is, he who believes and improves his faith into a principle of righteouſneſs, and through faith continues to work righteouſneſs, ſhall live;—But if he draw back, my ſoul ſhall have no pleaſure in him. But we are not of them that draw back unto perdition,—having caſt off their firſt faith,—but of them that believe by a progreſſive faith, unto the ſaving of the ſoul. Heb. x. 38, 39. See Taylor. Mr. Locke thinks, that the deſign of the quotation from Habakkuk is to prove, that whoever are juſtified either before, without, or under the law of Moſes, or under the Goſpel, are juſtified not by works, but by faith alone. See Gal. iii. 11.

Ver. 18. For] "There is no other way of obtaining life and ſalvation." Having laid down his propoſition, the Apoſtle now enters upon the proof of it. His firſt argument is, "The law condemns all men, as being under ſin; none therefore are juſtified by the works of the law." This is treated of to ch. iii. 20. And hence he infers, "therefore juſtification is by faith." The wrath of God ſignifies the vengeance of God, the deſtruction and puniſhment he will inflict upon ſinners. This is revealed not only by the general light of nature, and by frequent and ſignal interpretations of the divine providence, but likewiſe in the ſacred oracles, and particularly by that ſame Goſpel which reveals God's manner of juſtifying men. See Acts xvii. 30, 31. ch. ii. 5. 2 Tim. i. 10. Ungodlineſs ſeems to comprehend the atheiſm, polytheiſm, and idolatry of the heathen world; as unrighteouſneſs their other miſcarriages and vicious lives; according to which they are diſtinctly treated of by St. Paul, in the following verſes. The ſame appropriation of theſe words may be obſerved in other parts of this Epiſtle. Of men, means of men of all nations, all men every where. Before, it was only to the children of Iſrael that obedience and tranſgreſſion were declared and propoſed, as terms of life and death. The word rendered hold, ſignifies to retain or hold faſt; and then the Apoſtle's meaning will be their holding faſt, or retaining or knowing the truth, though they violate it in their lives. They are not wholly without the truth, but yet do not follow what they have of it; living contrary to what they do know, or neglecting to know what they might. This is evident from the next words, and from the ſame reaſon of God's wrath given, ch. ii. 8. in theſe words, who do not obey the truth, but obey unrighteouſneſs. See Locke, Bengelius, and Hammond.

Ver. 19. Is manifeſt in them, &c.] Is manifeſt among them, for God hath manifeſted it unto them. Waterland. That is, by a light univerſal as the ſun, the light of reaſon and of nature. See the next verſe, and ch. ii. 15.

Ver. 20. For the inviſible things, &c.] For from the creation of the world thoſe things of him which are inviſible, are (being duly attended to) clearly ſeen by the things which are made; even his eternal power and divinity. The inviſible things of God lie within the reach and diſcovery of mens reaſon and underſtanding; but yet they muſt exerciſe their faculties, and employ their minds about them: they are and can be diſcovered only if they are attentively conſidered. Bp. Warburton has a peculiar remark upon the laſt words of this verſe, and thoſe in the next, wherein he obſerves, that the Apoſtle evidently condemns the fooliſh policy of the Gentile ſages, who, when they knew God,—that 21 Becauſe that when they knew God, they glorified him not as God, neither were thankful, but became vain in their imaginations, and their fooliſh heart was darkened.

22 Profeſſing themſelves to be wiſe, they became fools:

23 And changed the glory of the uncorruptible God into an image made like to corruptible man, and to birds, and four-footed beaſts, and creeping things.

24 Wherefore God alſo gave them up to uncleanneſs, through the luſts of their own hearts, to diſhonour their own bodies between themſelves:

25 Who changed the truth of God into a lie, and worſhipped and ſerved the creature more than the Creator, who is bleſſed for ever. Amen.

Ver. 21. Epheſ. iv. 17, 18.—V. 23. Pſ. cvi. 20. Jer. ii. 11. Ezek. viii. 10.—V. 24. Pſ. lxxxi. 12. Wiſd. xii. 23. Acts vii. 42. 2 Theſſ. ii. 11, 12. 1 Theſſ. iv. 4. Lev. xviii. 22.—V. 25. Amos ii. 4. Or, rather.

is, diſcovered him, as St. Paul intimates, by the light of nature, yet glorified him not as God, by preaching him up to the people; but, carried away in the vanity of their imagination, by a miſtaken principle of politics, That a vulgar or general knowledge of him would be injurious to ſociety,—ſhut up his glory in their MYSTERIES, and gave the people in exchange for an incoruptible God, an image made like corruptible man, &c. wherefore God, in puniſhment for their ſins, thus turning his truth into a lie, ſuffered even their myſteries, which they erected (though on theſe wrong principles) for a ſchool of virtue, to degenerate into an odious ſink of vice and immorality;—giving them up unto all uncleanneſs and vile affections. That this was the Apoſtle's meaning, appears not only from the general tenor of the paſſage, but from ſeveral particular expreſſions; as ver. 23. where he ſpeaks of changing the glory of God to birds, beaſts, and creeping things: for this was the peculiar ſuperſtition of Egypt, and Egypt was the firſt inventreſs of theſe myſteries. Again, he ſays, They worſhipped and ſerved the creature more than the Creator. ver. 25. This was ſtrictly true with regard to the MYSTERIES: The CREATOR was there acknowledged by a ſmall and ſelect number of the participants; but the general and ſolemn worſhip in theſe celebrations was to their natural idols. In the open worſhip of Paganiſm, either public or particular, it was not at all true; for the creature was the ſole object of adoration. See Div. Leg. b. ii. ſect. 4. and Pearſon on the Creed, Art. 1.

Ver. 21. Neither were thankful] It is worthy our obſervation that gratitude to God is here put for the whole of religion; and as no principle can be nobler, ſo none can be ſtronger or more extenſive. Mr. Locke illuſtrates the next clauſe, by the ſtupid folly and vanity of their idolatry. See 2 Kings xvii. 15, 16. Acts xiv. 15. But the word διαλογισμοῖς, imaginations, or rather reaſonings, ſeems more properly to refer to the ſophiſtry of the philoſophers. They did violence to their judgements, and became void of judgement: they loſt their underſtanding, becauſe they would not follow its direction. They put the candle of the Lord under a buſhel, and the candle went out. The caſe is unhappily the ſame under any, even the cleareſt diſpenſation. The word ἀσύνετος, rendered fooliſh, ſignifies inconſiderate, in the higheſt and moſt culpable degree, as oppoſed to a ſincere uſe of what means and knowledge of God they had. Their heart was inconſiderate; that is, they made no ſerious conſcientious uſe of their underſtanding. See Locke, Taylor, Sykes's Connection, chap. xiv. p. 364. and Cudworth's Intellectual Syſtem, chap. iv. ſect. 10—31.

Ver. 22. Profeſſing themſelves to be wiſe] The original ſeems equivalent to Xenophon's φάσκοντες φιλοσοφὸι, profeſſing to philoſophiſe, which ſo evidently refers to the pride they took to the title of lovers of wiſdom. See Raphelius.

Ver. 23. And changed the glory, &c.] As their folly was evident in a variety of other vices, in which the philoſophers of heathen nations joined with the vulgar, So, particularly, in the early and almoſt univerſal prevalence of idolatry amongſt them; by which they changed the glory of the immortal, incorruptible, and eternal God, even all the majeſtic ſplendors in which he ſhines forth through earth and heaven, into the repreſenting image of mortal and corruptible man; which, how elegantly ſoever it might be traced, was a great and inſufferable degradation, had their folly proceeded no further: But, not content with this, they ſet up, as emblems of the deity, and objects of worſhip, brutes, and their images, birds, and four-footed animals, and even ſuch vile reptiles, as beetles, and various kinds of ſerpents which creep on the duſt. See the paſſages referred to on Acts xxviii. 6. It is a curious ſpeculation, and has employed the thoughts and pens of many, what could be the original of animal worſhip,—of a worſhip ſo degrading as that referred to in the preſent verſe, and which, though prevailing in almoſt all nations of the earth, was yet in a great meaſure peculiar to the Egyptians. Bp. Warburton urges, and with great ſhew of reaſon, in his very learned diſcourſe on the ancient hieroglyphics, that ſymbolic writing was the ſole origin of animal worſhip: for, ſays he, in thoſe improved hieroglyphics called ſymbols, in which it is confeſſed the ancient Egyptian learning was contained, the leſs obvious properties of animals occaſioned their becoming marks of analogical adaption, for very different ideas, whether of ſubſtances or modes; which plainly intimates that phyſical knowledge had been long cultivated. Now theſe ſymbols I hold to be the true original of animal worſhip: for firſt, this kind of idolatry was peculiar to the Egyptian ſuperſtition, and almoſt unknown to all the caſts of paganiſm but ſuch as were evidently copied from that original. Secondly, The Egyptians not only worſhipped animals, but plants, and in a word, every kind of being that had qualities remarkable, ſingular, and efficacious, becauſe all theſe had found their place in ſymbolic writing. Thirdly, Beſides the adoration of almoſt every thing exiſting, the Egyptians worſhipped a thouſand chimeras of their own creation, ſome with human bodies, and the head or feet of brutes, &c. For beſides the ſimpler methods in hieroglyphic writing of expreſſing their hero-gods by an intire plant or animal, there were two others, which the more circumſtantial hiſtory of theſe deities brought in uſe. Thus when the ſubject was only one ſingle quality of god or hero, the human ſhape was only partially deformed, as with the head of a dog, &c. But where the ſubject required a fuller catalogue of the hero's virtues, there they employed an aſſemblage of the ſeveral parts of various animals, each of which, in hieroglyphic writing, was ſignificative of a diſtinct property; in which aſſemblage that animal more particularly repreſentative of the god was moſt conſpicuous. Fourthly, That animal which was worſhipped in one city, was ſacrificed in another. Thus at Memphis they adored the ox, at Thebes the ram; yet in one place each of theſe animals was uſed in ſacrifice. The reaſon of this can only be, that at Memphis the ox was in hieroglyphical learning the ſymbol of ſome deity, and at Thebes the ram: for what elſe can be ſaid for the original of ſo fantaſtical a diverſity in repreſentative deities within a kingdom of one national religion? Fifthly, Brute-worſhip was at firſt altogether objective to their hero-gods, of whom animals were but the repreſentatives. This is ſeen from the rank they hold on ancient monuments, from the unvaried worſhip of ſome few of them,—as the Apis, which ſtill continued to be worſhipped as the repreſentative of Oſiris;—and from the teſtimony of Herodotus, who ſays, "That when the Egyptians addreſſed the ſacred animal, their devotions were paid to that god to whom the beaſt belonged." Sixthly, To make the matter plainer, it may be obſerved, that the moſt early brute-worſhip in Egypt was not an adoratian of the living animal, but only of its picture or image. Were indeed the original of brute-worſhip any other than what is here ſuppoſed, the living animal muſt have been firſt worſhipped, and the image of it would have been only an attendant ſuperſtition. Theſe conſiderations were ſufficient to ſhew, that hieroglyphics were indeed the true origin of brute-worſhip; this was conſequently begun in Egypt, and was propagated from thence. There the method of the learned was to record the hiſtory of their hero-gods in improved hieroglyphicks, which gave birth to brute-worſhip. For the characters of this kind of writing being the figures of animals, which ſtood for marks of their elementary gods, and principally of their heroes, ſoon made their hieroglyphics ſacred. And this, in a great ſpace of time, introduced a ſymbolic-worſhip of their gods under hieroglyphic figures. But the people preſently forgot the ſymbol or relation, and depraved this ſuperſtition ſtill farther by a direct worſhip; till at length the animals themſelves, whoſe figures theſe hieroglyphic marks repreſented, became the objects of religious adoration. Which ſpecies of idolatry, by the credit and commerce of the Egyptians, and their carriers the Phœnicians, in courſe of time ſpread amongſt other nations. See Div. Leg. b. iv. ſect. 4. p. 176.

Ver. 24. Wherefore God alſo gave them up] There are three degrees of ungodlineſs and of puniſhment deſcribed in theſe verſes: The firſt in ver. 21 to 24. the ſecond in ver. 25 to 27. the third in the 28th and following verſes. The puniſhment in each place is expreſſed by God gave them up. If a man will not worſhip God as God, he is ſo left to himſelf, that he throws away his very manhood. One puniſhment of ſin is from the very nature of it, as ver. 27. another as here is from vindictive juſtice. Between themſelves, ἐν ἑαυτοῖς, would be more properly rendered by themſelves; for the Apoſtle's ſentiment ſeems to be, that the abuſe of themſelves was their own act and deed; it was fit they ſhould be diſhonoured who diſhonoured God; and they could not be diſhonoured by any ſo much as by themſelves; nor by themſelves any other way ſo much as this. We have the ſame thought again ver. 27. and the ſame phraſe; where we render it in themſelves. Ἐν, in the Helleniſtick Greek, as the criticks tell us, has the force of all prepoſitions, and here may be tranſlated from, or by. See Bengelius, Taylor, and Bos.

Ver. 25. Who changed the truth of God into a lie] Elſner takes great pains to ſhew that the truth of God, here ſignifies what he really was; and a lie a falſe repreſentation. It is well known that idols are often called lies. Iſai. xliv. 20. Jer. iii. 23. xiii. 25. "They changed the truth of God, the true doctrines of his nature, and genuine inſtitutions of his worſhip, into a lie; into abominable idolatries, founded on the falſeſt repreſentations of God, and often ſupported by a train of artful forgeries." See Elſner's Obſervations, vol. ii. page 11.

26 For this cauſe God gave them up unto vile affections. For even their women did change the natural uſe into that which is againſt nature:

27 And likewiſe alſo the men, leaving the natural uſe of the woman, burned in their luſt one toward another; men with men working that which is unſeemly, and receiving in themſelves that recompence of their error which was meet.

28 And even as they did not like to retain God in their knowledge, God gave them over to a reprobate mind, to do thoſe things which are not convenient;

29 Being filled with all unrighteouſneſs, fornication, wickedneſs, covetouſneſs, maliciouſneſs; full of envy, murder, debate, deceit, malignity; whiſperers,

30 Backbiters, haters of God, deſpiteful, proud, boaſters, inventers of evil things, diſobedient to parents,

31 Without underſtanding, covenant-breakers, without natural affection, implacable, unmerciful:

32 Who, knowing the judgement of God, that they which commit ſuch things are worthy of death, not only do the ſame, but have pleaſure in them that do them.

Ver. 26. Lev. xviii. 22, 23. Epheſ. v. 12.—V. 28. Wiſd. xiv. 22, 23, &c. Or, to acknowledge. Or, a mind void of judgement. V. 31. Or, unſociable.—V. 32. Or, conſent with them. Hoſ. vii. 3.

Ver. 26. Into that which is againſt nature] Many horrible illuſtrations of this may be ſeen in Bos's Exercitations on the place.

Ver. 27. And likewiſe alſo the men] How juſt the Apoſtle's reflections are, and how pertinently he has placed this moſt abominable abuſe of human nature, at the head of the vices into which the heathen world were fallen, will be ſeen, if we obſerve, that Cicero,—the greateſt philoſopher in Rome,—a little before the Goſpel was preached,—in his book concerning the nature of the Gods, (where you will find a thouſand idle ſentiments upon that ſubject) introduces, without any mark of diſapprobation, Cotta, a man of the firſt rank and genius, freely and familiarly owning to other Romans of the ſame quality, this worſe than beaſtly vice as practiced by himſelf; and quoting the authority of ancient philoſophers in vindication of it. See lib. i. ſect. 28. Nay, and do we not even find the moſt elegant and correct, both of the Greek and Roman poets, avowing this vice, and even celebrating the objects of their abominable affection?—Indeed it is well known, that this moſt deteſtable vice was long and generally practiced by all ſorts of men, philoſophers and others: Whence we may conclude, that the Apoſtle has done juſtice to the Gentile world, in the other inſtances he gives of their corruption. Error is uſed alſo for idolatry. 2 Pet. ii. 18. See Calmet, Bos, and Taylor.

Ver. 28. And even as they did not like to retain God, &c.] Δοκίμαζω, which we render like, ſignifies to ſearch or explore; as goldſmiths try metal, to diſtinguiſh the good from the counterfeit. 1 Theſſ. v. 21. 1 Pet. i. 7. In oppoſition to this, ἀδόκιμος νοῦς, which we render a reprobate mind, Mr. Locke very ingeniouſly obſerves, muſt ſignify an unſearching, injudicious mind; for St. Paul often uſes compounds and derivatives, in the ſenſe wherein a little before he uſed the primitive words, though a little varying from the preciſe Greek idiom; an example whereof we have in this very word ἀδόκιμος, 2 Cor. xiii. where having, ver. 3. uſed δοκιμην, for a proof of his miſſion by ſupernaturl gifts, he uſes ἀδόκιμος for one who was deſtitute of ſuch a proof. So here he tells the Romans, that the Gentiles not exerciſing their minds to ſearch out the truth, and form their judgements right, God left them to an unſearching injudicious mind:—"Non explorantibus permiſit mentem non exploratricem." The words rendered, In their knowledge, ἐν ἐπιγνώσει, would be rendered more properly, With acknowledgement: For that the Gentiles were not wholly without the knowledge of God in the world, St. Paul tells us in this very chapter. But they did not acknowledge him as they ought: They had God, but did not ſo improve that knowledge, as to acknowledge or honour him as they ought. This verſe ſeems in other words to expreſs the ſame as ver. 21. The laſt words are an inſtance of the figure called Meioſis; for they imply thoſe things which are moſt expedient and enormous; ſuch as are mentioned in the next verſes. The reader will find in Wiſd. xiv. 11, &c. a diſcourſe like this of St. Paul, wherein idolatry is ſet forth as the ſource of men's greateſt crimes and profligacies. Mr. Locke thinks that the copulative and, at the beginning of this verſe, joins it to the 25th; and that the intermediate verſes ſhould be read in a parentheſis: But it is eaſy to ſee how the thread of the Apoſtle's diſcourſe is carried on, without ſuppoſing any parentheſis.—Ver. 23. The heathen diſhonoured God, by repreſenting him under the images of the meaneſt things, and ver. 24. He ſuffered them to diſhonour and debaſe themſelves by the vileſt luſts; ver. 25. They changed the true nature of God into a lie; and ver. 26, 27. He left them to change their nature, into ſomething worſe than brutal. Laſtly, ver. 28. they did not exerciſe their minds in ſearching and enquiring, that they might retain the knowledge of God, and reject the falſe notions of men; and therefore, God gave them up to an unthinking, unſearching, ſtupid mind. They would not uſe their reaſon in the knowledge and worſhip of God; and they acted as if they had no reaſon, in the manner of their living among men. And in the ſame way, all corruption of true religion is, and ever will be in proportion attended with corrupt and vicious practices. See Hammond, Taylor, Locke, Bos, and Clarke's ſermons, vol. iii. ſerm. ii. Dr. Waterland reads the verſe, And even as they had not diſcernment to retain God in their knowledge, God gave them up to an undiſcerning mind, &c.

Ver. 29. Wickedneſs] The original word ſignifies doing miſchief: that rendered maliciouſneſs denotes a malicious temper; and that rendered malignity, a cuſtom of repeating their malice frequently. Unrighteouſneſs, or injuſtice, ſtands firſt in this black catalogue, unmercifulneſs laſt. The whole enumeration contains nine particulars relating to the affections, two to converſation, three reſpecting God, themſelves, and their neighbour; two the tranſacting of outward affairs, and ſix the various relations in which they ſtood. See Bengelius, and Calmet. Inſtead of covetouſneſs, Dr. Waterland reads inordinate deſire.

Ver. 30. Haters of God] Diſcontented with his government, and diſaffected to his rule, as a righteous and holy being, who could not but be highly diſpleaſed with their abominations. Ὑβριστὰς, rendered deſpiteful, would be more properly rendered violent, or over-bearing in their behaviour to each other. It properly expreſſes the character of a man who is reſolved to gratify his own appetites and paſſions, and to purſue what he apprehends his own intereſt, right or wrong; without at all regarding thoſe inconveniencies or ſufferings which he may thereby bring upon himſelf. Inventors of evil things, means ſuch as piqued themſelves on making new diſcoveries in the arts of ſenſuality, or of miſchief; who found out new pleaſures, new ways of gain, and new arts of hurting their fellow-creatures, particularly in war. See Bengelius, Calmet, and Mintert.

Ver. 31. Without underſtanding] Without conſideration. Ἀσυνέτους. See on ver. 21.—Covenant-breakers: It is well known that the Romans, as a nation, from the very beginning of their commonwealth, never made any ſcruple of vacating altogether the moſt ſolemn engagement, if they did not like it; though made by their ſupreme magiſtrate, in the name of the whole people. They only gave up the general who had made it, and then ſuppoſed themſelves to be at full liberty. The cuſtom of expoſing their own new-born children to periſh by cold, hunger, or wild beaſts, which ſo generally prevailed in the heathen world, particularly among the Greeks and Romans, was an amazing proof of their being without natural affection: As was alſo that of killing their aged parents: For ἀστόργη may include the abſence both of parental and filial affection. See Bengelius, and Doddridge.

Ver. 32. Who, knowing the judgement of God, &c.] Agreeably to a reading in the Clermont copy, Mr. Locke renders this paſſage thus: "Who, though they acknowledge the rule of right,—δικαίωμα,—preſcribed them by God, and diſcovered by the light of nature, did not yet underſtand that they who do theſe things were worthy of death; and therefore not only do the ſame themſelves, but live well [συνευδοκοῦσι] with thoſe who do them: that is, converſe with them without any marks of diſeſteem and cenſure; whereas the Jew who condemns the evils which he practices, is much more inexcuſable:" ſo connecting this verſe with the ſecond chapter. See on ch. ii. 26. But neither is the authority of the Clermont copy by any means ſufficient to juſtify our admitting this reading, nor does it appear that it would make a good ſenſe: For ſurely, if they knew a rule of right preſcribed by God, they could not be ignorant that the violation of it would expoſe them to puniſhment; and it is evident, in fact, from numberleſs paſſages in heathen moraliſts, that they were ignorant of it. The Vulgate, indeed, does partly follow this peculiar reading; but adds, Non ſolum qui faciunt, ſed qui conſentiunt facientibus: "Not only they who commit theſe crimes, but they who agree with others that commit them;" which makes a ſenſe preferable to Mr. Locke's, though by no means agreeable to the original. It ſeems here to be ſtrongly implied, that to look with complacency on the vices of others, is one of the laſt degrees of degeneracy. A man may be hurried by his paſſions, to do the thing he hates; but he that has pleaſure in thoſe that do evil, loves wickedneſs for wickedneſs ſake: And hereby he encourages them in ſin, and heaps the guilt of others upon his own. See the following Reflections, Locke, Mill, Eraſmus, Doddridge, and Hallet's Introduction to J. Pearce on the Hebrews, p. 22.

REFLECTIONS ON THE GUILT OF TAKING PLEASURE IN OTHER MEN'S SINS: Ver. 32.

From the foregoing verſes we have a long catalogue of the blackeſt ſins that human nature, in its higheſt depravation, is capable of committing; and that ſo perfect, that there ſeems to be no ſin imaginable,

CHAP. II.

They that ſin, though they condemn it in others, cannot excuſe themſelves, and much leſs eſcape the judgement of God, whether they be Jews or Gentiles. The Gentiles cannot eſcape, nor yet the Jews, whom their circumciſion ſhall not profit, if they keep not the law.

THerefore thou art inexcuſable, O man! whoſoever thou art that judgeſt: for Ver. 1. Ch. i. 20. 1 Sam. xii. 5. Matth. vii. 2.

ginable, but what may be reduced to, and compriſed under ſome of the ſins here ſpecified. In ſhort, we have an abridgement of the lives and practices of the whole heathen world; that is, of all the baſeneſs to which both the corruption of nature, and the inſtigation of the devil, could for ſo many ages bring the ſons of men.

And yet, full and comprehenſive as this catalogue of ſin ſeems to be, it is but of ſin under a limitation: An univerſality of ſin under a certain kind; that is, of all ſins of direct and perſonal commiſſion. And is not this, it may well be aſked, a ſufficient comprehenſion of all? Is not a man's perſon the compaſs of his actions? Or can he operate further than he exiſts?—Yes, the Apoſtle tells us, in ſome ſenſe he may; as he may not only commit ſuch and ſuch ſins himſelf, but alſo take pleaſure in others who commit them. This is indeed the furtheſt that human depravity can reach; the higheſt point of maliciousneſs that the debauched powers of man's mind can aſcend to. For ſurely that ſin, which exceeds the horrible liſt before us, muſt needs be ſuch a one, as muſt nonpluſ the devil himſelf to proceed further. It is the very extremity, the concluding period of ſin, the laſt finiſhing ſtroke of the devil's image drawn upon the human ſoul.

The ſenſe of St. Paul's words, in ver. 32. naturally reſolves itſelf into this plain propoſition, "That the guilt ariſing from a man's delighting, or taking pleaſure in the ſins of others, (or in other men for their ſins, which is all one) is greater than he can poſſibly contract by a commiſſion of the ſame ſins in his own perſon: And this for the following reaſons:

1. There is no natural motive to induce or tempt a man to this mode of ſinning; and it is a moſt certain truth, that the leſs the temptation is, the greater the ſin; for in every ſin, by how much more free the will is in its choice, by ſo much is the act more ſinful. If the object be extremely pleaſing, and apt to gratify it, there, though the will has ſtill a power of refuſal, yet it is not without ſome difficulty; on which account it is that men are ſo ſtrongly incited to, and ſo hardly diverted from the practice of vice; namely, becauſe the ſenſual appetite ariſing from it is ſtill importuning, and drawing them to it.

"But from whence, it may be aſked, ſprings this pleaſure? Is it not from the gratification of ſome deſire founded in nature?" It is indeed very often an irregular gratification, yet ſtill the foundation of it is, and muſt be, ſomething natural. So that the whole amounts to this; that the naturalneſs of a deſire, is the cauſe that the gratification of it is pleaſure, and pleaſure importunes the will, and ſo renders its refuſal or forbearance difficult. Thus drunkenneſs is an irregular ſatisfaction of the appetite of thirſt; uncleanneſs an unlawful gratification of the appetite of procreation, and covetouſneſs a boundleſs purſuit of the principle of ſelf-ſecurity. So that all theſe are founded in ſome natural deſire, and therefore pleaſurable, and on that account capable of ſoliciting and enticing the will. In a word, there is hardly any one vice or ſin, of direct and perſonal commiſſion, but what is an abuſe of one of thoſe two grand natural principles;—either that which inclines a man to preſerve himſelf, or that which inclines him to pleaſe himſelf.

But what natural principle, faculty, or deſire either of pleaſure or preſervation, can be gratified by another man's purſuit of vice! It is evident that all the pleaſure which naturally can be received from a vicious action, can immediately affect none but him who perpetrates it, and no man can feel by another man's ſenſes. So that the delight a man takes from another's ſin, can be only a fantaſtic, preternatural complacency, ariſing from that of which he has really no feeling. It is properly a love of vice as ſuch; a delighting in iniquity for its own ſake; and is a direct imitation, or rather exemplification of the malice of that evil ſpirit, who delights in ſeeing thoſe ſins committed, of which the very condition of his nature renders him incapable.

If a man plays the thief, as Solomon remarks, and ſteals to ſatisfy his hunger; though it cannot wholly excuſe the fact, yet it ſometimes extenuates the guilt: We conſider the ſtrong impulſe of appetite, we conſider the frailty of human nature; and we cannot but pity the perſon, while we abhor the crime: It being like the caſe of one ready to drink poiſon, rather than die with thirſt.

But, when a man ſhall with a ſober, ſedate, diabolical rancour, enjoy himſelf in the ſight of his neighbour's ſhame, and ſecretly hug himſelf upon the ruins of a brother's virtue, and the diſhonours of his reaſon, can he plead the inſtigation of any appetite in nature, inclining him to this?—This is impoſſible, and beyond a pretence. To what then can we aſſign the cauſe of this monſtrous diſpoſition? All that can be ſaid in this caſe is, that nature proceeds by quite another method; having given men ſuch and ſuch appetites, and allotted to each their reſpective enjoyments,—the appetite and the pleaſure ſtill cohabiting in the ſame ſubject: But the devil, and long cuſtom of ſinning, have ſuper-induced upon the ſoul, new, unnatural, and abſurd deſires, which have no real object; which reliſh things not at all deſirable; but, like the diſtemper of the ſoul, feeding only on filth and corruption, and giving a man both the devil's nature, and the devil's delight; who has no other joy or happineſs, but to diſhonour his Maker, and to deſtroy his fellow-creatures;—to corrupt him here, and to torment him hereafter. In fine, there is as much difference between the pleaſure a man takes in his own ſins, and that which he takes in other men's, as there is between the wickedneſs of a man, and the wickedneſs of a devil.

2. A ſecond reaſon why a conduct like this is attended with ſuch an extraordinary guilt, ariſes from the unlimited nature of this mode of ſinning; for hereby a man contracts a kind of univerſal guilt, and and as it were ſins over the ſins of all other men. So that while the act is excluſively theirs, the guilt is equally his. Conſider any man as to his perſonal powers, and opportunities of ſinning,—at the greateſt they muſt ſtill be limited by the meaſure of his actings, and the term of his duration. His active powers are but weak, and his continuance in the world but ſhort: ſo that nature is not ſufficient to keep pace with his corruptions, by anſwering deſire with proportionable practice.

To inſtance only in thoſe two grand extravagances of luſt and drunkenneſs; Let a man be never ſo general and licentious in his debaucheries, yet age will in time chill the heats of appetite, and the impure flame will either die of itſelf, or conſume the body that harbours it. Let a man be never ſo inſatiable in drinking, he cannot be ſuch a ſwine as to be always pouring in; but he will, in the compaſs of years, drown his health and his ſtrength in his own belly; and, after all his drunken trophies, at length drink down himſelf too; an event, that certainly will and muſt put an end to the debauch.

But this collateral mode of ſinning, which we have been attempting to delineate, is neither confined to place, nor weakened by age. The bed-ridden, the gouty, the lethargic, all may, on this account, equal the activity of the ſtrongeſt, and the ſpeed of the moſt impetuous ſinner. Such an one may take his brother by the throat, and act the murderer, even while he can neither ſtir an hand, nor lift a foot; and may invade his neighbour's bed, even while weakneſs has tied him down to his own. He may ſin over all the adulteries and debaucheries, all the frauds and oppreſſions of the whole neighbourhood, and break every command of God's law by proxy;—and (as a learned divine emphatically concludes) well were it for him, if he could be damned by proxy too.—A man, by delight and fancy, may graſp-in the ſins of all countries and ages, and by an inward liking of them, communicate in their guilt; he may take a rage all the world over, draw in all that wide circumference of vice, and center it in his own polluted breaſt. So that hereby there is a kind of tranſmigration of ſins, much like that which Pythagoras held of ſouls; ſuch a one, as makes a man not only (according to the Apoſtle's phraſe,) a partaker of other mens ſins, but alſo a deriver of the whole aggravated guilt of them to himſelf;—yet ſtill ſo, as to leave the actual perpetrator as full of guilt as he was before!

Hence then we ſee the infinitely fruitful and productive power of this mode of ſinning; how it can increaſe and multiply beyond all meaſures of actual commiſſion; how vaſtly it ſwells the ſinner's account in an inſtant! So that a man ſhall, out of all the various villainies acted round about him, extract one mighty guilt, and adopt it for himſelf, and thus become chargeable before God, the judge of hearts, and accountable for a world of ſin, without a figure.

3. The third and laſt reaſon we ſhall offer of the extraordinary guilt attending this peculiar vice, ariſes from the ſoul's preparation and paſſage to ſuch a diſpoſition, as it pre-ſuppoſes and includes in it the guilt of many preceding ſins. A man muſt have paſſed thro' many periods of ſin before he can arrive to it; for it is in a manner the very quinteſſence and ſublimation of vice, by which, as in ſpiritous liquors, the malignity of many ingredients is contracted into a little compaſs, but with a greater advantage of ſtrength by ſuch a contraction. In a word, it is the wickedneſs of a whole life diſcharging all its defilements into one common quality, as into a great ſink of turpitude; ſo that nothing can be ſo properly ſignificantly called the very ſinfulneſs of ſin as this. No wonder, therefore, if containing in its bowels the guilt of ſo many years, it ſtands here eternally ſtigmatized by the Apoſtle, as a temper of mind rendering men ſo deteſtably bad, that Satan himſelf, the great enemy of mankind, is neither able, nor deſires to make them worſe. What can or need be ſaid more to awaken the abhorrence of every ſerious reader againſt it!—It is indeed a condition not to be thought of by perſons ſerious enough to weigh and conſider conſequences, without the utmoſt horror. Happy they who truly fear God; for ſuch ſhall not only be kept from it, but from thoſe eaſily-beſetting ſins which lead to this perfection of iniquity!

Chap. II. Ver. 1. The repreſentation of the moral ſtate of the heathen world, in the foregoing chapter, is a proof of the neceſſity of the Goſpel, or of a further diſpenſation of grace or favour, for the ſalvation of mankind: and how rich is the favour wherewith God viſited the world! To have deſtroyed the race of the apoſtate rebels, who had abuſed their underſtandings, and every gift of a bountiful Creator, would have been juſtice; to have ſpared them, lenity and goodneſs: But to ſend his only-begotten Son from heaven to

wherein thou judgeſt another, thou condemneſt thyſelf; for thou that judgeſt, doeſt the ſame things.

2 But we are ſure that the judgement of God is according to truth, againſt them which commit ſuch things.

3 And thinkeſt thou this, O man, that judgeſt them which do ſuch things, and doeſt the ſame, that thou ſhalt eſcape the judgement of God?

4 Or deſpiſeſt thou the riches of his goodneſs, and forbearance, and long-ſuffering; not knowing that the goodneſs of God leadeth thee to repentance?

5 But after thy hardneſs and impenitent heart, treaſureſt up unto thyſelf wrath againſt the day of wrath, and revelation of the righteous judgement of God;

6 Who will render to every man according to his deeds:

7 To them, who by patient continuance in well-doing, ſeek for glory, and honour, and immortality; eternal life:

8 But unto them that are contentious, and do not obey the truth, but obey unrighteouſneſs, indignation and wrath.

9 Tribulation and anguiſh upon every

Ver. 4. Ch. ix. 23. Epheſ. i. 7. 2 Pet. iii. 15. Iſai. xxx. 18. 2 Pet. iii. 9.—V. 5. Jam. v. 3.—V. 6. Job xxxiv. 11. Pſ. lxii. 12. Jer. xvii. 10. xxxii. 19. Matth. xvi. 27. Ch. xiv. 12. Rev. xxii. 12.—V. 8. 2 Theſſ. i. 8.

to redeem us from all this iniquity and ungodlineſs by his own blood, is the moſt wonderful and exuberant favour. Rightly is the doctrine which teaches it called Goſpel, or glad tidings: according to its true nature it ſhould have filled the whole world with tranſports of joy: however, one would think it could not poſſibly have met with oppoſition from any part of mankind.—But the Jew oppoſed it: he abhorred the Gentile, and contradicted the grace which honoured and ſaved him. The Apoſtle pleads and defends our cauſe: his buſineſs is to confound the Jew, and to prove that we have as good a right as he to all the bleſſings of the Meſſiah's kingdom; and by the deſcription of the vicious ſtate of the Gentiles in the former chapter, he has nicely availed himſelf of the prejudices of the Jew. He endeavours, from the beginning of the Epiſtle, to court his attention; but nothing would pleaſe him more than a diſcourſe, in which the Gentiles were reduced to ſuch a vile and abject ſtate. Thus the Apoſtle rouſes his contempt of the Gentiles, and gives him occaſion to condemn them:—but it is, that he may the more effectually humble him in this chapter; in which he proves, that the Jews, having in an aggravated manner deſpiſed the goodneſs, and broken the law of God, were as obnoxious to his wrath as the Gentiles. How could they, with any conſcience or modeſty, arrogate all the divine mercy to themſelves; or pretend that other men were unworthy of it, when they had done as much, or more, to forfeit it than others? Muſt they not exclude themſelves from being the people of God under the Goſpel, by the ſame reaſon that they would have the Gentiles excluded?—This, however, was an argument highly ungrateful to the Jew: and it would be very difficult to fix any conviction upon his mind: therefore the Apoſtle firſt addreſſes him in a covert general way, thou art therefore inexcuſable, O man! &c. not giving out expreſsly that he meant the Jew, that the Jew might more calmly attend to his reaſoning, while he was not apprehenſive that he was the man. Secondly, Very judiciouſly, and with irreſiſtible force of reaſoning, He turns his thoughts from his preſent ſuperior advantages, to the awful day of judgement (ver. 5—16.) When God, in the moſt impartial equity, will render to all mankind without exception, according to their works. Thus the Apoſtle grounds his following argument very methodically and ſolidly, in God's equal regards to men in all nations, who uprightly practice truth and goodneſs; and His diſapproving, and at laſt condemning all men in any nation, however privileged, who live wickedly. This is ſtriking at the root of the matter, and demoliſhing, in the moſt true and effectual manner, the Jew's prejudices in favour of his own nation, and the unkind thoughts he had entertained of the Gentiles. For if a Jew could be convinced, that a ſober righteous heathen might be bleſſed with eternal ſalvation, he muſt be perſuaded that it was no ſuch ſhocking or abſurd matter, that believing Gentiles ſhould now be pardoned, and taken into the viſible church. Thus the Apoſtle advances with great ſkill, and the juſteſt ſteps in his argument; inſinuating himſelf by degrees into the Jew's conſcience. This paſſage is alſo well adapted to encourage the Gentile, humbled by the diſmal repreſentation in the foregoing chapter; for he would here ſee, that he was not utterly abandoned of God; but might, upon good grounds, hope for his mercy and kindneſs. We may juſt obſerve further, that what St. Paul ſays of the Jews, in the preſent chapter, anſwers to what he had charged on the Gentiles in the firſt. For there is a ſecret compariſon of them, one with another, running through theſe two chapters, which, as ſoon as it comes to be conſidered, gives ſuch a light and luſtre to St. Paul's diſcourſe, that one cannot but admire the ſkilful turn of it, and look on it as the moſt ſoft, the moſt beautiful, and moſt preſſing argumentation: leaving the Jews nothing to ſay for themſelves, why they ſhould have the privilege continued to them under the Goſpel, of being alone the people of God. See Taylor, Locke, and on ver. 29.

That judgeſt.] Ὁ κρίνων, the judger, is here very emphatical; and the more ſo, as it is repeated in the latter part of the verſe. It denotes more than ſimply judging: it implies aſſuming the character, place, and authority of a judge; which would be ſeen more clearly, if the verſe were rendered thus: Therefore thou art inexcuſable, O man! whoſoever art a judger; for wherein thou judgeſt another, thou condemneſt thyſelf; for thou, the judger, doſt the ſame things. There will need no remark, to thoſe who read this epiſtle with the leaſt attention, to prove, that the judging which St. Paul here ſpeaks of, refers to that averſion which the Jews generally had to the Gentiles: inſomuch that the unconverted Jews could not bear with the thoughts of a Meſſiah who admitted the heathen equally with them into his kingdom; nor could the converted Jews be brought to admit them into their communion, as the people of God, now equally with themſelves: ſo that they generally, both one and the other, judged them unworthy the favour of God, and incapable of becoming his people any other way than by circumciſion, and an obſervance of the ritual parts of the law;—the inexcuſableneſs and abſurdity whereof St. Paul ſhews in this chapter. Dr. Doddridge obſerves, that there is a greater delicacy in the Apoſtle's tranſition here, than moſt commentators have imagined. From what he had before ſaid, to prove the moſt abandoned and ignorant of the heathens inexcuſable in their wickedneſs, he juſtly infers, that the crimes of thoſe who had ſuch knowledge of the truth as to condemn the vices of others, were proportionably yet more inexcuſable. This was eminently the caſe with the Jews. But he does not directly ſpeak of them till the 9th verſe; drawing the inference at firſt in ſuch general terms, as might alſo comprehend Gentiles, philoſophers, and all others who contradicted the moral inſtructions which they themſelves gave. Though the black detail of vices enumerated in the preceding chapter is ſuch as cannot fail to ſhock the thinking mind; yet whoever will take the trouble to ſearch into the ſtate of religion and virtue among the Jews at the ſame period, will confeſs, that the Apoſtle is rather tender than rigid in his accuſations. See Joſeph. Jewiſh war, b. v, c. 13, b. vii, c. 8, and Whitby.

Ver. 2, Is according to truth.] The Apoſtle is here ſpeaking of the general puniſhment of ſin, in whomſoever it is found. The judgement of God is according to truth againſt them [—all of them, Jews or Gentiles] who do ſuch things: and he has his eye not upon the rejection of the Jews in this world, but upon the day of wrath, and revelation of the righteous judgement of God. ver. 5, 6, 16.

Ver. 4. Goodneſs and forbearance, &c.] Mr. Blackwall thinks that χρηστότης ſignifies benevolence or generoſity, in the general; ἀνοχῇ, mercy, in the propoſals of pardon and happineſs to fallen creatures; and μακροθυμία, patience, in attending ſo long on ſuch obſtinate offenders: but Taylor obſerves, that goodneſs is here to be underſtood of the mercy and goodneſs of God, which beſtowed ſuperior light and advantages upon the Jews. Goodneſs is uſed in the ſame ſenſe, with regard to the Gentiles, chap. ii. 22. We may obſerve, that the Apoſtle uſes general terms, that the Jew may not too plainly ſee that he is ſpeaking to him. When he ſays, leadeth thee to repentance, the meaning is, ought to lead thee: for it ſhould be carefully noted, that it is very common in the ſacred writing, to expreſs not only our Chriſtian privileges, but alſo the duties to which they oblige, in the preſent or preter-perfect tenſe; or to ſpeak of that as done, which only ought to be done; and which, in fact, may poſſibly never be done. See Mal. i. 6. Matt. v. 13. 1 Pet. i. 6. Heb. xiii. 14, &c.

Ver. 6. Deeds.] Εργα, works; as it is rendered in other places.

Ver. 7. By patient continuance.] Patient, in this verſe, ſeems to be oppoſed to contentious in the next: the former referring to the patience of Chriſtians under Jewiſh perſecutions, the latter to the bitter perſecuting ſpirit of the Jews. See Locke and Taylor.

Ver. 8. Do not obey the truth.] Though by the truth the Goſpel be here meant, yet St. Paul ſeems plainly to have uſed the term truth with an eye to the Jews; who, though ſome few of them received the Goſpel, yet even a great part of theſe few joined with the reſt of their nation in oppoſing this great truth of the Goſpel, That under the Meſſiah, the Gentiles who believed were the people of God as well as the Jews; and, as ſuch, were to be received by them. In the laſt words of this verſe there ſeems to be a reference to Pſalm lxxviii. 49. when, ſpeaking of the Egyptians, it is ſaid, He caſt upon them the fierceneſs of his anger, wrath, indignation, and trouble: and it may finely intimate, that the Jews would in the day of vengeance be more ſeverely puniſhed than even their Egyptian enemies were, when God made their plagues ſo wonderful. Elſner has taken ſome pains to ſhew, that the word rendered indignation ſignifies the firſt conception of anger; the word rendered wrath, a deſire and purpoſe of puniſhing. There ſhould be a full ſtop at wrath. Tribulation and anguiſh in the next verſe begin a new ſentence, which affirms that to be a general rule of God's dealing with mankind in judgement, which in the two foregoing verſes He ſoul of man that doeth evil, of the Jew firſt, and alſo of the Gentile;

10 But glory, honour, and peace, to every man that worketh good, to the Jew firſt, and alſo to the Gentile:

11 For there is no reſpect of perſons with God.

12 For as many as have ſinned without law, ſhall alſo periſh without law: and as many as have ſinned in the law, ſhall be judged by the law;

13 (For not the hearers of the law are juſt before God, but the doers of the law ſhall be juſtified.

14 For when the Gentiles, which have not the law, do by nature the things contained in the law, theſe having not the law, are a law unto themſelves:

15 Which ſhew the work of the law written in their hearts, their conſcience alſo bearing witneſs, and their thoughts the mean while accuſing or elſe excuſing one another;)

16 In the day when God ſhall judge the

Ver. 9. Amos iii. 2. Luke xii. 47, 48. 1 Pet. iv. 17. Gr. Greek.—V. 10. 1 Pet. i. 7. Gr. Greek.—V. 11. Deut. x. 17. 2 Chron. xix. 7. Job xxxiv. 19. Acts x. 34. Gal. ii. 6. Epheſ. vi. 9. Col. iii. 25. 1 Pet. i. 17.—V. 13. Matth. vii. 21. James i. 22, 23, 25. V. 15. Or, the conſcience witneſſing with them. Or, between themſelves.—V. 16. Matth. xxv. 31. 1 Cor. iv. 5.

ſeems to mean only of Chriſtians and Jews. Στινοχωρία, rendered anguiſh, ſignifies ſtraightneſs; and is uſed by Xenophon to denote a narrow way, which cannot be paſſed. See Locke, Doddridge, Raphelius, Elſner.

Ver. 9, 10. Upon every ſoul, &c.] To every ſoul — to the Jew firſt, and then to the Gentile. Wat. We ſee by the two verſes, and chap. i. 16. how carefully St. Paul lays it down, that there was now under the Goſpel no other national diſtinction between the Gentiles, but only a priority in the offer of the Goſpel; and in the deſign of rewards and puniſhments, according as the Jews obeyed or not. Which may further ſatiſfy us, that the diſtinction which St. Paul inſiſts on ſo much here, and all through the firſt part of this epiſtle, is national; the compariſon being between the Jews, as nationally the people of God, and the Gentiles, as not the people of God before the Meſſiah; and that under the Meſſiah the profeſſors of Chriſtianity, conſiſting chiefly of converted Gentiles, were the people of God, owned and acknowledged as ſuch by him,—the unbelieving Jews being rejected, and the unbelieving Gentiles never reeeived; but that yet, perſonally, both Jews and Gentiles, every ſingle perſon, ſhall be puniſhed for his own particular ſin; as appears by the two next verſes. Locke. Inſtead of worketh good, ver. 10. the MS. reads, doeth good, in oppoſition to doeth evil, ver. 9.

Ver 11. There is no reſpect of perſons with God.] That is, in paſſing the final ſentence he is determined by their real characters. See the note on Acts x. 34. This is very conſiſtent with an inequality in diſtributing advantages, and opportunities of improvement, according to the ſovereign pleaſure of the great Lord of all. This aſſertion of the Apoſtle, ſo often repeated, will appear the more important and reaſonable, as the Jews thought that no Iſraelite ſhould be deprived of future happineſs, whatſoever his faults had been, unleſs he was guilty of apoſtaſy, idolatry, and ſome few other very enormous crimes. See Jortin's Diſcourſes, page 26.

Ver. 12. Without law—Without law.] Without the law, &c. Wat. Thoſe under the law, St. Paul ſays, ſhall be judged by the law; and this is eaſy to conceive: becauſe they were under a poſitive injunction, wherein life and death were annexed, as the reward and puniſhment of obedience and diſobedience. But of the Gentiles, who were not under that poſitive injunction, he ſays barely, that they ſhall periſh. St. Paul does not uſe theſe ſo eminently different expreſſions for nothing. See particularly chap. v. 13.

Ver. 13. For not the hearers, &c.] This, and verſe 14, 15, are a comment upon the 20th verſe. In verſe 13 he remarks upon the latter part of the 12th, that enjoying the advantages of revelation will not ſave us, unleſs we duly improve them. Ver. 14, 15. He remarks upon the former part of the 12th, and proves that the Gentiles, who have no revelation, are yet condemnable for their wickedneſs; becauſe the light of nature is a rule they are bound to obſerve. Taylor.

Ver. 15. In their hearts, &c.] This is the force and ſtreſs of the Apoſtle's argument, and the foundation of the law of nature. He is proving that the Gentiles have a rule of action; and where is that rule?—It is written in their hearts, inſcribed upon their natural faculties, interwoven with the frame and conſtitution of the human ſoul; a ſenſe of moral good and evil is common to all mankind. The laſt clauſe, literally rendered, is, and their reaſonings between one another, accuſing or elſe defending. This all interpreters underſtand of the workings of the conſcience in one and the ſame perſon, alternately accuſing the actions which are bad, and juſtifying thoſe which are good. But here it is proper to obſerve, I. That κατηγορȣντων, accuſing, and απολογȣμενων, defending or anſwering from themſelves, are forenſic terms, and correſpond to plaintiff and defendant in legal proceſs. Now plaintiff and defendant ſuppoſe a diſputation, and are correlates, which exiſt together at the ſame time; but to ſay that the ſingle principle of conſcience forms two litigant parties in itſelf, the one aceuſing, the other defending, is incongruous. Conſcience is a law, not a litigant, unleſs it be with a different principle, luſt, (of which the Apoſtle ſays nothing here,) but never with itſelf, or its own reflections upon a perſon's conduct. II. The copulative και, and, as it ſtands here, points to a diſtinct head; "their conſcience alſo bearing witneſs, that the work of the law is written in their hearts; and their reaſonings between one another, accuſing or anſwering for themſelves, bearing witneſs that the work of the law is written in their hearts." This is the proper ſtructure and conſtruction of the Greek. But if this laſt clauſe be underſtood of the workings of conſcience, it will be a tautology; for the Apoſtle muſt be ſuppoſed to ſay, their conſcience bearing witneſs, and the workings of their conſcience, alternately accuſing or defending, bearing witneſs. III. The phraſe μεταξὺ αλληλων, between one another, denotes the litigant parties, accuſing or elſe defending; and who ſhould thoſe be but the Gentiles, the perſons concerning whom the Apoſtle is arguing? Αλληλων, one another, always, it is conceived, denotes parties exiſting at the ſame time. But we cannot ſuppoſe that litigant parties exiſt at the ſame time in the conſcience, one accuſing, and the other excuſing a man's conduct. To whom then doth αυτων, their, in the preceding clauſe refer, but to the Gentiles?—And not only the ſenſe, but the like poſition of the words, directs us to refer αλληλων to the ſame antecedent: for the words lie in this order, their conſciences bearing witneſs, and their between-one-another-debates [bearing witneſs]. IV. The word λογιζω ſignifies to reckon, reaſon, debate; (ſee Mark xi. 31. 2 Cor. x. 5, &c.) agreeably whereto the word λογισμων, in the preſent paſſage ſhould have been rendered,—their reaſonings, debates, diſputes one with another, when one party was plaintiff, and the other defendant. This proves that they both had, and knew they had a law or rule of action among them; for as plaintiff and defendant neceſſarily ſuppoſe each other, ſo do they neceſſarily ſuppoſe a law, determining ſome actions to be true, juſt, and good; others to be falſe, unjuſt, and evil: for if there were no difference of actions, there could be no accuſation of wrong, nor defence of right. The Apoſtle ſaith, accuſing, or elſe anſwering for themſelves; becauſe either of theſe is ſufficient to his purpoſe; either their accuſing others of wrong, or defending themſelves as in the right, (which ſoever of the parties was really in the right, or in the wrong,) proved they had a law amongſt them,—a law written in their hearts. Thus then St Paul, in the narrow compaſs of two verſes, I. Explains what is the law or religion of nature. It is a ſelf law, or the work of the law written in the heart; and therefore, 1. It has its foundation in the reaſon, underſtanding, or heart of all mankind, and is common to all nations. 2. It agrees with thoſe things which are written in the law of God. Herein the mind of man harmonizes with the divine mind and will. The ſpark of reaſon in man ſhews the ſame light in its narrow ſphere, as the immenſe ocean of intelligence in the Father of lights. II. The Apoſtle demonſtrates the real exiſtence of the law or religion of nature, by three ſolid arguments; 1. The virtuous actions of ſome heathens, having no other guide but nature, prove that by nature they know what is right. 2. And ſo doth the force of conſcience in them, ſecretly reproaching them for their wicked actions, &c. And 3. Their debates alſo amongſt themſelves, or their mutual accuſations, or vindications of their conduct, &c. From all which therefore it is inferred, that there is a law of nature, which is a true guide, and ſufficient to bring a man, who has no other light, to eternal happineſs: or, as it is expreſſed in ver. 10. Glory, honour, and peace to every man that worketh good; agreeably to a remarkable ſaying of Cicero, de Leg. lib. 1. "Nec eſt quiſquam gentis ullius, qui ducem naturam nactus, ad virtutem pervenire non poſſit." To what is here urged it may be objected, 1. "But if the law of nature is ſo ſufficient, what occaſion for the Goſpel?" In anſwer to which, we need only refer to ch. i. 17. to the end. No law or light, how ſufficient ſoever in itſelf to ſave mankind, when duly attended to, is ſufficient to reform them, when they generally neglect and pervert it; becauſe that very thing which ſhould reform them is neglected and perverted. It may be objected, 2. "But if we live according to the light of nature, we ſhall be ſaved, though we pay no regard to revelation." To which we reply, That to deſpiſe or diſregard any diſcoveries of God's will and goodneſs; to neglect any ſcheme he has formed for the promotion of virtue and happineſs, eſpecially a ſcheme ſo glorious and noble,—is fooliſh, is wicked, and a capital tranſgreſſion of the law of nature. See Taylor, and Ellis "On the Knowledge of Divine Things," p. 214, &c.

Ver. 16. The ſecrets of men] Not, we conceive, their ſecret bad actions, but, agreeably to the preceding diſcourſe, their moral ſtate and circumſtances under different degrees of light; which are ſecrets now to us, or of which we are by no means competent judges. We cannot judge what capacities, opportunities, and advantages every man, in every different age and country, enjoys; nor what uſe he makes ſecrets of men by Jeſus Chriſt, according to my goſpel.

17 Behold, thou art called a Jew, and reſteſt in the law, and makeſt thy boaſt of God,

18 And knoweſt his will, and approveſt the things that are more excellent, being inſtructed out of the law;

19 And art confident that thou thyſelf art a guide of the blind, a light of them which are in darkneſs, 20 An inſtructer of the fooliſh, a teacher of babes, which haſt the form of knowledge and of the truth in the law.

21 Thou therefore which teacheſt another, teacheſt thou not thyſelf? thou that preacheſt a man ſhould not ſteal, doſt thou ſteal?

22 Thou that ſayeſt a man ſhould not commit adultery, doſt thou commit adultery? thou that abhorreſt idols, doſt thou commit ſacrilege?

23 Thou that makeſt thy boaſt of the law, through breaking the law, diſhonoureſt thou God?

24 For the name of God is blaſphemed among the Gentiles, through you, as it is written.

25 For circumciſion verily profiteth, if thou keep the law: but if thou be a breaker of the law, thy circumciſion is made uncircumciſion.

26 Therefore, if the uncircumciſion keep the righteouſneſs of the law, ſhall not his uncircumciſion be counted for circumciſion?

Ver. 16. John v. 22. Acts xvii. 31. Ch. xvi. 25. 2 Tim. ii. 8.—V. 17. Mic. iii. 11. Ch. ix. 4. John viii. 41.—V. 18. Or, trieſt the things that differ. Phil. i. 10.—V. 20. Ch. vi. 17. 2 Tim. i. 13. iii. 5.—V. 21. Pſ. l. 16, &c.—V. 23. Ver. 17.—V. 24. 2 Sam. xii. 14. Iſai. lii. 5. Ezek. xxxvi. 20, 23.

makes of them; theſe are things only known to God. This interpretation will be confirmed by obſerving, that this 16th verſe is in connection with the 12th. According to my Goſpel refers not to the day of judgement in general, as if the Apoſtle intended no more, than that he made known a future judgement in his preaching the Goſpel.—This was not peculiar to St. Paul's preaching, as he was the Apoſtle to the Gentiles; other Apoſtles and preachers made known a future judgement, as well as St. Paul; therefore it ſeems rather to refer to God's judging the ſecrets of men. It might be aſked by what rule will he judge them? The anſwer is, According to my Goſpel; That is, "According to the nature and extent of the Goſpel which I preach among the Gentiles, and which repreſents all mankind as the objects of the divine beneficence, cognizance, and care." According to St. Paul's Goſpel, or upon its principles, God is the God, Father, and Judge of all, who has in one degree or other revealed himſelf to all, who expects a proportionable obedience from all; and conſequently will judge, and either reward or puniſh all the nations of the world under different diſpenſations, and different degrees of light; and this principle is expreſſed in the very firſt words of the firſt ſermon preached to the Gentiles, Acts x. 34, 35. See Locke and Taylor.

Ver. 17. Behold, &c.] If the unbelieving Jew was at all diſpoſed to admit evidence and conviction, the Apoſtle has ſaid enough to awaken his conſcience in the preceding part of this chapter; and therefore here he throws off the cover, and openly argues with him in the moſt plain and nervous manner, that his ſuperior knowledge, privileges, and profeſſions ſerved only to aggravate his condemnation; and that in fact he, who under all his greater advantages, tranſgreſſed the law of God, ſtood condemned by the honeſt Gentile, who, to the beſt of his knowledge, obeyed it. In ver. 17—20. St. Paul makes uſe of the titles which the Jews aſſumed to themſelves, from the advantages they had of light and knowledge above the Gentiles, to ſhew them how inexcuſable they were in judging the Gentiles, (who were, even in their own acount, ſo much beneath them in knowledge,) for doing thoſe things, of which they themſelves were alſo guilty. St. Paul ſays emphatically, thou art called a Jew; for ſuch a Jew as deſcribed in the following verſes, he inſiſts was a Jew only in name, not in reality; and ſo he concludes, ver. 28, 29. The words Καυχάομαι καύχημα, καύχησις, are uſed by none of the New Teſtament writers, except Paul and James; by the latter thrice, by the former above fifty times. They are favourite terms with him, probably becauſe of their very expreſſive and extenſive ſignification. We render them by boaſting, glorying, rejoicing, joy; but glorying beſt ſuits all the places where they are found. Now glorying, as it gives the ſenſe of thoſe words, denotes being pleaſed with, and acquieſcing in the object wherein we glory, as it is ſuppoſed to be an object of joy and delight, of hope and dependance; as being praiſe-worthy, and reflecting an honour upon us: and ſuch an object may be either in ourſelves, or in other things or perſons. I. In ourſelves; 1. with regard to dependance, Jer. ix. 23.—2. with regard to honour, Judg. vii. 2. 1 Cor. i. 29. Epheſ. ii. 9. II. In other things or perſons; 1. with regard to joy. Pſ. v. 11. Philip. ii. 16.—2. with regard to hope, Prov. xi. 7. in the LXX.—3. with regard to dependance, Pſ. xlix. 6. Philip. iii. 3, 4.—4. with regard to what is praiſe-worthy, 2 Cor. v. 12.—5. with regard to honour, Jer. xiii. 11. 2 Cor. i. 14. Theſe ſeveral ſenſes the words above-mentioned will admit; but commonly more ſenſes than one is implied, and ſometimes all the ſeveral ſignifications are included in the force of the word: So here, and makeſt thy boaſt, or rather, and glorieſt in God; i. e. "You rejoice in him as the object of your hope and dependance;—you praiſe, or ſpeak well of him; you account it your honour that he is your God, and that you worſhip him, &c." So ver. 23. ch. v. 2, 3, 11, &c. See Locke, Taylor, and Mintert.

Ver. 18. And approveſt the things, &c.] Τα διαφέροντα, ſignify things excellent, convenient, controverted, or differing: In either of theſe ſenſes it may be underſtood here; though the laſt (namely, their difference in reſpect of lawful and unlawful) may be pitched on, I think, ſays Mr. Locke, as moſt ſuited to the Apoſtle's deſign here; and that which the Jews much ſtood upon, as giving them one great pre-eminence above the defiled Gentiles. Beza, in this view, tranſlates the paſſage, And diſcerneſt things that differ; and Dr. Waterland, And doſt diſcern, or decide differences. See Elſner's Obſervations, vol. ii. page 17.

Ver. 19. Guide of the blind, &c.] Blind,—in darkneſs,—ignorant,—babes,—were appellations which the Jews gave to the Gentiles; ſignifying how much inferior to themſelves they thought them in knowledge. The word μόρφωσις, rendered form, ver. 20. ſeems to mean the ſame with τυπος, ch. vi. 17. That is, ſuch a draught, as contained, and repreſented the parts and lineaments of the whole; for it is to be remembered, that the Apoſtle uſes theſe terms here in the ſame ſenſe that the Jews ſpoke of themſelves, vaunting over the Gentiles: thereby aggravating their fault, in judging the Gentiles as they did. Dr. Waterland and the MS. read, The ſcheme of knowledge. See 2 Tim. iii. 5. Locke, Bos, and L'Enfant.

Ver. 21. Doſt thou ſteal?] Grotius on this text proves from Joſephus, that ſome of the Jewiſh prieſts lived by rapine, depriving others of their due ſhare of the tythes, and even ſuffering them to periſh for want: That others were guilty of groſs uncleanneſs: And as for ſacrilegiouſly robbing God and his altars, it had been complained of as early as Malachi's days; (Mal. i. 8, 12, 13.) ſo that the ſeveral inſtances are given with great propriety and judgement. See Grotius and Doddridge.

Ver. 25. For] It is moſt evident that γαρ, for, cannot here ſignify that the following words are a reaſon for what was aſſerted in thoſe immediately preceding. It ſeems little more than an expletive, as the particle now is frequently among us. Circumciſion is here put for being a Jew, as being one of the chief, and moſt diſcriminating rites of that people: It profits, ſays St. Paul, (or, as Dr. Waterland reads, It is indeed an advantage) if thou keep the law, becauſe a Jew who kept the law was to have life therein. See Levit. xviii. 5.

Ver. 26. The righteouſneſs of the law] Mr. Locke renders τὰ δικαιώματα τȣ͂ νόμȣ, the rectitudes of the law, in an appropriated ſenſe of the word rectitude; following St. Paul, who uſes δικαιώματα here for all thoſe precepts of the law, which contain in them any part of the natural and external rule of rectitude, which is made known to men by the light of reaſon. This rule of their actions, all mankind, uncircumciſed as well as circumciſed had, and it is that which the Apoſtle, in ch. i. 32. calls δικαίωμα τȣ͂ Θεȣ, becauſe it came from God, and was made by him the moral rule to all mankind, being laid within the diſcovery of their reaſon; and which if they kept to, it was δικαιώμα, righteouſneſs to them, or, they were juſtified. And this rule of morality, St. Paul ſays, the Gentile world did acknowledge: So that δικαίωμα τȣ Θεȣ, ch. i. 32. ſignifies, that rule of right taken in general; and δικαίωματα τȣ νομȣ, here ſignifies the particular branches of it, contained in the law of Moſes: For no other part of that law could an heathen be ſuppoſed to obſerve, or be concerned in; and therefore thoſe only can be the δικαιωματα τȣ͂ νομȣ͂ here meant. If we conſider the various ſenſes that tranſlators and expoſitors have given to this term δικαίωμα, in the ſeveral parts of St. Paul's Epiſtles where it occurs, we ſhall have occaſion to think that the Apoſtle uſed this word with great latitude, and variety of ſignifications; whereas I imagine that if we carefully read thoſe paſſages, we ſhall find that he uſed it every where in the ſame ſenſe; that is, for that rule, which, if complied with, juſtified, or rendered perfect, the perſon or thing it referred to. For example, ch. i. 32. the 27 And ſhall not uncircumciſion, which is by nature, if it fulfil the law, judge thee, who by the letter and circumciſion doſt tranſgreſs the law?

28 For he is not a Jew, which is one outwardly; neither is that circumciſion, which is outward in the fleſh:

29 But he is a Jew, which is one inward-

Ver. 28. John viii. 39. Ch. ix. 6, 7. Gal. vi. 15. Rev. ii. 9.—V. 29. 1 Pet. iii. 4.

judgement of God, is that rule of right, which if the heathen world had kept, and perfectly obeyed, they had been righteous before God. In the preſent verſe, the righteouſneſs of the law, are thoſe precepts of the law of Moſes, which if the uncircumciſed, whom he there ſpeaks of, had kept, they had been righteous before God; ch. v. 16. Ἐις δικαίωμα, to juſtification, is, "to the obtaining of righteouſneſs:" And in ver. 18. Δι' ἑνὸς δικαιώματος, by one righteouſneſs, is, "by one act, whereby he was juſtified, or compleatly perfected to be what he had undertaken to be, viz. the Redeemer and Saviour of the world." For it was διὰ παθημάτων, (or, as ſome copies read it, διὰ παθήματος) by his ſuffering, or death on the croſs, that he was perfected. See Heb. ii. 9, 10, 14, 15. v. 7—9. Phil. ii. 8. Col. i. 21, 22. and ch. v. 10.—Again, in Heb. ix. 1. Δικαιώματα λατρείας, ordinances of divine ſervice, are thoſe rules or precepts concerning the outward worſhip of God, which when conformed to, render it perfect and unblameable before God.—Heb. ix. 10. Δικαιώματα σαρκός, Carnal ordinances, are "ſuch rules concerning ritual performances, as, when obſerved, juſtified the fleſh." By theſe obſervances, according as they were preſcribed, the fleſh, or natural outward man, obtained a legal outward holineſs, or righteouſneſs; there was no exception againſt him, but he was freely admitted into the congregation, and into the ſanctuary. In the ſame ſenſe δικαιώματα is alſo uſed by St. John in the Apocalypſe; thus, thy judgements are made manifeſt, Rev. xv. 4, means, that thoſe terms whereupon men are to be juſtified before God, were clearly and fully made known under the Goſpel. Here, as in Rom. i. they are called δικαιώματα Θεοῦ, the terms which God had preſcribed to men for their juſtification. And, to name no more, Rev. xix. 8, the righteouſneſs of the ſaints implies the performances, whereby the ſaints ſtand juſtified before God. So that if we well obſerve, Δικαιώμα is the rule of right: as having God for its author, it is Δικαιώμα Θεοῦ; as contained in the precepts of the law, it is Δικαιώμα τοῦ νόμου. As it concerns the external inſtituted rights of the Levitical worſhip of God, it is Δικαιώματα λατρείας: as it concerns the outward legal or ritual holineſs of the Jews, it is Δικαιώματα σαρκὸς; and as it is in holy men made perfect, it is Δικαιώματα ἁγίων. Before we cloſe the note, it may not be amiſs to take notice of St. Paul's uſe of the other term Νόμος, law, which he commonly puts for a poſitive rule given to men, with the ſanction of a penalty; and in particular, frequently, (ſometimes with, ſometimes without the particle,) for the law of Moſes, without naming which law he means, as if there had been no other law in the world,—as indeed there was not, in St. Paul's notion of a law, from the fall to our Saviour's time,—but only the law given by God to the Iſraelites by the hand of Moſes. Under the Goſpel, the law of Moſes was abrogated: but yet the Δικαιώματα τοῦ νόμου were not abrogated. The δικαιώμα τοῦ Θεοῦ not only ſtood firm, but under the divine authority was promulgated anew by Jeſus Chriſt, the King and Saviour of the World. For 'tis of this that he ſays, he is not come to deſtroy the law, but to fulfil it; that is, to give it poſitively and plainly its full latitude and extent, and ſet theſe rectitudes of the law in their due light and force. Accordingly we ſee all the branches of it more expreſsly commanded, and with penalties more vigorouſly enforced on all his ſubjects by our Saviour and his Apoſtles, than they were in the law of Moſes. Thus then we learn from the doctrine of St. Paul and the New Teſtament, that there is one and the ſame rule of rectitude ſet to the actions of all mankind, Jews, Gentiles and Chriſtians; and that the failing of a complete obedience to it in every tittle, makes a man unrighteous, the conſequence whereof is death;—For the Gentiles that have ſinned without a law, ſhall periſh without a law; the Jews who have ſinned, having a law, ſhall be judged by that law. (ver. 12.)—but that both Jews and Gentiles ſhall be ſaved from death, if they believe in Jeſus Chriſt, and ſincerely endeavour after righteouſneſs, though they do not attain unto it; their faith being accounted to them for righteouſneſs, chap. iii. 19—24. See Locke.

Ver. 27. And ſhall not circumciſion, &c.] The Apoſtle here ſuppoſes that a heathen, who is only by, or of nature, (ἐκ φύσεως,) who has no other guide but natural reaſon, may fulfil the law at leaſt which he is under; may be an honeſt, ſober, good, kind and benevolent man: for were it impoſſible for the Gentiles to fulfill the law, it would not be ſuppoſeable that he ſhould do it; and then the Apoſtle's argument would be without any foundation. And that he doth not here ſpeak of an heathen converted, or to be converted to Chriſtianity, is manifeſt, from his ſaying that he is ἐκ φύσεως, by, or of nature, upon the principles, and under the diſpenſation of mere nature. Hence it appears, that it was the Apoſtle's ſentiment that a mere heathen might do the will of God, and be ſaved for ever, —not merely indeed by his works: it is of grace that he is ſaved. See chap. iii. 20. 1 Tim. iv. 10. The following words, judge thee, look back as far as the firſt verſe: whoſoever thou art that judgeſt. This judging, as Mr. Locke obſerves, relates to the unkind erroneous ſentiments of the Jews, concerning the uncircumciſed Gentiles; judging them utterly unworthy of the favour of God, and diſqualified from being his people. But here the Apoſtle, with great force and truth, retorts the cenſure upon him. "Shall a virtuous heathen condemn You, wicked Jews, as unworthy of God's favour, and diſqualified from being any longer his people?" That this is the Apoſtle's meaning, appears from the next verſe; For he is not a Jew, &c. and in the following dialogue, concerning the rejection of the Jews, he ſuppoſes the Jews would take this to be his ſenſe; nor could any Jew in thoſe days, acquainted with St. Paul's principles, miſs of underſtanding him thus. In ch. xiv. 3, 4. the word judge is uſed in the ſame ſenſe. See Taylor, Locke, and the note on ver. 15.

Ver. 29. Whoſe praiſe is not of men] Perhaps here is a reference to the etymology of the word Jew, it being derived from the name of Judah, which ſignifies praiſe. See Gen. xxix. 35. xlix. 8. and the paſſages in the margin. We have obſerved, in the introductory note to this chapter, that there is a ſecret compariſon of the Jews and Gentiles, which runs through what St. Paul ſays of them in this and the preceding chapter; our readers, therefore, will not think it ſuperfluous, if we here ſubjoin Mr. Locke's ſtate of the argument in this view: "After St. Paul, ſays he, had declared that the Goſpel is the power of God unto ſalvation to thoſe who believe, to the Jews firſt, &c. and that the way of this ſalvation is revealed to be by the righteouſneſs of God, which is by faith, He tells them that the wrath of God is alſo now revealed againſt all atheiſm, polytheiſm, idolatry, and vice whatſoever, of men holding the truth in unrighteouſneſs; becauſe they might come to the knowledge of the true God by the viſible works of the creation; ſo that the Gentiles were without excuſe for turning from the true God to idolatry, and the worſhip of falſe gods, whereby their hearts were ſo darkened, that they were without God in the world. Wherefore God gave them up to vile affections, and all manner of vices; in which ſtate, though by the light of nature they knew what was right, yet underſtanding not that ſuch things were worthy of death, they not only did them themſelves, but, abſtaining from cenſure, lived fairly and in fellowſhip with thoſe who did them: whereupon he tells the Jews, that they are more inexcuſable than the heathens, in that they judge, abhor, and have in averſion the Gentiles, for what they themſelves do with greater provocation. Their cenſure and judgement in this caſe is unjuſt and wrong; but the judgement of God is always right and juſt, which will certainly overtake thoſe who judge others for the ſame things as they do themſelves; and do not conſider that God's forbearance to them ought to bring them to repentance. For God will render to every one according to his deeds; to thoſe who in meekneſs and patience continue in well-doing, everlaſting life; but to thoſe who are cenſorious, proud, and contentious, and will not obey the Goſpel, condemnation and wrath at the day of judgement, whether they be Jews or Gentiles: for God puts no difference between them. Thou that art a Jew, ſays he, boaſteſt that God is thy God; that he has enlightened thee by the law which he himſelf gave thee from heaven, and hath by that immediate revelation taught thee what things are excellent, and tend to life, and what are evil, and have death annexed to them. If therefore thou tranſgreſſeſt, doſt not thou more diſhonour God, and provoke him, than a poor heathen, who knows not God, nor that the things he doth deſerve death, which is their reward?—Shall not he, if by the light of nature he does what is conformable to the revealed will of God, judge thee, who haſt received that law from God by revelation, and yet breakeſt it? Shall not this, rather than circumciſion, make him an Iſraelite?—For he is not a Jew, (that is, one of God's people) who is one outwardly, by circumciſion of the fleſh; but he that is one inwardly, by the circumciſion of the heart.

REFLECTIONS ON CHAP. II.

Miſerable are thoſe judges, preachers, maſters, &c. who in arraigning others, condemn themſelves. It is for our own intereſt to be very ſlow and reſerved in the judgement we paſs upon our neighbours, becauſe God judges us as we judge others. We readily enough blame vice, when we ſee it only in others; but God ſees it better in us, than we do in them. We frequently condemn our fellow-creatures, in order to juſtify ourſelves before men; and this very thing doth but the more condemn us in the ſight of God. ver. 1.

Let us revere the righteous judgment of God, which is here laid before us in ſo particular and affecting a manner; remembering that we are each of us to have our part in that day of final retribution, and that the ſecrets of our hearts will then be made manifeſt. It behoves us often to reflect upon the aweful reſult; and to conſider, that indignation and wrath, tribulation and anguiſh, will be our portion, if we are contentious and diſobedient to the truth; yea, if we do not, by a patient continuance in well-doing, ſeek the promiſed glory, honour and immortality. This if we do, we ſhall, through the grace of God, ſecure everlaſting life. ver. 7—9. But otherwiſe, vain will our knowledge and our beſt profeſſion be found, and our teſtimonies againſt the ſins of others, will only inflame the guilt of our own.

What cauſe have we to adore that goodneſs of God, which ſo gently takes unworthy ſinners, as it were, by the hand, and leadeth them to repentance! ver. 4. While we continually live upon this goodneſs, let us not act in contempt of its bleſſings, or abuſe it to our own ruin. Is the wrath already laid up, ſo ſmall, that we ſhould be increaſing the treaſure; that we ſhould ſtimulate and arouſe the terrors ly; and circumciſion is that of the heart, in the ſpirit, and not in the letter; whoſe praiſe is not of men, but of God.

CHAP. III.

The Jews prerogative: which they have not loſt. Howbeit, the law convinceth them alſo of ſin. Therefore no fleſh is juſtified by the law, but all, without difference, by faith only: and yet the law is not aboliſhed.

WHAT advantage then hath the Jew? or what profit is there of circumciſion?

2 Much every way: chiefly, becauſe that unto them were committed the oracles of God.

3 For what if ſome did not believe? ſhall their unbelief make the faith of God without effect?

Ver. 29. Col. ii. 11. Phil. iii. 3. Ch. vii. 6. 2 Cor. iii. 6. 1 Cor. iv. 5. 2 Cor. x. 18. 1 Theſ. ii. 4.——V. 2. Pſ. cxlvii. 19, 20. Ch. ix. 4.—V. 3. Hebr. iv. 2.

terrors of the day of wrath, and revelation of the righteous judgement of the Almighty, ver. 5.

It will be a moſt impartial, as well as important day! nor are we concerned to know how the heathen will fare in it: Let it ſuffice us, that if they are condemned, they will be righteouſly condemned;—not for remaining ignorant of that Goſpel, which they never had an opportunity of hearing, but for violating thoſe precepts of the divine law, which were inſcribed on their conſciences. See ver. 14, 15. Let us bleſs God, that he has written it there, and reverence the traces of his hand in our own minds; always remembering, that the diſcoveries of revelation were never intended to eraſe or diſcredit the dictates of nature, but to illuſtrate and confirm them.

This law within accuſes, convicts, judges and condemns every ſinner upon earth; who ſhall all be judged by the diſpenſation they have enjoyed. What a ſevere judgement then muſt attend on thoſe, who, having beſides this, the law of the Goſpel, and the example of the life of Chriſt, live notwithſtanding as if they had no law at all! For how devoutly ſoever we may have heard and ſpoken of it in life, we ſhall be condemned, at the laſt, if we have not acted agreeably thereto. The uſe of the law is, to hear it with docility, to preſerve the remembrance of it with gratitude, to meditate upon it with faith, to perform it with fidelity, to covet it with all our heart, and to make it our ſole joy and delight: To effectuate all which is the work of grace in us, and that grace a gift of God, which we muſt earneſtly ſupplicate, if we would ſavingly receive.

How little will it ſignify, to have the name of a Jew or a Chriſtian! To boaſt in an external and temporary relation to God, if we are ſuch as ſhall finally be diſowned by him, will but render us the more wretched. To have known his will, to have diſtinguiſhed things that differ, and ſet up for inſtructors or reprovers of others, will only furniſh out matter of condemnation from our own mouths, if while teaching others we teach not ourſelves. ver. 17—21. Well may the puniſhment be aggravated, where the guilt is ſo great; when it brings ſo peculiar a reproach upon religion, and in effect dictates ſo many blaſphemies againſt the name of God, at the very time it pretends to exalt it. ver. 24. For as a good life is the praiſe which tends moſt to the honour of God; ſo a wicked life, in a profeſſion holy of itſelf, includes in it a kind of blaſphemy, and is often the fatal occaſion thereof in others.

We pity the Gentiles, and we have reaſon to pity them; but let us take heed, leſt thoſe appearances of virtue which are to be found among ſome of them, condemn our conduct, who with the letter of the law, and the Goſpel, and with the ſolemn tokens of a Chriſtian relation to God about us, tranſgreſs his precepts, and violate our engagements to him; turning the very means of goodneſs and happineſs into the occaſions of more unpardonable guilt. ver. 26, 27.

May our hearts, therefore, be always attentive to thoſe leſſons of inward religion, which the ſacred oracles continually inculcate. ver. 28, 29. We are holy only by living according to the holineſs of our profeſſion, and obſerving its ſacred rules. The outward appearance, which was not ſufficient to make a real Jew, in the times of the law, can never be ſufficient to make a true Chriſtian, in the times of grace. Chriſtianity is that of the heart, in the ſpirit, and not in the letter. We are nothing for or before God, but what we are in the inward man; all the reſt is ſhadow only, and hypocriſy in the ſight of heaven. Let us remember, it is the praiſe, not of men, but of God, which is in queſtion. And who can be ſo loſt to all greatneſs of mind, all generous ambition, as not to long, and even burn to attain the glorious prize?—Who can enjoy, or attend to the praiſe of men, while he has any reaſon to fear that God,—the All-ſeeing,—All-wiſe,—All-powerful GOD, condemns and diſapproves?——

Chap. III. Ver. 1.] The Apoſtle, in the latter end of the foregoing chapter, has carried his argument to the utmoſt length. What remains is to keep the Jew in temper, to fix his convictions, and to draw the general concluſion. He has ſhewn that the Jews were rather more wicked than the Gentiles, and ſtood condemned by ſuch of them as honeſtly did their duty; that a poſſeſſion of the law, circumciſion, and an outward profeſſion of relation to God, gave them no character, and ſignified nothing, as to their acceptance with him. This was in effect to ſay, that the Jews had forfeited their right to the privileges of God's peculiar people; that they were as unworthy to be continued in the church, as the Gentiles to be taken into it; and conſequently, that in order to their enjoying the privileges of the church, under the Meſſiah, they ſtood in need of a freſh diſplay of grace; which, if they rejected, God would caſt them out of the vineyard. And the Apoſtle was ſenſible the Jew would underſtand what he had ſaid in this ſenſe. To ſet aſide his law, his circumciſion, his external advantages, as inſufficient to gain him any intereſt in the favour of God, was to ſtrip him of his peculiar honours, and quite ruin him as a Jew. This muſt be very diſguſting: And the Apoſtle, who had often debated the point with his countrymen, knew very well what a Jew would be ready to ſay upon this occaſion. Here, therefore, he ſeaſonably introduces a dialogue between himſelf and the Jew, indulging, as it were, his diſguſt, by giving him leave to ſpeak for himſelf; ver. 1—8. and what he is ſuppoſed to ſpeak, we have reaſon to think was what the Jews had actually replied and objected againſt the Apoſtle. This would amuſe, and at the ſame time inſtruct him, and poſſibly cool his reſentment; eſpecially as the Apoſtle's anſwer to the firſt queſtion is much in his favour. There ſeems no room to doubt, that this dialogue relates to the rejection of the Jews; a ſubject which would have come in here naturally enough. But then it would have broken in too much upon the Apoſtle's argument: For which reaſon he but juſt touches upon it here, reſerving the full conſideration of it to the 9th, 10th, and 11th chapters; particularly ch. ix. 4—23. where we have the ſame queſtions more diſtinctly put, anſwered, and largely diſcuſſed; only we may obſerve, that here they relate ſolely to the rejection of the Jews, but there they take in alſo the calling of the Gentiles. After the dialogue, St. Paul reſumes his argument, ver. 9. proves further, by Scripture quotations, that the Jews were guilty before God as well as other men, ver. 10—19. concludes that no part of mankind could have a right to the bleſſings of God's kingdom and covenant upon the footing of any works of obedience, which they had done, ver. 20. but only by the favour of God in the Goſpel; which he explains, ver. 21, &c. The ſum and force of the Apoſtle's argument is this: "All ſorts of men, Jews as well as Gentiles, have ſinned: Therefore no part of mankind can lay claim to the bleſſings of God's kingdom and covenant upon the ſcore of obedience; therefore the Jew ſtands as much in need of grace or favour, to give him a title to thoſe bleſſings under the kingdom of the Meſſiah, as the Gentile. Conſequently the Gentile has as good a title as the Jew; for thoſe bleſſings are given only by grace; and grace, or mere favour, is alike free to all mankind. And when all are in equal circumſtances, it is perfectly abſurd for any to pretend to engroſs it to themſelves, excluſively of others, who are as good, or but as bad, as they." And thus the Apoſtle very ſolidly, and to our great comfort proves, that we Gentiles, through faith alone, have a good and firm title to all the bleſſings of the Goſpel covenant; election, adoption, pardon, privileges, ordinances, the Spirit of God, and the rich hope of everlaſting life. See Taylor.

Ver. 2. Much every way] St. Paul gives a liſt of the advantages which the Jew had over the Gentile, ch. ix. 4, 5. but here mentions only one of them, which was moſt proper to his preſent purpoſe; and which is ſo remarkable and important a teſtimony to the divine inſpiration of the Old Teſtament in general, that it can leave no doubt of the full perſuaſion of St. Paul upon this head. See Doddridge, and Locke. Dr. Waterland renders the next clauſe, Becauſe they were intruſted with the oracles of God.

Ver. 3. For what if ſome did not believe, &c.] This and the following verſe are generally underſtood as a continuation and explication of the Apoſtle's anſwer in the ſecond verſe; whereby the ſenſe of the third and fourth verſes is generally embaraſſed, as they will not admit of a connection with the ſecond verſe. For in truth, ver. 3. is not the words of the Apoſtle, but a ſecond query or objection advanced by the Jews: nor is γαρ, for, a cauſal, ſhewing the reaſon why the having the oracles of God committed to them was a privilege, notwithſtanding their unbelief; but τί γαρ is interrogative, and may be tranſlated, well, and what? And thus it is frequently uſed in Xenophon's memoirs of Socrates. See particularly lib. ii. c. 6. ſect. 2. From whence it appears that τί γαρ, in a dialogue, and when τί has no following ſubſtantive to agree with it, is a form of introducing another queſtion or objection by the inquirer. And as the Apoſtle in this place is carrying on a dialogue after the Socratic manner, it is to be underſtood as advancing a new query or objection; and thus every thing ſtands right and eaſy, which otherwiſe is in great diſorder. Did not believe, ſhould rather be have not been faithful; i. e. have not been obedient. See 1 Pet. ii. 7. As the Iſraelites were in covenant with God, their obedience was their faith, or faithfulneſs, and their diſobedience was their unbelief, or unfaithfulneſs. The Jew here alludes to the charge of wickedneſs which the Apoſtle had brought againſt the Jews in the foregoing chapter. St. Paul has the ſame ſentiment as the next clauſe in ch. ix. 6. He is ſpeaking of the 4 God forbid! yea, let God be true, but every man a liar: as it is written, That thou mighteſt be juſtified in thy ſayings, and mighteſt overcome when thou art judged.

5 But if our unrighteouſneſs commend the righteouſneſs of God, what ſhall we ſay? Is God unrighteous who taketh vengeance? (I ſpeak as a man,)

6 God forbid! for then how ſhall God judge the world?

7 For if the truth of God hath more abounded through my lie unto his glory; why yet am I alſo judged as a ſinner?

8 And not rather (as we be ſlanderouſly reported, and as ſome affirm that we ſay,) Let us do evil, that good may come? whoſe damnation is juſt.

9 What then? are we better than they? No, in no wiſe: for we have before proved both Jews and Gentiles, that they are all under ſin:

10 As it is written, There is none righteous, no, not one:

Ver. 4. John iii. 33. Pſ. lxii. 9. cxvi. 11. Pſ. li. 4.—V. 6. Gen. xviii. 25.—V. 9. Gr. charged. Gal. iii. 22.—V. 10. Pſ. xiv. 1, 2, 3. liii. 1.

ſame thing in both places; and therefore evidently the faith of God here, is the ſame with the faith of God there, or that faithful promiſe which he made to Abraham. See Gen. xvii. 7, 8. Taylor, and Tillotſon's Sermons, vol. xii. ſerm. 1. Dr. Waterland reads the verſe, For what if ſome of them were unfaithful, ſhall their unfaithfulneſs make void the faithfulneſs of God?

Ver. 4. But every man a liar] Though every man ſhould be a liar. Wat. For the next clauſe, ſee the note on Pſ. li. 4. Dr. Taylor obſerves, that the Hebrew of that verſe literally is, that thou mayeſt be juſt in thy ſpeaking, and clean, [that is clear] in thy judging. The ſpeaking meant is, the word of promiſe which God made to David, 2 Sam. vii. 12—16. and the judging referred to is the execution of the threatening denounced, 2 Sam. xii. 9—13. and David owns, that if the threatening did not agree with the promiſe, God was clear from the charge of falſhood; the inconſiſtency muſt be aſſigned to his own wickedneſs. This is full to the Apoſtle's purpoſe. If the promiſe to Abraham was not made good, as the Jews expected, they might thank themſelves for it. See Tillotſon, vol. xii. ſerm. 8.

Ver. 5. The righteouſneſs of God] St. Paul hereby intends God's faithfulneſs in keeping his promiſe. This verſe is the language of an unbelieving Jew, and therefore in his mouth God's righteouſneſs, or fidelity to his promiſe, hath relation only to the nation of the Jews, and their being ſtill continued the only church and people of God.—Who taketh vengeance, might be rendered more agreeably to the original, who inflicteth wrath, or, "who is the inflicter of wrath, as you intimate." See on ch. ii. 1. and on i. 18. This expreſſion evidently points at the rejection of the Jews, and therefore is cloſely connected with ch. ix. where the Apoſtle not only handles the ſame ſubject, but reſumes theſe very queries or objections of the unbelieving Jew, and anſwers them at large: And as the rejection of the Jews ſtand here inſerted in the midſt of his argument relating to the juſtification of the Gentiles, it is manifeſtly connected with that argument, or with the Apoſtle's doctrine of juſtification by faith. For after his diſcourſe here, upon the rejection of the Jews, he immediately ſubjoins, ver 9. What then? are we better than they?—In anſwer to which he proves to the end of the chapter that the Jews were not better than the Gentiles, ſeeing both ſtood in need of the grace or favour of God for their juſtification. Thus, in the Apoſtle's diſcourſe and argument, the rejection of the Jews ſtands in cloſe connection with his doctrine of juſtification. But what connection or relation is there between the juſtification of the Gentiles, and the rejection of the Jews?—This will appear from what is ſaid ch. ix. 30, 31. and the note there. In ſhort, the rejection of the Jews for their want of faith ſtands in direct oppoſition to the juſtification of the Gentiles by faith; therefore, if we have a true idea of the rejection of the Jews, we may from thence collect a true idea of the juſtification of the Gentiles; but the rejection of the Jews is their being caſt out of God's church, and ſtripped of the privileges and bleſſings of God's peculiar people; conſequently the juſtification of the Gentiles, for which the Apoſtle pleads, ch. iii. and iv. is their being pardoned, and received to all the privileges and bleſſings o fGod's peculiar people. See Locke and Taylor.

Ver. 6. God forbid!] This verſe is the Apoſtle's anſwer to the Jews, which he crowds in while the Jew is going on with his obſervation. In reverence of the Divine Majeſty, who is perfectly righteous, he qualifies the ſuppoſition of his being unrighteous, (though it is mentioned, only for argument's ſake,) three ways; firſt, by putting it into the form of a queſtion, Is God unrighteous? Secondly, by adding immediately, that he ſpoke in the perſon of another, and as a man might ſay who was arguing that the caſting off the Jews was a thing inconſiſtent with God's righteouſneſs. Thirdly, by interrupting the Jew with a ſtrong aſſertion of the moſt perfect righteouſneſs of God, in the words of Abraham, Gen. xviii. 25. We have a ſimilar inſtance of crowding in an anſwer while another perſon is ſpeaking, Hor. Serm. lib. ii. ſat. 3. ver. 187.

Ver. 7, 8. For if the truth of God, &c.] The particle for joins what follows in this verſe to vengeance, or wrath, in the fifth, and ſhews it to be a continuation of the objection begun there. But the whole eighth verſe is the Apoſtle's anſwer, the true ſenſe of which ſeems to be this: Says the Jew, "If the faithfulneſs of God in keeping his promiſe is, through our wickedneſs, made far more glorious than otherwiſe it would have been, why ſhould we Jews be blamed and condemned as ſinners, for that which redounds to the honour of God?" To which the Apoſtle replies, ver. 8. "And why do you not ſay, and draw it into a general rule and maxim, that in all caſes we ought to do wickedly, becauſe God can one way or other turn it to his own glory?—An impious ſentiment, which ſome charge upon me; as if, when I magnify the grace of God in pardoning ſin, I advanced this notion, That we ought to do evil, that good (God's glory) may come of it; for which, and other malicious oppoſition to the Goſpel, they ſhall come under the juſt condemnation of God." See a further anſwer, ch. ix. 19, &c. We may juſt obſerve, that rather, ver 8. is not in the Greek, and it ſeems to be improperly ſupplied. The ſenſe is more truly and clearly filled up thus: And why do you not ſay? which falls in naturally with what follows, "Why do you not ſay, as ſome affirm that we ſay?" Such an elliptical way of ſpeaking we have, Rev. xxii. 9. Ὅρα μή, ſee not, i. e. "ſee thou do it not." Through my lie, ver. 7. is to be underſtood as not believing, ver. 3. and as Iſai. lxiii. 8. For he ſaid, ſurely they are my people, children that will not lie; that is, "violate my covenant, by perfidiouſly forſaking me, and falling into diſobedience and wickedneſs." The laſt clauſe of ver. 8. whoſe condemnation is juſt, ſeems manifeſtly to imply, that there are certain rules which God has laid down for us, diſobedience to which, in any imaginable circumſtances, is univerſally a moral evil; even though the quantity of good ariſing from thence to our fellow-creatures ſhould be greater than that ariſing from an obſervance of thoſe rules; for if this be not allowed, there can be no ſhadow of force in the Apoſtle's concluſion. See Locke, Taylor, and Doddridge.

Ver. 9. What then?—Are we better than they?] The Apoſtle having given the Jew leave to put in his objections, in reference to what would diſguſt him moſt,—the rejection of the Jews; and having given ſuch anſwers as he thought proper at preſent,—now returns to the main point; namely, to prove that the Gentiles have as good a right to the privileges and bleſſings of God's covenant as the Jews; which he introduces very properly by putting this queſtion into the Jew's mouth, What then? Are we better than the Gentiles? Which by the way makes it clear, that in his arguments he conſiders the Jews and Gentiles in a body, or collective capacity, and that he is arguing for a juſtification agreeable to ſuch a capacity; namely, by which the believing Gentiles were taken into the church, when the unbelieving Jews were caſt out. For this point, whether Jews, or how far Jews were better than Gentiles, or had a better claim to the bleſſings and privileges of the kingdom of God, is the very ſubject upon which he is diſputing; and in this extenſive collective ſenſe, all his arguments and concluſions are to be underſtood. He ſays, we have before proved,—namely, ch. ii. 3. where, under the gentler compellation of O man! he charges the Jews with being ſinners, as well as the Gentiles; and ver. 17—24, ſhews, that by having the law, they were no more kept from being ſinners, than the Gentiles were without the law: and his charge againſt them that they were ſinners, he here proves from the teſtimony of their own ſacred books contained in the Old Teſtament. See Taylor and Locke.

Ver. 10—19. As it is written] In theſe verſes and quotations from Scripture, the Apoſtle is evidently giving a deſcription of the general character and morals of the infidel Jews in his own time, when he wrote the Epiſtle; a deſcription, which ſuits their caſe as exactly, as the foregoing one of the degeneracy of the heathen world ſuits theirs, the paſſage being picked and choſen for the purpoſe; but the manner of repreſenting it is different. In the caſe of the Gentiles, he ſpeaks out plainly; for the Jews would freely enough attend to an account of their corruptions; and the Gentile, it is probable, would be more in danger of deſpiſing and neglecting what he ſaid, than of being diſguſted at it. But had he uſed the Jews in the ſame open manner, it would have rouſed every paſſion and prejudice of the Jewiſh reader; and he could have expected no other but a rejection of his letter with indignation. To keep him therefore in temper, he, 1. gives no intimation of his deſign, but enters upon it covertly —as it is written. 2. He couches the charge under Scripture expreſſions, and turns the eyes of the Jew rather to ancient facts, in which notwithſtanding, as in a glaſs, he might ſee the very deformed complexion of the preſent Jews. 3. He uſeth the term law, in ver. 19. (which there ſignifies the whole Old Teſtament,) rather than Scriptures, as being of greater force and authority with the Jews; and then concludes in that general manner; We know that whatſoever things the law ſaith, it ſaith to them that are under the law; meaning the Jews, 11 There is none that underſtandeth, there is none that ſeeketh after God, 12 They are all gone out of the way, they are altogether become unprofitable; there is none that doeth good, no, not one.

13 Their throat is an open ſepulchre; with their tongues they have uſed deceit; the poiſon of aſps is under their lips:

14 Whoſe mouth is full of curſing and bitterneſs.

15 Their feet are ſwift to ſhed blood.

16 Deſtruction and miſery are in their ways:

17 And the way of peace have they not known:

18 There is no fear of God before their eyes.

19 Now we know that what things ſoever the law ſaith, it ſaith to them who are under the law: that every mouth may be ſtopped, and all the world may become guilty before God.

20 Therefore, by the deeds of the law there ſhall no fleſh be juſtified in his ſight: for by the law is the knowledge of ſin.

21 But now the righteouſneſs of God

Ver. 13. Pſ. v. 9. Pſ. cxl. 3.—V. 14. Pſ. x. 7.—V. 15. Prov. i. 16. Iſai. lix. 7, 8.—V. 18. Pſ. xxxvi. 1.—V. 19. John x. 34. Ezek. xvi. 63. Or, ſubject to the judgement of God.—V. 20. Gal. ii. 16. Epheſ. ii. 8. Ch. vii. 7.—V. 21. Ch. i. 17. Phil. iii. 9.

Jews, and ſuggeſting the obligation they were under to attend to a charge advanced againſt them out of their law, which they owned was of divine authority. This was ſufficient for a Jew who was diſpoſed to reflect, and at the ſame time avoids what might pervert his calm and ſober reflections. It is further obſervable, that theſe quotations from Scripture do not prove that theſe characters belonged to all the ancient Jews without exception: for there were at the ſame time in the nation perſons of a different character; nor could the Apoſtle intend they ſhould be applied to every individual among the Jews in his own time; for then they would have included himſelf, with the reſt of the Apoſtles, and all the other Jews who had embraced the Chriſtian faith, and were perſons of undoubted piety and holineſs: not to ſay that ſome, even among the unbelieving Jews, might poſſibly, notwithſtanding their error, be men of probity and virtue. Nay, he could not ſuppoſe, that even his account of the corrupt morals of the heathen world, given in ch. i. 18. &c. was true of them all, without exception. His own arguments, ch ii. 10, 14, 15, 26, 27. evince the contrary. It was ſufficient to his purpoſe if the generality of mankind were corrupt: for this appears ground ſufficient for the rejection or exciſion of them, with regard either to temporal life, or the privileges of the church;—that is to ſay, God might in juſtice have deſtroyed the whole world, which was generally exceeding vicious, although there were ſome few perſons of virtue and goodneſs in it, (for whoſe happineſs he eaſily could, and certainly would have provided in the world to come:) for notwithſtanding the virtue of a few, the main body was deſerving of wrath. The Apoſtle is here ſpeaking of bodies of people,—of Jews and Gentiles in a collective capacity. In the affair of the golden calf, wherein the Iſraelites ſo corrupted themſelves, Exod. xxxii. 7, 8. God might juſtly have rejected and conſumed them, and have made his promiſe good in the perſon of Moſes and his poſterity, as he propoſed, ver. 10. Though we have reaſon to think there were ſome who had not engaged in that inſtance of idolatry and defection from God; for we find numbers appeared on the Lord's ſide, ver. 26—30. In ſhort, the Apoſtle is taking collective bodies of men into the church, or continuing them in it; in reference to which it is true, that thoſe may not be taken into the church in this world, who yet ſhall be taken into the kingdom of heaven in the world to come; and many are now taken into the church, who ſhall for ever be excluded from happineſs in the other world. Conſequently, a ſet of texts, which prove the general corruption of the Jewiſh nation, may paſs for a good argument of their deſerving to be rejected from the privileges of God's church; or that it muſt be by grace alone, that they, in this general collective ſenſe, could be continued in the church, and ſpecial covenant of God, notwithſtanding there might be among them ſome righteous perſons, not involved in the general corruption; who, whether they were in the church, or out of it, would be taken care of in the great day of accounts; that is,—whether they were or were not juſtified with regard to the donation and poſſeſſion of church privileges, or the eſcaping the wrath which would fall on the Jewiſh ation, when they were rejected, and their polity demoliſhed,—ould certainly be juſtified and ſaved in the day of judgement. In ne, we cannot have a juſt idea of the Apoſtle's arguments, unleſs e keep in mind that he is arguing concerning the rejection of ews, and the reception of Gentiles, in a general collective capacity, o the preſent privileges of the church and covenant of God; namely, ſuch a ſenſe and capacity, that ſome good and righteous men ight be left out among the rejected, and ſome unrighteous perns taken in among the elect and juſtified. See Taylor, and on Pſ. v. 3.

Ver. 19. The law ſaith] It appears here, that this word law doth metimes ſignify the Old Teſtament in general; for not one of the otations above is taken from the Pentateuch. Inſtead of that every uth may be ſtopped, the original would be better rendered ſo that y mouth is ſtopped. See 1 Cor. vii. 29. 2 Cor. i. 17. Inſtead of become guilty before God, the original may be rendered more exy, ſtand convicted before God. Archbiſhop Tillotſon would ren- it liable to divine juſtice, which is the ſame in ſenſe. See his ks, fol. vol. i. p. 126.

Ver. 20, By the deeds of the law] The deeds or works of law here tioned appear to be thoſe in which both Jews and Gentiles were ective; and with regard to which every mouth was ſtopped, or on account of which no part of mankind could plead a right or worthineſs to be admitted into the kingdom of God. Now every mouth was ſtopped by the proof the Apoſtle has produced of the corruption both of Jews and Gentiles; therefore works of law muſt be the reverſe of that corruption: not ceremonial works, for thoſe do not come into the Apoſtle's proofs; nor yet, we apprehend, only perfect, ſinleſs obedience, but any obedience or works of righteouſneſs, perfect or imperfect, which might, all things conſidered, be judged a ſufficient foundation of a title to the favour and bleſſing of God. However, it is evident enough, that works of law ſignify thoſe works of righteouſneſs which are oppoſed to the two foregoing liſts of unrighteouſneſs; for from thoſe two liſts the Apoſtle infers, that no fleſh, that is, no part of mankind, could pretend to the favour of God by any legal works. Law therefore muſt here denote the rule of right action, as applicable to all fleſh, or to the Gentiles as well as the Jews. See on ver. 31. Vitringa has with great propriety obſerved, that the word juſtified is borrowed from Pſ. cxliii. 2. and muſt therefore ſignify receiving the teſtimony of being righteous from a judge. To be juſtified alſo ſometimes ſignifies to overcome in judgement. Pſ. li. 4. and the expreſſion of being juſt before God implies the ſame. That this is the ſenſe of the word in this Epiſtle, appears from ſeveral paſſages, particularly ch. ii. 3. So that juſtification is not a phraſe parallel to forgiveneſs, but refers to a judicial proceſs, and carries in it the idea of acquittal, praiſe, and reward. The laſt clauſe of this verſe ſtrongly implies the broken and disjointed ſtate of human nature, in conſequence of which, the precepts which God gives us, will on the whole only ſerve to convict us of guilt; but not to produce an obedience by which we can finally be acquitted and accepted. Some render it, The law takes cognizance of ſin. See Locke, Taylor, Vitringa, and Bp. Bull's Harmonia.

Ver. 21. But now, &c.] But the divine juſtification, certified by the law and the prophets, is now publiſhed independantly on the law, ver. 22. even the divine juſtification, which is by faith, &c. Wat. See the note on ch. i. 17. The queſtion with the Apoſtle is, "Upon what footing do either Jews or Gentiles, eſpecially the latter, obtain this inſtance of juſtification or ſalvation,—namely, to have a place among God's people, in his family and kingdom, or to be made meet to be partakers of the promiſes, and of the heavenly calling? Now in a court of judicature there are two ways of righteouſneſs, or juſtification. Firſt, when a perſon ſtands upon his obedience to law, or a rule of action; then righteouſneſs, juſtification, or a right to the bleſſing, whatever it be, is his due; and the law-giver is bound by his own conſtitution to give it: This is the righteouſneſs or juſtification which is of law or works. The other way of juſtification is by the mere grace or favour of the law-giver. When the law is tranſgreſſed, the ſinner has no dependance but upon the mercy and goodneſs of the law-giver or judge, and can be juſtified only by his grace, remitting ſin, and conferring the undeſerved bleſſings. Now this is the righteouſneſs or juſtification of God without law, becauſe it is provided and granted by him, ſetting aſide law, or in a way different from that in which law juſtifies; or, it is the righteouſneſs or juſtification of faith, as it is anſwered on our part, only by belief and truſt in the mercy and favour of God. Law and works give us a right, which the law-giver cannot deny, unleſs he will reverſe and break his own conſtitution, granting life and happineſs to the obedient; which conſtitution the Apoſtle here ſuppoſes: but grace and faith ſuppoſe that we are tranſgreſſors, obnoxious to wrath; and that if we eſcape deſtruction, and obtain any bleſſings, it is purely becauſe the judge is merciful, and of his own ſovereign goodneſs chooſes to ſpare us, and to beſtow further favours upon us. Theſe therefore, with regard to juſtification, are two different and indeed incompatible grounds, the one in the nature of things wholly excluding the other. This however is only to be underſtood when they are conſidered as the ground or reaſon of our firſt juſtification: In which caſe, obedience or works are regarded as antecedent to juſtification; and when the law has been tranſgreſſed, can have no part in it; becauſe then we can be juſtified only by grace on God's part, and faith on ours; but after we are juſtified, delivered from wrath, and inveſted in the bleſſing, then obedience or works, (from which, upon any ſcheme, we can never be diſengaged, ſeeing they are of neceſſary and eternal obligation,) are to be conſidered as ſubſequent to juſtification; and grace and faith become principles of obedience, or a motive and without the law is manifeſted, being witneſſed by the law and the prophets;

22 Even the righteouſneſs of God which is by faith of Jeſus Chriſt unto all, and upon all them that believe: for there is no difference:

23 For all have ſinned, and come ſhort of the glory of God:

24 Being juſtified freely by his grace, through the redemption that is in Chriſt Jeſus:

25 Whom God hath ſet forth to be a propitiation, through faith in his blood, to declare his righteouſneſs for the remiſſion of ſins that are paſt, through the forbearance of God;

26 To declare, I ſay, at this time his righteouſneſs: that he might be juſt, and the juſtifier of him which believeth in Jeſus.

27 Where is boaſting then? It is excluded. By what law? of works? Nay: but by the law of faith.

Ver. 21. Ch. i. 2.—V. 22. Ch. x. 12. Gal. iii. 28. Col. iii. 11.—V. 23. Ch. xi. 32. Gal. iii. 22.—V. 24. Ch. iv. 16. Epheſ. ii. 8. Epheſ. i. 7.—V. 25. Or, fore-ordained. 1 John ii. 2. Col. i. 20. Acts xiii. 38, 39. Or, paſſing over. Acts xvii. 30. Hebr. ix. 15.—V. 27. 1 Cor. i. 29, 31. Epheſ. ii. 9.

means to produce it. And thus grace, or faith, and works are perfectly conſiſtent, and moſt agreeably harmonize.—Of works, as antecedent to juſtification, and inconſiſtent with grace and faith, the Apoſtle ſpeaks, in chapters iii, iv, v, ix, x. Of works, as conſequent to juſtification, and conſiſtent with grace and faith, he diſcourſes, chapters vi, vii, viii, xii, xiii, xiv. Or thus,—Of grace and faith, as excluding works, he diſcourſes in chapters iii, iv, v, ix, x. Of grace and faith, as obliging to good works, and producing them, he ſpeaks in chapters vi, vii, viii, xii, xiii, xiv. Or it may otherwiſe be expreſſed thus:—Of the terms of our preſent admittance into the kingdom and covenant of God, he diſcourſes in chapters iii, iv, v, ix, x. and of our obligations to obedience, after we are taken into them, he diſcourſes in chapters vi, vii, &c. But it is proper to obſerve, that by what is here offered, it is not meant that no works or obedience but what are ſinleſs will be accepted; or as if there were no allowance for repentance, or no benefit of pardon, now that we are taken into the kingdom and covenant of God. For pardon, upon repentance, is one of the privileges of that kingdom, and a bleſſing freely given us in Chriſt; and not to us only, but to the penitent in all ages and nations, who will be pardoned at laſt, though they have not in this life ſuch clear knowledge of it as we enjoy. See Taylor.

Ver. 23. And come ſhort of the glory of God] "They have failed of rendering him that glory which was ſo juſtly his due; and thereby have not only made themſelves unworthy the participation of glory and happineſs with him, but ſtand expoſed to his ſevere and dreadful diſpleaſure. See ch. v. 2.

Ver. 24. By his grace] By his favour. Wat. Grace or favour means that compaſſionate diſpoſition of the divine nature, whereby God freely remits his right of puniſhment, and receives penitent ſinners on more gracious terms, and to greater favour, than he was bound in juſtice to do. Concerning the true import of the words redemption, propitiation, &c. we refer to what hath been ſaid in the notes on the Old Teſtament, at the ſame time referring the reader to Peter Whitfield's "Chriſtianity of the New Teſtament," p. 95, &c. where he will find a very learned and copious elucidation of theſe words.

Ver. 25. Whom God hath ſet forth, &c.] Hath fore-ordained to be the propitiatory (or mercy-ſeat) through faith, by his blood, to declare his righteouſneſs, as to remiſſion of ſins that were formerly, in the forbearance of God. Wat. See the note on Exod. xxv. 17. The Alexandrian copy omits the word διὰ πίςεως, by faith, which ſeems conformable to the ſenſe of the Apoſtle here. He ſays that God hath ſet forth Chriſt to be the propitiatory in his blood: The atonement under the law was made by blood, ſprinkled on the propitiatory, or mercy-ſeat. Lev. xvi. 14. "Chriſt, ſays St. Paul here, is now ſet forth and ſhewn by God, to be the real propitiatory in his own blood." See Heb. ix. 25, 26. where the ſacrifice of himſelf is oppoſed to the blood of others. God hath ſet him forth to be ſo, to declare his righteouſneſs,—the mercy-ſeat being the place whereon God ſpake, and declared his pleaſure; Exod. xxv. 22. Numb. xvii. 8, 9. There God always appeared, Levit. xvi. 2. It was the place of his preſence; and therefore he is ſaid to dwell between the cherubim, (Pſ. lxxx. 1.) for the mercy-ſeat was between the cherubim: In all which reſpects our Saviour, who was the anti-type, is properly called the propitiatory. If, however, the words through faith be retained, they muſt not be underſtood as if our faith was the cauſe of Chriſt's being appointed to be a mercy-ſeat. The cauſe of Chriſt's being appointed to be a mercy-ſeat, is, the free purpoſe and grace of God; but it hath reference to our uſe and application of the mercy-ſeat. See Rev. vii. 14. xii. 11. For the remiſſion of ſins that are paſt, may be read, In relation to the remiſſion, &c. for διὰ, with an accuſative, frequently ſignifies, in reſpect, or relation to. See on ch. viii. 10. The ſins that are paſt, are evidently the ſins which both Jews and Gentiles had been guilty of before the Goſpel was promulged; by which ſins both were deſerving of deſtruction, and unworthy the bleſſings of God's covenant. Thoſe ſins God in Chriſt freely forgave, or paſſed them over ſo, as not to puniſh them, 2 Cor. v. 19. Col. ii. 13. This is our firſt juſtification; and a ſignal mercy it is, comprehending the gift of all the bleſſings of the Goſpel-covenant, which we all, or any of us enjoy; and to the want of a juſt and grateful ſenſe of this, St. Peter imputes the non-proficiency of the ſlothful fruitleſs Chriſtian. 2 Pet. i. 9. See Locke, Taylor, and Bos.

Ver. 26. To declare, I ſay, &c.] "He has, I ſay, propoſed his Son, for a demonſtration of his righteouſneſs, or method of juſtifying; which now, in this preſent ever-memorable and ſignal time, is ſo wonderfully illuſtrated in the great tranſactions of our own age; intended for this purpoſe, that he might be and appear ſtrictly juſt, and yet at the ſame time, without impeaching in any degree the rights of his government, the Juſtifier of him, who is of the faith of Jeſus; that is, of every one who ſincerely believes in him; and acquieſces in that method of ſalvation, which God hath publiſhed by him, and eſtabliſhed in his perfect obedience and meritorious ſufferings." It is no way wonderful that God ſhould be merciful, or faithful to his promiſes, though the Juſtifier of believing ſinners,—as ſome would have us underſtand this paſſage; but that he ſhould be juſt in ſuch an act, might have ſeemed incredible, had we not received an account of the propitiation and atonement, by whom made, and in how aweful a manner. Thus the perfections of God, which were diſhonoured by our rebellion, are glorified. He appears, by this method of juſtification, inconceivably rich in ſhewing mercy; yet ſteady, inflexibly ſteady in executing vengeance. The ſceptre of grace, and the ſword of juſtice, have each their due exerciſe, each their full ſcope. The holineſs of the divine nature, and the dignity of the divine government, are not only maintained, but moſt magnificently diſplayed. Indeed it is the peculiar excellence of this wonderful expedient, that it renders all the divine attributes ſupremely venerable, and ſupremely amiable. The words at this time, ἐν τῷ νῦν καιρῷ, the now time, or the time that now is, meaning the time when the Goſpel was promulged, are emphatical. They diſtinguiſh the juſtification which God at that time exhibited to the world, from the juſtification, he will manifeſt to them who do good, in the day when he will judge the world by Jeſus Chriſt. See Doddridge, Harvey's Theron and Aſpaſia, vol. ii. p. 269. and an excellent tract, intitled, "Chriſt the Mediator," p. 85.

Ver. 27. Where is boaſting then?] Where is glorying then? MS. See on ch. ii. 17. What is here meant by glorying, may be nearly determined by theſe two marks: Firſt, this queſtion muſt be different from that in ver. 9. What then? are we better than they?—Secondly, the glorying here ſpoken of muſt be ſuch, as is congruous to works of righteouſneſs which a perſon performs; but which faith, or a dependance on favour, will not admit: For the Apoſtle here tells us, that this glorying is not excluded by the law of works, but by the law of faith; and ch. iv. 2. that he who is juſtified by works hath glorying, and Epheſ. ii. 8, 9. By GRACE are ye ſaved, through faith;—not of WORKS, ινα μη τις καυχησηται, ſo that no man can glory. Were we ſaved, or taken into God's kingdom or covenant by works, there would be room for glorying; that is, our ſalvation might be aſcribed to human virtue or goodneſs: But whereas it is the effect of pure free grace, there is no place for glorying. Glorying, therefore, here refers to ſomething in man, rendering him worthy of God's bleſſing. And ſuch was the Apoſtle's glorying, 2 Cor. i. 12.—The teſtimony of our conſcience, that in ſimplicity and godly ſincerity, not with fleſhly wiſdom, but by the grace of God, we have had our converſation in the world. With reſpect to the laſt clauſe of the verſe, we may obſerve, that the law of works is, when God beſtows any bleſſing in conſequence of ſuch obedience as he is pleaſed to accept, be it perfect or imperfect; for either will ſuit the Apoſtle's argument. The law of faith, is the way of beſtowing bleſſings, which only obliges us to faith, or thankful acceptance;—and that is the way of gratuitous donation. In the firſt way we have glorying; or, there is ſomething in ourſelves, to which the donation of the bleſſing refers. In this way, or according to this law or rule, all conſequent bleſſings are given; ſuch as further light and aſſiſtance in this world, and eternal life hereafter. In the ſecond way we have no glorying; for the donation of the bleſſing has no reſpect to any thing in us, but is a free gift, the pure effect of the Donor's goodneſs. In this way, or according to this law or rule, all original or antecedent bleſſings are beſtowed; ſuch as our being, Job x. 12.—the calling of Abraham, and of the Jews;—and the intereſt which we, Gentiles, have in the kingdom of God, or the grace and covenant of the everlaſting Goſpel. The queſtion Of works?—is emphatical, and implies as much as "What! of thoſe good works, which God requires, and which muſt neceſſarily recommend us to his approbation?"—It is eaſily ſeen to what end the Apoſtle introduces the ſhort dialogue in this verſe; namely, to give a clear and diſtinct idea of the juſtification for which he is arguing;—even the firſt juſtification, by mere grace, or favour of God. See Taylor.

28 Therefore we conclude, that a man is juſtified by faith, without the deeds of the law.

29 Is he the God of the Jews only? is he not alſo of the Gentiles? Yes, of the Gentiles alſo:

30 Seeing it is one God which ſhall juſtify the circumciſion by faith, and uncircumciſion through faith.

31 Do we then make void the law through faith? God forbid! yea, we eſtabliſh the law.

CHAP. IV.

Abraham's faith was imputed to him for righteouſneſs, before he was circumciſed. By faith only he and his ſeed received the promiſe. Abraham is the father of all that believe. Our faith alſo ſhall be imputed to us for righteouſneſs.

WHAT ſhall we then ſay, that Abraham our father, as pertaining to the fleſh, hath found?

Ver. 28. Acts xiii. 38. Ch. viii. 3. Gal. ii. 16.—V. 30. Ch. x. 12.——V. 1. Iſai. li. 2.

Ver. 28. Therefore we conclude] This inference is drawn from the whole preceding argument. Ἄνθρωπος, in the ſingular, without the article, frequently ſignifies man, mankind, or any man whatſoever. And the Apoſtle's argument requires it ſhould be taken in this general ſenſe, ſo as to include all mankind, Jews and Gentiles, or all fleſh, in oppoſition to no fleſh, ver. 20. For ver. 28. is the reverſe of ver. 20. and this extenſive ſenſe of the word man is confirmed by the following verſe; for the Apoſtle divides the whole world in this Epiſtle only into Jews and Gentiles. It is evident from ver. 30. that the meaning of the clauſe, Man is juſtified by faith, is, "Mankind may be juſtified, or may be intereſted by faith in the bleſſings of the Meſſiah's kingdom;" for it is there ſaid, that God will juſtify the circumciſion, &c. that is, Either Jew or Gentile, any part of mankind, may be juſtified by faith. God is ready to juſtify them whenever they believe. See Taylor.

Ver. 30. Seing it is one God, &c.] So that it is one God, the ſame eternal and unchangable Jehovah, who will juſtify, &c. Mr. Locke would render it, Seeing God is one; and ſuppoſe it an alluſion to the prediction, Zech. xiv. 9. that the Lord ſhall be One, and his name One,—fulfilled by the publication of the Goſpel: But the alluſion appears far fetched. The Apoſtle having aſſerted that he is the God of the Gentiles, as well as of the Jews, goes on to obſerve that there is but one God, whoſe tender mercies are over all his works; and with whom there is no acceptance of perſons. See ch. ii. 11.

Ver. 31. Yea, we eſtabliſh the law] Meaning, through faith. He did not make void law through faith, but on the contrary, he eſtabliſhed law through faith. Now this demonſtrates that law, in this chapter, is to be underſtood neither of the ceremonial law, nor of law in the rigorous ſenſe, with the penalty of death annexed for every tranſgreſſion; for it is certain, the Apoſtle through faith eſtabliſhed law in neither of theſe ſenſes. Law therefore in this chapter, muſt neceſſarily be underſtood in that general ſenſe, in which it may be applied both to Jews and Gentiles; or as it is ſimply, a rule of obedience. See on ver. 20. In what ſenſe the Apoſtle eſtabliſhed law, or obedience, through faith, may be ſeen in the latter part of the note on ver. 21. Faith, in the apoſtolic ſcheme, is the principle of obedience: Goſpel faith works by love, and without works is dead, James ii. 17. We are God's workmanſhip, created in Chriſt Jeſus unto good works: They that believe in God, ought to be careful to maintain good works. The Chriſtian lies under the ſtrongeſt obligations to righteouſneſs and obedience. This the Apoſtle urges very ſtrenuouſly in ch. vi. where he ſhews at large how he eſtabliſhes law, or obedience, through faith. See Taylor, and "Chriſt the Mediator," p. 90, &c.

REFLECTIONS ON CHAP. III.

The ſad uſe which thoſe perſons have heretofore made of the divine favours, by whoſe hands they have been conveyed down to us, (ver. 1.) ought by no means to leſſen our gratitude towards God. If it were ſo great an advantage to the Jews, to have received the oracles of God, wrapped up in ſo many obſcure clouds, and as it were ſealed up; (ver. 2.) How great is the mercy towards Chriſtians, who have received the interpretation, and the effect of the promiſes contained under them! But at the ſame time, what aweful judgement may not they expect, who fail to make a good uſe of this extraordinary privilege!—Gratitude and fear ought ſcarce ever to be ſeparated, in reference to this ſubject; but while we thankfully own the ineſtimable goodneſs of God, in having favoured us with his ſacred oracles, it behoves us to endeavour to improve in the knowledge of them. And thus inſtructed, let us be careful to form the moſt honourable notion of God, as the worthy and univerſal Judge, who will never fail to do right, without reſpect of perſons.

What a ſtriking reflection doth the Apoſtle ſuggeſt in ver. 6.!—God himſelf, were he unjuſt, could not be the Judge of the world; and yet man, who is nothing but injuſtice,—vain, erring man, undertakes boldly to judge of every thing. May theſe views of God and of ourſelves, produce in us an abhorrence of every evil thing, of every raſh judgement, which muſt neceſſarily be diſpleaſing to him: Nor let us ever allow ourſelves to be brought under the influence of thoſe fallacious and pernicious maxims, which would perſuade us that, "The goodneſs of the intention ſanctifies the badneſs of the action;" (ſee ver. 8.) or that the pretended benevolence of the end, will juſtify irregularities in the means. God's judgement and deciſion is final; and the inſpired Apoſtle's authority is an anſwer to a thouſand ſubtilties, which might attempt to turn us from the ſtricteſt rules of that immutable rectitude, on which it always proceeds.

Who can read the melancholy picture of human nature, ver. 10—19. copied by the hand of St. Paul, from the lines firſt drawn by inſpired writers, without deep humility and lamentation? To ſuch a degree was it ſunk, that there was none righteous, no, not one; none diſpoſed to ſeek after God, or to cultivate his fear:—And from this bitter root, the apoſtacy of our nature, what deteſtable fruits may not be expected to proceed! The throat like an open ſepulchre, ready to conſume and devour,—the deceitful tongue,—the envenomed lips,—the malicious heart,—the murderous hand!—And who can wonder, that ſuch rebels to their heavenly Father, ſhould ſometimes prove ruffians to their brethren!

Let thoſe devoutly bleſs God, who have been preſerved either from falling into ſuch enormities, or from falling by them. It was his grace reſtrained us from ſinning againſt him in ſo aggravated a manner; it was his providence that hath guarded us from thoſe, whoſe feet are ſwift to ſhed blood, and whoſe paths are ſtrewed with deſtruction and miſery.

Above all, we ſhould remember the view in which theſe inſtances of corruption were brought; it was to evince this deplorable, but undeniable truth, that Jews and Gentiles are all under ſin, ver. 19. The purpoſe, therefore, of divine conviction being hereby anſwered on our hearts, let us humble ourſelves before God, as thoſe who ſtand guilty in his preſence, and obnoxious to his judgement.

How ſhould our whole ſouls rejoice in that glorious diſplay of divine mercy, attempered and harmonized with divine juſtice, in our redemption by Chriſt, to which the Apoſtle bears ſo noble a teſtimony! ver. 20—24. We are all become guilty before God; ſo that if he ſhould mark iniquity, no fleſh living could be juſtified before him: What ſo reaſonable, what ſo indiſpenſably neceſſary, therefore, as with all reverence to eſteem, and with all joy to embrace, the righteouſneſs of God, as now atteſted by the law and the prophets, by Chriſt and his Apoſtles; and which we have the divine word to aſſure us, ſhall be upon all believers, without any difference?—Humbling ourſelves in the preſence of God, as thoſe who have ſinned, and come ſhort of the glory of God; and ſeeking to be juſtified freely by his grace, through the redemption that is in Chriſt Jeſus?

To this mighty Deliverer let us continually look, as the great propitiation of loſt man; exerciſing faith in his blood, and rejoicing that thoſe, which ſeemed to our feeble apprehenſions the moſt jarring attributes of the Deity, are now reconciled and glorified;—that mercy and truth have met together, that righteouſneſs and peace have kiſſed each other. And while we readily acknowledge that all boaſting is excluded, let us, in the grateful overflowings of our ſouls, fall down before that throne, whence pardon is diſpenſed; confeſſing that this act of grace is our only plea, and abaſing ourſelves before God for ever, in a ſenſe of the demerit of our ſins, and of the abundance of his mercy. ver. 25—27. It ſhould at all times be noted that the more faith there is in a ſoul, the leſs pride is there. Where is boaſting then?—It is excluded.—By what law?—The law of faith. Faith humbles man, by making him ſenſible that without Chriſt he is nothing but falſhood, ſin, and unworthineſs; and that it is through the merits and grace of his Saviour, that he begins, continues, or compleats any thing which is really good.

Jows and Gentiles are bound to unite in thankſgivings to God, and in love to each other, as having been all involved in the ſame condemnation,—all partakers of the ſame compaſſion. But Chriſtians are eſpecially called upon to remember, that by this rich diſplay of grace, the Almighty intended not to ſuperſede, but to eſtabliſh the law. See ver. 29—31. May we, therefore, make it our ſerious concern, that not only the actions of our lives, but the ſentiments of our hearts, be directed and determined by that law; which is now peculiarly enforced by more powerful motives, than when it appeared from Sinai, in all its unallayed terrors:—Let it be ſeen at all times, and in all our conduct, that the love of Chriſt effectually conſtrains us to glorify his name, and exalt the honours of our incarnate God!—That God, who never ſhews himſelf more plainly to be our God, than when he produces ſincere charity, through faith, in our hearts.

Chap. IV. Ver. 1. In the foregoing chapter the Apoſtle has proved, that neither Jews nor Gentiles have a right to the bleſſings of God's

2 For if Abraham were juſtified by works, he hath whereof to glory, but not before God.

3 For what ſaith the ſcripture? Abraham believed God, and it was counted unto him for righteouſneſs.

4 Now to him that worketh, is the reward not reckoned of grace, but of debt.

5 But to him that worketh not, but believeth on him that juſtifieth the ungodly, his faith is counted for righteouſneſs.

6 Even as David alſo deſcribeth the bleſſedneſs of the man unto whom God imputeth righteouſneſs without works,

7 Saying, Bleſſed are they whoſe iniquities are forgiven, and whoſe ſins are covered.

8 Bleſſed is the man to whom the Lord will not impute ſin.

9 Cometh this bleſſedneſs then upon the circumciſion only, or upon the uncircumciſion alſo? for we ſay that faith was reckoned to Abraham for righteouſneſs.

10 How was it then reckoned? when he was in circumciſion, or in uncircumciſion? Not in circumciſion, but in uncircumciſion.

11 And he received the ſign of circumciſion, a ſeal of the righteouſneſs of the peculiar kingdom, otherwiſe than by grace, which is free to the one, as well as the other. In this chapter he advances to a new argument, admirably adapted to convince the Jew; to ſhew the believing Gentile in a clear light the high value and ſtrong ſecurity of the mercies freely beſtowed upon him in the Goſpel; and at the ſame time to diſplay the ſcheme of Divine Providence, as laid in the counſel and purpoſe of God. His argument is taken from Abraham's caſe. Abraham was the father and head of the Jewiſh nation. It is generally thought that he had been an idolater; (ſee on Joſh. xxiv. 14.) but God pardoned him, and took him and his ſeed into his eſpecial covenant, and beſtowed upon them many extraordinary bleſſings above the reſt of the world. Thus he was juſtified; and it is evident he was juſtified not upon the footing of obedience to law, or the rule of right action, but in the only way a ſinner can be juſtified,—by prerogative, or the favour of the law-giver. Now this is the very ſame way in which the Goſpel ſaves the believing Gentiles, and gives them a part in the bleſſings of God's covenant. Why then ſhould the Jews ſo violently oppoſe the Gentiles being intereſted in thoſe bleſſings?—Eſpecially if it be further obſerved, that the believing Gentiles are actually included in the promiſe made to Abraham, and the covenant eſtabliſhed with him; for at the time God entered into covenant with Abraham, he conſidered him as the head, not of one nation only, but of many nations, Gen. xvii. 4. As for me, behold my covenant is with thee, and thou ſhalt be, with regard to this my covenant, the father of many, or a multitude of nations; conſequently, the covenant being made with Abraham, as the head or father of many nations, all in any nation, who ſhould ſtand upon the ſame religious principle with him, were his ſeed, and with him intereſted in the covenant God made with him: But he ſtood only upon the footing of faith in the mercy of God, pardoning his idolatry, and graciouſly beſtowing extraordinary bleſſings; and upon this footing alſo the believing Gentiles ſtand in the Goſpel; therefore they are the ſeed of Abraham, and included in the covenant of promiſe made to him. Now to all this the Apoſtle knew very well it would be objected, That it was not faith alone which gave Abraham a right to the bleſſings of the covenant; but his obedience to the law of circumciſion, which being peculiar to the Jewiſh nation, gave them alſo, and them alone, an intereſt in the Abrahamic covenant: conſequently, whoever among the Gentiles would be intereſted in that covenant, ought to embrace Judaiſm, and, as the only ground of their right, perform obedience to the law of circumciſion, and ſo come under the obligations to the whole law. With this objection the Apoſtle introduces his argument, ver. 1, 2. ſhews that, according to the Scripture account, Abraham was juſtified by faith, ver. 3—5. explains the nature of that juſtification by a quotation out of the Pſalms, ver. 6—9. proves that Abraham was juſtified long before he was circumciſed, ver 9—11. that the believing Gentiles are his ſeed, to whom the promiſe belongs, as well as to the believing Jews; ver. 12—17. and deſcribes Abraham's faith, in order to explain the faith of the Goſpel; ver. 17. to the end. See Taylor and Locke.

Ver. 2. Ch. iii. 20.—V. 3. Gen. xv. 6. Gal. iii. 6. Jam. ii. 23.—V. 4. Ch. xi. 6.—V. 7. Pſ. xxxii. 1, 2.—V. 11. Gen. xvii. 10.

Abraham our father] Father is of an extenſive and emphatical ſignification in the Hebrew; amongſt other things it ſignifies a perſon who is firſt in the invention, uſe, or enjoyment of any thing, with regard to thoſe who imitate him, or derive from him any particular cuſtom or advantage. Gen. iv. 20, 21. Jabal was the father of ſhepherds; Jubal was the father of all ſuch as handle the harp and organ. Abraham is the father of all them that believe; ver. 11. and the father of us all; ver. 16. namely, as he was the firſt to whom the grant or promiſe of extraordinary bleſſings was made upon his faith, and as all that believe are included in that promiſe, and are juſtified in the ſame way that he was. In this ſenſe the Jew here calls Abraham our father; meaning, not only as the Jews were naturally deſcended, but as they held all their privileges from him; were included in the promiſes made to him, and juſtified as he was. Thus we muſt underſtand our father, to give the Jew's argument its proper ſenſe and force; and this he meant according to his own narrow notion, as if Abraham, in this reſpect, was father to the Jews only, and to no other people. But the Apoſtle proves he was, in this reſpect,—namely, as the head and pattern of juſtification,—the father of all them that believe, whether heathens or Jews. The expreſſion, as pertaining to the fleſh, or with reſpect to the fleſh, evidently relates to circumciſion, and the obligation it laid upon the Jews: for in the fleſh,—after the fleſh,—or appertaining to the fleſh, are thus frequently uſed:—Gal. vi. 12. 1 Cor. x. 18. 2 Cor. v. 16. xi. 18. Philip. iii. 3. This was the Jew's glorying in the fleſh, and is ſufficient to point out the ſenſe of Abraham's finding or obtaining, as appertaining to or after the fleſh, that whereof he had καυχημα, to glory. See ch. iii. 27. and on ii. 17. It is what the Jews ſuppoſe he procured from God, for his obedience to the law of circumciſion, and for anſwering the peculiar obligations he was thereby brought under; as further appears from ver. 9—12. where, arguing againſt the Jew's objection ſtarted here in the 1ſt and 2d verſes, he aſks, How was faith reckoned to Abraham?—When he was in circumciſion or uncircumciſion?—Not in circumciſion, but in uncircumciſion, &c. Now as this reaſon is undoubtedly full to the purpoſe of the Jew's objection, it confirms, or rather makes neceſſary the ſenſe we have given of the phraſe before us. Dr. Waterland's reading is as follows;—Our father has found [obtained] in regard to the fleſh [i. e. by fleſhly ceremonies].

Ver. 2. But not before God] This appears to be the Apoſtle's anſwer to the Jew's objection, ver. 1, 2. and it it implies that Abraham might have ſome ſort of glorying, poſſibly ſuch as the Apoſtle himſelf had, 1 Cor. ix. 15. 2 Cor. i. 12. x. 13, &c. xi. 16—30. The Apoſtle had glorying in his ſuperior vouchſafements and labour, but only before men, and with reſpect to them; not before God, in regard to whom his language was Not I, but the grace of God. Note further, that before God hints, that the Apoſtle conſiders Abraham as ſtanding in the court before God's tribunal, when the promiſe was given him. It perhaps would make this paſſage clearer, if the preſent verſe ended with the word glory, and the third began with the clauſe before us. See Raphelius and Taylor.

Ver. 3. It was counted] Ἐλογίσθη, in our tranſlation, is rendered counted, reckoned, ver. 4, &c. imputed, ver. 6, &c. But as the word and the ſenſe is conſtantly the ſame, it would certainly have been better to have rendered it conſtantly by one word, and reckoned ſeems as proper as any other. Indeed this is a remark which may be extended to many other words; as it would certainly help the Engliſh reader to find out and purſue the ſenſe of Scripture, if the ſame original word were every where rendered by the ſame Engliſh word.

Ver. 4. Of grace] Of favour. Wat. Raphelius has ſhewn that Μισθὸν doth not only mean a reward of debt, but alſo a gift of favour; and that the phraſe μισθον δωρεην occurs in Herodotus: So that a reward of grace or favour is a claſſical, as well as theological expreſſion.

Ver. 5. The ungodly] Abraham is the ſubject of the Apoſtle's diſcourſe; and he plainly hints, though he did not care to ſpeak out, that even Abraham was chargeable with not paying due reverence and worſhip to God, as the word Ἀσεβὴς, which we render ungodly, properly imports. See on ch. i. 18. and Luke vii. 48—50.

Ver. 7. Bleſſed is the man, &c.] See on Pſ. xxxii. 1, 2. and the Reflections.

Ver. 8. Will not impute ſin] What the imputing or reckoning of righteouſneſs is, ver. 6. may be ſeen in this verſe, namely, "the not reckoning of ſin to any one;"—"the not putting ſin to his account;" the Apoſtle, in theſe verſes, uſing the expreſſions as equivalent. From hence the expreſſion of blotting out iniquity, ſo frequently uſed in Sacred Scripture, may be underſtood; that is, the ſtriking it out of the account. Λογιζεσθαι ſignifies to reckon or account; and with a dative caſe, to put to any one's account. See Locke on ver. 3. and the note on ver. 22.

Ver. 10. Not in circumciſion, but in uncircumciſion] Faith was reckoned to Abraham for juſtification, Gen. xv. 6. but circumciſion was not inſtituted till about fourteen or fifteen years after that, Gen. xvii. 1, 2, &c. for faith was reckoned to Abraham for juſtification before Iſhmael was born, at leaſt one year. Comp. Gen. xv. and xvi. At Iſhmael's birth, he was eighty-ſix years of age, Gen. xvi. 16. and at the inſtitution of circumciſion, Iſhmael was thirteen, and Abraham ninety-nine years old. See Gen. xvii. 24, 25, and Taylor.

Ver. 11. And he received the ſign of circumciſion] Hence it appears, that the covenant eſtabliſhed with Abraham, Gen. xvii. 2—15. is the ſame with that Gen. xii. 2, 3. and Gen. xv. 5, &c. For circumciſion was not a ſeal of any new grant, but of the juſtification or grant of faith which he had, yet being uncircumciſed: that he might be the father of all them that believe, though they be not circumciſed, that righteouſneſs might be imputed unto them alſo;

12 And the father of circumciſion to them who are not of the circumciſion only, but who alſo walk in the ſteps of that faith of our father Abraham, which he had, being yet uncircumciſed.

13 For the promiſe that he ſhould be the heir of the world, was not to Abraham, or to his ſeed, through the law, but through the righteouſneſs of faith.

14 For if they which are of the law be heirs, faith is made void, and the promiſe made of none effect:

15 Becauſe the law worketh wrath: for where no law is, there is no tranſgreſſion.

16 Therefore it is of faith, that it might be by grace; to the end the promiſe might be ſure to all the ſeed, not to that only which is of the law, but to that alſo which is of the faith of Abraham, who is the father of us all;

17 (As it is written, I have made thee a father of many nations,) before him whom he believed, even God, who quickeneth the dead, and calleth thoſe things which be not, as though they were.

Ver. 11. Luke xix. 9. Ver. 12, 16. Gal. iii. 7.—V. 13. Gen. xvii. 8.—V. 14. Gal. iii. 18.—V. 15. Ch. iii. 20. v. 13, 20. vii. 8, 10. 1 Cor. xv. 56. 2 Cor. vii. 9. Gal. iii. 19. 1 John iii. 4.—V. 16. Ch. iii. 24. Iſai. li. 2.—V. 17. Gen. xvii. 5. Or, like unto him. Ch. viii. 11.

of bleſſings which Abraham had received before he was circumciſed; and that juſtification or grant of bleſſings included the Goſpel covenant, in which we are now intereſted: for the Scripture foreſeeing that God would juſtify us heathens through faith, preached before the Goſpel unto Abraham, ſaying, In thee ſhall all nations be bleſſed, Gal. iii. 8. Gen. xii. 3. The whole of the Apoſtle's argument in this chapter proves, that we believing Gentiles are the ſeed of Abraham, to whom, as well as to himſelf, the promiſe was made; conſequently, it is the Abrahamic covenant in which we now ſtand; and any argument taken from the nature of that covenant, and applied to ourſelves, muſt be good and valid. It is alſo undeniably evident from this verſe, as well as from Gen. xvii. 1—11. that circumciſion was a ſeal or ſign of the covenant of grace, and not merely of temporal promiſes; which conſequently obviates the moſt conſiderable objection that has ever been urged againſt Infant Baptiſm. Mr. Locke obſerves, that the Apoſtle's ſenſe, at the cloſe of this verſe, properly runs thus: "That he might be the father of the Gentiles who believe, though they be not circumciſed, that righteouſneſs might be imputed to them alſo." ver. 12. "And the father of the Jews, that righteouſneſs might be imputed, not to them who have circumciſion only, but to them who alſo walk in the ſteps of the faith of our father Abraham, which he had, being uncircumciſed." Dr. Waterland reads it,—Of the faith which ſhould be in uncircumciſion.

Ver. 13. The heir of the world] Abraham and his ſeed together are the heir of the world; for the promiſe is made to both, and αὐτὸν includes both; and his ſeed, in the next verſe, are called heirs as well as he; i. e. heirs of the world, not lords and poſſeſſors of it, as ſome ſuppoſe, for that they were never intended to be. The world, we conceive, muſt here be conſidered as a great family, and Abraham and his ſeed as the heir or heirs, to whom, by the free donation of God belonged the birth-right, the double portion of the father's goods, the excellency of dignity, and the excellency of power, Gen. xliii. 33. xlix. 3. Deut. xxi. 15—17. Agreeably to this ſentiment, the Lord ſtiles the whole body of the Iſraelites his ſon, his firſt-born, or heir. Exod. iv. 22. Jer. xxxi. 9. Hence the Chriſtian church or congregation is called the church of the firſt-born. Heb. xii. 23. which is the thing the Apoſtle demonſtrates in this chapter; namely, that we are heirs, or the firſt-born of the world, as we are by faith the ſeed of Abraham, to whom the promiſe was made, at the ſame time that it was made to him. And if ye be Chriſt's, then are ye Abraham's ſeed, and heirs according to the promiſe. Gal. iii. 29. This is a very juſt, as well as a very beautiful way of repreſenting the extraordinary privileges and bleſſings vouchſafed to the peculiar congregation and people of God: For, firſt, this gives us a clear idea in what ſenſe the Apoſtle is here ſpeaking of the juſtification both of Abraham and his ſeed; for the promiſe to Abraham and his ſeed, that he ſhould be the heir of the world, is manifeſtly that juſtification, or grant of bleſſings, about which the Apoſtle is arguing from the beginning of the chapter; and this verſe ſhews, that this juſtification is not final, but the firſt juſtification, whereby they were conſtituted the heirs of the world, or the firſt-born of the family of God in the world; and had, by the grace or favour of God, a double portion of his bleſſing aſſigned to them; namely, the extraordinary privileges, honours and advantages of the peculiar people of God. It is juſtification in this ſenſe, as we are at preſent admitted to thoſe privileges and honours, for which the Apoſtle is arguing in this chapter, and conſequently in the foregoing. This, ſecondly, ſhews in what light we are to view the Gentiles, or thoſe parts of the world who are not taken into the congregation of God; namely, not as wholly excluded from his favour and bleſſing, but as enjoying a leſs degree of advantage. The heir in the family poſſeſſed a double portion of the father's goods, but the reſt of the children had ſome ſhare of the ſubſtance: ſo it is with the heathen; they have their part of God's bleſſing, though we, as the firſt-born, enjoy the double portion. This alſo, thirdly, ſhews with how much propriety the Apoſtle uſes the inſtance of Eſau, Heb. xii. 16, 17. to caution Chriſtians againſt the contempt and abuſe of their preſent privileges. Eſau, as Jacob's heir or firſt-born, had a birthright, an invaluable bleſſing, which for one morſel of meat he ſold, and loſt for ever; and we alſo, as the firſt-born, or heirs of our heavenly father, have a birthright, even the revelation and promiſes of all the bleſſings of the Goſpel covenant. This is our great happineſs above the heathen, who have not the promiſes and grace of this covenant revealed to them: But we may forfeit this birthright, and ſhall certainly loſe it for ever, if we prefer the pleaſures of ſin before the favour of God, and that eternal life which he has given us in Jeſus Chriſt our Lord; and then the virtuous heathen, who honeſtly improves his leſſer ſhare of the divine goodneſs, ſhall, in the life to come, be received into the kingdom of God; while the profane and wicked Chriſtian, who receives the grace of God in vain, ſhall be caſt into outer darkneſs. See Taylor and Locke.

Ver. 14. For if they which are of the law be heirs] The Apoſtle here ſpeaks of the performance of the law, with reference to a moral impoſſibility; for it ſeems evident from what follows, that the law is to be conſidered as inſiſting on an obedience abſolutely perfect: ſo that thoſe good men who were juſtified under it, were not juſtified by it, but by the diſpenſation of grace under which Abraham was; which, though not a part of the covenant of God by Moſes, was not, and could not be abrogated by it. See Gal. iii. 17. and Doddridge.

Ver. 15. Where no law is, &c.] "Of that concerning which there is no law, with the ſanction of a puniſhment annexed, there can be no tranſgreſſion, incurring wrath or puniſhment." Thus it may be rendered, if we read οὗ, with an aſpiration, as ſome do: But whether it be taken to ſignify where or whereof, the ſenſe will be the ſame; for παράϐασις here, to make St. Paul's argument of force, muſt ſignify ſuch a tranſgreſſion, as draws upon the tranſgreſſor wrath and puniſhment, by the force and ſanction of a law; and ſo the Apoſtle's propoſition is made good,—that it is the law alone which expoſes us to wrath, and that it is all which the law can do, for it gives us no power to perform. Locke.

Ver. 16. Therefore it is of faith, that it might be by grace] By favour. Wat. Here it ſhould be well obſerved, that faith and favour do mutually and neceſſarily infer each other; for the grace or favour of God, in its own nature requires faith in us, and faith on our part, in its own nature ſuppoſes the grace or favour of God. If any bleſſing is the free gift of God, in order to influence our temper and behaviour, then in the very nature of things it is neceſſary that we be ſenſible of this bleſſing, and perſuaded of the grace of God, who beſtows it; otherwiſe, it is not poſſible we ſhould improve it. On the other hand, if faith in the goodneſs or favour of God, with regard to any bleſſing, is the principle of our religious hopes and actions, then it follows, that the bleſſing is not due in ſtrict juſtice, or upon the footing of law; but that it is the free gift of divine goodneſs. If the promiſe to Abraham, conſtituting him and his ſeed the heirs or firſt-born of the world, is of faith on our part, then is it by favour on the part of God; and it is of faith that it might be by favour. Favour being the mere good-will of the donor, is free and open to all whom he chooſes to make the object of it: And the divine wiſdom appointed faith to be the condition of that promiſe, becauſe faith, or a perſuaſion of the truth of the promiſe, is on our part the moſt ſimple principle; bearing an exact correſpondence to grace or favour, and reaching as far as that can extend; that ſo the happy effects of that promiſe might ſpread far and wide, take in the largeſt compaſs, and be confined by no condition, but what is merely neceſſary in the nature of things. See Taylor, Bengelius, Calmet. Mr. Locke obſerves, that the grammatical conſtruction at the beginning of this verſe does not ſeem much to favour inheritance, as the word to be ſupplied, (therefore the inheritance is of faith) becauſe it does not occur in the preceding verſes; But he that obſerves St. Paul's way of writing, who more regards things than forms of ſpeaking, will be ſatisfied that it is enough that he mentions heirs, ver. 13, 14. And that he means inheritance here, is put paſt a doubt by Gal. iii. 18.

Ver. 17. As it is written, &c.] That Abraham's being the father of

18 Who againſt hope believed in hope, that he might become the father of many nations; according to that which was ſpoken, So ſhall thy ſeed be.

19 And being not weak in faith, he conſidered not his own body now dead, when he was about an hundred years old, neither yet the deadneſs of Sarah's womb.

20 He ſtaggered not at the promiſe of God through unbelief; but was ſtrong in faith, giving glory to God;

21 And being fully perſuaded, that what he had promiſed, he was able alſo to perform.

22 And therefore it was imputed to him for righteouſneſs.

23 Now it was not written for his ſake alone, that it was imputed to him;

24 But for us alſo, to whom it ſhall be imputed, if we believe on him that raiſed up Jeſus our Lord from the dead;

25 Who was delivered for our offences, and was raiſed again for our juſtification.

Ver. 18. Gen. xv. 5.—V. 19. Gen. xvii. 17. xviii. 11. Hebr. xi. 11, 12.—V. 21. Pſ. cxv. 3. Hebr. xi. 19.—V. 23. Ch. xv. 4. 1 Cor. x. 6, 11.—V. 24. Acts ii. 24. xiii. 30.—V. 25. Gal. i. 4. 1 Cor. xv. 17.

of many nations, hath relation to the covenant God made with him, may be ſeen Gen. xvii. 4, 5. Behold, my covenant is with thee, and thou ſhalt be a father of many nations: neither ſhall thy name any more be called Abram; but thy name ſhall be Abraham: for a father of many nations have I made or conſtituted thee, by virtue of my covenant with thee. See Taylor's Key, p. 27. Dr. Doddridge inſtead of before him whom he believed, even God, reads, like God whom he believed; for ſo he thinks κατέναντι may ſignify: but Dr. Waterland, connecting it with the laſt words of the former verſe reads, who is the father of us all,—then exiſting in the ſight of God, whom he believed, &c. The meaning of the laſt clauſe ſeems to be, "Who ſpeaketh of things which do not yet exiſt, as if they were actually exiſting; becauſe he knows they will exiſt in their due time." See Markland on Arnold's Comment. on Wiſdom xi. 25.

Ver. 22. And therefore it was imputed to him for righteouſneſs] To what has been ſaid concerning the word rendered imputed in ver. 8. we add the following remarks of Dr. Doddridge, from his ſermons on Salvation by Grace through faith, p. 14, &c. "All manner of imputation, ſays he, ſeems to be a metaphor taken from books of account between creditor and debtor; and from mercantile affairs, it is ſometimes applied to judicial; as crimes to be accounted for, are alſo ſometimes called debts. When the matter, however, is well underſtood in one view, it is eaſy to apply it to the other: To impute any act of ſin, or of obedience to a perſon, is therefore properly (as we have before ſuggeſted) no other than to ſet it down to his account. The great God of heaven and earth is repreſented in Scripture,—with humble condeſcenſion to our manner of acting and conceiving of things,—as keeping a moſt exact book of records and accounts, in which thoſe things are regiſtered concerning every one of us, which he will bring into that laſt review and ſurvey, by which our characters and ſtates ſhall finally be determined. And as the moſt exact and perfect obedience is a debt which we owe him, as our great creator, benefactor, and governor: ſo, on the breach of his law, we owe him ſome proper ſatisfaction for it. In this view we are all charged as debtors, poor, miſerable inſolvent debtors in the book of God; (ſee Mark vi. 12.) Innumerable ſins are imputed, or ſet down to our account; and were things to go on in this courſe, we ſhould ere long be arreſted by the divine juſtice, and being found incapable of payment, ſhould be caſt into the priſon of hell, to come out no more. But God, in pity to this our calamitous ſtate, hath found out a ſurety and a ranſom for us; hath provided a ſatisfaction in the obedience and ſufferings of his Son, which is what we mean by the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, or his active and paſſive obedience. It is with a gracious regard to this—to expreſs his high complacency in it, and, if we may ſo ſpeak, his pleaſing remembrance of it, that all who are finally juſtified and ſaved, meet with divine acceptance and favour: or, to purſue the metaphor opened above, The righteouſneſs of Chriſt is in the book of God imputed or ſet down to their acacount, as that by which the debt is balanced, and they are intitled to ſuch favours as righteous perſons might expect from God.—But then, it is an invariable rule in the divine proceedings, that this righteouſneſs, or this atonement and ſatisfaction of Chriſt (for it ſeems of little conſequence by which of theſe names it ſhall be called) be a means of delivering thoſe, and only thoſe who believe. Purſuant therefore to the above metaphor, when any particular perſon believes, this is ſet down to his account, as a moſt important article, or as a memorandum, if we may ſo expreſs it, in the book of God's remembrance, that ſuch an one is now actually become a believer, and therefore is now entitled to juſtification and life by Chriſt. In this ſenſe his faith is imputed for righteouſneſs. Yet it is not regarded by God as the grand conſideration which balances the account, or indeed as paying any of the former debt,—which it is impoſſible it ſhould; but only as that, which, according to the gracious conſtitution of the Goſpel, gives a man a claim to what Chriſt has paid, and which God has graciouſly allowed, as a valuable conſideration, in regard to which he may honourably pardon and accept all who ſhall apply to him in his appointed way, or in the way of humble believing."

Ver. 24. But for us alſo] But for our ſake alſo. MS. and Wat.

Ver. 25. Who was delivered for our offences] See ch. iii. 25. v. 6—10. Epheſ. i. 7, 11, 14. v. 2. Col. i. 14, 20—22. 1 Tim. ii. 6. Titus ii. 14. 1 Cor. xv. 17. From theſe ſeveral texts of St. Paul may be ſeen his own explication of what he ſays here; namely, that our Saviour, by his death, atoned for our ſins, and ſo we were made innocent, and thereby freed from the puniſhment due to ſin. But he roſe again to aſcertain to us eternal life, the conſequence of juſtification; for the reward of righteouſneſs is eternal life, to which inheritance we have a title by adoption in Jeſus Chriſt. But if he himſelf had not poſſeſſed that inheritance, if he had not riſen into the poſſeſſion of eternal life, We, who hold by and under him, could not have riſen from the dead; and ſo could never have come to be pronounced righteous, and to have received the reward of it,—everlaſting life. Hence St. Paul tells us, that if Chriſt be not raiſed, our faith is vain; we are yet in our ſins: That is, as to the attainment of eternal life, it is all the ſame as if our ſins were not forgiven. And thus he roſe for our juſtification, not only as his reſurrection affords the moſt ſolid confirmation of the whole new covenant, but alſo puts him into a capacity of raiſing us from the dead, and of giving us eternal life, John xiv. 19. See Locke, and Taylor.

REFLECTIONS ON CHAP. IV.

It is the corrupt inclination of the heart of man, to ſeek for ſomething to juſtify himſelf in his own good works, and in his own will; which does not come from God, and which is owing only to himſelf. The ſincere Chriſtian, on the contrary, places all his joy in owing every thing to God, through Jeſus Chriſt: And whoſoever is deſirous to glory in any thing independantly of Him, will meet with nothing but ſhame and confuſion at the laſt. In this view, Abraham is the firſt witneſs to grace, and the righteouſneſs of faith before the law, ver. 1, 2. and the pattern of right conduct to every truly faithful perſon.

We are ſaved by a divine ſcheme, which allows us not to mention any works of our own, as if we had whereof to glory before God, but teaches us to aſcribe our ſalvation to the belief in Him who juſtifieth the ungodly. Nor need we be aſhamed of flying to ſuch a method: Abraham, the father of the faithful, had recourſe to it himſelf, ver. 3—5. and built on it his eternal hope, which nothing can confound. May we ſhare his diſpoſition of mind, that ſo we may inherit the ſame promiſes: And thus we alſo, walking in the ſteps of our father Abraham, ſhall be called like him the friends and children of God; and ſit down with the patriarchs and prophets of old in his heavenly kingdom.

If there be indeed any ſuch thing as happineſs to be enjoyed by mortals, it is the portion of that man, of whom David ſpeaks—of him whoſe iniquity is pardoned, whoſe ſin is covered, and who enjoys the manifeſtation of that pardon, ver. 7, 8. Well may he endure the greateſt afflictions of life with cheerful ſubmiſſion, and look forward to death with comfort; to that aweful, yet tranſporting day, when the ſting of all theſe evils ſhall be taken out, and returning tokens of the divine favour convert them into bleſſings. How earneſtly ſhould we then ſupplicate the throne of grace, that this happineſs may become ours! That the great and glorious Being, whom by our ſins we have ſo offended, and in whom alone the right and power of pardon reſides, would ſpread the veil of his mercy over our provocations, and blot them out of the book of his remembrance! Let us only, on the one hand, fix it in our minds, that it is the character of the man to whom this bleſſedneſs belongs, that in his ſpirit there is no guile; and on the other reflect, that it is in conſequence of a righteouſneſs which God graciouſly imputes, and faith receives and applies.

How common is it, for men to glory in the piety and holineſs of thoſe to whom they bear any relation; but how rarely do they walk in their ſteps, by imitating their example!—ſee ver. 12. The faith which does not diſpoſe us to forſake all, for the ſake of God, and to ſacrifice every thing to his known will, is not the faith of a Son of Abraham; not ſuch a faith as can ever be accounted for righteouſneſs.

Though by our manifold tranſgreſſion of the perfect law of God, we can never inherit by any claim from that, which only worketh wrath and condemnation, in conſequence of our breach of it; (ver. 14, 15.) Yet ſhall we, by believing and obeying the Goſpel of our Redeemer, find the promiſe ſure to us, as the ſpiritual ſeed of Abraham, (ver. 16.) and be for ever happy in the enjoyment of that better Canaan, where every earthly inheritance ſhall be no more.

Let us then bear continually in our minds the great, the venerable example of Abraham our father; labour to the utmoſt to trace his ſteps,

CHAP. V.

Being juſtified by faith, we have peace with God, and joy in our hope; that ſince we were reconciled by his blood, when we were enemies, we ſhall much more be ſaved being reconciled. As ſin and death came by Adam, ſo much more righteouſneſs and life by Jeſus Chriſt. Where ſin abounded, grace did ſuperabound.

THerefore being juſtified by faith, we have peace with God, through our Lord Jeſus Chriſt:

2 By whom alſo we have acceſs by faith into this grace wherein we ſtand, and rejoice in hope of the glory of God.

3 And not only ſo, but we glory in tribulations alſo; knowing that tribulation worketh patience;

4 And patience, experience; and experience, hope:

5 And hope maketh not aſhamed; becauſe the love of God is ſhed abroad in our hearts, by the Holy Ghoſt which is given unto us.

6 For when we were yet without ſtrength, in due time Chriſt died for the ungodly.

7 For ſcarcely for a righteous man will one die: yet peradventure for a good man ſome would even dare to die.

8 But God commendeth his love towards us, in that while we were yet ſinners, Chriſt died for us.

Ver. 1. Iſai. xxxii. 17. John xvi. 33. Epheſ. ii. 14.—V. 2. Epheſ. ii. 18. iii. 12. Hebr. iii. 6.—V. 3. Jam. i. 3,—V. 4. Jam. i. 3.—V. 5. Phil. i. 20.—V. 6. Or, according to the time.—V. 8. John xv. 13. 1 Pet. iii. 18. 1 John iii. 16. iv. 9.

ſteps, and have faith in that omnipotent God, who at his pleaſure quickeneth the dead, and calleth the things which are not, as if they were, ver. 17. If ſenſe were to judge, it would pronounce many of thoſe difficulties inſurmountable, which ſeem to oppoſe the accompliſhment of his promiſes;—but we have the truth of God pledged as our ſecurity, that they ſhall all be fulfilled in their ſeaſon. Surely no argument ſhould be ſo effectual as this to render us ſtrong in faith, and thus diſpoſe our hearts to glorifying God, ver. 20. He hath promiſed, and he is able alſo to perform; for with him all things are poſſible. Already hath he done that for us, which we had much leſs reaſon to expect or conceive, than we now have to hope for any thing remaining. He that delivered up his ſon Jeſus for our offences, (ver. 25.) to redeem us by his blood from final and everlaſting ruin;—How ſhall he not with him alſo freely give us all things?

Be it our daily joy, that this mighty Saviour was raiſed again for our juſtification. A belief of the reſurrection of Chriſt, comprehends every thing, ſince it includes the belief of all the myſteries and truths of Chriſtianity, whether antecedent or ſubſequent; the reſurrection being in fact the ſeal of every thing which the bleſſed Jeſus did, ſuffered, taught and promiſed, to and for his people. Let it therefore be continually conſidered as the nobleſt argument to eſtabliſh our faith in him, who performed this illuſtrious work of mercy and of power. So ſhall it be accounted to us likewiſe for righteouſneſs, ver. 22, 23. Yea, ſo ſhall the righteouſneſs of our redeeming God be reckoned as ours, to all the bleſſed purpoſes of our juſtification and acceptance with him to all eternity.

Chap. V. Ver. 1. The Apoſtle having proved in the former chapter, that the believing Gentiles are juſtified in the ſame way with Abraham, and in fact are his ſeed, included with him in the promiſe or covenant, he judged this a proper place, (as the Jews built all their glorying upon the Abrahamic covenant,) to produce ſome of thoſe privileges and bleſſings in which the Chriſtian Gentile could glory, in conſequence of his juſtification, or his being pardoned, and taken into the covenant and peculiar kingdom of God by faith. And he chooſes to inſtance in three particulars, which above others were adapted to this purpoſe; namely, firſt, the hope of eternal life, in which the law wherein the Jews gloried, ch. ii. 17. defective, v. 2. Secondly, the perſecution and ſufferings to which Chriſtians were expoſed, ver. 3, 4. and on account of which the Jew was greatly prejudiced againſt the Chriſtian profeſſion; and here having ſhewn that tribulations have a happy tendency to eſtabliſh our hearts in the hope of the Goſpel, he wiſely adds, to alleviate the frightful aſpect of tribulation, ſome weighty reaſons to prove, that the glorious hope of the Goſpel will certainly be made good in our eternal ſalvation by Jeſus Chriſt, ver. 5—11. Thirdly, an intereſt in God, as our God and Father; a privilege upon which the Jews valued themſelves highly above all other nations. See ch. ii. 17. Theſe three are the ſingular privileges belonging to the Goſpel ſtate, wherein we Chriſtians may glory, as really belonging to us, and greatly redounding, if duly underſtood and improved, to our honour and benefit. See Taylor and Locke.

We have peace with God] That is, we Gentiles, who are not under the law. It is in their names that St. Paul ſpeaks in the three laſt verſes of the foregoing chapter, and ſo on to ver. 11. as is evident from the illation here;—therefore, being juſtified by faith, we, &c. it being an inference drawn from his having proved in the former chapter, that the promiſe was not to the Jews alone, but to the Gentiles alſo; and that juſtification was not by the law, but by faith, and conſequently deſigned for the Gentiles, as well as the Jews. We have peace with God, is thus paraphraſed by Doddridge: "Our guilty fears are ſilenced, and we are taught to look up to him with ſweet ſerenity of ſoul, while we no longer conceive of him as an enemy, but under the endearing character of a friend and father.

Ver. 2. By whom alſo we have acceſs, &c.] By whom we have been introduced, by means of faith, into that grace, &c. προσαγωγὴ is often uſed as a ſacerdotal phraſe, and ſignifies being with great ſolemnity introduced, as into the more immediate preſence of the Deity in his temple; ſo as, by a ſuppoſed interpreter, from thence called προσαγωγευς, the introducer, to have a kind of conference with ſuch a Deity. St. Paul uſes the ſame word rejoice or glory for the convert Gentiles, which he had uſed before the boaſting of the Jews; and the ſame word he applied when he examined what Abraham had found, ch. iv. 2. which plainly ſhews us, that he is here oppoſing the advantages which the Gentile converts to Chriſtianity have by faith, to thoſe the Jews gloried in, with ſo much haughtineſs and contempt of the Gentiles. See Locke, Raphelius, and on chap. ii. 17.

Ver. 4. Experience] Full proof. MS. Δοκιμὴ has this ſignification, and is a metaphor taken from gold proved by purifying fire. See 1 Pet. i. 7. Ecclus. ii. 5. and Saurin's Serm. p. 159.

Ver. 5. Hope maketh not aſhamed] Will not deceive us. Wat. This is a figure called litotes, very common in Scripture, which ſignifies that our expectation, truſt, hope, or deſire ſhall be certainly and glorioufly accompliſhed: So ch. ix. 33. x. 11. For the next clauſe, comp. 2 Cor. i. 22, v. 4, 5. Epheſ. i. 13, 14. 1 John iii. 24. iv. 13. The force of the Apoſtle's inference ſeems to ſtand thus: "The hope of eternal happineſs, in which we glory, cannot deceive us, becauſe the gifts of the Holy Ghoſt beſtowed upon us, aſſure us of the love of God towards us;" the Jews themſelves acknowledging, that the Holy Ghoſt is given to none but thoſe who are God's own people.

Ver. 6. In due time Chriſt died, &c.] Chriſt ſeaſonably died, in the ſtead of the ungodly. See Albert's Obſerv. Sacr. p. 304. and Raphel. Annot. ex Xenoph. in v. 8. where he has abundantly demonſtrated that ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν ἀπέθανε ſignifies, he died in our room and ſtead. Nor does it appear, that ἀποθανειν ὑπὲρ τινος has ever any other ſignification than that of reſcuing the life of another at the expence of our own. And the very next verſe, independant on any authority, ſhews how evidently it bears that ſenſe here, as one can hardly imagine any one would die for a good man, unleſs it were to redeem his life, by giving up his own.

Ver. 7. For ſcarcely for a righteous man, &c.] Now ſcarcely, &c. for γαρ cannot have the force of an illative particle here. He may in common ſpeech be called a juſt or righteous man, who gives to every man what is by law his due; and he a good or benevolent man, who voluntarily abounds in kind and generous actions, to which no human laws can compel him. Cicero has the like diſtinction, de Offic. lib. i. cap. 10 "Juſtus eſt, qui reddit quod debet, quod que etiam ab invito per judicam extorqueri poterat: bonus ſive beneficus, qui liberaliter dat, quod non debet." Raphelius and Wetſtein have ſeveral quotations from other ancient writers to the ſame purpoſe. There may poſſibly be ſome alluſion here to a rabbinical diſtribution of mankind into three claſſes, good men, righteous men, and ſinners. See Gonwin's Jewiſh Antiq. lib. i. c. 6.

Ver. 8. But God commendeth his love, &c.] St. Paul gives them here another evidence of the love of God towards them.—The ground they had to glory in the hopes of eternal ſalvation is the death of Chriſt for them while they were yet in their unconverted Gentile ſtate, which he deſcribes by calling them, ver. 6. ἀσθενεις, without ſtrength:—ἀσεβεις, ungodly; αμαρτωλοι, ſinners, ver. 8. and εχθροι, enemies, ver. 10. Theſe four epithets are given to them as Gentiles, they being uſed by St. Paul as the proper attributes of the unconverted heathen world, conſidered in contradiſtinction to the Jewiſh nation. What St. Paul ſays of the Gentiles in other places will clear this. The helpleſs condition of the Gentile world, in the ſtate of Gentiliſm, ſignified here by ασθενεις, without ſtrength, he terms, Col. ii. 13, dead in ſin, a ſtate, if any, of weakneſs. And hence he ſays to the Romans converted to Jeſus Chriſt; Yield yourſelves unto 9 Much more then, being now juſtified by his blood, we ſhall be ſaved from wrath through him.

10 For if when we were enemies, we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son, much more being reconciled, we ſhall be ſaved by his life.

11 And not only ſo, but we alſo joy in God, through our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, by whom we have now received the atonement.

Ver. 9. 1 Theſſ. i. 10.—V. 10. Ch. viii. 32. 2 Cor. v. 19. Epheſ. ii. 16. Col. i. 20, 21. John v. 26. xiv. 19. 2 Cor. iv. 10, 11.

God, as thoſe that are alive from the dead, and yourſelves as inſtruments of righteouſneſs unto God, ch. vi. 13. How he deſcribes ασεβειαν, ungodlineſs, mentioned ch. i. 18. as the proper ſtate of the Gentiles, we may ſee ver. 21, 23. That he thought the title ἁμαρτολοι, ſinners, belonged peculiarly to the Gentiles, in contra-diſtinction to the Jews, he puts it paſt doubt in theſe words, We who are Jews by nature, and not ſinners of the Gentiles, Gal. ii. 15. See alſo ch. vi. 17—22. And as for ἐχθροὶ, enemies, you have the Gentiles before their converſion to Chriſtianity ſo called, Col. i. 21. St. Paul, Epheſ. ii. 1—13. deſcribes the heathens a little more at large, but yet the parts of the character he there gives them, we may find comprized in theſe four epithets; the αθενεῖς, weak, ver. 1, 5. the ἀσεβεῖς, ungodly, and ἁμαρτωλοὶ, ſinners, ver. 23. and the ἐχθροὶ, enemies, ver. 11, 12.

If it were remembered that St. Paul, all along through the eleven firſt chapters of this Epiſtle, ſpeaks nationally of the Jews and Gentiles, as it is viſible he does, and not perſonally of ſingle men, there would be leſs difficulty, and fewer miſtakes in underſtanding this Epiſtle. This one place we are upon is a ſufficient inſtance of it. For if by theſe terms here, we ſhall underſtand him to denote all men perſonally, Jews as well as Gentiles, before they are ſavingly ingrafted into Jeſus Chriſt, we ſhall make his diſcourſe here disjointed, and his ſenſe mightily perplexed, if at all conſiſtent.

That there were ſome among the heathen as innocent in their lives, and as far from enmity to God as ſome among the Jews, cannot be queſtioned. Nay, that many of them were not ἀσεβεῖς, but σεβόμενοι, worſhippers of the true God, if we could doubt of it, is manifeſt out of the Acts of the Apoſtles; but yet St. Paul, in the places above quoted, pronounces them all together, ἀσεβεῖς and ἄθεοι, (for that by theſe two terms applied to the ſame perſons, he means the ſame, i. e. ſuch as did not acknowledge and worſhip the true God, ſeems plain) ungodly, and ſinners of the Gentiles, as nationally belonging to them in contra-diſtinction to the people of the Jews, who were the people of God, whilſt the other were the provinces of the kingdom of Satan: Not but that there were ſinners, heinous ſinners, among the Jews; but the nation, conſidered as one body and ſociety of men, diſowned and declared againſt, and oppoſed itſelf to thoſe crimes and impurities which are mentioned by St. Paul, ch. i. 24, &c. as woven into the religious and politick conſtitutions of the Gentiles. There they had their full ſcope and ſwing, had allowance, countenance, and protection. The idolatrous nations had by their religions, laws, and forms of government, made themſelves the open votaries, and were the profeſſed ſubjects of devils. So St. Paul, 1 Cor. x. 20, 21. truly calls the Gods they worſhipped and paid their homage to. And ſuitably hereunto, their religious obſervances it is well known were not without great impunities, which were of right charged upon them, when they had a place in their ſacred offices, and had the recommendation of religion to give them credit. The reſt of the vices in St. Paul's black liſt, which were not warmed at their altars, and foſtered in their temples, were yet by the connivance of the law cheriſhed in their private houſes, and made a part of the uncondemned actions of common life, and had the countenance of cuſtom to authorize them, even in the beſt regulated and moſt civilized governments of the heathens. On the contrary, the frame of the Jewiſh commonwealth was founded on the acknowledgement and worſhip of the one only true inviſible God, and their laws required an extraordinary purity of life, and ſtrictneſs of manners.

That the Gentiles were ſtiled ἐχθροὶ, enemies, in a political or national ſenſe, is plain from Epheſ. ii. where they are called, aliens from the commonwealth of Iſrael, and ſtrangers from the covenant. Abraham, on the other ſide, was called the friend of God, i. e. one in covenant with him, and his profeſſed ſubject, that owned God to the world: And ſo were his poſterity the people of the Jews, whilſt the reſt of the world were under revolt, and lived in open rebellion againſt him, Iſai. xli. 8. And here in this Epiſtle St. Paul expreſly teaches, that when the nation of the Jews, by rejecting of the Meſſiah, put themſelves out of the kingdom of God, and were caſt off from being any longer the people of God, they became enemies, and the Gentile world were reconciled. See ch. xi. 15, 28. Hence St. Paul, who was the Apoſtle of the Gentiles, calls his performing that office, the miniſtry of reconciliation, 2 Cor. v. 15. And here in this chapter, ver. 1. the privilege which they receive by the accepting of the covenant of grace in Jeſus Chriſt, he tells them is this, that they have peace with God, i. e. are no longer incorporated with his enemies, and of the party of the open rebels againſt him in the kingdom of Satan, being returned to their natural allegiance in their owning the one true ſupreme God, in ſubmitting to the kingdom he had ſet up in his Son, and being received by him as his ſubjects. Suitable hereunto St. James, ſpeaking of the converſion of the Gentiles to the profeſſion of the Goſpel, ſays of it, that God did viſit the Gentiles, to take out of them a people for his name, Acts xv. 14. and ver. 19. he calls the converts, thoſe who from among the Gentiles are turned to God.

Beſides what is to be found in other parts of St. Paul's Epiſtles to juſtify the taking of theſe words here, as applied nationally to the Gentiles, in contra-diſtinction to the children of Iſrael, that which St. Paul ſays, ver. 10, 11. makes it neceſſary to underſtand them ſo. We, ſays he, when we were enemies were reconciled to God, and ſo we now glory in him, as our God. We here muſt unavoidably be ſpoken in the name of the Gentiles, as is plain not only by the whole tenor of this ſection, but from this paſſage of glorying in God, which he mentions as a privilege now of the believing Gentiles, ſurpaſſing that of the Jews, whom he had taken notice of before, ch. ii. 17. as being forward to glory in God as their peculiar right, though with no great advantage to themſelves. But the Gentiles who were reconciled now to God by Chriſt's death, and taken into covenant with God, as many as received the Goſpel, had a new and better title to this glorying than the Jews. Thoſe that now are reconciled, and glory in God as their God, he ſays were enemies. The Jews, who had the ſame corrupt nature common to them with the reſt of mankind, are no where that I know called ἐχθροὶ, enemies, or ἀσεβεῖς, ungodly, whilſt they publickly owned him for their God, and profeſſed to be his people. But the heathens were deemed enemies, for being aliens to the commonwealth of Iſrael, and ſtrangers from the covenants of promiſe. There were never but two kingdoms in the world, that of God, and that of the devil; theſe were oppoſite, and therefore the ſubjects of the latter could not but be in the ſtate of enemies, and fall under that denomination. The revolt from God was univerſal, and the nations of the earth had given themſelves up to idolatry, when God called Abraham, and took him into covenant with himſelf, as he did afterwards the whole nation of the Iſraelites, whereby they were re-admitted into his kingdom, came under his protection, and were his people and ſubjects, and no longer enemies, whilſt all the reſt of the nations remained in the ſtate of rebellion the profeſſed ſubjects of other gods, who were uſurpers upon God's right, and enemies of this kingdom. And indeed if the four Epithites be not taken to be ſpoken here of the Gentile world in this political and truly evangelical ſenſe, but in the ordinary ſyſtematical notion applied to all mankind, as belonging univerſally to every man perſonally, whether by profeſſion Gentile, Jew, or Chriſtian, before he be actually regenerated by a ſaving faith, and an effectual through converſion, the illative particle wherefore, in the beginning of ver. 12. will hardly connect it and what follows to the foregoing part of this chapter. But the eleven firſt verſes muſt be taken for a parentheſis, and then the therefore, in the beginning of this 5th chapter, which joins it to the 4th with a very clear connection, will be wholly inſignificant, and after all, the ſenſe of the 12th verſe will but ill ſodder with the end of the 4th chapter, notwithſtanding the wherefore which is taken to bring them in as an inference. Whereas theſe eleven firſt verſes being ſuppoſed to be ſpoken of the Gentiles, makes them not only of a piece with St. Paul's deſign in the foregoing and following chapters, but the thread of the whole diſcourſe goes very ſmooth, and the inferences (uſhered in with therefore in the 1ſt verſe, and with wherefore in the 12th verſe) are very eaſy, clear, and natural from the immediately preceding verſes. That of the firſt verſe may be ſeen in what we have already ſaid, and that of the 12th verſe in ſhort ſtands thus: "We Gentiles have by Chriſt received the reconciliation, which we cannot doubt to be intended for us, as well as for the Jews, ſince ſin and death entered into the world by Adam, the common father of us all. And as by the diſobedience of that one, condemnation of death came upon all; ſo by the obedience of One, juſtification to life came upon all." See Locke.

Ver. 9. From wrath] See on chap. i. 18. and 1 Theſſ. i. 10.

Ver. 11. And not only ſo] Theſe words join this verſe to the third. The Apoſtle in the ſecond verſe ſays, "We, the Gentiles who believe, glory in the hopes of an eternal, ſpendid ſtate of bliſs. In ver. 3. he adds, "and not only ſo, but our afflictions are to us matter of glorying:" which he proves in the ſeven following verſes; and then, returning to his ſubject, adds, "and not only ſo, but we glory in God alſo as our God, being reconciled to him in Jeſus Chriſt:" and thus he ſhews, that the convert Gentiles had whereof to glory, as well as the Jews, and were not inferior to them, though they had not circumciſion and the law, wherein Jews gloried ſo much, but with no ground, in compariſon of what the Gentiles had to glory in, by faith in Jeſus Chriſt now under the Goſpel. The verſe may be paraphraſed, "it is true we Gentiles could not formerly glory in God, as our God; that was the privilege of the Jews, who alone, of all the nations, owned him for their King and God, and were his people in covenant with him. All the reſt of the kingdoms of the earth, had taken other lords, and given themſelves up to falſe gods to ſerve and worſhip them; and ſo were in a ſtate of war with the true God, the God of Iſrael: but now we being reconciled by Jeſus Chriſt, whom we have received and owned for our Lord, and thereby being returned into his kingdom, and to our ancient allegiance, we can truly glory in God as our God, which the Jews cannot do, who have refuſed to receive Jeſus for their Lord, whom God hath appointed Lord over all things." As our tranſlators have rendered the verb καταλλασσω, by reconcile in the foregoing verſe and in all other places, and καταλλαγὴ, in all other placee, by reconciliation; it ſhould certainly have been ſo rendered here, and not atonement.

12 Wherefore, as by one man ſin entered into the world, and death by ſin; and ſo death paſſed upon all men, for that all have ſinned.

13 For until the law, ſin was in the world: but ſin is not imputed when there is no law.

14 Nevertheleſs, death reigned from

Ver. 12. Gen. iii. 6. 1 Cor. xv. 21. Gen. ii. 17. Ch. vi. 23. 1 Cor. xv. 21. Or, in whom.—V. 13. Ch. iv. 15. 1 John iii. 4.

Ver. 12.] Here the Apoſtle advances his third and laſt argument, to prove the extenſiveneſs of the divine grace, or that it reaches to all mankind as well as to the Jews. His argument ſtands thus: "The conſequences of Chriſt's obedience extend as far as the conſequences of Adam's diſobedience; but thoſe extend to all mankind, and therefore ſo do the conſequences of Chriſt's obedience." Now if the Jews will not allow the Gentiles any intereſt in Abraham, as not being naturally deſcended from him, yet they muſt own that the Gentiles are the deſcendants of Adam, as well as themſelves, and being all equally involved in the conſequences of his ſin, from which they ſhall all equally be releaſed at the reſurrection, through the free gift of God, reſpecting the obedience of Chriſt,—could not deny the Gentiles a ſhare in all the other bleſſings included in the ſame gift. This argument, beſides proving the main point, ſerves to ſhew, 1ſt, That the grace of God in the Goſpel abounds beyond, or very far exceeds, the mere reverſal of the ſufferings brought upon mankind by Adam's one offence, as it beſtows a vaſt ſurpluſage of bleſſings, which have no relation to that offence, but to the many offences mankind have committed, and to the exuberance of the divine grace. 2dly, To ſhew how juſtly the divine grace is founded upon the obedience of Chriſt, in correſpondence to the diſpenſation Adam was under, and to the conſequences of his diſobedience. If his diſobedience involved all mankind in death, it was proper the obedience of Chriſt ſhould be the reaſon and foundation, not only of reverſing that death to all mankind, but alſo of any other bleſſings God ſhould ſee fit to beſtow upon the world. 3dly, It ſerves to explain or ſet in a clear view, the difference between the law and grace. It was the law, which for Adam's one tranſgreſſion, ſubjected him and his poſterity, as included in him when he tranſgreſſed, to death, without hopes of a revival. It is grace, or the favour of the law-giver, which reſtores all men to life at the reſurrection; and over and above that, has provided a gracious diſpenſation for the pardon of their ſins; for reducing them to obedience; for guarding them againſt temptations; for ſupplying them with ſtrength and comfort, and for advancing them to eternal life. This would give the attentive Jew a juſt notion of the law which himſelf was under, and under which he was fond of bringing the Gentiles.

The order in which the Apoſtle handles the argument is this: Firſt, he affirms, that death paſſed upon all mankind by Adam's one offence, ver. 12. Secondly, He proves this, ver. 13, 14. Thirdly, He affirms there is a correſpondence between Adam and Chriſt, or between the offence and the free gift, ver. 15. Fourthly, This correſpondence, ſo far as the two oppoſite parts anſwer each other, is fully expreſſed, ver. 18, 19. and there we have the main or fundamental poſition of the Apoſtle's argument, in relation to the point which he has been arguing from the beginning of the Epiſtle; namely, the extenſiveneſs of the grace of the Goſpel, that it actually reaches to all men, and is not confined to the Jewiſh peculiarity. Fifthly, But before he lays down this poſition, it was neceſſary he ſhould ſhew, that the correſpondence between Adam and Chriſt, or between the offence and the gift, is not to be confined ſtrictly to the bounds ſpecified in the poſition, as if the gift reached no further than the conſequences of the offence, when in reality it extends greatly beyond them, ver. 15—17. Sixthly, Having ſettled theſe points as previouſly neceſſary to clear up his fundamental poſition, and fit it to his argument, he then lays down that poſition in a diverſified manner of ſpeech, ver. 18, 19, juſt as in 1 Cor. xv. 20, 21. and leaves us to conclude from the premiſes laid down, ver. 15—17, that the gift and grace, or favour of God, in its utmoſt extent, is as free to all mankind who are willing to accept of it, as this particular inſtance, the reſurrection from the dead. Seventhly, Having thus ſhewn the extenſiveneſs of the divine grace, in oppoſition to the direful effects of the law, under which Adam was, that the Jew might not overlook what he intended he ſhould particularly obſerve, the Apoſtle puts him in mind, that the law given to Adam, tranſgreſs and die, was introduced into the Jewiſh conſtitution by the miniſtry of Moſes, and for this end, that the offence, with the penalty of death annexed, might abound, ver. 20. But to illuſtrate the divine grace, by ſetting it in contraſt to the law, he immediately adds, where ſin ſubjecting to death hath abounded,—grace hath much more abounded; i. e. in bleſſings beſtowed, it hath ſtretched both far beyond Adam's tranſgreſſion, and the tranſgreſſions under the law of Moſes; ver. 20, 21. Upon this argument the two following general remarks may be made: Firſt, As to the order of time, the Apoſtle carries his arguments backward, from the time when Chriſt came into the world, (chap. i. 17. to chap. iv.) to the time when the covenant was made with Abraham, chap. iv. to the time when the judgement of condemnation pronounced upon Adam came upon all men, chap. v. 12. to the end. And thus he gives us a view of the principal diſpenſations from the beginning of the world. Secondly, In this laſt caſe, as well as the two former, he uſes law or forenſick terms; judgement for condemnation,—juſtification—juſtify,—made ſerious—made righteous; and therefore as he conſiders both Jews and Gentiles at the coming of Chriſt, and Abraham when the covenant was made with him, ſo he conſiders Adam and all men as ſtanding in the court before the tribunal of God: and this was the cleareſt and conciſeſt way of repreſenting his arguments. See Taylor and Locke.

Wherefore, as by one man, &c.] The ſenſe and connection of this verſe ſeems well kept up, if the ϗ and, in the ſecond clauſe be either omitted, or be conſidered as redundant, which it frequently is, 1 Cor. viv. 27. 2 Cor. i. 6. James ii. 4. as by one man ſin entered,—ſo, or even ſo, death paſſed upon all men. And thus the poſitions in each clauſe aptly and regularly anſwer each other. All other interpretations of the verſe ſeem greatly to embarraſs the conſtruction and the ſenſe. Wherefore διὰ τȣ̃το, frequently ſignifies in relation to the affair going before, not by way of inference from it, but to denote a further enlargement upon it, or the advancing of ſomething which enforces or explains it. For that all have ſinned, is rendered by ſome unto which all have ſinned; that is, "all are ſo far involved in the conſequences of Adam's firſt tranſgreſſion, as by means of it to become obnoxious to death. See Gal. v. 13. Epheſ. ii. 19. 1 Theſſ. iv. 7. 2 Tim. ii. 14. St. Paul is here evidently ſpeaking of that mortality to which all men became ſubject in conſequence of Adam's tranſgreſſion. Volumes have been written to prove, that the death inflicted upon all mankind, as a puniſhment for that tranſgreſſion, was not only natural, but ſpiritual and eternal; but after all that has been controverted on the ſubject, it appears a mere ſtrife of words that in Adam all die, or become ſubject to temporal death, is a fact which we too fatally experience: that this death was the conſequence of ſin is equally certain; and if there be any meaning in the words, ſin is certainly the ſpiritual death of the ſoul: the ſpiritual death therefore introduced the natural; and that the ſinful ſoul dying to this life, cannot be admitted into the life of glory with God, is a fact equally certain upon the authority of revelation, with thoſe already advanced. If therefore it be allowed, that by one man ſin entered into the world, and natural death by ſin, it muſt be allowed that from the ſame ſource proceeds the ſpiritual and eternal, as well as the natural death. With all this I do not on any account mean to aſſert, that this death is inflicted upon all mankind as their puniſhment for Adam's tranſgreſſion. The plain fact ſtands only thus:—that we are ſubject to ſin and death, in conſequence of ſin and death introduced into the world by Adam.

Ver. 13. For until the law, ſin was] By the law he means evidently the law of Moſes, and the ſenſe is, "that in the times before that law was eſtabliſhed, ſin was committed in the world; but ſin is not imputed (unto death), μὴ ὄντος νόμȣ, when law is not in being." This ſuppoſes, firſt, that law is the only conſtitution which ſubjects the ſinner to death. Secondly, that law was not in being in the times before the law of Moſes was conſtituted among the Jews. Is not imputed, does not appear to oppreſs the Apoſtle's meaning: ἐλλογεῖν ſignifies to reckon, but cannot be interpreted reckon to, which is the meaning of impute, without a perſon aſſigned to whom it is imputed; and ſo we ſee, when the word is uſed in that ſenſe, the dative caſe of the perſon is ſubjoined. So Philem. 18. If he owes thee any thing, ἐμοὶ ἐλλόγει, put it to my account, "reckon or impute it to me." Beſides, St. Paul tells us, that the ſin here ſpoken of, as not reckoned, was in the world, and had actual exiſtence during the time between Adam and Moſes; but the ſin which many ſuppoſe to be imputed is Adam's ſin, which he committed in Paradiſe, and which was not in the world during the time from Adam till Moſes; and therefore ἐλλογεῖται cannot here ſignify imputed. Sins, in ſacred Scripture, are called debts; but nothing can be brought to account as a debt, till a value be ſet upon it. Now ſins can no way be taxed, or a rate ſet upon them, but by the poſitive declaration and ſanction of the lawmaker. Mankind, without the poſitive law of God, know by the light of nature that they tranſgreſſed the rule of their nature, reaſon, which dictated to them what they ought to do; but, without a poſitive declaration of God their ſovereign, they could not tell at what rate God taxed their treſpaſſes againſt this rule. Till he pronounced that life ſhould be the price of ſin, that could not be aſcertained; and conſequently ſin could not be brought to account: and therefore we ſee, that where there was no poſitive law affixing death to ſin, men did not look on death as the wages or retribution for their ſin: they did not account that they paid their lives as a debt and forfeit for their offence. This is the more to be conſidered, becauſe St. Paul, in this Epiſtle, treats of ſin, puniſhment, and forgiveneſs, by way of an account, as it were of debtor and creditor. He will be further confirmed in this ſenſe of theſe words, who will be at the pains to compare ver. 20. ch. iv. 15. vii. 8, 9. In ch. iv. 15. he ſays, The law worketh wrath, i. e. carrieth puniſhment with it:—For where there is no law, there is no tranſgreſſion. Whereby it is not meant that there is no ſin where there is no poſitive law; the contrary whereof he ſays in this verſe, namely, that ſin was in the world all the time before the law; but that there is no tranſgreſſion, with a penalty annexed to it, without a poſitive law. As the law in the firſt clauſe ſignifies the law of Moſes, in the laſt he ſeems to mean law in general. It ſhould however be obſerved, that St. Paul's notion of a law was conformable to that given by Moſes; and ſo he uſed the word νόμος, law, for the poſitive command of God, with the ſanction of a penalty annexed to it, of which there never having been any other given to any people, but that by Moſes to the children of Iſrael, till the revelation of the will of God by Jeſus Chriſt, which, for ſeveral reaſons, is always called The Goſpel, in contradiſtinction to the law of Moſes; when St. Paul ſpeaks of the law in general, it reduces itſelf in matter of fact to the law of Moſes. See Taylor, Locke, and Whitby.

Ver. 14. Nevertheleſs, death reigned, &c.] This ſuppoſes, firſt, that Adam to Moſes, even over them that had not ſinned after the ſimilitude of Adam's tranſgreſſion, who is the figure of him that was to come.

15 But not as the offence ſo alſo is the free gift. For if through the offence of one many be dead, much more the grace of God, and the gift by grace, which is by one man, Jeſus Chriſt, hath abounded unto many.

Ver. 14. 1 Cor. xv. 21, 22, 45.—V. 15. Matth. xx. 28. xxvi. 28.

that ſin was in the world from Adam to Moſes. Secondly, that law was not in the world from Adam to Moſes, during the ſpace of about two thouſand five hundred years; for after Adam's tranſgreſſion, the law was abrogated, and from that time men were either under the general covenant of grace given to Adam or Noah, or under that which was ſpecially made with Abraham. Thirdly, that therefore the ſins men committed were not imputed to them unto death; for they did not ſin after the likeneſs of Adam's tranſgreſſion; i. e. did not, like him, tranſgreſs a law or rule of action, with a penalty of death annexed; and yet, fourthly, death reigned over mankind during the period between Adam and Moſes; therefore men did not die for their own tranſgreſſions, but in conſequence of Adam's one tranſgreſſion. He is ſaid to be the figure of him who was to come, that is, of Chriſt the Meſſiah; for this is one of the marks or names by which the Jews ſignified the expected Meſſiah. See Luke xxiv. 21. John vi. 14, 15. xi. 27. Heb. x. 37. In the Greek it is τύπος, the type of him that was to come. A type ſignifies ſuch a mark or impreſſion as is made by a ſtamp or a ſeal. It is uſed, John xx. 25. to ſignify the mark which the nails made in our Saviour's hands when he was nailed to the tree, and it is rendered the print of the nails. See alſo Acts vii. 44. Heb. viii. 5. A type therefore is a relative word, ſignifying a thing to which another is to anſwer or agree, as the figure upon the wax anſwers, is like to, and agrees with the figure upon the ſeal; or as the thing which is made, anſwers to the pattern after which it is made. Hence St. Paul ſeveral times applies it to moral action, under the notion of an example, namely, when the behaviour of one man is made the ſeal or ſtamp to be impreſſed upon another man; or when one man's actions are made a pattern to be copied after by another man, as Philip. iii. 17. 1 Theſſ. i. 7. 2 Theſſ. iii. 8. 1 Tim. iv. 12. Tit. ii. 7. In the place before us, when Adam is ſaid to be a type of him that was to come, no doubt can be made that St. Paul intends thereby to denote, that there was ſomething with reference to Chriſt which was to bear a correſpondence, or to anſwer unto ſomething with reference to Adam; or that he draws a compariſon between ſomething which Adam did, and the conſequences thereof, and ſomething which Chriſt did, and the conſequences thereof. This compariſon he begins at ver. 12. and carries on to the end of the chapter; and it conſiſts of three parrs,—two affirmative propoſitions, and the connection or relation betwixt them, thus: PROP. I. "By Adam's diſobedience death came upon all men." CONNECTION. Adam in this was a type or figure of Chriſt; or in reſpect to this, Chriſt is the counter-part to Adam. PROP. II. "By Chriſt's obedience, life is reſtored to all men." The attentive reader will obſerve how methodically the Apoſtle proceeds in clearing the firſt propoſition and the connection, before he advances to the ſecond propoſition. It may be proper juſt to remark, that this and the preceding verſe is an inſtance of the perſpicuous brevity for which St. Paul was remarkable. One ſhall hardly find in any other author an argument ſo juſtly managed, ſo fully eſtabliſhed, attended with ſuch a variety of inſtructive ſentiments, in the compaſs of thirty words: for, ſetting aſide the articles, there are no more in the Greek. It is by this unparalleled art that the Apoſtle has brought ſuch a variety of arguments, inſtructions, and ſentiments, all ſtated, proved, and ſufficiently guarded, explained, and defended within the limits of this Epiſtle, as have made it a magazine of the moſt real, extenſive, uſeful, and pleaſant knowledge. See Locke, and Taylor's Preface, p. 146.

Ver. 15. But not as the offence] This evidently ſhews that the Apoſtle in this paragraph is running a parallel, or making a compariſon between the offence of Adam and its conſequence, and the oppoſite free gift of God and its conſequences; and in theſe three verſes he ſhews, that the compariſon will not hold in all reſpects, becauſe the free gift beſtows bleſſings far beyond the conſequences of the offence, and which therefore have no relation to it; and this was neceſſary, not only to prevent miſtakes, concerning the conſequence of Adam's offence, and the extent of Goſpel grace, but it was alſo neceſſary to the Apoſtle's main deſign; which was, not only to prove that the grace of the Goſpel extends to all men, ſo far as it takes off the conſequence of Adam's offence; but that it likewiſe extends to all men, with reſpect to the ſurpluſage of bleſſings, in which it ſtretches vaſtly beyond the conſequence of Adam's offence. For both the grace which takes off the conſequence of Adam's offence, and the grace which abounds beyond it, are included in the ſame χαρισμα, or free gift, which ſhould be well obſerved; for in this I conceive lies the connection, and force of his argument. The free gift, which ſtands oppoſed to Adam's offence, and which appears to have been beſtowed immediately after his offence, (Gen. iii. 15.) includes both the grace which anſwers exactly to the offence, and alſo that part of the grace which ſtretches far beyond it. And if the one part of the gift be freely beſtowed upon all mankind, as the Jews allow, why not the other? eſpecially conſidering that the whole gift ſtands upon a reaſon and foundation, in excellence and worth vaſtly ſurpaſſing the malignity and demerit of the offence; and conſequently capable of producing benefits vaſtly beyond the ſufferings occaſioned by the offence. This is the force of the Apoſtle's argument; and therefore, ſuppoſing that in the letter of verſes 18, 19. he compares the conſequences of Adam's offence, and Chriſt's obedience, only ſo far as the one is commenſurate to the other; yet his reaſoning, ver. 15—17. plainly ſhews, it is his meaning and intention that we ſhould take into his concluſion the whole of the gift, ſo far as it can reach to all mankind. See Taylor.

Many be dead—unto many.] The many died—unto the many. Wat. I ſuppoſe ſays Mr. Locke, that οι πολλοι, and τȣς πολλȣς, may ſtand here for the multitude or collective body of mankind: for the Apoſtle in expreſs words aſſures us, 1 Cor. xv. 22. that in Adam all died, and in Chriſt all are made alive; and ſo here ver. 18. all men fell under the condemnation of death, and all men were reſtored unto juſtification of life: which all men, in the very next words, ver. 19. are called οι πολλοι, the many. So that the many in the former part of this verſe, and the many at the end of it, comprehending all mankind, muſt be equal. The compariſon, therefore, and the inequality of the things compared, lies not here between the number of thoſe that died, and the number of thoſe who ſhall be reſtored to life; but the compariſon lies between the perſons by whom this general death, and this general reſtoration to life came;—Adam the type, and Jeſus Chriſt the antitype: and it ſeems to lie in this, that Adam's lapſe came barely for the ſatisfaction of his own appetite, and deſire of good to himſelf; but the reſtoration was from the exuberant bounty and good-will of Chriſt towards men; who, at the coſt of his own painful death, purchaſed life for them. The want of taking the compariſon here right, and the placing it amiſs in a greater number reſtored to life by Chriſt, than thoſe brought into death by Adam's ſin, hath led ſome men greatly to miſinterpret this paſſage. What is that grace and gift which have abounded beyond the conſequences of Adam's offence, and which therefore have no relation to that offence or its conſequences upon us?—"I anſwer, ſays Dr. Taylor, (and the reader will pleaſe to conſider what follows as his anſwer, for I attempt to determine nothing on ſo controvered a point,) It ſeems clear to me, that it is all the grace or all the bleſſings of the Goſpel, beſides reſtoration to life; for reſtoration to life is the only part of Goſpel grace that correſponds to death; which death is the only conſequent of Adam's ſin, taken by the Apoſtle into the compariſon. Had he known and believed, that by Adam's one offence the whole nature of all mankind was corrupted and made ſinful; that all our actual ſins do proceed from ſuch ſuppoſed corruption of our nature, and that all men by Adam's offence loſt communion with God, were brought under his wrath and curſe, and made liable to the pains of hell forever. Had the Apoſtle known all this, it is evident from the nature of things, that he muſt have brought theſe ſuppoſed conſequences into the compariſon. But then obſerve the offence, and its conſequences would have been juſt of the ſame extent with the gift and the bleſſings included in it; and ſo the Apoſtle could have found no overplus of grace abounding beyond the offence. It is therefore certain the Apoſtle was altogether a ſtranger to thoſe ſuppoſed conſequences, becauſe he ſaith not one word of them in this place, where he draws a compariſon between the effects of Adam's offence, and the effects of the grace of God in Chriſt; and becauſe he expreſly tells us, the effects of the grace do abound beyond the effects of the offence: nor does he take the other real conſequences of Adam's offence into the compariſon, ſuch as, ſorrow of childbearing, the curſe upon the ground, and labour and toil in tilling; whence we may conclude he did not conſider them as contraries to grace, but as perfectly conſiſtent with it, and therefore requiring no grace to remove them, as they are inflicted only during the time of this life. The ſame thing indeed may alſo be ſaid of the death which we all now die, conſidered as aboliſhed by the grace of God in Chriſt, introducing a reſurrection. Thus conſidered, it is not contrary to grace, but conſiſtent with it; and therefore is not removed by the grace of the Goſpel; for death ſtill reigns ſo as to bring all men to the grave: but the Apoſtle, when he conſiders death as the conſequent of Adam's ſin, conſiders it as ſuch; that is, he conſiders antecedently to the grace of God in Chriſt. Adam by his offence brought his own exiſtence, and that of his poſterity as included in him, under the curſe of the law, thou ſhalt die; and it is thus the Apoſtle conſiders death, or the judgement of condemnation, antecedent to the grace of God in Chriſt, as it ſtood under the law: and he takes, for indeed he could take no other conſequent of Adam's ſin but death, into the compariſon he draws between the offence and the gift; for no other conſequent or penalty was threatened in the law. Now that part of the Goſpel grace which anſwers to death, is reſtoration to life; and therefore I conclude, that all the grace of the Goſpel beſides this, is that overplus of grace which has abounded beyond the offence. It is no objection to this ſenſe, that the grace of God is here ſaid to have abounded to the many, yet is to all mankind; for this means no more than what the Apoſtle conſtantly affirms, thatit is free to all. The Goſpel conſtitution, as erected in the world by the Apoſtles, and propoſed as the object of our faith, for us to receive and improve, is very properly called the grace of God, as it is in ſeveral other places, ver. 2. Acts xiii. 43.

16 And not as it was by one that ſinned, ſo is the gift: for the judgement was by one to condemnation, but the free gift is of many offences unto juſtification.

17 For if by one man's offence, death reigned by one; much more they which receive abundance of grace, and of the gift of righteouſneſs, ſhall reign in life by one, Jeſus Chriſt.

18 Therefore, as by the offence of one judgement came upon all men to condemnation; even ſo, by the righteouſneſs of one; the free gift came upon all men unto juſtification of life.

19 For as by one man's diſobedience many were made ſinners, ſo by the obedience of one ſhall many be made righteous.

20 Moreover, the law entered, that the offence might abound. But where ſin abounded, grace did much more abound:

Ver. 17. Or, by one offence.—V. 18. Or, by one offence. Or, by one righteouſneſs. John xii. 32. Hebr. ii. 9.—V. 20. John xv. 22. Ch. iv. 15. vii. 8. Gal. iii. 19, 23. Luke vii. 47. 1 Tim. i. 14.

xiii. 43. 1 Cor. i. 4. 2 Cor. vi. 1. Tit. ii. 11. Jude 4. and as this criterion,—that the abounding of grace is to be received, ver. 17. i. e. believed and improved by us,—plainly ſhews what part of Goſpel grace it is; ſo it diſtinguiſhes it from that part of the grace which anſwers to the offence, and gives reſtoration to life; which will be conferred upon all men, whether they do or do not receive or improve it. In the laſt clauſe, the grace, favour, and benevolence of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, his good-will to mankind, is made the ground of the gift of God, for the donation of benefits in the Goſpel, as well as his obedience to God, ver. 19. The gift by grace, which grace is of one man, Jeſus Chriſt. This grace or benevolence of Chriſt is alſo mentioned Acts xv. 11. Rom. xvi. 24. 2 Cor. viii. 9. Matth. xx. 28. and his love to mankind is every where celebrated in the New Teſtament"

Ver. 16. And not as it was by one that ſinned, &c.] And not as it was by one ſin, Wat. The Apoſtle here manifeſtly enters upon another reſpect, in which the gift reaches beyond the offence; καὶ, and, has nearly the ſame force as alſo. The Alexandrian copy reads, more conformably to the Apoſtle's ſenſe, δι' ἑνὸς ἁμαρτήματος, by one ſin, as Dr. Waterland renders it. The Apoſtle goes on, The judgement was from one [offence] unto condemnation; but the free gift is, from many offences unto juſtification. See on ch. i. 17. He uſes three remarkable words in this paragraph, Δικαίωμα, ver. 16. Δικαιοσύνη, ver. 17. Δικαίωσις, ver. 18.—I. Δικαιωμα is found in the following places of the New Teſtament, Luke i. 6. Rom. i. 32. ii. 26. v. 16, 18. viii. 4. Heb. ix. 1, 10. Rev. xv. 4. xix. 8. Mr. Locke ſuppoſes it to ſignify in general a rule, which if complied with, juſtified or rendered perfect the perſon or thing it referred to. See on ch. ii. 26. II. In all the other places, it has ſome limited addition; as Δικαίωματα κυρίου—νόμου, the righteouſneſs of the Lord,—of the law, &c. but here it is uſed abſolutely, without any limitation, and therefore muſt be taken in the moſt extenſive ſenſe. III. Δικαίωμα has relation to πολλα παραπτωμάτα, many offences; and theſe we can hardly doubt are the ſins of mankind in general: for παραπτώματα may be here uſed, as Matth. vi. 14. Epheſ. ii. 1. 2 Cor. v. 19. Col. ii. 13. James v. 16. However he certainly means ſuch ſins as have no relation to Adam's ſin, for they are expreſly diſtinguiſhed from it, and conſequently ſuch ſins for which we do not die the death we die in this world, but for which we are liable to die another death,—the ſecond death; and therefore δικαίωμα muſt have relation to the clearing us from that death too. Concerning Δικαιοσύνη, ſee on ch. i. 17. Δικαίωσις is uſed but twice, here and ch. iv. 25.—and was raiſed for our juſtification; where, as the word is uſed abſolutely, one cannot make leſs of it than "beſtowing upon us all bleſſings, and putting us into poſſeſſion of eternal life." But, 1. May we not conſider juſtification of life, ver. 18. as ſtanding in contradiction to reigning in life in the foregoing verſe? and then, as life is uſed without any epithet, would it not reſtrain the ſenſe to our being barely reſtored to life at the reſurrection? 2. Juſtification here ſtands in oppoſition to the conſequence of no more than the one offence of Adam; will it not then follow, that it relates only to releaſing us from the death which we die for Adam's ſin?—However, we may be ſatisfied that Δικαιοσύνη is Goſpel pardon and ſalvation, and has reference to God's mercy. Δικαίωμα is our being ſet quite clear and right, or our being reſtored to ſanctity, delivered from eternal death, and brought to eternal life, and has reference to the power and guilt of ſin; and Δικαίωσις may here denote no more than our being reſtored to life at the reſurrection. See Taylor, Locke, and Mintert.

Ver. 17. Much more they which receive, &c.] The abounding of grace here, is without all doubt the ſame as the grace of God which hath abounded to many, ver. 15. and the gift of righteouſneſs or juſtification, is the ſame as the gift by the grace of one man, Jeſus Chriſt, ver. 15. There the grace and the gift are conſidered ſimply and abſolutely,—as free to the many, or to all mankind; here they are conſidered as received, or duly improved by ſome of the many, or ſome part of mankind, in order to their eternal happineſs. Grace is the favour or good-will of the donor; the gift of juſtification is the great benefit he has beſtowed. See on ver. 15. Inſtead of reigned by one,—in life by one, Dr. Waterland reads through one.

Ver. 18, 19. Therefore, as by the offence of one] Therefore, as by one offence all men fell under condemnation; even ſo by one act of righteouſneſs all men are reſtored unto juſtification of life. Wat. Ἄρα οὖν therefore, always denotes the grand point the Apoſtle is aiming at, and which, after having given reaſons, diſtinctions, or explications, he at laſt lays down as fully cleared or eſtabliſhed. See ch. vii. 3, 25. viii. 12. ix. 16, 18. xiv. 12, 19. And ſo in this and the following verſe he cloſes his argument, and finiſhes the compariſon he left incomplete in the 12th verſe. It ſeems as if the compariſon in theſe two verſes ſhould be underſtood only ſo far as the conſequences of Chriſt's obedience are of the ſame extent with the conſequent of Adam's diſobedience. The very form of the ſentences leads us to this opinion; and this exact compariſon is the juſt and true ground of the Apoſtle's argument, taken from Adam's offence, for the conviction of the Jew. The ſtreſs of the argument evidently lies upon the phraſe all men; and, to fix a conviction upon the Jew, the reſtoration of all men to life,—which he owned, and which he muſt own was the effect of grace,—was the moſt proper topic to be inſiſted on. It may be objected, that juſtification of life, and being made righteous, ſeem too ſtrong terms for expreſſing the general reſurrection; But conſider, firſt, the Apoſtle uſes law or forenſic terms in his two foregoing arguments, and therefore no wonder if he uſes them in this third and laſt argument. Secondly, Juſtification of life is oppoſed to condemnation; and being made righteous, is oppoſed to being made ſinners. Now if our common mortality is ſignified by condemnation, and made ſinners, what impropriety is there, in ſuppoſing that the reſurrection which ſtands oppoſed to that mortality is ſignified by juſtification of life, and being made righteous? Thirdly, Juſtification—being juſtified, or made righteous, are terms applicable to any inſtance of deliverance from ſuffering. See Judg. v. 11. Pſ. iv. 1. xxii. 31. xxi. 1. and a variety of other texts in proof of this point in Taylor's Key, p. 115. Fourthly, In the two foregoing arguments faith is inſiſted on, as on our part, the condition of juſtification; but here St. Paul mentions no condition at all. He doth not ſay, juſtification of life by faith,—many ſhall be made righteous by faith;—and conſequently thus directs our thoughts to ſome unconditional diſcharge. But, after all, as the ſenſe of ver. 15—17. is intended and underſtood in ver. 18, 19. and as the drift of the Apoſtle's concluſion is, to ſhew that the gift, in its utmoſt extent, is free to all mankind; if any one ſhall judge that juſtification of life, and ſhall be made righteous, do directly denote not only the reſurrection, but the free gift in its full latitude, as free to all mankind who receive and improve the grace of God; and that the many ſhall be made righteous, is to be underſtood as the grace of God, and the gift hath abounded unto many, ver. 15. there is certainly no need to contend; for the difference is not very material, the Apoſtle's argument being the ſame either way. See Taylor, Doddridge, and Calmet.

Ver. 20. Moreover, the law, &c.] But the law, &c. There can be nothing plainer than that St. Paul, in this and the next verſe, makes a compariſon between the ſtate of the Jews, and that of the Gentiles, as it ſtands deſcribed in the eight preceding verſes; to ſhew wherein they differed or agreed, ſo far as was neceſſary to his preſent purpoſe, of ſatisfying the convert Romans, that in reference to their intereſt in the Goſpel, the Jews had no advantage over them by the law. With what reference to thoſe eight verſes he wrote this and the following, appears by the very choice of the words. He tells them, ver. 12. that death by ſin entered—εισῆλθε—into the world; and here he tells them, that the law, (for ſin and death were entered already) παρεισῆλθε, entered a little; a word, which, ſet in oppoſition to εισῆλθε, gives a diſtinguiſhing idea of the extent of the law, ſuch as it really was; little and narrow as was the people of Iſrael, whom alone it reached, in reſpect of all the other nations of the earth, with whom it had nothing to do; for the law of Moſes was given to Iſrael alone, and not to all mankind. The Vulgate, therefore, rightly tranſlates the word ſubintravit; it entered, but not far: i. e. the death which followed upon the account of the Moſaical law, reigned over but a ſmall part of mankind; viz. the children of Iſrael, who alone were under that law; whereas, by Adam's tranſgreſſion of the poſitive law given him in paradiſe, death paſſed upon all men. The Apoſtle, as we have obſerved, uſes the word law in various ſenſes; ſometimes for a rule in general, ch. iii. 27. ſometimes for the whole Jewiſh code, or the Old Teſtament, ch. iii. 19. ſometimes for a rule of action, ch. iii. 20. ſometimes for a rule of action, with a penalty of death annexed, as here and ch. vi. 15. vii. 4, &c. Such a law Adam was under;—In the day that thou eateſt thereof thou ſhalt die: And ſuch a conſtitution the law of Moſes was, ſubjecting thoſe who were under it to death for every tranſgreſſion,—meaning by death eternal death, without hopes of a revival or reſurrection: For obſerve, it is the very nature of law, whether divine or human, (for law in its nature and properties is the ſame, whether enacted by God or man) never to remit the penalty or forfeiture. The law of England makes felony death: The criminal, when convicted, is dead in law; and when executed, ſhould he come to life again, the law ſlays him again that very moment; and orders him again to execution, and ſo on for ever. The everlaſting language of law to every one that breaks it, and conſequently for every breach and tranſgreſſion of it, is, Thou ſhalt die. Law never does, nor can pardon; but all the world knows and allows, it is the prerogative of every law-giver to pardon or remit the penalty, as he ſees fit: And therefore the language of law, dying thou ſhalt die, though it may alſo be conſidered as the language of the law-giver, yet it is not to be underſtood of the event, as if the threatening muſt and would certainly and eventually be executed, but of the demerit of tranſgreſſion; reſerving to the wiſdom of the governor liberty to execute, mitigate, or totally remit the penalty, as he ſhall judge proper. Shall die, in the language of law-givers enacting laws, muſt be underſtood, not as the language of private perſons, but as implying and including a reſerve in favour of the governor's prerogative, to mitigate or remit the penalty. Were it not ſo, all mankind muſt have periſhed in Adam, and all the Jews under the law had been loſt for ever; and every felon in England muſt have been actually executed. Now, when the law-giver or governor mitigates the penalty, or ſuſpends the execution,—granting the ſinner the benefit of repentance, and promiſing pardon and life; this is Goſpel: Then he is not under law, but under grace or favour; not under law, ſubjecting to death for every tranſgreſſion, but yet under law, as a rule of action; which he is as much as ever obliged to obey, though every act of diſobedience does not bring him under wrath and condemnation. This is the diſpenſation, in greater or leſſer degrees of light, under which all mankind have been, from the time of the promiſe, Gen. iii. 15. to this day; excepting that the law in its rigor was introduced among the Jews. To us Chriſtians the grace of God is clearly diſplayed: yet ſo, that we are at the ſame time expreſly aſſured, that if it is rejected and abuſed, we muſt expect no further efforts of the divine goodneſs for our ſalvation. Heb. vi. 4—8. x. 26, 27. If, deſpiſing God's preſent patience and forbearance, we live after the fleſh, the law at the laſt day will take place, or be executed, and we ſhall die; ch. viii. 13. for the law is ſo holy, and good, and juſt, that it can be relaxed only in favour of the ſinner's reformation. But in the caſe of impenitents and incurables, It muſt and will take place; that is to ſay, in other words, It is perfectly right and fitting that they, being the corruption and nuiſance of God's creation, ſhould be deſtroyed as tares and chaff in the fire.

21 That as ſin hath reigned unto death, even ſo might grace reign through righteouſneſs unto eternal life, by Jeſus Chriſt our Lord.

The Apoſtle ſays, the law entered, that the offence might abound, or rather, ſo that the offence did abound. See ch. iii. 19. The meaning is not, that the law was brought in among the Jews to make them more wicked, or guilty of more ſins than they were before; but the meaning is, that by the entrance of the law every ſin the Jew committed, made him liable to death; and ſo the offence of the ſame nature with Adam's was multiplied. Not that it was the intention of the law-giver, that either Adam or the Jews ſhould finally ſtand or fall by only the law; for grace was prepared for the immediate relief of both; grace extending far beyond the offence. Mr. Locke is of opinion, that the laſt clauſe of this verſe is ſpoken with ſpecial relation to the Jews, and denotes all that ſurpluſage of grace, which God vouchſafed to them above the reſt of the world. But though this may be true, there is no neceſſity for excluding the grace which extends to all mankind; and the following verſe, as it is the concluding ſtroke of the Apoſtle's argument, naturally leads our thoughts to take in the whole compaſs of ſin, and its effects, upon all the world; as well as the whole of God's grace, not only to the Jews, but to all mankind. See Taylor, Locke, Doddridge, and Whitby.

REFLECTIONS ON ORIGINAL SIN; FROM VER. 12, &c.

As the fall of man happened in a higher, and very different order of nature from the preſent, it is not poſſible for us to have a clear and adequate knowledge of it. But there are numberleſs degrees between a perfect knowledge and a total ignorance. We are told all that it concerns us to know; and that we ſhould attend to as an important part of our own hiſtory. In forming our notion concerning it from the account given in Scripture, we muſt make due allowance for the imperfection of human language, which cannot expreſs ſpiritual things otherwiſe than by figures founded in that analogy, which ſubſiſts between the viſible and the inviſible world. And there is the greater reaſon to make ſuch allowance for a book ſo ancient as that of Geneſis, which was wrote when language had been little cultivated, and the generality of mankind were very groſs and incapable of ſublime ſpeculations: ſo that the ſacred hiſtorian was obliged to repreſent intellectual things by ſenſible images, which he uſes, if I may ſo ſpeak, as a kind of hieroglyphics. Such in particular is the tree of knowledge, which appears to have been a well-choſen ſymbol, and well underſtood by the Jews; becauſe a tree or plant is ſtill frequently uſed by the Jewiſh writers, to ſignify ſome principal point of knowledge implanted in the mind. See Matth. xv. 13.

When therefore we read that the firſt man was placed in a fruitful garden, we muſt infer that his mind too had its paradiſe ſuited to its capacities, and abounding with various objects of knowledge; which were as neceſſary to it (the mind), as corporeal food was to the body. For every kind of life muſt have its proper and homogenial nouriſhment. Life is as a fire, always ſpending itſelf, and requiring freſh fuel, which it devours, digeſts, tranſubſtantiates, and then perſpires to make way for ſucceſſive circulations. Thus the earthly body is recruited with the productions of its mother earth; while the mind feeds on thought, and requires a continual ſupply of ſuitable entertainment, as verily as the body does. The parallel too holds with regard to the effects of diet. Good thoughts nouriſh and meliorate the mind, as evil thoughts corrupt and poiſon it: For meditation does the office of digeſtion, and tranſmutes its objects into the ſubſtance of the ſoul. In paradiſe man found not only outwardly every tree that is pleaſant to the ſight, and good for food: but alſo inwardly all branches of knowledge pleaſing to ſpeculation, and good for food to the ſoul. He had there, not only ſavoury and delightſome, but alſo wholſome and ſubſtantial truths, on which he might ruminate, and by which he might nouriſh and improve.

Beſide theſe, there was within his reach one ſet of notions, which he was forbid to meddle with, called the knowledge of good and evil. Or, perhaps we ſhall ſpeak more properly if we ſay, he was forbid to take things in one certain point of view, which would diſcover the knowledge of good and evil. In ſome ſort indeed he knew good from the moment of his creation, for all was good about him: but he knew it only, as one may be ſaid to know health, who never felt diſeaſe: or to know light, who never knew the want of it, who never was in darkneſs. Such a man's idea of light, (if he has any) will ſcarce deſerve the name of knowledge, for want of that diſtinction, which is found only in comparing it with its oppoſite. We, who have experienced darkneſs, have quite another notion of light than ſuch a perſon would be capable of. It was this experimental knowledge which was forbidden,—a knowledge of good by its contrary: ſo that in a proper ſenſe evil only was prohibited.

For it may be further obſerved, that good and evil are relative terms, whoſe ſenſe is to be determined by the circumſtances to which they refer. Thus David ſays of himſelf, that it was good for him that he had been afflicted. Doubtleſs affliction is in itſelf evil, yet he rightly calls it good, by reaſon of the greater evil it delivered him from. Now Adam, in his ſtate of innocence, could have no ſuch notion. The abſence of evil left no room for the relative good. As he knew not diſeaſe, ſo neither had he a notion of medicine; and after the ſame manner he, in all other reſpects, enjoyed a fortunate ignorance. He was therefore commanded to keep this his firſt ſtation, and not depart from that true view of things which was ſet before him.

But it may be aſked, Whence then came evil into the world? This has been deemed a queſtion of great intricacy; but it may be ſolved by conſidering only whence moral good proceeds. Does it not ariſe from the right uſe, which a free agent makes of his liberty, when he chuſes that which is proper for him, and rejects the contrary? Now evil comes from the ſame fountain that good comes from,—even the free-will. Take away free-will, and there can be no moral good in man, as there is no moral good in a mill or other machine. As good therefore proceeds from the freedom of the will, ſo the poſſibility of evil evidently flows from the ſame cauſe; and it is needleſs to ſeek it elſewhere.

From that poſſibility man called forth evil into exiſtence, and thereby fell from righteouſneſs, i. e. juſtice, largely taken, as involving all duty. By juſtice the creature belongs to the Creator, and can have no right to diſpoſe of itſelf. The only uſe man ought to make of his will, is to ſurrender it to God perpetually in a generous obedience. And the freedom of the will ſhould ſerve only to remove ſervility, and give a kind of merit to his ſubjection; to make it an homage worthy God, as coming from a being that might poſſibly refuſe it; yet pays it freely, and returns the uſe of all its faculties to him, from whom it received them.

Adam acted otherwiſe, and thereby pulled down deſtruction upon himſelf, as the wiſe man expreſſes it: Wiſd. i. 12. He diſobeyed his Creator, and he had the puniſhment he deſerved. So far, I think, there is no ground for objection. But the conſequence of his fall involving all his race, and making infirmity permanent, as Eſdras ſpeaks; this is a great offence to many, and furniſhes matter of complaint to almoſt all. We are apt to ſay with him, That it had been better not to have given the earth to Adam; (not to have truſted him with the fate of his poſterity) or elſe, when it was given him, to have reſtrained him from ſinning. This ſentiment, though a raſh one, is very natural to our frailty and ignorance; as is alſo the exclamation which follows: O Adam, what haſt thou done! for though it was thou that ſinned, thou art not fallen alone, but we all that come of thee. 2 Eſdr. vii. 46, 48. Such complaints, and ſuch expoſtulations, have been common among ſerious men; but it is common to complain without reaſon; and if we ſaw the whole plan of Providence with relation to mankind, I am fully perſuaded that we ſhould find this complaint very unreaſonable, and even ungrateful to our Redeemer; who has made abundant compenſation for all damages ariſing from Adam's tranſgreſſion, by atoning, not only for original ſin, but alſo for the many actual offences of mankind, as is ſhewed at large in the chapter before us.

I would only obſerve in this place, that the reaſon why we are ſo prone to complain and lament ourſelves, is, becauſe we now feel the inconveniencies of our preſent ſtate, and are not ſufficiently appriſed of many of its advantages, nor of the greater diſadvantages which other initiating ſtates may be liable to. It is very probable, that every intelligent being has a time of trial or probation. Some of the angels are fallen, for aught we know, irreparably. Our father Adam was placed in a lower ſtation than they: His fall conſequently was leſs, and by the mercy of our great Mediator, he, and Eve, the companion of his fall, are now fully reſtored. We find ourſelves, not

CHAP. VI.

We may not live in ſin, for we are dead unto it, as appeareth by our baptiſm. Nor are we to let ſin reign any more, becauſe we have yielded ourſelves to the ſervice of righteouſneſs, and death is the wages of ſin.

not by our own fault, at the bottom. But a ray of light reaches down to us, and a way is opened for our aſcent. That light and that way is our dear Redeemer, who is ever preſent with us, and in us, to enlighten, guide, and aſſiſt us in our paſſage.

As to the corruption of our nature, that, ſtrictly ſpeaking, is not our ſin, nor ſhall we, through the merits of Chriſt, be anſwerable for it. On the contrary, at the day of judgement it will be brought to our account on the favourable ſide, and all due allowance made for it. In the mean time it has its office admirably contrived by Providence, in affording us continual occaſions wherein to exerciſe virtue. It is a ſource of evil deſires; and thoſe evil deſires are the enemies which we have to combat; conſequently, to thoſe who combat them, they are the ſubject of victory and triumph. To have ſuch enemies is not our crime; our crime lies only in baſely ſubmitting to them. The grace of God is ever ready to aſſiſt our endeavours, and, as the Apoſtle ſpeaks, to make us more than conquerors through Chriſt that loveth us. Take away theſe enemies, otherwiſe than by our conquering them; and you take away that which conſtitutes the proper excellency of human nature in the preſent ſtate; which excellency conſiſts in reſiſting evil inclinations, in overcoming ourſelves, and approving our fidelity to the Creator amidſt all the temptations which ſurround us.

Thoſe therefore who complain of original ſin, as if they were hardly dealt with, ſhould conſider well the anſwer which the angel gave to Eſdras, when he complained of Adam in thoſe words before mentioned: O Adam, what haſt thou done! for though it was thou that ſinned, thou art not fallen alone; but we all that come of thee. To which the angel anſwered, This is the condition of the battle, which man that is born upon the earth ſhall fight; that if he be overcome, he ſhall ſuffer; but if he get the victory, he ſhall receive eternal glory.

Such is the condition of the battle; ſuch are the terms preſcribed; ſuch is the trial, or ſtate of probation, which we muſt paſs through. But if ſome were to ſpeak their thoughts, we ſhould hear objections againſt all ſuch trials. "Why, (would it be ſaid) why did not God make us happy at once? Why would he ſuffer his creatures to run any hazard of being miſerable? He might have made juſtice as natural and neceſſary as reſpiration; and thereby ſpared us all the pains, which we muſt now be at, before we can be happy upon the terms which he has ſet us."

To this we might anſwer in the words of the Apoſtle: Nay but, O man, who art thou that replieſt againſt God? Shall the thing formed ſay unto him who formed it, why haſt thou made me thus? Hath not the potter power over the clay, &c.? Thus we might anſwer, and thereby ſatisfy a pious mind: although theſe words were ſpoke only concerning God's electing a peculiar people, called to the diſtinguiſhed privileges of the Goſpel diſpenſation; and were not intended to be applied, as they have ſince ſcandalouſly been, to the bulk of mankind, whoſe ſentence at the laſt day will depend only on their own works and deſervings; which I remark here, becauſe this way of arguing, which reſolves difficulties by vouching divine ſupremacy, has been ſo profanely abuſed to maintain impious miſrepreſentations of the Deity, as abſurdly arbitrary and tyrannical, that men of ſenſe have good cauſe to diſtruſt it. To thoſe therefore who move this queſtion; "Why did not God make us happy at once, without our paſſing through any ſtate of probation?" it will be more ſatisfactory, if we can intelligibly unfold this knot, inſtead of cutting it by dint of ſovereign power.

The objectors would be diſpenſed from all probationary ſtates; they would take no trouble, and run no hazard: they would have nothing to do, but to enjoy; they would be immutably, eternally, infinitely happy. They want no more of God; they have no other cares or deſires.

Let it now be conſidered, whether ſuch deſires are reaſonable. Are they not on the contrary moſt ungenerous and baſe;—arguing a frame of mind quite unworthy of the favour to which it makes pretenſion? We are all children of the Almighty Father, and conſequently under ſuch obligations as that relation infers. Suppoſe then a ſon quite averſe to giving himſelf any trouble about pleaſing his father: one who thinks it a hardſhip to be bid do any thing but what he himſelf inclines to: who grudges that any ſervice ſhould be required of him; yet wants an inheritance,—wants that his father ſhould do all he can for him. Such are they who make the objection; and God, who bids us not to caſt pearls before ſwine, will not ſquander his bleſſings upon ſuch unworthy ſelfiſh ſpirits.

The word merit has been ſo miſapplied, or miſunderſtood, that one is almoſt afraid to uſe it, even upon proper occaſions: But we cannot be miſtaken in aſſerting, that God, in his juſtice, requires of every man ſuch merit as he himſelf has made him capable of. A man can ſtop a covetous deſire from breaking out into theft or fraud, i. e. he can keep the eighth commandment (and the ſame may be ſaid of the reſt). Now if, from a dutiful regard to God, the man maintains his integrity, God will reward his obedience; for ſo far as he is a creature fit to be made happy, he is a proper object, and it will be found in the event, that the Divine Wiſdom has provided effectual means to render all objects of the divine bounty proper objects, before their final beatification.

Even in this ſtate of confuſion we think it wrong, when a worthleſs man is poſſeſſed of great wealth or preferment. Though theſe are far from being any real good, yet, as men value them, they judge them miſplaced in the hands of a fool. In the kingdom of heaven there will be no ſuch prepoſterous diſtribution; but excellence ſhall be the meaſure of Bliſs; and none ſhall be crowned, but thoſe who have conquered.

And this may ſerve for an anſwer to thoſe, who are inclined to charge God fooliſhly, for permitting the influence of the firſt man's tranſgreſſion to infect all his race. This infection we commonly call original ſin, which has been denied by ſome, and miſrepreſented by others, with ſuch groſs aggravations, as render it offenſive to common ſenſe, and inconſiſtent with the revealed doctrines, particularly thoſe of this Epiſtle.

As for thoſe who deny it, I ſhall not diſpute with them; for who would debate with a blind man about darkneſs? And they muſt be blind indeed, who perceive not evil in their natures. The truth here is to be felt, and needs no foreign proof. All that ſeems farther neceſſary for their conviction, who ſcruple to admit it, is to remove the juſt prejudices conceived againſt it from the ſpurious additions made by thoſe who have miſrepreſented it.

Whatever the cauſe may have been, it is certain in effect, that among the profeſſors of Chriſtianity there has long been a ſtrange proneneſs to credulity, and a prepoſterous humour of making things that are difficult in themſelves ſtill more difficult to be underſtood. Subjects that were naturally obſcure, have been rendered quite dark, and unintelligible. It would have been well if men had ſtopped even here; and ſurely it was high time, when the premiſes were become abſurd, not to advance conſequences, and plunge farther in nonſenſe: yet this has been done notoriouſly, and men from their own miſtakes have made or admitted inferences, at which themſelves ſtood amazed, and yet have not ſcrupled to avow them.

As I intend by this reflection no invective, but a friendly complaint, I ſhall inſtance in a perſon whom I honour exceedingly;—I mean Mr. Paſcal, who, as far as I can judge, has contributed more to the defence of Chriſtianity, than any other man in the laſt ages. Yet in his thoughts upon original ſin, which are, generally ſpeaking, moſt excellent and ſatisfactory, he has the following paragraph p. 28. "The tranſmiſſion of original ſin from Adam to his deſcendants appears to us not only impoſſible, but alſo moſt unjuſt. For what is more contrary to the rules of our wretched juſtice, than to damn eternally an infant incapable of will, for a ſin in which he ſeems to be ſo little concerned, that it was committed ſix thouſand years before he came into exiſtence? Nothing certainly is more rudely ſhocking than this doctrine; and yet without this, (which is the moſt incomprehenſible of all myſteries) we are incomprehenſible to ourſelves." The concluſion is a great truth; but the premiſes are clogged with needleſs abſurdities.

As, firſt, he ſays, That the tranſmiſſion of original ſin ſeems an impoſſibility. Now the Scripture account is, that Adam, after his fall, and recovery to a capacity of working out his ſalvation, begat a ſon in his own likeneſs, after his image, i. e. with the ſame evil diſpoſitions, and with the ſame infuſed principle of grace to combat them, as Adam himſelf then was endowed with. I ſee here no impoſſibility, but on the contrary, a regular courſe of nature, according to which all animals produce their like.

To this pretended impoſſibility, the author adds its apparent injuſtice. For what (ſays he) is more contrary to the rules of our wretched juſtice, than to damn eternally an infant incapable of will? Here he calls the notions, by which we judge of this doctrine, the rules of our wretched juſtice.—Our practice of juſtice is indeed very wretched; but our ſpeculative rules of juſtice are right enough, for God himſelf appeals to them by the prophet Ezekiel, upon the very point in queſtion, ch. xviii. 19, 25, 29. Our notions of juſtice are not of our own production, but a tranſcript of the eternal law graven in our conſcience; and according to theſe we ourſelves ſhall be judged at the laſt day. We may therefore ſafely truſt to their judgement concerning an infant incapable of will, and conſequently of law; ſince St. Paul declares, that ſin is not imputed, where there is no law. And again, that where there is no law, there is no tranſgreſſion. To which we may add, that where there is no tranſgreſſion, there can be no puniſhment; ſeeing puniſhment is a relative term, which always ſuppoſes tranſgreſſion, and cannot ſubſiſt without it.

This is a ſure concluſion, although the Scripture had been ſilent, as it is in a great meaſure, concerning what the Redeemer ſhall accompliſh in the future ſtate. But the ſame divine authority which teaches the innate diſtemper of mankind, teaches alſo its remedy, and frequently declares it to be adequate to the diſeaſe; for the ſecond Adam will repair all damages done by the firſt, and himſelf anſwer for all thoſe, who have no unrepented crimes of their own to anſwer for. See Rom. v. 12—21.

I ſhall now ſpeak of another account of original ſin authorized in our own church, which though it was made with a good intention, to render us the more ſenſible of our obligations to the Redeemer, and is expreſſed in terms which are literally true in a certain ſenſe, yet may eaſily be miſtaken, and thence render the doctrine abſurd. As where it is ſaid, [the ixth article] that original ſin is not only the corruption, but the fault of the nature of every man, and deſerves condemnation. When we call it a fault, we muſt remember, as I obſerved before, to diſtinguiſh it from our own actual faults, and remark, that the article calls it only the fault of our nature. Fault is uſed here, as we apply it to inanimate beings, and in the ſame ſenſe, as when we ſay of a veſſel, that it is faulty, i. e. defective, uſeleſs, deſerving to be rejected and caſt away; yet, as we did not concur to the breaking it, this is not, in ſtrictneſs of ſpeech, our proper

WHAT ſhall we ſay then? Shall we continue in ſin, that grace may abound?

2 God forbid! How ſhall we, that are dead to ſin, live any longer therein?

3 Know ye not, that ſo many of us as were baptized into Jeſus Chriſt, were baptized into his death?

4 Therefore we are buried with him by baptiſm into death: that like as Chriſt was raiſed up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even ſo we alſo ſhould walk in newneſs of life.

5 For if we have been planted together in the likeneſs of his death, we ſhall be alſo in the likeneſs of his reſurrection:

6 Knowing this, that our old man is crucified with him, that the body of ſin might be deſtroyed; that henceforth we ſhould not ſerve ſin.

Ver. 2. Ch. vii. 4.—V. 3. Gal. iii. 27. Or, are.—V. 4. Col. ii. 12. Ch. viii. 11. 2 Cor. xiii. 4. Phil. iii. 10, 11. Epheſ. iv. 22, 23. Col. iii. 10.—V. 6. Gal. ii. 20. v. 24. vi. 14. Epheſ. iv. 22. Col. ii. 11.

proper fault, our perſonal crime; nor will the guilt of it be laid to our charge. However, for the preſent, it has ſpoiled us, it makes us abominable: for a fault is a fault, and corruption is corruption, which ever way it came, or whatever uſe may be made of it. It has happened without our crime, and it may have an iſſue unſpeakably to our advantage. But neither of theſe are here conſidered. Regard is had only to the preſent nature of man in his unregenerate ſtate, which is notoriouſly unjuſt, and as ſuch deſerves condemnation, as a dead tree cumbering the ground, if there were no reviving power, if there were no Redeemer. But this is putting a caſe, which never was, nor could have been. For the Almighty, who inhabiteth eternity, and whoſe all-ſeeing eye reaches through the whole extent of it, foreknowing the lapſe of the firſt Adam, had, before the foundation of the world, provided a ſecond head of human nature, through whom to derive his bleſſings to the whole race, when the firſt channel was polluted and ſpoiled. And as by the firſt channel death came into the world, ſo reſurrection proceeds from the ſecond: for as in Adam all die, ſo in Chriſt ſhall all be made alive. And thoſe who have done good, ſhall come forth to the reſurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the reſurrection of condemnation.

The preſent life is our time of trial, during which our gracious Redeemer adminiſters proper aſſiſtances to each man particularly, according to his capacity. For as He has taſted death for every man, ſo He is the Saviour of all men, and the light of all men, having wrote the law in their hearts.

As for Us, who, beſide the general law of nature, have the additional lights of revelation, we have ſo much more to anſwer for. Let us not then waſte our time in vain complaints, or abſurd cavils at the divine diſpenſation. We ſee indeed but little of God's ways, yet what we ſee is ſufficient for our conduct, and to ſilence all reaſonable objections; ſince we are aſſured that the merits of Chriſt are coextended with the demerits of Adam, and that every man at the laſt day ſhall be judged only according to his own deeds and deſervings. Then the mercy, as well as the juſtice of God, will be exerted in a manner that far tranſcends all notions we can now form of them; the clouds, which now cover the ways of Providence, will be diſſipated; wiſdom will be juſtified of her children; and even thoſe who ſhall be then reprobated, will be forced to acknowledge the equity of their condemnation.

Chap. VI. Ver. 1.] The Apoſtle, having now proved by three diſtinct arguments, that both Gentiles and Jews are pardoned, and made partakers of the privileges and bleſſings of the kingdom of God under the Meſſiah, no otherwiſe than by the grace of God, through faith alone,—He next proceeds, in proper order, to ſhew the obligations both Gentiles and Jews were under to a life of virtue and holineſs in this their new ſtate, and the means and advantages they enjoyed for that purpoſe. This he doth, not only to inſtruct the Chriſtians, and to prevent their miſtakes, but alſo to wipe away a calumny induſtriouſly ſpread, as if, in aſſerting juſtification by grace without works, he had taught that we are under no obligation to obedience, ch. iii. 8. Againſt this objection, miſtake, or calumny, he puts in a caveat, ch. iii. 31. But here he handles the point at large, and conſiders it firſt, with reference to the believing Gentiles; arguing upon it in an eaſy familiar manner, adapted to their caſe and capacity, in this chapter: Secondly, with reference to the believing Jews, in the 7th, and part of the 8th chapter. In the preſent chapter he introduces the ſubject, by putting this query into the mouth of the believing Gentile,—What ſhall we ſay then? Shall we continue in ſin, that grace may abound? No man can reaſonably doubt that this verſe is the language of believing Gentiles; the ſame of whom the Apoſtle ſpeaks, ch. v. 1. Being juſtified by faith, we have peace with God, through our Lord Jeſus Chriſt; by whom alſo we have acceſs by faith into this grace wherein we ſtand. "We, who were alienated from God, and obnoxious to his wrath, are now in a ſtate of pardon, peace, and favour:—And what ſhall we ſay, with regard to our future conduct? May we continue to live to ſin, that grace may be ſtill further diſplayed?" This queſtion, and the Apoſtle's diſcourſe upon it, to the end of the chapter, plainly ſuppoſes, that notwithſtanding their being juſtified,—at peace with God, and ſtanding in grace, they might continue to live in ſin, and periſh for ever: Conſequently their being juſtified, &c. immediately refer, not to their final and abſolute ſalvation, as if that were eventually aſcertained and ſecured; but to the pardon of the ſins of their Gentile ſtate, and their admiſſion to the bleſſings and privileges of the kingdom of God on earth, or to their being ſo far intereſted in God's favour and mercy, as notwithſtanding their former wickedneſs, to be pardoned and bleſſed with all proper means and motives to a life of piety and virtue; which means and motives, well improved, would ſecure their final and abſolute ſalvation: 2 Pet. i. 10, 11. But if they neglected the bleſſings and privileges which the grace of God had conferred upon them; if the means and motives they enjoyed did not produce a life of piety and virtue, then they ſhould fall, and be denied an entrance into the everlaſting kingdom of our Lord. That their juſtification and peace with God, is to be underſtood of their admittance into the kingdom of God in this world, and the enjoyment of its privileges, is further evident from the Apoſtle's turning their thoughts to baptiſm (the ordinance whereby our firſt juſtification, or our intereſt in the bleſſings and privileges of God's preſent kingdom and covenant, is ſignified and ſealed) to ſhew them the obligations they were under to obedience. See on ver. 3. Taylor, and Locke.

Ver. 2. How ſhall we, that are dead, &c.] He doth not mean that they were actually dead to ſin, for he ſuppoſes they might in fact live after the fleſh, ch. viii. 13. he therefore muſt mean, that they were by their profeſſion obliged to be dead to ſin. See on ch. ii. 4. Moral writers among the heathens frequently ſpeak of wiſe and good men as dead to ſenſualities and animal pleaſures. See Elſner's Obſervat. vol. ii. p. 28.

Ver. 3. Know ye not, &c?] This ſhews that the ordinance of baptiſm has relation to our firſt juſtification, or the common intereſt which all Chriſtians have in the bleſſings and privileges of the kingdom of God in this world; for being baptized into Chriſt, evidently has relation here to theſe Romans to whom St. Paul writes, paſſing out of the heathen into the Chriſtian ſtate, and ſo muſt have reſpect to the bleſſings then beſtowed upon them. Beſides, from the known ſignification and deſign of baptiſm, the Apoſtle proves their obligations to a life of obedience; conſequently, being baptized into Chriſt, muſt relate to their being intereſted in ſuch bleſſings, as were given antecedently to a life or courſe of obedience, and which obliged to it. Therefore, by baptiſm, our intereſt in the bleſſings of the Goſpel covenant, in common with all other Chriſtians, is declared, and our obligations to a life of righteouſneſs are ſignified. As the church at Rome ſeems to have been planted about the year 43, and this Epiſtle was written in the year 58, that is, fifteen years after, and yet the Apoſtle ſpeaks of the converted Romans in general as baptized; it muſt be ſuppoſed that baptiſm was adminiſtered to thoſe, whoſe parents had been Chriſtians at the time of their birth. See Col. ii. 12. Taylor, and Gale's Serm. vol. ii. 202.

Ver. 4. Buried with him by baptiſm, &c.] It ſeems queſtionable whether we can, from this paſſage, infer the outward mode of adminiſtering baptiſm; for in the next verſe, our being incorporated into Chriſt by baptiſm is alſo noted by our being planted, or rather grafted together in the likeneſs of his death; and Noah's ark floating upon the water, is a figure correſponding to baptiſm, 1 Pet. iii. 20, 21. But neither of theſe give us the ſame idea of the outward form, as burying. However, in whatever manner baptiſm was adminiſtered, if it were intended as a declaration of faith in the death and reſurrection of Chriſt, as it is well known that Chriſt died for ſin; it would infer an obligation to die to it, and riſe again to a holy life; which is the main point the Apoſtle labours. See Taylor and Doddridge.

Ver. 5. If we have been planted together] Planted does not compleatly expreſs the Apoſtle's ſentiment; τα συμφυτα are ſuch plants as grow the one upon and in the other, deriving ſap and nouriſhment from it; as miſletoe upon the oak, or the ſcion upon the ſtock into which it is grafted. Dr. Taylor would tranſlate the words thus: For if we have been made growers-together with Chriſt in the likeneſs of his death. [or in that which is like his death] we ſhall be alſo growers together with him in the likeneſs of [or in that which is like] his reſurrection. It appears to be a metaphor, and a very beautiful one, taken from grafting, or making the Scion grow together with the new ſtock. Homberg would render it: If we have been united with him by the image of his death, we ſhall, &c. See Wells, Beza, and Raphelius

Ver. 6. Our old man] Our wicked and corrupt fleſhly ſelf, Gal. v. 24. Epheſ. iv. 22. Col. ii. 11. 1 Pet. iv. 1. The word καταργηθη, rendered deſtroyed, would perhaps be rendered more poperly enervated. The utter deſtruction of the body of ſin in us, is certainly intended in the Goſpel; but the particular import of this word is, to make void, debilitate, enervate, diſannul, aboliſh, or depoſe. Comp. ch. iii. 31. iv. 14. 1 Cor. ii. 6. xiii. 8. xv. 24. Epheſ. ii. 15. 2 Tim. i. 10. The body of ſin in believers is indeed an enfeebled, conquered, and depoſed

7 For he that is dead is freed from ſin.

8 Now if we be dead with Chriſt, we believe that we ſhall alſo live with him:

9 Knowing that Chriſt, being raiſed from the dead, dieth no more; death hath no more dominion over him.

10 For in that he died, he died unto ſin once: but in that he liveth, he liveth unto God.

11 Likewiſe reckon ye alſo yourſelves to be dead indeed unto ſin, but alive unto God through Jeſus Chriſt our Lord.

12 Let not ſin therefore reign in your mortal body, that ye ſhould obey it in the luſts thereof.

13 Neither yield ye your members as inſtruments of unrighteouſneſs unto ſin: but yield yourſelves unto God, as thoſe that are alive from the dead, and your members as inſtruments of righteouſneſs unto God.

14 For ſin ſhall not have dominion over you: for ye are not under the law, but under grace.

15 What then? ſhall we ſin, becauſe we are not under the law, but under grace? God forbid!

16 Know ye not, that to whom ye yield yourſelves ſervants to obey, his ſervants ye are to whom ye obey; whether of ſin unto death, or of obedience unto righteouſneſs?

17 But God be thanked, that ye were the ſervants of ſin; but ye have obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine which was delivered you.

Ver. 7. 1 Pet. iv. 1. Gr. juſtified.—V. 8. 2 Tim. ii. 11.—V. 9. Rev. i. 18.—V. 10. Hebr. ix. 27, 28. Luke xx. 38.—V. 11. Gal. ii. 19.—V. 12. Pſ. cxix. 133.—V. 13. Ch. vii. 5. Col. iii. 5. James iv. 1. Gr. arms, or weapons. Ch. xii. 1. 1 Pet. iv. 2. V. 14. Ch. vii. 4, 6. viii. 2. Gal. v. 18.—V. 15. 1 Cor. ix. 21.—V. 16. Matth. vi. 24. John viii. 34. 2 Pet. ii. 19.—V. 17. 2 Tim. i. 13. Gr. whereto ye were delivered.

poſed tyrant, and the ſtroke of death finiſhes its deſtruction. It will conduce much to the underſtanding of St. Paul in this and the two following chapters, if it be obſerved that theſe phraſes, to ſerve ſin,—to be ſervants of ſin,—ſin reigning in our mortal bodies—to obey ſin in the luſts of our bodies—to yield our members inſtruments of unrighteouſneſs unto ſin, or ſervants of uncleanneſs,—and of iniquity unto iniquity,—to be free from righteouſneſs,—to walk, live, or be after the fleſh,—to be carnally minded, all ſignify one and the ſame thing; namely, the giving ourſelves up to the conduct of our carnal and ſinful appetites; allowing any of them the command over us, and the conduct and prevalency in determining us: On the contrary, that walking after the ſpirit, or in newneſs of life,—the crucifixion of the old man,—the deſtruction of the body of ſin,—the deliverance from the body of death,—to be freed from ſin,—to be dead to ſin, and alive unto God,—to yield ourſelves unto God, as thoſe who are alive from the dead,—to yield our members ſervants of righteouſneſs unto holineſs, or inſtruments of righteouſneſs unto God,—to be ſervants of obedience unto righteouſneſs,—made free from ſin,—ſervants of righteouſneſs,—to be after the ſpirit, to be ſpiritually-minded,—to mortify the deeds of the body,—do all ſignify a conſtant ſteady purpoſe, and ſincere endeavour to obey the law and will of God in every thing: theſe ſeveral expreſſions being uſed in ſeveral places, as beſt ſerves the occaſion, and illuſtrates the ſenſe.

Ver. 7. He that is dead is freed from ſin] Δεδικαίωται;—is juſtified from ſin. St. Peter ſeems to paraphraſe this verſe, 1 Ep. iv. 1. He that hath ſuffered in the fleſh hath ceaſed from ſin; as if he had ſaid, "The Chriſtian who is ſo reſolute as to reſiſt all temptation to ſin, and chooſes rather to ſuffer any temporal calamities, than commit ſin, or neglect his duty, is the only man who has done with ſin;—who is effectually delivered from the power and condemnation of it." Δικαιοῦσθαι, frequently ſignifies in Scripture to be ſaved, or delivered. See Iſai. xlv. 25. Acts xiii. 39. James ii. 25. and on ch. v. 16. Mr. Locke paraphraſes this paſſage thus: "For he that is dead is ſet free from the vaſſalage of ſin, as a ſlave is from the vaſſalage of his maſter." St. Paul makes it his buſineſs, in this chapter, not to tell the Jews what they certainly and unchangeably are; but to exhort them to be what they ought and are engaged to be, by becoming Chriſtians; namely, that they ought to emancipate themſelves from the vaſſalage of ſin; not that they were ſo emancipated without any danger of return: for then he could not have ſaid what he does, ver. 1, 12, 13. which ſuppoſes it in their power to continue in their obedience to ſin, or return to that vaſſalage if they would.

Ver. 10. For in that he died, &c.] For he that hath died unto ſin, hath died once for all; and he that liveth, liveth unto God. Wat. Doddridge tranſlates and paraphraſes the paſſage thus: "For whereas he died, he died once for all, as a ſacrifice for ſin, to atone the injured juſtice of God, and repair the honours of his violated law: and as he liveth, he liveth to God for ever, His immortal life is intirely appropriated and devoted to his ſervice; wherein we ought to make it our conſtant care to imitate his example." See ch. viii. 17. Gal. ii. 20. 2 Tim. ii. 20. 1 Pet. ii. 21. iv. 1.

Ver. 11. Likewiſe, &c.] Thus then reckon ye yourſelves, &c. Wat. See Col. iii. 3.

Ver. 12. Let not ſin therefore reign in your mortal body] Sin is here ſpoken of as a perſon; a proſopopoeia made uſe of throughout this and the following chapter; which muſt be obſerved if we will underſtand them right. See 1 Pet. iv. 1. to 3. Dr. Heylin renders this verſe, Let not ſin therefore reign in your mortal bodies, ſo as to obey it by indulging the appetites of the body. Mr. Locke obſerves, that the prepoſition ἐν, in the Apoſtle's writings, often ſignifies by; and as here, as well as in the following chapters, ver. 18. and 24. and elſewhere, he places the root of ſin in the body, the ſenſe ſeems to be, "Let not ſin reign over you, by the luſts of your mortal body." The force of St. Paul's argument appears to be this: "By your baptiſm you are engaged to become conformable to Chriſt's death and reſurrection: He once died for ſin, ſo do you count yourſelves dead to ſin: He roſe to life, wherein he lives wholly to God; ſo muſt your new life, after your reſurrection from your typical burial in the water, be under the vaſſalage of ſin no more; but you muſt live intirely to the ſervice of God, to whom you are devoted." See Locke.

Ver. 13. Your members as inſtruments] Sinful luſts, at leaſt thoſe to which the Gentiles were moſt eminently enſlaved, ſeem ſo much placed in the body and the members, that they are emphatically called the members. See Col. iii. 5. Dr. Heylin appears to enervate the paſſage by rendering the word μέλη, by natural faculties: The word ὅπλα, rendered inſtruments, properly ſignifies weapons; and in this ſenſe has a beautiful propriety. See Locke, Doddridge, and Mintert.

Ver. 14. For ſin, &c.] That is, "Sin ſhall not be your abſolute maſter, to diſpoſe of your members and faculties in its drudgery and ſervice as it pleaſes: You ſhall not be under its controul, in abſolute ſubjection to it, but your own men, and at your own diſpoſal: unleſs by your own free choice you enthral yourſelves to it, and by a voluntary obedience give it the command over you, and are willing to have it your maſter." We muſt bear in mind, that St. Paul here, and in the following chapter, perſonifies ſin, as ſtriving with men for maſtery to deſtroy them. The force of his reaſoning here ſtands thus: "You are obliged, by your taking on you the profeſſion of the Goſpel, not to be any longer ſlaves and vaſſals to ſin, not to be under the ſway of your carnal luſts, but to yield yourſelves up to God, to be his ſervants, in a conſtant and ſincere purpoſe and endeavour to obey him in all things. This if you do, ſin ſhall not be able to procure you death; for you are not now under a law which condemns to death for every the leaſt tranſgreſſion, though it be but a ſlip of infirmity; but by your baptiſm are entered into the covenant of grace: and being under grace, God will accept of your ſincere endeavours, in the place of exact obedience, and give you eternal life through Jeſus Chriſt. But if you, by a willing obedience to your luſts, make yourſelves vaſſals to ſin, Sin, as the Lord and Maſter to whom you belong, will pay you with death, the only wages it hath to give." Comp. ver. 23. Mr. Locke is of opinion, that by law and grace, the Apoſtle here means the Jewiſh and Chriſtian diſpenſations. See the next chapter. But Dr. Taylor obſerves, that by law is here meant ſtrict rigid law, which was but a part of the Jewiſh diſpenſation, threatening death to every tranſgreſſion; and that by grace are meant the gracious terms, proviſions, and diſcoveries of the Goſpel; and that both are to be underſtood as they relate to ſanctity of life, the ſubject the Apoſtle is upon.

Ver. 16. Obedience] That which he calls here ſimply obedience, in other places, he calls obedience of faith, and obedience of Chriſt; meaning a reception of the Goſpel of Chriſt. The Apoſtle explains the obligations of Gentile Chriſtians in their preſent ſtate, in oppoſition to the Gentile or heathen ſtate, by the caſe of ſlaves, at that time well underſtood all over the world. A ſervant or ſlave was his maſter's property, a part of his goods, which he might keep for life, ſell to another maſter, or manumit and ſet free as he pleaſed. Conſequently the ſervant muſt be employed, as the maſter he was under was either good or bad; and muſt fare according as his maſter happened to be rich or poor, good natured or churliſh, niggardly or liberal: and his being releaſed from a bad maſter, and put into the hands of a good one, kind and generous, muſt be a very deſirable and happy alteration in his circumſtances. Taylor and Locke.

Ver. 17. But God be thanked] Here the Apoſtle thanks God, that whereas they had been heathens, and ſo ranked among the ſervants of ſin, they were now become Chriſtians, and conſequently ranked among the ſervants of the Goſpel, or ſuch as were obedient to it. This he explains by a metaphor taken from the coining, ſtamping, or caſting of metal in a die or mould. The τύπος, (the form, as we 18 Being then made free from ſin, ye became the ſervants of righteouſneſs.

19 I ſpeak after the manner of men, becauſe of the infirmity of your fleſh; for as ye have yielded your members ſervants to uncleanneſs and to iniquity, unto iniquity; even ſo now yield your members ſervants to righteouſneſs, unto holineſs.

20 For when ye were the ſervants of ſin, ye were free from righteouſneſs.

21 What fruit had ye then in thoſe things whereof ye are now aſhamed? for the end of thoſe things is death.

22 But now, being made free from ſin, and become ſervants to God, ye have your fruit unto holineſs, and the end everlaſting life.

23 For the wages of ſin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life, through Jeſus Chriſt our Lord.

Ver. 18. John viii. 32. 1 Cor. vii. 22. Gal. v. 1. Gr. to righteouſneſs.—V. 21. Ch. vii. 5.—V. 23. Gen. ii. 17. Ch. v. 12. James i. 15.

tranſlate it,) that is, the ſtamp, die or mould, is the doctrine of the Goſpel. Their being put into, or under this mould, was their paſſing out of the heathen into the Chriſtian ſtate. By the purpoſe and counſel of God, who had before decreed to take the Gentiles into his church; by the preaching of the Goſpel, whereby they were called into the church; and by their embracing the faith of the Goſpel, they were put, or delivered into, or under the die or mould, from which they were to receive a new impreſſion, or to be faſhioned into new creatures. And their obeying from their heart the mould, or model of doctrine, refers to their firſt obedience, or firſt faith, at their converſion, when they willingly embraced the Chriſtian profeſſion. This was the firſt act of obedience, by which, on their parts, they were put or delivered into the die or mould of the Goſpel: and their further and continued obedience is what the Apoſtle in this chapter, earneſtly exhorts them to; namely, that as they had by a willing cordial profeſſion of the Goſpel, admitted the die or mould of its doctrine, and were now put into it, ſo they would labour to admit a clear, fair and full impreſſion upon their hearts and lives. The figure upon the die is the image of God in righteonſneſs and true holineſs: for the new man, (Epheſ. iv. 24.) or the Goſpel ſtate, is created, or erected, in righteouſneſs and holineſs after the image of God. This therefore is the figure upon the ſtamp or mould: this the image and ſuperſcription of God: and the Chriſtian's duty and great work is, to be conformed to this image; to take care that a full and fair repreſentation of it be ſtruck upon all his principles and actions: that in the diſpoſition of his mind, and in every part of his converſation, he may ſhew the image and ſuperſcription of God, bright and perfect, as upon a newly-coined priece of money. See Taylor. Dr. Heylin renders this verſe, But God be praiſed, that whereas ye were formerly the ſlaves of ſin, ye have now ſincerely obeyed that doctrine which was propoſed for your rule of life. And Waterland reads the laſt clauſe —to which ye were delivered over. See on chap. v. 14. Elſner, and Sykes on Chriſtianity, p. 178.

Ver. 19. I ſpeak after the manner of men] There was a neceſſity for ſome little kind of apology for a figure of ſpeech, which he dwells upon quite to the end of this chapter. This firſt clauſe ſhould be read in a parentheſis. Inſtead of even ſo now yield, Markland, by the alteration of a ſingle letter, would read with great propriety, ſo you have now yielded; for he obſerves, that according to our preſent reading, they are here exhorted to do, what the Apoſtle had affirmed was done, in ver. 18. and indeed the clauſe immediately preceding naturally leads to this verſion.

Ver. 23. For the wages of ſin is death] The wages of ſin, does not here ſignify the wages that are paid for ſinning, but the wages which ſin pays. This is evident not only from the oppoſition which is here put between the wages of ſin, and the gift of God; namely, that ſin rewards men with eternal death for their obedience; but that which God freely gives to thoſe, who believing in Jeſus Chriſt, labour ſincerely after righteouſneſs, is life eternal: but it further appears by the whole tenor of St. Paul's diſcourſe, wherein he ſpeaks of ſin as a perſon and a maſter, who is ſerved and obeyed. And ſo the wages of ſin being the wages of a perſon here, muſt be what it pays. We may obſerve, that ſin pays death to thoſe who are its obedient vaſſals: but God rewards the obedience of thoſe to whom he is Lord and maſter, by the gift of eternal life. Their utmoſt endeavours and higheſt performances can never entitle them to it of right; and ſo it is to them not wages, but a free gift. See chap. iv. 4. and Locke.

REFLECTIONS ON CHAP. III.

It is plain from this, and many other paſſages of Scripture, that baptiſm implies and requires an expreſs belief of the death of Chriſt, as the inſtrument of our ſalvation, ver. 3—11. and conſequently, a firm hope and truſt of obtaining that ſalvation by his ſufferings, as the efficient and meritorious cauſe; but by faith and a ſuitable converſation, as a conditional cauſe, without which the other will ſtand in no ſtead: ſo that hence we obſerve, a right belief, and a holy life, are our part of the Chriſtian life.

And this, as the Apoſtle argues, ver. 3. is what Chriſtians cannot but be ſenſible of; ſince not only the terms on which they are admitted into memberſhip with the church, and all the preſent and future privileges conſequent upon it, do expreſly mention this condition, but alſo the rites of this ſacrament of baptiſm ſufficiently intimate it to them. The ceremony of immerſion under water, repreſents the burial of a dead perſon under ground; as the pouring water upon the party, in caſes where the former cannot conveniently be done, anſwers to the covering and throwing earth upon a perſon ſo dead: but both agree in figuring a death and burial, as the emerging again does a new life.

Now this it is plain can only mean the mortification of ſome old, and the quickening of ſome contrary principle, in a ſpiritual ſenſe; all ſuch circumſtances, however they may relate to, yet manifeſtly having no effect, nor working any change upon the outward man, or natural life; but being only contrived by a ſenſible repreſentation and proper ceremonies, to confirm our faith in effects which we neither do, nor can ſee. This is the caſe of all the ſacraments, properly ſo called, that are or ever have been inſtituted. They are outward viſible ſigns of ſome inward ſpiritual grace, ſuſpended upon conditions, ſuited to the ſtate of religion at the time of their reſpective inſtitution and obſervance.

Thus in the inſtance before us, the Chriſtian's priviledge is a releaſe from the guilt and dominion of ſin, and from the death inflicted as a puniſhment upon it. This releaſe is procured by the death and reſurrection of Chriſt, conſidered not in his private and perſonal capacity, but as the common ranſom and repreſentative of mankind. This death is repreſented by the baptized's being put under water; and this reſurrection by his being taken out of the water. The former expreſſes our belief in the benefits of his dying; the latter, that of our riſing again after his example. In this conſiſts our privilege. We die as he died; but we are aſſured of reſtoration to life, as, and becauſe he liveth again. But then the deſign of his death, conſidered as that which was to prevent future, as well as to atone for paſt ſins, (and that this can be no otherwiſe effected but by reformation of life,) as plainly ſhews our duty. There is only this difference between them, that in the point of privilege, we are literally conformed to the image of Chriſt, and as we actually die, ſo we ſhall actually riſe from the dead; whereas in point of duty, we attain to a metaphorical reſemblance; only our body is not crucified and killed in baptiſm, but the body of ſin, our corrupt appetites and luſts: our perſons do not revive, but our graces and good principles. And hence it is that the Apoſtle does not ſay, "we are planted together in his death and reſurrection;" but, as St. Chryſoſtom and other fathers obſerve, very emphatically interpoſes, "the likeneſs of his death, and the likeneſs of his reſurrection." Thus intimating a reſemblance only of thoſe things at preſent, yet ſuch a reſemblance as is neceſſary to bring us to the reality. In ſhort, what our Saviour did and ſuffered for us, muſt be, in a ſpiritual ſenſe, and ſo far as we are capable, imitated and acted over again by us; and is not only an object of our faith, but a rule for our practice.

I. It is not human nature, conſidered with the appetites and affections eſſential to it, but in regard to the corruptions ſuperinduced by ſin, that we liſt ourſelves againſt, and are to treat as an enemy; ſee ver. 6, 7. Baptiſm, when it makes us Chriſtians, yet leaves us ſtill men; and conſequently neither does itſelf, nor can poſſibly engage us to eradicate thoſe paſſions and deſires, which are interwoven with our original conſtitution. Nor indeed is there any need it ſhould; for all our faults and miſchiefs proceed not from the affections themſelves, but the miſapplication, exceſs or abuſe of them. Love and hatred are the ſame motions in the ſoul, whether God and heaven, or ſin and the world be their object; but theſe, according to the thing loved or hated, and the meaſure in which it is ſo, promote our virtue, or enſnare us in vice. The meaning therefore of dying to ſin, is only, that by our care and good habits, ſo entire a maſtery ſhould be obtained in the government of our affections, and the turning them to holineſs become ſo eaſy, familiar, and conſtant a practice with us, that this cuſtom ſhould be a kind of new nature. Properly ſpeaking, the will is the vital part of the ſoul; and as the life or death natural, appears by the body's exerting itſelf in, or being deprived of motion, ſo is the life or death ſpiritual to be judged of by the determinations of the will; and be the temptations from without to do wickedly never ſo importunate, and the inclinations from within never ſo ſtrong, yet if all theſe are ſo conquered and kept down, that they lie as it were under ground, and cannot get up again, or ſhake or move the will to any degree of indulgence or conſent; that ſoul is truly dead with Chriſt; the old man in it is crucified, and the body of ſin deſtroyed.

This indeed is the only body we are concerned to deſtroy; and hence the very form of our baptiſmal vow runs, "That we renounce, —not the world at large, but its vain pomp, and glory, and covetous deſires; nor the fleſh at large, whoſe deſires it is impoſſible to put off, but the carnal and impure luſts of it;" and therefore in our admirable

CHAP. VII.

No law hath power over a man longer than he liveth. But we are dead to the law. Yet is not the law ſin, but holy, juſt, good; as I acknowledge, who am grieved becauſe I cannot keep it.

KNOW ye not, brethren, (for I ſpeak to them that know the law,) how that Church Catechiſm, the ſubſtance of that vow is repeated, with this ſmall but ſignificant variation; "The pomps and vanities of this wicked world, and all the ſinful luſts of the fleſh:" Thus ſufficiently intimating, that we engage no further againſt theſe, than as they are wicked and ſinful.

II. Such ſeems to be the manner in which we are to underſtand that death unto ſin, whereby we are ſaid to be dead and buried with Chriſt in baptiſm. But now, as the benefits of his real death are accompliſhed and aſſured to us by his real reſurrection: ſo are thoſe of our figurative one, by our reſembling of him as well in the latter as in the former. To this purpoſe the Apoſtle mentions being alive with him, ver. 7.—planted together in the likeneſs of his reſurrection, ver. 5.—and for an explication of his meaning, as he was raiſed from the dead by the glory of his Father, ſo our burial with him by baptiſm into death, is with this deſign, That like as Chriſt was raiſed from the dead by the glory of the Father, even ſo we alſo ſhould walk in newneſs of life. Without this image of a Saviour dead wrought in us, we cannot attain another, as neceſſary part of his likeneſs,—the image of a riſen and living Saviour; for the character of a Chriſtian is by no means anſwered in the mortifying all our evil and corrupt affections, but, as our baptiſmal ſervice expreſſes it, muſt and can only be finiſhed by daily proceeding in all virtue and godlineſs of living.

This is the import of thoſe figures ſo very frequent in Scripture,—of a new heart, and a new ſpirit, a new creature, new birth, &c. all which inſinuate the greatneſs of the change;—the greateſt indeed of which a ſoul is capable, and ſo great, as to render the metaphors exceeding juſt and proper;—a change, which evidently implies a newneſs of notions, diſpoſitions, deſires, and a converſation proceeding from, and agreeable to theſe. That change, made by the grace of God's Holy Spirit, which gives a freſh turn to our thoughts and affections, imprints a true ſenſe of good and evil upon the ſoul; puts a quite different bias on the will; diſpoſes it to walk by faith, rather than by ſight; to prefer pure and intellectual, before ſenſual and polluted pleaſures; to over-ballance preſent and mean, with eternal, though future and inviſible advantages; and ſo, by theſe and other like operations, renders us new,—quite other men from what it found us, either in fact, or in diſpoſition.

Of this change, the reſurrection of our Lord is here very elegantly propoſed as our pattern. His body, when riſen, is generally conceived to have been ſo far ſpiritualized, as to be no longer ſubject to any of our common decays and infirmities; the eating and drinking we read of after this were inſtances of condeſcenſion, to give inconteſtable evidence of his being alive again, not neceſſary ſupports to a nature then wanting them:—And in like manner, when Chriſtians love things which are holy, ſpiritual, and heavenly, and get above the world and its tempations, they act in agreement with their profeſſion: The cares, delights, and profits attending their preſent ſtate, are indeed a part of their animal life; neceſſary incumbrances, and inſeparable from a condition of mortality; but then they are ſuch as can never be worthy of, or engroſs their chief thought and attention; not to be wiſhed further than nature and the conveniencies of doing good require them; and therefore the time and labour employed about them is rather to be ſubmitted to than choſen.

III. But once more, the reſemblance of Chriſt, to which baptiſm brings us, implies a conſtant perſeverance in our duty. Thus St. Paul argues, ver. 9—11. Chriſt being raiſed from the dead dieth no more, &c. The inference is ſtrong, the parallel cloſe, and his arguments in conſequence are natural, and well purſued to the end of the chapter. Our Lord could die but once, becauſe there could never be an occaſion to require it a ſecond time: The deſign of his death was to take away ſin; and this being accompliſhed to the uttermoſt at once, therefore he died for all. This argued the perfection of his ſacrifice, and that the life to which he roſe was endleſs.

Now, if baptiſm repreſents his reſurrection, as well as his death, it muſt be anſwered in the Chriſtian by ſuch a riſing to a life of righteouſneſs, as never more dies to ſin. Accordingly, herein the ſpiritual and natural life agree, that as we can be born but once, ſo we are baptized but once; and as the vital principle in each caſe is then imparted for a man's whole term; ſo in each caſe it is left to the man's own care to preſerve and cheriſh it.

There are indeed many languiſhings and indiſpoſitions, as well as violent and acute diſeaſes in the body, from which nevertheleſs recovery is had, and health perfectly reſtored: Thus too in the ſoul there are various diſorders, great ſlackenings of zeal, backſlidings and failings, falls by infirmity or ſurpriſe, grievous deliberate offences, and corrupt and depraved cuſtoms. And yet theſe, if taken in time, may be cured by the ſpiritual food and phyſic provided for that purpoſe. Conſideration, faith, prayer, repentance, the word of God, and the ſacraments of Chriſt,—theſe are our refreſhments and our remedies; to ſuſtain us when we droop, to reſtore us when ſick, to ſtimulate our growth, to ſtrengthen and confirm us when grown up: And therefore it is as much as the life here conſidered is worth, for every man to apply theſe frequently, ſeaſonably, reverently, and in the fear of God: For elſe, by neglecting theſe ordinances, evil habits will get ground, a redundance of noxious humours will choke every vital principle, and throw us back again into that ſtate of death, from whence there is no birth, no reſurrection to reſcue or deliver us!

How greatly were it to be wiſhed, that the generality of Chriſtians would but ſeriouſly lay this Scripture to heart! Would but now and then pauſe and reflect upon the engagements and the end of that baptiſm, under the ſolemn vows whereof they have bound their immortal ſouls! That they would carefully examine what conformity ſubſiſts between themſelves, and a dead and riſen Saviour! Convinced that they have no foundation for hope in, or benefit from his death and reſurrection, farther than ſuch conformity can juſtify their title! Men could not then content themſelves with a luke-warm and lame obedience,—could not think it ſufficient to lead a life of eaſe and indolence, of no uſe, no example to mankind; as if the doing good was of no conſequence, and the abſtaining from notorious evil were the whole of their engagement. Much leſs could any, who attend to the paſſage before us, allow themſelves in ſuch habits of lewdneſs, profaneneſs, and other enormities, as are a ſcandal to all religion, and a virtual abjuration of their baptiſmal covenant: Perſons of this ſtamp, could not do a kinder thing to the credit of Chriſtianity, than openly to renounce its ſacred profeſſion,—I had almoſt ſaid, nor a kinder thing to themſelves: For, however careleſs ſuch may be of conſequences, they ſhould recollect, that they only profeſs Chriſt's faith to their heavier condemnation. It ſhall be more tolerable for Sodom and Gomorrah in the day of judgement than for theſe, who ſo far from imitating their Lord, copy only the traitorous example of that miſcreant, who ſaid, Hail Maſter! and kiſſed him, as a ſignal to thoſe enemies, who came under his conduct to ſeize, mock, and crucify the Lord of life!

Chap. VII. Ver. 1.] In the foregoing chapter, the Apoſtle ſhews the Gentiles the obligations they were under to a life of holineſs, and the advantages they enjoyed for that purpoſe, now that they were taken into the kingdom of God. From hence to ch. viii. 11. he addreſſes himſelf upon the ſame ſubject to a very different ſort of people. The Gentile had nothing to oppoſe to the Goſpel: A man juſt emerged from the darkneſs and impurity of an idolatrous ſtate, wanted no arguments to convince him of the neceſſity of a further diſpenſation for his inſtruction and ſanctification; and as for what any of the philoſophers had taught, he found all that, and indeed every moral truth which human reaſon can diſcover, tranſcribed and incorporated into the Goſpel, with the addition of a ſurpriſing degree of light, beyond the unaſſiſted reach of human reaſon. But the Jewiſh Chriſtian, either from his own prejudices, or the ſuggeſtions of his unbelieving countrymen, might be diverted from the due improvement of the Goſpel. It might be ſuggeſted, "You cannot own the Goſpel as a rule of life and ſanctification, or put yourſelf under it, without renouncing the law; which is in effect to renounce your allegiance to God, whoſe authority hath eſtabliſhed it, and obliges you to adhere to it. Beſides, you do not want the Goſpel; the law is in all points holy, juſt, and true, and we acknowledge and eſteem it as ſuch:—What occaſion have we for the Goſpel?"—To confirm the believing Jews againſt ſuch ſuggeſtions, is the deſign of the Apoſtle in this chapter. The Jews reſted in their law, as ſufficient both for juſtification and ſanctification; that it was inſufficient for juſtification, St. Paul has ſhewn, ch. iii. 4, 5. that it is inſufficient for ſanctification, he proves in this place; and introduces his diſcourſe by ſhewing that the Jew is now diſcharged from his obligations to the law, as peculiar to himſelf, and at liberty to come under another and much happier conſtitution, even that of the Goſpel in Chriſt Jeſus. ch. vii. 1—4. In the 5th verſe he gives a general deſcription of the ſtate of a Jew in ſervitude to ſin, conſidered as under mere law. In ver. 6. he gives a ſummary account of the ſtate of a Chriſtian, or believing Jew, and the advantages he enjoys under the Goſpel. Upon the 5th verſe he comments from ver. 7. to the end of the chapter; and upon ver. 6, in ch. viii. 1—11. I. Commenting upon ver. 5, he ſhews, firſt, that the law reached to all the branches and latent principles of ſin. (ver. 7.) Secondly, that it ſubjected the ſinner to death, (ver. 8—12.) without the benefit of pardon. Thirdly, the reaſon why the Jew was put under it, ver. 13. Fourthly, he proves that the law, conſidered as a rule of action, though it was ſpiritual, holy, juſt, and good in itſelf, and though the Jews owned and approved it as ſuch, yet was inſufficient for ſanctification, or for freeing a man from the power of luſt and ſin; becauſe the prevalency of ſenſual appetite doth not wholly extinguiſh reaſon, or ſilence conſcience; and therefore a man's reaſon and conſcience might own and approve the law as good, juſt, and holy, and yet his paſſions might reign within him, and keep him in ſervitude to them, while the law ſupplied no power to deliver him from them; ver. 14—24. It is only the grace and favour of God in Chriſt, which ſupplies that power. ver. 25.—II. Commenting upon the 6th verſe of ch. vii. the Apoſtle affirms, firſt, that under the Goſpel, and by faith in Chriſt Jeſus, (if made the principle of a holy life) the Jew was wholly delivered from the condemnation of the law, both in this world, and in that which is to come. ch. viii. 1. Secondly, that the power of the Spirit of God to invigorate and renew our minds, and to free us from the dominion of ſin, attends the Goſpel diſpenſation. ver. 2—4. But, thirdly, whereas it might, through miſtake, be ſuppoſed, that this ſanctifying principle, the Spirit of God, would work without any care or thought on their part; or whereas it might be objected, that notwithſtanding this life-giving Spirit, many who profeſſed the Goſpel were wicked men; Either to prevent this miſtake, or to obviate this objection, the Apoſtle ſhews, that no conſtitution the law hath dominion over a man, as long as he liveth?

2 For the woman which hath an huſband, is bound by the law to her huſband, ſo long as he liveth; but if the huſband be dead, ſhe is looſed from the law of her huſband.

3 So then, if while her huſband liveth, ſhe be married to another man, ſhe ſhall be called an adultereſs: but if her huſband be dead, ſhe is free from that law; ſo that ſhe is no adultereſs, though ſhe be married to another man.

4 Wherefore, my brethren, ye alſo are become dead to the law by the body of Chriſt; that ye ſhould be married to another, even to him who is raiſed from the dead, that we ſhould bring forth fruit unto God.

5 For when we were in the fleſh, the motions of ſins which were by the law, did work in our members to bring forth fruit unto death:

6 But now we are delivered from the law, that being dead wherein we were held; that

Ver. 2. 1 Cor. vii. 39.—V. 3. Matth. v. 32.—V. 4. Ch. viii. 2. Gal. ii. 19. v. 18. Gal. v. 22.—V. 5. Gr. paſſions. Ch. vi. 13. Ch. vi. 21. Gal. v. 19.—V. 6. Or, being dead to that, ch. vi. 2.

ſtitution would ſave thoſe from the power of ſin, or from condemnation, who wilfully chooſe to remain under its dominion.—According to the immutable nature of things, ſuch muſt periſh, as well under the Goſpel, as under the law itſelf, ver. 4—11. The reader ſhould carefully remember, that it is the ſtate of a Jew in the fleſh (ver. 5.) enſlaved to ſin by the force of ſenſual appetite, and yet, poſſibly, ſenſible of his unhappy condition, upon which the Apoſtle diſcourſes, and by which be proves the inſufficiency of mere law for ſanctification, in the chapter before us. See Taylor.

The law hath dominion, &c.] The law is to be underſtood as the nominative caſe to liveth. The law hath dominion over a man ſo long as it lives or ſubſiſts. So Amos viii. 14. The way [the idolatrous inſtitutions] of Beerſheba liveth. Antigone, in her noble ſpeech to king Creon, comparing laws made at pleaſure by men, with the eternal obligations of truth and right, ſays,

> Not now, nor yeſterday, but evermore the laws
> Unwritten live, and none when publiſhed firſt can tell.
> Sophocl. Antig. l. 465.

When the laws are duly executed, they are ſaid vigere, to be in a healthy flouriſhing ſtate; when not executed, to ſleep.—Thus Juvenal, Ubi nunc lex Julia?—Dormis. The Apoſtle, Heb. viii. 13. deſcribes the firſt covenant or conſtitution as labouring under the infirmities and decays of old age, and ready to vaniſh away, or die, as men do, James iv. 14. Dr. Waterland, after Elſner, would render this paſſage, How that the law or authority of a huſband prevails, as long as he, the huſband, liveth? But this not only occaſions a tautology, (for the ſecond verſe plainly expreſſes the ſame ſenſe,) but it requires a tranſpoſition not to be allowed without more apparent reaſon. The rendering we have propoſed is more natural, and ſuits the connection with the following verſes; in which the law is repreſented as the firſt huſband, whoſe deceaſe leaves them free to be married to Chriſt.

Ver. 2. For the woman, &c.] St. Paul goes on to explain his meaning by a familiar inſtance. He chooſes to ſet the Jew in a more honourable light, while under the law, than he does the Gentiles, while under their heathen ſtate. The Gentiles are compared to ſlaves, in a ſtate of the loweſt and vileſt ſervitude; ch. vi. 16, &c. The Jews to a wife, in a ſtate of ſubjection indeed, but far more honourable than that of a ſlave. See Taylor and Doddridge.

Ver. 3. If—ſhe be married to another man] If—ſhe become the property of another; or become another man's. The Apoſtle here ſpeaks in the general, not entering exactly into every excepted caſe which might be imagined. To infer therefore, contrary to our Lord's expreſs deciſion elſewhere, that adultery is not a ſufficient foundation for divorce, ſeems very unreaſonable; though Bp. Burnet aſſures us, that great ſtreſs was once laid on the argument. See his Hiſtory of the Reformation, vol. ii. p. 57.

Ver. 4. Wherefore, my brethren] Ὥςε, rendered wherefore, is uſed in compariſon for ut, ſic,—as, ſo.—You are become dead to the law, means, "becauſe the law is become dead to you;" an hypallage, like that of date claſſibus auſtros, "give the winds to the fleet." By this manner of expreſſion, the prejudice of the Jew is favoured; who might have been diſguſted, had the Apoſtle ſaid, that the law, for which the Jew had ſo great a veneration, was dead; and yet the ſenſe is the ſame, becauſe the relation is diſſolved, which ever of the parties be dead; as it is all one, whether the fleet be given to the winds, or the winds to the fleet. The Apoſtle adds, By the body of Chriſt—who is raiſed from the dead. The reſurrection of the dead, which is the gift of God to the obedience of Chriſt, is a direct and full abolition of the law, which condemns the tranſgreſſor to death eternal, without hope of a revival: And Chriſt's reſurrection, as an earneſt of the general reſurrection, confirmed the abolition of the damnatory ſentence of the law, as it ſtood in the old original covenant with Adam, and in the law of Moſes. St. Paul, in the laſt clauſe of this verſe, alludes to the wife's bringing forth the fruits of the womb to her huſband, which is one way of engaging his affections: See Gen. xxx. 20. The law was an impotent huſband, the Goſpel is fruitful. St. Paul viſibly in theſe words refers to ch. vi. 10. where he ſays, that Chriſt, in that he liveth, liveth unto God: and therefore he mentions here his being raiſed from the dead, as a reaſon for their bringing forth fruit unto God; that is, living to the ſervice of God;—obeying his will to the utmoſt of their power; which is the ſame with what is ſaid ch. viii. 11. Mr. Locke obſerves, that one thing which made the Jews ſo tenacious of the law was, that they looked upon it as a reward or bleſſing from God; and as a diſloyalty to him, their king, if they retained not the law he had given them. St. Paul endeavours to correct this miſtake by the inſtance of a woman marrying a ſecond huſband, the former being dead. It may be worth our notice, that St. Paul having all along, from the beginning of the chapter, and even in this very ſentence, ſaid ye; here, with neglect of grammar, on a ſudden changes it into we;—that we ſhould bring forth;—probably to preſs the argument the ſtronger, by ſhewing himſelf to be in the ſame circumſtances and concern with them; he being a Jew, as well as thoſe he ſpoke to. See Locke and Taylor.

Ver. 5. For when we were in the fleſh, &c.] The deſign of this chapter is to convince the Jews how unfavourable the law, in its rigor, is to the recovery and ſanctification of a ſinner; as it affords neither power to conquer ſin, nor the hope of pardon. And in this verſe St. Paul gives a general deſcription of the ſtate of a Jew in ſervitude to ſin, while under the law, which ſtate he comments upon from ver. 7. to the end of the chapter. Mr. Locke thinks, when we were in the fleſh, ſignifies, "when we underſtood the law in a literal ſenſe, and did not ſee its ſpiritual meaning." But this doth not ſeem ſo well to agree with the drift of the Apoſtle's diſcourſe, which has relation not to the errors of their judgement, but to the power of ſin in their hearts, and the condemnation to which by the law it ſubjected them. Beſides, to be in the fleſh, is uſed no where but in the next chapter, ver. 8. and there it manifeſtly ſignifies the ſame thing, as to be carnally-minded;—to be, or live after the fleſh. The words rendered motions of ſins, are literally, paſſions of ſins;—Παθήματα τῶν ἁμαρτιῶν, that is, ſinful paſſions, or luſts; for in the Scripture Greek, the genitive caſe of the ſubſtantive is often put for the adjective. Which were by the law, is a literal tranſlation of the words τὰ διὰ τȣ͂ νόμȣ, but leads the reader quite away from the Apoſtle's ſenſe; and is obliged to be ſupported by the interpreters who ſo underſtand it, by ſaying, that the law excited men to ſin by forbidding it. A ſtrange imputation upon the law of God; and ſuch as, if it were true, muſt make the Jews more defiled with the pollutions ſet down in St. Paul's black liſt, ch. i. than the heathens themſelves! But herein they will not find St. Paul of their ſentiments; who, beſides the viſible diſtinction wherewith he ſpeaks of the Gentiles all through his Epiſtles, doth alſo in this reſpect declare quite the contrary in the preſent chapter, ver. 7. See alſo 1 Pet. iv. 3, 4. If St. Paul's uſe of the prepoſition διὰ, a little backward in this very Epiſtle, were remembered, this and a ſimilar paſſage or two more in the preſent chapter, would not have ſo harſh and hard a cenſure put upon them as they have. Our tranſlators render τῶν πιςευόντων δι᾽ ἀκροβυςίας, them that believe, though they be not circumciſed: where they make δι᾽ ἀκροβυςίας to ſignify during the ſtate of, or during their being under uncircumciſion. If they had given the ſame ſenſe to διὰ νόμȣ here, which plainly ſignifies their being in a contrary ſtate, (that is, under the law;) and had rendered the paſſage, ſinful affections which they had, though they were under the law, the Apoſtle's ſenſe would have been eaſy, clear, and conformable to his general ſcope and deſign. This uſe of the word διὰ we may find in other Epiſtles of St. Paul. Τὰ διὰ τȣ͂ σώματος, 2 Cor. v. 10. may poſſibly with better ſenſe be underſtood of things done during the body, or during the bodily ſtate, than by the body; and ſo 1 Tim. ii. 15. διὰ τεκνογονίας, during the ſtate of child-bearing. Nor is this barely an helleniſtical uſe of διὰ; for the Greeks themſelves ſay δι᾽ ἡμέρας, during the day, and διὰ νυκτὸς, during the night; and ſo Epheſ. iii. 6. Διὰ τȣ͂ εὐαγγελίȣ, moſt probably ſhould be underſtood to ſignify, In the time of the Goſpel, or under the Goſpel diſpenſation. To bring forth fruit unto death, is oppoſed to bringing forth fruit unto God, the only Author of life, ver. 4. And therefore, the fruit which the Goſpel produces is living, and ſhall live for ever; but the fruit of ſin under the law, is, as we may ſay, ſtill-born,—is fruit unto death, or everlaſting deſtruction. Members in this clauſe, does not barely ſignify the fleſhy parts of the body, in a reſtrained ſenſe, but the animal faculties and powers; all in us that is employed as an inſtrument in thoſe works of the fleſh, which are reckoned up, Gal. v. 19—21. ſome of which do not require the members of our body, taken in a ſtrict ſenſe for the outward groſs parts, but only the faculties of our minds, for their performance. See Taylor, Locke, Pyle, and Vigerus.

Ver. 6. But now we are delivered, &c.] But now,—that is under the we ſhould ſerve in newneſs of ſpirit, and not in the oldneſs of the letter.

7 What ſhall we ſay then? Is the law ſin? God forbid! Nay, I had not known ſin, but by the law: for I had not known luſt, except the law had ſaid, Thou ſhalt not covet.

8 But ſin, taking occaſion by the commandment, wrought in me all manner of concupiſcence. For without the law ſin was dead.

9 For I was alive without the law once: but when the commandment came, ſin revived, and I died.

10 And the commandment which was ordained to life, I found to be unto death.

Ver. 6. Ch. ii. 29. 2 Cor. iii. 6.—V. 7. Ch. iii. 20. Or, concupiſcence. Exod. xx. 17. Deut. v. 21. Acts xx. 33.—V. 8 Ch. iv. 15. v. 20. 1 Cor. xv. 56.—V. 10. Lev. xviii. 5. Ezek. xx. 11, 13, 21. 2 Cor. iii. 7.

the Goſpel. Now is frequently uſed in this ſenſe;—which ſhould be well obſerved, as it may prove a key to many texts; however, here, as the Apoſtle had given in the foregoing verſe a ſummary account of the ſtate of the ſinner under the law, he gives us in this verſe a ſummary deſcription of the nature and deſign of the Goſpel: and this he reſumes and comments upon, ch. viii. 1—12. The Jews were held before Chriſt, in an obedience to the whole letter of the law, without minding the ſpiritual meaning, which pointed at Chriſt. This the Apoſtle calls here ſerving in the oldneſs of the letter; and this he tells them they ſhould now leave, as being freed from it by the death of Chriſt, who was the end of the law for the attaining of righteouſneſs, (ch. x. 4.) that is, in the ſpiritual ſenſe of it, which in 2 Cor. iii. 6. he calls ſpirit, and which ſpirit, ver. 16. he explains to be Chriſt. That chapter and the preſent verſe give light to one another. Serving in the newneſs of ſpirit, oppoſed as it is to the oldneſs of the letter, muſt ſignify, obeying the law ſo far as it is reviſed, and as it is explained in the Goſpel for the attaining of evangelical righteouſneſs. But for the further elucidation of this matter, it may be worth while to enquire, how far the law is aboliſhed, and how far not? I. The law is aboliſhed only in three reſpects. 1ſt, As it was a polity. God was the king of the Jewiſh nation, as much as any men are the kings and governors of other nations: and as the king of the Jewiſh nation, God delivered the law to them. By this means religion was incorporated into their civil government, and their polity was religious, and their religion political. But in this reſpect, the law to us Chriſtians is quite aboliſhed; religion under the Goſpel, is ſet upon its original bottom; ſtands entirely independant of all civil government, and is quite exempt from the authority and juriſdiction of the civil magiſtrate. 2dly, The law is alſo aboliſhed, as it was a diſpenſation of types and figures, wherein under earthly emblems, external rites or ceremonies, either moral duties, or the good things that were to come under the Goſpel, were ſhadowed and repreſented; the divine wiſdom judging this in thoſe times a proper means of inſtruction. But now this veil is done away, and we all with open face, as in a glaſs, behold the glory of the Lord. 3dly, The law, as it was the miniſtration of death, and ſubjected the tranſgreſſors of it to the curſe, and to condemnation, without affording any hope or remedy, is alſo happily aboliſhed. II. But on the other hand, the law of Moſes is not aboliſhed; firſt, as it contains the moral law, or law of nature: as ſuch it muſt ſtand under every diſpenſation—the Goſpel, as well as any other,—in its full force and extent; that is, requiring and obliging us, ſo far as our capacities reach, to perfect, ſinleſs obedience: for God can never require imperfect obedience, or by his holy law allow us to be guilty of any one ſin, how ſmall ſoever: and if the law, as a rule of duty, were in any reſpect aboliſhed, then we might in ſome reſpects tranſgreſs the law, and yet not be guilty of ſin. The moral law, or law of nature, is the truth, everlaſting and unchangeable, and therefore as ſuch, can never be abrogated. On the contrary, our Lord Jeſus Chriſt has promulgated this law anew under the Goſpel, and having added to its precepts the ſanction of his own divine authority, and the powerful and attractive motives of the law of God, and of his own love to mankind, with the brighteſt hopes and proſpects of eternal life, He has hereby enforced and ſecured the obſervance of it, infinitely beyond any thing the wiſeſt philoſophers ever could find in the law of nature, and far beyond any thing plainly and expreſly offered in the Moſaical conſtitution. See particularly the note on Epheſ. ii. 15. Secondly, Nor was the law of Moſes conſidered as political or ritual, directly repealed to the Jewiſh nation, as ſuch: (ſee on Epheſ. ii. 15. and Gal. ii. 11.) Thirdly, Nor is the law, as it is the miniſtration of death, ſo aboliſhed as never more to be in force. It is indeed ſo far aboliſhed, through the mercy of the law-giver, that although a man does tranſgreſs, yet is he not at preſent ſubjected for his tranſgreſſions to final wrath and condemnation, (though he may at preſent be ſo far involved in guilt, as to be nigh unto curſing, Heb. vi. 8.) but is allowed the favour of repentance and pardon; and if he continues ſincerely obedient, is ſure of eternal life, and ſhall never come into condemnation, or under the power of the law, for any of his paſt tranſgreſſions. This demonſtrates that no man in this world is under law, the covenant of works, or the broken law of works; for if we were now at any time under the broken law of works, then ſhould we be in a ſtate of final and eternal damnation, without hope or remedy, becauſe there now remains no more ſacrifice for ſins, Heb. x. 26—29. See 2 Cor. vi. 2. Heb. ii. 3. xii. 25. 1 Cor. xvi. 22. Thus we are to conceive of the death or abolition of the law, remembering that it was properly aboliſhed in any ſenſe only to the Jews; for the Gentiles were not under it, and therefore it cannot be ſaid to be aboliſhed to them, otherwiſe than as they were brought into the church, when this ſevere ſchool-maſter was removed out of it, and as it was removed partly in their favour. See Locke and Taylor.

Ver. 7. Is the law ſin?] Unrighteouſneſs?—as giving any allowance, or contributing any thing to ſin. See ver. 12. The ſkill which St. Paul uſes in dexterouſly avoiding, as much as poſſible, the giving offence to the Jews, is very viſible in the word I, in this verſe. In the beginning of the chapter, where he mentions their knowledge in the law, he ſays ye; in the 4th verſe, he joins himſelf with them and ſays we; but here, and ſo on to the end of the chapter, where he repreſents the power of ſin among the Jews, and the inability of their law to ſubdue it, He leaves them out, as it were, and ſpeaks altogether in the firſt perſon; though it is plain, he means all thoſe who were under the law. So ch. iii. 7. he uſes the ſingular pronoun I, when he evidently means the whole body of the unbelieving Jews. We may alſo obſerve here another maſterly ſtroke of honeſt art; namely, his demonſtrating the inſufficiency of the law, under colour of vindicating it. He knew the Jew would take fire at the leaſt reflection upon the law, which he held in the higheſt veneration; and therefore he very naturally introduces him, catching at that expreſſion, ver. 5. the motions of ſins, &c. "What! ſays he, do you vilify the law, by charging it with favouring ſin?"—"By no means, anſwers the Apoſtle. I am very far from charging the law with favouring ſin; the law is holy, and the commandment is holy, and juſt, and good;" ver. 12. Thus he writes in vindication of the law, and yet at the ſame time ſets forth its deficiency. Comp. the analyſis on the firſt verſe of this chapter. We have another inſtance of the ſame ingenious turn of writing, ch. xiii. 1—7. See Locke and Taylor. Dr. Waterland reads the ſecond clauſe of the verſe, by no means; but I ſhould not have known ſin, had it not been for the law, &c.

Ver. 8. Sin, taking occaſion, &c.] Taking advantage. MS. This is the proper ſignification of the word 'Αφορμη. Obſerve, in this and the three following verſes, the Apoſtle comments upon, or however explains thoſe words, 1 Cor. xv. 56. the ſting of death is ſin, and the ſtrength of ſin is the law; and thoſe alſo of this Epiſtle, ch. v. 13. ſin is not imputed when the law is not in being. Death, in a figurative way of ſpeaking, is repreſented as armed with a dreadful ſting; that ſting is ſin; but death would have no power to thruſt that ſting into the ſinner's heart, were it not for the law of God condemning him to death: for did not the law, or conſtitution of the law-giver, condemn him to death, he might, notwithſtanding his ſin, live forever, becauſe his ſin might from time to time be paſſed over. Therefore the law is the force, by which the terrible ſting is plunged into the ſinner's vitals: for without the law, ſin, the ſting of death, is itſelf dead, and quite unable to ſlay the ſinner. Hence it is that the Jew (ver. 9.) was alive without law once;—χωρὶς νόμου,—when law was ſet aſide; namely, before the giving of the law from Mount Sinai; for before the giving of the law, or the Sinai covenant, he was for the ſpace of 430 years under the Abrahamic covenant, or the covenant of grace by itſelf,—(Gal. iii. 16, 17.) without having the law ſubſiſting at the ſame time: for from the time Adam ſinned and broke the law, the law was not re-enacted till it was given by Moſes,—as appears from ch. v. 13, 14. The Jew was then alive, becauſe he was not under the law ſubjecting him to death for every tranſgreſſion; but when the commandment came, with the penalty of death annexed, ſin revived, and the Jew died. Then the ſting of death acquired life, and the Jew, upon the firſt tranſgreſſion, was dead in law. Thus ſin, the ſting of death, received force or advantage to deſtroy by the commandment; (ver. 8, 11.) and whereas it works concupiſcence in all men, and deceives all men, it wrought concupiſcence in the Jew, and deceived him under this ſingular and extraordinary circumſtance, of having received a deſtructive power from the law, and ſo rendered him a dead man in law; which was not the caſe of the reſt of mankind, who then were, as they had always been from the time of the promiſe, Gen. iii. 15. under the general covenant of grace, given firſt to Adam, and afterwards to Noah. The reader will obſerve, that the ſtreſs of the Apoſtle's affirmation lies in theſe words, having received force; becauſe he adds, for without law ſin is dead, which is manifeſtly giving the reaſon of ſin's receiving a deſtructive force by the commandment of the law. In me, is emphatical: "In me, diſtinguiſhed from other men who were not under the law." See Taylor, Doddridge, and Dunlop's Sermons, vol. ii. p. 46.

Ver. 10. Ordained to life] Intended for life. MS. See Levit. xviii. 5. Matth. xix. 7. The law, which was juſt, and such as it ought to be, in having the penalty of death annexed to every tranſgreſſion of it, (Gal. iii. 10.) came to produce death, by not being able ſo to remove the frailty of human nature, and ſubdue carnal appetites, as to keep men entirely free from all treſpaſſes againſt it, the leaſt whereof

11 For ſin, taking occaſion by the commandment, deceived me, and by it ſlew me.

12 Wherefore the law is holy; and the commandment holy, and juſt, and good.

13 Was then that which is good, made death unto me? God forbid! But ſin, that it might appear ſin, working death in me by that which is good; that ſin by the commandment might become exceeding ſinful.

14 For we know that the law is ſpiritual: but I am carnal, ſold under ſin.

15 For that which I do, I allow not: for what I would, that do I not; but what I hate, that do I.

16 If then I do that which I would not, I conſent unto the law, that it is good.

17 Now then it is no more I that do it, but ſin that dwelleth in me.

18 For I know, that in me (that is, in my fleſh,) dwelleth no good thing: for to will is preſent with me; but how to perform that which is good, I find not.

19 For the good that I would, I do not: but the evil which I would not, that I do.

20 Now if I do that I would not, it is no more I that do it, but ſin that dwelleth in me.

21 I find then a law, that when I would do good, evil is preſent with me.

Ver. 12. 1 Tim. i. 8.—V. 14. 1 Kings xxi. 20, 25. 1 Mac. i. 15.—V. 15. Gr. know. Gal. v. 17.—V. 18. Gen. vi. 5. viii. 21.

whereof by the law brought death. See chap. viii. 3. Gal. iii. 21. and Locke.

Ver. 11. For ſin, taking occaſion] "Sin taking the opportunity of my being under the law, ſlew me. See the note on ver. 5. Inſtead of deceived me, Mr. Locke reads inveigled me, and obſerves that St. Paul here ſeems to alluđe to what Eve ſaid in a like caſe, Gen. iii. 13. and he uſes the word rendered deceived, in the ſame ſenſe ſhe did; that is, drew me in.

Ver. 12. Wherefere the law is holy] In verſe 7. the Apoſtle laid down this poſition, "that the law was not ſin." In verſe 8. to 11. he proves it, by ſhewing that the law was very ſtrict in forbidding of ſin, ſo far as to reach the very mind, and the internal acts of concupiſcence; and that it was ſin remaining under the law, (which annexed death to every tranſgreſſion) that brought death on the Iſraelites.—He here infers, that the law was not ſinful, but righteous, juſt, and good; juſt ſuch as by the eternal rule of right it ought to be. Locke.

Ver. 13. Was then that which is good, &c.] This is an exact tranſlation of the text, according to the order of the words in the Greek. It may be thus paraphraſed: JEW,—"And yet you ſay, we were made ſubject to death by the commandment.—Could that which is good be made deadly to us?"—APOSTLE. "No, take me right: it was not the commandment itſelf which ſlew us, but ſin. It was ſin which ſubjected us to death, by the law juſtly threatening ſin with death. Which law was given us, that ſin might appear,—might be ſet forth in its proper colours, when we ſaw it ſubjected us to death by a law perfectly holy, juſt, and good; that ſin, by the commandment, or by the law, might be repreſented, what it really is, an exceeding great and deadly evil." Hence it is manifeſt that the Apoſtle here aſſigns the reaſon why the law was given to the Jews, not only as a rule of action, but alſo with a penalty of death annexed. The reaſon was, not to deſtroy the Jew, but to diſcover the true demerit of ſin, that it might appear to the ſinner's conſcience as an exceeding hateful and deſtructive evil. And indeed the law ſhould anſwer the ſame end to us now: though we are not under it, yet we ſhould thence learn the heinous nature of guilt, that we may dread iniquity, and be thankful to God for grace, and the benefit of pardon. See Taylor. Dr. Waterland, after Elſner, renders the verſe, Was then, &c.? No, by no means; but ſin was; and ſo ſin wrought death in me by that which is good; for that ſin by the commandment would become exceeding ſinful.

Ver. 14. But I am carnal] The Apoſtle is here demonſtrating the inſufficiency of the law, in oppoſition to the Goſpel; but if by I he meant himſelf, or any other perſon who had embraced the Goſpel, then his argument would prove the inſufficiency of the Goſpel, as well as of the law. The verſe may be paraphraſed thus: "For we all are agreed that the law is ſpiritual, requiring actions pure and rational, and quite oppoſite to thoſe which our carnal affections dictate. But I, the ſinner, am carnal, under the dominion of ſenſual appetite, and the habits of ſin, and for that reaſon condemned by the law: The fault is not in the law, but in me the ſinner, as appears from hence;—that which I do, I allow not, &c." ver. 15. Sold under ſin, implies a willing ſlavery, as Ahab had ſold himſelf to work evil, 1 Kings xxi. 20. and the Jews, Iſai. l. 1. Ye have ſold yourſelves to your iniquities: He does not mean that the ſinner is forced to ſin. Buying and ſelling are often uſed metaphorically in Scripture; where we are ſaid to buy, when we diligently uſe the proper means to gain knowledge and good habits; and to ſell, when we neglect and abandon ourſelves to ignorance and vice. See Iſai. lv. 1, 3. Prov. xxiii. 23. Matth. xiii. 45. 46. Rev. iii. 18. Deut. xxxii. 30.

Ver. 15. That which I do, I allow not, &c.] From ver. 7. to the preſent, the Apoſtle denotes the Jew in the fleſh by a ſingle I. Here he divides that I into two I's, or figurative perſons, repreſenting two different and oppoſite principles which were in him. The one I, or principle, aſſents to the law as good, and wills and chooſes what the other doth not practiſe. ver. 16. This principle he expreſly tells us, ver. 22. is the inward man,—the law of the mind, ver. 23; the mind, ver. 25, or rational faculty: for he could find no other inward man, or law of the mind, but the rational faculty, in a perſon who was in the fleſh, and ſold under ſin, or in ſervitude to ſin. The other I, or principle, tranſgreſſes the law, ver. 23. and doth thoſe things which the former principle allows not. This principle he expreſly tells us, ver, 18. is the fleſh, the law in the members, or ſenſual appetite, ver. 23. and he concludes in the laſt verſe, that theſe two principles were conſiſtent with each other. Therefore it is evident that thoſe two principles reſiding and counteracting each other in the ſame perſon, are reaſon, and luſt or ſin that dwells in us; and it is eaſy to diſtinguiſh the two I's or principles in every part of this elegant deſcription of iniquity, or the habits of luſt domineering over the light and remonſtrances of reaſon. For inſtance, ver. 17. Now then it is no more I that do it, but ſin that dwells, or reigns in me The I he ſpeaks of here is oppoſed to indwelling or governing ſin, and therefore plainly denotes the principle of reaſon; the inward man, or law of the mind. Theſe two different principles he calls, the one the fleſh, the other the ſpirit, Gal. v. 16, 17. where he ſpeaks of their contrariety in the ſame manner as he does here. And we may give a probable reaſon why the Apoſtle dwells ſo long upon the ſtruggle and oppoſition between thoſe two principles; it is moſt likely, to anſwer a tacit but very obvious objection. The Jew would alledge, "But the law is holy and ſpiritual, and I aſſent to it as good, as a right rule of action, which ought to be obſerved: yea, I eſteem it highly; I glory and reſt in it, convinced of its truth and excellence: and is not this enough to conſtitute the law a ſufficient principle of ſanctification?"—The Apoſtle anſwers, "No; wickedneſs is conſiſtent with a ſenſe of truth. A man may aſſent to the beſt rule of action, and yet ſhall be under the dominion of luſt and ſin: from which nothing can deliver him effectually, but a principle and power communicated from the fountain of life."—A heathen poet gives us a deſcription of the combat betwixt reaſon and paſſion, ſimilar to this of St. Paul's before us:

> My reaſon this, my paſſion that perſuades;
> I ſee the right, and I approve it too,
> Condemn the wrong, and yet the wrong purſue.
>
> HOR.

And I ſuppoſe it is with reference to this ſtruggle and contraſt that St. James repreſents wicked perſons under the character of doubleminded, ch. iv. 8. Mr. Locke, inſtead of I allow not, would render ȣ γινώσκω, by I know not; that is, "It is not from my own underſtanding, or any forecaſt of mine." The following words, which are a reaſon brought to prove the ſaying, give it this ſenſe. See his note, and Taylor.

Ver. 17. Sin that dwelleth in me] That is, reigneth in me. So God is ſaid to dwell among the Iſraelites, as their king and governor; Exod. xxv. 8. xxix. 45. Numb. xxxv. 34. Dwell, here and ver. 20. hath the ſame ſenſe in the language of the Jew, as reign or have dominion over, in the language of the Gentile; ch. vi. 12, 13, 14. Taylor.

Ver. 20. I would not] I, in the Greek, is very emphatical, and denotes the man in that part, which is chiefly to be counted himſelf; and therefore, with the like emphaſis, ver. 25. it is called αὐτὸς ἐγὼ, I myſelf; "I, the man, with all my full reſolution of mind." Αὐτὸς and ἐγὼ might have both of them been ſpared, if nothing more had been meant here than the nominative caſe to the verb δουλεύω, ſerve. Cicero has an expreſſion ſomewhat ſimilar, to denote the principal part in man;—Mens cujuſque, is eſt quiſque. This verſe ſeems no more than a repetition of ver. 17. but it is a graceful and expreſſive repetition, and ſhews how near the affair lay to the heart of the perſon thus complaining; and in what ſad and frequent ſucceſſions the complaints was renewed. The beautiful paſſage in the 6th book of Xenophon's Cyropedia, where Araſpas complains of two ſouls contending within him, (a paſſage which it is very poſſible St. Paul might have read,) contains an agreeable illuſtration of this portion of Scripture. See Locke, Doddridge, Wetſtein, and "the Spectator." Nº. 564.

22 For I delight in the law of God, after the inward man:

23 But I ſee another law in my members, warring againſt the law of my mind, and bringing me into captivity to the law of ſin, which is in my members.

24 O wretched man that I am! who ſhall deliver me from the body of this death?

25 I thank God, through Jeſus Chriſt our Lord. So then, with the mind I myſelf ſerve the law of God; but with the fleſh the law of ſin.

Ver. 22. 2 Cor. iv. 16. Epheſ. iii. 16. Col. iii. 9, 10.—V. 23. Gal. v. 17.—V. 24. Or, this body of death.

Ver. 23. Another law in my members] St. Paul having, in the foregoing verſe, ſpoken of the law of God as a principle of action, but yet ſuch as had not a power to rule and iufluence the whole man, ſo as to keep him quite clear from ſin,—He here ſpeaks of natural inclination, as of a law:—Alſo a law in the members, and a law of ſin in the members; to ſhew that it is a principle of operation in men even under the law, as ſteady and conſtant in its direction and impulſe to ſin, as the law is to obedience, and failed not through the frailty of the fleſh often to prevail. The Apoſtle here, as in the former chapter, uſes the word members for the lower faculties and affections of the animal man, which are as it were the inſtruments of action. Plato uſes the phraſe Ὁ ἐντὸς ἄνθρωπος for the rational part of our nature. See ver. 22. and Locke.

Ver. 24. Who ſhall deliver me, &c.?] What is it that St. Paul ſo pathetically deſires to be delivered from?—The ſtate he had been deſcribing was that of human weakneſs; wherein, notwithſtanding the law, even thoſe who were under it, and ſincerely endeavoured to obey it, were frequently carried by their carnal appetites into the breach of it. From this ſtate of frailty he knew that men could not be wholly delivered in this world; and therefore we may obſerve, it is not that, but the conſequence of it, death, or ſo much of it as brings death, from which he enquires after a deliverer. Who ſhall deliver me, ſays he, from this body of death?—He does not ſay of frailty, but of death.—"What ſhall hinder that my carnal appetites, which ſo often make me fall into ſin, ſhall not bring death upon me, which is awarded me by the law?"—And to this he anſwers, The grace of God, through our Lord Jeſus Chriſt. It is the favour of God alone, through Jeſus Chriſt, which delivers frail man from death. Thoſe under grace obtain life upon ſincere intentions and endeavours after obedience; and thoſe endeavours a man may doubtleſs exert in this ſtate of frailty. But good intentions, and ſincere endeavours, are of no behoof againſt death to thoſe under the law; which requires compleat and punctual obedience, but gives no ability to attain it: And ſo it is grace alone, through Jeſus Chriſt, which, accepting of what a frail man can do, delivers from the body of death: And thereupon he concludes with joy, "So then, I being now a Chriſtian, not any longer under the law, but under grace, this is the ſtate I am in, whereby I ſhall be delivered from death. I, with my whole bent and intention, devote myſelf to the law of God, in ſincere endeavour after obedience, though my carnal appetites are enſlaved to, and have their natural propenſity toward ſin." Locke. But ſee this interpretation controverted in the next note. It has been thought by ſome, that in the phraſe, Who ſhall deliver me, &c.? there is an alluſion to a cruelty, which is ſaid to have been practiced by ſome tyrants, on miſerable captives who fell into their hands; and whom they compelled to drag along with them, wherever they went, a dead carcaſe faſtened to their bodies.

Ver. 25. I thank God, &c.] The Clermont and other Greek MSS. which are followed by the Vulgate, read, The grace, or favour of God: "Nor can it be doubted, ſays Mr. Locke, but that this reading ſhould be followed, when we conſider, not only that the Apoſtle makes it his buſineſs to ſhew that the Jews ſtood in need of grace for ſalvation as much as the Gentiles; but alſo that the grace of God is a direct and poſitive anſwer to Who ſhall deliver me? which if we read I thank God, has no anſwer at all; a ſimilar omiſſion to which I do not remember in St. Paul's writings. This, I am ſure, it renders the paſſage obſcure and imperfect in itſelf; but much more diſturbs the ſenſe, if we obſerve the illative therefore, which begins the next verſe, and introduces a concluſion eaſy and natural, if the queſtion, Who ſhall deliver me? has for anſwer, The grace of God: Otherwiſe it would be hard to find premiſes from whence it could be drawn; For thus ſtands the argument plain and eaſy.—The law cannot deliver from the body of death; that is, from thoſe carnal appetites, which produce ſin, and ſo bring death; but the grace of God, through Jeſus Chriſt, [which not only gives ſtrength to endeavour, but] which pardons lapſes where there is ſincere endeavour after righteouſneſs, delivers us from this body, ſo that it doth not deſtroy us. From whence naturally reſults this concluſion, There is therefore now no condemnation, &c. ch. viii. 1. a chapter, which ſhould by no means have been ſeparated from the preſent, as it is in ſuch immediate connection with it. St. Paul ſays, I ſerve, or I make myſelf a vaſſal,—δουλεύω,—"I intend, and devote my whole obedience." The terms of life to thoſe under grace, he tells us at large, ch. vi. are "to become vaſſals to righteouſneſs and to God;" conſonantly whereto he ſays here, "I myſelf, I the man, being now a Chriſtian, and ſo no longer under the law, but under grace, do what is required of me in that ſtate. I become a vaſſal to the law of God; that is, dedicate myſelf to the ſervice of it, in ſincere endeavours of obedience; and ſo I, the man, ſhall be delivered from death; for he who, being under grace, makes himſelf a vaſſal to God, in a ſteady purpoſe of ſincere obedience, ſhall from Him receive the gift of eternal life; though his carnal appetite, which he cannot wholly get rid of, having its bent towards ſin, makes him ſometimes tranſgreſs: Which would be certain death to him, if he were ſtill under the law. (See ch. vi. 18, 22.) And thus St. Paul, having ſhewn here in this chapter, that the being under grace alone, without being under the law, is neceſſary even to the Jews,—as in the foregoing chapter he had ſhewn it to be to the Gentiles,—hereby demonſtratively confirms the Gentile converts in their freedom from the law; which is the ſcope of the Epiſtle thus far. So Mr. Locke. It is but juſt, however, to obſerve, that Dr. Taylor diſſents from the opinion of this great commentator, with regard to the latter part of this verſe. "I cannot agree with Mr. Locke, ſays he, that ſo then with the mind I myſelf ſerve the law of God, but with the fleſh the law of ſin, is to be underſtood of St. Paul, or any other good Chriſtian; becauſe ἄρα οὖν ſhews it is the grand inference from the whole preceding diſcourſe. Αὐτὸς ἐγὼ, may well be rendered the ſame I: as if he had ſaid, "The ſame perſon may find in himſelf two oppoſite principles; the one ſubſcribing to, and approving the law of God; and the other, notwithſtanding, bringing him into captivity to ſin. Serving the law of God, is not a ſtronger expreſſion than hating ſin, ver. 15. and delighting in the law of God, ver. 22. But thoſe expreſſions are applied to the Jew in the fleſh, or enſlaved with ſin; conſequently, ſo may ſerving the law of God. But ſerving with the fleſh the law of ſin, cannot well be applied to a true Chriſtian, or ſuch an one as St. Paul was, becauſe he walked not after the fleſh, but after the ſpirit, and is made free from the law of ſin in his members, and from death, the conſequent of ſin: ch. viii. 1, 2. See alſo ver. 8, 9. of that chapter, where it is ſaid, that they who are in the fleſh cannot pleaſe God; and it is pronounced of true Chriſtians, that they are not in the fleſh. The truth ſeems to be that the I, of whom the Apoſtle here ſaith αὐτὸς ἐγὼ, the ſame I, is manifeſtly the ἐγὼ, the I, ſpoken of in his preceding argumentation: And here, after a very lively touch upon the grace of redemption, he ſums up what he had proved, thus: "You are delivered from the dominion of ſinful luſts, and the curſe of the law; and obtain ſalvation, not by any ſtrength or favour which the law ſupplies, but by the grace of God in our Lord Jeſus Chriſt; for which we are bound to be ever thankful to him. To conclude; the ſum of what I have advanced, concerning the power of ſin in the ſenſual man, is this; namely, that the ſame perſon, in his inward man, his mind and reaſon, may aſſent to and approve the law of God; and yet, notwithſtanding, by his fleſhly appetites, may be brought under ſervitude to ſin." See on ch. viii. 1.

REFLECTIONS ON CHAP. VII.

There are few chapters in Sacred Scripture which have been more miſrepreſented or miſunderſtood, than that before us. We have endeavoured, by the aſſiſtance of the moſt able and impartial commentators we could meet with, to give its true and genuine meaning: And we obſerve further, in the words of one of them, that ſhould we be miſtaken in the ſenſe of any ſingle period in the chapter, yet ſurely the ſubject and drift of the Apoſtle's argument are evident beyond a doubt: Certainly he runs a compariſon between the law and Goſpel, with regard to the Jew in the fleſh. He here infallibly ſpeaks of the law, and of the ſtate of a ſinner under the law, which leaveth him enſlaved to ſin without help, and ſubjected to death without pardon. Then in ch. viii. he undeniably turns to the Goſpel, and ſhews what proviſion is there made for recovery from the bondage of ſin, to ſanctity and happineſs. Conſequently he cannot be ſuppoſed, by the wretched character above given, to deſcribe the ſtate of a Chriſtian, unleſs he can be ſuppoſed to repreſent the Goſpel as weak and defective as the law itſelf. For if, after faith in Chriſt, and ſuch obedience to him as we can now perform, the Chriſtian ſtill remains under the dominion of ſin and the condemnation of the law, (which is the true ſtate deſcribed in the above chapter) then the grace of God is of no uſe to us, nor are we any nearer to life, by being in Chriſt, and walking after the Spirit, according to our preſent abilities; but ſtill we want a new redemption, and ought to cry out, O wretched man!—who ſhall deliver us, &c.?

But here it may be objected,—"Are not even good and holy men attended with ſuch ſenſual appetites and affections, and therefore may we not very juſtly apply to them the Apoſtle's deſcription of a Jew in the fleſh?"—To this we anſwer, It is undoubtedly true, that even good and holy men are attended with various appetites and affections, and ſuch as will exerciſe vigilance, ſelf-denial, faith, and patience, while they are in the body. For this cauſe St. Paul kept his body under, and brought it into ſubjection, leſt that by any means, when he had preached to others, he himſelf ſhould be a caſt-away. But ſtill this will not juſtify us in applying what the Apoſtle ſaith here of the Jew in the fleſh, to true Chriſtians,—to good and holy men: Becauſe, though ſuch have, and while in this world will have, ſenſual luſts and affections to ſtruggle with, yet they are not ſuch as prevail, and bring them into captivity to ſin; for then they would loſe their character, and ceaſe to be good and holy men. They are not ſuch luſts as conquer them, but ſuch as they oppoſe, conquer, and mortify: And therefore it is falſe and injurious to true religion, to ſet them upon a level with the Jew here in the fleſh, who is ſuppoſed to be conquered, and brought into captivity to the law of ſin and death.

CHAP. VIII.

They that are in Chriſt, and live according to the Spirit, are free from condemnation. What harm cometh of the fleſh, and what good of the Spirit, and what of being God's children: whoſe glorious deliverance all things long for. It was beforehand decreed from God. What can ſever us from his love?

THERE is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Chriſt Jeſus, who walk not after the fleſh, but after the Spirit.

Ver. 1. Gal. v. 16, 25.

But it may be ſaid, "We find in Scripture, that ſometimes good men have fallen foully into ſin."—And what then? Doth it follow from thence that all good men are in the fleſh, carnal, and ſold under ſin,—that they are brought into captivity to the law of ſin and death?—Surely no: Good men have fallen into ſin; but their falling doth not denominate them good men, but their recovering themſelves again to repentance. For had they remained under the power of ſin,—carnal, and ſold under it, they would for ever have loſt the character of good men, and really have been in the wretched condition deſcribed by the Apoſtle in this chapter. All that we can learn from the faults of good men in Scripture is, that they are obnoxious to temptation, and may be overcome, if they are negligent and ſecure: And further, that through the mercy of God it is poſſible, he who hath ſinned may ſee the error of his way, and return to the obedience of the juſt. But we cannot from the faults of good men infer, that there is no difference between them and wicked men, who live habitually in ſin; or that David, when, in abhorrence of his crimes, he humbled himſelf before God, renounced and forſook them, was not a whit better as to the principle in his heart, but the ſame man as when he committed adultery and murder.

But the prophet ſaith, The heart is deceitful above all things, and deſperately wicked; who can know it? Jer. xvii. 9. To which we may anſwer, that Chriſtians, too generally neglecting the ſtudy of Scripture, content themſelves with a few ſcraps, which, though wrongly underſtood, they make the teſt of truth, and the ground of their principles, in contradiction to the whole tenor of revelation. Thus this text of Jeremiah hath been miſapplied, to prove that every man's heart is ſo deſperately wicked, that no man can know how wicked his heart is; whereas the Spirit is ſhewing the wretched error of truſting in man, ver. 5, 6. and the bleſſedneſs of truſt in God, ver. 7, 8. And then in ver. 9. he ſubjoins a reaſon which demonſtrates the error of truſting in man; The heart is deceitful, &c. "We cannot look into the hearts of thoſe we truſt: under great pretences of kindneſs, they may cover the blackeſt deſigns. But God, the univerſal judge, knows what is in every man, and can preſerve thoſe who truſt in him from the latent miſchievous counſels of the wicked and treacherous." ver. 10. I the Lord ſearch the heart, &c. This text therefore doth not relate to the difficulty which any man hath to know his own heart, but the hearts of thoſe in whom he may confide.

It may be further urged, "Do we not experience that we have corrupt and wicked hearts?—and that the Apoſtle's deſcription above given but too well ſuits what we find in ourſelves?"—We anſwer, Every man can beſt judge what he finds in himſelf: but if any man really finds his heart is corrupt and wicked, it is the duty of a miniſter of the Goſpel to exhort him earneſtly to uſe thoſe means, which the grace of God hath provided, for purifying ourſelves from all filthineſs of fleſh and ſpirit, and for perfecting holineſs; 2 Cor. vii. 1. Let ſuch a corrupt perſon, as he valueth the ſalvation of his ſoul, hear and learn the truth as it is in Jeſus, Epheſ. iv. 22. whereby he will be taught to to put off the old man, which is corrupt, according to the deceitful luſts, and to be renewed in the ſpirit of his mind.

To hear ſome Chriſtians talk, one would imagine they thought it their duty, and a mark of ſincerity and goodneſs, to be always complaining of corrupt and deſperately-wicked hearts, and conſequently that they ought to have, or in fact ſhould always have, ſuch hearts to complain of. But let no man deceive himſelf: a wicked heart, is too dangerous a thing to be trifled with.—I would not here be thought to diſcourage the humble ſentiments every man ſhould have of himſelf, under our preſent infirmities: but we may greatly wrong ourſelves by a falſe humility; and who ever carefully peruſeth the the New Teſtament will find, that however we are obliged to repent of ſin, a ſpirit of complaining and bewailing is not the ſpirit of the Goſpel; neither is it a rule of true religion, nor any mark of ſincerity, to have a corrupt heart, or to be always complaining of ſuch a heart. On the contrary, the Goſpel is intended to deliver us from all iniquity, and to purify us into a peculiar people zealous of good works, and to ſanctify us throughout in body, ſoul and ſpirit, that we may now be ſaints,—may now have peace and joy in the Holy Ghoſt, and at length be preſented without ſpot or blemiſh, before the preſence of God. This is the invariable ſenſe of revelation: nevertheleſs, it is manifeſtly true, that while we are in the body, we ſhall be exerciſed with the infirmities and paſſion thereof: but then this is not our corruption and wickedneſs, but the trial of our virtue and holineſs; and it is the real character of every true Chriſtian, not that he feels he hath a corrupt heart, but that he crucifieth the fleſh with the affections and luſts, and perfecteth holineſs in the fear of the Lord. Whatever is evil and corrupt in us we ought to condemn; not ſo, as that it ſhall ſtill remain in us, and that we may always be condemning it, but that we may ſpeedily reform, and be effectually delivered from it; otherwiſe, certainly we do not come up to the character of the diſciples of Jeſus Chriſt.

To give therefore a direct and final anſwer to the objection taken from the chapter before us, we may from thence gather, that we are very apt, in a world full of temptation, to be deceived and drawn into ſin by bodily appetites:—that when once we are under the government of theſe appetites, it is at leaſt exceeding difficult, if not impracticable, to recover ourſelves by the mere force of reaſon; conſequently, that we ſtand in need of that life-giving ſpirit, which the Apoſtle mentions, ch. viii. 2. And laſtly, That the caſe of thoſe who are under a law threatening death to every ſin, muſt be quite deplorable, if they have not relief from the mercy of the law-giver. Which ſad caſe, the Jews who adhered to the law, and rejected the Goſpel, choſe for themſelves. But we cannot from any thing in this chapter infer, that we came into the world infected and depraved with ſinful diſpoſitions conveyed down to us from Adam, as the effect of his ſin;—(for the Apoſtle gives not the leaſt intimation of any thing relating to Adam, or the corruption of our nature in and by him)—nor that any man ſinneth neceſſarily, or is unavoidably made a ſinner, through the malignant influence of ſome principle, which it was never in his power to command; for then he need be no ſinner at all. Much leſs can we infer, that the Apoſtle is deſcribing his own caſe, or the caſe of any upright Chriſtian; though it be true, that he had, and that all upright Chriſtians, while in the body, have ſenſual paſſions to reſiſt and mortify. But then, as they are in Chriſt, it is their real character, that they do reſiſt and mortify, not that they are overcome and brought into captivity by them,—which is the ſad caſe and character deſcribed in the above chapter, and which character, if it is finally our own, we ſhall undoubtedly periſh.

We have been the longer in our Reflections upon this paſſage of Scripture, in order to free Chriſtians from a dangerous ſtate into which, it is to be feared, many have fallen, who from hence have concluded, that they might by their luſts be hindered from doing that good which they are convinced is their duty, and by the law in their members might be brought into ſervitude to the law of ſin;—and yet, as to their ſpiritual ſtate, be in as good a condition as St. Paul himſelf: a perſuaſion, which manifeſtly tends to give us too favourable an opinion of the workings of criminal affections, to make us remiſs in mortifying them, to encourage us to venture too far in ſenſual indulgences, and to lull conſcience aſleep, when we are fallen under their dominion; Or, if a better mind preſerveth a man from theſe worſt conſequences of this miſtake, yet ſo long as it remains, he muſt rob himſelf of due encouragement to pious induſtry, and a chearful progreſs in the Chriſtian courſe. For after all his upright endeavours, he will imagine he maketh very ſmall or no advances in a religious life:—ſtill he is but where he was, ſtill carnal and ſold under ſin;—ſtill under the worſt of habits, and in the moſt wretched condition.

To make this good, common infirmities are magnified into the blackeſt crimes; and even imaginary corruption and guilt—inbred corruption, and the guilt of Adam's ſin are admitted, to diſquiet the conſcience: and ſuch untoward ſentiments cannot fail to enfeeble hope, love, and joy. The Goſpel is glad tidings of great joy, which introduce a bleſſed, glorious, lively hope, give us the moſt pleaſing ſentiments of the divine love, inſpire a comfort and peace far ſuperior to all temporal enjoyments, and expreſly require us to rejoice in the Lord,—and to hold faſt the confidence of hope.—But what room can there be in our breaſts for joy and hope, if we ſtill conceive ourſelves to be in a ſtate which the Scripture every where condemns?—If we are ſtill carnal and ſold under ſin, how can we lift up a chearful face towards heaven?—In ſhort, we muſt be deſtitute of every comfort reſulting from a heart purified by the faith of Jeſus, and remain under gloomy doubts and fears, which no marks or evidences of grace and ſanctification can diſſipate or remove. See Taylor.

Chap. VIII. Ver. 1. There is therefore now] Ἄρα νῦν:—Ἄρα here, is not illative, but ſtrongly affirmative;—nempe, utique, ſee Matth. xii. 28. Luke xi. 48. xviii. 8. Now, is "under the Goſpel." This carries our thoughts back to ver. 6. of the foregoing chapter; which verſe the Apoſtle comments upon in the eleven firſt verſes of this chapter, and theſe verſes ſhew the Chriſtian Jew how he is obliged under the Goſpel to ſanctity of life, and correſpond to the eleven firſt verſes of the ſixth chapter, where he ſhews the ſame thing to the Gentile Chriſtian. Conformably to the ſubject upon which the Apoſtle is diſcourſing, no condemnation muſt be underſtood in an extenſive ſenſe; ſo as to include not only a diſcharge from the condemnation of the law, but alſo a deliverance from the ſlavery of ſin. The Apoſtle affirms the ſame thing, Gal. v. 18. as that which he advances in this verſe: But if ye be led by the Spirit, ye are not under the law; that is to ſay, "Ye are quite diſcharged from the condemnation of the law, and ſhall live eternally." Πνεῦμα, Spirit, certainly is not uſed in the ſame ſenſe throughout this chapter; In ver. 10, 16. it ſignifies the Spirit of our mind; (as Acts vii. 59. xvii. 16. xviii. 5, 25. Rom. i. 9. xii. 11. Gal. v. 17.) the ſupreme part of our conſtitution, or the principle of reaſon, by which we diſcern, approve, and chooſe the truth; and thus it anſwers to νοῦς, mind, in the foregoing chapter, ver. 25. But ver. 9, 11, 16, 26, 27. it ſignifies that heavenly being or agent, which we call the Holy Ghoſt, poured out upon the Apoſtles, and

2 For the law of the Spirit of life, in Chriſt Jeſus, hath made me free from the law of ſin and death.

3 For what the law could not do, in that it was weak through the fleſh, God ſending his own Son in the likeneſs of ſinful fleſh, and for ſin condemned ſin in the fleſh:

4 That the righteouſneſs of the law might be fulfilled in us, who walk not after the fleſh, but after the Spirit.

5 For they that are after the fleſh, do mind the things of the fleſh; but they that are after the Spirit, the things of the Spirit.

6 For to be carnally minded, is death; but to be ſpiritually minded, is life and peace:

7 Becauſe the carnal mind is enmity againſt God: for it is not ſubject to the law of God, neither indeed can be.

Ver. 2. John viii. 36. Ch. vi. 18, 22. Gal. ii. 19. v. 1. 1 Cor. xv. 45. 2 Cor. iii. 6.—V. 3. Or, by a ſacrifice for ſin.—V. 5. 1 Cor. ii. 14. Gal. v. 25.—V. 6. Ch. vi. 21. Gal. vi. 8. Gr. the minding of the fleſh: So ver. 7. Gr. the minding of the Spirit.—V. 7. Gr. the minding of the fleſh. 1 Cor. ii. 14.

ſent to enlighten and ſanctify thoſe who deſire to live ſoberly, righteouſly, and godly. In the other places of this chapter, the ſenſe is not ſo evident and certain. See ver. 13. The verſe before us may be paraphraſed thus: "Under the weak and lifeleſs diſpenſation of the law, the ſinner remains, as we have ſhewn above, in a deplorable ſtate, without help or hope, enſlaved to ſin, and ſentenced to death. But now, under the Goſpel, the moſt encouraging hopes ſmile upon us, and we have the higheſt aſſurance that all thoſe who embrace the Chriſtian faith, notwithſtanding former tranſgreſſions, are quite diſcharged from the penalty of the law, and diſengaged from the ſervitude of ſin; if ſo be they make that faith a principle of obedience, and do not chooſe to live in wickedneſs, according to the inſtigation of fleſhly appetite; but in truth and holineſs, according to the dictates of the inward man, or the rational faculty, &c." See Locke, Taylor, and Bengelius. Dr. Waterland, obſerving that the words but after the Spirit, are wanting in many MSS. and verſions, reads, no condemnation to them who walk in Chriſt Jeſus, not after the fleſh.

Ver. 2. For the law of the Spirit of life] "The grace of God, which is effectual to life." That it is grace which delivers from the law in the members, that law of death, is evident from ch. vii. 23—25. Why it is called a law, may be found in the antitheſis to the law of ſin and death; grace being as certain a law to give life to Chriſtians, who live not after the fleſh, as the influence of ſinful appetites is to bring death on thoſe who are not under grace. The reaſon why it is called the law of the Spirit of life is, that the Goſpel which contains this doctrine of grace is dictated by the ſame Spirit that raiſed up Chriſt from the dead; that quickens us to newneſs of life, and has for its end the conferring of eternal life. By the law of ſin and death is meant, that which he calls the law in his members, ch. vii. 23. where it is termed the law of ſin; and ver. 24. the body of death, from which grace delivers. This is certain, that no body who conſiders what St. Paul has ſaid, ver. 7, and 13. of the foregoing chapter, can think that he can call the law of Moſes the law of ſin, or the law of death. Locke.

Ver. 3. For what the law could not do, &c.] For this the law not being able to effect, &c. Wat. The weakneſs, and as he there alſo calls it, the unprofitableneſs of the law, is again taken notice of by the Apoſtle, Heb. vii. 18, 19. There were two defects in the law, whereby it became unprofitable, ſo as to make nothing perfect; the one was its inflexible rigour, againſt which it provided no allay, or mitigation. It left no place for atonement; the leaſt ſlip was mortal; death was the inevitable puniſhment of tranſgreſſion, by the ſentence of the law. St. Paul's Epiſtles are full of this; and he ſhews, Heb. x. 5, 10. how we are delivered from it by the body of Chriſt. The other weakneſs or defect of the law was, that it could not enable thoſe who were under it to get the maſtery over their fleſh, or carnal propenſities, ſo as to perform the obedience required: the law exacted complete obedience, but afforded men no help againſt their frailty or vicious inclinations. St. Paul ſhews here how they are delivered from this dominion of ſin in their mortal bodies, by the Spirit of Chriſt enabling them, upon their ſincere endeavours after righteouſneſs, to keep ſin under in their mortal bodies; in conformity to Chriſt, in whoſe fleſh it was condemned, executed, and perfectly extinct, having never had there any life or being,—as we ſhall obſerve more fully by and by. The proviſion made in the new covenant againſt both theſe defects of the law, is in the Epiſtle to the Hebrews expreſſed thus: Firſt, he will write his law in their hearts; and, ſecondly, he will be merciful to their iniquities. Heb. viii. 7—12. And for ſin, περὶ ἁμαρτίας, ſignifies an offering for ſin, as the margin of our Bible has it. See 2 Cor. v. 21. Heb. x. 5—10. So that the plain import is, "God ſending his own ſon in the likeneſs of ſinful fleſh,—[like unto our frail ſinful fleſh in all things except ſin, Heb iv. 15.] and ſending him to be an offering for ſin, hath condemned ſin, &c." Thus, with very good ſenſe, the manner and end of his ſending are joined. The proſopopœia whereby ſin was conſidered as a perſon through the foregoing chapter being continued here, the condemning of ſin in the fleſh cannot mean, as ſome would have it, that Chriſt was condemned for ſin, or in the place of ſin; for that would be to ſave ſin, and leave that alive which Chriſt came to deſtroy. But the plain meaning is, that ſin itſelf was condemned, or put to death, in his fleſh; that is, was ſuffered to have no life or being in the fleſh of our Saviour: He was in all points tempted as we are, yet without ſin. By the Spirit of God, the motions of the fleſh were ſuppreſſed in him; ſin was cruſhed in the egg, and could never faſten in the leaſt upon him. This further appears to be the ſenſe by the following words: The antitheſis between condemnation, ver. 1. and condemned here, will alſo ſhew why that word is uſed to expreſs the death or non-exiſtence of ſin in our Saviour. 2 Cor. v. 2. 1 Pet. ii. 22. That St. Paul ſometimes uſes condemnation for putting to death, See ch. v. 16, 18. To what has been advanced in this note, it may be urged, "Had not the Jews, before Chriſt came, the aſſiſtances of the Spirit, and ſufficient means and motives to deliver them from the power of ſin?" To which we reply, Certainly they had; as appears particularly from the Pſalms and prophetic writings: yea, all mankind, ſince the promiſe, Gen. iii. 15. in all ages and parts of the world, have been, and ſtill are under grace; grace founded upon the redemption which is in Chriſt; and therefore always had, and ſtill have the benefit of divine aſſiſtance, however they may have neglected or abuſed it. But the Apoſtle is here conſidering the aſſiſtances enjoyed, under the then newly-erected diſpenſation of the Goſpel, (which in means and motives far exceeds all others,) and with particular regard to the Jew; and upon a compariſon with the law, in which he reſted for every thing, to ſhew the preference of the Goſpel to mere law;—as appears from the foregoing chapter: Where he at large ſhews the Jew the inſufficiency of mere law, or a rule of duty, to deliver a man from the habits of vice; though the inſtructions here given to the Jew concerning the ſuperior advantages of the Goſpel for ſanctification, would be of uſe to the Gentile convert; as his diſcourſe to the Gentile, ch. vi. concerning our obligation to holineſs, would be of ſervice to the Jew, ſo far as either ſhould need inſtruction upon thoſe heads. See Locke, Taylor, and Whitby.

Ver. 4. That the righteouſneſs of the law, &c.] Δικαίωμα, righteouſneſs, here ſeems to be uſed in the moſt extenſive ſenſe, and may ſignify both moral righteouſneſs, and the conſequence of it, ſalvation; as ch. v. 16. The Goſpel frees thoſe from ſin who chooſe to be free, which was more than the law, mere law, could do. Law neither grants pardon, nor ſupplies help: but yet the Goſpel doth not free thoſe from ſin, who wickedly chooſe to remain under the dominion of it; for a willing ſlave, determined to continue in ſervitude, who can free? The Apoſtle demonſtrates, in the four next verſes, that under any diſpenſation, ſuch as continue impenitently in a ſenſual life, muſt periſh; and he inſiſts ſo particularly upon this, probably either to prevent a miſtake,—for ſome might be ſo weak as to imagine, that a mere profeſſion of Chriſtianity would ſecure them from the power of ſin;—or to obviate an objection the Jew might be ready to make. He might alledge; "but there are wicked men under the Goſpel, as well as under the law:"—The Apoſtle anſwers, "Men who chooſe to continue under the power of ſin and luſt, according to the true nature of things, muſt periſh under every diſpenſation. God provides proper means under the Goſpel to deliver them from a wicked life, and to bring them to true holineſs; but he cannot either force them to be holy, or love them if they are wicked." It may be proper to obſerve, that fulfilled here does not ſignify a complete, exact obedience; but ſuch an unblameable life, by ſincere endeavours after righteouſneſs, as ſhews us to be the faithful ſubjects of Chriſt, exempt from the dominion of ſin. See Gal. vi. 2. We have a deſcription of ſuch as fulfilled the righteouſneſs of the law, Luke i. 6. As Chriſt in the fleſh was wholly exempt from all taint of ſin, ſo we, by that ſpirit which was in him, ſhall be exempt from the dominion of our carnal luſts, if we make it our choice and endeavour to live after the Spirit, ver. 9—11. For what we are to perform by that Spirit, is the mortification of the body. See ver. 13. Gal. v. 16—26. Taylor, Locke, and Peters on Job, p. 281.

Ver. 6. For to be carnally-minded is death] For joins what follows to ver. 1. as the reaſon of what is here laid down; namely, that deliverance from condemnation is to ſuch Chriſtian converts only, as walk not after the fleſh, but after the Spirit:—For, &c. Locke.

Ver. 7. The carnal mind] Φρόνημα της σαρκος ſhould have been tranſlated here to be carnally-minded, as it is in the foregoing verſe; which is juſtified by φρονοῦσι τὰ της σαρκος, do mind the things of the fleſh, ver. 5. which ſignifies the employing the bent of their minds, or ſubjecting their mind intirely to the fulfilling the luſts of the fleſh. See 1 Cor. ii. 14. The Apoſtle, in the next clauſe, gives the reaſon why even thoſe who are in Chriſt Jeſus, who have received the Goſpel, and are Chriſtians,—for to ſuch he is here ſpeaking,—are not ſaved, unleſs they ceaſe to walk after the fleſh; becauſe that runs directly counter to the law of God, and can never be brought into conformity and ſubjection to his commands. Such a ſettled contradiction to his precepts cannot be ſuffered by the ſupreme Lord and Governor of the world in any of his creatures, without foregoing

8 So then they that are in the fleſh, cannot pleaſe God.

9 But ye are not in the fleſh, but in the Spirit, if ſo be that the Spirit of God dwell in you. Now if any man have not the Spirit of Chriſt, he is none of his.

10 And if Chriſt be in you, the body is dead, becauſe of ſin; but the Spirit is life, becauſe of righteouſneſs.

Ver. 9. 1 Cor. iii. 16. John iii. 34. Gal. iv. 6. Phil. i. 19. 1 Pet. i. 11.

his ſovereignty, and giving up the eternal immutable rule of right, to the ſubverting the very foundations of all order and moral rectitude in the intellectual world. This, even in the judgement of men themſelves, will be always thought a neceſſary piece of juſtice for the keeping out of anarchy, diſorder, and confuſion; that thoſe refractory ſubjects, who ſet up their own inclinations for their rule againſt the law, which was made to reſtrain thoſe very inclinations, ſhould feel the ſeverity of the law, without which, the authority of the law and the law-maker cannot be preſerved. Locke.

Ver. 8. So then they that are in the fleſh, &c.] This is the concluſion drawn from what went before; and in the fleſh here, muſt mean the ſame as to be carnally-minded, &c. above;—to be under the government of ſenſual appetites. See Gal. iv. 3—6.

Ver. 9. But ye are not in the fleſh, &c.] Now ye are not, &c. Becauſe the Spirit of God, &c. MS. The meaning is not that this was abſolutely and in fact their caſe, (for in ver. 13. he ſuppoſes they might in fact live after the fleſh;) but that they were furniſhed with the moſt proper and efficacious means of being freed from the prevalency of fleſhly luſts, and of gaining true purity of mind. See on ch. vi. 2—11. Εἴπερ, rendered if ſo be, may here ſtand for ἐπειδήπερ, as it does 2 Theſſ. i. 6. Have, in the laſt clauſe, is emphatical, and ſignifies to retain, to fix in the mind as a principle,—duly to improve. Comp. 1 John v. 12. 2 John 9. the note on ch. xiv. 22. and Taylor.

Ver. 10, 11. And if Chriſt be in you] But if Chriſt, &c.—with reſpect to ſin—with reſpect to righteouſneſs. MS. In theſe verſes the Apoſtle deſcribes the happy advantages of thoſe who embrace the faith of the Goſpel, and live according to it. Firſt, their ſpiritual life is ſure, and ſhall be maintained by the increaſe of holineſs, ver. 10. Secondly, their eternal life is ſure, becauſe God will raiſe them to the poſſeſſion of it at the laſt day: ver. 11. Δὶ ἁμαρτίαν may be properly rendered, as by the MS.—in reſpect of, or with reference to ſin. This determines what ſort of death he is ſpeaking of, namely, a moral death; as if he had ſaid: "The body, or the members thereof, are mortified, as the power of luſt is deſtroyed." Shall quicken your mortal bodies, v. 11. means, "ſhall raiſe them to eternal life." Good men are the ſons of the reſurrection, Luke xx. 36. as it introduces them into eternal life. See John vi. 39. It ſeems clear that this refers to the reſurrection at the laſt day, for theſe reaſons: Firſt, Becauſe the reſurrection of Chriſt is twice mentioned in this verſe, as a pledge of our being made to live. Secondly, Becauſe our being made to live is aſſigned to God as his act, on account of our being under the government of his Holy Spirit, or our being already quickened to a ſpiritual life of righteouſneſs. If the Spirit of God dwell, or govern in you, God will quicken your mortal bodies, on account, or by the agency of his Spirit, that dwelleth in you. "And therefore, ſays Dr. Taylor, the quickening of our mortal bodies, or making them to live, cannot mean, (as Mr. Locke ſuppoſes in his long note upon this verſe) our being quickened to newneſs of life, or to a ſpiritual life of righteouſneſs; which life it preſuppoſes, and which the Apoſtle hath ſpoken of in the foregoing verſe. The revival or reſurrection of the body is frequently put for our advancement to eternal life." See ver. 23. Taylor, and Doddridge. Mr. Locke would read, Shall quicken even your mortal bodies; and though perhaps the foregoing interpretation of this verſe is a true one, yet it ſeems but juſtice to the reader, and to that learned commentator, to ſubjoin what he hath advanced in defence of a different expoſition: "To lead us, ſays he, into the true ſenſe of this 11th verſe, we need only obſerve, that St. Paul having in the four firſt chapters of this Epiſtle ſhewn that neither Jew nor Gentile could be juſtified by the law; and in the 5th chapter how ſin entered into the world by Adam, and reigned by death, from which it was grace, and not the law, that delivered men: In the 6th chapter he ſheweth the convert Gentiles, that though they were not under the law, but under grace, yet they could not be ſaved, unleſs they caſt off the dominion of ſin, and became the devoted ſervants of righteouſneſs, which was what their very baptiſm taught and required of them. And in chap. vii. he declares to the Jews the weakneſs of the law, which they ſo much ſtood upon; and ſhews that the law could not deliver them from the dominion of ſin; that deliverance was only by the grace of God, through Jeſus Chriſt: from whence he draws the conſequence which begins this 8th chapter, and ſo goes on with it here in two branches, relating to his diſcourſe in the foregoing chapter, which compleat it in this. The one is to ſhew, that the law of the ſpirit of life, i. e. the new covenant in the Goſpel, required that thoſe that are in Chriſt Jeſus ſhould live not after the fleſh, but after the Spirit. The other is to ſhew how, and by whom,—ſince the law was weak, and could not enable thoſe under the law to do it,—they are enabled to keep ſin from reigning in their mortal bodies, which is the ſanctification required. And here he ſhews, that Chriſtians are delivered from the dominion of their carnal ſinful luſts by the Spirit of God that is given to them, and dwells in them, as a new quickening principle and power, by which they are put into the ſtate of a ſpiritual life, wherein their members are made capable of being the inſtruments of righteouſneſs, if they pleaſe, as living men alive now to righteouſneſs, ſo to employ them. If this be not the ſenſe of this chapter to ver. 14. I deſire to know how ἄρα οὖν, in the firſt verſe, comes in, and what coherence there is in what is here ſaid. Beſides the connection of this to the former chapter, contained in the illative therefore, the very antitheſis of the expreſſions in one and the other, ſhew that St. Paul, in writing this very verſe, had an eye to the foregoing chapter. There it was Sin that dwelleth in me, which was the active and over-ruling principle: Here it is The Spirit of God that dwelleth in you, which is the principle of ſpiritual life. There it was, Who ſhall deliver me from this body of death? Here it is, God by his Spirit ſhall quicken your mortal bodies; i. e. bodies, which as the ſeat and harbour of ſinful luſts that poſſeſs them, are indiſpoſed and dead to the actions of a ſpiritual life, and have a natural tendency to death. In the ſame ſenſe, and upon the ſame account, he calls the bodies of the Gentiles, their mortal bodies, ch. vi. 12. where his ſubject is, as here, freedom from the reign of ſin; upon which account they are there ſtiled, ver. 13. Alive from the dead. To make it yet clearer that it is deliverance from the reign of ſin in our bodies, that St. Paul ſpeaks of here, I deſire any one to read what he ſays, ch. vi. 1—14. to the Gentiles on the ſame ſubject, and compare it with the thirteen firſt verſes of this chapter; and then tell me, whether they have not a mutual correſpondence, and do not give a great light to one another? If this be too much pains, let him at leaſt read the two next verſes, and ſee how they could poſſibly be, as they are, an inference from this 11th verſe, if the quickening of your mortal bodies in it mean any thing, but a quickening to newneſs of life, or to a ſpiritual life of righteouſneſs. This being ſo, I cannot but wonder to ſee a late learned commentator and paraphraſt poſitive, that ζωοποιήσει τα θνητὰ σώματα υμων, ſhall quicken your mortal bodies, does here ſignify, ſhall raiſe your dead bodies out of the grave, as he contends in his preface to his paraphraſe on the Epiſtles to the Corinthians. Ζωοποιεῖν, quicken, he ſays imports the ſame with ἐγείρειν, raiſe. His way of proving it is very remarkable; his words are "Ζωοποιεῖν and ἐγείρειν, are as to this matter [viz. the reſurrection] words of the ſame import; i. e. where, in diſcourſing of the reſurrection, ζωοποιεῖν, quicken, is uſed, it is of the ſame import with ἐγειρεῖν, raiſe." But what if St. Paul, (which is the queſtion) be not here ſpeaking of the reſurrection? why then, according to our author's own confeſſion, ζωοποιεῖν, quicken, does not neceſſarily import the ſame with ἐγείρειν, raiſe. So that his argument to prove that St. Paul here, by the words in queſtion, means the raiſing of their dead bodies out of the grave, is but a fair begging of the queſtion; which is enough, I think, for a commentator that hunts out of his way for controverſy. He might therefore have ſpared the ζωοποιεῖ, quicken, which he produces out of St. John v. 21. as of no force to his purpoſe, till he had proved that St. Paul here in Rom. viii. 11. was ſpeaking of the reſurrection of mens bodies out of the grave; which he will never do, till he can prove that θνητὰ, mortal, here ſignifies the ſame with νεκρὰ, dead. And I demand of him to ſhow θνητὸν, mortal, any where in the New Teſtament attributed to any thing void of life: Θνητὸν, mortal, always ſignifies the thing it is joined to, to be living; ſo that ζωοποιήσει καὶ τὰ θνητὰ σώματα ὑμῶν, ſhall quicken even your mortal bodies, in that learned author's interpretation of theſe words of St. Paul, here ſignify, God ſhall raiſe to life your living dead bodies; which no one can think,—in the ſofteſt terms can be given to it,—a very proper way of ſpeaking; though it be very good ſenſe, and very emphatical to ſay, God ſhall by his Spirit put into even your mortal bodies a principle of immortality, or ſpiritual life, which is the ſenſe of the Apoſtle here. (See Gal. vi. 8.) and he may find ζωοποιῆσαι uſed, Gal. iii. 21. to the ſame purpoſe. I next deſire to know of this learned writer, how he will bring in the reſurrection of the dead at this place, and ſhew what coherence it has with St. Paul's diſcourſe here; and how he can join this verſe with the immediately preceding and following, when the words under conſideration are rendered, Shall raiſe your dead bodies out of their graves at the laſt day? It ſeems as if he himſelf found this would make but an aukward ſenſe, ſtanding in this place with the reſt of St. Paul's words here; and ſo never attempted it by any ſort of paraphraſe, but has barely given us the Engliſh tranſlation to help us, as it can, to ſo uncouth a meaning; which muſt make St. Paul, in the midſt of a very ſerious, ſtrong, and coherent diſcourſe, concerning the walking not after the fleſh, but after the Spirit, ſkip of a ſudden into the mention of the reſurection of the dead; and having juſt mentioned it, ſkip back again into his former argument. But I take the liberty to aſſure him, that St. Paul has no ſuch ſtarts from the matter he has in hand, to what gives no light or ſtrength to his preſent argument. I think there is not any where to be found a more pertinent cloſe arguer, who has his eye always on the mark he drives at. This men would find, if they would ſtudy him as they ought, with more regard to divine authority than to hypotheſes of their own, or to opinions of the ſeaſon. I do not ſay that he is every where clear in his expreſſions, to us now: But I do ſay, he is every where a coherent pertinent writer; and wherever, in his commentators and interpreters, any ſenſe is given to his words, that disjoints his diſcourſe, deviates from his argument, or looks like a wandering thought, it is eaſy to know whoſe it is, and whoſe the impertinence; his, or theirs that father it on him. One thing more the text ſuggeſts concerning this matter, and that is, If by quickening your mortal bodies, &c. be meant here, the raiſing them into life after death, how can this be mentioned as a peculiar favour to thoſe who have the ſpirit of God?

For

11 But if the Spirit of him that raiſed up Jeſus from the dead dwell in you, he that raiſed up Chriſt from the dead, ſhall alſo quicken your mortal bodies, by his Spirit that dwelleth in you.

12 Therefore, brethren, we are debtors, not to the fleſh, to live after the fleſh.

13 For if ye live after the fleſh, ye ſhall die: but if ye through the Spirit do mortify the deeds of the body, ye ſhall live.

14 For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the ſons of God.

15 For ye have not received the ſpirit of bondage again to fear; but ye have received the Spirit of adoption, whereby we cry, Abba, Father.

16 The Spirit itſelf beareth witneſs with our ſpirit, that we are the children of God:

Ver. 11. Acts ii. 24. Ch. vi. 4, 5. 1 Cor. vi. 14. 2 Cor. iv. 14. Epheſ. ii. 5. Or, becauſe of his Spirit.—V. 13. Gal. vi. 8. Epheſ. iv. 22. Col. iii. 5.—V. 14. Gal. v. 18.—V. 15. 1 Cor. ii. 12. 2 Tim. i. 7. Iſai. lvi. 5. Gal. iv. 5, 6. Mark xiv. 36.—V. 16. 2 Cor. i. 22. v. 5. Epheſ. i. 13. iv. 30.

For God will alſo raiſe the bodies of the wicked, and as certainly as thoſe of believers. But that which is promiſed here, is promiſed to thoſe only who have the Spirit of God: And therefore it muſt be ſomething peculiar to them, (viz.) that God ſhall ſo enliven their mortal bodies by his Spirit, which is the principle and pledge of immortal life, that they may be able to yield up themſelves to God, as thoſe that are alive from the dead, and their members ſervants to righteouſneſs unto holineſs; as he expreſſes himſelf, ch. vi. 13. and 19. If any one can yet doubt whether this be the meaning of St. Paul here, I refer him for farther ſatisfaction to St. Paul himſelf, in Eph. xi. 4—6. where he will find the ſame notion of St. Paul expreſſed in the ſame terms; but ſo, that it is impoſſible to underſtand by ζωοποιεῖν or ἐγείρειν, (which are both uſed there as well as here) the reſurrection of the dead out of their graves. The full explication of this verſe may be ſeen, Eph. i. 19. and ii. 10. Comp. alſo Col. ii. 12, 13. to the ſame purpoſe, and Rom. vii. 4. Ζωοποιήσει καὶ,—ſhall quicken even your mortal bodies, ſeems more agreeable to the original, than ſhall alſo quicken your mortal bodies: The καὶ doth not copulate ζωοποιήσει with ὁ ἐγείρας, for then it muſt have been καὶ ζωοποιήσει; ſince the place of the copulative is between the two words that it joins, and ſo muſt neceſſarily go before the latter of them.

Ver. 12. Wherefore, brethren, &c.] After the Apoſtle has ſeparately and diſtinctly ſhewn how the affair of ſanctification or obligation to piety and virtue ſtands under the Goſpel, both with regard to Jews and Gentiles, he ſeems here to addreſs himſelf to both conjointly. And I. Draws the general concluſion from all his arguments upon this ſubject, ver. 12. where ἄρα οὖν appears to be the grand inference from all that he has been arguing, in relation to ſanctity of life. II. He proves the validity of their claim to eternal life, ver. 14—17. III. And whereas the affair of ſuffering perſecution was a great ſtumbling-block to the Jew, and might very much diſcourage the Gentile, he introduces it to the beſt advantage, ver. 17. and advances ſeveral arguments to fortify their minds under all trials; as firſt, that they ſuffered with Chriſt. Secondly, in order to be crucified with him, in a manner which will infinitely compenſate any preſent ſufferings, ver. 17, 18. Thirdly, all mankind are under various preſſures, longing for a better ſtate. ver. 19—22. Fourthly, the moſt eminent Chriſtians, diſtinguiſhed by the choiceſt gifts of heaven, are in the ſame diſtreſſed condition. ver. 23. Fifthly, according to the plan of the Goſpel, we are to be ſaved after a courſe of patience, exerciſed in a variety of trials. ver. 24, 25. Sixthly, the Spirit of God will ſupply patience to every upright ſoul under perſecution and ſuffering; which will put them into a ſtate highly pleaſing to God. ver. 26, 27. Seventhly, all things, even the ſevereſt trials, ſhall operate together to accompliſh our ſalvation. ver. 28. This he proves by giving us a view of the ſeveral ſteps which the wiſdom and goodneſs of God have ſettled, in order to perfect our ſalvation. ver. 29, 30. Hence he paſſes to, IV. The affair of our perſeverance; concerning which he concludes from the whole of his preceding arguments, that as we are brought into a ſtate of pardon by the free grace of God, founded upon the death of Chriſt, who is now our agent and interceſſor in heaven, no poſſible cauſe,—ſuppoſing we love God—ſhall be able to pervert our minds; but we ſhall be aſſuredly kept by the power of God, through faith, unto eternal ſalvation. ver. 31. to the end. See Taylor.

Ver. 13. Ye ſhall die] Μέλλετε ἀποθνήσκειν, ye ſhall die hereafter; namely, the ſecond death, at the laſt day. The wicked Chriſtian is nigh unto the curſe, whoſe end is to be burned. See Heb. vi. 8.

Ver. 14. For as many as are led, &c.] In this verſe lies the force of the Apoſtle's proof that they ſhall live, ver. 13. The ſons of mortal men are mortal; the ſons of God are like their Father, partakers of the divine nature, and conſequently immortal. See 2 Pet. i. 4. Heb. ii. 13—15. and Locke.

Ver. 15. The Spirit of bondage] What this is, the Apoſtle has plainly declared, Heb. ii. 15. Again, means "Now again, under Chriſt; as the Jews did from Moſes, under the law." The Apoſtle expreſſes the filial aſſurance of Chriſtians in the ſame words that our Saviour uſed when applying himſelf to his heavenly Father. Comp. Mark xiv. 25 The word abba ſignifies father in the Jewiſh language, and the inſertion of it beautifully repreſents the union of Jewiſh and Gentile believers, in thoſe devotions which were dictated by a filial ſpirit. See Locke, Doddridge, and Evans's Chriſtian Temper, vol. i. ſerm. 17, 18.

Ver. 16. The Spirit itſelf beareth witneſs, &c.] It may be proper to inquire, on this much-controverted verſe, 1ſt, how many and who are the witneſſes here ſpoken of, and 2d, what is the kind of evidence given by them. I. Συμμαρτυρεῖ, rendered beareth witneſs with, ſignifies to be a fellow-witneſs, or to witneſs the ſame thing that another doth. This is the conſtant meaning of the word in Scripture, nor is it ever uſed but where there is a concurrent evidence of two witneſſes: (See ch. ii. 15. ix 1. Rev. xxii. 16.) There can be no reaſon given therefore why it ſhould not be taken in the ſame ſenſe here, and rendered the Spirit beareth witneſs with, or together with our ſpirit. Here then are two witneſſes, and who they are we muſt next inquire. Who the firſt Spirit is, muſt he learnt from what goes before. In ver. 2. we read of the Spirit of life in Chriſt Jeſus, which hath made us free from the law of ſin and of death. In ver. 9. he is called, the Spirit of God and of Chriſt. In ver. 11. the Spirit of him that raiſed up Jeſus from the dead. In ver. 15. the Spirit of adoption, by which we cry Abba, Father.—In the preſent verſe, reference is had to this Spirit:—"The Spirit itſelf, that is, the Spirit which has made us free in Chriſt Jeſus,—the Spirit by which we have received adoption, does itſelf bear witneſs with our ſpirit, that we are the children of God." But then the queſtion is, whether ſpirit in all theſe placesbe the name of a perſon, or whether it denotes only a quality or temper belonging to Chriſtians; ſo that the Spirit of Chriſt ſhall ſignify no more than the mind of Chriſt does, Philip. ii. 5. that is, the ſame temper and diſpoſition. This ſenſe Crellius maintains, and others after him, explaining the paſſage thus: "Our Evangelical Spirit (that is, as he explains himſelf in another place,—our Evangelical temper) is a ſufficient argument to our own minds, that we are the children of God." To diſpute this point with Crellius, and his brethren the Socinians, would be to run into a great controverſy. But, Since the Spirit of Chriſt may and does ſignify both ways, it may be proper to point out, to ſuch as have no private prejudices to be maintained, which ſenſe is here to be followed. Firſt, then, this Spirit is the Spirit of life, by which we are made free; that is, by which we are regenerated in Chriſt Jeſus, and ſet at liberty from the heavy yoke of ſin, which the Apoſtle had been deſcribing in the foregoing chapter. Now an evangelical temper is not the cauſe, but the conſequent of this freedom: The Spirit of God is the efficient cauſe, of whom we are ſaid for that reaſon to be born. Secondly. It is the Spirit of him who raiſed up Chriſt, i. e. the Spirit by which he wrought that great wonder and miracle, as is evident by taking the whole 11th verſe together:—the Spirit of him who raiſed Chriſt from the dead, is the Spirit by which he ſo raiſed him, that is, the Holy Spirit, mighty in works and wonders. Laſtly, It is the Spirit of adoption, by which we are made ſons. The Spirit of adoption is the Spirit of which we are born in Chriſt; of which birth an evangelical temper is not the cauſe, but the effect. So that by the whole tenor of the Apoſtle's arguing it appears, that the Spirit which beareth witneſs with our ſpirit is the Holy Spirit of God, which works together with our ſpirit, to enable us to perform the will of God.—As to the ſecond witneſs,—our own ſpirit,—it needs not much time to ſhew who it is, ſince moſt are agreed that it is our own mind. Who knoweth the things of a man, ſave the ſpirit of a man which is in him? That is, ſave his mind and conſcience. Thus then the faithful Chriſtian hath two witneſſes of his being the ſon of God;—the Holy Spirit of God, and his own mind and conſcience.

II. Let us therefore ſee, in the next place, what evidence each of them gives in this caſe. In order to this, we muſt look back to the latter part of the former chapter, to which the preſent verſe relates. Our crying abba, father, ver. 15. is very improperly pitched upon by ſome as the evidence proceeding from our own mind, ſince it is ſaid expreſly, that we ſo cry, by the Spirit of adoption; ſo that our crying abba, father, is an evidence coming not from our minds, but from the Holy Spirit.—The power to do good comes from the influence of the Holy Spirit, and therefore the good we do is ſuch an evidence of our being the ſons of God, as we ſtand obliged for to the Spirit of God. In ver. 24. we read, that as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the ſons of God. To be led by the Spirit, is through the Spirit to mortify the deeds of the fleſh. ver. 13. So that our victory over the fleſh is the effect of our having the Holy Spirit to aſſiſt and ſtrengthen us; and conſequently, as it is a great evidence and aſſurance to us of our being the children of God, is the evidence of that Spirit from whom it proceeds; that is, not our own Spirit, but the Spirit of God. So that the great privileges mentioned in this chapter,—ſuch as being made free from the law of ſin and death, and walking not after the fleſh, but the Spirit,—being ſuch as we received from the Spirit of God, are therefore evidences of the Spirit for our regeneration. The evidence of our own ſpirit is, that it loves and delights in the law of God, and is reſtleſs to obey the law it loves. The Apoſtle's words, ch. vii. 25. are ſtrong to this purpoſe:

17 And if children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Chriſt; if ſo be that we ſuffer with him, that we may be alſo glorified together.

18 For I reckon, that the ſufferings of this preſent time, are not worthy to be compared with the glory which ſhall be revealed in us.

19 For the earneſt expectation of the creature waiteth for the manifeſtation of the ſons of God.

20 For the creature was made ſubject to vanity, not willingly, but by reaſon of him who hath ſubjected the ſame in hope:

21 Becauſe the creature itſelf alſo ſhall be delivered from the bondage of corrup-

Ver. 17. Acts xxvi. 18. Acts xiv. 22. 2 Tim. ii. 11, 12. Phil. i. 28.—V. 18. 2 Cor. iv. 17. 1 Pet. i. 6, 7. iv. 13.—V. 19. 2 Pet. iii. 13. 1 John iii. 2.

purpoſe: With the mind I ſerve the law of God, but with the fleſh the law of ſin. Words which we ſhould bear in memory, while we are conſidering the evidence of the Spirit of God. In the preſent chapter St. Paul tells us, that the redemption by Chriſt Jeſus has put an end to the wretched captivity we lived under. The law of the Spirit, &c. ſee ver. 2. Law here ſignifies power, for power is a law to thoſe who live under it: Now then, the power of the Spirit has deſtroyed the power of ſin. The power of ſin was oppoſite to the mind and reaſon of man, ſo that man, whilſt he lived under that power, was a ſlave; but the power of the Spirit is on reaſon's ſide, and works together with it; ſo that to be under this power is a ſtate of liberty and freedom, and therefore it is juſtly ſaid, that the law of the Spirit of life hath made free. The conſequence of our being under the power of the Spirit is, that we walk not after the fleſh, but after the Spirit; ver. 4. that we mind the things of the Spirit; ver. 5. that we mortify the deeds of the body; ver. 13. that we are the ſons of God; ver. 14. that we cry abba, Father! ver. 15. Theſe are the fruits of the Spirit. Now, to walk after the Spirit, and to do the deeds of the Spirit, is to walk according to our own mind and reaſon; for reaſon approves the things of God, and the things of the Spirit are the things of God. To cry abba, Father! proceeds from a ſettled and undiſturbed mind,—from filial duty and reverence. This therefore we owe to the Spirit; for before, however our minds conſented to his laws, yet ſtill we were ſinners, and conſcience ſtood between us and our Father; ſo that we could not approach without fear and trembling, our minds ſtill repreſenting him to us rather as an injured Lord, than as a tender Father. But ſince the power of the Spirit hath ſtilled the horrid conteſt that was within us, between reaſon and ſin, and that we both love and obey him,—we now no longer fear his preſence; but, like children longing for the return of a kind father, we run out to embrace him, with words of friendſhip and affection in our mouths, crying, Abba, father. By this means, ſays St. Paul, the Spirit itſelf beareth witneſs, &c.—With the mind, he had ſaid before, I ſerve the law of God, ch. vii. 25. "And now, ſays he, by the ſame Spirit you obey the ſame law; and the Spirit of God, and your ſpirit, agree to give you the utmoſt aſſurance of being the children of God. You are no longer in the ſad condition before deſcribed; the mind leaning one way, and the fleſh another; ſo that you deſired to do one thing, yet did the contrary, and was always reſtleſs and uneaſy; rebuked within, and conſtrained without: For the Spirit by which you are now ruled, conſents to your mind, and is bent to perform the ſame things which the mind approves; from whence you may have the greateſt confidence towards God: For, what more perfect obedience can there be, than that to which both outward and inward man conſent? Or, what plainer ſigns can you have of a good ſon and ſervant, than to know that he loves the law of his father, and obeys it? Love the law, indeed, you did before; but obey it you could not: But now, by the Spirit you obey it, and have the greateſt ſatisfaction, both from within and without, that you are the children of God." This may ſuffice to ſhew the Apoſtle's meaning, and to explain, "The nature of the evidence which each Spirit gives." See Sherlock's Diſcourſes, vol. i. p. 233, &c. Archbp. Sharpe, and the Reflections.

Ver. 17. If ſo be that we ſuffer, &c.] Obſerve, how prudently the Apoſtle advances to the harſh affair of ſuffering; he doth not mention it, till he has raiſed their thoughts to the higheſt object of joy and pleaſure;—the happineſs and glory of a joint inheritance with the ever-bleſſed Son of God:—We are heirs of God, and joint heirs with Chriſt, if we ſuffer with him, &c. This, with the additional conſideration that we ſuffer with Chriſt, or as he himſelf ſuffered, and that our ſuffering patiently is the way to be glorified with him, would greatly qualify the tranſitory afflictions of this world, and diſpoſe them to attend to the other arguments he had to offer. See 2 Tim. ii. 11, 12. Locke, and Taylor.

Ver. 18. Revealed] St. Paul ſpeaks of this glory here as what needs to be revealed, to give us a right conception of it. It is impoſſible to have a clear and full comprehenſion of it till we taſte it. See how he labours for words to expreſs it, 2 Cor. xiv. 17, &c. a place of the ſame import with this before us. Locke.

Ver. 19—23.] I muſt think, ſays Dr. Taylor, that it was quite to the Apoſtle's purpoſe in this place to point at the common calamities of mankind. Chriſtians ought not be uneaſy, if they are expoſed to ſufferings on account of religion; for this world is a ſtate of ſuffering and diſtreſs, and all mankind are groaning under various preſſures, and longing for ſomething better than this preſent ſtate. That the Apoſtle in theſe verſes doth not mean only the Chriſtian world, or creation, ſeems evident; becauſe firſt, that even the creature itſelf, or even the very creature ſhall be delivered, ver. 21. plainly points at ſomething different from the body of Chriſtians, and in ſome reſpect inferior to them; for he would never have ſaid to Chriſtians, Even the very ſaints ſhall be delivered, &c. Secondly, the children of God are diſtinguiſhed from the creature, or the creation, ver. 21. but the children of God are Chriſtians, ver. 16. therefore the creature cannot mean Chriſtians. Thirdly he ſaith, ver. 20. that the creature was made ſubject to vanity, not wilfully, but through him who hath ſubjected the ſame in hope. Now we know of no other ſubjecting the creature to vanity, than that Gen. iii. 19. which includes all mankind. Fourthly, Πᾶσα ἡ κτίσις, (ver. 22.) the whole creation, muſt ſurely comprehend all mankind, as it doth Mark xvi 15. Col. i. 23. and that we have no ſufficient ground to extend it further than mankind,—namely, to the brute creation,—will appear if we conſider, firſt, that the ſame phraſe is uſed to ſignify all mankind in the two places juſt referred to; ſecondly, no creature in this world but man, could be ſubject to vanity, wilfully, or not wilfully; thirdly, whether we underſtand the 23d verſe of Chriſtians in general, or of the Apoſtles only, we cannot well ſuppoſe that St. Paul would bring either into a compariſon with brutes;—and not only they, but we alſo, &c. Dr. Waterland very properly renders κτίσις throughout this paſſage, by creation, as it is ver. 22; referring to 2 Pet. iii. 18. Ἀποκαραδοκία, rendered earneſt expectation, ſignifies a ſolicitous anxious waiting for a thing, and ſo includes a vehement deſire. But it may be aſked, How can all mankind deſire and wait for the revelation of the ſons of God, or the glory that ſhall be revealed in them, when but a ſmall part of mankind know any thing of it? To this it may be anſwered, We know, as the Apoſtle obſerves, ver. 22. that all mankind do groan under the afflictions and preſſures of this preſent world, ſenſible of its imperfection and vanity, and conſequently muſt deſire ſomething better; and although they may not know what that better thing is, yet the Apoſtle knew it. And he ſpeaks according to his own knowledge, and not theirs. He affirms, of his own knowledge, what their expectation would iſſue in: Their earneſt waiting was, in fact, however they might be ignorant of it, waiting for the manifeſtation of the ſons of God: And he proves this, ver. 20, 21. as ſuppoſing the Chriſtians to whom he wrote might be ignorant of it. Which ſhews, that when he affirms the earneſt deſires of mankind, after a releaſe from the ſufferings of this life, are a waiting for the manifeſtation of the ſons of God, he ſpeaks, not of what Heathens, or even Chriſtians, underſtood or believed, but of what he himſelf knew and believed to be true. Dr. Whitby upon this place juſtly obſerves, that in the ſacred dialect, deſire and expectation are aſcribed to creatures, in reference to things they want, and which tend to their advantage, though they explicitly know nothing of them. Thus the Meſſiah, before he came, is called, The deſire of all nations, Hag. ii. 7, Mr. Locke remarks, that Ἀποκάλυψιν τῶν υἱῶν, is, revelation of the ſons, that is, to the ſons: the genitive caſe in the New Teſtament often denotes the object. Ἀποκάλυψις, ſhould certainly be rendered revelation, as ἀποκαλυφθῆναι is rendered revealed in the foregoing verſe. See Taylor, Locke, Whitby, Grove, and Doddridge.

Ver. 20. Not willingly] That is, "Not by any wilful act of their own." Ἑκοῦσα ſeems here to have the ſame ſignification as ἑκουσίως, wilfully, Heb. x. 26. or as θέλοντας, 2 Pet. iii. 5.—This they are wilfully ignorant of. What we render, lie not in wait, Exod. xxi. 13. the LXX render οὐκ ἑκὼν, not wilfully, in oppoſition to preſumptuouſly, in the next verſe. Thus ἑκουσα denotes a criminal choice. and in a high ſenſe too; namely, a tranſgreſſion ſubjecting to wrath: "The creature was made ſubject to vanity, not by its own criminal choice; —not by ſinning after the ſimilitude of Adam's tranſgreſſion, ch. v. 14.—but by reaſon of, or through him who ſubjected the ſame in hope." Mr. Locke ſuppoſes that he who ſubjected the creature to vanity is the devil; and that in hope ought to be joined to waits for the manifeſtation of the ſons of God, ver. 19. But, when the whole world is ſaid to have been ſubjected to vanity, not of its own choice, (as he allows) ſurely it cannot refer to their "being drawn into ſin, by the guile of the devil;" for that muſt be of their own choice, or by their own tranſgreſſion: But it muſt refer to their being ſubjected to ſuffering and death by the will of God, before they were in being, and therefore without any choice, fault, or demerit of theirs; and though it was in conſequence, or upon occaſion of Adam's ſin, yet Adam's ſin was not their ſin: Death reigned over them who had not ſinned after the likeneſs of Adam's tranſgreſſion; which is to ſay, in other words, The creature was made ſubject to vanity, not wilfully, or by its own tranſgreſſion; for that place, ch. v. 15. is parallel to this, and explains it. And as for in hope, it is plain that both in ſenſe and grammar it ſtands beſt in connection with ſubjected:—God ſubjected mankind to vanity, not finally, but in hope. Thus it ſuits the ſenſe well; but if we join it with waits, ver. 19. it would imply, that all mankind wait in hope of the glory of God, which ſurely would be ſaying too much. See Taylor and Locke.

Ver. 21. Becauſe the creature itſelf, &c.] The creature, or creation itſelf, is all mankind, whether Chriſtians or not. But this muſt be underſtood

tion, into the glorious liberty of the children of God.

22 For we know that the whole creation groaneth, and travaileth in pain together until now:

23 And not only they, but ourſelves alſo, which have the firſt-fruits of the Spirit, even we ourſelves groan within ourſelves, waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body.

24 For we are ſaved by hope: But hope that is ſeen, is not hope: for what a man ſeeth, why doth he yet hope for?

25 But if we hope for that we ſee not, then do we with patience wait for it.

26 Likewiſe the Spirit alſo helpeth our infirmities: for we know not what we ſhould pray for as we ought: but the Spirit itſelf maketh interceſſion for us, with groanings which cannot be uttered.

27 And he that ſearcheth the hearts, knoweth what is the mind of the Spirit, becauſe he maketh interceſſion for the ſaints, according to the will of God.

28 And we know that all things work together for good, to them that love God, to

Ver. 22. Or, every creature. Jer. xii. 11.—V. 23. Epheſ. i. 14. 2 Cor. v. 2, 4. Luke xx. 36. Luke xxi. 28. Epheſ. iv. 30.—V. 24. 2 Cor. v. 7. Hebr. xi. 1.—V. 25. Matth. xx. 22. Jam. iv. 3. Zech. xii. 10. Epheſ. vi. 18.—V. 27. 1 Chron. xxviii. 9. Pſ. vii. 9. Jer. xi. 20. xvii. 10. Acts i. 24. Rev. ii. 23. Or, that. John v. 14.—V. 28. Ch. ix. 11. 2 Tim. i. 9.

underſtood of mankind, as well as of Chriſtians, only ſo far as by anſwering the ends of their creation, they are prepared for immortality, and are not liable for their wickedneſs to certain death. The creature means mankind, conſidered as what they ought to be, according to the laws of their creation. Mr. Locke would read the whole 20th verſe in a parentheſis, and connects the 21ſt with the 19th, thus,—Waiteth, in hope that the creature itſelf alſo, &c. See the foregoing note. The bondage of corruption, according to Mr. Locke, is, "The fear of death." Comp. ver. 15. and Heb. ii. 15. Corruption ſignifies death or deſtruction, in oppoſition to life everlaſting. See Gal. vi. 8.

Ver. 22. The whole creation groaneth] How David groaned under the vanity and ſhortneſs of this life, may be ſeen Pſ. lxxxix. 47, 48. which complaint may be met with in every man's mouth: ſo that even thoſe who have not the firſt-fruits of the Spirit, whereby they are aſſured of a future happy life in glory, do alſo deſire to be freed from a ſubjection to corruption, and have uneaſy longings after immortality. It is true that to be in pangs like a woman in travail, the metaphor here uſed, ſometimes only ſignifies being in great diſtreſs, where there is no reference to any expected birth; but it ſeems very probable that the Apoſtle, in theſe metaphors, here alludes to what he had been before ſaying, ver. 14, 17, 19, 21. in all which places he deſcribes Chriſtians as the children of God, and ſo here expreſſes the general prevalency of the Goſpel by the birth of many more with whom nature was pregnant, and of which ſhe longed as it were to be delivered; thereby beautifully repreſenting the ſad condition of thoſe, who, while they had faculties fitting them for ſtanding in ſuch a relation to God as his children, are loſt in darkneſs and vanity, while ignorant of God, and the way of ſalvation; during which time they were even pained by the excellence of their nature, it having no ſuitable object to act upon, The reader may obſerve a well-adjuſted gradation from ver. 19. The world ſeems to wait, and call, and groan for the ſpreading of the Goſpel; and thoſe among whom it prevails are ſtill in travail as it were, with the hope and deſire of a yet more exalted ſtate after the reſurrection. ver. 23. See Locke and Doddridge.

Ver. 23. And not only they, &c.] That this is meant of the Apoſtles appears plain from the following reaſons: Firſt, But ourſelves alſo,—even we ourſelves—are very emphatical expreſſions, and direct our thoughts to ſome perſons of diſtinction and eminence. Secondly, Who have received the firſt-fruits of the Spirit, is ſtrictly true of the Apoſtles only. Thirdly, There will be little or no argument in this verſe, if it is underſtood of the whole body of Chriſtians: It will be only telling them what is ſuppoſed to be already known,—that they were in a ſtate of affliction, waiting for the future glory. But it is a good argument, if underſtood of the Apoſtles, and properly enough advanced after a general ſurvey of the ſufferings of mankind. "Look at the world in common,—you ſee all labouring under ſorrows, and in afflictions: look at us Apoſtles, who are moſt ſignally diſtinguiſhed by the pledges of God's love,—the miraculous gifts of the Spirit; even we are not exempted from ſufferings; but it is the will of God that we too ſhould remain under the preſſures of life, and in a ſtate of expectation." See 2 Cor. iv 17. v. 2. There is an alluſion, in the latter part of this verſe, to the two kinds of adoption among the Romans; the firſt of which was private; the ſecond public, in the forum, when the adopted perſon was ſolemnly declared and avowed to be the ſon of the adopter. Comp. Luke xx. 36. The redemption of our Bodies means, their final deliverance from the power of the grave at the general reſurrection. See Luke xxi. 28. Epheſ. i. 14. Heb. xi. 35. Taylor, Doddridge, and Howe's Works, vol. i. p. 680.

Ver. 24. Hope that is ſeen, &c.] That is enjoyed. To ſee, in Scripture phraſe, is to enjoy. Job vii. 7. ix. 25. Pſ. l. 23. Matth. v. 8. John iii. 36. Heb. xii. 14. 1 John iii. 2.

Ver. 25. But if we hope for that we ſee not, &c.] What the Apoſtle ſays here of hope, is to ſhew them, that the groaning of the children of God, before ſpoken of, was not the groaning of impatience, but ſuch as that wherewith the Spirit of God maketh interceſſion for us, better than if we expreſſed ourſelves in words." Locke.

Ver. 26. Likewiſe the Spirit, &c.] 'Ωσαύτως, likewiſe, always in the New Teſtament ſignifies in like manner, or agreeably to what is mentioned juſt before. Here it may be rendered, agreeably to this, namely, to our being ſaved by hope, [or in a courſe of patient expectation, mentioned in the former verſe] the Spirit helps,—is appointed to help—our infirmities. Dr. Doddridge renders συναντιλαμβάνεται, lendeth his helping hand, It literally ſignifies "the action of one who helps another to raiſe or bear a burden, by taking hold of it on one ſide, and lifting it or bearing it with him:" and ſo it ſeems to intimate the obligation on us, to exert our little ſtrength, feeble as it is, in concurrence with this Almighty aid.

Ver, 27. Knoweth what is the mind of the Spirit] That is, "has a particular regard to, approves, favours, and is pleaſed with." The phraſe here φρονημα του πνευματος, the mind of the Spirit, is the very ſame that is uſed, ver. 6. and expreſſes not merely the meaning, but the temper and diſpoſition of the mind, as under the influence of the divine Spirit, purſuing and breathing after ſuch bleſſings as ſuits its rational and immortal nature. The word ἐντυγχάνω is alſo uſed ver. 34. Chriſt maketh interceſſion for us; and again ch. xi. 2. Heb. vii. 25. and in Acts xxv. 24. where it is rendered have dealt with me. Theſe are all the places where we find it in the New Teſtament. The proper import of the word ſeems to be, to meet and treat with a perſon, either for or againſt another; and ſo it may ſignify in general to negociate, manage, or tranſact an affair on the behalf of others, not only by interceſſion, entreaty or ſupplication in their favour, but in any other way, as the caſe may require. So our Lord ἐντυγχάνει ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν, makes interceſſion for us, by negotiating and managing, as our friend and agent, all the affairs pertaining to our ſalvation; and he is able to ſave us to the uttermoſt, becauſe he ever lives, and has all power given him in heaven and earth, as our agent, to ſecure to us all the glorious things promiſed in the Goſpel. And the Spirit of God makes interceſſion for the ſaints, not by offering ſupplications to God in their behalf, but by directing and qualifying their ſupplications in a proper manner, by his agony and influences upon their hearts; which, according to the Goſpel ſcheme, is the peculiar work and office of the Holy Spirit. How the Spirit qualifies the ſecret groanings of true Chriſtians, under the preſſures of life, may be ſeen 2 Cor. v. 2—5. The Spirit directs and qualifies the ſecret deſires of the ſaints after immortality, κατὰ Θεὸν, according or agreeably to the will or appointment of God; therefore God approves the mind of the Spirit, or the diſpoſitions which we gain through the aſſiſtance of the Spirit; and thus the love of God to us is ſhed abroad in our hearts, or aſſured to our hearts by the Holy Spirit, which was given to the church; 2 Cor. i. 21, 22. See Taylor, Doddridge, and Bengelius.

Ver. 28. And we know, &c.] In the ſummary which we have given on ver. 12. we obſerved, that this is the ſeventh argument advanced by the Apoſtle to reconcile Chriſtians to ſufferings: "Whatever befals us, ſuppoſing we love God, certainly concurs and tends to complete our Salvation." The Apoſtle never once uſes the word κλητοῖς, called or invited, in his arguments, ch. ii, iii, iv, v. It is a metaphor taken from inviting gueſts, or making them welcome to a feaſt; and the word and ſentiment would be well underſtood, if we rendered it invite, rather than call: for to call is never, in Engliſh, applied peculiarly to the affair of acquainting a perſon that his company is deſired at an entertainment; but either to bid, or invite. The verb καλεω is tranſlated by bid, Matth. xxii. 3, 4. Luke xiv. 7, 8, 10. Bid, however, ſeems to be almoſt antiquated, and invite is the common mode of expreſſion; though, as the word call has been ſo long in uſe, one cannot well lay it aſide. They are here ſaid to be called or invited of God, according to his purpoſe: which the Apoſtle gives as a proof that all things in our preſent ſituation are appointed, and ſhall be over-ruled for our final and everlaſting happineſs: for in reading the next verſe, we muſt lay a ſtrong emphaſis upon THEM; thus,—to them that love God, to THEM that are called, &c. as if it were ſaid, "Certainly all things ſhall work together for their good, for this reaſon, becauſe they are called according to God's divine purpoſe, firſt declared to Abraham, Gen. xvii. 4. xviii. 18." Thus the clauſe is to be underſtood, and thus it is an argument to prove, that all things, how afflictive ſoever, ſhall work together for our welfare; but then it muſt be taken in connection with our loving of God, and obedience to him. The Apoſtle doth not pretend to prove, that all things ſhall concur to the everlaſting happineſs of all that are them who are called according to his purpoſe.

29 For whom he did foreknow, he alſo did predeſtinate to be conformed to the image of his Son, that he might be the firſt-born among many brethren.

30 Moreover, whom he did predeſtinate, them he alſo called: and whom he called, them he alſo juſtified: and whom he juſtified, them he alſo glorified.

31 What ſhall we then ſay to theſe things? If God be for us, who can be againſt us?

32 He that ſpared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all, how ſhall he not with him alſo freely give us all things?

33 Who ſhall lay any thing to the charge of God's elect? it is God that juſtifieth:

34 Who is he that condemneth? It is Chriſt that died, yea, rather, that is riſen again, who is even at the right hand of God, who alſo maketh interceſſion for us.

35 Who ſhall ſeparate us from the love of Chriſt? ſhall tribulation, or diſtreſs, or perſecution, or famine, or nakedneſs, or peril, or ſword?

36 (As it is written, For thy ſake we are killed all the day long; we are accounted as ſheep for the ſlaughter.)

37 Nay, in all theſe things we are more than conquerors, through him that loved us.

38 For I am perſuaded, that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things preſent, nor things to come,

39 Nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, ſhall be able to ſeparate us from the love of God, which is in Chriſt Jeſus our Lord.

Ver. 29. See Exod. xxxiii. 12, 17. Pſ. i. 6. Jer. i. 5. Matth. vii. 23. Ch. xi. 2. 2 Tim. ii. 19. 1 Pet. i. 2. Epheſ. i. 5, 11. John xvii. 22. 2 Cor. iii. 18. Phil. iii. 21. 1 John iii. 2. Col. i. 15, 18. Hebr. i. 6. Rev. i. 5.—V. 30. Epheſ. ii. 6.—V. 31. Numb. xiv. 9.—V. 32. Ch. v. 6, 10. Ch. iv. 25.—V. 33. Iſai. l. 8, 9. Rev. xii. 10, 11.—V. 34. Job xxxiv. 29. Mark xvi. 19. Col. iii. 1. Hebr. i. 3. viii. 1. xii. 2. Hebr. vii. 25. ix. 24.—V. 36. Pſ. xliv. 22. 2 Cor. iv. 11.—V. 37. 1 Cor. xv. 57. 2 Cor. ii. 14. 1 John iv. 4. v. 4, 5. Rev. xii. 11.—V. 38. Epheſ. i. 21. vi. 12. Col. i. 16. ii. 15. 1 Pet. iii. 22.

called or invited; (for many are called, who at laſt ſhall not be among the choſen, Matth, xx. 16.) but only thoſe of the called who love God. Our calling or invitation, thus qualified, is the ground of his argument, which he proſecutes and compleats in the two next verſes; and this calling he takes for granted, as a thing evident and unqueſtionable among all profeſſed Chriſtians, But it may be aſked, "How is it thus evident that we are called?" The anſwer is,—"From our being in the viſible church, and profeſſing the faith of the Goſpel:" For always, in the apoſtolic writings, all that are in this viſible church and profeſſion, are numbered among the called or invited. As for effectual calling, it is a diſtinction which divines have invented, without any warrant from Scripture. Our calling therefore is conſidered by the Apoſtle in the nature of a ſelf-evident propoſition, which no body doubts or denies, and which indeed no Chriſtian ought to doubt, or call in queſtion. See Epheſ. iii. 1—11. and Taylor.

Ver. 29, 30.] In theſe verſes the Apoſtle ſhews how our calling is an argument that all things ſhall work together to advance our eternal happineſs, by ſetting forth the ſeveral ſteps which the wiſdom and goodneſs of God have ſettled, in order to compleat our ſalvation. To this end, he firſt gives us, ver. 29. the foundation and finiſhing, or the beginning and end of the ſcheme of that ſalvation: For whom God did foreknow, &c. To foreknow here ſignifies to deſign before, or at the firſt forming of the ſcheme, to beſtow the favour and privilege of being God's people upon any ſet of men (as ch. xi. 2.). This is the foundation, or firſt ſtep of our ſalvation; namely, the purpoſe and grace of God, given us in Chriſt Jeſus, before the world began. 2 Tim. i. 9. Then he knew, or favoured us, (ſee on ver. 27.) and as he knew us then, when the ſcheme was laid, and any part of it executed,—He fore-knew it. The end or completion of our ſalvation is, our conformity to the Son of God in eternal glory, (ver. 17.) which includes and ſuppoſes our moral conformity to him. When God knew us, at the forming of the Goſpel ſcheme, or when he intended to beſtow upon us the favour of being his people, he then deſtinated, or deſigned us, to be conformed to the image of his Son; and as he deſtinated or determined us then, to this very high degree of honour and happineſs,—He pre-deſtinated, fore-deſtinated, or pre-determined us to it. Thus we are to underſtand the foundation and finiſhing of the ſcheme of our ſalvation. The foundation is the fore-knowledge, or gracious purpoſe of God; the finiſhing is our being joint-heirs with Chriſt. Now our calling, or invitation, (ver. 28.) ſtands in connection with both theſe. Firſt, it ſtands in connection with God's fore-knowledge, and ſo it is a true and valid calling: For we are called, invited, or choſen, according to the fore-knowledge of God the Father, (1 Pet. i. 2.)—the ſupreme Lord and fountain of all good, who may beſtow his bleſſings upon any people, as ſeems good in his ſight: Conſequently, we have a good title to the bleſſings of the Goſpel, to which we are invited. The Apoſtle, in this part of the chapter, had his eye more particularly upon the Gentile converts; to ſhew them that their intereſt in the favour and love of God, and their future ſalvation, ſtands upon a ſolid bottom:—Thus our calling is connected with God's fore-knowledge. Secondly, it ſtands in connection with our being conformed in glory to the Son of God; for we are invited by the Goſpel, to the obtaining of the glory of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt. 2 Theſſ. ii. 14. And ſuppoſing,—what the Apoſtle ſuppoſes,—that we love God, it is certain from our being called, that we ſhall be glorified with the Son of God. And thus our calling proves the point, That all things work together for our good in our preſent ſtate, becauſe it proves, that we are intended for eternal glory; as is ſhewn in ver. 30. See Matth. xx. 16. Taylor, and Locke.

Ver. 30. Moreover, whom, &c.] This may well be called the golden chain of election, as it exhibits the order and connection of the purpoſe of God, concerning our ſalvation: Only the ſeveral ſteps of divine grace are expreſſed; but that holineſs for which the Apoſtle has been arguing, as eſſential to our ſalvation, is manifeſtly underſtood. The not obſerving this, has led ſome Chriſtians into a very great error; as if ſome men, and indeed all who ſhall be finally ſaved, were foreknown, predeſtinated, called, juſtified, glorified, by an abſolute decree, without regard to their moral character. The Apoſtle inſiſts upon ſuch a character all along from the beginning of the chapter: Comp. ver. 1, 13. Nay, the abſolute neceſſity of holineſs to ſalvation is the very ſubject of this diſcourſe, which he poſitively affirms, and ſolidly eſtabliſhes; and at the very entrance of his argument here, he takes care to ſettle the connection between our calling, and the love and obedience of God, on purpoſe to prevent miſtakes. (See the foregoing note.) Nor in the nature of things is it poſſible to ſeparate them: They that love God, being the only perſons who can reap any benefit by predeſtination, vocation, or any other inſtance of God's favour. See Taylor, Doddridge, and Barclay's Apology, p. 221.

Ver. 33, 34. Who ſhall lay any thing, &c.] Mr. Locke reads this, Who, &c.? ſhall God, that juſtifies? Who, &c.? Chriſt, that died? But our tranſlation ſeems preferable; the Apoſtle having already abundantly ſhewn us our intereſt in God and Chriſt, from ver. 28. to 33. and therefore it ſeems not ſo proper to ſay the ſame thing here over again, as to apply it to our conſolation:—Which he doth by making our ſure and infallible intereſt in the love of God, and the favour of Chriſt, a full, ſatisfactory, and indiſputable anſwer to any charges advanced againſt God's elect, who love God, (for this is ſtill ſuppoſed) or to any who may preſume to condemn them. And this is done in a very grand, deciſive manner, and with an air of the higheſt aſſurance, that God's elect who love him are quite diſcharged from all poſſible accuſations, and ſhall never come into condemnation. Who, &c.? Let them know, It is GOD who juſtifies his elect.—Who, &c.? Let him know, It is CHRIST who died, &c. See Taylor, Locke, and Harris's Obſervations, p. 54.

Ver. 35—39. Who ſhall ſeparate us, &c.] Here the certain, final perſeverance of ſuch as truly love and obey God,—which is always ſuppoſed,—is in a very ſtrong and noble manner aſſerted; ſo far, and in this ſenſe, that whatever the infirmities and trials of ſuch may be, they are certain, and may infallibly aſſure themſelves, that ſincerely endeavouring to keep themſelves in the love of God, they ſhall be kept by the power of God, through faith, unto ſalvation. See Jude, ver. 21. 1 Pet. i. 5. John xv. 2. 8 Cor. i. 8. 1 Theſſ. v. 23, 24. 2 Theſſ. iii. 3. None can imagine that Chriſt would love a good Chriſtian the leſs for enduring ſuch extremities for his ſake, as are here ſpecified. The paſſage muſt therefore be intended to expreſs the Apoſtle's confidence, that God's invariable love to his people, illuſtrated already in ſo glorious a manner, would engage him to ſupport them under all their trials, by a communication of divine ſtrength. The word λιμὸς, rendered famine, may be applied to perſonal, as well as public neceſſity. Good angels are ſometimes called powers, (ver. 38.) to expreſs their being uſed as inſtruments of the divine power. See Epheſ. i. 21. vi. 12. Col. i. 16. ii. 15. Nor height nor depth, means neither

CHAP. IX.

Paul is ſorry for the Jews. All the ſeed of Abraham were not the children of the promiſe. God hath mercy upon whom he will. The potter may do with his clay what he pleaſes. The calling of the Gentiles, and rejecting of the Jews were foretold. The cauſe why ſo few Jews embraced the righteouſneſs of faith.

I Say the truth in Chriſt, I lie not, my conſcience alſo bearing me witneſs in the Holy Ghoſt, Ver. 1. Ch. i. 9. 2 Cor. i. 23. xi. 31. Gal. i. 20. Phil. i. 8. 1 Tim. ii. 7.

neither the height of proſperity, nor the depth of adverſity; as neither death nor life, means neither the fear of death, nor the hope and deſire of life. The concluſion of this chapter is a moſt elegant and ſublime piece of writing. It is founded upon the grand and ſolid principles of the Goſpel: It breathes the true ſpirit of Chriſtian magnanimity; raiſes our minds far above all things created; and ſhews, in a bright and heavenly view, the greatneſs of ſoul, and the ſtrong conſolation which the Goſpel inſpires. God grant it may ſtand clear before our underſtandings, and be tranſcribed into all our hearts! They who deſpiſe the Goſpel, deſpiſe all that is great, and glorious, and happy. See Taylor, Locke, Doddridge, Archbp. Tillotſon, vol. i. p. 491. and Blackwall's Sacred Claſſicks, vol. i. p. 274, &c.

REFLECTIONS ON CHAP. VIII.

The matter ſet before us in this chapter calls for, and deſerves very ſerious examination. Enquiry ſhould determine for us, whether we do on the whole walk after the fleſh, or the ſpirit, ver. 1. If we are ſincere in this enquiry, it will make us guard at the ſame time more and more againſt that carnal mind, which is enmity againſt God; and cannot be ſubject to his law, nor leave room for us to pleaſe God, while it preſides and governs in us, ver. 7. We ſhall often reflect upon that death, which would be the conſequence of our living after the fleſh; ver. 6. and never conceive of ourſelves, upon any occaſion, as perſons, who in conſequence of ſomething that has already paſſed, have found out a way to break the connection here eſtabliſhed, and in the nature of things eſſentially eſtabliſhed, between a carnal mind and death. May our ſpirits be more and more enlivened by that vital union with a Redeemer, which may give us a part in the merits of his righteouſneſs, and in the life it has ſecured for all true believers! and may the efficacy of his Spirit to raiſe our ſouls from a death of ſin to a life of holineſs, be in us a bleſſed earneſt, that he will complete the work, and at length quicken our mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in us!

Well may we rejoice in privileges like theſe before us; (ver. 14—17.) and ſtand aſtoniſhed to think that they ſhould be beſtowed on any of the children of men! That any of them ſhould be heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Chriſt;—the adopted children of an heavenly Father, and marked out by the communications of his Spirit, for an inheritance which he hath prepared!—That any ſhould be fitted and enabled to approach him with that endearing compellation, Abba, Father, in their mouths! O that every one of us may know by experience, which alone can teach us, how ſweet it is to the ſoul! If we would obtain and ſecure this witneſs, let us ſee to it, that we be obediently led by the Spirit of God; for that ſpirit is not, where he does not effectually govern; and if any man have not that Spirit of Chriſt, he is none of Chriſt's diſciples, nor intitled to any of the privileges of his people.

When we both love and obey the commands of God, we want nothing farther to aſſure us that we are the children of God: But where either of theſe is wanting, the evidence of the other avails nothing. If we love and approve the command, but do not obey, we are ſelf-condemned: we are in our ſins; luſt has dominion over us, and not the Spirit of God. If we obey the law, and conform outwardly to it, but do not love and cordially embrace it, we are hypocrites; not ſervants of God, but of the world: and our outward compliance is fleſhly wiſdom, not the work of the Spirit.

Thus then we have two ways of judging ourſelves, which muſt both concur: we have inward and outward ſigns of grace. The inward ſigns are a pure conſcience, a ſincere love of God and religion, and whatever tends to the glory and honour of our Maker. The outward ſigns are acts of obedience, conformable to the inward purity and love of our minds. And theſe are fruits by which we may judge ourſelves. Our Saviour tells us, that we may know men by their fruits; much rather may we know ourſelves by our own fruits; eſpecially when we know the ſtock too from whence they grow,—the motions and working of our own heart.

Hence it appears that the evidence of the Spirit, is not any ſecret inſpiration, or any aſſurance conveyed to the mind of the faithful; but the evidence of works,—ſuch as by the Spirit we perform: And therefore the only ſign of ſanctification is holineſs; the only mark of grace, is to obey from the heart the word of God: So that they err, not knowing the Scriptures, who from this, or the like paſſages, imagine that the Spirit ever gives, or was ever deſigned to give, inward aſſurance, or certainty to men of their final ſtate.

Hence likewiſe, it is certain, that ſome go too far on the other ſide, by denying that any man may know himſelf to be in a ſtate of grace: For all the children of God are in a ſtate of grace; and the evidence of the Spirit of God, and our own ſpirit, may make us certain, where they concur as they ought to do, that we are the children of God. If our hearts condemn us not, then have we confidence towards God; is St. John's rule, and it comprehends both the evidences before explained; (ſee on ver. 16.) for our heart judges both of our inward and outward obedience, and therefore where our hearts condemn us not, we have the evidence of both ſpirits,—the end of which is confidence.

But then, this confidence, or certainty, does not extend to our future and final ſalvation. To be in a ſtate of grace, is to be heir of ſalvation; but an heir may be defeated, if by any after-act he incapacitates himſelf to inherit. In a word, a ſtate of grace may be loſt: He that is the child of God, may ceaſe to be the child of God; and therefore the being certain and confident that we are now in a ſtate of grace, cannot make us certain of our ſalvation; that muſt ſtill be worked out with fear and trembling; as we learn from the Apoſtles' own arguing in this chapter. The Spirit itſelf, ſays he, beareth witneſs with our ſpirit, that we are the children of God: The conſequence of which is,—If children, then heirs, ver. 17. But now are ye heirs through hope, he tells us in another place; and at ver. 24. of this chapter he declares, We are ſaved by hope; but hope that is ſeen is not hope. Certainty ſhuts out hope; and ſince being children makes us only heirs through hope, it is plain that being certain that we are now the children of God, can give us no abſolute certainty of our ſalvation: and therefore it is great preſumption to talk of ſecurity. Our certainty reaches to our preſent condition, which is enough to keep our minds eaſy and contented. Other certainty than this might make us negligent. This may and ought ſtrongly to encourage us to run with patince the race that is ſet before us, and to labour in the Lord, as knowing that our labour ſhall not be in vain.

For ever adored be the divine goodneſs in ſending down his ſpirit on ſuch ſinful creatures, to help our infirmities in the proſecution of this important labour; (ver. 26.) to implant and excite graces in our hearts, to be a ſource of preſent delights, and of eternal happineſs: May we continually feel him helping thoſe infirmities, and ſo improving our joy in the Lord, that all our devotions may be animated ſacrifices; nor let the want of expreſſion in that caſe trouble us; theſe unutterable groanings (ver. 27.) are ſometimes the ſweeteſt muſick in the ear of God.

When we conſider the ſtate of thoſe parts of the world in which Chriſtianity is unknown, or of thoſe among whom it is a mere empty form; when we conſider the vanity to which that ſhare of God's creation is ſubject, let it move our compaſſion, and excite our prayers, that the ſtate of glorious liberty into which God has already brought ſuch, as by faith in Chriſt are his children, may become more univerſally prevalent;—that the knowledge of the Lord may cover the earth, as the waters cover the channel of the ſeas. May his divine and omnipotent grace give a birth to that grand event, in the expectation whereof nature ſeems in pangs; ſuch a birth, that nations might be born in a day; and where it hath taken effect, may it produce a more abundant growth, and more happy increaſe! ver. 20—22.

How bleſſed is the ſtate of thoſe ſouls, who having been, in the eternal counſels of divine love, foreknown and predeſtinated, are in conſequence called and juſtified, as the earneſt of their approaching glorification! ver. 29, 30. Who would not deſire to ſee his own title to privileges ſo ineſtimable as theſe? But how ſhall we know that we have our part in them?—How, but by ſecuring an evidence that we love God? ver. 28. Then indeed may we be aſſured, that all things ſhall work together for our good; and glory in it, that we are the elect of God, to whoſe charge, therefore, nothing ſhall be alledged, ſince God juſtifieth; whom none ſhall condemn, ſince Chriſt died to expiate our ſins, and is aſcended into heaven to intercede continually for us, ver. 33, 34. In chearful dependance on his patronage and care, let us bid defiance to all our temporal and ſpiritual enemies, and be willing to ſubmit to the greateſt extremities; ſince neither things preſent, nor things to come, ſhall be able to ſeparate from the love of God, which is in Chriſt Jeſus our Lord. What can harm us? What evil can we ſuffer? What good is it poſſible for us to want, when God is for us? When we are once made ſenſible of his love in giving us his Son, how can we allow our hearts to ſuſpect his gracious readineſs to give us, with Him, all things truly reaſonable or deſirable? All other bleſſings, when compared with theſe, will appear unworthy of a mention; and we ſhould have great reaſon to ſuſpect that they were not ours, if we did not find our ſouls ſuperlatively to value them above every other poſſeſſion.

Chad. IX. Ver. 1. The Apoſtle has proved by three ſpecial arguments, that the grace or favour of God in the Goſpel extends to the Gentiles, as well as the Jews: This he has done in the five firſt chapters; in the three next, he has ſhewn the obligations which the Goſpel lays upon Chriſtians, both Gentile and Jewiſh, to a life of virtue and holineſs; and laſtly, the certainty of their final and everlaſting ſalvation, in caſe they love God, and live not after the fleſh, but after the Spirit. Now let it be well obſerved, that hitherto the Apoſtle has conſidered our being taken into the peculiar kingdom of God, and intereſted in the bleſſings of the covenant of grace, abſolutely, or in itſelf, as it is the effect of grace, free to all who believe, 2 That I have great heavineſs, and continual ſorrow in my heart.

3 For I could wiſh that myſelf were accurſed from Chriſt, for my brethren, my kinſmen according to the fleſh:

4 Who are Iſraelites; to whom pertaineth the adoption, and the glory, and the covenants, and the giving of the law, and the ſervice of God, and the promiſes;

5 Whoſe are the fathers, and of whom as concerning the fleſh, Chriſt came, who is over all, God bleſſed for ever. Amen.

Ver. 2. Ch. x. 1.—V. 3. Exod. xxxii. 32. Or, ſeparated.—V. 4. Deut. vii. 6. Exod. iv. 22. Jer. xxxi. 9. 1 Sam. iv. 21. Or, teſtaments. Pſ. cxlvii. 19. Ch. iii. 2. Epheſ. ii. 12.—V. 5. Luke iii. 23. Ch. i. 3. Jer. xxiii. 6. John i. 1. Acts xx. 28. Hebr. i. 8.

whether Jews or Gentiles, in oppoſiton to the merit of any works, or of conformity to any law whatever; and therefore hitherto he has pleaded and proved, that the Gentiles, by faith, have a good title to the bleſſings of God's covenant; and that the Jews themſelves can have an intereſt in thoſe bleſſings no other way than by faith. He has not yet conſidered the Jews as ſet aſide, or rejected (except in a glance, and only by the bye,) but as having the ſame way to the grace and covenant of God opened to them, under the kingdom of the Meſſiah, as to the believing Gentiles, and as under a poſſibility of continuing ſtill in the church; and therefore he has only argued, that they ought not to exclude the Gentiles, but allow them to be ſharers in the mercies of God. Hitherto his language has been, "Why may not they be admitted, pardoned, and ſaved as well you?" And therefore he hath treated the ſubject (the reception of the Gentiles into the church) under the name and notion of juſtification; that is, of pardon and ſalvation common, and free to all, and never once mentions it, in the courſe of his argument, under the name and notion of CALLING or inviting; which in the ſenſe of all mankind, is underſtood to be a relative term: for whenever we hear of inviting to a feaſt, wedding, &c. it immediately gives us this idea,—that only ſome are admitted to it, while others are paſſed by, or left. Nor has he hitherto made any mention of elect or election, choſen or choice, which alſo ſuppoſes that ſome are taken, while others are left, or rejected.

But now, in this chapter, and the two following, the Apoſtle writes in a different ſtile, and conſiders our reception into the kingdom and covenant of God, under the relative notion of calling or invitation, and of election or choice; which ſhews, that he now views the two parties, Jews and Gentiles, in a light different from that in which he had hitherto placed them. Now he regards the Gentiles as invited into the kingdom of God, as choſen to be his people, and the Jews as left out and rejected: for though the Jews were free to embrace the Goſpel, as well as the Gentiles, yet he knew, by the Spirit of prophecy, that as the main body of them in fact rejected Chriſt and the Goſpel, ſo they would in fact be quite unchurched, and caſt out of the viſible kingdom of God,—not only by their own unbelief, but alſo by the juſt judgement of God; in the total overthrow of their polity, the deſtruction of their temple, their expulſion out of the land of Canaan, and diſperſion over the face of the whole earth. Thus he knew they would be accurſed, or anathematized from Chriſt, and reduced to a level with the common or heathen nations of the world; and the event has proved him to be a true prophet. It is obſervable, that agreeably to his delicate manner of writing, and to his nice and tender treatment of his countrymen, he never mentions their rejection,—a ſubject extremely painful to his thoughts,—otherwiſe than in a wiſh, that he himſelf were accurſed from Chriſt for them, or, to prevent their being accurſed from Chriſt;—till he comes to the eleventh chapter, where he has much to ſay in their favour, even conſidered as at preſent rejected. But it is very evident that his arguments in this chapter ſtand upon a ſuppoſition, that the main body of the Jewiſh nation would be caſt out of the viſible kingdom of God. For which reaſon, in this and the two following chapters, he conſiders the reception of any people into the kingdom and covenant of God, under the relative notion of inviting and chooſing.

From the latter part of the foregoing chapter we may obſerve, that St. Paul thought our calling or being invited into the kingdom of God a matter of great importance; for he makes it the ground of his argument to prove that we are in a ſtate of ſalvation; and that in the way of obedience we ſhall, notwithſtanding our infirmities and ſufferings, without fail be carried ſafe through to eternal glory. According to him, our calling is the ſolid foundation of our comfort in all conditions; an inconteſtable demonſtration that God is for us, and that under his influence all things ſhall work together for our good: and indeed our being called or invited into the kingdom of God, according to his purpoſe, in itſelf imports that we are welcome, and have a good title to the bleſſings, honours, and privileges of his kingdom. Our calling therefore is a matter of great importance, and ought to be well eſtabliſhed and guarded againſt every objection. But if the Jewiſh conſtitution ſtill remains good, and the Jews, or ſuch as are ſubject to the Moſaic law, are ſtill the only people of God, or the rightful ſubjects of his kingdom, then our calling comes to nothing; and we have no more right to encourage and aſſure ourſelves of the favour of God, and the bleſſings of his covenant, than mere heathens, or thoſe who have no extraordinary diſcoveries of God's grace; for, in this caſe, we are no better than uninvited intruders, who have no title to the extraordinary grant of mercy and favour. And therefore the unbelieving Jews levelled all their artillery againſt our being called, or invited into the church or family of God, and laboured every argument to unhinge the believing Gentiles, and to perſuade them that they were not duly taken into the church: alledging particularly that the Jews are, and for ever were to be, the only true church and people of God; that they could not be cut off, ſo long as God was true to his word and promiſe to Abraham: Conſequently the Gentiles were miſerably deceived, by ſuppoſing they had a place and intereſt in God's kingdom only by faith in Chriſt Jeſus; when in fact, and as ſure as God was true, there was no other way of entering into the kingdom of God, or of gaining a right to its privileges, than by ſubmitting to the law of Moſes. To prove therefore that the Jews, by rejecting Chriſt and the Goſpel, were themſelves caſt out of the church, conſiſtently with the truth of God's promiſe to Abraham, was a matter of great moment for the eſtabliſhment of the Gentile believers. The Apoſtle had touched upon this point at the beginning of ch. iii. but an enlargement upon it there would have broke in too much upon the argument he was then purſuing; for which reaſon he ſuſpended the particular conſideration of it to this place: And accordingly, he firſt ſolemnly declares his tendereſt affection for his countrymen, and his real grief of heart for their infidelity and rejection; ver. 1—5. and this, moſt probably, to wipe off an aſperſion which had been caſt upon him, that he was ſo zealous for the Goſpel out of a natural hatred and rancour againſt his own nation; or, however, it might be intended at leaſt to guard againſt ſuch an invidious conſtruction. Secondly, he anſwers objections againſt the rejection of the Jews, ver. 6—23. Thirdly, proves from Scripture the calling of the Gentiles, ver. 24—30 Fourthly, gives the true ſtate and reaſons of the rejection of the unbelieving Jews, and calling of the Gentiles, ver. 30.—ch. x. 14. Fifthly, vindicates the miſſion of the Apoſtles, as expedient and neceſſary to the calling or invitation of the Jews, ch. x. 14. to the end: And all this was intended at once to vindicate the divine diſpenſations; to convince the infidel Jew; to ſatisfy the believing Gentile, that his invitation into the church was well grounded, juſt, and valid; to arm him againſt the cavils and objections of the unbelieving Jews, and to diſpoſe the Chriſtian Jew to receive and own him as a member of the family and kingdom of God, by a divine right, in all reſpects as good as he himſelf could pretend to. See Taylor and Locke.

Ver. 3. That myſelf were accurſed, &c.] That I myſelf were to be devoted to death, [or made a ſacrifice] after the example of Chriſt. Comp. 2 Tim. i. 3. Pere Simon has it, For the ſake of Chriſt:—Propter Chriſtum. But the firſt is preferable. So Dr. Waterland in his MS. note. See alſo his Sermons, vol. i. p. 77. The word rendered accurſed is 'Ανάθεμα, by which the LXX tranſlate the Hebrew word חרם, cherem, which ſignifies "perſons or things devoted to deſtruction and extermination." The Jewiſh nation were now an anathema, deſtined to deſtruction. St. Paul, to expreſs his affection to them, ſays, he could wiſh, to ſave them from it, to become an anathema, and be deſtroyed himſelf. Elſner, with Dr. Clarke, joins 'Απὸ τοῦ Χριστοῦ with Ηὐχόμην, I could wiſh, or deſire from, or of Chriſt, that, &c. And he ſhews well, as hath been frequently done, how very abſurd it would be to ſuppoſe that the Apoſtle meant, that he could be content to be delivered over to everlaſting miſery for the good of others. "I am ſo far from taking pleaſure, ſays the Apoſtle, in the rejection of the Jewiſh nation, that on the contrary, it gives me continual pain to think of it; inſomuch, that [as Moſes formerly when God propoſed to cut them off, and in their ſtead to make of him a great nation, begged that he himſelf might rather die, than the children of Iſrael be deſtroyed, ſo] I could even wiſh that the excluſion from the viſible church, which will happen to the Jewiſh nation, might fall to my own ſhare, if thereby they might be kept in it." See Locke, Grotius, Clarke's Seventeen Sermons, p. 340. and Taylor, and the note on Exod. xxxii. 32, &c.

Ver. 4. Who are Iſraelites] The Apoſtle, with great addreſs, enumerates theſe privileges of the Jews, both that he might ſhew how honourably he thought of them, and that he might awaken their ſolicitude not to ſacrifice that divine favour, by which they had been ſo eminently and ſo long diſtinguiſhed. In the word adoption he alludes to the Horeb covenant, whereby the Iſraelites became the peculiar people of God, and He their ſupreme ruler and protector. See Exod. iv. 22. Deut. xiv. 1. Jer. xxxi. 9. Hoſea xi. 1. The glory means the ſhechinah, which reſided viſibly among them on the mercy-ſeat. Hence the ark was called the glory. Comp. Pſ. lxxviii. 61. 1 Sam. iv. 21, 22. Ezek. x. 4. xliii. 2, 3. For the covenants, ſee Gen. xvii. 14. Exod. xxxiv. 27. Whether the giving of the law, νομοθεσία, ſignifies the extraordinary giving of the law by God himſelf, or the exact conſtitution of their government, in the moral and judicial part of it, (for the next word λατρεία, the ſervice, ſeems to comprehend the religious worſhip,) this is certain, that in either of theſe ſenſes, it was the peculiar privilege of the Jews, and what no other nation could pretend to. See Locke and Doddridge.

Ver. 5. Whoſe are the fathers, &c.] See Exod. iii. 6—16. Acts vii. 32. How ingenious ſoever the conjecture of Dr. Taylor may be thought, by which he would read Ὧν ὁ Θεὸς ὁ ἐπὶ πάντων, to anſwer to ὧν οἱ πατέρες, whoſe are the Fathers, and whoſe is the God over all, it would doubtleſs be extremely dangerous to follow this, or any other reading of the like kind, unſupported by any critical authority of MSS. or ancient quotations; nor does there appear any authority for rendering

6 Not as though the word of God hath taken none effect. For they are not all Iſrael, which are of Iſrael:

7 Neither becauſe they are the ſeed of Abraham, are they all children: but, In Iſaac ſhall thy ſeed be called.

8 That is, They which are the children of the fleſh, theſe are not the children of God: but the children of the promiſe are counted for the ſeed.

9 For this is the word of promiſe, At this time will I come, and Sarah ſhall have a ſon.

10 And not only this; but when Rebecca alſo had conceived by one, even by our father Iſaac;

11 (For the children being not yet born, neither having done any good or evil, that the purpoſe of God according to election might ſtand, not of works, but of him that calleth;)

Ver. 6. Ch. iii. 3. Ch. ii. 28, 29. iv. 12, 16. Gal. vi. 16.—V. 7. Gal. iv. 23. Gen. xxi. 12. Hebr. xi. 18.—V. 8. Gal. iv. 28. V. 9. Gen. xviii. 10.—V. 10. Gen. xxv. 21.—V. 11. Ch. iv. 17.

dering the laſt clauſe God bleſſed for ever: We muſt therefore conſider this text as a proof of Chriſt's proper divinity, which the oppoſers of that doctrine have never been able to anſwer; though common ſenſe muſt teach, what Chriſtians have always believed, that it is not with reſpect to the Father, but to the created world, that this auguſt title is given to our Lord. Comp. 1 Cor. xv. 27, &c. Proclus (de Fide, p. 53.) eſteemed the verſe before us ſo clear a proof of the divinity of Chriſt, that he ſays, "It ſhuts and walls up every avenue of calumny or reproach;" and Theophylact conſiders it as a paſſage which muſt put Arius to ſhame, as St. Paul expreſly declares Chriſt to be God over all. This will appear ſtill more plainly, if we recollect that it was a Jewiſh cuſtom, whenever the prieſt mentioned the name of God in the ſanctuary, for the people to ſay, "Bleſſed be the name and glory of his kingdom for ever and ever." The words uſed ch. i. 25. are an abridgment of this form. Similar to it is the doxology at the end of the Lord's prayer, and ch. xi. 36. of this Epiſtle. In all theſe and in other places, the giving glory being an acknowledgment of the eternal God, and in ſeveral of them being applied peculiarly to Chriſt, is a convincing proof of his Godhead. Chriſtians have adopted two imitations of this form, applying it to Chriſt; one, in bowing at the name of Jeſus; the other, in ſaying, "Glory be to thee, O Lord!" after the reading of the Goſpel. See Hammond, Waterland, Doddridge, Taylor, and Locke.

Ver. 6. The word of God] The word of promiſe. See ver. 9. and ch. iii. 3. St. Paul urges, that they are not all Iſrael which are of Iſrael, as a reaſon to prove that the promiſe of God failed not to have its effect, though the body of the Jewiſh nation had rejected Jeſus Chriſt, and therefore were naturally rejected by God from being any longer his people. The reaſoning ſtands thus: "The poſterity of Jacob, or Iſrael, were not thoſe alone who were to make that Iſrael, or that choſen people of God, which were intended in the promiſe made to Abraham, Gen. xvii. 7, 8. Others, beſides the deſcendants of Jacob were to be taken into this Iſrael, to conſtitute the people of God under the Goſpel; and therefore the calling and coming in of the Gentiles was a completion of that promiſe:" And then he adds, in the next verſe, "Neither were all the poſterity of Abraham comprehended in that promiſe; that thoſe who were taken-in in the time of the Meſſiah to make the Iſrael of God, were not taken-in becauſe they were the natural deſcendants from Abraham, nor did the Jews claim it from all his race:" and this he proves by the limitation of the promiſe to Abraham's ſeed by Iſaac only. He does all this to ſhew the right of the Gentiles to that promiſe, if they believed; ſince that promiſe did not concern only the natural deſcendants either of Abraham or Jacob, but thoſe only who were of the faith of their father Abraham, of whomſoever deſcended. See ch. iv. 11—17. Locke. Dr. Waterland renders the laſt clauſe of this verſe, For not all they that are of Iſrael, are Iſrael.

Ver. 7. But, In Iſaac ſhall thy ſeed be called] It ſhould be conſidered and well noted, that the Apoſtle, in this and the following quotations, doth not give us the whole of the text which he intends ſhould be taken into his argument, but only a hint or reference to the paſſages to which they belong; directing us to recollect or peruſe the whole paſſage, and there view and judge of the force of his argument. That he is ſo to be underſtood, appears from the concluſion he draws, ver. 16. So then it is not of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth, but of God that ſheweth mercy. In his arguments, ver. 7, 8, &c. he ſays not one word of Abraham's willing Iſhmael to be the ſeed in whom the promiſe might be fulfilled, nor of Iſaac's willing Eſau, nor of Moſes's willing and interceding that the Iſraelites might be ſpared, nor of Eſau's running for veniſon; but by introducing theſe particulars into his concluſion, he gives us to underſtand, that his quotations are to be taken in connection with the whole ſtory of which they are a part. The ſame thing may be ſaid concerning his concluſion, ver. 18. Whom he will, he hardeneth.—Hardeneth is not in his argument, but it is in the concluſion; therefore, &c. The generality of Jews were well verſed in the Scriptures, and a hint was ſufficient to revive the memory of a whole paſſage. See Taylor.

Ver. 8. The children of God] That is, the people of God. See ver. 26.

Ver. 11. Neither having done good or evil] Theſe words may poſſibly have been added by St. Paul, the more expreſly to obviate an objection of the Jews, who might be ready to ſay, that Eſau was rejected becauſe he was wicked; as they did of Iſhmael, that he was rejected becauſe he was the Son of a bond-woman.

The principal thing which requires to be ſettled in this chapter is, What kind of election and reprobation the Apoſtle is here diſcourſing about? Whether election, by the abſolute decree and purpoſe of God to eternal life, and reprobation, by a like abſolute decree, to eternal miſery; or only election to the preſent privileges and external advantages of the kingdom of God in this world; and reprobation, or rejection, as it ſignifies the not being favoured with thoſe privileges and advantages? And it appears demonſtrably that the Apoſtle is diſcourſing of the latter election and rejection, and not the former: For, I. The ſubject of his argument are manifeſtly the privileges enumerated ver. 4, 5. from which he ſuppoſes the Jews were fallen or would fall; or that for a long time they would be deprived of the benefit of them: for it is with regard to the loſs of thoſe privileges that he is ſo much concerned for his brethren, and kinſmen according to the fleſh, ver. 2, 3.; and it is with reference to their being ſtripped of thoſe privileges, that he vindicates the word and righteouſneſs of God, ver. 6—24. Not as though the word of God had taken no effect, or failed, &c. proving that God, according to his purpoſe of election, was free to confer them upon any branch of Abraham's ſeed. Conſequently, thoſe privileges were the ſingular bleſſings which, by the purpoſe of God, according to election, not of works, but of him that calleth, were conferred upon Jacob's poſterity. But thoſe privileges were only ſuch as the whole body of the Iſraelites enjoyed in this world, while they were the church and people of God, and ſuch privileges as they might afterwards loſe, or be deprived of; therefore the election of Jacob's poſterity to thoſe privileges was not abſolute election to eternal life. II. Agreeably to the purpoſe of God according to election, it was ſaid to Rebecca, The elder ſhall ſerve the younger; meaning, the poſterity of the elder and the younger. For, Gen. xxv. 23, the Lord ſaid unto her, two nations are in thy womb, and two manner of people ſhall be ſeparated from thy bowels; and the one people ſhall be ſtronger than the other people, and the elder ſhall ſerve the younger. Theſe are the words which ſignify the purpoſe of God according to election. Therefore the election refers to Jacob's poſterity, or the whole nation of Iſrael; but the whole nation of Iſrael were not abſolutely elected to eternal life: Therefore, &c.—III. Agreeably to the purpoſe of God, according to election, it was ſaid to Rebecca, the elder ſhall ſerve the younger; but to ſerve, in Scripture, never ſignifies to be eternally damned in the world to come; conſequently the oppoſite bleſſing, beſtowed upon the poſterity of the younger, could not be eternal ſalvation, but ſome privileges in his life. Therefore the purpoſe according to election refers to ſuch privileges. IV. The election mentioned by the Apoſtle, is not of works, but of the mere will of God, who calls or invites. But eternal life is always in Scripture ſaid to be of works, though not of works alone. V. The election here ſpoken of, took place firſt in Abraham and his ſeed, before his ſeed were born; and then (ſecluding Iſhmael and all his poſterity) in Iſaac and his ſeed, before they were born; and then (ſecluding Eſau and his poſterity) in Jacob and his ſeed, before they were born. But the Scripture now here repreſents eternal life, as beſtowed upon any family or race of men in this manner. Therefore, &c.—VI. Veſſels of mercy (ver. 23.) are manifeſtly oppoſed to veſſels of wrath, ver. 22. The veſſels of mercy are the whole body of the Jews and Gentiles, who were called or invited into the kingdom of God under the Goſpel, ver. 24. conſequently the veſſels of wrath are the whole body of the unbelieving Jews. So, ver. 30, 31. the whole body of believing Gentiles, who, according to God's purpoſe of election, had attained juſtification, are oppoſed to the whole body of the Iſraelites who came ſhort of it:—But men ſhall not be received to eternal life, or ſubjected to eternal condemnation at the laſt day, in collective bodies; but according as particular perſons in thoſe bodies have acted well or ill. Therefore, &c.—VII. Whoever carefully peruſes ch. ix, x, xi. will find, that thoſe who have not believed, ch. xi. 31. are the preſent rejected Jews, or that Iſrael to whom blindneſs hath happened in part, ver. 25;—the ſame who fell, and on whom God hath ſhewn ſeverity, ver. 22; the ſame with the natural branches, whom God ſpared not, ver. 21; who were broken off from the olive-tree, ver. 20, 19, 17; who were caſt away, ver. 15; who were diminiſhed and fallen, ver. 12; who had ſtumbled, ver. 11; who were a diſobedient and gainſaying people, ch. x. 21; who, being ignorant of God's righteouſneſs, went about to eſtabliſh their own, ver. 3. Becauſe they ſought righteouſneſs, not by faith, but as it were by the works of the law, ch. ix. 32. and therefore had not attained to the law of righteouſneſs, ver. 31. Theſe ſame people, ſpoken of in all theſe places, are the veſſels of wrath fitted for deſtruction, ver. 22; and the ſame for whom St. Paul had great heavineſs and continual ſorrow in his heart; ver. 2, 3. In ſhort, they are the unbelieving nation, or people of 12 It was ſaid unto her, The elder ſhall ſerve the younger.

13 As it is written, Jacob have I loved, but Eſau have I hated.

14 What ſhall we ſay then? Is there unrighteouſneſs with God? God forbid.

15 For he ſaith to Moſes, I will have mercy on whom I will have mercy, and I will have compaſſion on whom I will have compaſſion.

16 So then, it is not of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth, but of God that ſheweth mercy.

17 For the ſcripture ſaith unto Pharaoh, Even for this ſame purpoſe have I raiſed thee

Ver. 12. Gen. xxv. 23. Or, greater. Or, leſſer.—V. 13. Mal. i. 2, 3.—V. 14. Deut. xxxii. 4. 2 Chron. xix. 7. Job xxxiv. 10. Pſ. xcii. 15.—V. 15. Exod. xxxiii. 19.—V. 17. See Gal. iii. 8, 22. Exod. ix. 16.

Iſrael; and it is with regard to the reprobation or rejection of this people, that he is arguing and vindicating the truth, juſtice, and wiſdom of God in the preſent chapter. Now if we turn back and review thoſe three chapters, we ſhall find that the Apoſtle ch. x. 1. heartily deſires and prays, that thoſe ſame reprobated and rejected people of Iſrael might be ſaved; he affirms that they had not ſo ſtumbled as to fall finally and irrecoverably, ch. xi. 11; that they ſhould again have a fulneſs, ver. 12. that they ſhould be received again into the church; ver. 15. that a holineſs ſtill belonged to them; ver. 16. that if they did not ſtill abide in unbelief, they ſhould be grafted into their own olive-tree again; ver. 23, 24. and that blindneſs was happened to them only for a time, till the fulneſs of the Gentiles be come in; ver. 25. and then he proves from Scripture, that all Iſrael, all this nation, at preſent under blindneſs, ſhall be ſaved, ver. 26, 27. That as touching the [original] election, they were ſtill beloved for the ſake of the fathers, the patriarchs; ver. 28. that in their caſe, the gifts and callings of God are without repentance; ver. 29. and that through our, the believing Gentiles' mercy, they ſhall at length obtain mercy. ver. 31. All theſe things are ſpoken of that Iſrael or body of people, concerning whoſe rejection the Apoſtle argues in the ninth chapter; and therefore the rejection about which he here argues, cannot be abſolute reprobation to eternal damnation, but their being, as a nation, ſtripped of thoſe honours and privileges of God's peculiar church and kingdom in this world, to which, at a certain period, they ſhould again be reſtored. But once more, (VIII.) Whoever carefully peruſes thoſe three chapters will find, that the people, who in times paſt believed not God, but have now obtained mercy, through the unbelief of the Jews, (ch. xi. 30.) are the whole body of the believing Gentiles; the ſame who were cut out of the olive-tree which is wild by nature, and were graffed, contrary to nature, into the good olive-tree; ver. 24, 17. the ſame to whom God had ſhewn goodneſs, ver. 22; the world that was reconciled; ver. 15. the Gentiles, who were enriched by the diminiſhing of the Jews; ver. 12. to whom ſalvation came through their fall; ver. 11. who had attained to righteouſneſs, or juſtification, ch. ix. 30. who had not been God's people, nor beloved; but now are his people, beloved, and the children of the living God; ver. 25, 26. See alſo ver. 24, 23, 21. He ſpeaks of the ſame body of men in all thoſe places, namely, of the believing Gentiles principally, but not excluding a ſmall remnant of the believing Jews, who were incorporated with them. And it is this body of men, whoſe calling and election he is proving; in whoſe caſe the purpoſe of God according to election ſtands good; and who are the children of the promiſe counted for ſeed, ver. 8.—They are the election, or the elect. Now concerning this called or elect body of the people, or any particular perſon belonging to this body, the Apoſtle writes thus, in ch. xi. 20—22. "Well, becauſe of unbelief, they, the Jews, were broken off, reprobated, rejected, and thou ſtandeſt, in the church, among God's called or elect, by faith. Be not high-minded, but fear; for if God ſpared not the natural branches, take heed, leſt he alſo ſpare not thee. Behold therefore the goodneſs and ſeverity of God: on them, the Jews, which fell, ſeverity; but towards thee, goodneſs; if thou continue in his goodneſs: otherwiſe, thou alſo ſhalt be cut off, rejected, and reprobated." This proves, that the calling and election, for which the Apoſtle is here urging, is not abſolute election to eternal life, but to the preſent privileges of the church;—the honours and advantages of God's peculiar people: Which election, through unbelief and miſimprovement, may be rendered void, and come to nothing. See Taylor.

Ver. 12, 13. The elder ſhall ſerve the younger] Theſe words, the elder ſhall ſerve the younger, in Gen. xxv. 23. are uſed only in a national ſenſe, and not perſonally; for in this ſenſe the propoſition is not true: which makes it plain that the words Jacob have I loved, and Eſau have I hated, ver. 13. are to be taken alſo in a national ſenſe, for the preference which God gave to the poſterity of one of them to be his people, and poſſeſs the promiſed land. See Deut. vii. 6—8. The word hated is often uſed in Sacred Scripture comparatively, ſignifying only "to poſtpone in our eſteem or kindneſs." I have loved Jacob, and hated Eſau, therefore, can only mean, "I have greatly preferred the former to the latter." See Gen. xxix. 31. Luke xiv. 26. John xii. 25. From the 7th to the 13th verſe the Apoſtle proves to the Jews, that though the promiſe was made to Abraham and his ſeed, yet it was not to all Abraham's poſterity, but God's firſt choice, Iſaac and his poſterity. And then again, when Rebecca had conceived twins by Iſaac, who was but one of the ſons of Abraham, God of his bleſſed pleaſure choſe Jacob the younger, and his poſterity, to be his peculiar people. See Locke and the preceding note. Dr. Doddridge upon the 13th verſe obſerves, that the words there, in connection with the preceding and following, do indeed prove, that God acts with a ſovereign freedom, accountable to none in the diſpenſation of his favours; and conſequentially prove, that it was not upon the foreſight of the obedience and piety of Jacob on the one hand, or the profaneneſs of Eſau on the other, that this preference was given; for then the argument taken from the having actually done neither good nor evil, would be very weak, ſince to an omniſcient God, that which he certainly foreknew would be, is, with regard to his purpoſe of events to ſucceed it, as if it already were. Nevertheleſs it is certain, that the Apoſtle does not here ſpeak of the eternal ſtate of Jacob and Eſau, (whatever ſome may ſuppoſe deducible from what he ſays,) nor does he indeed ſo much ſpeak of the perſons, as of their poſterity, ſince it is plainly to that poſterity that both the prophecies which he quotes in ſupport of his argument refer; Gen. xxv. 23. Malach. i. 2, 3. His laying waſte the heritage of the Edomites for the dragons of the wilderneſs, is ſo different a thing from his appointing the perſon of Eſau to eternal miſery by a mere act of ſovereignty,—without regard to any thing done, or to be done, by him to deſerve it,—that I will rather ſubmit (ſays the Doctor) to any cenſure from my fellow-ſervants, than deal ſo freely with my Maker, as to conclude the one from the other.

Ver. 14, 15. What ſhall we ſay then?] So far the Apoſtle, in this chapter, has conſidered God's chooſing or refuſing any body of men in general, without ſuppoſing them to be corrupt, or to have forfeited the divine favour; but it is evident from the Scripture quotations, that from ver. 15 to 23, he conſiders them in another light; namely, as corrupt, and deſerving of deſtruction; and as ſuch, either pardoned by the pure mercy of God, ver. 15, or devoted to ruin, but ſuffered to continue in a hardened ſtate; ver. 17, 18, &c. which brings his argument to the caſe of the rejected Jews: and it is obſervable, that the Apoſtle arguing here with the Jews, to vindicate the juſtice of God in rejecting them, uſes three ſorts of arguments. The firſt is, the teſtimony of Moſes, concerning God's aſſerting this to himſelf by the right of his ſovereignty, which was enough to ſtop the mouths of the Jews; the ſecond, from reaſon, ver. 19—24. and the third, from his predictions of it to the Jews, and the warning he gave them of it beforehand, ver. 25—29. See Locke and Taylor, and on Exod. xxxiii. 19.

Ver. 16. God that ſheweth mercy] Shewing mercy, and obtaining mercy, are applied to the donation of extraordinary favours and privileges upon a people; ch. xi. 30. 1 Pet. ii. 10. and that it is to be ſo underſtood here, appears from the context. One would imagine that this verſe ſhould have come in immediately after the 13th; but the reaſon why the Apoſtle inſerted it here, moſt probably was, that he might take the affair of Moſes's interceſſion for the Iſraelites into his concluſion, as well as the two foregoing inſtances relating to the ſons of Abraham and Iſaac; for, the inſtance of Moſes's interceſſion, Firſt, with reſpect to his will and earneſt deſire, hath relation to the preceding caſes of Abraham and Iſaac; and ſo it comes into the concluſion in this verſe; and ſecondly, with reſpect to the ſovereign will and pleaſure of God, in continuing to the Iſraelites the favour of being his peculiar people, it has alſo relation by way of contraſt to the ſubſequent caſe of Pharaoh, ver. 17. and ſo comes alſo into the concluſion, ver. 18. This is an example of the Apoſtle's conſulting brevity in arranging and wording his arguments. The paſſage, from ver. 14. may be paraphraſed thus: "And now, what ſhall we ſay to theſe things? Shall we ſuggeſt that God's beſtowing religious privileges in this unequal manner, upon thoſe who otherwiſe are in equal circumſtances, is inconſiſtent with equity and juſtice?—By no means; Ver. 15. I gave a general anſwer to this objection, ch. iii. 6. which I now confirm by the words of God himſelf to Moſes, Exod. xxxiii. 19. after he had declared that he would ſpare the Jews of old, and continue them in the relation of his peculiar people, when they had deſerved to be cut off for their idolatry. I will, ſaith he, make all my goodneſs paſs before thee, &c. as if he had ſaid, "I will make ſuch a diſplay of my perfections, as ſhall convince you I am of a kind and beneficent nature: But know, that I am a debtor to none of my creatures; my benefits and bleſſings are merely from my own good will; nor can any people, much leſs a rebellious people, challenge them as their due in juſtice or equity; and therefore I now ſpare the Jews, not becauſe either you who intercede for them, or they themſelves have any claim upon my favour; but of my own free and ſovereign grace I chooſe to ſhew them mercy and compaſſion." ver. 16. I conclude therefore from theſe three ſeveral inſtances foregoing, that the making, or continuing any body of men the peculiar people of God, is righteouſly determined, not by the judgement, hopes, or wiſhes of men, but by the will and wiſdom of God alone. For Abraham judged that the bleſſing ought, and deſired it might be given to his eldeſt ſon Iſhmael; and Iſaac alſo deſigned it for his firſt-born Eſau: And Eſau, wiſhing and hoping it would be his, readily went a hunting for veniſon, that he might receive it. But they were all fruſtrated; Abraham and Iſaac who willed, and Eſau who ran; for the bleſſing of being a great nation, and his peculiar people, God, of his mere good pleaſure, originally intended firſt for Iſaac, and then for Jacob and his poſterity; and to them it was given. And when by their apoſtaſy they had forfeited this privilege, it was not Moſes' willing, nor any prior obligation God was under, but his own ſovereign mercy, which continued the enjoyment of it." See Taylor, Locke, and Whitby.

Ver. 17. For the Scripture ſaith, &c.] Moreover, &c. MS. and Doddridge.

up, that I might ſhew my power in thee, and that my name might be declared throughout all the earth.

18 Therefore hath he mercy on whom he will have mercy, and whom he will he hardeneth.

19 Thou wilt ſay then unto me, Why doth he yet find fault? For who hath reſiſted his will?

20 Nay but, O man, who art thou that replieſt againſt God? ſhall the thing formed ſay unto him that formed it, Why haſt thou made me thus?

21 Hath not the potter power over the clay, of the ſame lump to make one veſſel unto honour, and another unto diſhonour?

22 What if God, willing to ſhew his wrath, and to make his power known, endured with much long-ſuffering the veſſels of wrath fitted to deſtruction:

23 And that he might make known the

Ver. 20. Or, anſwereſt again, or diſputeſt with God? Iſai. xlv. 9. lxiv. 8.—V. 21. Prov. xvi. 4. Jer. xviii. 6. Wiſd. xv. 7. 2 Tim. ii. 20.—V. 22. 1 Theſſ. v. 9. Or, made up. 1 Pet. ii. 8. Jude 4.—V. 4. Ch. ii. 4. Col. i. 27.

Doddridge. It is plain this is no proof of what immediately goes before; and therefore γὰρ is properly rendered by moreover, which is conſiſtent with making it introductory to what proves ſomething aſſerted at a diſtance, if it come in as a co-ordinate proof. The reader will obſerve, that the Apoſtle does not produce an inſtance of an innocent perſon being made and treated as an object of divine diſpleaſure out of mere ſovereignty; but one of the moſt hardened and notorious ſinners the world ever knew. Inſtead of, I have raiſed thee up, ſome would render the original, I have made thee ſtand, or held thee up: That is, "I have ſupported thee during the former plagues, that I might make thee a more remarkable example of vengeance." But though that may agree with the original Hebrew, and with the verſion of the LXX, yet it doth not ſeem to anſwer to the Greek word uſed by St. Paul. If, as ſome writers ſuppoſe, the Pharaoh here ſpoken of was an Egyptian king who made his way to the throne by treaſon, inceſt, and murder, the words have a ſingular weight conſidered as referring thereto: "I have raiſed thee up to that height of eminence in which thou proudly glorieſt, that I may more conſpicuouſly ſhew forth my power in thee; and that my name, in conſequence of diſtinguiſhed judgements to be righteouſly inflicted upon thee, may be celebrated through all the earth, in the moſt diſtant nations and remoteſt ages." See Locke, Doddridge, and Whitby.

Ver. 18. Therefore hath he mercy, &c.] "Therefore, that his name and power may be made known, and taken notice of in all the earth, he is kind and bountiful to one nation, and ſuffers another to go on obſtinately in their oppoſition to him; that his taking them off by ſome ſignal calamity, and the ruin brought on them by the viſible hand of his providence, may be ſeen and acknowledged to be an effect of their ſtanding out againſt him; as in the caſe of Pharaoh. For this end he is bountiful to whom he will be bountiful, and whom he will he permits to make ſuch an uſe of his forbearance towards them, as to perſiſt obdurate in their provocation of him, and draw on themſelves exemplary deſtruction." See Locke, Whitby, and particularly the note on Exod. ix. 34, 35.

Ver. 19. Why doth he yet find fault?] This objection is put a little differently, ch. iii. 7. There it is, "If God's faithfulneſs is glorified by my wickedneſs, why am I condemned as a ſinner?" Here it is, "If God for his own glory determines to ſuffer us to go on in hardneſs and infidelity, why doth he find fault with us?" See the reply in the next verſe.

Ver. 20. Nay but, O man, &c.] St. Paul ſhews here, that the nations of the world, who are by a better right in the hands and diſpoſal of God, than the clay in the power of the potter, may without calling his juſtice in queſtion be made great and glorious, or be pulled down and brought into contempt as he pleaſes. That he here ſpeaks of men nationally, and not perſonally, in reference to their eternal ſtate, is evident not only from the beginning of this chapter, where he expreſſes his concern for the rejection of the Jews, and from the inſtances he brings of Iſaac, Jacob, Eſau, and Pharaoh; but it appears alſo very clearly from the verſes immediately following: where, by the veſſels of wrath fitted to deſtruction, (keeping up the metaphor of the potter) he manifeſtly means the nation of the Jews; who were now grown ripe for the deſtruction which God would bring upon them; and by veſſels of mercy, the Chriſtian church, gathered out of a ſmall number of converted Jews, and the reſt made up of Gentiles; who, together, were from thenceforwards to be the people of God, inſtead of the Jewiſh nation, ver. 24. The ſenſe therefore of this and the following verſes is this: "How dareſt thou, O man, to call God to account, and queſtion his juſtice, in caſting off his ancient people the Jews? What if God, willing to puniſh that ſinful people, and to do it ſo as to make his power known and taken notice of, (and why might not he raiſe them up for that purpoſe, as well as Pharaoh and the Egyptians?)—What, I ſay, if God bore with them a long time, even after they had deſerved his wrath, as he did with Pharaoh, that his hand might be the more eminently viſible in their deſtruction; and that alſo, at the ſame time, he might with the more glory make known his goodneſs and mercy to the Gentiles; whom, according to his purpoſe, he was ready to receive into the glorious ſtate of being his people under the Goſpel?" See Locke.

Ver. 21. Hath not the potter power, &c.?] See Jer. xviii. and Ecclus. xxxiii. 13. It is obſervable, that Plutarch uſes the very ſame ſimilitude with this before us; and Ariſtophanes, among other contemptuous expreſſions, by which he deſcribes the frailty of human creatures, calls them πλασματα πηλȣ, veſſels of clay. A veſſel unto honour, or to diſhonour, ſignifies a thing deſigned by the maker to an honourable or diſhonourable uſe; nor can any reaſon be given why it may not deſign nations, as well as perſons, and honour and proſperity in this world, as well as eternal happineſs and glory, or miſery and puniſhment in the world to come. In common reaſon this figurative expreſſion ought to follow the ſenſe of the context. But Jeremiah xviii. 6, 7. from whence this inſtance of a potter is taken, ſhews the word veſſel to have a temporal ſenſe, and to relate to the nation of the Jews. See the preceding note, Locke, and Bos.

Ver. 22. What if God, willing, &c.] See on ch. i. 18. Immediately after the inſtance of Pharaoh, whom God declared that he raiſed up to ſhew his power in him, ver. 17. it is ſubjoined, ver. 18. And whom he will he hardeneth; plainly with reference to the ſtory of Pharaoh, who is ſaid to harden himſelf, and whom God is ſaid to harden, as may be ſeen in the parallel places of Exodus. What God's part in hardening is, we find in the words, Endured with much long ſuffering. God ſends Moſes to Pharaoh with ſigns; Pharaoh's magicians do the like; and ſo he is not prevailed with. God ſends a plague; whilſt the plague is upon him Pharaoh is mollified, and promiſes to let the people go: But as ſoon as God takes off the plague, he returns to his obſtinacy, and refuſes; and this repeatedly. God's being intreated by him to withdraw the ſeverity of his hand, his gracious compliance with Pharaoh's deſire, was what God did in the caſe; and this was all goodneſs and bounty. But Pharaoh and his people made that ill uſe of his forbearance and long ſuffering, as ſtill to harden themſelves the more for God's goodneſs and gentleneſs to them; till they brought on themſelves exemplary deſtruction, from the viſible power and hand of God employed in it. This behaviour of theirs God foreſaw, and ſo made uſe of their obſtinate temper for his own glory, as he himſelf declares, Exod. vii. 3—5. viii. 18, &c. The Apoſtle, by the inſtance of a potter's power over his clay, having demonſtrated that God, by his dominion and ſovereignty, had a right to ſet up or pull down what nation he pleaſed, and might, without any injuſtice, take one race into his favour to be his peculiar people, or reject them as he thought fit,—In this verſe he applies it to the ſubject in hand; namely, the rejection of the Jewiſh nation; whereof he ſpeaks here in terms which plainly make a parallel between this and his dealing with the Egyptians, mentioned ver. 17. and therefore that ſtory will beſt explain this verſe, which will receive its full light from thence. For it ſeems a ſomewhat ſtrange ſort of reaſoning to ſay that God, to ſhew his wrath, endured with much long-ſuffering thoſe who deſerved his wrath, and were fit for deſtruction. But he who will read in Exodus God's dealings with Pharaoh and the Egyptians,—and how he paſſed over provocation upon provocation, and patiently endured thoſe who by their firſt refuſal, nay, by their former cruelty and oppreſſion of the Iſraelites, deſerved his wrath, and were fitted for deſtruction, that by a more ſignal vengeance on the Egyptians, and glorious deliverance of the Iſraelites, he might make his power and his goodneſs known,—will eaſily ſee the ſtrong and natural ſenſe of this and the following verſe. See Locke, Taylor, and Doddridge.

Ver. 23. And that he might make known] Mr. Locke thinks the ſenſe of the place requires that the and ſhould be left out, as it is in ſome manuſcripts; But the and ſeems eſſential to the text, and to the Apoſtle's meaning; as it connects the ſecond reaſon, why God delayed the deſtruction of the Jewiſh nation, with the firſt reaſon given ver. 22. thus;—God endured with much long-ſuffering the veſſels of wrath, firſt, to ſhew his wrath, and to make his power known; and alſo, 2dly, that he might make known the riches of his glory on the veſſels of mercy. It is added, which he had before prepared unto glory. See Col. i. and particularly ver. 27. The Jews were fitted for deſtruction long before; but the fitteſt time to deſtroy them was, after he had prepared the believing Gentiles unto glory. For the rod of the Meſſiah's ſtrength was to be ſent out of Sion, Pſ cx. 2. The Jewiſh nation was to ſupply the firſt preachers of the Goſpel; and from Jeruſalem their ſound was to go forth into all the earth. Therefore the Jewiſh ſtate, under all its corruptions, was to be preſerved till the Meſſiah came, and, even till the Goſpel, propagated by the Apoſtles, had taken deep root in the Gentile world. Another thing which rendered the time when the Jewiſh polity was overthrown the moſt proper, was this; becauſe then the immediate occaſion of it was the extenſiveneſs of the divine grace. The extenſiveneſs of God's grace occaſioned that infidelity of the Jews, which filled up riches of his glory on the veſſels of mercy, which he had afore prepared unto glory?

24 Even us whom he hath called, not of the Jews only, but alſo of the Gentiles.

25 As he ſaith alſo in Oſee, I will call them My people, which were not my people; and her, Beloved, which was not beloved.

26 And it ſhall come to paſs, that in the place where it was ſaid unto them, Ye are not my people; there ſhall they be called, The children of the living God.

27 Eſaias alſo crieth concerning Iſrael, Though the number of the children of Iſrael be as the ſand of the ſea, a remnant ſhall be ſaved.

28 For he will finiſh the work, and cut it ſhort in righteouſneſs: becauſe a ſhort work will the Lord make upon the earth.

29 And as Eſaias ſaid before, Except the Lord of ſabaoth had left us a ſeed, we had been as Sodoma, and been made like unto Gomorrha.

30 What ſhall we ſay then? That the Gentiles which followed not after righteouſneſs, have attained to righteouſneſs, even the righteouſneſs which is of faith.

31 But Iſrael, which followed after the law of righteouſneſs, hath not attained to the law of righteouſneſs.

32 Wherefore? Becauſe they ſought it, not by faith, but as it were by the works of the law. For they ſtumbled at that ſtumbling-ſtone;

33 As it is written, Behold, I lay in Sion a ſtumbling-ſtone, and rock of offence: and whoſoever believeth on him ſhall not be aſhamed.

CHAP. X.

The ſcripture ſheweth the difference betwixt the righteouſneſs of the law, and that of faith: that none, whether Jew or Gentile, who believe, ſhall be confounded; and that the Gentiles ſhall receive the word, and believe. Iſrael was not ignorant of theſe things.

BRethren, my heart's deſire and prayer to God for Iſrael is, that they might be ſaved.

2 For I bear them record that they have a zeal of God, but not according to knowledge.

3 For they being ignorant of God's righteouſneſs, and going about to eſtabliſh their own righteouſneſs, have not ſubmitted themſelves unto the righteouſneſs of God.

4 For Chriſt is the end of the law for righteouſneſs to every one that believeth.

Ver. 25. Hoſ. ii. 23. 1 Pet. ii. 10.—V. 26. Hoſ. i. 10.—V. 27. Iſai. x. 22, 23. Ch. xi. 5.—V. 28. Or, the account.—V. 29. Iſai. i. 9. Lam. iii. 22 Iſai. xiii. 19. Jer. l. 40.—V. 30. Ch. i. 17.—V. 31. Ch. x. 2. xi. 7. Gal. v. 4.—V. 32. Luke ii. 34. 1 Cor. i. 23.—V. 33. Iſai. viii. 14. xxviii. 16. Matth. xxi. 42. 1 Pet. ii. 6, 7, 8, Ch. x. 11. Or, confounded.——V. 2. Acts xxi. 20. xxii. 3. Gal. i. 14. iv. 17. See ch. ix. 31.—V. 3. Ch. i. 17. Phil. iii. 9.—V. 4. Gal. iii. 24.

the meaſure of their iniquity; ver. 33. ch. x. 3. xi. 11, 12, 15, 28, 30. Thus they were diminiſhed by that abundance which hath enriched us; and ſo the grace of God was illuſtrated; or ſo God made known the riches of his glory on the veſſels of mercy. See Locke, and Taylor.

Ver. 25, 26. As he ſaith alſo in Hoſea] Here are two quotations out of the prophet Hoſea,—firſt, ch. i. 10. where, immediately after God had rejected the ten tribes, ver. 9. (Ye are not my people, and I will not be your God,) it is added, Yet the number of the children of Iſrael ſhall be as the ſand of the ſea, which cannot be meaſured nor numbered; And it ſhall come to paſs, that in the place where it was ſaid unto them, Ye are not my people; there it ſhall be ſaid unto them, Ye are the ſons of the living God. As if he had ſaid, "The decreaſe of numbers in the church, by God's utterly taking away the ten tribes, ver. 6. ſhall be well ſupplied by what ſhall afterwards come to paſs by calling the Gentiles into it. They who had been the people of God, ſhould become Lo ammi,—not my people: On the contrary, they who had been Lo ammi,—not my people, ſhould become the children of the living God." Again, Hoſ. ii. 23. I will ſow her [the Jewiſh church] unto me in the earth; alluding, probably, to the diſperſion of the Jews over all the Roman empire; which proved a fruitful cauſe of preparing the Gentiles for the reception of the Goſpel;—And, or moreover, I will have mercy on her, [the body of believing Gentiles] that had not obtained mercy. See Taylor, Jeffery's "True Grounds," p. 149. and the notes on Hoſea.

Ver. 27, 28. A remnant ſhall be ſaved] That is, Only a remnant. So ch. xiv. 2. Eats only herbs, John xviii. 8. If ye ſeek me, (that is, only me) let theſe go their way. Dr. Waterland renders the clauſe, But a few remaining ſhall be ſaved. Mr. Locke would tranſlate the next verſe, For the Lord, finiſhing and contracting the account, in righteouſneſs, ſhall make a ſhort or ſmall remainder in the earth. A metaphor taken from an account, wherein the matter is ſo ordered, that the overplus or remainder, ſtanding ſtill upon the account is very little. Dr. Waterland tranſlates it: For he will finiſh and adjuſt the account in righteouſneſs; becauſe a preciſe account (or thorough execution) will the Lord make upon the earth. See on Iſai. 22, 23. and comp. ch. xxviii. 22. and Dan. ix. 27. xi. 36.

Ver. 29. Except the Lord of Sabaoth, &c.] Lord of hoſts, &c. Wat. Inſtead of a ſeed, the words in Iſaiah are, a very ſmall remnant.

Ver. 30, 31. The Gentiles which followed not, &c.] Righteouſneſs, or juſtification, is to be underſtood here, as ch. iv. 3, 5. Gen. xv. 6. It is the juſtification by faith, to which the Apoſtle from the beginning of the Epiſtle has been arguing and proving that the believing Gentiles have a right, and which they have attained; but which the unbelieving Jews have not attained, becauſe they ſought it not by faith, but by the works of the law, ver. 32. Therefore what is meant by attaining to this juſtification, will be clearly underſtood, if we conſider that the Apoſtle is here giving the reaſon why the Jews were caſt off from being God's people, and the Gentiles admitted to that privilege. This demonſtrates that he doth not mean that juſtification, which puts particular perſons into the ſtate of eternal ſalvation, but that juſtification which gives them the preſent bleſſings, privileges, means, and honours of God's church and kingdom: For all the believing Gentiles in a body attained to this juſtification; but no one will ſuppoſe, that they all in a body attained to eternal ſalvation. See Locke, Taylor, and Whitby.

Ver. 33. A ſtumbling-ſtone] What the unbelieving Jews ſtumbled at, St. Peter informs us, 1 Epiſt. ii. 8. They ſtumbled at the word: They were diſguſted at the Goſpel: The word which Chriſt and his Apoſtles preached did not pleaſe them. It contradicted all their pre-conceived opinions; and inſtead of continuing them to be the only people of God in all the world, and their law and religious ceremonies the only rule of a place and intereſt in the kingdom of God, it entirely aboliſhed the law in this reſpect; and freely took men of any nation into the kingdom of God, without any regard to it, only upon faith in Chriſt. This was the word,—the word of univerſal grace, at which the Jews ſtumbled. See Iſai. viii. 14. ch. xxviii. 16. 1 Cor. i. 23. Taylor, and Whitby; and for Reflections, the end of the next chapter.

Chap. X. Ver. 2. That they have a zeal for God] See this zeal of theirs for God deſcribed Acts xxi. 27—31. and xxii. 3.

Ver. 3. God's righteouſneſs] That is, the method of ſalvation which is provided for mankind by the mercy and wiſdom of God.

Ver. 4. Chriſt is the end of the law, &c.] Here the Jew's argument is ſuppoſed. St. Paul, who was well acquainted with the Jewiſh notions, and had often diſputed with them, knowing well what the Jew would alledge, for the ſake of brevity puts in his anſwer, without formally ſtating the Jew's argument; and yet from the Apoſtle we may probably collect what was the Jew's argument. He inſiſted that Chriſt was the end or deſign of the law; that is to ſay, that the eſtabliſhment of the Meſſiah's kingdom, and an intereſt in the privileges of it, depended upon, or was the reſult of their ſubmiſſion to, or obſervance of the law of Moſes. Againſt this the Apoſtle argues, that 5 For Moſes deſcribeth the righteouſneſs which is of the law, That the man which doeth thoſe things ſhall live by them.

6 But the righteouſneſs which is of faith, ſpeaketh on this wiſe, Say not in thine heart, Who ſhall aſcend into heaven? (that is, to bring Chriſt down from above:)

7 Or, Who ſhall deſcend into the deep? (that is, to bring up Chriſt again from the dead.)

8 But what ſaith it? The word is nigh thee, even in thy mouth, and in thy heart: that is, the word of faith, which we preach;

9 That if thou ſhalt confeſs with thy mouth the Lord Jeſus, and ſhalt believe in thine heart, that God hath raiſed him from the dead, thou ſhalt be ſaved.

10 For with the heart man believeth unto righteouſneſs; and with the mouth confeſſion is made unto ſalvation.

11 For the ſcripture ſaith, Whoſoever believeth on him ſhall not be aſhamed.

12 For there is no difference between the Jew and the Greek: for the ſame Lord over all, is rich unto all that call upon him.

13 For whoſoever ſhall call upon the name of the Lord ſhall be ſaved.

Ver. 5. Lev. xviii. 5. Ezek. xx. 11, 13, 21. Gal. iii. 12.—V. 6. Deut. xxx. 12, 13.—V. 8. Deut. xxx. 14.—V. 9. Matth. x. 32. Acts viii. 37.—V. 11. Iſai. xxviii. 16. xlix. 23. Jer. xvii. 7. Ch. ix. 33.—V. 12. Ch. iii. 22. Acts x. 36. Ch. iii. 29. 1 Tim. ii. 5. Epheſ. i. 7. ii. 4, 7.—V. 13. Joel ii. 32. Acts ii. 21. Acts ix. 14.

that by obedience to the law the Jews could never have procured the coming and kingdom of Chriſt, or redemption by him. In that way, (ver. 6, 7.) they could never have brought down Chriſt from heaven, or have raiſed him from the dead; it is the grace and power of God alone muſt do that: which they have done; and in order to an intereſt in the privileges and bleſſings of his kingdom in this world, have left nothing on our part to be done, but faith in the heart, and a profeſſion ſuitable to it. Comp. ver. 9. and Gal. iii. 23—25. This and the following verſes may be paraphraſed thus: "Thus far indeed the Jews think juſtly, that the end and deſign of the law is to introduce the kingdom and diſpenſation of Chriſt the Meſſiah: not, as they ſuppoſe, to procure the bleſſings of his kingdom by the obſervance of the law; but Chriſt is the end of the law, as the law leads and obliges us to fly to that juſtification, or way of life and ſalvation, which is open and free to all who believe. ver. 5. For the way of gaining a title to life and ſalvation by the law, as Moſes deſcribes it, is perfect ſinleſs obedience; a way in which no people in the world, not the Jews themſelves, can hope to procure the bleſſings of the kingdom of the Meſſiah. But the way of ſalvation, which is by faith in Chriſt, runs in a quite different ſtrain: ver. 6, 7. It forbids the ſuppoſition of procuring the grace of redemption by any works of righteouſneſs which we can do: for, in order to our redemption, Chriſt was firſt to come down from heaven, and to be raiſed from the dead after he was crucified, otherwiſe he could be no Saviour to us. And what man, through the perfection of his obedience to the law, could acquire either power or intereſt enough to bring Chriſt down from the heavenly manſions to this earth; or to looſe the bands of death, reſtore him again to life, and exalt him to God's right-hand, to be the author and captain of our ſalvation? Such mighty effects are not to be accompliſhed by our works; and therefore the way of ſalvation by faith very rightly teaches us to diſclaim ſuch vain impracticable ſchemes. On the contrary, it inſtructs us, ver. 8. that the mercy and kindneſs of God our Saviour hath cleared all difficulties on his part, and reduced the affair to the loweſt and eaſieſt conditions on ours, by leaving nothing for us to do, but what may be performed by our own heart and mouth:—I mean, that faith which I preach among the Gentiles, and which is ſet forth, ver. 9." It may be proper to obſerve here, that the Apoſtle doth not quote Moſes, Deut. xxx. 12—14. by way of proving the point, but only alludes to the manner of expreſſion; as what might with no leſs, if not with greater propriety be applied to the Goſpel than the law. This appears from the explication he inſerts, as, that is, to bring down Chriſt from heaven;—that is, to bring up Chriſt again from the dead;—that is, the word of faith which we preach. Which explication he adds to ſhew, that though he uſes the words of Moſes, yet he doth not ſuppoſe that Moſes is diſcourſing upon the ſame ſubject with himſelf. See Taylor, and Mr. Locke, who gives a different expoſition of theſe verſes, which, for the ſatisfaction of the reader, ſhall be mentioned on ver. 9.

Ver. 8. The word is nigh thee] Ῥῆμα often ſignifies word, but ſometimes affair, buſineſs; and ſo doth דבר, deber in the Hebrew,—the word uſed by Moſes, Deut. xxx. 14. In this place the meaning ſeems to be, the affair is nigh thee, (that is, is rendered eaſy and feaſible,) even in thy mouth, and in thy heart; that is, the affair of faith, which we preach. See Matth. xviii. 16. Mark ix. 32. Luke i. 37, 65. ii. 15. xviii. 34. 2 Cor. xii. 4. xiii. 1.

Ver. 9. That if thou ſhalt confeſs, &c.] St. Paul had told them, ver. 4. (ſays Mr. Locke) that the end of the law was to bring them to life by faith in Chriſt, that they might be juſtified, and ſo be ſaved. To convince them of this, he brings three verſes out of the book of the law itſelf, declaring that the way to life was by hearkening to that word, which was ready in their mouth, and in their heart; and that therefore they had no reaſon to reject Jeſus, the Chriſt, becauſe he died, was removed into heaven, and remote from them. Their very law propoſed life to them by ſomething nigh them, which might lead them to their Deliverer; namely, by words and doctrines, which might always be at hand, in their mouths, and in their hearts, and ſo lead them to Chriſt; that is, to that faith in him which the Apoſtle preached. We may obſerve further from this place, that the expectation of the Jews was, that the promiſed Meſſiah ſhould be their deliverer; in which they were right: but that which they expected to be delivered from at his appearing, was the power and dominion of temporal, not ſpiritual enemies. When our Saviour came, the time predicted for his coming was compleated, and the miracles which he did concurred to perſuade that he was their Meſſiah; but his obſcure birth and mean appearance did not correſpond with thoſe ideas they had formed of his ſplendour. This, with his prediction of the deſtruction of their temple and ſtate, ſet the rulers againſt him, and held the body of the Jews in ſuſpenſe till his crucifixion, which made them wholly averſe to him. They gave up all thoughts of being delivered by him; he was gone; they ſaw him no more;—and it was paſt a doubt with them, that a dead man could not be the Meſſiah or deliverer even of thoſe who believed in him. It is againſt theſe prejudices that this and the preceding verſes ſeem directed, wherein St. Paul teaches them, that there was no need to bring the Meſſiah from heaven or the grave, and introduce him perſonally among them; for the deliverance he was to work for them, and the ſalvation he was to procure, was ſalvation from ſin and its condemnation; and that was to be had by believing and openly avowing him to be Meſſiah their king, and that he was raiſed from the dead; for by this they would be ſaved, without his perſonal preſence amongſt them. We juſt remark further, that the doctrine of the Lord Jeſus being raiſed from the dead, is certainly one of the moſt fundamental articles of the Chriſtian life; yet there ſeems another reaſon why St. Paul here annexes ſalvation to the belief of it; which may be found, ver. 7. where he teaches, that it was neceſſary for their ſalvation that they ſhould have Chriſt out of his grave perſonally preſent amongſt them; and here he gives them the reaſon, becauſe if they did but own him for their Lord, and believe that he was raiſed, that ſufficed; they ſhould be ſaved. See Locke.

Ver. 10. For with the heart, &c.] Faith, and an open avowed profeſſion of the Goſpel, are required by our Saviour, Mark xvi. 16.

Ver. 11. For the Scripture ſaith, &c.] In this and the two preceding verſes, the Apoſtle intends to ſhew the nature and efficacy of Goſpel faith and profeſſion, in oppoſition to the mean opinion the Jew might have of them, in compariſon with the ſeveral branches of his dependance; and which, in his eye, appeared much more honourable and magnificent. It is not neceſſary to ſpend time in ſettling the preciſe difference between believing with the heart, and confeſſing or profeſſing with the mouth. Thereby the whole of true religion, both in principle and practice, is denoted;—the root in the heart, and the fruit in the life: Only profeſſing with the mouth may be particularly mentioned, becauſe that gives a right to the preſent privileges of Chriſt's kingdom:—None but profeſſed believers have right to a place and ſtanding in the church of God. Nor need we be curious to inquire into the diſtinction between righteouſneſs or juſtification, and ſalvation. The Apoſtle's deſign, it ſeems evidently, is to expreſs all the bleſſings which God will beſtow in this and the future world: that the one or the other of theſe comprehends the preſent bleſſings and privileges of the kingdom of God, none perhaps will queſtion: and that the one or the other taketh in final and eternal ſalvation will appear, if we conſider that the 11th verſe, (whoſoever believeth, &c.) certainly refers to final ſalvation, or the full accompliſhment of Chriſtian faith and hope. See ch. v. 5. But this quotation in the 11th verſe is intended to confirm at leaſt one of the clauſes in the foregoing verſe, and therefore one of theſe clauſes muſt refer to the final iſſue of faith in everlaſting life. Faith is the grand principle of the Goſpel; a profeſſed faith intitles us to preſent privileges; and faith, as a principle in the heart, diſcerning, valuing, and improving the grace of God in the Redemer, and enabling us to reſiſt temptation, to be ſteadfaſt and unmoveable in adhering to truth and duty, is the grand foundation of the Chriſtian, the life of ſobriety, righteouſneſs, and godlineſs, and ſuch as (the power and bleſſing of God ſuppoſed) will carry us ſafe to eternal life. And as we are to be ſaved, not by mere power, but in a moral way, nothing leſs than this faith can be appointed, or be effectual to our ſalvation. See Taylor.

Ver. 13. Whoſoever ſhall call, &c.] Believing in Chriſt, or God, ver. 11. and calling upon him, ver. 12, 13, 14. are in effect the ſame 14 How then ſhall they call on him in whom they have not believed? and how ſhall they believe in him of whom they have not heard? and how ſhall they hear without a preacher?

15 And how ſhall they preach, except they be ſent? as it is written, How beautiful are the feet of them that preach the goſpel of peace, and bring glad tidings of good things!

16 But they have not all obeyed the goſpel. For Eſaias ſaith, Lord, who hath believed our report?

17 So then, faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God.

18 But I ſay, Have they not heard? Yes,

Ver. 14. Titus i. 3.—V. 15. Iſai. lii. 7. Nah. i. 15.—V. 16. Hebr. iv. 2. Iſai. liii. 1. John xii. 38. Gr. the hearing of us. Or, preaching?

thing; as calling upon God neceſſarily connotes and ſuppoſes faith in him; and he who duly believes in Chriſt, has ſuch a ſenſe of his dependance upon divine grace, that he looks unto and truſts in the power and goodneſs of his God alone for happineſs; which is the true religion of the Goſpel. Bp. Pearſon argues at large from this verſe, that if Chriſt be not here called Jehovah, the Apoſtle's argument is quite inconcluſive. Mr. Locke, in his note upon the preſent paſſage, obſerves, that it will be an ill rule for interpreting St. Paul, to tie up his uſe of any text out of the Old Teſtament to that which is taken to be the meaning of it there;"—that is, which is the true meaning of it there: otherwiſe what Mr. Locke ſays will not be at all to his purpoſe. But ſurely this judicious commentator did not thoroughly conſider that at this rate no argument can be built upon any of St. Paul's quotations; and that it muſt have been an indifferent thing with our Apoſtle, whether he did or did not underſtand the Scripture; for they might ſerve him as well without as with the true meaning; for who can think a perſon of ſo much learning, judgement, and integrity would read or uſe the Scriptures in ſuch a looſe and careleſs manner. The Apoſtle, without doubt, was a ſtrict and cloſe quoter of Scripture; but then he did not always quote in the ſame manner, or for the ſame purpoſe. See on James ii. 23. For, firſt, ſometimes his intention goes no further than uſing the ſame ſtrong expreſſions, as being equally applicable to the point in hand. So in ver. 6. to 8. of this chapter, he uſes the words of Moſes, not to prove any thing, nor as if he thought Moſes ſpake of the ſame ſubject; but only as intimating, that the ſtrong and lively expreſſions which Moſes uſes concerning the doctrine he taught were equally applicable to the faith of the Goſpel. So again in the ſame manner, ver. 18. he quotes Pſ. xix. 4. Secondly, Sometimes the deſign of a quotation is only to ſhew that caſes are parallel, or that what happened in his times correſponds to that which happened in former days. See ch. ii, 24. viii. 36. ix. 27—29. xi. 2—10. xv. 21. Thirdly, Sometimes the quotation is intended only to explain a doctrinal point, as ch. i. 17. iv. 6—8, 18—21. ix. 20, 21. x. 15. xv. 3. Fourthly, Sometimes the quotation is deſigned to prove a doctrinal point, as ch. iii. 4, 10—19. iv. 3, 17. v. 12—14. ix. 7—17. x. 5, 11, 13. xii. 19, 20. xiii. 9. xiv. 11. Fifthly, Sometimes it is the intention of the quotation to prove that ſomething was predicted or properly foretold in the prophetic writings, as ch. ix. 25, 26, 33. x. 16, 19—21. xi. 26, 27. xv. 9—13. Theſe things duly conſidered, it will appear that the Apoſtle has every where ſhewn a juſt regard to the true ſenſe of the Scriptures he quotes, in the view in which he quotes them; and theſe rules may help to vindicate the quotations in all the apoſtolic writings. However, it is evident that we cannot form a true judgement upon any quotation, unleſs we take in the intention of the writer, or the view in which he quotes. The reader cannot fail to obſerve and admire the fine climax in the next verſe. See Locke, Taylor, Benſon, and Pearſon on the Creed, p. 149.

Ver. 15. How ſhall they preach, except they be ſent?] St. Paul is careful every where to preſerve the eſteem of his brethren the Jews. May not therefore this, with the two foregoing verſes, be underſtood as an apology to them for profeſſing himſelf an Apoſtle of the Gentiles, as he does by the tenor of this Epiſtle, and in the next chapter expreſly? ver. 13. In this chapter, ver. 12. he had ſhewn, that both Jews and Greeks, or Gentiles were to be ſaved only by receiving the Goſpel of Chriſt; and if ſo, it was neceſſary that ſome body ſhould be ſent to teach it to them; and therefore the Jews had no reaſon to be offended with any one ſent on that employment. Feet are variouſly uſed in Scripture, and ſometimes have reſpect to things internal and ſpiritual: for as the life of man, and the practice of piety is compared to walking, Pſ. i. 1. ſo his feet may ſignify the principles upon which he acts, and the diſpoſition of his mind; as Eccles. v. 1. Keep thy foot when thou goeſt into the houſe of God. Agreeably to this, the feet of the meſſengers in Iſaiah, and of the Apoſtles in this verſe, may ſignify the validity of their miſſion, the authority upon which they acted, and any character or qualifications with which they were inveſted. Bos obſerves, that in Sophocles the hands and feet of thoſe who came upon a kind deſign, are repreſented as beautiful to ſuch as receive benefit by their arrival. See Locke, Taylor, and Iſaiah lii. 7.

Ver. 16. But they have not all obeyed] This ſeems an objection of the Jews to what St. Paul had ſaid, which he anſwers in this and the following verſe. The objection and anſwer may ſtand thus: "You tell us, that you are ſent from God to preach the Goſpel. If it be ſo, how comes it that all who have heard, have not received and obeyed; eſpecially if, as you would inſinuate, the meſſengers of good tidings were ſo welcome to them?" To this he anſwers out of Iſaiah, That the meſſengers ſent from God were not believed by all. And from thoſe ſame words he draws an inference to confirm the argument he was upon, namely, "That ſalvation cometh by hearing and believing the word of God." He had laid it down, ver. 8. that it was by their having ϱημα πιϛεως, the word of faith, nigh them, or preſent with them, and not by the bodily preſence of their Deliverer amongſt them, that they were to be ſaved. This word he tells them, ver. 17. is by preaching brought to be actually preſent with them and the Gentiles; ſo that it was their own fault, if they believed it not to ſalvation. See Locke, L'Enfant, and Bos.

Ver. 18. Their ſound went into all the earth] If the paſſages in the Goſpels and Epiſtles relating to the extenſive ſpreading of religion during the diſpenſation or reign of the Meſſiah, have a reference to the ancient prophecies, this may be the full and proper import of them;—That as the Goſpel is a ſcheme of inſtruction commenſurate to all the wants and circumſtances of all, both Jews and Gentiles, it ſeems to have been the grand object of Providence in this conſtitution, that a gradual conveyance of theſe ſalutary benefits ſhould be vouchſafed in different ages and nations; ſo that before the kingdom of the Meſſiah ſhould terminate, effectual means ſhould be uſed for the moſt extenſive propagation of its light and truth: And that all knowledge of Chriſt is not confined within ſuch narrow bounds as infidels imagine, will appear from the following obſervations: The Mohammedan, Turk, or Perſian acknowledges the miraculous birth of Chriſt; and the Jew, before he is permitted to embrace Mohammedaniſm, muſt profeſs his belief in Chriſt. The Mohammedan expects a ſecond appeararance of our Lord from heaven, and believes that all men will then unite in one religion. The opinion of other people in the eaſtern world, who have long been conſidered as pagans only, may be known of certainty from their writings and religious ceremonies. Porphyry, a Grecian philoſopher, who wrote againſt Chriſtianity, aſſures us, that the Indians believed that God created the world by his Son; and in their ſacred book called Vedam, whatever may be the practice of the Indians, nothing is to be found that encourages idolatry. We will now conſider thoſe opinions and practices of theſe people, which will ſhew that they are not intirely ſtrangers to the hiſtory and doctrines of our Lord, though intermixed with pagan notions, and groſly corrupted. The Indians have applied to their God XACA, almoſt every circumſtance in the life of Jeſus. "He was born of a virgin, waſhed with the dew of heaven; the whole world ſhines with unuſual ſplendor at his birth; the earth trembles; choſen hymns are ſung; the infant is adored, and gifts are offered to him. He is again preſented in the temple, and worſhipped. They who are inſpired, foretel many miracles to be performed by him; and the moſt ancient prophet, taking him in his arms, embraces him with tenderneſs, ſpeaks of the wonders he is to perform, the divine truths he is to unfold, and particularly what was to happen to him in the deſart. From his mother's womb he is endowed with the knowledge of all things, ſelf-taught, aſtoniſhing the moſt learned. He is led into the wilderneſs, where he continues a long time, praying and faſting.—Again he returns to the wilderneſs; the adverſary of mankind is aſtoniſhed at the greatneſs of his contemplation, and, ſurrounded by his infernal agents, aſſails him. XACA is victorious, and the evil one with his followers leave him. After this, he choſe diſciples, gave them a new law, and provided the proper remedies againſt ſin. Infinite and moſt marvellous were the works he performed upon the minds of unbelievers, to convert them to his religion. His doctrine is preached to all nations, and ſupported by miracles, is univerſally embraced.—The law being reſtored, he dies! the earth ſhakes with dreadful concuſſions! a thick darkneſs obſcures the ſky! After the death of Xaca, his diſciples commit all the actions of their maſter to writing.—If any difficulty ariſes in aſcribing the actions of CHRIST to XACA, from the change of names only, we ſhall find that theſe eaſtern people are not abſolutely ſtrangers to the name of Chriſt and other perſons recorded in the Goſpel.—They ſpeak of CHRIST, whom they expreſly call KRISNU, as one whoſe conception was miraculous, born under the conſtellation of the Virgin in the Agiodia, or Judea, of whom it was foretold by Aggr, an angel,—"He ſhall ſave his nation Judah, of the race of ſhepherds." Sridoroh, or Herod, feigning a deſire to ſee the infant, commands the ſlaughter of the innocents. This KRISNU of the Indians performed many miracles exactly the ſame with thoſe recorded of Jeſus. The transfiguration upon mount Tabor is related in their hiſtories, and John in particular is ſaid to have been one of thoſe who were preſent.—KRISNU, before his death, ſups with his diſciples, and they are waſhed: after this, near Gethſemane, a tumult ariſes; he is embraced by Judas, whom they call Giudiſtira, and he recommends the women to the care of ARGIUN, or John.—XACA, (Seſac) BISNU, the Chineſe Fo, and KRIS, or KRISTNU, is Chriſt; who is crucified in every mind; the firſt man; the firſt offspring; verily, their ſound went into all the earth, and their words unto the ends of the world.

19 But I ſay, Did not Iſrael know? Firſt, Moſes ſaith, I will provoke you to jealouſy by them that are no people, and by a fooliſh nation I will anger you.

20 But Eſaias is very bold, and ſaith, I was found of them that ſought me not; I was made manifeſt unto them that aſked not after me.

21 But to Iſrael he ſaith, All day long I have ſtretched forth my hands unto a diſobedient and gainſaying people.

Ver. 18. Pſ. xix. 4. Matth. xxiv. 14. Col. i. 6, 23. 1 Kings xviii. 10.—V. 19. Deut. xxxii. 21.—V. 20. Iſai. lxv. 1.—V. 21. Iſai. lxv. 2.

offspring; only Son; lawgiver; deliverer; Saviour! The many croſſes erected by the Indians of Nepal, ſeem originally to have been in commemoration of the crucifixion of our Lord. Theſe Indians of Nepal erect crucifixes, with nails through the hands and feet; and the grand Lama celebrates a ſacrifice with bread, and what he is permitted to drink, wine being forbidden, of which he takes a ſmall portion himſelf, and diſtributes the reſt to the Lamas who aſſiſt at that ceremony. Hence it is evident, that theſe nations, though Perſians, Indians, Tartars, and Chineſe have ſome knowledge of Chriſt, his hiſtory, doctrines, and inſtitutions; and there Chriſtianity is more univerſal than many have imagined it to be. It is ſaid that the patriarch of Mouſul had under him one of the moſt numerous ſees of the world: for he had under his juriſdiction all the north of Aſia, the ancient churches of China, Ceylon, Malabar, and other Chriſtian nations among the Indians, excluſive of the churches of Perſia, Zocotora, Chaldea, Syria, Arabia, and perhaps other provinces which are unknown. We have a more particular account by Coſmas Indicopleuſtes, an author who lived in the middle of the ſixth century. "The Chriſtians, ſays he, having been at firſt ſeverely perſecuted by Greeks and Jews, conquered and converted thoſe who perſecuted them; thus the church is not overthrown but multiplied; ſo that the whole earth is filled with the doctrine of the Lord Chriſt, and yet it increaſes; and the Goſpel is preached throughout the world, which in many places, when preſent, I have ſeen, and having learned, I therefore declare the truth. In the iſland of Taphrobane, [Ceylon] in the interior India, ſurrounded by the Indian ſea, is a church of Chriſtians. In like manner the country called Male [Malabar,] and in Kalliana [Calecut,] is a biſhop, who is conſecrated in Perſia. Alſo in the iſland called Dioſcorides [Zocotora] are clergy ordained in Perſia, and ſent from thence into this iſland. Alſo among the Bactrians, Hunns, Perſians, and other Indians, Pers-Armenians, Medes, Elamites, throughout all the region of Perſia, are churches innumerable, and biſhops, and many martyrs. Likewiſe in Ethiopia, in Axomi, and in all that country. Amongſt the inhabitants of Arabia-Felix, now called the Homeritæ, throughout all Arabia, Paleſtine, Phœnicia, and all Syria, and Antiochia, to Meſopotamia, among the Nobatæ and Garamantæ in Egypt, Libya, Pentapoles, Africa, and Mauritania, as far as Gades to the ſouth, are Chriſtian churches, wherein the Goſpel of Chriſt is preached. Again alſo in Cilicia, Aſia, Cappadocia, Lazica, Pontus, and the northern parts of Scythia, amongſt the Hyrcani, Heruli, Bulgarians, Helladici, Illyrians, Dalmatians, Goths, Spaniards, Romans, Franks, and other nations, as far as Gades in the South-ſea, all believing and preaching the Goſpel of Chriſt. And thus we ſee the prophecies accompliſhed in the whole world!" Upon the whole, the amazing progreſs Chriſtianity made in the world, when firſt promulgated, is a very good argument in its favour. It was not propagated by the ſword, nor by tumult, nor enforced by the arts of vain philoſophy, or the enticing words of man's wiſdom. It derived all its force and evidence from the power of God exerted in the performing of miracles; from the veracity of God in accompliſhing the ancient prophecies; from the voice of reaſon and truth, the blameleſs lives and heroic martyrdom of its profeſſors, its own ſuperior excellence, and the ſuitableneſs of it to the exigencies of mankind. When we conſider the number and characters of the Apoſtles, how few! how unqualified by education for the converſion of the world! When we know that ſome few fiſhermen and others of the lower claſs, undertook and ſucceeded in the eſtabliſhing a new religion in the world; we cannot deny them to have had the gift of tongues, and the power of working miracles. It is credulity unworthy the moſt ſuperſtitious to believe, that ſuch men as the Apoſtles were, without thoſe extraordinary powers which the Jews and pagans, and more particularly ſuch an artful impoſtor as Simon Magus, confeſſed them to have had, ſhould be able, in a ſhort time, to propagate Chriſtianity throughout the world. What have other men of ſuperior parts and education been able to perform without miracles or force? It was the maxim of St. Francis Xavier, that miſſionaries, without muſquets, do never make converts to any purpoſe. See Raverette, Sharpe's Diſcourſe on Want of Univerſality, Matth. xxiv. 14. Acts ii. 5. xiii. 47. Pſ. xix. 4.

Ver. 19. Did not Iſrael know?] In this and the next verſes, St. Paul ſeems to introduce the Jews as arguing, that they did not deſerve to be caſt off, becauſe they did not know that the Gentiles were to be admitted; and ſo might be excuſed, if they did not embrace a religion, wherein they were to mix with the Gentiles: To which he anſwers in this and the following verſes; Firſt, Moſes ſaith, I will provoke you to jealouſy. Jealouſy is an affection of the mind excited by another's being our rival, or ſharing in thoſe honours or enjoyments which we highly eſteem, which we account our own property, and which we are greatly deſirous of ſecuring to ourſelves. Thus the Jews moved God to jealouſy, by giving to idols the honour and worſhip due to him alone, or by acting towards God in ſuch a manner, as uſually creates jealouſy in a man. For which reaſon it is predicted, Deut. xxxii. 12. that they ſhould be repaid in their own coin, and be moved to jealouſy:—How?—By transferring from them the honours and privileges in which they gloried, to thoſe whom they deſpiſed;—to a lo-am, a no-people; that is, to the Gentiles. Lo-am, a no-people, or not a people, is the character of the heathen world, as not intereſted in the peculiar covenant of God. Therefore this text, as it lies in Deuteronomy, is full to the Apoſtle's purpoſe; and doth not relate to their being conquered by heathen nations, but to their being ſtripped of boaſted honours, and ſeeing them conferred upon thoſe, whom they contemned, as the vileſt people. How much the Jews were irritated at the preaching of the Goſpel to the Gentiles, is well known. See Matth. xxi. 43, &c. Acts xxii. 21, 22. 1 Theſſ. ii. 15, 16.

GOD PROVED TO BE NO ARBITRARY BEING; FROM CHAP. IX. 20, &c.

It is certain that we ought not to infer from this paſſage, that God is a deſpotic, arbitrary ſovereign, whoſe will is the only rule of his actions. The great God, though he be ſupreme, and accountable to none, always governs himſelf by the eternal and unalterable rules of wiſdom, equity, and goodneſs. His will is not itſelf the ſtandard and meaſure of right; but there is an intrinſic neceſſary difference in the nature of things, between juſt and unjuſt, beneficence and cruelty, which cannot be altered by the authority, will, or determination of any being whatſoever. Indeed, what God wills is always right and fit; always, upon the whole, fitteſt and beſt. But why? not merely becauſe he wills it, but becauſe he is neceſſarily wiſe, juſt, and good. For can any man imagine, that if he ſhould will to deceive, to vex and torment his innocent creatures, and employ his infinite power only to make them miſerable, (which is a very poſſible ſuppoſition, if his will alone be the rule of his proceedings) ſuch a conduct would be juſtifiable? Nay,—for ever this muſt be maintained, as a neceſſary conſequence from ſuch principles,—that it would be better, and more praiſe-worthy than righteouſneſs, truth and mercy?

There cannot be a more diſhonourable reflection on the Deity, than to ſuppoſe he acts without a reaſon, merely from humour, and arbitrary pleaſure. It repreſents him as a tyrant, not as a wiſe and righteous governor. It renders him frightful to our contemplation; the object of averſion and horror, and deſtroys all rational eſteem and love of him, and confidence in him. All expectations of favour from him muſt ſink and vaniſh at once: For who knows how ſuch a capricious being, who is not determined by reaſon and juſtice, but makes his will his only law,—who can know in what manner he will act? What poſſible aſſurance can there be, that he will not reſolve on the miſery and ruin of his rational creatures? Nay, if he has promiſed the contrary, can we have any probability that the ſame arbitrary will that made, will not alſo break the promiſe? Mere will and humour are fickle, uncertain, changeable things; but truth and goodneſs are ſteady principles, and a ſolid foundation for our truſt and hope. We may add, that the repreſenting the Deity in this manner, renders him infinitely more formidable than any earthly tyrants ever were, or can be; even thoſe, who have been the greateſt ſcourges and plagues of mankind; becauſe he is poſſeſſed of almighty and uncontroulable power; and the thought of almighty power, that is not directed by wiſdom and goodneſs, muſt fill the mind with the utmoſt aſtoniſhment and terror. Shall we then give ſuch a reproachful, ſuch a deteſtable character of the moſt perfect, the moſt amiable of all Beings? Shall we picture the very beſt of Beings as the very worſt? And repreſent Him, in whoſe unerring wiſdom, ſtrict impartial juſtice, and univerſal unchangeable goodneſs, the whole rational world have the higheſt reaſon to rejoice, as one whom every wiſe man muſt wiſh not to exiſt?

We may next conſider to what caſes the words of ch. ix. 20. may be properly applied: We hope it appears ſufficiently from what has been ſaid in the courſe of the foregoing notes, that the chapters before us, which have been ſo confounded and darkened by many expoſitors, relate only to God's dealings with national and collective bodies of men; and not to his favour or diſpleaſure towards particular perſons, and determining abſolutely, without any regard to their actions, their eternal ſtate hereafter. The argument which St. Paul purſues is only this: "That God might diſpenſe his extraordinary favours as he ſaw fit; and conſequently eminently diſtinguiſh one nation, and paſs by others without the leaſt injuſtice; and to cenſure ſuch a way of proceeding, in the Proprietor and Sovereign Diſpoſer of all things, was arrogant and preſumptuous." And from hence we learn, to what queſtions the words in ch. ix. 20. may be properly and juſtly applied; namely, to ſuch as theſe:—Why God

CHAP. XI.

God hath not caſt off all Iſrael. Some were elected, though the reſt were hardened. There is hope of their converſion. The Gentiles may not inſult upon them: for there is a promiſe of their ſalvation. God's judgements are unſearchable.

I Say then, Hath God caſt away his people? God forbid! For I alſo am an Iſraelite, of the ſeed of Abraham, of the tribe of Benjamin.

2 God hath not caſt away his people which he foreknew. Wot ye not what the ſcripture ſaith of Elias? how he maketh interceſſion to God againſt Iſrael, ſaying, 3 Lord, they have killed thy prophets, and digged down thine altars; and I am left alone, and they ſeek my life.

4 But what ſaith the anſwer of God unto him? I have reſerved to myſelf ſeven thouſand men, who have not bowed the knee to the image of Baal.

5 Even ſo then, at this preſent time alſo there is a remnant, according to the election of grace.

6 And if by grace, then is it no more of works: otherwiſe grace is no more grace.

Ver. 1. Jer. xxxi. 37. 2 Cor. xi. 22. Phil. iii. 5.—V. 2. Ch. viii. 29. Gr. in Elias?—V. 3. 1 Kings xix. 10, 14.—V. 4. 1 Kings xix. 18.—V. 5. Ch. ix. 27.—V. 6. Ch. iv. 4, 5. Gal. v. 4. Deut. ix. 4.

vouchſafes a revelation of his will to ſome nations, and not to others?—Why, for example, he has not made the Chriſtian revelation univerſal?—Why does he permit moral and natural evil?—Why has he not made all creatures of the higheſt order, and communicated to all equal degrees of perfection and happineſs?—Nothing of this can be ſhewn to be contrary to juſtice, becauſe they are all favours, which his creatures have no right to claim. And therefore in theſe, and all other caſes of a like nature, where juſtice is not concerned; which have no appearance of malice or cruelty, but are conſiderations of wiſdom only, it is very pertinent and rational to ſay to an objector, Nay but, O man! who art thou that replieſt againſt God?

Hence then we learn, 1ſt, How neceſſary it is that we conſider the uſes to which paſſages of Scripture are applied,—without arguing generally from what is only adapted to a particular caſe. This is one reaſon why texts are ſo abominably perverted, and ſtrained to ſuch abſurd and unnatural ſenſes, as are not only contrary to their true deſign, and the general ſcope and tenor of the revelation, but ſtrike at the foundation of all religion.

2dly, Let us cultivate in our minds the higheſt reverence of God, eſpecially the moſt honourable apprehenſions of his moral character; and being perſuaded that all his counſels are the reſult of infinite wiſdom, and that his will is ever determined by the higheſt reaſon, let us humbly acquieſce in all the methods of his providence. Survey the works of God, the exquiſite beauty and harmony of the whole, the admirable connection and ſubſerviency of the ſeveral parts; nay, ſurvey thy own frame,—the curious and aſtoniſhing ſtructure of thy body,—the noble faculties and capacities of thy mind;—and from the ſurpriſing marks of wiſdom and goodneſs, which thou canſt not diſtinctly perceive, in thine own make, and in the whole conſtitution of things, draw the juſt and natural inference:—That the great Author and Governor of the univerſe is poſſeſſed of theſe perfections, in the moſt abſolute and complete manner; and conſequently, that all things are contrived and ordered with the ſame wiſe and benevolent view; though in particulars it does not appear equally, and in ſome, perhaps, not at all, to thy limited underſtanding.

The improving conſtantly in our minds worthy notions of God's glory, as a Being ſupremely wiſe, and immutably juſt and good, will be attended with very great advantages. It will reſtrain that impertinent humour of ſcepticiſm and cavilling, which makes men oppoſe their ignorance and prejudices to His infinite wiſdom: We ſhall always conſider the Deity, as the moſt amiable and delightful object of our contemplation; neither as a weak capricious Being, whom we cannot reverence; nor as a rigid, tyrannical being, whom we cannot love. In ſhort, our religion, built on ſuch principles, will be wiſe and rational; and there can be no foundation for any of thoſe ſuperſtitious and enthuſiaſtic mixtures, which expoſe the moſt excellent and uſeful thing in the world to contempt and ridicule. See Foſter's Sermons.

Chap. XI. Ver. 1.] This chapter is of the prophetic kind. It was by the ſpirit of prophecy that the Apoſtle foreſaw the rejection of the Jews, which he ſuppoſes in the two foregoing chapters; for when he wrote the Epiſtle, they were not in fact rejected, ſeeing their church and polity were then ſtanding: But the event has proved that he was a true prophet; for we know that in about ten or eleven years after the writing of this letter, the temple was deſtroyed; the Jewiſh polity overthrown; and the Jews expelled the promiſed land, which they have never been able to recover to this day. This firſt, confirms the arguments which the Apoſtle has advanced to eſtabliſh the calling of the Gentiles; for the Jews are in fact rejected; conſequently our calling is in fact not invalidated by any thing they have ſuggeſted, relating to the perpetuity of the Moſaical diſpenſation; But that diſpenſation being wholly ſubverted, our title to the privileges of God's church and people ſtands clear and ſtrong. Only the Jewiſh conſtitution could furniſh objections againſt our claim; and the event has ſilenced every objection from that quarter. Secondly, the actual rejection of the Jews proves St. Paul to be a true Apoſtle of Jeſus Chriſt, who ſpake by the Spirit of God; otherwiſe, he could not have argued ſo fully upon a caſe which was yet to come, and of which there was no appearance in the ſtate of things, when he wrote this Epiſtle. This ſhould diſpoſe us to pay great regard to the preſent chapter, in which he diſcourſes concerning the extent and duration of the rejection of his countrymen, to prevent their being inſulted and deſpiſed by the Gentile Chriſtians. Firſt, as to the extent of this rejection: It is not abſolutely univerſal; ſome of the Jews have embraced the Goſpel, and are incorporated into the church of God with the believing Gentiles. Upon the caſe of thoſe believing Jews he commenst, ver. 1—7. Secondly, as to the duration of it; it is not final and perpetual; for all Iſrael, or the nation of the Jews, who are now blinded, ſhall one day be ſaved, or brought again into the kingdom and covenant of God. Upon the ſtate of thoſe blinded Jews he comments, ver. 7. to the end of the chapter. His deſign, in diſcourſing upon this ſubject was not only to make the thing itſelf known, but partly to engage the attention of the unbelieving Jew; to conciliate his favour; and, if poſſible, to induce him to come into the Goſpel ſcheme; and partly to diſpoſe the Gentile Chriſtians not to treat the Jews with contempt; (conſidering that they derived all their preſent bleſſings from the patriarchs, the anceſtors of the Jewiſh nation, and were engrafted into the good olive-tree, from whence they were broken) and to admoniſh them to take warning by the fall of the Jews, that they improved their religious privileges, leſt through unbelief any of them ſhould relapſe into heatheniſm, or periſh finally at the laſt day. The thread of his diſcourſe leads him into a general ſurvey and compariſon of the ſeveral diſpenſations of God towards the Gentiles and Jews; which he concludes with adoration of the depths of the divine knowledge and wiſdom, exerciſed in the various conſtitutions erected in the world: ver. 30, &c.

This firſt verſe is a queſtion, in the perſon of a Jew, who made the objections in the foregoing chapter, and continues to object here. 'Απώσατο, rendered caſt away, is very ſtrong and emphatical. "Hath God abſolutely, univerſally, and for ever thruſt his people away from him?" See Acts vii. 27, 39. xiii 46. 1 Tim. i. 19. Inſtead of Wot ye not—and maketh interceſſion; Dr. Waterland reads, Know ye not—maketh complaint.

Ver. 3. Digged down thine altars] It ſeems from hence, that though, according to the law, there was only one altar for ſacrifice, and that in the place where God had fixed his peculiar reſidence; yet, by ſome ſpecial diſpenſation, pious perſons in the ten tribes built altars elſewhere. It is well known, at leaſt, that Samuel and Elijah had done it; and perhaps they were either kept up, or others raiſed on the ſame ſpots of ground. Baal, or Baalim, (ſee ver. 4.) was a general name, whereby the falſe gods and idols were denoted in Scripture. See Judg. xi. 11—13. Hoſea xi. 2. Locke, and Doddridge.

Ver. 6. And if by grace] Here the Apoſtle has his eye upon the remnant of the Jews who had embraced the Goſpel, mentioned in the foregoing verſe; and he throws in this verſe to ſhew them, that their ſtanding in the Chriſtian church had no relation to, or dependance upon their paſt or preſent obſervance of the law of Moſes. Their ſtanding in the church and covenant of God, was according to the election of grace; grace, received by faith, was the only ground upon which they ſtood and had a title to the privileges of God's people. The election of grace is not a particular act of ſovereign grace, which ſingled out ſome few of the Jews, who deſerved to have been caſt off as well as the reſt; but it is that general ſcheme of grace, according to which God purpoſed to take into his church and kingdom any, among either Jews or Gentiles, who believed in Chriſt; and the remnant of the Jews were taken in, not becauſe God ſingled them out from the reſt of their countrymen, by ſuch a ſpecial act of favour as might have taken in all the Jews, had he ſo pleaſed; but becauſe they believed, and ſo came into the ſcheme of election which God had appointed: Out of which election they, as well as others, would have been excluded, had they, like the reſt, remained in unbelief; and into which election all the Jews, to a man, notwithſtanding they were all ſinners, would have been taken, had they all believed in Chriſt. This, and the preceding verſe, may be paraphraſed thus: "So it is at this very time: There is a remnant of Jews, a conſiderable number who have accepted of the grace of the Goſpel, and are the people of God, after the only true way of chooſing his people, which is by grace: And here, by the way, [ver.

But if it be of works, then is it no more grace: otherwiſe work is no more work.

7 What then? Iſrael hath not obtained that which he ſeeketh for; but the election hath obtained it, and the reſt were blinded;

8 According as it is written, God hath given them the ſpirit of ſlumber, eyes that they ſhould not ſee, and ears that they ſhould not hear, unto this day.

9 And David ſaith, Let their table be made a ſnare, and a trap, and a ſtumbling-block, and a recompence unto them.

10 Let their eyes be darkened, that they may not ſee, and bow down their back alway.

11 I ſay then, Have they ſtumbled that they ſhould fall? God forbid! but rather through their fall ſalvation is come unto the Gentiles, for to provoke them to jealouſy.

12 Now if the fall of them be the riches of the world, and the diminiſhing of them the riches of the Gentiles; how much more their fulneſs?

13 For I ſpeak to you, Gentiles, inaſmuch as I am the apoſtle of the Gentiles, I magnify mine office:

14 If by any means I may provoke to emulation them which are my fleſh, and might ſave ſome of them.

15 For if the caſting away of them be the reconciling of the world, what ſhall the receiving of them be, but life from the dead?

Ver. 7. Ch. ix. 31. x. 3. Or, hardened.—V. 8. Iſai. xxix. 10. Or, remorſe. Iſai. vi. 9. Exek. xii. 2. Matth. xiii. 14.—V. 9. Pſ. lxix. 22. Pſ. lxix. 23.—V. 11. Acts xiii. 46.—V. 12. Or, decay, or loſs.—V. 13. Ch. xv. 16. Gal. i. 16. ii. 2, 8. Epheſ. iii. 8. 1 Tim. ii. 7. 2 Tim. i. 11.—V. 14. 1 Cor. vii. 16. ix. 22. 1 Tim. iv. 16. James v. 20.

(ver. 6.) let me put this remnant of the Jews who have embraced the Goſpel in mind, that if their ſtanding in the church is of grace and favour, it is wholly ſo, and in no part or reſpect dependant upon their obſervance of the law of Moſes; for if it were, grace would loſe its proper nature, and ceaſe to be what it is; a free undeſerved gift. On the other hand, were it true that they are inveſted in the privileges of the kingdom of Chriſt, only by the obſervance of the law of Moſes, then grace would be quite ſet aſide; for if it were not, work, or the merit of obedience, would loſe its proper nature, which excludes favour and free gift." See Taylor, Locke, and Doddridge.

Ver. 7. That which he ſeeketh for] Namely, that righteouſneſs, whereby he was to continue the people of God. See ch. ix. 31. It may be obſerved, that St. Paul's diſcourſe being concerning the national privilege of continuing the people of God, he ſpeaks here, and all along, of the Jews in the collective term Iſrael; and ſo likewiſe he calls by the name of election the remnant, which were to remain his people, and incorporate with the converted Gentiles into one body of Chriſtians; owning the dominion of the one true God, in the kingdom He had ſet up under his Son, and owned by God for his people. See the preceding note. How the reſt were blinded, See 2 Cor. iii. 13, &c.

Ver. 8—10. According as it is written] We need not ſuppoſe that the Apoſtle quotes theſe paſſages of Scripture, as if they predicted the blindneſs and obduracy of the Jews in his time. It is ſufficient for this purpoſe, if the caſe of wicked Jews, in former ages, ſhews the true reaſon of the infidelity, obſtinacy, and wretchedneſs of the Jews who rejected the Goſpel: for that is the point in view; not to prove that the infidel Jews were blinded, which was but too evident from their bitter oppoſition to the Goſpel, and ſo wanted no proof; but to ſhew them the malignant cauſe and direful effects of their unbelief. See the paſſages in the margin, and Taylor.

Ver. 11, 12. Have they ſtumbled, &c.?] The Engliſh reader may imagine, that as the ſame word fall is uſed in the tranſlation, ſo it is the ſame word in the Greek. But their fall, and the fall of them, is παράπτωμα, the ſame word which we render offence, ch. v. 15, 17, 18. whereas that they ſhould fall, is ἵνα πέσωσι. Now πίπτω, to fall, is uſed ſometimes in a ſenſe ſo very emphatical, as to ſignify being ſlain; and it is in this ſenſe that St. Paul uſes it here, when he ſays, that they ſhould fall: He means a fall quite deſtructive and ruinous; whereas by their fall, and the fall of them, he means no more than ſuch a lapſe as was recoverable; as in the caſe of Adam's offence. Through their fall, muſt imply only, "Through that which occaſioned their fall:" For it ſhould be well obſerved, that the fall of the Jews was not in itſelf the cauſe or reaſon of the calling of the Gentiles, or of their obtaining ſalvation: For, whether the Jews had ſtood or fallen, whether they had embraced or rejected the Goſpel, it was the original purpoſe of God to take the Gentiles into the church; and that purpoſe which he purpoſed when he made the covenant with Abraham, was the reaſon why the Gentiles were taken into the church,—and not the fall of the Jews. Nor, for the ſame reaſon, was their fall the neceſſary means of ſalvation to the Gentiles; for the unbelief of the Jews, could be no cauſe of the faith of the Gentiles. Therefore their fall muſt not be here underſtood ſimply, but under its proper circumſtances, or in connection with its cauſe; or as connecting the diſpenſation which occaſioned it. The extenſiveneſs of the divine grace, which threw down the boundaries of their peculiarity, occaſioned their fall, and thus through their fall ſalvation came to the Gentiles; or that which made them fall, brought ſalvation to us. Their fall is put for the cauſe of their fall, by a metonymy of the effect; nor is this mode of ſpeech more forced than that 1 Cor. xi. 10. For this cauſe ought the woman to have power on her head, becauſe of the meſſengers; where power is put for a veil, the token of the man's ſuperiority, and the woman's ſubjection. And ſo the glory of God, Rom. iii. 23. is put for that whereby God is glorified; and the enmity, Epheſ. ii. 15. is put for the cauſe of their enmity. Though the ſame word is uſed here and ver. 14. that is uſed ch. x. 19. which is there well enough rendered, provoked to jealouſy; yet in this place it is improperly tranſlated in that manner: for it is to be underſtood here, in the good and laudable ſenſe; namely, being excited to emulate the good and virtuous; and therefore ſhould be rendered, to excite them to emulation. The extenſiveneſs of the divine grace occaſioned the fall of the Jews; which extenſive grace brought ſalvation to the Gentiles. And the Jews, ſeeing the Gentiles enriched with the honours of God's people, appearing illuſtriouſly in the gifts of the Spirit conferred upon them, ought to have been thereby convinced of their miſtake, and excited by faith and repentance to have recovered the degree of dignity from whence they were fallen. Thus the Jews were ſo far from being fallen beyond a poſſibility of recovering themſelves, that their fall was ſo circumſtanced as to afford them a motive to be zealous in attempting to gain what they ſaw they had loſt. See Locke, and Taylor.

Ver. 15, 14. For I ſpeak, &c.] Dr. Waterland and the MS. read theſe verſes in a parentheſis, thus: (I ſay to you, Gentiles, ſo far as I am the Apoſtle of the Gentiles, I am uſed to honour my miniſtry, ver 14. That I may by any means excite to emulation them who are of my fleſh, and may ſave ſome of them:) Magnify, unleſs when applied to the Moſt High, who never can be too highly exalted, in our language carries in it the idea of ſtretching beyond the bounds of truth, or making a thing ſeem greater than it really is. The word is δοξάζω, I glorify,—honour: So we render it 1 Cor. xii. 26. and ſo it ſhould be tranſlated here;—I honour my miniſtry; for διακονία, in the like caſe, is always rendered miniſtry. See Acts xxi. 19. 1 Tim. i. 12, &c. St. Paul honoured his miniſtry, by ſpeaking magnificently of the ſtate of the Gentiles, whom he had converted to the faith, in compariſon of the poor and low condition to which the unbelieving Jews were reduced. His ſenſe will appear, if in reading ver. 12, 13. we lay the emphaſis upon the RICHES of the world,—the RICHES of the Gentiles. St. Peter ſets the honours of believing Gentiles, and the degraded ſtate of the infidel Jews, in a ſtill more ſtriking contraſt, 1 Pet. ii. 8, 9. They ſtumbled at the word, and are fallen; but ye are raiſed to the honour of being a choſen generation, a royal prieſthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people.

Ver. 14. If by any means, &c.] The Apoſtle has generally very extenſive and complicated views in writing; and it ſeems very evident, that he not only intended to excite the Jews to emulation by turning their thoughts to the conſideration of the privileges they had loſt, but alſo that it was his aim to inſinuate himſelf, and the Goſpel he preached, into the good opinion of the Jews: For he cautions the Gentile againſt inſulting the Jew; labours to give him an honourable opinion of the Jew; and ſo explains the caſe of the Jew's preſent rejection, and future reception, as to diſpoſe him to think favourably of the Goſpel diſpenſation; which allowed him the opportunity of recovering himſelf immediately, would he immediately repent and believe; and which concurred with the prophets in aſſerting, that one day the whole nation would be glorioully reſtored. The Apoſtle's affirming and arguing upon this event with ſo much aſſurance and pleaſure, had a natural tendency to ſoften the Jew, and incline him to think. See Taylor.

Ver. 15. The reconciling of the world] See on ch. v. 11. But life from the dead, means "to the world; to us Gentile Chriſtians; the world, reconciled and enriched by the caſting off of the Jews." When we were at firſt reconciled by being converted to Chriſtianity, we were raiſed from the dead to a new life, ch. vi. 13. and the approaching glorious diſpenſation which the Apoſtle here ſpeaks of, will again be to us as life from the dead. By which we may underſtand, either that this future happy ſtate of religion will as much exceed our preſent ſtate, as Chriſtianity exceeds heatheniſm; or that Chriſtians are now in a manner reduced to a ſtate of religion as 16 For if the firſt-fruit be holy, the lump is alſo holy: and if the root be holy, ſo are the branches.

17 And if ſome of the branches be broken off, and thou being a wild olive-tree, wert graffed in amongſt them, and with them partakeſt of the root and fatneſs of the olive-tree;

18 Boaſt not againſt the branches. But if thou boaſt, thou beareſt not the root, but the root thee.

19 Thou wilt ſay then, The branches were broken off, that I might be graffed in.

20 Well; becauſe of unbelief they were broken off, and thou ſtandeſt by faith. Be not high-minded, but fear:

21 For if God ſpared not the natural branches, take heed leſt he alſo ſpare not thee.

22 Behold therefore the goodneſs and ſeverity of God: on them which fell, ſeverity; but towards thee, goodneſs; if thou continue in his goodneſs: otherwiſe thou alſo ſhalt be cut off.

23 And they alſo, if they abide not ſtill in unbelief, ſhall be graffed in: for God is able to graff them in again.

24 For if thou wert cut out of the olive-tree which is wild by nature, and wert graffed contrary to nature into a good olive-tree; how much more ſhall theſe which be the natural branches, be graffed into their own olive-tree?

25 For I would not, brethren, that ye ſhould be ignorant of this myſtery, (leſt ye ſhould be wiſe in your own conceits;) that blindneſs in part is happened to Iſrael until the fulneſs of the Gentiles be come in.

26 And ſo all Iſrael ſhall be ſaved: as it is written, There ſhall come out of Sion the Deliverer, and ſhall turn away ungodlineſs from Jacob.

Ver. 17. Jer. xi. 16. Or, for them.—V. 18. Cor. x. 12.—V. 20. Prov. xxviii. 14. Iſai. lxvi. 2. Phil. ii. 12.—V. 22. 1 Cor. xv. 1. Hebr. iii. 6, 14. John xv. 2.—V. 23. 2 Cor. iii. 16.—V. 25. Or, hardineſs. Luke xxi. 24. Rev. vii. 9.—V. 26. Iſai. lix. 20. See Pſ. xiv. 7. Iſai. xxvii. 9. Jer. xxxi. 31, &c. Hebr. viii. 8. x. 16.

low as that of heatheniſm, and may again be ranked among the dead; from whence they ſhall again be made to live, when this great event of the reſtoration of the Jews ſhall take place. Numberleſs prophecies of the Old Teſtament evidently refer to this event; and the wonderful preſervation of the Jews, as a diſtinct people, thus far, not only leaves a poſſibility, but encourages our hope of it. When it ſhall be accompliſhed, it will be ſo unparalleled, as neceſſarily to excite a general attention, and to fix upon men's minds ſuch an almoſt irreſiſtable demonſtration, both of the Old and New Teſtament revelation, as will probably captivate the minds of many thouſands of deiſts, in countries profeſſedly Chriſtian; of which, under ſuch corrupt eſtabliſhments as generally prevail, there will of courſe be increaſing multitudes. Nor will this only captivate their underſtanding, but will have the greateſt tendency to awaken a ſenſe of true religion in their hearts; and this will be a means of propagating the Goſpel with an amazing velocity in Pagan and Mahometan countries; which, probably, had been evangelized long ago, had genuine Chriſtianity prevailed in thoſe who have made a profeſſion, and God knows, for the moſt part, a very ſcandalous profeſſion of its forms. See Taylor, Doddridge, Hartley's Obſervat. vol. ii. p. 373. and Lardner's Diſcourſes on "The circumſtances of the Jewiſh people, an argument for the truth of the Chriſtian religion."

Ver. 16. For if the firſt-fruit be holy, &c.] Now if, &c. Wat. The Apoſtle makes uſe of theſe alluſions to ſhew that the patriarchs, the root of the Jewiſh nation, being accepted by God, and the few Jewiſh converts who at firſt entered into the Chriſtian church, being alſo accepted of God, are as it were firſt-fruits, or pledges that God will in due time admit the whole nation of the Jews into his viſible church, to be his peculiar people again. By holy here is meant that relative holineſs, whereby any thing hath an appropriation to God. Locke. Inſtead of lump, Dr. Heylin reads, the whole product.

Ver. 17. Thou, being a wild olive-tree, &c.] This is another way of expreſſing the juſtification and election of us Gentiles; and it is alſo an inconteſtible proof, that we Gentile Chriſtians are taken into the Abrahamic covenant, (for the Sinai covenant is aboliſhed) as truly and fully, as ever the nation of the Jews was. Conſequently, any argument relating to our church privileges, taken from the nature of the Abrahamic covenant, muſt be juſt and valid; for we are grafted into the church, which ſprung from that root, and are partakers of its fatneſs. It is to very little purpoſe to object, that it is unnatural to ſuppoſe an ignoble branch grafted on a rich ſtock; for it was not neceſſary that the ſimile from inoculation ſhould hold in all its particulars; and the engagement to humility, ariſes in a conſiderable degree from the circumſtance objected againſt. Had the ſcion been nobler than the ſtock, yet its dependance on it for life and nouriſhment would render it unfit that it ſhould boaſt againſt it: How much more when the caſe was the reverſe of what in human uſage is practiced; and the wild olive is engrafted on the good! See Taylor, Doddridge, and Calmet.

Ver. 18. Boaſt not againſt the branches] Glory not, &c. MS. Tho' the great fault which moſt diſordered the church, and principally exerciſed the Apoſtle's care in this Epiſtle, was from the Jews preſſing the neceſſity of legal obſervances, and not brooking that the Gentiles, though converts to Chriſtianity, ſhould be admitted into their communion without being circumciſed; yet it is plain from this verſe, as well as from ch. xiv. 3, 10. that the convert Gentiles were not wholly without fault on their ſide, in treating the Jews with diſeſteem and contempt. To this alſo, as it comes in his way, he applies fit remedies, particularly in this chapter, and in chap. xiv. See Locke.

Ver. 20. Be not high-minded, &c.] Dr. Heylin connnects this with the next verſe, thus: Be not preſumptuous, but fear, leſt God ſhould not ſpare you, ſince he did not ſpare even the natural branches.

Ver. 22. Behold therefore the goodneſs, &c.] What is here meant by goodneſs to the believing Gentile, as it ſtands oppoſed to ſeverity againſt the rejected Jew, is very evident. It is the ſame with ſalvation being come to them, ver. 11. with their being enriched, ver. 12. with their being grafted into the good olive-tree, ver. 17. with their having obtained mercy, ver. 30. with their being called and choſen, ch. ix. 24. It is, in ſhort, the ſame with their being juſtified by the grace of God, upon their faith. What therefore their juſtification by faith is, for which the Apoſtle argues throughout this Epiſtle, in oppoſition to the Jew, who would not allow that the Gentile could be ſo juſtified, can be no doubt with any perſon who conſiders, how goodneſs, ſalvation, enriching, grafting into the good olive-tree, obtaining mercy, are in this chapter applied to the whole body of believing Gentiles, in oppoſition to the whole body of the unbelieving Jews. See Taylor.

Ver. 24. The olive-tree, which is wild by nature—which be the natural branches] The original in both theſe places is κατα φυσιν, and therefore our tranſlators ſhould either have rendered it in the firſt clauſe, The natural wild olive-tree, or in the latter, Which are branches by nature. See Heylin.

Ver. 25. The fulneſs of the Gentiles] The fulneſs of the Jews, ver. 12. is the whole body of the Jewiſh nation profeſſing Chriſtianity; and therefore the fulneſs of the Gentiles here muſt be the whole body of the Gentiles profeſſing Chriſtianity. It is well remarked by Dr. Harris, that as this Epiſtle was written about the year 57, that is, long after the moſt remarkable converſion of the Jews by the firſt preaching of the Apoſtles, and after St. Paul had been about thirty years engaged in his work, it appears that the prophecies relating to the calling of the Jews were not accompliſhed then, and conſequently are not yet accompliſhed. Dr. Whitby very juſtly obſerves, that there is a double harveſt of the Gentiles ſpoken of by St. Paul, in this chapter; the firſt called their riches, ver. 12. as conſiſting in the preaching the Goſpel to all nations; whereby indeed they were happily enriched with divine knowledge and grace; the ſecond, the bringing in their fulneſs; which expreſſes a more glorious converſion of many to the true faith of Chriſtians, in the latter age of the world, which is to be occaſioned by the converſion of the Jews. This anſwers Orobio's objection, "That Paul's account is contrary to the prophecies of the Old Teſtament, which repreſent the recovery of the Gentile nations as conſequent to the redemption of Iſrael." See Locke, Whitby, Harris's Diſcourſe on the Meſſiah, p. 91. Limb. Collat. p. 94. and Doddridge.

Ver. 26, 27. And ſo] That is, by that means: So ὄυτω ſignifies, John viii. 59. It is plain that the ſalvation which St. Paul ſpeaks of in this diſcourſe concerning the nation of the Jews, and the Gentile world in the groſs, is not eternal happineſs in heaven: It means only the profeſſion of the true religion here on earth. Whether it be that this is as far as corporations or bodies politic can go towards the attainment of eternal ſalvation, I will not enquire, ſays Mr. Locke; But it is evident, that being ſaved is uſed by the Apoſtle here in this ſenſe. That all the Jewiſh nation may become the people 27 For this is my covenant unto them, when I ſhall take away their ſins.

28 As concerning the goſpel, they are enemies for your ſakes: but as touching the election, they are beloved for the fathers ſakes.

29 For the gifts and calling of God are without repentance.

30 For as ye in times paſt have not believed God, yet have now obtained mercy through their unbelief;

31 Even ſo have theſe alſo now not believed, that through your mercy they alſo may obtain mercy.

32 For God hath concluded them all in unbelief, that he might have mercy upon all.

Ver. 29. Numb. xxiii. 19.—V. 30. Or, obeyed.—V. 31. Or, obeyed.—V. 32. Ch. iii. 9. Gal. iii. 22. Or, ſhut them all up together.

ple of God again, by taking up the Chriſtian profeſſion, may be eaſily conceived; but that every perſon of ſuch a Chriſtian nation ſhall attain eternal ſalvation in heaven, I think nobody can imagine to be here intended. The reference in this and the next verſe to the Old Teſtament, is commonly ſuppoſed to point at Iſai. lix. 20. But whether the Apoſtle directs to any particular prophecy, or to the current ſenſe of all the prophets, is uncertain; though the latter opinion ſeems moſt probable. The reſtoration of the Jewiſh commonwealth, in a higher degree than ſeems to be yet accompliſhed, is, as we have before obſerved, frequently ſpoken of in the prophetick writings. Shall take away their ſins, ver. 27. means, "Shall forgive their ſins, and take away the puniſhment they lie under for them." See Locke, Taylor, and Whitby.

Ver. 28. They are enemies for your ſakes] Enemies ſignify ſtrangers, or aliens; i. e. ſuch as are no longer to be the people of God: For they are called enemies, in oppoſition to beloved in this verſe; and the reaſon given why they are enemies, makes it plain that this is the ſenſe; namely, for the Gentiles' ſake: That is, "they are rejected from being the people of God, that you Gentiles may be taken in to be the people of God in their room," ver. 30. Enemies has the ſame ſignification, ch. v. 10. As concerning the Goſpel, enemies: That is, all thoſe who not embracing the Goſpel, not receiving Chriſt for their King and Lord, are aliens from the kingdom of God;—and all ſuch aliens are called enemies: And ſo indeed were the Jews now, yet they were, as touching the election, beloved; that is, not actually within the kingdom of God, his people, but within the election which God had made of Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, and their poſterity, to be his people; and ſo God had ſtill intentions of kindneſs to them, for their fathers' ſakes, to make them again his people. The election is the ſame with that mentioned ver. 5. and ch. ix. 11. Therefore the unbelieving Jews were not ſo caſt off, as to be entirely deprived of the favour of God; agreeably to what he had long before declared, Lev. xxvi. 44, 45. Deut. iv. 31. This clearly ſhews the nature of that election, concerning which the Apoſtle diſcourſes in this and the two foregoing chapters. See Locke, Taylor, and on ch. v. 11.

Ver. 29. For the gifts and calling of God, &c.] "For the favours which God ſhewed to thoſe their fathers in calling them, and their poſterity to be his people, he doth not repent of; but his promiſe, that they ſhall be his people, ſhall ſtand good." So God's repenting is explained, Numb. xxiii. 19, 24. See Elſner. The MS. reads the laſt words, Are not to be repented of.

Ver. 30, 31. For as ye in times paſt, &c.] When the promiſe was made to Abraham, the calling of the Gentiles was not a ſecondary deſign, to take effect in caſe the Jew rejected the Goſpel, but an abſolute purpoſe, to be accompliſhed whether the Jews complied or refuſed. The refuſal of the Jew was no way neceſſary to the calling of the Gentile; nor did the Apoſtles preach to the Gentiles only becauſe the Jews had refuſed to accept the Goſpel. Had the Jews embraced the faith of Chriſt, the Apoſtles would ſtill have preached to the Gentiles. Their unbelief is evidently to be underſtood, as their fall, and the caſting them off, ver. 11, 12. not ſimply and abſolutely, but conſidered under its proper circumſtances, or in its cauſe; namely, that extenſive grace, which threw down their peculiarity, in order to make room for the Gentiles, and ſo occaſioned their unbelief. Theſe verſes may be paraphraſed thus: "For as you Gentiles, for many ages paſt, were in a ſtate of alienation from God, yet not ſo as to be totally and for ever excluded,—for you are now taken into his kingdom by that method which hath occaſioned the unbelief of the Jews;—ſo in like manner (ver. 11.) the Jews, in their turn, are through infidelity ſhut out of the preſent kingdom of God; not to their utter excluſion, but to open a new ſcene, when through the further diſplays of God's mercy to you, they ſhall be taken into his kingdom again. See Taylor, Locke, and on ver. 11.

Ver. 32. For God hath concluded them all, &c.] Them is not in the original, and ſhould not be in the tranſlation. Concluded is no Engliſh word in this place; the ſenſe of the Greek verb συνέκλεισε is, he hath locked, or ſhut up together, which may be properly rendered by the latin word concludo; but we never, in Engliſh, uſe the word conclude to ſignify to lock or ſhut up. The word in the original is found but in three places beſides this, viz. Luke v. 6. where it is well rendered incloſed; and Gal. iii. 22, and 23. where in one verſe it is rendered very improperly concluded, in the other ſhut up. All were locked up under ſin, and the Jews in particular were locked up under the law; ſo here God has locked up all together in unbelief. Now, as all Jews and Gentiles, before Chriſt came, were locked up under ſin, and the Jews were locked up under the law, condemning them to death;—(not as if none of them could be ſaved, or be in a ſtate of acceptance with God, but only ſo far, and in this ſenſe, as the ground of their pardon and redemption was not laid, or the price of their redemption was not paid, till Chriſt, by the ſacrifice of himſelf, took away the ſin of the world,) ſo here firſt the Gentiles, afterwards the Jews, are locked up in unbelief: not as if they were therefore locked out of the favour of God, and excluded from eternal life; for unbelief is here to be underſtood, not in the abſolute, but in the relative ſenſe:—not in the abſolute ſenſe, as it is a principle which renders a man wicked, but with reference to the kingdom of God in this world, or as it diſqualifies a perſon from being a ſharer in the honours and privileges of that kingdom.—It is unbelief in profeſſion, which ſtands oppoſed, not to a life of virtue, or of eternal happineſs in the world to come, but only to faith in profeſſion. That the Apoſtle here means unbelief in this general relative ſenſe, and only ſo far as it excludes a perſon out of the preſent kingdom of God, is evident; for this verſe ſtands in immediate connection with the two foregoing; and ALL here, includes the unbelieving Jews and Gentiles in thoſe verſes. But the unbelieving Gentiles are thoſe, (ver. 30,) who in times paſt had not believed God; but now, upon their converſion to Chriſtianity, had obtained mercy; conſequently they were the whole body of Gentiles, who, from the time when the covenant was made with Abraham, to the time when they embraced the faith of the Goſpel, had not believed God; that is, had not been numbered among the ſubjects of his viſible kingdom, as the Jews were during that period. And the unbelieving Jews are thoſe (ver. 31.) who now do not believe God; but at laſt ſhall, upon their converſion to Chriſtianity, obtain mercy; conſequently, they are the whole body of Jews, who, from the time of their rejecting the kingdom of God under the Meſſiah, have not believed God; that is, have not been numbered among the ſubjects of his viſible kingdom, as the believing Gentiles now are. All this is clear; and therefore we may conclude, firſt, that the unbelief which the Apoſtle here ſpeaks of, is not the faulty character of particular perſons, but the general profeſſion of whole nations through a long tract of time: neither, ſecondly, is it that unbelief which ſubjects perſons to final condemnation; for that unbelief will not terminate in their obtaining mercy: but the unbelief under which the Gentiles were locked up, terminated in their obtaining mercy, and ſo will the unbelief of the Jews alſo. Thirdly, the whole body of Gentiles who embraced the Chriſtian religion obtained mercy, and ſo will the whole body of the Jews, at the future period whereof the Apoſtle ſpeaks; but evidently this relates to their being admitted to the privileges of God's kingdom in this world; conſequently their unbelief, which ſtands oppoſed to their obtaining mercy, relates only to their being excluded from thoſe privileges. In ſhort, the Apoſtle conſiders the unbelieving Gentiles, during the Jewiſh peculiarity, as one body of men; which body of men afterwards obtained mercy, when they were taken into the church of God: and he likewiſe conſiders the unbelieving Jews, from the time of their rejecting Chriſt, to the future time of their converſion, as one body of men, who ſhall then alſo obtain mercy, or be brought again into the kingdom of God. Therefore, as this obtaining of mercy is no other than the election and juſtification, about which he argues in this Epiſtle, it is certain he doth not thereby mean the election and juſtification only of particular perſons, and ſo as to aſcertain their everlaſting ſalvation; but he means ſuch an election and juſtification as may alſo be applied to bodies of men, with reſpect to their being taken into the kingdom of God in this world, See Taylor. Mr. Locke's note on this place is very excellent, and ſets the whole of this important ſubject in a very clear light. "The unbelief, ſays he, here charged nationally on Jews and Gentiles in their turns, in this and the two preceding verſes, whereby they ceaſed to be the people of God, was evidently the diſowning of his dominion; whereby they put themſelves out of the kingdom which he had and ought to have in the world, and ſo were no longer in the ſtate of ſubjects, but aliens and rebels. A general view of mankind will lead us into an eaſier conception of St. Paul's doctrine, who all through this Epiſtle conſiders the Gentiles, Jews, and Chriſtians as three diſtinct bodies of men. God, by creation, had no doubt an unqueſtionable ſovereignty over mankind, and this was at firſt acknowledged in their ſacrifices and worſhip of him. Afterwards they withdrew themſelves from their ſubmiſſion to him, and found out other gods, whom they worſhipped and ſerved. This revolt from God, and the conſequence of it, God's abandoning them, St. Paul deſcribes, ch. i. 18—32. In this ſtate of revolt from God were the nations of the earth in the times of Abraham. And then Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, and their poſterity the Iſraelites, upon God's gracious call, returned to their allegiance to their ancient and rightful king and ſovereign; owned the one inviſible God, creator of heaven and earth, for their God, and ſo became his people again, to whom he, as to his peculiar people, gave law. And thus remained the diſtinction between Jews and Gentiles, i. e. the nations, as the word ſignifies, till the time of the 33 O the depth of the riches both of the wiſdom and knowledge of God! how unſearchable are his judgements, and his ways paſt finding out!

Meſſiah,

34 For who hath known the mind of the Lord? or who hath been his counſellor?

35 Or who hath firſt given to him, and it ſhall be recompenſed unto him again?

36 For of him, and through him, and to him are all things: to whom be glory for ever. Amen.

Ver. 33. Pſ. xxxvi. 6. Job xi. 7.—V. 34. Iſai. xl. 13. Jer. xxiii. 18. Wiſd. ix. 13. 1 Cor. ii. 16. Job xxxvi. 22. Job xxxv. 7. xli. 11.—V. 36. 1 Cor. viii. 6. Col. i. 16. Gr. him.

Meſſiah; and then the Jews ceaſed to be the people of God, not by a direct renouncing the God of Iſrael, and taking to themſelves other falſe gods whom they worſhipped; but by oppoſing and rejecting the kingdom of God, which he propoſed at that time to ſet up with new laws and inſtitutions, and to a more glorious and ſpiritual purpoſe, under his Son Jeſus Chriſt: Him God ſent to them, and him the nation of the Jews refuſed to receive as their Lord and Ruler, though he was their promiſed King and Deliverer, anſwering all the prophecies and types of him, and evidencing his miſſion by his miracles. By this rebellion againſt Him, into whoſe hand God had committed the rule of his kingdom, and whom he had appointed Lord over all things, the Jews turned themſelves out of the kingdom of God, and ceaſed to be His people, who had now no other people but thoſe who received and obeyed his Son as their Lord and Ruler. This was the ἀπείθεια, unbelief, here ſpoken of. And I would be glad to know any other ſenſe of believing or unbelief, wherein it can be nationally attributed to a people (as viſibly here it is) whereby they ſhall ceaſe, or come to be the people of God, or viſible ſubjects of his kingdom here on earth. Indeed, to enjoy life and eſtate in this, as well as other kingdoms, not only the owning of the prince, and the authority of his laws, but alſo obedience to them is required: For a Jew might own the authority of God, and his law given by Moſes, and ſo be a true ſubject, and as much a member of the commonwealth of Iſrael as any one in it, and yet forfeit his life by diſobedience to the law. And a Chriſtian may own the authority of Jeſus Chriſt, and of the Goſpel, and yet forfeit eternal life by his diſobedience to the precepts of it; as may be ſeen, ch. vii, viii, and ix.

Ver. 33. Oh the depth, &c.] This emphatical concluſion ſeems in an eſpecial manner to regard the Jews, whom the Apoſtle would hereby teach modeſty and ſubmiſſion to the over-ruling hand of the all-wiſe God, unfit as they are to call him to account for his dealing ſo favourably with the Gentiles. "His wiſdom and ways are infinitely above their comprehenſion; and will they take upon them to adviſe Him what to do? Or is God in their debt?—Let them ſay for what, and he ſhall repay it to them." This is a ſtrong rebuke to the Jews, but delivered, as we ſee, in a way very gentle and inoffenſive: a method which the Apoſtle endeavours every where to obſerve towards his nation. Locke.

Ver. 35. Or who hath firſt given to him, &c.] This has a manifeſt reſpect to the Jews, who claimed a right to be the people of God ſo far, that St. Paul ch. ix. 14. finds it neceſſary to vindicate the juſtice of God in the caſe; and here alſo, in this queſtion, he expoſes and ſilences the folly of any ſuch pretence. Locke.

Ver. 36, For of him, &c.] Of him, as the original author; through him, as the gracious preſerver; and to or for him, as the ultimate end, —are all things: For his pleaſure all things were created; by his providence all things are preſerved; to his glory all things terminate. Antoninus, ſpeaking of nature, (that is, of God) has an expreſſion, which one would imagine he had borrowed from this of St. Paul, Ἐξ σου παντα, εν σοι παντα, εις σε παντα.—"All things are of thee, in thee, and to thee." Thus, ſays Mr. Locke, St. Paul concludes with a very ſolemn epiphonema that admirable evangelical diſcourſe to the church at Rome, which had taken up the eleven foregoing chapters. It was addreſſed to the two ſorts of converts, viz. Gentiles and Jews, into which, as into two diſtinct bodies, he all along through this Epiſtle divides all mankind, and conſiders them as ſo divided into two ſeparate corporations. 1. As to the Gentiles, He endeavours to ſatisfy them, that though they for their apoſtacy from God to idolatry, and the worſhip of falſe gods, had been abandoned by God, had lived in ſin and blindneſs, without God in the world, ſtrangers from the knowledge and acknowledgment of him, yet that the mercy of God through Jeſus Chriſt was extended to them, whereby there was a way now opened to them to become the people of God. For ſince no man could be ſaved by his own righteouſneſs, no not the Jews themſelves, by the deeds of the law, The only way to ſalvation, both for Jews and Gentiles, was by faith in Jeſus Chriſt. Nor had the Jews any other way now to continue themſelves the people of God, than by receiving the Goſpel; which way was opened alſo to the Gentiles, and they as freely admitted into the kingdom of God, now erected under Jeſus Chriſt, as the Jews, and upon the ſole terms of believing. So that there was no need at all for the Gentiles to be circumciſed to become Jews, that they might be partakers of the benefits of the Goſpel. 2. As to the Jews, The Apoſtle's other great aim in the foregoing diſcourſe is, to remove the offence the Jews took at the Goſpel, becauſe the Gentiles were received into the church as the people of God, and were allowed to be ſubjects of the kingdom of the Meſſiah. To bring them to a better temper, he ſhews them from the Sacred Scripture, that they could not be ſaved by the deeds of the law, and therefore the doctrine of righteouſneſs by faith ought not to be ſo ſtrange a thing to them. And as to their being for their unbelief rejected from being the people of God, and the Gentiles taken in in their room, he ſhews plainly, that this was foretold them in the Old Teſtament; and that herein God did them no injuſtice. He was ſovereign over all mankind, and might chooſe whom he would to be his people, with the ſame freedom that he choſe the poſterity of Abraham among all the nations of the earth, and of that race choſe the deſcendants of Jacob before thoſe of his elder brother Eſau, and that before they had a being, or were capable of doing good or evil. In all which diſcourſe of his, it is plain the election ſpoken of, has for its object only nations or collective bodies politic in this world, and not particular perſons, in reference to their eternal ſtate in the world to come.

REFLECTIONS ON THE RESTORATION OF THE JEWS, &c.

It appears from this prophetic chapter, as well as from many ſtriking predictions in other parts of Scripture, that the Jews will hereafter be reſtored to the favour and protection of their God, and will become with the Gentiles one fold, under one ſhepherd, Jeſus Chriſt. For this purpoſe they are remarkably preſerved a diſtinct and ſeparate people from all the nations of the earth; and nothing can afford a more ſtriking proof of the truth of the Chriſtian religion, than their preſent ſubſiſtence as a people, together with all the peculiar circumſtances of their ſtate and diſperſion. With a view to them, we may obſerve, that ſome evidences of the truth of our holy faith are not weakened, but rather gain force by length of time. Jeſus often ſpoke of many coming from the eaſt and the weſt, and from the north and the ſouth, to ſit down with Abraham, and Iſaac, and Jacob in the kingdom of heaven; that is, to partake of the privileges of the Goſpel, and the bleſſings of the Meſſiah's kingdom: So long therefore as there are Gentiles in the world, who thankfully embrace the Goſpel, this declaration is fulfilled; and the longer it is ſince theſe words were ſpoken, the more are they verified; and every acceſſion to the church of Chriſt from among ignorant and darkened Gentiles, is a freſh confirmation of the truth of his doctrine. The diſperſion of the Jews, the longer it laſts, ſtill more and more ſtrengthens the evidences of the Chriſtian religion; it is the more remarkable; it is a plainer and more affecting token of divine diſpleaſure againſt them: it affords greater aſſurance that the Meſſiah is already come; and it is rendered the more impoſſible for any man to prove himſelf of the tribe of Judah, and the family of David, whence the Meſſiah was to ariſe. For theſe reaſons their preſent diſperſion is prolonged, and may it be duly attended to by all to whom the conſideration of it may be of uſe!

St. Paul directs us to conſider theſe things as warnings; Becauſe of unbelief they were broken off, and thou ſtandeſt by faith: Be not high-minded, but fear, &c. ver. 20. For if we improve not our privileges, the glory may depart from us alſo. The ſeven churches of Aſia in the book of Revelation were warned, and moſt of them threatened with the removal of their candleſtick, unleſs they ſpeedily repented, and did their firſt works. Many Chriſtian churches, planted by the Apoſtles of Jeſus, and watered by their fellow-labourers, have fallen to decay and ruin: the name and title of Chriſtian will not ſave particular perſons in the day of judgement; nor will the name of Jeſus or Chriſtian alone ſecure churches and ſocieties in this world. There ſhould be not only the leaves of a fair profeſſion, but alſo fruits of love and peace, and all the branches of righteouſneſs and true holineſs, Chriſtians ſhould have heavenly minds, and their lives ſhould be adorned with acts of meekneſs, patience, ſelf-denial, and zeal for each other's welfare. Chriſt will dwell with ſuch. They honour him, and he will honour them with a diſtinguiſhed care and protection.

We learn from the Apoſtle's arguments, that as in paſt ages the Jews had been of great ſervice in upholding religion in the world, and from them at length it was brought to the Gentiles, ſo when in the end the Jews are converted to the faith of Chriſt, it will be through the Gentiles; and probably upon ſome more general converſion of the latter than has yet been. See ver. 30, 31. However, we may remark, that in order to ſhew more fully the divine interpoſition, and that this work is wholly of God, Their converſion, upon the preſent ſtate of things, does not appear likely, conſidering the great ſtrength and inveteracy of the prejudices againſt the Chriſtian faith; nor is there any probability that this event is near at hand, ſeveral others of great conſequence being firſt to take place; much leſs is it likely that, as ſome have ſuppoſed, upon their general converſion, they will be eſtabliſhed again in the land of Judea, and that Jeruſalem, with its temple, will be rebuilt with great ſplendor and magnificence. Whenever there is a general converſion of the Jews to the faith of Jeſus, they will become Chriſtians indeed, and their fondneſs for the rites of the Moſaic law will ceaſe, that they and the Gentiles may become one people, and one flock.

We have good reaſon to wiſh and pray for ſuch an event, that the fulneſs of the Gentiles may be brought in, and that then the blindneſs which in part hath long happened to the Jewiſh people may be entirely

CHAP. XII.

God's mercies muſt move us to pleaſe God. No man muſt think too well of himſelf, but attend every one on that calling wherein he is placed. Love, and many other duties, are required of us. Revenge is eſpecially forbidden.

I Beſeech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye preſent your bo-

Ver. 1. 2 Cor. x. 1. 1 Pet. ii. 5. Pſ. l. 13, 14. Ch. vi. 13, 16. Hebr. x. 20.

tirely removed. In the mean time we ſhould both labour for the converſion of ignorant Gentiles, and do what lies in our power to excite the people of the Jews to emulation, by the ſimplicity of our worſhip, the purity of our faith, and the goodneſs of our lives.

From the ſtate of things repreſented to us in this chapter, we cannot fail to admire the exceeding riches of the wiſdom and goodneſs of God, who has graciouſly afforded mankind in all ages helps for knowing the great truths of religion. God ever ſpoke to all in the voice of reaſon: when that was not duly attended to, and the danger of univerſal ignorance became great, he ſeparated a family, that of Abraham, from the reſt of the world; and of a part of it he made a great nation, to whom he gave a law; and who thereby were ſet up as a lamp upon a hill, to lighten the world around them. Among them, by frequent interpoſitions of his wiſe and powerful Providence, religion was maintained, and they were kept a diſtinct nation, enjoying many privileges until the Meſſiah came, and religion was ſpread far and wide in the nations of the earth, according to promiſes made long before: and then the Jews generally rejecting that bleſſing, God caſt them off from being his people, as they had been, and poured down upon them tokens of his diſpleaſure; yet not deſtroying them utterly, and making uſe of them, even under afflictions, to ſupport the truth of his Son's miſſion and authority, whom they had crucified.

Nor is there herein any injuſtice, or unkindneſs; for ſtill they are provoked to jealouſy by thoſe who are taken in their room: and in this reſpect they now enjoy an advantage with regard to religion, beyond what the Gentiles had formerly. For then it was the nation of the Jews only to whom God was known, and many of the nations of the earth were remote from them. But the unbelieving Jews, for the moſt part, live among or near the followers of Jeſus, and have better opportunities to inform themſelves of the principles of their religion, than the Gentiles had of old to know that of the Iſraelites.

And the wiſdom of Divine Providence in the former and the latter diſpenſation is admirable, as the Apoſtle obſerves at the end of this chapter, ver. 30—36. on addreſſing himſelf to Gentile Chriſtians; a paſſage, from whence we may conclude with St. James at the council at Jeruſalem, that known unto God are all his works from the beginning. Acts xv. 18.

It may moreover be reaſonably ſuppoſed, that it will be delightful in the heavenly ſtate to know and obſerve the various methods of Divine Providence relating to his creatures in the world where we have lived; particularly to obſerve the manifold deſigns of wiſdom and goodneſs, with regard to the concerns of religion.

A wiſe and diſcerning perſon has now great delight and profitable entertainment in reviewing theſe works of Divine Providence, as recorded in the Scriptures of the Old and New Teſtament; but the diſcoveries in a future ſtate may be much more full and complete, and conſequently more delightful. We may then ſee the overſpreading deluge of ignorance in ſome places and ages, the wonderful ſteps by which light was reſtored, and all the virtue of the inſtruments raiſed up and employed by God: the faithful and diſintereſted zeal with which they ſerved God, and prompted the welfare of their fellow-creatures; and how even afflictive events ſubſerved beneficial deſigns.

And though ſuch extenſive knowledge ſhould not be the portion of thoſe who are finally ſeparated from God, yet there will be a remembrance of things paſt; what men have done and neglected to do; what means of knowledge were offered them in this world; what convictions they had of duty; what helps they enjoyed for ſecuring a virtuous conduct, and ſtrengthening them againſt temptations; and how they failed to improve thoſe many advantages.

How piercing muſt it be, in the place of torment, for a deſcendant of Abraham, who lived in the time of our Lord, to recollect the gracious word he heard from his mouth! That though Jeſus taught in the ſtreets of his city, and in the moſt winning manner promiſed everlaſting life to ſuch as believed in and obeyed him; and though he performed numerous miracles, healing and beneficial, ſuited to the goodneſs of his doctrine, and tokens of inexpreſſible mildneſs and benevolence, yet he deſpiſed and abuſed this amiable perſon! And though he knew the prophets had ſpoken of a great deliverer to ariſe amongſt them, and it was the prevailing opinion that that was the very time prefixed for his coming; he would not hearken to him, nor regard him, becauſe of ſome groundleſs prejudices, and too ſtrong an affection for worldly poſſeſſions and enjoyments!

In like manner, to how many others alſo will not the recollection of religious, of Chriſtian privileges not improved, but rejected and abuſed, be matter of torment and vexation!—For inſtance, Children of pious parents, who ſet at nought all their counſel, and will have none of their reproof! Servants, who are averſe to the order and reſtraint of religious families, and offended at daily devotions and frequent readings of the Scripture, or other books of piety; who chooſe the habitations of the wicked, where there is not ſo much as a form of godlineſs, or an appearance of religion, and prefer the company and manners of the diſſolute, who are a reproach to human nature!—A Chriſtian, partaking in all the ordinances of the Goſpel, yet acting contrary to the obligations he is under!—A miniſter in God's houſe, ſhewing to others the way to ſalvation, but not walking in it himſelf!—

How grievous muſt the recollection of ſuch advantages be hereafter, if finally abuſed and diſregarded! What conſolation can then be given to the trembling ſouls of man?—Alas! the ſad reflection on their own folly will be unavoidable, and for ever incurable.

May we therefore be wiſe to know and mind the things of our peace, now in this our day! Securing time, while we have it, for ſerious reflections on our conduct and our advantages, and comparing our light and knowledge with our actions and purpoſes! For between theſe there ought, there muſt be an agreement, or miſerable the conſequence. Where much is given, much may and will be expected: And the ſervant who knew his lord's will, and did it not, ſhall be beaten with many ſtripes. Luke xii. 47.

Theſe are certain truths:—Theſe are things which will ſome time afford either a pleaſing and comfortable, or an afflictive and ſorrowful recollection to the ſoul. It is an aweful and awakening obſervation of our Lord,—This is the condemnation, That light is come into the world, and men loved darkneſs rather than light, becauſe their deeds are evil. John. iii. 19. If any of us ſhould periſh, have we not reaſon to dread this aggravated condemnation?—For we muſt be ſenſible we have had ſufficient inſtruction to aſſure us, that things above are preferable to things on this earth: That nothing therefore ought ſo to divert and engage us, as to prevent our laying up to ourſelves treaſures in heaven; and that we ought to order our preſent concerns, and the whole of our converſation in ſuch a manner, as may beſt promote our moſt important intereſts,—the everlaſting ſalvation and happineſs of our ſouls. See Lardner, and on ver. 11.

Chap. XII. Ver. 1.] The Apoſtle has now finiſhed his proofs and explications relating to the juſtification, calling, and election of the believing Gentiles, or to their being admitted into the kingdom and covenant of God, and intereſted in all the privileges and honours of his children and peculiar people,—in all the bleſſigs and hopes of the Goſpel. This our happy ſtate he has well eſtabliſhed by ſolid and ſubſtantial arguments, and guarded it againſt every attack of the unbelieving Jew. He has demonſtrated that it ſtands right in the nature of things, ch. i, ii, iii.. That it is ſet upon the ſame footing with Abraham's title to the bleſſings of the covenant, ch. iv. That it gives us a title to privileges and bleſſings as great as any the Jews could glory in, by virtue of that covenant, ch. v. 1—12. He goes ſtill higher, and ſhews, that our being intereſted in the gift and grace of God in Chriſt Jeſus, is perfectly agreeable to the grace which he has confeſſedly beſtowed upon all mankind in Chriſt Jeſus, in delivering them from that death which came upon them by Adam's offence; ch. v. 12. to the end. He has clearly explained, both with regard to Gentiles and Jews, the nature of the Goſpel conſtitution, in reſpect of its obligations to virtue and holineſs; and the advantages it gives for encouraging our obedience, ſupporting us under the ſevereſt trials, and ſecuring our perſeverance. ch. vi, vii, viii. Further, as the Jew's pretences, that God was bound by expreſs promiſe to continue them, and ſuch as come into their peculiarity, to be his only people for ever, were directly inconſiſtent with the calling and election of the Gentiles upon the foot of faith alone, The Apoſtle demonſtrates, that the rejection of the Jews is conſiſtent with the truth of God's word, and with his righteouſneſs. He ſhews the true cauſe and reaſon of their rejection; and concludes with an admirable diſcourſe upon the extent and duration of it, which he cloſes with adoration of the divine wiſdom, in its various diſpenſations. Ch. ix, x, 11.—Thus having cleared this important ſubject with ſurpriſing judgement, and the niceſt art and ſkill in writing, he now proceeds, after his uſual method in his Epiſtles, and the Apoſtolic manner of preaching, to inculcate various Chriſtian duties; and to exhort to that temper of mind and conduct of life, which is agreeable to Goſpel privileges and profeſſion. See Taylor.

Mercies of God] He means all the bleſſings and privileges given us freely in the Goſpel by the mercy of God. There ſeem to be two reaſons why St. Paul's firſt exhortation to them is, to preſent their bodies undefiled to God, 1. Becauſe he had before, eſpecially in ch. vii, ſo much inſiſted on this, That the body was the great ſource from whence ſin aroſe. 2. Becauſe the heathen world, and particularly the Romans, were guilty of thoſe vile affections which he mentions, ch. i. 24—27. The body is here, by a uſual figure, put for the whole perſon; nor can the ſoul be now preſented to God otherwiſe than as dwelling in the body, or truly conſecrated to him, unleſs the body be employed in his ſervice. Nor, on the other hand, can the body be preſented as a living ſacrifice, otherwiſe than as acted and animated by the ſoul. The word παραστῆσαι, rendered preſent, properly ſignifies "placing the victim before the altar." It ſeems probable that the Apoſtle, in this firſt verſe, had his thoughts principally upon the Jewiſh, and in the ſecond verſe upon the Gentile Chiſtians; for in ver. 1. he oppoſes moral duty to the offering up of ſacrifices, which muſt be the ſacrifices preſented by the Jews in the temple; and calls moral duty a reaſonable ſervice, or rational worſhip, as it ſeems, in oppoſition to ritual. In ver. 2. he dehorts dies a living ſacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reaſonable ſervice.

2 And be not conformed to this world: but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect will of God.

3 For I ſay, through the grace given unto me, to every man that is among you, not to think of himſelf more highly than he ought to think; but to think ſoberly, according as God hath dealt to every man the meaſure of faith.

4 For as we have many members in one body, and all members have not the ſame office:

5 So we, being many, are one body in Chriſt, and every one members one of another.

6 Having then gifts differing according to the grace that is given to us, whether prophecy, let us prophecy according to the proportion of faith;

7 Or miniſtry, let us wait on our miniſtering: or he that teacheth, on teaching;

8 Or he that exhorteth, on exhortation: he that giveth, let him do it with ſimplicity; he that ruleth, with diligence; he that ſheweth mercy, with cheerfulneſs.

9 Let love be without diſſimulation. Abhor that which is evil; cleave to that which is good.

10 Be kindly affectioned one to another with brotherly love; in honour preferring one another;

11 Not ſlothful in buſineſs; fervent in ſpirit; ſerving the Lord;

12 Rejoicing in hope; patient in tribulation; continuing inſtant in prayer;

13 Diſtributing to the neceſſity of ſaints; given to hoſpitality.

Ver. 2. John ii. 15. 1 Pet. i. 14. Epheſ. i. 18. iv. 23. Col. i. 21, 22. iii. 10. Epheſ. v. 10, 17. 1 Theſſ. iv. 3.—V. 3. Ch. i. 5. 1 Cor. iii. 10. Prov. xxv. 27, Eccleſ. vii. 16. Gr. to ſobriety. 1 Cor. xii. 7, 11. Epheſ. iv. 7.—V. 4. 1 Cor. xii. 12. Epheſ. iv. 16.—V. 5. 1 Cor. x. 17.—V. 6. 1 Cor. xii. 4. 1 Pet. iv. 10, 11. Ver. 3. 1 Cor. xii. 10, 28. xiii. 2. xiv. 1, 29, 31.—V. 7. Epheſ. iv. 11. 1 Tim. v. 17.—V. 8. Acts xv. 32. Matth. vi. 1, 2, 3. Or, imparteth. Or, liberally, 2 Cor. viii. 2. 1 Tim. v. 17. 2 Cor. ix. 7.—V. 9. 1 Tim. i. 5. 1 Pet. i. 22. Pſ. xxxvi. 4. xcvii. 10. Amos v. 15.—V. 10. Hebr. xiii. 1. 1 Pet. ii. 17. Or, in the love of the brethren. Phil. ii. 3. 1 Pet. y. 5.—V. 12. Phil. iv. 4. 1 Theſſ. v. 16, 17. Luke xviii. 1.—V. 13. 1 Cor. xvi. 1. Hebr. xiii. 2. 1 Pet. iv. 9.

from conformity to the world, which generally means the heathen world; and perſuades them to be transformed by the renewing of their mind, which is the phraſe he uſes to Gentile converts. Epheſ. iv. 22. 23.—Theſe verſes may be paraphraſed thus: "Having cleared your title to the bleſſings and privileges of God's peculiar kingdom in the world, I now earneſtly exhort you, Chriſtian brethren, from a conſideration of the goodneſs of God, in revealing his Goſpel, and admitting you all to an equal intereſt in the grace therein declared and promiſed, that, as an holy prieſthood, inſtead of brutal dead ſacrifices, you conſecrate and offer your bodies, a living ſacrifice, by mortifying the deeds of the fleſh; that being free from every blemiſh of ſenſual impurity, you may practiſe holineſs, and the things that are pleaſing to God, which is the moſt rational worſhip and ſervice you can perform, and infinitely preferable to the ritual obſervances of the law. And as you are now become a ſeparate and peculiar people of God, (ver. 2.) do not mix yourſelves again with a profane, wicked, and ignorant world; do not conform to the vicious cuſtoms, taſte, and examples thereof; but be changed into new creatures in Chriſt Jeſus, by receiving better principles and habits of mind; that you may thereby be enabled to diſcover, reliſh, approve, and recommend to others that courſe of life, which is good, juſt, and true; moſt pleaſing and acceptable to God, and whereby ye ſhall be accompliſhed in every part of the divine life." We may juſt remark, that L'Enfant conſiders the three words good, acceptable, and perfect, as oppoſed to the Jewiſh ritual: this Chriſtian ſacrifice being more excellent in itſelf, (Ezek. xx. 25.) more pleaſing to God, (Pſ. xl. 7, 8.) and tending more to make us perfect. Heb. vii. 19. But perhaps they refer more generally to all the preceptive part of Chriſtianity, the excellency of which they will beſt underſtand, who endeavour to practiſe it moſt exactly. See Locke, Taylor, Elſner, and L'Enfant.

Ver. 3. For I ſay, &c.] "I ſay, and give it in charge:" So λέγειν ſignifies, Acts xv. 24. Concerning the grace or favour, ſee on ch. i. 15. Inſtead of Not to think of himſelf more highly, Doddridge reads, after Raphelius, Not to arrogate to himſelf above what, &c. And for ſoberly, Dr. Waterland and the MS. read modeſtly. Inſtead of meaſure of faith, ſome copies have it of grace; but either of them expreſſes the ſame thing; that is, gifts of the Spirit. See the next note.

Ver. 6. According to the proportion of faith] This proportion of faith, and the meaſure of faith, ver. 3. ſeem not to relate to the degree of any gift conſidered in itſelf, but rather to the relation and proportion which it bore to the gifts of others: For it is plain the Apoſtle is here exhorting every man to keep ſoberly within his own ſphere. It is natural to ſuppoſe the new converts might be puffed up with the ſeveral gifts which were beſtowed upon them, and every one might be forward to magnify his own, to the diſparagement of others; which would be attended with no good conſequences. Therefore the Apoſtle adviſes them to keep every man within his proper ſphere; to know and obſerve the juſt meaſure and proportion of his gift, intruſted with him not to gratify his own pride, but to edify the church. Prophecy originally implied the foretelling the future fortunes of the church, to the comfort and edification of the aſſembly; and theſe effects generally attending the act of prophecy, in a little time aſſumed its name: But the proper ſenſe of prophecy is the foretelling things to come; the import, the interpretation of Sacred Scripture; and the explaining of prophecies already delivered. See Epheſ. iv. 16. 1 Cor. xiv. 29—32. and for an account of the ſpiritual gifts and offices in the primitive church, Lord Barrington's Miſcell. Sacr. eſſay 1. Benſon's Hiſtory of the firſt planting of Chriſtianity, ch. i. ſect. 4, 5. and 1 Cor. xii. 28. Caſtalio, Eraſmus, Bengelius, and others connect this with the preceding verſe: We are members one of another; but, having gifts differing, &c.

Ver. 6. He that ruleth, with diligence] Lord Barrington thinks this clauſe relates to the receiving and ſuccouring of ſtrangers; moſt probably perſecuted ſtrangers; or, however, ſuch as travelled for the propagation of the Goſpel; And that for theſe reaſons: Firſt, Becauſe the Apoſtle has admoniſhed them to uſe well the gifts of the Spirit for the good of men's minds, ver. 6, 7. and in the firſt clauſe of the preſent verſe. It ſeems, therefore, moſt natural to ſuppoſe, that he ſhould in the three laſt clauſes of this verſe direct them how to uſe other gifts of God's providence for the good of mens morals; and that he ſhould lay the ſeveral inſtances of the kindneſs of others together in the ſame manner, as in Hebr. xiii. 2, 3. Secondly, Προςάτις, a feminine word of the ſame original and ſignification with ὁ προϊςάμενος, is uſed in this ſenſe, ch. xvi. 2. She has been a ſuccourer of many, and of myſelf alſo: προϊςαμαι ſignifies, among other things, to defend, patronize; and ſo it might be rendered Tit. iii. 8, 14. To patronize good works; meaning to encourage and aſſiſt in them. In this ſenſe the clauſe here ſhould be rendered, He that gives ſuccour, or relief, let him do it with care and application. See Lord Barrington's Miſcell. Sacr. eſſay i. p. 76.

Ver. 10. Be kindly affectioned, &c.] Perhaps the extremely expreſſive words of the original might juſtly be rendered, Delight in the tendereſt fraternal affection to each other. The word Φιλοςοργοι, not only ſignifies a ſtrong affection, like that of parent animals to their offſpring, but a delight in it. The words of the latter clauſe might literally be rendered, Leading on each other with reſpect; or, In giving honour, going before each other, L'Enfant renders it, Mutually prevent one another with honour. See Balguy's Sermons, and Leighton's Expoſit. Works, vol. ii. p. 429.

Ver. 11. Serving the Lord] Some copies read καιρῷ, inſtead of κυρίῳ; ſerving the time; that is, huſbanding your opportunities: But though admitted by Dr. Mills, it appears an unnatural and inelegant expreſſion in that ſenſe, and very much ſinks the noble meaning of the commonly-received reading; which contains a lively exhortation to Chriſtians, to be always ſerving Chriſt, and to cultivate the temper which the Apoſtle expreſſes when he ſays, To me to live is Chriſt, Philip. i. 31. See Doddridge, Mill, and Wetſtein.

Ver. 13. Given to hoſpitality] Purſuing hoſpitality, MS. It was the more proper for the Apoſtles frequently to enforce this duty, as the want of publick inns rendered it difficult for ſtrangers to get accommodations; and as many Chriſtians might be baniſhed their native country for religion, and perhaps laid under a kind of excommunication, both among Jews and heathens; which would make it an high crime for any of their brethren to receive them into their houſes. See Blackwall's Sacred Claſſicks, vol. i. p. 232.

14 Bleſs them which perſecute you: bleſs, and curſe not.

15 Rejoice with them that do rejoice, and weep with them that weep.

16 Be of the ſame mind one towards another. Mind not high things, but condeſcend to men of low eſtate. Be not wiſe in your own conceits.

17 Recompenſe to no man evil for evil. Provide things honeſt in the ſight of all men.

18 If it be poſſible, as much as lieth in you, live peaceably with all men.

19 Dearly beloved, avenge not yourſelves, but rather give place unto wrath: for it is written, Vengeance is mine; I will repay, ſaith the Lord.

20 Therefore, if thine enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirſt, give him drink: for in ſo doing thou ſhalt heap coals of fire on his head.

21 Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good.

CHAP. XIII.

Of ſubjection and the many other duties we owe to the magiſtrates. Love is the fulfilling of the law. Gluttony and drunkenneſs, and the works of darkneſs, are out of ſeaſon in the time of the goſpel.

LET every ſoul be ſubject unto the higher powers. For there is no power but of God: the powers that be, are ordained of God.

Ver. 14. Matth. v. 44.—V. 16. Ch. xv. 5. 1 Pet. iii. 8. Pſ. cxxxi. 1, 2. Jer. xlv. 5. Or, be contented with mean things. Prov. iii. 7. Iſai. v. 21. Ch. xi. 25.—V. 17. Prov. xx. 22. Matth. v. 39. 1 Theſſ. v. 15. 1 Pet. iii. 9. 2 Cor. viii. 21.—V. 18. Hebr. xii. 14.—V. 19. Lev. xix. 18. Ecclus. xxviii. 1, &c. Deut. xxxii. 35. Hebr. x. 30.—V. 20. Prov. xxv. 21.——V. 1. Tit. iii. 1. 1 Pet. ii. 13. Wiſd. vi. 3. John xix. 11. Or, ordered.

Ver. 16. Be of the ſame mind, &c.] Be entirely united in your regards for each other. Doddridge. Whitby paraphraſes it, "Deſire the ſame things for others, that you do for yourſelves, and would have them deſire for you." Dr. Heylin unites this with the preceding verſe, and renders them as follows: Live in a mutual ſympathy, ſo as to rejoice with thoſe who are in joy, and compaſſionate thoſe who are in grief. Do not aſpire to high things, but be contented with mean things.

Ver. 17. Provide things honeſt, &c.] "Take care that your carriage be ſuch, as may be approved by all men." Dr. Waterland, after Wells, reads,—In the ſight of God, and in the ſight of men. If it be poſſible, ver. 18. according to ſome criticks, ſhould be connected with this verſe; Provide things honeſt in the ſight of men, if poſſible; ver. 18. As far as is in your power, live peaceably with all men.

Ver. 19. Avenge not yourſelves] The emperor Claudius, by his decree, baniſhed all Jews from Rome, Acts xviii. 2. Upon this occaſion Aquila and Priſcilla removed to Corinth, where Paul found them, and dwelt with them a conſiderable time: No doubt they gave him a full account of the ſtate of the Chriſtian church at Rome, and of every thing relating to the late perſecution under Claudius. That emperor's edict died with him in about two years time: Then the Jews and Chriſtians, [if the Chriſtians were expelled] returned again to Rome; for Aquila and Priſcilla were there when St. Paul wrote this Epiſtle, (ch. xvi. 3.) which was about the fourth year of Nero, ſucceſſor to Claudius. Hence it appears more than probable, that the Apoſtle in this and the following verſes hath his eye upon the indignities and injuries done to the Chriſtian Jews, if not to the Chriſtians in general, in the forementioned perſecution." See Benſon's "Firſt planting of the Chriſtian religion." vol. ii. p. 106. Taylor, and Ecclus xix. 17. Dr. Waterland, in his manuſcript note, gives the following tranſlations of the next clauſe,—But allow ſpace unto wrath; that is, "Take time,—be not haſty."—But give place to the wrath [divine]. See Bos, Elſner, and Balguy's Sermons, vol. ii. p. 222.

Ver. 20. Thou ſhalt heap coals of fire, &c.] Though we have given in the note on Prov. xxv. 21. a full expoſition of this text, yet for the further ſatisfaction of the reader, we add the following interpretation of Dr. Ward: "Moſt interpreters, ſays he, underſtand this as ſpoken of the divine vengeance: And Dr. Whitby produces ſome paſſages from the Old Teſtament, where the divine anger is expreſſed by coals of fire; (as Pſ. cxl. 9, 10. Iſai. xlvii. 14. Ezek. x. 2. and alſo in 2 Eſdras xvi. 53.) but in all theſe paſſages this is repreſented as the act of God; whereas in the place before us, as likewiſe in the Proverbs, it is the act of man:—Σωρεύσεις ἄνθρακας πυρὸς; where the metaphor ſeems to be taken from chymiſts, who place coals over the veſſels in which they melt and liquify their metals. But that verb is not uſed in any of the paſſages cited by Dr. Whitby from the Old Teſtament, but ſuch verbs only as denote deſtruction. As to Eſdras, book ii. the words are theſe: Let not the ſinner ſay, I have not ſinned; for God ſhall burn coals of fire upon his head, who ſaith before the Lord God and his glory, I have not ſinned. But I think both the paſſage in Proverbs, and St. Paul's reaſoning here, will very well admit of the milder ſenſe. Beſides, the other interpretation does not ſeem to agree ſo well with our Saviour's precept, of loving our enemies, without any regard to their obduracy: And it likewiſe coincides in ſome meaſure with the preceding verſe of the preſent chapter, where it is ſaid of God, Vengeance is mine, &c. whereas this ſenſe affords a new argument or motive for patience and benevolence." See Ward's 45th Diſſertation. This and the following chapters being wholly practical, require no Reflections, but ſuch as will naturally occur to every contemplative reader, in the ſerious peruſal of them.

Chap. XIII. Ver. 1.] This Epiſtle was written about the fourth year of the emperor Nero, about ſix years after Claudius had expelled the Jews from Rome. It is not improbable, that, as Suetonius relates in the life of Claudius, this was occaſioned by the tumultuous diſpoſition of the Jews, in one ſhape or other; whether upon a civil or religious account is not eaſy to determine. However, we know that they had notions relating to government favourable to none but their own; and it was with great reluctance that they ſubmitted to a foreign juriſdiction. The Chriſtians, under a notion of their being the people of God, and the ſubjects of his kingdom, might be in danger of being infected by thoſe unruly and rebellious ſentiments: Therefore the Apoſtle here points out their duty to the civil magiſtrate. To underſtand him right we muſt conſider theſe two things: Firſt, That theſe rules are given to Chriſtians, who were members of the heathen commonwealth; to ſhew them that by being made Chriſtians, and ſubjects of Chriſt's kingdom, they were not, through the freedom of the Goſpel, exempt from any ties of duty or ſubjection, which by the laws of the country wherein they lived they were bound to obſerve; paying all due obedience to the government and magiſtrates, though heathens, in the ſame manner as was done by their heathen ſubjects. But on the other ſide, theſe rules did not tie them up, more than any of their fellow-citizens who were not Chriſtians, from any of thoſe due rights which by the law of nature, or the conſtitution of their country, belonged to them. Whatſoever any other of the fellow-ſubjects, being in a like ſtation with them, might do without ſinning, of that they were not abridged, but might ſtill do the ſame, being Chriſtians; the rule here being the ſame with that given by St. Paul 1 Cor. vii. 17 As God hath called every one, ſo let him walk. The rules of civil right and wrong, whereby he is to walk, are to him the ſame that they were before. Secondly, we muſt conſider, that St. Paul, in this direction to the Romans, doth not ſo much deſcribe the magiſtrates who were then in Rome, as tell whence they, and all magiſtrates every where, derive their authority; and for what end they have, and ſhould uſe it: And this he does as becomes his prudence, to avoid bringing any imputation on Chriſtians from heathen magiſtrates; eſpecially thoſe inſolent and vicious ones of Rome, who could not brook any thing to be told them as their duty, and ſo might be apt to interpret ſuch plain truths, laid down in a dogmatical way, into ſedition or treaſon;—A ſcandal cautiouſly to be kept off from the Chriſtian doctrine. Nor does he in what he ſays in the leaſt flatter the Roman emperor; for he ſpeaks here of the higher powers; that is, the ſupreme civil power, which is in every commonwealth derived from God, and is of the ſame extent every where; that is, is abſolute and unlimited by any thing, but the end for which God gave it;—namely, the good of the people, ſincerely purſued, according to the beſt ſkill of thoſe who ſhare that power, and ſo is not to be reſiſted. But how men come by a rightful title to this power, or who has that title, the Apoſtle is wholly ſilent: To have meddled with that, would have been to decide of civil rights, contrary to the deſign and buſineſs of the Goſpel, and the example of our Saviour. Comp. Luke xii. 24. If the reader is attentive, he muſt be pleaſed to ſee in how ſmall a compaſs, and with how much dexterity, truth, and gravity the Apoſtle affirms and explains the foundation, the nature, ends, and juſt limits of the magiſtrate's authority, while he is pleading his cauſe, and teaching the ſubject the duty and obedience due to governors. See Locke and Taylor.

Let every ſoul] "Every one, however endowed with miraculous gifts of the Holy Ghoſt, or advanced to any dignity in the church of Chriſt:" For that theſe things were apt to make men overvalue themſelves, is obvious from what St. Paul ſays to the Corinthians, 1 Ep. xii. and to the Romans, xii. 3—5. But above all others, the 2 Whoſoever therefore reſiſteth the power, reſiſteth the ordinance of God: and they that reſiſt ſhall receive to themſelves damnation.

3 For rulers are not a terror to good works, but to the evil. Wilt thou then not be afraid of the power? do that which is good, and thou ſhalt have praiſe of the ſame:

4 For he is the miniſter of God to thee for good. But if thou do that which is evil, be afraid; for he beareth not the ſword in vain: for he is the miniſter of God, a revenger to execute wrath upon him that doeth evil.

5 Wherefore ye muſt needs be ſubject, not only for wrath, but alſo for conſcience ſake.

6 For, for this cauſe pay ye tribute alſo: for they are God's miniſters, attending continually upon this very thing.

7 Render therefore to all their dues: tribute to whom tribute is due; cuſtom to whom cuſtom; fear to whom fear; honour to whom honour.

8 Owe no man any thing, but to love one another: for he that loveth another hath fulfilled the law.

9 For this, Thou ſhalt not commit adultery, Thou ſhalt not kill, Thou ſhalt not ſteal, Thou ſhalt not bear falſe witneſs, Thou ſhalt not covet; and if there be any other commandment, it is briefly comprehended in this ſaying, namely, Thou ſhalt love thy neighbour as thyſelf.

10 Love worketh no ill to his neighbour: therefore love is the fulfilling of the law.

11 And that, knowing the time, that now it is high time to awake out of ſleep: for now is our ſalvation nearer than when we believed.

Ver. 2. Tit. iii. 1.—V. 3. 1 Pet. ii. 14.—V. 5. Eccles. viii. 2. 1 Pet. ii. 19.—V. 7. Matth. xxii. 21. Mark xii. 17. Luke xx. 25. V. 9. Gal. v. 14. 1 Tim. i. 5. Jam. ii. 8.—V. 9. Exod. xx. 13, &c. Deut. v. 17, &c. Lev. xix. 18. Matth. xxii. 39. Gal. v. 14. Jam. ii. 8.—V. 10. Matth. xxii. 40. Ver. 8.—V. 11. 1 Cor. xv. 34. Epheſ. v. 14. 1 Theſſ. v. 5, 6.

Jews were apt to have an inward reluctancy and indignation againſt the power of any heathen over them, taking it to be an unjuſt and tyrannical uſurpation upon them, who were the people of God, and their betters. Theſe the Apoſtle thought it neceſſary to reſtrain, and therefore ſays, in the language of the Jews, "Every ſoul, that is, every perſon among you, whethe Jew or Gentile, muſt live in ſubjection to the civil magiſtrate." We ſee by what St. Peter ſays on the like occaſion, that there was great need that Chriſtians ſhould have this duty inculcated to them, leſt any among them ſhould uſe their liberty for a cloak of malicioufneſs, or miſbehaviour, 1 Pet. xi. 13—16. The doctrine of Chriſtianity was a doctrine of liberty. Hence corrupt and miſtaken men, eſpecially Jewiſh converts, impatient, as we have obſerved, of any heathen dominion, might be ready to infer, that Chriſtians were exempt from ſubjection to the laws of heathen governments. This he obviates by telling them, that all other governments derived the power they had from God, as well as that of the Jews, though they had not the whole frame of their government immediately from him, as the Jews had. Whether we take the powers here, in the abſtract, for political authority, or in the concrete, for the perſons de facto exerciſing political power and juriſdiction, the ſenſe will be the ſame; viz. that Chriſtians, by virtue of being Chriſtians, are not any way exempt from obedience to the civil magiſtrates, nor ought by any means to reſiſt them; though, by what is ſaid, ver. 3. it ſeems that St. Paul meant here magiſtrates having and exerciſing a lawful power. But whether the magiſtrates in being were or were not ſuch, and conſequently were or were not to be obeyed, that Chriſtianity gave them no peculiar power to examine. They had the common right of others their fellow-citizens, but had no diſtinct privilege as Chriſtians; and therefore we ſee, ver. 7. that where he enjoys the paying of tribute, cuſtom, &c. it is in theſe words: Render to all their dues, tribute to whom tribute, honour to whom honour, &c. But who it was to whom any of theſe, or any other dues of right belonged, he decides not; for that he leaves them to be determined by the laws and conſtitutions of their country. Inſtead of ordained of God, which ſome think too ſtrong a word, it has been propoſed to render the original τεταγμέναι, by diſpoſed, or eſtabliſhed. See on Acts xiii. 48. Divine Providence ranges, and in fact eſtabliſhes the various governments of the world; they are therefore under the character of governments in the general to be revered: but this cannot make what is wrong and pernicious in any particular forms ſacred, divine, and immutable; any more than the hand of God in a famine or peſtilence, is an argument againſt ſeeking proper means to remove it. See Locke, Doddridge, and Mintert.

Ver. 2. Reſiſteth the power] Ὁ ἀντιτασσόμενος, in the moſt direct import of it, ſignifies "one who ſets himſelf as it were in array againſt," and may poſſibly allude to the word τεταγμέναι, ranged or marſhalled by God, uſed in the former verſe. The word rendered damnation is κρίμα, and would be more properly rendered condemnation, as it is particularly applied to the ſentence paſſed on the puniſhment denounced by a judge; though here it may ſignify not only the condemnation of the civil power, but likewiſe that of the ſovereign of the univerſe. See Bp. Hopkins's Sermons, p. 291.

Ver. 3. Rulers are not a terror to good works] To the well-doer. τῷ ἀγαθοεργῷ. See Junius in Wetſtein. Heylin renders the paſſage,—to thoſe who do well, but to thoſe who do ill. If circumſtances ariſe, to which the argument in this verſe is not applicable, it is reaſonably to be taken for granted, that the Apoſtle did not intend here to pronounce concerning ſuch caſes. Nothing can be ſaid for interpreting theſe paſſages in favour of unlimited paſſive obedience, which will not prove any reſiſtance of a private injury lawful by the authority of our Lord's deciſion. Matth. v. 39, 40. This would ſubvert the great foundation of magiſtracy itſelf, which is appointed by force to ward off and prevent, or to avenge ſuch injuries; but it was very prudent in the Apoſtle not to enter into any queſtion relating to the right of reſiſtance in ſome extraordinary caſes; as thoſe caſes are comparatively few, and as the juſt deciſions which could have been given on that ſubject might poſſibly have been miſrepreſented, to his own detriment, and that of the Goſpel. The general laws of benevolence to the whole, ſo ſtrongly aſſerted in this context, are in particular caſes to determine; and all particular precepts, in whatever univerſal terms they are delivered, are always to give way to them. See Doddridge and Bp. Hoadley's "Meaſures of ſubmiſſion."

Ver. 4. For he beareth not the ſword in vain] This ſtrongly intimates the lawfulneſs of inflicting capital puniſhment; to deny which is ſubverting the chief uſe of magiſtrates. Bengelius reads the firſt clauſe of this verſe, For he is the miniſter of God, for good to thee; and the laſt clauſe, For he is God's vindictive miniſter, for a terror to the evil-doer. See Heinſius and Wetſtein.

Ver. 7. Tribute to whom tribute] The Jews had a favourite notion among them, that, as the peculiar people of God, they were exempted from obligations to pay tribute to Gentiles; againſt which notion this paſſage is directly levelled, though without pointing them out in any invidious manner. Φόβον, rendered fear, is more properly rendered by the MS. reverence; for it expreſſes the inward diſpoſition; as τιμὴν, honour, expreſſes the conduct and external behaviour proceeding from it. See Doddridge, Heylin, and Epheſ. v. 33.

Ver. 11. Nearer than when we believed] Than when we declared our belief. Markland. Than when we received the faith. Wat. and Heylin. It ſeems by this and the following verſe, ſays Mr. Locke, as if St. Paul looked upon Chriſt's coming as not far off; to which there are ſeveral other concurrent paſſages in his Epiſtles: See 1 Cor. i. 7. But with all due reſpect to Mr. Locke, Grotius, and other learned men who favour this ſentiment, ſays Dr. Taylor, I will venture to aſſert they have erred, not underſtanding the paſſages of Scripture which they have alledged, nor the true ſtate of things. That St. Paul did "not look upon Chriſt's coming as not far off," or as if it might happen while he and the men of that generation were living, is inconteſtably evident from 2 Theſſ. ii. 1, &c. where he profeſſedly refutes this erroneous opinion. The caſe was this: The Theſſalonians had miſtaken ſome expreſſions in his firſt letter; juſt in the ſame manner, probably, as Mr. Locke and others have miſtaken the like paſſages. He had told them, 1 Theſſ. v. 2—4. That the day of the Lord ſo ſuddenly cometh, as a thief in the night; and that their only ſecurity againſt being ſurpriſed, or overtaken unawares, by that day, was their not being in darkneſs, but enjoying the light of the Goſpel: ver. 4, 5. But ye, brethren, are not in darkneſs, that that day ſhould overtake you as a thief. You are all children of the light. This, their being forewarned of it, and furniſhed with all proper means to prepare for it, was their only ſecurity againſt being ſurpriſed by the coming of our Lord to judgement. Now, taking this in connection with what he had ſaid juſt before, (1 Theſſ. iv. 15.) We who are alive, and remain until the coming of the Lord, They concluded, as Mr. Locke doth, that the Lord would come while 12 The night is far ſpent, the day is at hand: let us therefore caſt off the works of darkneſs, and let us put on the armour of light.

13 Let us walk honeſtly, as in the day; not in rioting and drunkenneſs, not in chambering and wantonneſs, not in ſtrife and envying.

14 But put ye on the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and make not proviſion for the fleſh, to fulfil the luſts thereof.

CHAP. XIV.

Men may not contemn nor condemn one another for things indifferent; but take heed that they give no offence in them; for that the apoſtle proveth unlawful by many reaſons.

HIM that is weak in the faith receive ye, but not to doubtful diſputations.

Ver. 12. Epheſ. v. 11. Col. iii. 8. Epheſ. vi. 13. 1 Theſſ. v. 8.—V. 13. Phil. iv. 8. 1 Theſſ. iv. 12. Or, decently. Luke xxi. 34. 1 Pet. iv. 3. 1 Cor. vi. 9. Jam. iii. 14.—V. 14. Gal. iii. 27. Gal. v. 16. 1 Pet. ii. 11.——V. 1. 1 Cor. viii. 9. ix. 22. Or, not to judge his doubtful thoughts.

